The Prologue.

To the kinges highnesse, my most gracious soueraigne lorde, Henry the eight, by the grace of God, kinge of Englande, and of Fraunce, defensor of the Faithe, and Lorde of Irlande. &c.

AMonges al other excellẽcyes, most gracious souerain lorde, wher with almightygod hath endowed mankinde, aboue the residue of erthely creatures, as an outwarde declaracion of reason or reasonablenesse, wherin consisteth the similitude of man vnto aungeles, and the difference betwene the same and brute beestes, I verayly suppose, that speache or langage is nat to be reputed, amonges the smallest or inferiours. For therby is expressed the conceite of one to another, in open and plaine sentence, whiche in the residue of lyuelye creatures, lacketh & is not shewed amonges them, but by certain couerte and derke signes, and that in fewe thynges, hauing course and operation onely of nature. This speache or langage, after the confusiõ of tonges, sente by goddes punishement for pride and arrogãcie of people, hath been by a certaine instyncte and disposition natural, diuised and inuented in sundry partes of the worlde, as felowshippes or companynges of folkes one with another, chaũced moche to the outward expressing of the thyng in worde or sounde, according to that wherof it had meaninge or signification. But in processe of time, by diligence or policie of people, after dyuers fourmes, sygures, and impressions in metal, barkes of trees, & other mater vsed for memorye and knowlege of thynges, than present or passed, sondry letters or caractes were firste amonges the Phenices dyuised and founde, with soche knittynges and ioyninges of one to another, by a marueilous subtilyte and crafte, as counterueiled was & is equiualent to the same langages. So as ỳ conceite of mannes minde, whiche at the beginninge was vsed to be declared by mouthe onely, came to soche point, that it was as sensibly and byuely expressed in writynge. Herupon ensewed a greate occasion and corage vnto them that shoulde write, to cõpone and adorne, he rudenesse and barbariete of speche, and to forme it to an eloquent and ordinate perfection, wherunto many, and many great Poetes and Oratours haue highly employed their studies and corages, leauing therby notable renoume of them selues, and example perpetuell to their posterite. Amonges other, the Grekes in all kindes of sciences, semed so to preuaile, and so to ornate their tonge, as yet by other of right noble langages, can nat be perfitely imitated or followed. The Latins by example of the Grekes, haue gotten or wonne to them no small glorye, in the fourminge, order, and vttring of that tonge. Out of the whiche two, yf it be well searched, that is to say, Greke and Latyn (thoughe by corrupcion of speche it should seme moche otherwise) haue ben derined the residue of the langages, that be written with the letters or caractes, of eyther of them bothe: But of al speches, those whiche most approche to the latinite, be the Italian and Spanish tonges, of whome the one by corrupcion of the Gothes and Longobardes had her beginning, as Latin spoken by straungers of a barbare vnderstandinge. The other beinge also Latyn was by Vandales, Gothes, Moores, Sarracenes, and other so many times blemished, as marueyle it is to se nowe, vnto what perfeccyon these two formed out of the Latyn and barbares speches be reduced. Nexte vnto them in similitude to the Latin is the Frenche tong, whiche by diligence of people of the same, is in fewe yeres passed so amended, as well in pronunciacion as in writinge, that an Englisheman by a small tyme exercysed in that tõg, hath nat lacked ground to make a grammere, or rule ordynarye therof. Though of trouthe (whych some shal scarcely beleue) the Germains haue so formed the order of their langage, that in the same, is bothe as moche plentie and as nere concordaũce to the phrase of the Latin, as the Frenche tonge hath. And verailye, like as al these and the rest haue ben thus vigilant and studious, to meliorate or amende their langages: so hath there nat lacked amonges vs Englishemen, whiche haue right well and notablye endeuoired and employed them selues, to the beautifyng & bettringe of the Englysshe tonge.

Amonges whome moste excellent prince, my moost redoubted and gracious soueraygn lorde, I your moste humble vassall, subiecte & seruaunte William Thynne, chefe clerke of your kechin, moued by a certaine inclination and zele, which I haue, to heare of any thing sounding to to the laude and honour of this your noble realme, haue taken great delecta-cion, as the times and laisers might suffre, to rede and here the bokes of that noble and famous clerke Geffray Chaucer, in whose wozkes is so manyfeste comprobacion of his excellente lerninge, in al kindes of doctrines and sciences, soche frutefulnesse in wordes, well accordinge to the mater and purpose, so swete and pleasaunte sentences, soche perfection in metre, the compolycyon so adapted, soche freschenesse of inuencion, compendiousnesse in narration, soche sensible and opē stile, lacking neither maiestie ne mediocritie, couenable in dispolicion, and soche sharpenesse or quicknesse in conclusion, that it is moche to be maruailed, howe in his time, whan doutlesse al good letters were laid a slepe throughout the worlde, as the thing, which eyther by the dispolicion and influence of the bodyes aboue, or by other ordinaunce of God, semed lyke as was in daunger to haue vtterlye perysshed, soch an excellente Poete in our tong, should as it were (nature repugninge) spryng and arise. For thoughe it had been in Demosthenes or Homerus tymes, whan al lerning and excellencie of sciences, florished amonges the Grekes, or in the seasō that Cicero prince of eloquence, amonges Latins lyued, yet had it been a thinge right rare and straunge, and worthy perpetuall laude, that any clerke by learninge or witte, could that haue framed a tonge before so rude and imperfite, to soche a swete ornature and compolicion, lykely if he had lyued in these daies, being good letters so restored and reuined as they be, if he were nat empeched by the enuie of soche as maye tollerate nothynge, whiche to vnderstonde their capacite dothe nat extende, to haue broughte it vnto a full and finall perfection. wherfore gracious soueraigne lorde, takinge soche delite and pleasure in the wozkes of this noble clerk (as is afore mencioned) I haue of a long season moch vsed to rede and visite the same, and as bookes of diuers imprintes came vnto my handes, I easely and withoute greate studye, myght and haue deprehended in them many errours, fallyties, and deprauacions, which euidently appered by the contrarietes and alteracions founde by collacion of the one with the other, wherby I was moued & stired to make diligent serche, where I might synde or recouer anye trewe coppes or exemplaries of the said bookes, whereunto in processe of time, nat without cost and paine, I attained, and nat onely vnto soche as seme to be very trewe copies of those wozkes of Geffray Chaucer, whiche before had ben prynte in prynte, but also to diuers other neuer tyll nowe imprinted, but remaninge almoste vnknowen and in obliuion, wherupon lamentinge with my self, the negligence of the people, that haue been in this realme, who doutlesse were verye remisse in the settinge forthe or auauncement, eyther of the hystories therof, to the great hynderaunce of the Renoume of soch noble princes & valiant conquerours and capitaines, as haue been in the same, or also of the wozkes of memorye of the famous and excellente clerkes in all kindes of sciences, that haue florished therin. Of whiche bothe sortes it hathe pleased God as hyghly to nobilitate this yle, as any other region of christendome: I thought it in manere appertenaunt vnto my dewty, and that of very honestty and loue to my countrey, I ought no lesse to do, than to put my helpinge hande to the restauracion and bringinge againe to lighte of the said wozkes, after the trew copies and examplaries afozesaid. And deuisinge with my selfe, who of al other were most worthy, to whom a thinge so excellent & notable should be dedycate, which to my conceite semeth for the admiracion, noueltie, and straungenesse, that it might be reputed to be of in the tyme, of the authour, in comparison, as a pure and fyne triede precious or policed iewell, oute of a rude or in digeste masse or matere, none could to my thinking occurre, that sins, or in the time of Chaucer, was or is sufficient, but only your maiestie royal, whiche by discrecion and iudgement, as moost absolute in wisedome and al kindes of doctrine, coulde and of his innate clemēcie and goodnesse, wold adde or giue any auctorite here vnto.

For this cause most excellent, and in al vertues most prestante prince, I as humbly prostrate before youre kinglie estate, lowely supply and beseche the same, that it woll vouchsafe to take in good parte my poore study, & delirous minde, in reducinge vnto light this so precious and necessary an ornament, of the tonge of this youre realme, ouer pitous to haue ben in anye point lofte, falsified, or neglected: So that vnder the shylde of your most royall protection and defence, it may go forthe in publike and preuail ouer those that wolde blemische, deface, and in many thinges clerely abolische the laude, renoume, and glorie here tofore compared, and meritoriously adquired by diuers princes, and other of this said most noble yle, wherunto nat onelye straungers

vnder pretexte of high learnyng, & knowlege of their malicious, and peruers myndes, but also some of your owne subiectes, blinded in folie and ignoraunce, dooe with greate studie contende. Moste gracious, victorious, and of God moste elect and worthie prince, my moste dread soueraine lorde, in whom of verie merite, duetie, and succession, is renued the glorious title of Defensor of the Christen faith, which by your noble progenitour, the Greate Constantine, somtime kyng of this Realme, and Emperor of Rome, was next God & his Apostles, chiefly maintained, corroborate, and defended: almightie Jesu send to your highnes, the continuall and euerlastyng habundaunce of his infinite grace. Amen.

Eight goodlie questions, with their answers.

SOmtime in Greece, that noble region
There were eight clerkes, of greate science
Philosophers, of notable discrecion
Of whom was asked, to proue their prudence
Eight questions, of derke intelligence
To whiche thei answered, after their entent
As here doeth appere, plaine and euident.

The first question, what yearthly thing
Is best, and to God moste comendable
The first clerke answered, without tarying
A mannes soule, euer ferme and stable
In right, from trouthe not variable
But now alas, full sore maie we wepe
For couetise hath brought trouthe a slepe.

The seconde, what thing is moste odious
A double man saied the Philosophre
With a virgine face, and a taile venomous
With a faire vieu, and a false profre
A corrupte carien, in a golden tree
It is a monster, in natures linage
One man to haue a double visage.

The thirde, what is the best dower
That maie be to a wife appropriate
A clene life, was the clerkes answer
Without sinne, chast, and inuiolate
From all disceiptes, and speaches inornate
Or countenaunce, whiche shall be to dispise
No fire make, and no smoke woll arise.

The fowerth question, what maiden maie
Be called clene in chastitie
The fowerth clerke answered, which alwaie
Euery creature, is ashamed on to lie
Of whõ euery man reporteth greate honestie
Good maidens kepe your chastite forthe
And remẽbre that good name is gold worthe

Who is a poore man euer full of wo
A couetouse man, whiche is a nigon
He that in his herte, can neuer saie ho
The more good, the lesse distribucion
The richer, the worse of condicion
Men in this cost, clepen him a nigarde
Sir Guy the bribour, is his stewarde.

Whiche is a riche man, without fraude
He that can to his good suffise
Whatsoeuer he hath, he yeueth God the laude
And kepeth him clene, from all couetise
He desireth nothing, in vngoodly wise
His body is here, his minde is aboue
He is a riche man, for God doeth him loue.

Who is a foole, is the seuenth demaunde
He that would hurte, and hath no powere
Might he michell, moche would he cõmaunde
His malice greate, his might nought were
He threteth full faire, full little maie he dere
Thinketh not how, men haue saied before
God sendeth a shrewde Cowe, a short horne.

Who is a wise man, is the eight question
He that might noie, and doeth no noiaunce
Might punishe, and leaueth punission
A man mercifull, without vengeaunce
A wise man putteth in remembraunce
Saiyng, had I venged all mine harme
My cloke had not be furred, halfe so warme.

The Prologues.

¶ To the kinges moste noble grace, and to the Lordes and knightes of the Garter.

O you wele of honor and and of worthinesse
Our Christen kynge, the heire and successoure
Unto Justinians deuoute tendernesse
In faithe of Jesu, our redemptour
And to you lordes, of the Garter floure
Of cheualrie, as men you clepe and call
The lorde of vertue, and of grace aucthour
Graunt the fruict of your lose, neuer appall.

O liege lorde, that haue eke the likenesse
Of Constantine, thensample and mirrour
To princes all, in humble buxumnesse
To holy churche, o veray sustainour
And piller of our faithe, and werriour
Again the heresies bitter Galle
Doe forthe doe forthe, continue your socour
Holde vp Christes baner, let it nat falle.

This Ile or this, had been but Hethnesse
Had be of your faithe, the force and vigoure
And yet this daie, the kendes crabbidnesse
Meneth fully, to catche a tyme and houre
To haue on vs your lieges, a sharpe shoure
And to his seruitude, vs knitte and thralle
But aye we trust in you, our protectour
On your costaunce, we a waiten alle.

Cõmaundeth that no wight, haue hardinesse
O worthy king, our Christen Emperour
Of new faithe, to dispute more or lesse
Openly emong people: Her errour
Springeth all daie, and engendreth rumour
Maketh soche lawe, & for ought maie befall
Obserue it wele, there to be ye dettour
Doeth so, and God in glorie shall you stall.

Ye Lordes eke, shinyng in noble fame
To whiche appropred is, the maintenaunce
Of Christes cause, in honour of his name
Shoue on, and put his foes to vttraunce
God would so, so would eke your legiaunce
To tho twoo, pricketh you your duetie
Who so nat kepeth, this double obseruaunce
Of merite and honour, naked is he.

Your stile saieth, ye be foes to shame
Now lith of your faithe, the perseueraunce
In whiche an heape of vs, be halte and lame
Our christen king of Englande & of Fraunce
And ye my lordes, with your alsaunce
And other faithfull people, that there be Trust I to God, shal quenche al this noisaunce
And this lande set, in high prosperite.

Conquest of high prowesse is for to tame
The wilde woodnesse, of these miscreaunce
Right to the rote, repe ye that same
Slepe nat this, but for Goddes plesaunce
And his mother, and in signifiaunce
That ye been of, sainct Georges liuere
Doeth him seruice, and knightly obeisaunce
For Christes cause is his, well knowen ye.

Stille stande in that, & ye shall greue & grame
The foe to peace, the norice of distaunce
That now is ernest, tourne it in to game
Now kithe of your beleue the constaunce
Lorde liege, and lordes haue in remembraunce
Lorde of all is the blisfull Trinitee
Of whose vertue, the mightie habundaunce
You herte and strength, in faithfull vnitee.

Explicit.

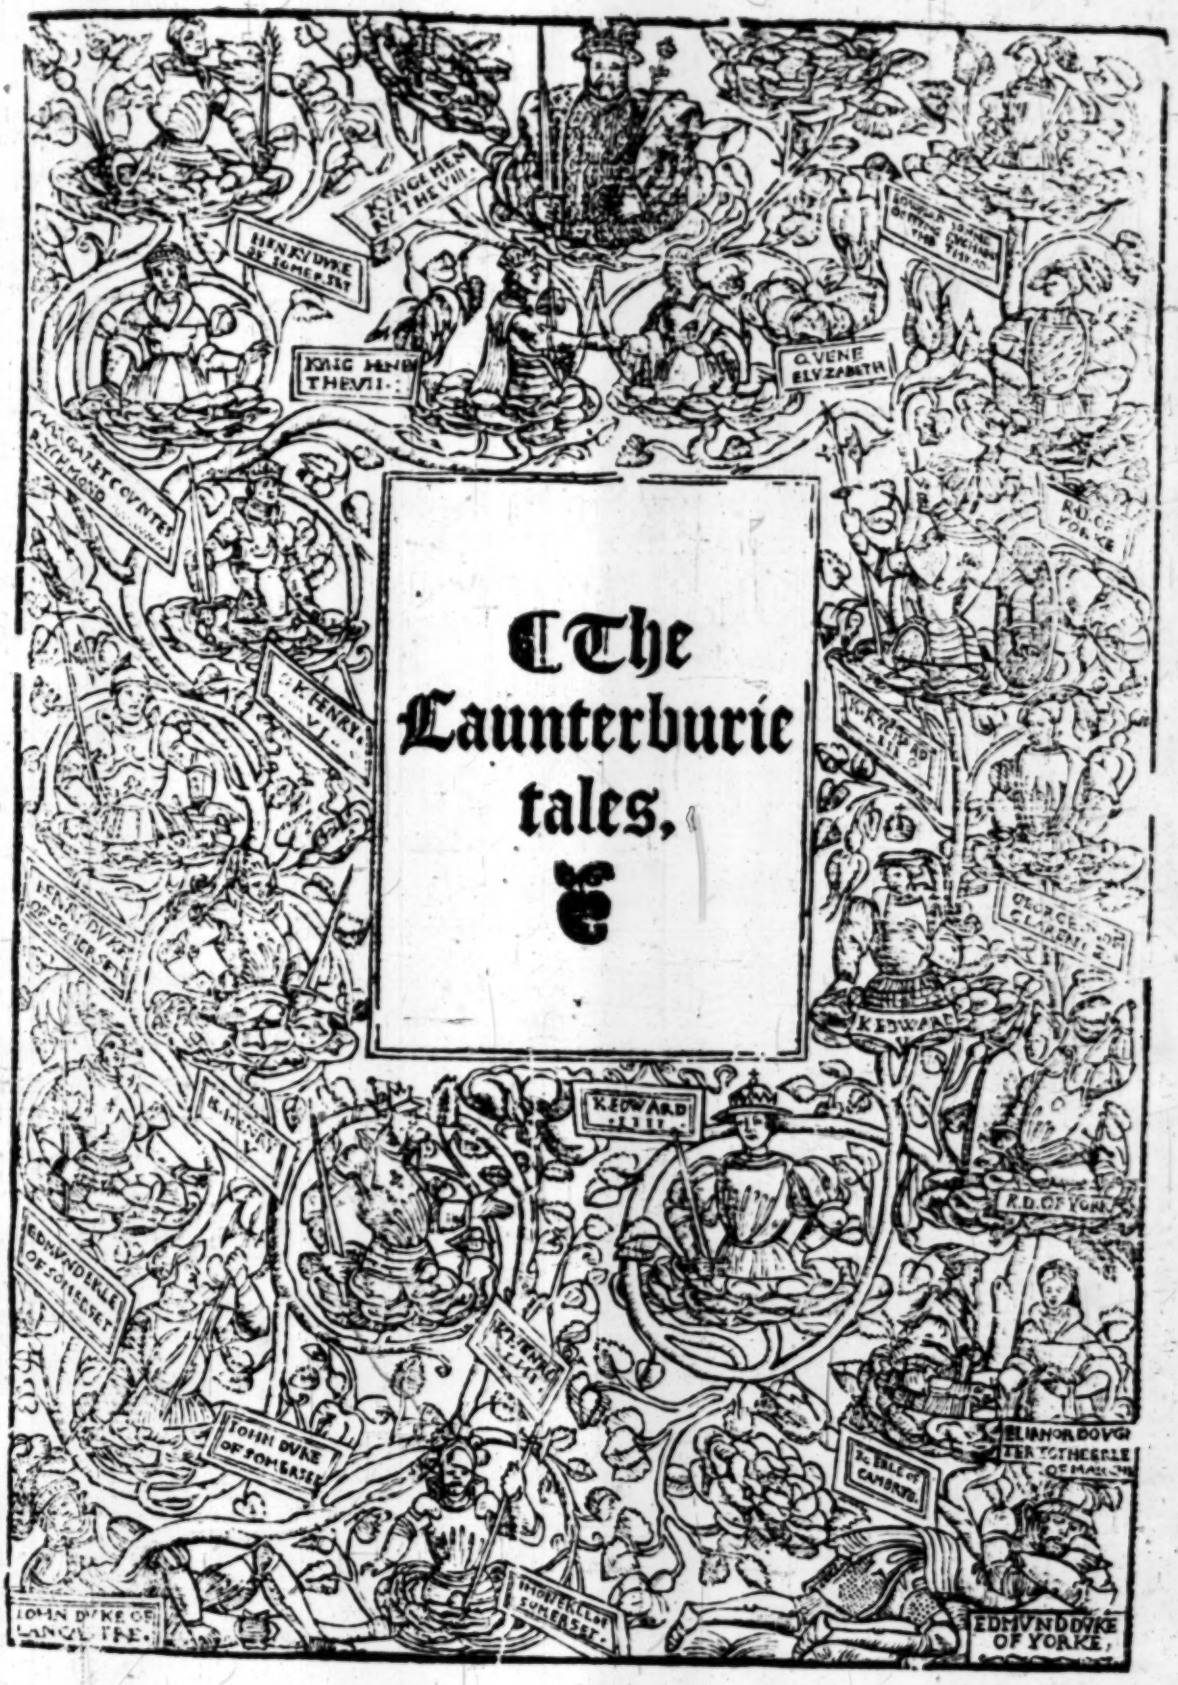

Whan faithe faileth in prestes sawes
And lordes hestes are holden for lawes
And robberie is holden purchace
And lecherye is holden solace
Than shall the londe of Albion
Be brought to greate confusion.

It falleth for euery gentilman
To saie the best that he can
In mannes absence
And the sothe in his presence
It cometh by kinde of gentill blood
To caste awaie all heuinesse
And gader together worldes good
The werke of wisedome beareth witnesse.

The Prologues.

When that Aprill with his shoures soote
The drought of Marche, had perced the roote
And bathed euery vaine, in swich licoure
Of whiche vertue, engendred is the floure
When zephirus, eke with his soote breath
Enspired hath, euery holte and heath
The tendre croppes, and the yong sonne
Hath in the Ram, halfe his course ironne
And smale foules, maken melodie
That slepen all night, with open eye
So pricketh hem nature, in hir courage
Then longen folke, to go on pilgrimage
And Palmers to seken, straunge strondes
To serue halowes, couth in sondrie londes
And specially, fro euery shires ende
Of Englande, to Caunterburie thei wende
The holie blisfull martyre, for to seke
That hem hath holpen, when thei were seke.

It befell that season, on a daie
In Southwarke, at the Tabard as I laie
Redie to go, in my Pilgrimage
To Caunterburie, with deuoute courage
That night was come, into that hostelrie
Well nine and twentie, in a companie
Of sondrie folke, by auenture ifall
In feliship, and Pilgrimes were thei all
That toward Caunterburie would ride
The chambres and stables weren wide
And well weren thei eased, at the best
And shortly, when the Sonne was at rest
So had I spoken, with hem euerychone
That I was, of her feliship anone
And made forward, early for to rise
To take our waie, there as I you deuise
But nathelesse, while I haue tyme & space
Or that I ferther, in this tale pace
Me thinke it, accordaunt to reason
To tell you all the condicion
Of eche of hem, so as it semed me
And whiche thei were, and of what degree
And eke in what arate, that thei were in
And at a knight, then will I first begin.

The Knight. i.

A knight there was, and that a worthie man
That fro the tyme, that he first began
To riden out, he loued chevalrie
Trouth, honour, fredome and curtesie
Full worthie was he, in his Lordes warre
And therto had he ridden, no man so farre
As well in Christendome, as in Heathenesse
And euer had honour, for his worthinesse
At Alisaundre he was, when it was won
Full oft tyme, he had the bourde begon
Abouen all nations in Prusse

The Prologues.

In Garnade, at the ſiege had he bee
Of Algezer, and ridden in Belmarie
At Leyes was he, and alſo at Satalie when thei were wonne, and in the greate ſee
At many a noble armie, had he be
At mortall battailes, had he been fiftene

This ſilke worthie knight, had been alſo
Sometyme with the Lorde of Palathie
Againſt an other Heathen, in Turkie
And euermore, he had a ſoueraine prile
And though he was worthie, he was wiſe
And of his porte, as meke as is a maied
He neuer yet, no vilanie ne ſaied
In all his life, vnto no maner wight
He was a verie perfite gentill knight
For to tell you, of his araie
His hors wer good, but he was nothing gaie
Of fuſtian, he weared a gippon
All beſmottred, with his haubergion
For he was late come, fro his viage
And went for to doen, his pilgrimage.

¶ The Squire. ii.

With hym there was his ſonne, a yong Squire
A louer, and a luſtie bachelere
With his lockes curle, as thei were laied in preſſe
Of twentie yere of age, he was I geſſe
Of his ſtature, he was of euen length
And wonderly deliuer, and of greate ſtrength
And he had be ſometyme, in chiuauchie
In Flaunders, in Artois, and in Picardie
And borne hym well, as of ſo little ſpace
In hope to ſtande, in his ladies grace
Embrouded was he, as it weren a mede
All full of freſhe floures, white and rede
Singing he was, or floityng all the daie
He was freſhe, as is the monthe of Maie
Short was his goune, w ſleues long & wide
Well coud he ſit on an horſe, and faire .ride
He coud ſonges make, and well endite
Juſte and eke daunce, portraie and well write
So hote he loued, that by nightertale
He ſlept no more, then doeth the Nightingale
Curteis he was, lowlie and ſeruiſable
And kerfte before his fader at the table.

¶ The Squiers yoman. iii.

The Prologues.

A yoman had he, and ſeruauntes no mo
At that tyme, for hym lyſte to ryde ſo
And he was clad in coate, and hode of grene
A ſhefe of Pecocke arowes, bryght and kene
Under his belte, he bare full thryftely
Well could he dreſſe his tackle yomanly
His arowes drouped not, with fethers lowe
And in his hande, he bare a mighty bowe
A not hedde had he, with a broune viſage
Of woodde craft, well couth he all the vſage
Upon his arme, he bare a gaie bracer
And by his ſide, a ſwerde and a bokeler
And on that other ſide, a gaie daggere
Harneiſed well, and ſharpe as poinct of ſpere
A Chriſtofer on his breſt, of ſiluer ſhene
An horne he bare, the baudryke was of grene
A forſter was he, ſothly as I gelle.

¶ The Priorelle. iiii.

There was alſo a Nonne, a Priorelle
That of her ſmiling, was ſimple & coie
Her greateſt othe was, by ſainct Loie
And ſhe was called, dame Eglentine
Full well ſhe ſong the, ſeruice dyuine
Entuned in her voice, full ſemely
And Frenche ſhe ſpake, full fetously
After the ſchole, at Stratforde at Bowe

For Frenche of Paris, was to her vnknowe
At meate, was she well itaught withall
She let no morsell, fro her lippes fall
Ne weate her fingers, in her sauce depe
Well couth she carye a morsell, and well kepe
That no drop, ne fell vpon her brest
In curtesie was set, full moche her lest
Her ouerlip, wiped she so clene
That in her cup, was no ferthyng sene
Of Grece, when she dronken had her draught
Full semely, after her meate she raught
And sikerly, she was of greate disporte
And full pleasaunt, and amiable of porte
And pained her, to counterfete chere
Of courte, and to be stateliche of manere
And to been holden, digne of reuerence
But for to speake, of her conscience
She was so charitable, and so pitous
She would wepe, if that she sawe a Mous
Caught in a trappe, if it were dedde or bledde
Of smale houndes had she, that she fedde
With roste flesche, milke, or wastell bredde
But sore wept she, if any of hem were dedde
Or if men smote hem, with a yarde smarte
And all was conscience, and tender harte
Full semely her wimple, pinched was Her nose tretes, her yen graie as glas
Her mouthe smale, and thereto soft and redde
But sikerly, she had a faire forehedde
It was almoste, a span brode I trowe
For hardely, she was not vnder growe
Full fetise was her cloke, as I was ware
Of smale Corall, aboute her arme she bare
A paire of bedes, gauded all with grene
And thereon hong, a broche of gold full shene
On which ther was, first writte a crouned. A
And after that (Amor vincit omnia)
An other Nonne, with her had she
That was her chapelein, and preestes three.

The Monke. v.

A Monke there was, faire for the maistrie
An out rider, that loued venerie
A manlie man, to been an Abbot able Full many a deintie horse, had he in stable
And whē he rode, men might his bridell here
Gingelyng, in a whistlyng winde as clere
And eke as loude, as doeth the chapell bell
There as this lorde, was keper of the cell
The rule of sainct Maure, or of sainct Benet
Bicause it was olde, and somdele streit
This ilke Monke, let old thinges pace
And held after the newe worlde, the space
He yaue not of the text, a pulled Henne
That saieth, that hunters be not holy men
Ne that a Monke, when he is recheleſſe
Is likened to a fiſhe, that is waterleſſe
This is to saie, a Monke out of his cloister
This ilke text, held he not worthe an Oister
And I saie, his opinion was good
Whereto should he studie, and make himself wood
Upon a booke alwaie, in cloister to powre
Or swinke with his handes, or labowre
As Austin bid, how shall the worlde be serued

Let

Let Iustin haue his swinke, to him reserued
Therefore he was, a prikesour a right
Greihoundes he had, as swift as foule of flight
Of prickyng, and of huntyng for the Hare
Was all his lust, for no coste would he spare
I sawe his sleues, purfled at the hande
With Grice, and that the finest in a lande
And for to faste his hoode, vnder the chinne
He had of gold wrought, a curious pinne
A loue knot, in the greater ende there was His hedde was balde, and shone as any glas
And eke his face, as he had been anoincte
He was a lorde full fatte, and in good poincte
His yen stepe, and rolyng in his hedde
That stemed, as a furneis of a Ledde
His bootes souple, his hors in greate estate
Now certainly, he was a faire prelate
He was not pale, as a forpined ghoste
A fatte Swan loued he best, of any roste
His palfraie was broune, as is a berie

The Frere. vi.

A Frere there was, a wāton and a merie
A limitour, a full solempne man
In all the orders fower, is non that can
So moche of daliaunce, and faire langage
He hath made, full many a mariage
Of yong women, at his owne coste
Vntill his order, he was a noble poste Full wel beloued, and familier was he
With Frankeleins, ouer all in his countree
And with worthie women, of the toun
For he had power, of confessioun
As he saied himself, more then a Curate
For of his order, he was licenciate
Full swetely heard he confession
And pleasaunt was, his absolucion
He was an easie man, to gyue penaunce
There as he wist, to haue a good pitaunce
For vnto a poore order, for to gyue
Is signe that a man, is well ishriue
For if he gaue, he durst make auaunte
He wiste that a man, was repentaunte
For many a man, is so harde of harte
That he may not wepe, though him smarte
Therefore in stede, of weping and praiers
Men mote gyue siluer, to the poore Freres
His tippet was aie, fassed full of knives
And pinnes, for to gyue faire wives
And certainly, he had a merie note
Well coud he sing, and plaien on a rote
Of yeddyng, he bare vtterly the prise
His neck was white, as the flour delice
Thereto strong he was, as a champioun
And knewe the Tauerns, well in euery toun
And euery Hosteler and Tapstere
Bet then a lasar, or a beggere
For vnto suche, a worthie man as he Accordeth nought, as by his faculte
To haue with Lasers, suche acquaintaunce
It is not honest, it may not auaunce
For to deale, with suche poraile
But all with riche, and sellers of vitaile
And ouer all, there as profite should arise
Curteis he was, and lowly of seruice

There nas no man, no where so vertuous
He was the best begger, in his hous
And gaue a certain ferme, for the graunte
None of his brethren, came in his haunte
For though a widowe, had but a shoe
(So pleasaunt was his In principio)
Yet would he haue, a farthyng or he went
His purchase was better, then his rent
And rage he couth, as it were a whelpe
In loue daies, there coud he mikell helpe
For there he was not, like a cloysterere
With a threde bare cope, as a poore frere
But he was like a maister, or a Pope
Of double worstede, was his semie cope
So rounded was, as a bell out of presse
Somwhat he lisped, for his wantonnesse
To make his Englishe, swete vpon his tong
And in Harpyng, when he had song
His yen tinkeled, in his hedde a right
As doen the sterres, in a frostie night
This worthie frere, was called Huberde

A Marchaunte was there, with a long berde In motley, on high on his horse he satte Upon his hedde, a Flaun-ders beuer hatte
His Bootes clasped, faire and fetously
His reasons he spake, full solempnely
Shewing alwaie, ỹ encrease of his winnyng
He would the sea were kept, for any thyng
Betwixe Middelborough, and Orewel
Well coud he, in exchaunge sell
This worthie man, full well his witte biset
There wiste no wight, that he was in det
So stately was he, of his gouernaunce
With his bargeins, and with his chenisaunce
For sothe he was, a worthie man withall
But sothly to sain, I not what men him call

The

The Prologues.

¶ The Sergiant at Lawe. ir.

A Sergiante of Lawe, ware and wise
That often had been, at the parvise
That was also full riche of excellence
Discrete he was, and of greate reuerence
He semed soche, his wordes were so wise
Justice he was, full often in assise
By patent, and by plain commission
For his science, and his hie renoun
Of fees and robes had he, many one
So greate a purchasour, was no where none
All was fee simple, to hym in effecte
His purchasyng might no be, to hym suspect
No where so bisie a man, as he there nas
And yet he semed bisier, then he was In termes had he, case and domes all
That fro the tyme, of kyng William was fall
Thereto he coud endite, and make a thyng
There coud no wight pinche, at his writyng
And euery statute, coud he plain by rote
He rode but homely, in a medley cote
Girt with a seint of silke, with barres smale
Of his arraie, tell I no lenger tale.

¶ The Frankelein. r.

A Frankelein

The Prologues.

A Frankelein there was, in his companie
White was his berde, as is the Deisie
And of his complexion, he was sanguine
Well loued he by the morowe, a soppe in wine
To liuen in delite, was euer his wonne
For he was Epicures owne sonne
That held opinion, that plain delite
Was verie felicitie perfite
An housholder, and that a greate was he Sainct Julian, he was in his countre
His bread, his ale, was alwaie after one
A better viended man, was no where none
Without bake meate, was neuer his house
Of fishe and flesshe, and that so plenteouse
It snewed in his house, of meate and drinke
Of all deintes, that men could thinke
After the sondrie seasons of the yere
So chaunged he his meate, and his suppere
Full many a fat Partriche, had he in mewe
And many a breme, and many a luce in stewe
Woo was his Cooke, but his sauce were Poinant and sharpe, and redy all his gere
His table dormaunt, in his hall alwaie
Stoode redy couered, all the long daie
At sessions, there was he lorde and sire
Full oft tyme, he was knight of the shire
An anelace and gipsere, all of silke
Hing at his girdle, white as morowe milke
A Sheriffe had he been, and a countour
Was no where, soche a worthie vavasour.

The Haberdasher. xi.

A Haberdasher ther was, and a Carpenter
A webbe, a Dier, and a Tapiser
All thei were iclothed in o liuere
Of a solempne and a greate fraternite
Full freshe and newe, her geare ipiked was Her knives ichaped, nere not of Brass
But al with silver, wrought full clene and wele
Her girdeles, and her pouches euery dele
Well semed eueriche of hem, a faire burgeis
To sitten at a Yelde hall, on the hie deis Eueriche for the wisedome, that he can
Was shapen liche, for to been an alderman
For catalle had thei right inough, and rent
And eke her wives, would it well assent
And els certain, thei were to blame
It is full faire, to been icleped madame
And gone to vigilles, all before
And have a mantell, roialliche ybore.

The Cooke. xii.

A Cooke

The Prologues.

A Cooke thei had with hem, for the nones
To boile the Chykens, and the marie bones
And pouder merchaunt, tarte, and galingale
Well coud he know, a draught of London ale
He couth roste, sethe, boile, and frie
Make mortreis, and well bake a pie
But greate harme was it, as it thought me
That on his shinne, a mormall had he
And blanke manger, made he with the beste

¶ The Shipman. xiii.

A Shipman was there, wonnyng fer by weste
For aught I wot, he was of Derth mouthe
He rode vpon a rouncie, as he couthe
In a goune of faldyng, to the knee
A dagger hangyng, by a lace had he Aboute his necke, vnder his arme doune
The hot sommer had made, his hew all broune
And certain, he was a good felawe
Full many a draught, of wine had he drawe
Fro Burdeux ward, whyle the chapmen slepe
Of nice conscience, tooke he no kepe
If that he faught, and had the higher hande
By water he sent hem home, to euery lande
But of his crafte, to reken well his tides

His

His Arrmes and his daungers, hem besides
His herbrough, his moone, a his lodemanage
There was none loche, from Hul to Cartage
Hardie he was, and wise to vndertake
With many a tempest, had his berde be shake
He knewe all the hauens, as there were Fro Scotlande, to the Cape de Fenestere
And euery Crike, in Britaine and in Spaine
His Barge, was called the Maudelaine.

¶ The Doctour of Phisike. xiiii.

With vs there was, a Doctour of Phisike
In all this worlde, ne was there none hym like
To speake of Phisike, and of Surgerie
For he was grounded in Astronomie
He kept his pacient, a full greate deel
In houres, by his Magike naturell
Well couthe he fortune the ascendent
Of his Image, for his pacient.
He knewe the cause of euery maladie
Were it of colde, heate, moiste, or drie
And whereof engendred, what humour
He was a verie perfite practisour
The cause knowe, and of his harme the rote
Anone he gaue, to the sicke man his bote
Full redy had he his Apoticaries
To send hym drugges, and his Lectuaries
For eche of hem, made other for to winne
Her frendship, nas not newe to beginne
Well knewe he, the olde Esculapius
And Dioscorides, and eke Rufus
Olde Hippocrates, Halie, and eke Galein
Serapion, Razis, and also Auicen
Auerrois, Damascene, and Constantine
Bernarde, Gatisden, and Gilbertine
Of his diete, mesurable was he
For it was of no superfluite
But of greate nourishyng, and digestible
His studie was, but little on the Bible
In sanguine, and in perce he cladde was all Lined with Taffata, and with Sendall
And yet he was, but easie of dispence
He kept that he wan, in tyme of pestilence
For golde in Phisike, is a Cordiall
Therefore he loued golde in speciall.

¶ The Clerke of Orenforde. viii.

A clerke

A Clerke there was of Orenford also
That vnto Logike, had long ygo
As leane was his horse, as a rake
And he was nothyng fat, I vndertake
But looked holowe, and thereto soberly
Full thredbare was his ouer courtpy
For he had yet getten hym no benefice
Ne was nought worthie, to haue none office
For him was leuer, to haue at his beddes hed
Twentie bookes, clad with blacke or redde
Of Aristotle, and of his Philosophie
Then robes riche, or fiddell, or gaie Sautrie
But all be that he, was of a Philosophre
Yet had he but little golde in cofre
But all that he might, of his frendes hent
On bookes and on learnyng, he it spent
And besely gan for the soules praie
Of hem that helpen, him to scholaie
Of studie, tooke he moste cure and hede
Not a worde spake, more then nede
And that was saied, in forme and reuerence
And shorte and quicke, and of hie sentence
Sounyng in morall vertue, was his speache
And gladly would learne, and gladly teache.

The wife of Bathe. rv.

A Good wife there was, beside Bathe
But she was somedeale deafe, and that was scathe
Of clothe makyng, she had soche an haunte
She passed hem of Ipre, or of Gaunte
In all the parishe, wife ne was there none
That to the offryng, before her should gone
And if there did, certain right wroth was she
That she was all, out of charitee
Her kerchers, full fine were of grounde

The Prologues.

I durste swere, thei wayden ten pounde
That on a Sondaie, were vpon her hedde
Her hosen were, of fine Scarlet redde
Full straite istreined, and shoes full newe
Bolde was her face, and redde was her hewe
She was a worthie woman, all her live
Yuldandes at the churche dooze, had she live
Withouten other companie, in youth
But thereof nedeth not, to speake as nouth
And thrise had she been at Hierusalem
She had passed, many a strong streme
At Rome had she been, and at Boloine
In Galis at sainct James, and at Coloine
She couth moche, of wandryng by the waie
Gat tothed was she, sothly for to saie
Upon an ambler, easely she sat
Ywimpled well, and on her hedde an hatte
As brode as is a bokeler, or a targe
A foote mantell, about her hippes large
And on feete, a paire of spurres sharpe
In feliship, well couth she laugh and carpe
Of remedies of loue, she coud perchaunce
For she couth of that art, the olde daunce.

The Persone. xvi.

A Good manne there was, of Religioun
And was a poore Parsone of a toun
But rich he was, of holy thought & werk
He was also a learned man, and a Clerke
That Christes Gospels, truly would preache
His Parishens, deuoutlie would he teache
Benigne he was, and wonder diligent
And in aduersitie, full pacient
And such he was, proued oft sithes
Full lothe were him, to curse for his tithes
But rather would he, yeuen out of doubt Unto his poore parishens about
Of his offryng, and of his substaunce
He couth in little thyng, haue sufficiaunce
Wide was his parish, and houses fer a sondre
But he ne left, neither for raine ne thondre
In sickenesse, ne in mischief for to visite
The ferrest in his Parishe, moche or lite
Upon his feete, and in his hande a staffe
This noble ensample, to his sheepe he yaf
That first he wrought, & afterward taught
Out of the Gospell, he the wordes caught
And this figure, he radde eke thertto
That if golde rust, what should iron do
For if a preest be foule, on whom we trust
No wonder is, a leude man to rust
And shame it is, if a preest take kepe
To se a shitten Shepherde, and a cleane shepe
Well ought a preest, ensample for to yeue
By his cleannesse, how his sheepe should liue
He sette not his benefice to hire
And let his sheepe, acombre in the mire
And renne to London, to sainct Poules
To seken hym, a Chauntrie for soules
Or with a brotherhede, to be withholde
But dwelt at home, and kept well his folde
So that the wolfe, ne made hem not miscary
He was a Shepherde, and not a mercenary
And though he holy were, and vertuous
He was not to sinfull men dispitous
Ne of his speache, daungerous ne digne
But in his techyng, discrete and benigne

To

The Prologues.

To drawen folke to heauen, with fairenelle
By good enſample, this was his beſinelle
But if it were, any perſone obſtinate
What ſo he were, of hie or lowe eſtate
Him would he ſnibbe, ſharply for the nonis
A better preſt I trowe, no where none is
He waited after no pompe, ne reuerence
Ne maked him, no ſpiced conſcience
But Chriſtes lore, and his Apoſtles twelue
He taught, but firſt he folowed it him ſelue.

¶ The Plowman. xvii.

With him there was a Plowman, his brother
That had lad of dong, many a fother
A true ſwinker, and a good was he Liuyng in peace, and perfite charitee
God loued he beſte, with all his harte
At all tymes, though him gamed or ſmarte
And then his neighbours, right as hem ſelf
He would threſhe, and thereto dike and delf
For Chriſtes ſake, for euery poore wight Withouten hire, if it laie in his might
His Tithes paied he, full faire and well
Bothe of his proper ſwinke, and of his cattel
In a tabarde he rode, vpon a Mare
There was alſo a Reue, and a Millare
A Sompnour, and a Pardoner alſo
A Manciple, and my ſelf, there was no mo.

¶ The Miller. xviii.

The Prologues.

THE Miller was a stoute carle, for the nones
Full bigge he was of braune, and eke of bones
That proued well, for ouer all there he came
At wrastling he would, haue awaie the Ram
He was short shuldered, a thicke gnarre
There nas no doore, but he would heue þ bar
Or breake it, at a rennyng with his hedde
His beard, as any Sowe or Fore was redde
And thereto brode, as it were a spade
Upon the coppe, right of his nose he hade
A werte, and thereon stoode a tufte of heares
Redde as the bristles, of a Sowes eares
His nostrels blacke were and wide
A swerde and bucheler, bare he by his side
His mouthe as greate was, as a furneis
He was a tangler, and a golderdeis
And that was most of sinne, and of harletrise
Well couth he steale corne, and tolde it thrise
And yet he had, a thombe of golde parde
A white coate, and a blewe hode weared he
A bagpipe, well couthe he blowe and soune
And therwithall, brought he vs out of toune

¶ The Manciple. xix.

A Gentle Manciple there was, of the Temple
Of whiche all Catours, might taken ensemple
For to been wise, in buying of vitaille
For whether he paied, or tooke by taille
Algate he waited, so in his achate
That he was ay before, in good estate
Now is not that of God, a full faire grace
That swiche a lewde mannes witte, shall pace
The wisedome, of an heape of learned men
Of maisters had he, mo then thrise ten
That were of lawe experte, and curious
Of whiche there was, a dosen in that hous
Worthy to been Stewardes, of rent and land
Of any Lorde, that is in Englande
To maken him live, by his proper good
In honour doubtlesse, but if he were wood
Or live as scarsly, as him list desire
And able to helpen, all a shire
In any case, that might fallen or happe
And yet the Manciple, set all her cappe.

¶ The Reue. xx.

The

THE Reue was a flender Colerike man
His beарde was shaue, as nie as euer he can
His heere was by his eares rounde ishorne
His toppe was docked, like a preest beforne
Full long were his legges, and full lene
Ilike a staffe, there was no Calfe isene
Well couth he kepe, a Garner and a Binne
There was none Auditour, could on him win
Well wist he by the drought, and by the raine
The yelding of his seede, and of his graine
His Lordes Shepe, his Nete, and his Deirie
His swine, his hors, his store, and his pultrie
Were holly in his Reues gouernyng
And by his couenaunt, yaue he rekenyng
Sith his Lorde, was twentie yere of age
There could no man, bring hym in arerage
There nas Bailie, Herde, ne none other Hine
That he ne knewe, his sleight and his couine
Thei were a dradde of hym, as of the death
His dwelling was, full faire vpon an heath
With grene trees, shadowed was his place
He could better, then his Lorde purchace
Full riche he was, astored priuely
His Lorde he could, well please subtilly
To yeue and lene hym, of his owne good
And haue a thanke, and yet a coate and a hood
In youth he had, learned a good mistere
He was a well good wright, a Carpentere
This Reue sate, vpon a right good stot
That was all pomell grey, and hight Scot
A long surcote of perce, vpon he hade
And by his side, he bare a rustie blade
Of Northfolke was this Reue, of whiche I tell
Beside a toune, men clepen it Baldeswell
Tucked he was, as is a Frere aboute
And euer he rode, hinderest of the route.

The Sompnour. xxi.

A Sompnour was there, wt vs in ꝑ place
That had a fire redde Cherubins face
For saufleme he was, with eyen narow
As hote he was, and lecherous as a sparowe
With scaled browes blacke, and pilled berde
Of his visage, children were sore afferde
There nas quicksilver, Litarge, ne brimstone
Borace, Ceruse, ne oile of Tartre none
Ne ointment, that would clense or bite
That him might helpe, of his whelkes white
Ne of his knobbes, sittyng on his cheekes
Well loued he Garlike, Onions, and eke lekes
And for to drinke strong wine, redde as blood
Then would he speke, & crie as he were wood
And when he had, well idronke the wine
Then would he speake, no worde but Latine
A fewe termes had he, twoo or three
That he had learned, out of some degree
No wonder is, he heard it all the daie
And ye knowen well eke, how that a Jaie
Can clepe Watte, as well as can the Pope
But who so couth, in other thing him grope
Then had he spent, all his Philosophie
(A quæstio quid iuris) would he crie
He was a gentill harlot, and a kinde
A better fellowe, should a man not finde
He would suffer, for a quarte of wine
A good fellowe, to haue his concubine
A twelue monthe, and excuse him at the full Full priuely eke, a Finche couth he pull
And if he founde o where, a good fellawe
He would teache him, to haue none awe
In swiche case, of the Archedekins curse
But if mannes soule, were in his purse
For in his purse, he should ipunished be Purse is the Archedeakens hell, said he
But well I wotte, he lied right in deede
Of curssyng, ought eche synfull man dreede
For curssyng woll slea, right as assoiling saueth
And also ware him, of significauit
In daunger had he, at his owne gise
The young girles, of the Diocise
And knewe her counsaile, and was of her red
A garlande had he, set vpon his hed
As greate as it were, for an alestake
A buckeler had he, maked him of a cake.

With him there rode, a gentle
Pardonere
Of Rounceuall, his frend and his compere
That straight was come, fro the courte of Rome
Full loude song he, come hider loue to me
This Sompnour, bare him a stiffe burdoun
Was neuer Trompe, of halfe so greate a soun
This Pardoner, had heer as yelowe as ware
But smothe it hong, as doeth a strike of flare
By vnces hong, his lockes that he had
And therewith, he his shulders ouerspradd
But thinne it laie, by culpons one and one
But hode for iolite, wered he none
For it was trussed vp in his walet
Him thought he rode, all of the newe iet
Dischevelde, saue his cappe he rode all bare Swiche glaring eyen had he, as an hare
A vernacle had he, sowed vpon his cappe
His wallet beforne him, in his lappe
Bret full of pardon, come from Rome al hote

I voice he had, as smale as hath a Gote
No berde had he, ne neuer should haue
As smothe it was, as it were newe shaue
I trowe he were, a Geldyng or a Mare
But of his craffte, fro Barwike vnto Ware
Ne was there soche, an other Pardonere
For in his male, had he a pillowe bere
Whiche as he saied, was our Ladies vaile
He saied he had, a gobbet of the saile
That sainct Peter had, when that he went Upon the sea, till Jesu Christ hym hent
He had a crosse of Latine, full of stones
And in a glasse, he had Pigges bones
But with these relikes, when that he fonde
A poore Parsone, dwellyng vponde
Upon a daie, he gate hym more money
Then that Parsone, gat in monethes twey
And thus with fained flatterying and iapes
He made the Parson, and the people his apes
But truly to tellen at the last
He was in the churche, a noble Ecclesiast
Well couthe he rede, a lesson or a storie
But alderbest, he sang an offertorie
For well he wiste, when that song was song
He must preache, and well a file his tong
To winne siluer, as he well coud
Therefore he song, so merily and loude.
Now haue I tolde you, sothly in a clause
Thestate, the araie, eche nober, & eke the cause
Why that assembled, was this compaine
In Southwerke, at this gentill hostelrie
That highte the Tabarde, fast by the Bell
But now is tyme, to you for to tell
How that we baren vs, that ilke night
When we weren, in that hostrie alight
And after will I tell, of our voiage
And all the remnaunt, of our pilgrimage
But firste I praie you, of your curtesie
That ye ne arette it not my follie
Though that I, plainly speak in this matter
To tellen you her wordes, and eke her chere
Ne though I speake, her wordes properly
For this ye knowen, as well as I
Who shall tellen a tale, after a man
He mote rehearse, as nie as euer he can Euerichè worde, if it been in his charge
All speake he neuer so rudely, ne large
Or elis he mote tellen his tale vntrue
Or feine thinges, or finde wordes newe
He maie not spare, altho he were his brother
He mote as well saie, o worde as an other Christ spake hymself, full brode in holy writ
And well I wotte, no villanie is it
Eke Plato saieth, who so can hym rede
The wordes mote been, cosin to the dede

Also I praie you, forgeue it me
All haue I not, set folke in her degre
Here in this tale, as thei should stande
My witte is short, ye maie well vnderstande.

GReate chere made our hoste, vs euerichone
And to the Supper, sette he vs anone
And serued vs, with vitaile at the beste
Strong was the wine, & well dronke vs leste
A semely man, our hoste was with all
For to been a Marshall, in a lordes hall
A large man he was, with eyen stepe
A fairer burgeis is there none in Chepe
Bolde of his speche, wise and wel ytaught
And of manhode him lacked right naught
Eke therto he was a right merry man
And after supper plaien he began
And spake of mirthe amonge other thinges
Whan that we had made our reckeninges
And said thus, now lordinges truely
Ye ben to me well come right hertely
For by my trouth if I should not lye
I saw nat this yere so merry a compaine
Atones, in this herbergh we as is nowe
Fain wolde I don you mirth and I wist how
And of a mirth I am right nowe bethought
To don you ease, and it shall coste nought
Ye gone to Canterbury God mote you spede
The blisful martir quite you your mede
And wel I wot as ye gone by the way
Ye shapen you to talken and to play
For trewly comforte ne mirth is there none
To riden by the way as dombe as a stone
And therfore wolde I maken you disporte
As I said erst, and done you some comforte
And yf you liketh al by one assent
For to stonden at my iudgement
And for to worchen as I shal you say
To morowe whan we riden on the way
Now by my fathers soule that is deed
But ye be mery I will giue you my heed
Hold vp your handes without more speche
Our counsail was not longe for to seche
Us thought it was not worth to make it wise
And graunted him without more auise
And bad him say his verdit as him lest Lordinges (quod he) now herkeneth for the best
But take it nat I praie you in disdaine
This is the point to speke it plat and plaine
That eche of you to shorte with others way
In this viage, shal tell tales twaie
To Canterbury warde I meane it so

And

And homwardes he shal tel tales other two
Of auentures whilom that han befal
And whiche of you that bereth him best of al
That is to saine, that tellen in this case
Tales of best sentence and most solace
Shal haue a supper at oure alder cost
Here in this place sitting by this post
Whan that we comen ayen from Canterbury
And for to make you the more mery
I wil my seluen goodly with you ride
Right at mine owne cost and be your gide
And who that wol my iudgement withsay
Shal pay al that we spende by the way
And yf ye vouchsafe that it be so
Tel me anone without wordes mo
And I wol erly shape me therfore
This thing was graunted & our othes swore
With glad hert, and prayden him also
That he wolde vouchsafe for to do so
And that he wolde ben our gouernour
And of our tales iudge and reportour
And set a supper at a certaine pryse
And we wollen ben demed at his deuise
In hie and lowe, and thus by one assent
We ben accorded to the iudgement
And therupon the wine was fette anon
We dronken, and to rest wente ylke one
Withouten any lenger tariyng
A morowe whan the day gan to spring
Up rose our host, and was our alder cocke
And gathered vs al in a flocke
And forth we riden a litel more than paas
Vnto the watering of saint Thomas
And there our host began his horse arest
And said: lordes herkeneth yf you lest
Ye wote your forward, and I it recorde
If eue longe and morowe longe accorde
Let se nowe who shal tel the first tale
As euer I mote drinke wine or ale
Who so is rebel to my iudgement
Shal paye for al that by the way is spent Nowe draweth cut or that ye farther twin
The which that hath the shortest shal begin.
Sir knight (q he) my maister and my lorde
Nowe draweth cutte, for that is mine acorde
Cometh nere (q he) my lady Prioresse
And ye sir Clerke, let be your shamefastnesse
Ne studieth not, lay hande therto euery man
Anone to drawe euery wight began
And shortely for to tellen as it was
Were it by auenture, or by shorter caas
The lothe is this, the cutte fil to the knight
Of whiche ful blith & glad was euery wight
And tellen he must his tale as it was reason
By forward, and by compositon
As ye han herde, what nedeth wordes mo
And whan this good man saw that it was so
As he that wise was and obedient
To kepen his forward by his fre assent
He said, sithen I shal begin the game
What welcome cutte a goddes name
Now let vs ryde, and herkeneth what I say
And with ỳ worde we riden forth our way
And he began with a right mery chere
His tale anone, right as ye shal here.

¶ Thus endeth the prologues of the Caunterbury tales, and here folo weth the knightes tale.

Whylom, as olde stories tellen vs
There was a Duke that hight Theseus
Of Athenes he was lorde and gouernour
And in his tyme suche a conquerour
That greater was non vnder the son
Full many a riche countrey had he won
What with his wisedome, and his chevalry
He conquered all the reigne of Feminy
That whylom was icleped Cythea
And wedded the quene Ipolita
And brought her home w̄ him into his cōtre
With mykell glory and solempnyte
And eke her yonge suster Emely.
And thus with victory and melody
Let I this worthy duke to Athenes ride
And all his host, in armes him beside.
And certes, if it nere to longe to here
I woulde haue tolde fully the manere
How wonnen was the reigne of Feminy
By Theseus, and by his chevalry
And of the great batasle for the nones Betwene Athenes and Amasones
And how beleged was Ipolita
The yonge hardy quene of Cithea
And of the feest, that was at her wedding
And of the tempest at her home comming
But all ỹ thing, I mote as nowe forbere
I haue god wotte, a large feide to ere
And wekes bene the oxen in the plowe
The remenant of my tale is longe ynowe
I will nat letten eke, non of this rout
Let euery fellowe telle his tale about
And let se nowe, who shall the supper wyn
And there I lefte, I will againe begyn.
This duke, of whom I make mencioune
When he was come, almost to the towne
In all his wele and his most pride
He was ware, as he caste his eye aside
Where that there kneled in the highe wey
A company of ladys, twey and twey
Eche after other, cladde in clothes blacke
But suche a crie, and suche a wo they make
That in this worlde, nys creature liuing
That euer herde suche a waymenting
And of this crie, they nolde neuer stenten
Tyll thei the reines of his bridell henten
What folke be ye, ỹ at myn home comming
Perturben so my feest with cryeng
Quod Theseus: Haue ye so great enuy
Of mine honour, that thus complaine & cry:
Or who hath you misbode, or offended:
Nowe telleth me, if it may be amended
And why that ye be clothed thus in blacke:
The oldest lady of them all spake
When she had sowned with a deedly chere
That it was ruthe for to se and here
She said lorde, to whom fortune hath yeue
Victory, and as a conquerour to lyue
Nought greueth vs your glory and honour
But we beseke you of mercy and socour.
And haue mercy on our wo and distresse
Some drope of pyte, through thy gentilnesse
Vpon vs wretched wymen, let thou fall
For certes lorde, there nys none of vs all

That the ne hath be a duchesse or a quene
Nowe be we caytifes, as it is well sene
Thanked be fortune, and her false whele
That non estate assureth for to be wele.
Nowe certes lord, to abyde your presence
Here in this temple of the goddesse Clemence
We haue be waiting all this fourtenight
Helpe vs lorde, sythe it lieth in thy mighte.

I wretche, that wepe and waile thus Whylom wife to kyng Campaneus
That starke at Thebes, curssed be ỹ day
And all we that ben in this aray
And maken all this lamentacion
We losten all oure husbondes at that town
Whyle that the siege there aboute laie
And yet the olde Creon (wel a waie)
That lorde is nowe of Thebes cite Fulfilled of yre and of iniquite
He for dispite, and for his tiranny
To done the deed bodies villany
Of all our lordes, whiche that ben slawe
Hath al the bodies on an heape ydrawe
And will nat suffre hem, by none assent
Neither to be buried, ne to be brent
But maketh houndes to eate hem in dispite
And with that worde, without more respite
They fallen grouely, and crien pitously
Haue on vs wretched wymen some mercy
And let our sorowe sinke in thine hert.
This gētle duke downe frō his horse stert
With hert pitous, whan he herde hem speke
Him thought that his hert wolde breke
Whan he sawe hem so pitous and so mate
That whylom were of so great astate
And in his armes, he hem all vp hent
And hem comforted in full good entent
And swore his othe, as he was true knight
He wolde don so ferforthly his might Upon the tirante Creon hem to wreake
That al the people of Grece shulde speake
Howe Creon was of Theseus yserued
As he that hath his deth full well deserued
And right anon withouten more abode
His baner he displayed, and forth rode
To Thebes warde, and al his hoost beside
No nere Athenes nolde he go ne ride
Ne take his ease fully halfe a daye
But onward on his way that night he laye
And sent anone Ipolita the quene
And Emely her yonge suster shene
Unto the towne of Athenes to dwell
And forth he rideth, ther nys no more to tel

The red statu of Mars with spere & targe
So shineth in his white baner large
That al the feldes glyttren vp and doun
And by his baner, borne is his penon
Of golde ful riche, in which there was ybete
The mynotaure, that he wan in Crete
Thus rideth this duke, this conquerour
And in his hoste of chiualry the flour
Till that he came to Thebes, and alight
Faire in a felde, ther as he thought to fight
But shortly for to speken of this thing
With Creon, whiche was of Thebes king
He faught, and slewe him manly as a knight
In plaine batail, and put his folke to flight
And at a saute he wan the cite after
And rente adowne wall, sparre, and rafter
And to the ladies he restored agayn
The bodies of her husbandes that were slain
To done obsequies, as tho was the gise
But it were all to longe for to deuise
The great clamour, and the weymenting
That the ladies made at the brenning
Of the bodies, and the great honour
That Theseus, the noble conquerour
Doth to ỹ ladies, whan they from him went But shortly to tellen is mine entent whan ỹ this worthy duke, this Theseus Hath Creon slaine, and wan Thebes thus Still in the felde he toke all night his rest
And did with al the countre as him lest
To ransake in the taas of bodies dede
(Hem for to strippe of harneys and of wede)
The pillours did her busines and cure
After the bataile and the discomfiture
And so befel, that in the taas they founde
Thorough girt with many a greuous woude
Two yonge knightes lyeng by and by Both in armes fame, wrought full richely
Of whiche two, Arcite hight that one
And that other hight Palamon
Not fully, quicke, ne fully deed they were
But by her cote armours, and by her gere
The heraudes knewe hem best in speciall
As tho that weren of the bloode riall
Of Thebes, and of sistren two yborne
Out of the taas the pillours hath hem borne
And han hem caried softe in to the tent
Of Theseus, and he ful sone hem sent
To Athenes, to dwellen there in prison
Perpetuell, he nolde hem not raunson
And whan this worthy duke had thus idon
He tooke his hoste, and home he gothe anon
With laurer crouned, as a conquerour
And there he liueth in ioye and honour
Terme of his life, what nedeth wordes mo?
And in a toure, in anguishe and in wo
Dwelleth Palamon, and his felowe Arcite

For

for euermore, there may no gold hem quite.

Thus passeth yere by yere, & day by day
Till it fell ones in a morowe of May
That Emely, that fayrer was to sene
Than is the lylly, vpon the stalke grene
And fresher than May, with floures newe
For with the rose colour strof her hewe
I not whiche was the fayrer of them two.
Er it was day, as was her won to do
She was arisen, and all redy dight
For May will haue no slogardy a night
The season pricketh euery gentell herte
And maketh it out of ther slepe sterte
And saythe arise, and do May obseruaunce
This maketh Emely to haue remembraūce
To done honour to May, and for to rise
Iclothed was she freshe for to deuise
Her yelowe heare was broided in a tresse
Behinde her backe, a yerde longe I gesse
And in the gardyn at sonne vprist
She walketh vp and downe as her list
She gathereth floures, party white and reed
To make a subtell garlande for her heed
And as an angell, heuenly she song
The great tour, that was so thicke & strong
Whiche of the castell was the chefe dungeon
Wherin the knightes were in prison
Of whiche I tolde you, and tell shall Was euyn ioynaunt to the garden wall
There as this Emely had her playeng
Bright was the sonne, & clere the morning
And Palomon this wofull prisoner
As was his won, by leaue of his gayler
Was risen, and romed in a chambre on highe
In whiche he all the noble cite sighe
And eke the gardyn, full of braunches grene
There as this freshe Emely the shene
Was in her walke, and romed vp and doun.
This forowfull prisoner, this Palamon
Gothe in his chambre roming to and fro
And to him selfe complayning of his wo
That he was borne, full ofte said alas
And so befell by auenture or caas
That through a window thick of many a bar
Of yren great, and square as any spar
He cast his eyen vpon Emilia
And therwith he blent and cried, ha.
As though he stongen were to the herte.
And with that crie Arcite anon vp sterte
And sayd, cosyn myne, what eyleth the
That art so pale and deedly for to se.
Why criest thou: who hath do the offence:
For goddes loue, take all in pacience
Our prison, for it maie none other be Fortune hath yeuen vs this aduersite
Some wicked aspect or disposicion
Of Saturne, by some constellacion
Hath yeuen vs this, altho we had it swore
So stode the heuen, when that we were bore
We mote endure this is short and playn.
This Palamon answered, & sayde agayn
Cosyn forsoth, of this opinion
Thou hast a vaine imagination
This prison caused me not to crye
But I was hurt right now through myn ey
Into mine hert, that will my bane be
The fayrnesse of a lady that I se
Yonde in the gardyn, roming to and fro
Because of all my cryeng and wo
I not wher she be woman or goddesse
But Venus it is, soothly as I gesse
And ther with all on knees doun he fyll
And said: Venus, if it be thy wyll
You in this garden, thus to transfigure
Before me, sorowfull wretched creature
Out of this prison helpe that we may scape
And if our destiny be so shape
By eterne worde, to dyen in prison
Of our lynage haue some compassion
That is so lowe ybrought by tiranny.
And with that worde Arcite gan espy
Where as the lady romed to and fro
And with that sight her bewte hurt him so
That if that Palamon were wounded sore
Arcite was hurt as moche as he, or more
And with a sighe he said pitously
The fresshe beutie sleeth me sodenly
Of her that rometh in yonder place
And but I haue her mercy and her grace
That I may seen her at the leste way
I nam but deed, there lys no more to say.

This Palamon, whā he these wordes herd
Dispitously he loked, and answerd:
Whether sayest thou this in ernest or in play
Nay quod Arcite, in ernest by my fay
God helpe me so, me list ful yuell to ply
This Palamon gan knit his browes twey
It were (quod he) to the no great honour
To be false, ne for to be traytour
To me, that am thy cosyn and thy brother
Isworne full depe, and eche of vs to other
That neuer for to dyen in the payne
Till that the deth departe vs twayne
Neither of vs in loue to hinder other
Ne in none other case my leue brother
But that thou shuldest truly further me
In euery case, as I shulde further the
This was thyn othe, and myn also certayn

I wote it well, thou darst it not withsayn
Thus art thou of my counsell out of doubte
And nowe thou woldest falsly ben aboute
To loue my lady, whom I loue and serue
And euer shall, till that myn herte sterue.
Nowe certes false Arcite thou shalte not so
I loued her first, and tolde the my wo
As to my counsell, and to my brother swore
To further me, as I haue tolde before
For whiche thou art ibounden, as a knight
To helpen me, if it lye in thy might Or els arte thou false, I dare well saine.
This Arcite full proudly spake againe.
Thou shalt (quod he) be rather false than I
And thou arte false I tell the vtterly.
For paramour I loued her first or thou
What wilte ꝑ sain, thou wist it nat or nowe
Whether she be woman or goddesse
Thyne is affection of holinesse
And mine is loue, as to a creature
For whiche I tolde the myn auenture
As to my cosyn, and my brother swore.
Suppose that thou louedst her byfore
Wost thou not well the olde clerkes sawe:
That who shal giue a louer any lawe:
Loue is a gretter lawe by my pan
Than may be yeuen to any erthly man
And therfore posityfe lawe, and suche decre
Is broken all day for loue in eche degre
A man mote nedes loue maugre his heed
He may nat flee it though he shuld be deed
All be she mayde, widowe, or wife
And eke it is not lykely all thy life
To stonden in her grace, nomore shall I
For well thou wost thy selfe verely
That thou and I be dampned to prison
Perpetuell, vs gayneth no raunson.
We striuen, as did the houndes for the bone
That fought̃ al day, & yet her part was non Ther came a cur, while ꝑ they wer so wroth
And bare away the bone from hem both
And therfore, at kinges court my brother
Eche man for him selfe, there is none other Loue if thou list, for I loue and ay shall
And soothly leue brother this is all
Here in this prison mote we endure
And euerich of vs taken his auenture.
Great was the strife bet wix hem twey
If that I had leyser for to sey
But to the effect, it happed on a day
To tell it you shortly as I may.
I worthy duke that hight Perithous.
That felowe was to duke Theseus
Syth thilke day that they were children lite
Was come to Athenes, his felowe to visite
And for to play, as he was wonte to do
For in this worlde he loued no man so
And he loued him as tenderly ag̃ayne
So well ther loued, as olde bokes sayne
That whan that one was deed, soothly to tell
His felow went & sought him down in hell
But of that story list me not to write.
Duke Perithous loued well Arcite
And had him know at Thebes yere by yere
And finally at request and prayere
Of Perithous, withouten any raunson
Duke Thebes let him out of prison
Frely to gon, whither him list ouer all
In suche a gyse, as I you tellen shall.
This was the forwarde, plainly to endite
Bet wix duke Theseus and him Arcite
That if so were, that Arcite were yfounde
Euer in his life, by day, night or stounde
In any countre of this duke Theseus
And he were caught it was acorded thus
That with a swerde he shuld lese his heed
There was none other remedy ne reed
But taketh his leaue, & homward him sped
Let him beware, his neche lieth to wedde
Howe great sorowe suffreth nowe Arcite:
The dethe he feleth through his herte smite
He wepeth, wayleth, and crieth pitously
To sleen him selfe he waiteth priuely
And said, alas the day that I was borne
Now is my prison worse than before
Now is me shappen eternally to dwell
Nought in purgatory, but in hell
Alas that euer I knewe Perithous
For els had I dwelt with Theseus
Yfetered in his prison euermo
Then had I be in blisse, and nat in wo
Onely the sight of her, whom that I serue
Though that I neuer her grace may deserue
Wolde haue suffised right ynough for me
O dere cosyn Palamon (quod he)
Thine is the victorie of this auenture
Ful blisful in prison mayst thou endure
In prison, Nay certes but in paradise
Well hath fortune to the turned the dise
That hast the sight of her, and I thabsence
For possible is, sithens thou hast her presence
And arte a knight, a worthy man and able
That by sum cas, syn fortune is chaungeable
Thou maist somtime to thy desire attaine
But I that am exiled, and baraine
Of all grace, and in so great dispeyre
That ther nys water, erthe, fyre, ne eyre
Ne creature, that of hem maked is That may me heale, or done comfort in this Well oughte I sterue in wanhope and distresse

Farwell

Farwell my life, my lust, and my gladnesse
Alas, why playnen men so in commune
Of purueyaunce of god, or of fortune
That yeueth hem full ofte in many agise
Well bette than hem selfe can deuise
Some man desireth to haue richesse
That cause is of her murdre or sickenesse
And some man wold out of his prison faine
That in his house, is of his meyne slaine
Infinite harmes bene in this matere
We wote not what thing we prayen here
We faren as he that dronke is as a mouse
A dronken man woten well, he hath an house
But he wot not, which the right way thider
And to a dronken man the way is slider
And certes in this worlde so faren we
We seken fast after felicite
But we go wrong full ofte truely
Thus we may sain all, and namely I
That wenden, and had a great opinion
That if I might scape fro prison
Than had I ben in ioye and parfite hele
There now I am exiled fro my wele
Sith that I may nat seen you Emely
I nam but deed, there nys no remedy.
Upon that other side Palamon
Whan that he wist Arcite was gon
Such sorow he maketh, that the great tour Resowned of his yelling and clamour
The pure fetters on his shinnes grete
Were of his bitter salte teares wete
Alas (q he) Arcite cosyn mine
Of all our strife, god wot the frute is thine
Thou walkest now in Thebes at large
And of my wo, thou yeuest litell charge
Thou maist, sith thou hast wisedom and manhede
Assemble all the folke of our kinrede
And make warre so sharpe in this countre
That by some auenture, or by some treate
Thou maist haue her to lady and to wife
For whom I must nedes lese my life
For as by way of possibilite.
Sithe thou arte at thy large of prison free
And art a lorde, great is thine auauntage
More than is myn, that sterue here in a cage
For I may wepe and wayle, whiles that I lyue
With all the wo that prison may me yeue
And eke with paine, that loue yeueth me also
That doubleth all my tourment and my wo
Therwith the fire of ielousy up stert
Within his brest, and hent him by the hert
So wodely, that he likely was to beholde
The bore tree, or the assen deed and colde
Than sayd he. O cruell goddes, that gouerne
This worlde with your worde eterne
And writen in the table of Athamant
Your parliament and eterne graunt
What is mankinde more vnto you holde
Than is the shepe, that rouketh in the folde?
For slaine is man, right as another beest
And dwelleth eke in prison, and in arrest
And hath sickenesse, and great aduersite
And ofte time giltlesse pardee.
What gouernance is in this prescience
That giltlesse turmenteth innocence?
And encreaseth thus all my penaunce
That man is bounden to his obseruaunce
For gods sake to leten of his will
There as a beest may all his lustes fullyll
And whan a beest is deed, he hath no payn
But after his deth man mote wepe and playn:
Though in this world he haue care and wo
Without doute it may stonden so.
The answere of this lete I to diuines
But well I wote, in this world gret pine is Alas I se a serpent or a thefe
That many a true man hath do mischefe
Gon at his large, and where him list may turne
But I mote ben in prison through Saturne
And eke through Juno, ialous and eke wood
That hath slroied wel nye al the blood
Of Thebes, with his wast walles wide
And Venus sleeth me on that other side
For ielousie, and feare of him Arcite.
Nowe wil I stinte of Palamon alite
And let him in his prison still dwell
And of Arcite forth woll I you tell.
The sommer passeth, and the nightes long
Encreseth double wise the paines strong
Both of the louer, and of the prisoner
I not which hathe the wofuller mister
For shortly to say, this Palamon
Perpetuell is dampned to prison
In chaines and feters to the deed
And Arcite is exiled on his heed
For euermore as out of that countre
Ne neuer more shall his lady se
You louers axe I nowe this question
Who hath the worse, Arcite or Palamon?
That one may se his lady day by day
But in prison mote he dwell alway
That other where him list may ride or go
But se ne his lady shall he neuer mo
Nowe demeth as ye list, ye that can
For I woll tell forth my tale as I began.
Whan that Arcite to Thebes comen was Full ofte a day he swelte and said alas
For se ne his lady shall he neuer mo
And shortely to conclude, all his wo
So mikell sorow made neuer creature

That is or shalbe, while the world may dure
His slepe, his meate, his drinke is him byraft
That leane he wareth, and dry e as a shaft
His eyen holow, and grisly to beholde
His hewe pale, and salowe as aschen colde
And solitary he v is, and euer alone
And wailing all the night, making mone
And if he hearde songe or instrument
Then woulde he wepe, he might not stent
So feble were his spirites, and so lowe
And chaūged so, ꝑ no man coude him knowe
His speche ne his voice, though men it herde
As in his gryse, for al the worlde it ferde
Nought comly like to louers malady
Of Hereos, but rather like many Engendred of humours melancolike
Before his fell fantastike
And shortely was turned all vp so doun
Bothe habite and disposicion
Of him, this wofull louer Arcite
What shulde I all day of his wo endite?
Whan he endured had a yere or two
This cruell torment, and this paine and wo
At Thebes in his countre, as I saide
Vpon a night in slepe as he him laide
Him thought how that the winged Mercury
Before him stode, and bad him be mery
His slepy yerde in hande he bare vpright
An hatte he wered vpon his heares bright
Arayed was this god, as he toke kepe
As he was, whan Argus toke his slepe
And said him thus: to Athenes shalt ꝑ wende
There is the shapen of thy wo an ende
And with that word Arcite awoke & stert
Now truely how sore that me smert
Quod he, to Athenes right now wol I fare
Ne for no drede of death shal I spare
To se my lady, that I loue and serue
In her presence recke I not to sterue.
And w that word he caught a gret mirrour
And sawe that chaunged was all his colour
And sawe his visage all in a nother kinde
And right anon it ran him in his minde
That sith his face was so disfigured
Of malady, the whiche he had indured
He might well, if that he bare him lowe.
Liue in Athenes euermore vnknowe
And seue his Lady welnigh day by day
And right anon he chaunged his aray
And clad him as a pore labourer
And all alone, saue onely a squier
That knewe his priuitie and al his caas Whiche was disguised porely as he was
To Athenes is he gon the nert way
And to the court he went vpon a day
And at the gate he profered his seruice
To drugge & draw, what men wold deuise
And shortly of this matter for to sayne
He fell in office with a chamberlayne
The whiche was dwelling with Emelye
For he was wise, and coone couth espye
Of euery seruaunt, which that serued here
Well couth he hewen wode, and water bere
For he was yong and mighty for the nones
And therto he was strong and bigge of bones
To done that any wight gan him deuise
A yere or two he was in this seruice
Page of the chamber, of Emelye the bright
And Philostrate he said that he hight
But halfe so welbeloued man as he Ne was there none in court of his degre
He was so gentill of condicion
That through all the court was his renon
They said that it were a charitie
That Theseus wold enhauncen his degre
And put him in a worshipfull seruice
There as he might his vertue exercise
And thus within a while his name is spr̄ōg
Both of his dedes, and of his good tong
That Theseus hath taken him so nere
That of his chamber he made him squiere
And yaue him gold to maintaine his degre
And eke men brought him out of his contre
Fro yere to yere full priuely his rent
But honestly and slyly he it spent
That no man wondered how he it had
And thre yere in this wise his life he ladde
And bare him so in peace and eke in werre
There was no man that Theseus hath der
And in this blisse let I nowe Arcite
And speake I woll of Palamon a lite
In darkenesse horrible and strong prison
This seuen yere hath sitten this Palamon
Forpined, what for wo and distresse
Who feleth double sore and heuinesse
But Palamon: that loue distraineth so
That wode out of his wit, he goeth for wo
And eke therto he is a prisonere
Perpetuel, and not onely for a yere.
Who coud rime in englishe properly
His martirdome? forsoth it am nat I
Therfore I passe as lightly as I may.
It befel that in the seuenth yere in may
The thirde night, as olde bokes sayne
(That all this storye tellen more playne)
Were it by aduenture or by destine
As when a thing is shapen, it shalbe
That soone after midnight, Palamon
By helping of a frende brake his prison
And fleeth the cite, as fast as he may go

For

For he had yeuen the gailer drinke so
Of a clarrie, made of certain wine with Narcotise and Opie, of Thebes fine
That al ỳ night though mē would him shake
The gailer slept, he nugh not awake
And thus he fleeth as fast as he maie
The night was short, and fast by the daie
That nedes cost he mote hymself hide
And to a groue fast there beside with dredfull foote than stalketh Palamon
For shortly this was his opinion
That in the groue he would him hide all daie
And in the night then wold he take his waie
To Thebes warde, his friendes for to prie
On Theseus to helpe hym to warrie
And shortly, either he would lese his life
Or winne Emelie vnto his wife
This is the effect, and his entent plain.
Now will I tourne to Arcite again
That little wist how nie was his care
Till ỳ fortune had brought him in her snare
The merie Larke, messanger of the daie
Salueth in her song the morowe graie
And firie Phebus riseth vp so bright
That all the orisont laugheth of the sight
And with his stremes, drieth in the greues
The siluer droppes, hangyng in the leues.
And Arcite, that in the court reall
With Theseus his squiery principall
Is risen, and looketh on the merie daie
And for to doen his obseruaunces to Maie
Remembryng on the poinct of his desire
He on his courser, startlyng as the fire
Is riden into the fieldes hym to plaie
Out of the court, were it a mile or tweie
And to the groue of whiche I you tolde
By aduenture, his waie he gan holde
To maken hym a garlonde of the greues
Were it of Woodbind or Hauthorn leues
And loud he song ayenst the Sonne shene Maie, with all thy floures and thy grene welcome be thou faire freshe Maie
I hope that I some grene get maie
And from his courser, with a lustie hert
Into the groue full hastely he stert
And in a pathe he romed vp and doun
There, as by aduenture this Palamon
Was in a bushe, that no man might hym se
For sore afraied of death was he Nothyng ne knewe he that it was Arcite
God wote he would haue trowed full lite
Bothe soth is saied, go sithen many yeres
That field hath eyen, and wodde hath eres
It is full faire a man to beare hym euin
For all daie men mete at vnset steuin
Full little wote Arcite of this felawe
That was so nigh to herken of his sawe
For in the bushe sitteth he now full still when that Arcite had romed all his fill
And songen all the roundell lustely
Into a studie he fell sodenly
As doen these louers in their queint gires
Now in the crop, and now doun in the bires
Now vp now doune, as boket in a well
Right as the fridaie, sothly for to tell
Now it raineth now it shineth fast
Right so gan gerie Venus ouercast
The hartes of her folke, right as her daie
Is gerisull, right so chaungeth she araie Selde is the Fridaie all the weke ilike when that Arcite had song, he gan to sike
And set hym doune withouten any more
Alas (q he) the daie that I was bore
How long Juno through thy cruelte wilt thou waren Thebes the citee?
Alas ibrought is to confusion
The blood reall of Cadmus and Amphion
Of Cadmus, whiche was the first man
That Thebes builte, or first the toune began
And of the citee first was crouned kyng
Of his linage am I, and of his spryng
By verie line, as of the stocke riall
And now I am so caitife and so thrall
That he that is my mortall enemie
I serue hym, as his squire poorely
And yet doeth me Juno well more shame
For I dare nat be knowe myne owne name
But there as I was wont to highte Arcite
Now highte I Philostrat nat worth a mite
Alas thou fell Mars, alas thou Juno
Thus hath your ire our linage all fordo
Saue onely me, and wretched Palamon
That Theseus martreth in prison
And ouer all this, to slean me vtterly
Loue hath his firie dart so brennyngly
I sticked through my true carefull hart
That shapen was my death erst my shert
Ye slean me with your iyen Emelie
Ye been the cause wherefore I die
Of all the remenaunt of myne other care
Ne set I nat the mountaunce of a Tare
So that I could do ought to your pleasaunce
And with ỳ worde he fell doune in a traunce
A long tyme, and afterward he vp stert
This Palamō thought ỳ through his hert
He felt a colde swerde sodenly glide
For ire he quoke, no lenger would he abide
And when that he had heard Arcites tale
As he were wode, with face dedde and pale
He stert hym vp, out of the bushes thicke

And saied: Arcite false traitour wicke
Now art thou hent, that louest my ladie so
For whom that I haue this pain and wo
And art my blood, and to my counsell sworn
As I haue full oft tolde thee here beforn
And hast be iaped here duke Theseus
And falsely hast chaunged thy name thus
I will be dedde, or els thou shalt die
Thou shalt not loue my ladie Emelie
But I woll loue her onely and no mo
For I am Palamon thy mortall fo
Though that I haue no weapē in this place
But out of prison am astert by grace
I dred nat, that either thou shalt die
Or thou ne shalt nat louen Emelie
Chese whiche thou wilt, or ꝑ shalt not astert
This Arcite, with full dispitous hert
When he hym knewe, and had his tale heard
As fers as a Lion, pulled out his sweard
And saied: By God that sitteth aboue
Ne wer that thou art sicke, and wod for loue
And eke ꝑ thou no weapen hast in this place
Thou shouldest neuer out this groue pace
That thou ne shouldest dien of myne honde
For I defie the suertie and the bonde
Whiche ꝑ thou saist that I haue made to thee
What very foole, thinke well that loue is free
And I will loue her maugre all thy might
But for asmoche as thou art a knight
And wilnest to daren here by battaile
Haue here mi truth, to morow I wil not faile
Without wittyng of any other wight
That here I will be founden as a knight
And bringen harneis, right inough for thee
And chese the best, and leaue the worst for me
And meate & drinke, this night will I bryng
Inough for thee, and clothes for thy bedding
And if so be that thou my ladie win
And slea me in this wodde, there I am in Thou maiest well haue thy ladie as for me.
This Palamon answerd, I graunt it thee
And thus thei been departed till a morowe
Whē ech of hem had laied his faith to borow
O Cupide out of all charitee
O reigne, ꝑ wouldest haue no felow with the Full soth is saied, that loue ne lordship
Woll nat his thankes haue any feliship
We finde that of Arcite and Palamon
Arcite is ridden anon into the toun
And on the morowe or it were daie light
Full priuely twoo harneis had he dight
Both sufficient and mete to darreigne
The battail in the field betwirt hem tweine
And on his horse, alone as he was borne
He carieth all his harneis hym beforne
And in the groue, at tyme and place iset
That Arcite and this Palamon been met
To chaungen gan the colour in her face
Right as the hunter in the reigne of Trace
That standeth at a gappe, with a speare
When hunted is the Lion or the Beare
And hereth hym rushyng in the leues
And breaketh the bowes in the greues
And thinketh, here cometh my mortal enemy
Without faile, he must be dedde or I
For either I mote slea hym at the gap
Or he mote slea me, if me mishap
So ferden thei, in chaungyng of her he we
As farre as euerichе of other knewe
There nas no good daie, ne no saluyng
But streight, without worde or rehersyng
Euerichе of hem helped for to arme other
As frendly, as he were his owne brother
And after that, with sharpe speares strong
Thei foinen eche at other wonder long
Thou mightest wenen, that this Palamon
In his fightyng, were a wodde Lion
And as a cruell Tygre was Arcite
As wilde Bores gan thei fight and smite
That frothen white as fome for ire woode
Up to the ancle foughten thei in her bloode
And in this wise, I let hem fightyng dwell
As fourth I woll of Theseus you tell
The destenie and the minister generall
That executeth in the worlde ouer all
The purueiaūce, that God hath said beforne
So strong it is, ꝑ though ꝑ world had sworne
The contrary of thyng be ye and naie
Yet sometyme it shall fall on a daie
That fell neuer yet in a thousande yere
For certainly our appetites here
Be it of warre, peace, hate, or loue
All is ruled by the sight aboue
This meane I now by mightie Theseus
That for to hunt is so desirous
And namely at the greate Hart in Maie
That in his bedde there daweth hym daie
That he nis clad, and redy for to ride
With hunt and horne, and houndes hym beside
For in his huntyng hath he soche delite
That it is all his ioie and appetite
To been hymself the greate Hartes bane
For after Mars, he serueth now Diane Clere was the daie, as I haue tolde or this
And Theseus, with all ioie and blis
With his Ipolita, the faire quene
And Emelie, iclothen all in grene
On huntyng been thei ridden rially
And to the groue, that stoode there fast by
In which ther was an Hart, as mē him told

Duke

Duke Theseus the streight waie hath holde
And to the launde, he rideth hym full right
For thither was ỳ hart wõt to haue his flight
And ouer a broke, and so forth on his weie
This duke woll haue a cours at him or tweie
With houndes, soche as him list commaunde
And whẽ the duke was comen into the laũde
Under the sonne he looked, and that anon
He was ware of Arcite and Palamon
That foughten breme, as it were bulles two
The bright swordes wenten to and fro
So hidously, that with the leste stroke
It semed that it would haue fellen an oke
But what thei weren, nothyng he ne wote
This duke wt his spores his courser smote
And at a start he was betwirt hem two
And pulled out his sworde, and cried, ho
No more, on paine of lesyng your hedde
By mightie Mars, he shall anone be dedde
That smiteth any stroke, that I maie seen
But telleth me, what mister men ye been
That been so hardie for to fighten here
Without iudge or other officere
As though it were in listes riall
This Palamon aunswered hastely
And saied: sir, what nedeth wordes mo
We haue the death deserued bothe two
Two wofull wretches been we and caitiues
That been encombred of our owne liues
And as thou art a rightfull lorde and iudge
Ne yeue vs neither mercie ne refuge
But slea me first, for sainct charitee
But slea my felowe as well as me
Or slea him first, for though ỳ knowe it lite
This is thy mortall foe, this is Arcite
That fro thy lande is banished on his hedde
For whiche he hath deserued to be dedde
For this is he, that came vnto thy yate
And saied, that he hight Philostrate
Thus hath he iaped full many a yere
And thou hast made hym thy chief squiere
And this is he, that loueth Emelie.
For sith the daie is come that I shall die
I make plainly my confession
I am thilke wofull Palamon
That hath thy prison broke wickedly
I am thy mortall foe, and he am I
That loueth so hotte Emelie the bright
That I woll die here present in her sight
Wherefore I aske death and my iewise
But slea my felowe in thesame wise
For bothe we haue deserued to be slain.
This worthy duke aunswered anon again
And saied, this is a short conclusion
Your owne mouthe, by your confession
Hath damned you, and I woll it recorde
It nedeth not to pine you with a corde
Ye shall be dedde by mightie Mars the redde.
The quene anon for very woman hedde
Gan for to wepe, and so did Emelie
And all the ladies in the companie
Greate pitie was it, as thought hem all
That euer soche a chaunce should befall
For gentilmen thei were of greate estate
And nothyng but for loue was this debate
And sawe her bloody woundes wide and sore
And all criden bothe lesse and more
Haue mercie lorde vpon vs wemen all
And on her bare knees doune thei fall
And would haue kist his feete there he stode
Till at the last, aslaked was his mode
For pitie renneth soone in gentle hert
And though he first for ire quoke and sterte
He hath considered shortly in a clause
The trespasses of hem both, and eke the cause
And although his ire her gilt accused
Yet in his reason he hem bothe excused
As thus: he thought well that euery man
Woll helpe hymself in loue all that he can
And eke deliuer hymself out of prison
And eke his harte had compassion
Of wemen, for thei wepen euery in one
And in his gentle harte he thought anone
And softe vnto hymself he saied: fie
Vpon a lorde that woll haue no mercie
But be a Lion, bothe in worde and deede
To hem that been in repentaunce and dreede
As well as to a proude despitous man
That will maintain that he first began
That lorde hath little of discrecion
That in soche case can no difference
But waieth pride and humblenesse after one
And shortly, when his ire was thus a gone
He gan to looken vp with eyen light
And spake these wordes all one right
The God of loue, ah benedicite
How mightie, and how greate a lorde is he Against his might there gaineth no obstacles
He maie be cleaped a God for his miracles
For he can maken at his owne guise
Of euerich harte, as him list deuise
Lo here this Arcite, and this Palamon
That quietly were out of my prison gon
And might haue liued in Thebes rially
And knowen I am her mortall enemie
And that her death is in my power also
And yet hath loue, maugre her eyen two Brought hem hither both for to die
Now loketh, is not this a greate folie?
Who maie be a foole, but if he loue?

Beholde for Goddes sake, that sitteth aboue
See how thei biede, be thei nat well araied
Thus hath her lorde, ỳ god of loue hem paied
Her wager, and her fees for her seruice
And yet thei wenen to be full wise
That serue loue, for ought that maie befall
But yet is this the best game of all
That she, for whom thei haue this iolite
Can hem therefore, as moche thanke as me
She wote no more of all this hote fare
By God, than wote a Cokowe or an Hare
But all mote been assaied hote and cold
A man mote been a foole other yong or old
I wotte it by my self full yore agone
For in my tyme, a seruaunt was I one
And therefore sith I knowe of loues pain
I wote how sore it can a man distrain
As he that oft hath been caught in her laas
I you foryeue all hooly this trespaas.
At the requeste of the quene, that kneleth here
And eke of Emely, my suster dere
And ye shall bothe anon vnto me swere
That ye shall neuer more my countre dere
Ne make warre vpon me night ne daie
But been my frendes in all that ye maie
I you foryeue this trespas euery dele
And thei hem swore his asking faire & wele
And hym of lordship and of mercie praied
And he hem graunted grace, and thus he said

To speake of worthie linage and richesse
Though that she were a quene or a princesse
Eche of you bothe is worthy doubtles
To wed when tyme is, but netheles
I speake, as for my suster Emely
For whom ye haue this stryf and ielosy
Ye wote your self, she maie not wedde two
At ones, though ye fighten euer mo
But one of you, all be him lothe or lefe
He mote go pipe in an Jue lefe
This is to saie, she maie not haue bothe
Ne been ye neuer so ielous, ne so wrothe
And therefore, I you put in this degre
That eche of you shall haue his destine
As him is shape, and herken in what wise
Lo here your ende, of that I shall deuise.
My will is this, for plat conclusion without any replicacion.
If that you liketh, taketh it for the best
That euerich of you shall go where hym lest
Frely, without raunsome or daunger
And this daie fiftie wekes, ferre ne nere
Euerich of you shall bryng an. C. knightes
Armed for the listes vpon all rightes
Redy to darrein here by battaile
And this behote I you withouten faile
Upon my truthe, as I am true knight
That whether of you bothe hath that might
That is to saie, that whether he or thou
Maie with his hundred, as I spake of now
Slea his contrary, or out of listes driue
Hym shall I yeue Emely to wiue
To whō that fortune yeueth so faires grace
The lestes shall I make in this place.
And God so wisely on my soule rewe
As I shall euen iudge be, and trewe
Ye shall non other ende with me make
That one of you shall be dedde or take
And ye thinken this is well saied
Saith your aduise, and hold you well apaied
This is your ende, and your conclusion
Who loketh lightly now but Palamon?
Who springeth vp for ioie but Arcite?
Who could tell, or who could endite
The ioie that is made in this place
When Theseus had don so faire a grace
But doun on knees went euery manner wight
And thanked hym, with all her hert & might
And namely these Thebanes many a sithe
And thus with good hope and hert blithe
Thei taken her leue, & homward gan thei ride
To Thebes ward, with old walles wide.
I trawe men would deme it negligence
If I forgetten to tell the dispence
Of Theseus, that goeth busely
To maken vp the listes rially
That suche a noble Theatre, as it was I dare well saie, in this worlde there nas
The circute a mile was about Walled with stone, and diched all about
Round was the shape, in maner of a compas
Full of degrees, the hight of sixtie paas
That when a man was set on one degree
He letted not his felowe for to see
Eastward there stoode a gate of marble white
Westward right suche an other in thopposite
And shortly to conclude, suche a place
Was none in yearth, as in so litell space
For in the londe, there nas no crafter man
That Geometrie, or Arithmetike can Ne purtreiture, ne caruer of Images
That Theseus ne gaue him mete and wages
That Theatre to make and deuise
And for to doe his Rite and Sacrifice
He Eastward hath vpon the gate aboue
In worship of Venus, the Godes of loue
Doe make an auter, and an Oratorie
And on the Westside, in memorie
Of Mars he maked suche an other
That cost of golde largely a fother

And

And Northward, in a turret in the wall
Of Alabaster white and redde Coxrall
An oratorie riche for to see
In worship of Diane the Godes of chastite
Hath Theseus doe wrought in noble wise
But yet had I forgetten to deuise
The noble caruinges and the purtreitures
The shape, the countnauuce and the figures
That were in the oratories three
First in the temple of Uenus thou maist se
Wrought on the wall, full pitously to behold
The broken slepes, and the sighes cold
The sault teares and the weimentyng
The fire strokes, and the desiryng
That loues seruauntes in this life enduren
The othes, that her couenauntes assuren
Plealaunce and hope, desire foolehardinesse
Beautie and youth, baudrie and richesse
Charmes and sorcerie leasinges and flattery
Dispence, bulinesse, and ielousie
That weared of yelowe goldes a garlande
And a Cokowe sityng on her hande.
Feastes, instrumentes, carolles, and daunces
Iustes and araie, and all the circumstaunces
Of loue, whiche I reken and reken shall
By order, were painted on the wall
And mo than I can make of mencion
For sothly all the mount of Citheron
Where Uenus hath her principall dwellyng
Was shewed on the wall in purtreyng
With all the ioie, and the lustinesse
Nought was forgetten the portresse idlenesse
Ne Narcessus the faire of yore agone
Ne yet the folie of kyng Salomon
Ne yet the greate strength of Hercules
Thenchauntment of Medea and Circes
Ne of Turnus, with his hardie fers corage
The riche Cresus caitife in seruage
Thus maie you sen, that wisedom ne richesse
Beutie ne sleight, strength ne hardinesse
Ne maie with Uenus hold champartie
For as her list the worlde maie she gie
Lo, all these folke so cought were in her laas
Till thei for wo full oft saied alas
Sufficeth here one example or two
And though I coud reken a thousande mo
The statue of Uenus glorious to see
Was maked sletyng in the large see
And fro the nauell doune all couered was
With waues grene, and bright as any glas
A citriole in her right hande had she
And on her hedde, full semely for to se
A rose garlande freshe, and well smellyng
Aboue her hedde Doues flitteryng
Before her stoode her sonne Cupido
Upon his shoulders winges had he two
And blinde he was, as it is oft seen
A bowe he had and arrowes bright and kene
Why should I not as well tellen all
The purgatorie that was ther about ouer al
Within the temple of mightie Mars the rede
All painted was the wall in length and in brede
Like to the Estris of the grisly place
That hight the greate temple of Mars in Trace
In thilke colde frostie region
There Mars hath his soueraine mancion
First on the wall was painted a forest
In whiche there wonneth nother man ne best
With knottie and knarie trees old
Of stubbes sharpe and hidous to behold
In whiche there was a romble and a swow
As though a storme should breake euery bow
And downward vnder an hill vnder a bent
There stode the temple of Mars armipotent
Wrought all of burned stele, of whiche thentre
Was long and streight, and gastly for to see
And therout came soche a rage and soch a vise
That it made all the gates for to rise
The Northernlight in at the dores shone
For window on the wall was there none
Through which men might any light discerne
The dores were all of athamant eterne
Yclenched ouerthwart and endelong
With Iron tough, for to maken it strong
Euery piller, the temple to susteine
Was tonne greate, of yren bright and sheene
There saw I first the darke ymaginyng
Of felonie, and eke the compassyng:
The cruell ire, redde as any glede
The pickpurse, and eke the pale drede
The smiler, with the knife vnder the cloke
The shepen brennyng with the blacke smoke
The treason of the murdryng in the bedde
The open warre, with woundes all be bledde
Conteke with blody knives, and sharpe manace
All full of chirkyng was that sory place
The slear of him self yet saw I there
His hart blode hath bathed all his here
The nayle ydriuen in the shode on right
With colde death, with mouthe gapyng vpright
Amiddes of the temple sate Mischaunce
With Discomfort, and sory Countenaunce
Yet saw I Wodnesse laghyng in his rage
Armed complaint on theft and fers courage
The carraine in the bushe, with throt ycorue
A thousande slain, and nat of qualme ystorue
The tiraunt, with the praie by force rafte
The toune destroied, there was nothing laft yet saw I brent the shippes hoppesteres
The hunter strangled with the wilde beres

The

The Sowe frettyng the child in cradell
The Coke is scalded, for all his long ladell
Nought was foryeten the infortune of Mart
The Carter ouerridden by his owne carte
Under the whele, full lowe he laie a doune
There were also of Martes deuision
The Barbour, the Botcher, and the Smith
That forgeth sharpe swordes on the stith
And all aboue depainted in a toure
Sawe I Conquest, sittyng in greate honour
With the sharpe sworde ouer his hedde
Hangyng by a subtill twined thredde
Depainted was there, the slaughter of Julius
Of greate Nero and of Antonius
All be that thilke tyme thei were vnborne
Yet was her deathy depainted there beforne
By manacyng of Mars, right by figure
So was it shewed in that portreiture
As is depainted in the cerfres aboue
Who shall be dead or els slain for loue
Sufficeth one ensample in stories old
I maie not reken them all, though I would
The statue of Mars vpon a carte stode
Armed, and loked grim as he were wode
And ouer his head there shinen twoo figures
Of sterres, that been cleped in scriptures
That one (Puella) hight, that other (Rubeus)
This God of armes was araied thus
A wolfe there stode beforne him at his fete
With iyen redde, and of a man he ete
With subtell pensill was painted this storie
In redoutyng of Marce and of his glorie
Now to the temple of Diane the chaste
As shortly as I can I woll me haste
To tell you all the discripcion
Depainted been the walles vp and doune
Of huntyng and of shamfast chastite
There sawe I how wofull Calistope
When that Diane greued was with her
Was tourned fro a woman to a bere
And afterward was she made the lode sterre
Thus was it painted, I can saie no ferre
Her soonne is eke a sterre as men maie see
There sawe I Dane tourned vnto a tree
I meane not the godesse Diane
But Venus doughter, whiche ỳ hight Dane
There sawe I Acteon an hert ymaked
For vengeaunce that he sawe Diane all naked
I sawe how ỳ his houndes haue him cought
And freten him, for thei knewe him nought
Yet ypainted was a litell ferthermore
How Athalant hunted the wilde Bore
And Meliager, and many other mo
For which Diane wrought him care and wo
There sawe I many a nother wonder storie
Whiche me lift not to drawe in memorie
This goddesse full well vpon an hert shete
With smal houndes all about her fete
And vnderneth her fete, she had a Moone
Weryng it was, and should wane soone
In gaudie grene, her statue clothed was
With bowe in hande, and arrowes in caas
Her iyen she cast full lowe a doune
There Pluto hath his darke region
A woman trauelyng was her before
But for her childe, so long was vnborne
Full pitously Lucina gan she call
And saied helpe, for thou maiest best of all
Well coud he paint liuely that it wrought
With many a florein he the hewes bought.

Now been these listes made, and Theseus
That at his great cost hath arayed thus
The temples, and the theatre euerydel
Whan it was done, it liked him wonder wel
But stinte I wol of Theseus a lite
And speake of Palamon and of Arcite
The day approcheth of her returning
That euerich should an. C. knightes bring
The battayle to darreyne, as I you tolde
And to Athenes, her couenaũtes to holde
Hath euerich of hem brought an. c. knightes
Well armed for the warre, at all rightes
And sikerly, there trowed many a man
That neuer sithens the world began
As for to speke of knighthode, of her honde
As farre as god hath made see or londe
Was of so fewe, so noble a company
For euery weight, that loued chiualry
And wold his thankes haue a passing name
Hath praied, that he mighte be of that game
And wel was him, that therto chosen was
For if there fell to morowe suche a caas
Ye knowe well, that euery lusty knight
That loueth paramours, & hath his might Were it in Englande, or els where They wolde faine willen to be there
To fight for a lady, ah, benedicite
It were a lusty sight for to se.
And right so farden they with Palamon
With him there went knightes many on Some wold ben armed in an habergeon
And in a brest plate, with a light gipon
And some wold haue a paire of plates large
And some wold haue a prike sheld or a targe
Some wold be armed on his legges wele
And haue an axe, and some a mace of stele
There nas non newe guyse, that it nas olde
Armed were they, as I haue you tolde Eueriche after his opinion.

¶ Ther

¶ Ther maist thou se coming w Palamon
Ligurge him selfe, the great king of Trace
Blacke was his berd, & manly was his face
The sercles of his eyen in his heed
They glouden betwixt yelowe and reed
And like a Lion loked he aboute
With kemped heares on his brawes stoute
His limmes great, his brawnes strong
His shoulders brode, his armes round & long
And as the gise was in his countre Full hie vpon a chare of golde stode he
With foure white bulles in the trays
In stede of a cote armure, ouer his harnays
With nailes yelowe, and bright as any golde
He hath a beares skyn, cole blacke for olde
His long heare was kempt behind his backe
As any rauens fether it shone for blacke
A wrethe of gold arme gret, of huge weight
Upon his heed set full of stones bright
Of fine rubies and diamandes
About his chare ther went white allaundes
Twenty and mo, as great as any stere
To hunten at the lion, or at the wilde bere
And folowed him, with mosell fast ybounde
Colers of gold, and torrettes ylyled rounde
An hundred lordes had he in his route
Armed full well, with hertes sterne & stoute.

With Arcite, in flories as men fynde
The great Emetrius the king of Inde
Upon a stede bay, trapped in stele
Couered with a cloth of gold diapred wele
Came riding like the god of Armes Marce
His cote armure was of clothe of Trace
Couched with perle, white, rounde and gret
His sadle was of brent gold newe ybet
A mantel vpon his shoulders hanging
Bretted full of rubies, reed as fyre sparkling
His crispe heare like ringes was yronne
And ȳ was yelow, and glytering as the sonne
His nose was hie, his eyen bright cytryn
His lippes ruddy, his colour was sanguyn
A fewe freknes in his face ypeynte
Betwixt yelow, and somdele blacke ymeynte
And as a Lion he his eyen kest
Of fiue and twenty yere his age I gesse
His berde was well begonne for to spring
His voice was as a trompet sowning
Upon his heed he weared of laurer grene
A garlande freshe and lusty for to sene
Upon his hande he bare for his delite
An Egle tame, as any lylly white
An hundred lordes had he with him there
All armed saue her heades in her gere
Full richely in all maner thinges
For trusteth well, that erles, dukes, & kinges
Were gathered in this noble company
For loue, and for encrease of chyualry
About this king ther ran on euery parte
Full many a tame Lion and libarte
And in this wise, these lordes al and some Ben on the sonday to the cite come
Aboute prime, and in the toune alight.

This Theseꝰ, this duke this worthy knight
Whan he had brought hem into his cite
And inned hem, euerych after his degre
He festeth hem, and doth so great laboure
To easen hem, and don hem all honoure
That yet men wenen that no mans wit
Of none estate coude amende it
The minstralcie, the seruice at the feest
The great yeftes, to the most and leest
The rich array, throughout Theseus paleis
Ne who sate first ne last vpon the deys
What ladies fayrest ben or best dauncing
Or whiche of hem can best daunce or sing
Ne who most felyngly speketh of loue
Ne what haukes sitten on perchen aboue
Ne what houndes liggen on the floure adoun
Of all this now make I no mencion
But all the effecte, that thinketh me the beste
Now cometh ȳ point, harkeneth if you leste.

The sonday at night, or day bega to spring
Whan Palamon the larke herde sing
Although it were nat day by houres two Yet song the larke, and Palamon right tho
With holy hert, and with an hie corage
He rose vp, to wenden on his pilgrimage
Unto the blisfull Cithere a benigne
I meane Venus, honourable and digne
And in her hour, he walketh forth a paas Unto the listes, there the temple was
And doune he kneleth, & with humble chere
And herte sore he said, as ye shall here.
¶ Fayrest of fayre: O lady mine Venus
Doughter of Ioue, and spouse to Vulcanus
Thou glader of the mounte of Citheron
For thilke loue thou haddest to Adon
Haue pite of my bitter teares smerte
And take my humble praier at thyn herte.
Alas, I ne haue no langage to tell
The effect, ne the turment of mine hell
Myn herte may not myn harmes bewraie
I am so confused, that I can not saie
But mercy lady bright, that woste wele
My thought, & seest what harmes that I fele
Consider al this, and rue vpon my sore
As wisly as I shall for euermore Emforth my might, thy true seruaunt be

And holde warre alway with chastite
That make I myn auowe, so ye me helpe
I kepe not of armes for to yelpe
Ne I ne aske to mowe to haue victory
Ne renome in this case, ne vaine glory
Of prise of armes, to blowen vp and doun
But wolde haue fully possessioun
Of Emelye, and dye in her seruice
Finde thou the maner howe, & in what wise
I recche not, but it may better be
To haue victory of hem, or they of me
So that I haue my lady in myn armes
For though so be that Mars is god of Armes
Your vertue is so great in heauen aboue
That if you list, I shall wel haue my loue
Thy temple shall I worship euermo
And on thine aulter, where I ride or go
I woll don sacrifice, and fires bete
And if ye wol not so, my lady swete
Than pray I you, to mowe with a spere
That Arcite me throughe the hert bere
Than recke I not, whan I haue lost my life
Though Arcite winne her to wife
This is the effecte and ende of my prayere
Yeue me my lady, thou blisfull lady dere.

Whan the orison was done of Palamon
His sacrifice he did, and that anon
Ful pitously, with all circumstaunces
All tell I nat as now his obseruaunces.

But at the last, the statu of Venus shone
And made a signe, wherby that he tooke
That his prayer accepted was that day
For though the signe shewed a delay
Yet wist he well, that graunted was his bone
And with glad hert he went him hom ful sone.

The third houre in equall that Palamon
Began to Venus temple for to gon
Vp rose the sonne, and vp rose Emelie
And vnto the temple of Diane gan hie
Her maidens, the whiche thider were lad
Ful redily with hem the fyre they had
The encense, the clothes, & the remenaũt all That to the sacrifice longen shall
The hornes full of meethe as was the gise
There lacked nought to don her sacrifice
Smoking the temple, full of clothes fayre
This Emely, with herte debonayre
Her body wisshe, with water of a well
But how she did right I dare not tell
But it be any thing in generall
And yet it were a game to here it all
To him that meaneth wel, it were no charge
But it is good a man be at his large
Her bright heare was vnkẽpt & vntressed all
A crowne of a grene oke vnseriall
Vpon her heed set ful fayre and mete
Two fyres on the aulter gan she bete
And did her thinges, as men may beholde
In Stace of Thebes, and these bokes olde
Whã kendled was the fire, with pitous chere
Vnto Diane she spake as ye may here.

O chaste goddesse of the woddes grene
To whom both heuẽ and yearth & see is sene
Quene of the reigne of Pluto, derke and low
Goddesse of maides, ỹ myn hert hathe know
Ful many a yere, and woste what I desire
As kepe me fro the vengeaunce of thyn yre
That Acteon abought cruelly
Chaste goddesse, well woste thou that I
Desyre to ben a mayde al my life
Ne neuer woll I be loue ne wife
I am thou (woste well) of thy company
A maide, and loue hunting and venery
And for to walken in the woddes wilde
And not for to ben a wife, & ben with childe
Nought will I knowe company of man
Now helpe me lady sithe you may and can For tho thre formes that thou hast in the
And Palamon, that hath such a loue to me
And eke Arcite, that loueth me so sore
This grace I pray the, withouten more
And send loue and peace betwirt hem two
And fro me turne awaye her hertes so
That al her hotte loue, and her desire
And al her busy turment, and all her fire
Be queynt, or turned in an other place
And if so be thou wolte not do me that grace
Or if so be my destenye be shapen so
That I shal nedes haue one of hem two
As sende me him that most desireth me
Beholde goddesse of clene chastite
The bitter teares, that on my chekes fall
Syn thou art a maide, and keper of vs all
My maidenhede thou kepe, and wel conserue
And while I liue, a maiden woll I the serue.

The fyres brenne vpon the auter clere
While Emely was thus in her prayere
But sodenly she sawe a thing queynte
For right anon, one of the fyres queynte
And quicked again, and after that anon
That other fyre was queynte, and al agon
And as it queinte it made a whistling
As done these wete brondes in her brenning
And at the brondes ende, out ran anone
As it were bloddy droppes many one
For whiche so sore agaste was Emelye
That she was well nye madde, & gan to crye
For she ne wiste what it signified
But onely for the feare thus she cried

And

And wepte, that it was pyte for to here
And therwithal Diane gan to apere
With bowe in honde, right as an huntaresse
And said doughter, stinte thine heuinesse
Amonge the goddes hie it is affirmed
And by eterne worde, written and confirmed
Thou shalt ben wedded to one of tho
That haue for the so moche care and wo
But vnto whiche of hem I may not tell
Farewell, for I mote no lenger dwell
The fyres, whiche on myn auter brenne
Shall declaren, er that thou gon henne
This auenture of loue, as in this case
And with that word, the arowes in ỳ case
Of the goddesse, clateren faste and ring
And forth she went, and made vanesshing
For whiche this Emelye astonied was
And said: what mounteth this, alas
I put me vnder thy protection
Diane, and vnder thy disposicion
And home she goth the next way
This is the effecte there is no more to say.

The next houre of Mars folowing this Arcite vnto the temple walked is
Of fiers Mars, to done his sacrifise
With all the might of his paynem wise
With pitous herte and hye deuocion
Right thus to Mars he said his orison.
O stronge god, that in the reignes colde
Of Trace honoured arte, and lorde yholde
And hast in euery reigne and euery londe
Of armes, al the bridle in thyn honde
And hem fortunest, as the liste deuise
Accepte of me my pitous sacrifice
If so be my thought may deserue
And that my might be worthy for to serue
Thy godhede, that I may ben one of thine
Than pray I the, that thou rue on my pine
For thilke paine, and thilke hotte fire
In which thou brentest whilom for desire
Whan thou vsedest the faire beaute
Of fayre yonge freshe Venus fre
And haddest her in thin armes, at thy will Although thou ones on a time misskill
Whan Vulcanus had caught the in his laas
And founde the ligging by his wife alas
For thilke sorow, that was in thine herte
Haue ruthe as well on my paines smerte
I am yong and vnconning, as thou wost
And as I trowe, with loue offended most That euer was any liues creature
For she that doth me all this wo endure
Ne retcheth neuer, where I sinke or flete
And well I wote, or she me mercy hete
I mote with strēgth winne her in this place
And wel I wote, without helpe or grace
Of the, ne may my strenght not auayle
Thā helpe me lord to morow in my battaile
For thilke fire, that whylom brent the
As well as the fyre now brenneth me
And do, that I to morowe haue the victory
Myn be the trauaile, and thine be the glory
Thy soueraine temple wol I most honouren
Of any place, and alway most labouren
In thy plesaunce and in thy craftes strong
And in thy temple, I woll my baner hong
And all the armes of my companie
And euermore, vntill the day I dye
Eterne fyre I wol before the finde
And eke to this auowe I wol me binde
My berde, my heare, ỳ hongeth lowe adoun
That neuer yet felte offencioun
Of rasour ne of shere, I wol the yeue
And ben thy true seruaunt while I liue
Now lord haue ruthe vpon my sorowes sore
Yeue me the victory, I aske the no more.
The prayer stinte of Arcite the strong
The ringes on the temple dore that rong
And eke the dores clatren full faste
Of whiche Arcite somwhat him agaste.
The fyres brennen vpon the auter bright
That it gan all the temple light
A swete smel anon the grounde vp yaste
And Arcite anon his honde vp haste
And more ensence into the fyre he caste
With other rites mo, and at the laste
The statu of Mars began his hauberke ring
And with that sounde he herd a murmuring
Ful lowe and dym, that said thus: victory
For which he yaf to Mars honour and glory
And thus with ioye, and hope well to fare
Arcite anon into his inne is fare
As fayne as foule is of the bright sonne
And right anon such a strife is begonne
For thilke graunting, in the heuen aboue
Betwixt Venus, the goddesse of loue
And Mars the sterne god armipotent
That Jupiter was busy it to stente
Til that the pale Saturnus the colde
That knewe so many auentures olde
Founde in his experience and arte
That he ful sone hath pleased euery parte
And sothe is said, elde hath gret auauntage
In elde is both wisedome and vsage
Men may the olde out ren, but not oute rede
Saturne anon, to stinten strife and drede
Al be it that it be againe his kinde
Of al this strife he can remedy finde
My dere doughter Venus, q Saturne

The Knightes tale.

Myn course that hath so wide for to turne
Hath more power than wote any man
Myn is the drenching in the see so wan
Myn is the prison in the derke cote
Myn is ỹ strãgling & the hanging by ỹ throte
The murmure, and the churles rebelling
The groning, and the pryuy empoysoning
I do vengeaunce and plaine correccion
While I dwell in the signe of the Lion
Myn is the ruyne of the hie halles
The fallyng of the toures and of the walles
Upon the mynour, or vpon the carpenters
I slewe Sampson, shaking the pillers
And myn den the maladies colde
The derke treasons, and the castels olde
My loking is the father of pestilence
Now wepe no more, I shal do my diligence
That Palamon, that is thin owne knight
Shall haue his lady, as thou him behight
Though mars shal help his knight natheles
Betwixt you it mote somtime be pees
Al be ye not of one complexcion
That causeth al day suche deuision
I am thyn ayle, redy at thy will Wepe no more, I wol thy lust fulfill.

Now wol I stinten of these goddes aboue
Of Mars, and of Uenus goddesse of loue
And plainly I wol tellen you as I can
The great effect, of which that I began.

Great was the feast in Athenes that day
And eke that lusty season in May Made euery wight to ben in such pleasaunce
That al that day iusten they and daunce
And spenten it in Uenus hye seruise
But because that they shulden arise
Erly, for to se the great fight
Unto her rest went they at night
And on the morow whan day gan spring
Of horse and harneys, noise and clatering
There was in the hostelries al aboute
And to the palays rode there many a route
Of lordes, vpon stedes and palfreys.
There mayest thou see deuising of harneis
So vncouthe, so riche, and wrought so wele
Of goldsmythry, of braudry, and of stele
The shildes bright, testers, and trappers
Gold hewē helmes, hauberkes & cot armers
Lordes in parementes, on her courters
Knightes of retenue, and eke squiers
Nayling the speres, and helmes bokeling
Gigging of sheldes with lainers lacing
There as nede is, they were nothing ydell
The soming stedes on the golden bridell
Gnawing, and faste the armurers also
With file, and hammer, riding to and fro
Yemen on foote, and comunes many one
With short staues, thicke as they may gone
Pipes, trompes, nakoners, and clarions
That in the batayle blowen blody sowns
The palais full of people vp and doun
Here thre, there ten, holding her question
Deuining of these Theban knightes two
Some said thus, some said it shuld be so
Some helde with him with the blacke berde
Some with the balled, some with the thick herde
Some said he loked grim, and wolde fight
He hath a sparth of twenty pound of weight.

Thus was the hall full of deuining
Longe after the sonne gan to spring
The great Theseus of his slepe gan wake
With minstralcie and noyse that they make Helde yet the chambre of his palays riche
Til that the Theban knightes, both yliche
Honoured weren, and in to the place isette.

Duke Theseus is at the window sette
Arayed right as he were a god in trone
The people preased thyder warde full sone
Him for to sene, and done him hye reuerence
And eke for to here his hest and his sentence

An heraude on a scaffolde made on oo
Tyl all the noise of the people was ydo
And whan he saw the people of noise still Thus shewed he the migty dukes will.

The lorde hath of his hye discrecion
Considred, that it were destruccion
To gentle bloode, to fighten in this gise
Of mortall battaile, now in this empryse
Wherefore to shapen that they shall not dye
He wol his first purpose modifie

No man therfore, vp paine of losse of life
No maner shotte, polax, ne short knife
In to the lystes sende, or thyder bring Ne short swerde to stiche with point byting
No man ne drawe, ne beare it by his side
Ne no man shall to his felowe ride
But one course, with a sharpe grouden spere Foine if him list on fote, him selfe to were
And he that is at mischefe, shal be take
And not slaine, but brought to the stake
That shal ben ordained on either side
But thider he shal by force, and there abyde
And if so fal, that the chieftaine be take
On either side, or els slen his make
No lenger shall the turnament laste
God spede you, gothe and layeth on faste
With swordes & long maces fighten your fill Goth now your way, this is the lordes will.

The voice of the people touched heuen
So loude cried they with mery steuen

God

God saue suche a lorde, that is so good
He willeth no distruccion of blood
Up gothe the trompes and the melody
And to the listes, rideth so the company
By ordinaunce, throughout the cite large
Honged with cloth of gold, & not with sarge
Ful like a lord this noble duke gan ride
These two Thebans on euery side
And after rode the quene and Emelye
And after that an other companye
Of one and other, after her degre
And thus they passen throughout the cite
And to the listes comen they be by time
It nas not of the day yet fully prime Whan set was Theseus ful riche and hye
Ipolita the quene, and Emelye
And other ladies in degrees aboute
Unto the setes preaseth all the route
And westward, through ỳ gates vnder marte
Arcite, and eke an hundred of his parte
With baner reed, is entred right anon
And in the selue momet entred Palamon
Is, vnder Uenus, est warde in that place
With baner white, and hardy chere and face
And in al the world, to seken vp and doun
So euen without variacion
There nas suche companies twey
For there nas none so wise that coude sey
That any had of other auauntage
Of worthines, ne of estate, ne age
So euen were they chose to gesse
And into the renges fayre they hem dresse
Whan that her names red were euerichone
That in her nombre, gile were there none
Tho were the gates shit, and cried was loude
Do nowe your deuer yong knightes proude
The heraudes left her priking vp & doun
Now ryngen trompes loude and clarioun
There is no more to say, este and west
In goth the sharpe speres sadly in the arrest
In gothe the sharpe spurres into the side
There se men who can iust, and who can ride
There shiueren shaftes, vpon sheldes thicke
He feleth through the hert spoune the prycke
Up springeth the speres, twēty fote on hight
Out goth the swordes, as the siluer bright.
The helmes they to hewe, and to shrede
Out burst the blood, with sterne stremes rede
With mighty maces, the bones they to breke
He through ỳ thickest of the thrōg gan threke
Ther stōblen stedes strong, and doun gon all
He rolled vnder the foote as dothe a ball
He foyneth on his fete with a tronchoun
And he hurleth with his horse adoun
He through the body is hurte, and sith ytake
Maugre his heed, & brought vnto the stake
As forward was, right there he must abide
In other is ladde on that other side
And somtime doeth hem Theseus to reste
Hem to refreshe, and drinke if hem leste.
Full ofte a day haue these Thebans two
To gither met, and don eche other wo
Unhorsed hath eche other of hem twey
Ther was no tigre, in the vale of Galaphey
Whan her whelpe is stole, whan it is lite
So cruell on the hunte, as is Arcite
For ielous herte, vpon this Palamon
Ne in Belmarye, there is no fel Lion
That hunted is, or for his hungre woode
Ne of his prey, desireth so the bloode
As Palamon to slee his foe Arcite
The ielous strokes on her helmes bite
Out rēneth ỳ bloode on both her sides rede
Somtime an ende there is of euery dede
For er the sonne vnto the rest wente
The strong king Emetrius gan hente
This Palamon, as he caught w̄ this Arcite
And made his swerde depe in his flesh bite
And by force of twenty is he take Unyolden, and drawen to the stake
And in the rescous of this Palamon
The strong king Ligurge is borne adoun
And king Emetrius, for all his strength
Is borne out of his sadle a swerdes length
So hurt him Palamon or he were take
But al for naught, he was broght to ỳ stake
His hardy herte might him helpe naught
He must abide, whan that he was caught
By force, and eke by compolicion
Who soroweth now but woful Palamon?
That mote no more gon againe to fight.
And whan ỳ Theseus had sene that sight
He cried hoe: no more, for it is don
He none shall lenger to his felowe gon
I woll be true iuge, and not party
Arcite of Thebes shall haue Emely
That by his fortune hath her fayre ywonne
Anon there is a noyse of people bygonne
For ioye of this, so loude and hie withall
It semed that the listes should fall.
What can now faire Uenus done aboue?
What saith she now? what doth the quene of loue
But wepeth so, for wanting of her will Till that her teares on the listes fell
She sayd: I am ashamed doutles
Saturne saide: doughter holde thy pees
Mars hath al his wil his knyst hath his bone
And by mine heed, thou shalte be eased sone.
The trompes with the loude minstralcye
The heraudes, that so loude yel and crye

Ben in her wele, for loue of dan Arcite
But herkeneth me, and stinteth noise a lite
Whiche a miracle there bifell anon.
The liers Arcite hath his helme of ydon
And on a courser, for to shewe his face
He pricketh endlong the large place
Loking vpwarde vpon Emelie
And she ayen him cast a frendly eye
(For women as to speke in commune
They folowen al the fauour of fortune)
And was al his chere, as in his herte
Out of the ground a fyre infernall sterte
From Pluto sent, at the request of Saturne
For which his horse for feare gan to turne
And lepe a side, and foundred as he lepe
And er that Arcite may taken kepe
He pight him ol on the pomel of his hed
That in the place he lay, as he were deed
His brest to brosten with his sadel bowe
As blacke he lay as any cole or crowe
So was the blood yronne in his face.
Anon he was brought out of the place
With hert sore, to Theseus paleis
Tho was he corven out of his harneis
And in a bedde ybrought ful fayre and blive
For he was yet in memory, and on liue
And alway crieng after Emely.
Duke Theseus, with hail his company
Is comen home to Athenes his cite
With all blisse and great solempnite
Al be it that this auenture was fall
He would not discomforte hem all
Wher said eke, that Arcite should not die
He should ben yhealed of his maladie
And of an other thing they were as faine
That al hem all there was none slaine
Al were they sore hurte, and namely one
That with a spere was thronled his brest bone
Two other woundes, and two broken armes
Some had salues, and some had charmes
Fermaces of herbes, and eke saue
They dronken, for they would her liues haue
For which this noble duke, as he well can Comforteth and honoureth euery man
And made reuel al the longe night
Vnto the straunge lordes, as it was right
Ne there nas holde no discomforting
But as iustes or at turneying
For sothly ther nas no discomfiture
For falling is holde but an auenture
Ne to be lood by force vnto a stake
Vnyolden, and with twenty knightes take
One person a lone, withouten any mo
And haried forth, by arme, foote, and too
And eke his stede driuen forth with staues
With footemen, bothe yemen and knaues
It was aretted him no vilanie
There may no man cleape it cowardie
For whiche anon, duke Theseus did cry
To stinten all rancour and enuy
The grete as well of one side as of other
And either side ylike, as others brother
And yaue hem rightes after her degre
And fully held a fest daies three
And conueyed the knightes worthely
Out of his toune, a daies iorney largely
And home went euery man the right waie
Ther nas no more but fare well, and haue good day
Of this battaile, I wol no more endite
But speake of Palamon and Arcite
Swelleth the brest of Arcite, and the sore
Encreaseth at his hert more and more
The clotered blode, for any leche craft
Corrumped, and is in his body lafte
That neither veine blode, ne ventousing
Ne drinke of herbes, may be helping
By vertue expulsed, or anymall
For thilke vertue cleaped naturall
Ne may the venim voide, ne expell
The pipes of his longes began to swell
And euery lacerte, in his brest adoun
Is shent with venim and corrupcion
Him gaineth neither, for to get his life
Vomite vpwarde, ne downwarde laxatife
All is to brust thilke region
Nature hath no dominacion
And certainly ther as nature wol nat wirch
Farwel physike, go beare the corse to chirch
This is all and some, that Arcite must die
For which he sendeth after Emelie
And Palamon his cosyn dere
Than said he thus, as ye shall after here
Nought may my woful spirite in my hert
Declare a point of all my sorowes smert
To you my lady, that I loue most
But I bequeth the seruice of my gost
To you abouen any creature
Sin that my life may no lenger dure
Alas the wo, alas my paines strong
That I for you haue suffered, and so long
Alas the dethe, alas myn Emely
Alas departing of our company
Alas myn hertes quene, alas my liues wife
Myn hertes lady, ender of my life
What is the world, what asken men to haue?
Now with his loue, now in his cold graue
Alone withouten any company
Farwel my swete foe, myn Emely
And softe take me in your armes twey
For the loue of God, herkeneth what I sey.

I haue here with my cosin Palamon
Had strif and rancour, many a daie agon
For loue of you, and for my iealousie
And Jupiter so wisely my soule gie
To speaken of a seruaunt properlie
With circumstaunces, all trulie
That is to say, trouth, honour, & knighthede
Wisedome, humblesse, estate, and hie kinrede
Fredome, and all that longeth to that art
So Jupiter haue of my soule part
As in this worlde, right now know I non
So worth to be loued as Palamon
That serueth you, and woll doen all his life
And if that you shall euer been a wife
Forget not Palamon, the gentle man
And with that worde his speche faile began
For from his feete vnto his brest was come
The colde death, that had hym nome
And yet more ouer, for in his armes two
The vitall strength is lost, and all a go
Saue onely the intellect, without more
That dwelleth in his harte sicke and sore
Gan failen, when the harte felt death
Dusked his yen two, and failed breath
But on his Ladie, yet cast he his eye
His last worde was mercie Emelie
His spirite chaunged, and out went there
Whether warde I can not tell, ne where Therefore I stint, I am no diuinistre
Of soules finde I not in this registre
Ne me leste not thilke opinion to tell
Of hem, though thei writē where thei d'well
Arcite is cold, that Mars his soule gie
Now woll I speke forth of Emelie
Shright Emelie, and houlen Palamon
And Theseus his sister vp toke anon
Swouning, and bare her fro his corse a'waie
What helpeth it to tary forth the daie
To tellen how she wept both euen & morow
For in soche case women haue moche sorowe
When that her husbandes been fro hem go
That for the more partie thei sorowen so
Or els fallen in soche maladie
That at the last, certainly thei die
Infinite been the sorowe and the teres
Of old folke, and folke of tender yeres
In all the toune for death of this Theban
For hym there wepeth both child and man
So greate wepyng was there not certain
When Hector was brought, all freshe islain
To Troie alas, the pite that was there
Cratchyng of chekes, rentyng eke here
Why woldest thou be dede, thus womē crie?
And haddest gold inough, and Emelie.
No man maie glad Theseus
Sauyng his old father Egeus
That knewe this worldes transmutacion
As he had seen it, bothe vp and doun
Joie after wo, and wo after gladnesse
And shewed hym ensamples and likenesse
Right as there died neuer man, or he
That he ne liued in yearth in some degree
Right so there liued neuer man, he saied
In this worlde, that somtyme he ne desed
This worlde is but a throughfare full of wo
And we been pilgrimes, passyng to and fro
Death is an ende of euery worldes sore
And ouer all this yet saied he moche more
To this effect, full wisely to exhort
The people, that thei should hem recomfort.
Duke Theseus with all his busie cure
Casteth now, where that the sepulture
Of good Arcite, shall best ymaked bee
And eke most honourable of degree
And at the last he tooke conclusion
That there as Arcite and Palamon
Had for loue the battaile hem betwene
That in thesame selue groue, swete & grene
There as he had his amorous desires
His complaint, and for loue his hote fires
He would make a fire, in whiche the offis
Funerall he might hem all accomplis
He hath anon commaunded to hacke & hewe
The okes old, and laie hem all on a rewe
In culpons, well araied for to brenne
His officers with swift foote thei renne
And right anon at his commaundement.
And after Theseus hath he isent
After a beare, and it all ouer spraid
With clothe of gold, the richest that he had
And of thesame suite he clothed Arcite
Vpon his handes his gloues white
Eke on his hedde a croune of Laurell grene
And in his hand a swerde full bright & kene
He laied hym bare the visage on the bere
Therewith he wept that pite was to here
And for the people should seen hym all
When it was daie he brought him to the hall
That roreth of ȳ crie & of the sorowes soun
Tho gan this wofull Theban Palamon
With glitering beard, & ruddie shinyng heres
In clothes blacke, dropped all with teres
And passyng other of wepyng Emelie
The rufullest of all the companie.
And in as moche as the seruice should bee
The more noble, and riche in his degree
Duke Theseus let forth the stedes bryng
That trapped were in stele all glitteryng
And couered with the armes of Dan Arcite
Vpon these stedes greate and white

There saten folk, of which one bare his sheld
An other his speare, in his hande held
The third bare with hym a bowe Turkes
Of brēt gold was the case and eke the harnes
And ridden foorth a pace with sorie chere
Toward the grove, as ye shall after here.
The noblest of the Grekes, that there were upon her shoulders caried the bere
With stake pace, and yen redde and white
Throughout the citee, by the maister strete
That sprad was al wt blak, and that wonder hie Right of the same is the strete iwis upon the right hande went Egeus
And on the other side duke Theseus
With vessels in her hande of golde full fine
All full of honie, milke, blode, and wine
Eke Palamon, with full greate companie
And after that, came wofull Emelie
With fire in hande, as was that time the gise
To doen the office of funerall seruice
Hie labour, and full greate apparailyng
Was at seruice, and at fire makyng
That with his grene top the heauen raught
And twentie fadome of bred armes straught
This is to sain, the bowes were so brode
Of stra we first there was laied many a lode.
But how the fire was maked vp on height
And eke the names, how the trees height
As oke, firre, beche, aspe, elder, elme, popelere
Willowe, Holm, Plane, Bore, Chesten, laure
Maple, thorne, beche, ewe, hasell, whipultre
How thei were felde, shall not be tolde for me
Ne how the goddes ronne vp and doun
Disherited of her habitacion
In whiche thei wonned in rest and pees
Nimphes, Faunie, and Amadriades
Ne how the beastes, ne the birdes all
Fledden for feare, when the trees fall
Ne how the ground agast was of the light
That was nat wont to see the Sunne bright
Ne how the fire was couched first with stre
And than with drie sticks clouen a thre
And than with grene wodde, and spicerie
And than with clothe of golde and perrie
And garlondes hangyng with many a floure
The mirre, the ensence, with swete odoure
Ne how Arcite laie emong all this Ne what richesse about his bodie is Ne how that Emelie, as was the gise
Put in the fire of funerall seruice
Ne how she sowned, whā maked was the fire
Ne what she spake, ne what was her desire
Ne what iewelles men in the fire cast
When that the fire was greate and brent fast
Ne how sum cast her sheld, and sum her spere
And of her vestemētes, whiche that thei were
And cuppes full of wine, milke, and blood
Into the fire, that brent as it were wood
Ne how the Grekes with a huge route Thrise ridden all the fire aboute upon the left hande, with a loude shoutyng
And thrise with her speres clateryng
And thrise how the ladies gan crie
Ne how that ladde was homward Emelie
Ne how that Arcite is brent to ashen cold
Ne how the liche wake was hold
All that night, ne how the Grekes plaie
The wake plaies, kepe I nat to saie
Who wrestled best naked, with oile anoint
Ne who bare hym best in euery poinct
I woll not tellen how thei gone whom to Athenes, whan the plaie is doen
But shortly to the poinct than woll I wende
And make of my long tale an ende.

By processe and by length of yeres
All stinten is the murnyng and the teres
Of Grekes, by one generall assent
Than semed me there was a Parlement
At Athenes, vpon a certain poinct and caas Emong the whiche poinctes ispoken was
To haue with certain countres alliaunce
And haue of Thebans full obeisaunce
For whiche this noble Theseus anon
Let sende after this gentle Palamon
Unwiste of hym what was the cause & why:
But in his blacke clothes sorowfully
He came at his commaundement on hie Tho sent Theseus after Emelie.
whā thei wer set, and husht was the place
And Theseus abidden hath a space
Or any worde came from his wise brest
His yen sette he there hym lest
And with sobre a sadde visage, he siked still
And after that, right thus he saied his will
The first mouer of the cause aboue
When he first made the faire chaine of loue
Greate was the effect, and hie was his entente
Well wist he why, and what therof he mente
For with that faire chaine of loue he bonde
The fire, the aire, the water, and the londe
In certain bondes, that thei maie nat fle
That same prince and that mouer, q he Hath stablished in this wretched world adon
Certen daies and duracion
To all that are engendred in this place
Ouer the whiche daie thei maie nat pace
All mowe thei yet the daies abredge
There nedeth non auctorite to ledge
For it is proued by experience

But

But that me lift declare my ſentence
Then maie men by this order diſcerne
That thilke mouer ſtable is and eterne
Well maie men knowe, but he be a foole
That euery partie is deriued from his hoole
For nature hath nat taken his beginnyng
Of one parte or cantell of a thyng
But of a thing that perfite is and ſtable
Diſcendyng ſo, till it be corrumpable
And therefore of his wiſe purueiaunce
He hath ſo well beſet his ordinaunce
That ſpaces of thinges and progreſſions
Shullen endure by ſucceſſions
And not eterne, without any lye
Thus maieſt thou vnderſtande and ſee at eye
Lo the oke, that hath ſo long a norischyng
Fro the time that it beginneth firſt to ſpring
And hath ſo long a life, as ye maie ſee
Yet at the laſt, waſted is the tree
Conſidereth eke, how that the harde ſtone
Under our feete, on whiche we treade & gone
Yet waſteth it, as it lieth in the weie
The brode riuer ſumtyme wereth drie
The greate tounes, ſe we wane and wende
Than ye ſee that all this thyng hath ende
And man and woman ſee ſhall we alſo
That nedeth in one of the termes two
That is to ſain, in youth or els in age
He mote be dedde, a kyng as well as a page
Some in his bedde, ſome in the depe ſee
Some in the large field, as ye maie ſee
It helpeth not, all goeth that ilke weie
Than maie you ſee that all thyng mote deie
What maketh this, but Jupiter the kyng
That is prince, and cauſe of all thyng Conuertyng all to his proper will
From whiche it is deriued ſoth to tell
And here again, no creature on liue
Of no degree auaileth for to ſtriue
Than is it wiſedome, as thinketh me
To make vertue of neceſſite
And take it well, that we maie not eſche we
And namely that to vs all is dewe
And who ſo grutcheth aught, he doeth folie
And rebell is to hym that all maie gie
And certainly, a man hath moſte honour
To dien in his excellence and flour
When he is lifer of his good name
Thā hath he don his frēdes ne him no ſhame
And glader ought his frēdes be of his death
When with honour ſyolde is vp the breath
Than whan his name apaled is for age
For all forgetten in his vaſſellage
Than it is beſt, as for a worthie fame
To dien, when he is beſt of name
The contrarie of al this is wilfulneſſe
Why grutchen we? why haue we heuineſſe
That good Arcite of cheualrie the flour
Departed is, with duetie and with honour
Out of this foule priſon, of this life?
Why grutchen here his coſyn and his wife
Of his welfare, that loueth hym ſo wele
Can he hem thāk? naie god wote neuer a dele
That bothe his ſoule, and eke hem offende
And yet thei mowe not her luſtes amende?
What maie conclude of this long ſtorie
But after ſorowe, I rede vs be merie
And thanke Jupiter of all his grace
And er we departen from this place
I rede we maken of ſorowes two
One parfite ioie, laſtyng euer mo
And looke now where moſte ſorowe is herin
There woll I firſt amende and begin
Suſter q̄ he this is my full aſſent
With all the people of my parlement
That gentle Palamon, your owne knight
That ſerueth you, with wil, hert, and might
And euer hath doen, ſith ye firſt hym knewe
That ye ſhall of your grace vpon hym rewe
And take hym for husbōnde and for Lorde
Lene me your hande, for this is our accorde.
Let ſee now of your womanly pite
He is a kynges brother ſoonne parde
And though he were a poore bachelere
Sin he hath ſerued you ſo many a yere
And had for you ſo greate aduerſite
It muſt been conſidered, leueth me
For gentle mercie ought to paſſen right.
Than ſaied he thus to Palamō the knight
I trowe there nede litle ſarmonyng
To make you aſſenten to this thyng
Cometh nere, & taketh your lady by the hond
Bit wirt hem was maked anon the bond
That hight Matrimonie or mariage
By all the counſaile of the baronage
And thus with all bliſſe and melodie
Hath Palamon iwedded Emelie.
And God ỹ all this worlde hath wrought
Sende him his loue, ỹ it hath ſo dere bought
For now is Palamon in all wele
Liuyng in bliſſe, in richeſſe, and in hele
And Emelie hym loueth ſo tenderlie
And he her ſerueth ſo gentellie
That neuer was ther no word hem bitwene
Of ielouſie, or of any other tene
Thus endeth Palamon and Emelie
And God ſaue all this faire companie.

Here endeth the knightes tale, and here foloweth the Millers Prologue.

When

The Millers tale.

When that the knight had thus his tale itold
In all the companie nas there yong ne old
That he ne saied, it was a noble storie
And worthie to be drawen in memorie
And namely the gentiles euerichone
Our hoste loughe and sware, so mote I gone
This goeth a right, vnbokled is the male
Let see now who shall tell an other tale
For truely, the game is well begonne
Now telleth sir Monke if ye conne
Sum what, to quite with the knightes tale
The Miller for dronken was all pale
So that vnnethes vpon his his horse he sat
Ne nolde auale neither hood ne hat
Ne abide no man for his curtesie
But in Pilates voice he began to crie
And swore by armes, blood and bones
I can a noble tale for the nones (tale
With which I wol now quite the knight his
Our hoste saw that he was dronken of ale
And saied: abide Robin leue brother
Sum better man shall tell vs first an other Abide, and let vs wirche thriftely.
By Gods soule (q he) that wol not I
For I woll speake, or els go my waie
Our hoste answered: tell on a deuill waie
Thou art a foole, thy witte is ouercome
Now herketh q the Miller, all and some
But first I make protestacion
That I am dronke, I knowe it by my soun
And therefore if I mispeake or saie
Wite it the ale of Southwarke, I you praie
For I woll tell a Legende and a life
Bothe of a Carpenter and his wife
How that a clerke set a worghtes cappe
The Reue answered and said stint thy clap
Let be thy lewd dronken harlottrie
It is a synne, and eke a greate folie
To apairen any man, or him defame
And eke to bring wiues in soche blame
Thou maiest inough of other thinges sain.
This dronken Miller spake full sone again
And saied: leue brother Oswolde
Who hath no wife is no cokolde
But I saie not therefore that thou art one
There been full good wiues many one
Why art thou angrie with my tale now
I haue a wife parde, as well as thou
Yet nolde I for all the Oren in my plough
Take vpon me more then inough
To demen of my self that I am one
I woll beleue that I am none
An husbande should not been inquisitife
Of Goddes priuete, ne of his wife
For so he finde Goddes foison there
Of the remnaunt, nedeth not to enquere
What should I more saie, but this Millere
He nolde his worde for no man forbere
But telde his churles tale in this manere
Me forthinketh I shall rehearce it here
And therefore, euery gentle wight I praie
Demeth not for Goddes loue, that I saie
Of euill entent, but that I mote rehearce
Her tales all, been thei better or werse
Or els falsen some of my matere
And therefore, who so liste it not to here
Tourne ouer the lefe, and chose an other tale
For ye shall finde inowe greate and smale
Of historial thing that toucheth gentilnesse
And eke moralite, and holinesse
Blame not me, if that ye chose amis
The Miller is a churle, ye knowe well this
So was the Reue eke, and other mo
And harlottrie thei telde eke bothe two Auise you, and put me out of blame
And eke men should not make ernest of game.

Here endeth the Millers Prologue: and here after foloweth his Tale.

Whilom there was dwelling in Orenforde
A riche gnofe, that gestes helde to borde
And of his crafte he was a Carpenter
With him ther was dwelling a poore scholer
Had ilearned art, but all his fantasie
Was tourned to learne Astrologie
And coud certaine of conclusions
To demen by interrogacions
If that men asken him in certain houres
When ỹ men should haue drought or shoures
Or if men asked him what should befall
Of euery thyng, I may not reken all
This clerke was cleped Hende Nicholas
Of derne loue he coud and of solas
And thereto he was slie and right priuee
And like to a maiden meke to see
A chamber he had in that hostelrie
Alone, withouten any companie
Full fetously dight with herbes sote
And he himself as swete as is the rote
Of Licores, or of any Setuwall
His almagiste, and bookes greate and small

His

His astrelagour, longyng for his arte
His augrim stones lyng faire aparte
On shelues couched at his beddes hedde
His presse icouered with a foldyng redde
And all aboue there laie a gaie Sautrie
On whiche he made on nightes melodie
So swetely, that all the chamber rong
And Angelus ad virginem he song
And after that he song the kynges note
Full oft blessed was his merie throte
And thus the swete clerke his tyme spent
After his friendes findyng and his rent

This Carpenter had wedded newe a wife
Whiche that he loued more than his life
Of eightene yere she was of age
Jelous he was, and kept her straite in cage
For she was wilde, and yong: and he was old
And demed hymself to been a cokewold
He knewe not Cato: for his wite was rude
That bade men wed her similitude
Men should wedde after her estate
For youth and elde is often at debate
But sith he was fallen in the snare
He must endure, as other folke his care
Faire was this yong wife, and therewithall
As any wisele her bodie gentle and small
A sceinte she weared, barred all with silke
A barme clothe, as white as morowe milke
Upon her lendes, full of many a goze
Whit was her smock, and embrouded all biforе
And eke behinde on her colere about
Of cole blacke silke, within and eke without
The tapes of her white volipere
Were of the same sute of her colere
Her filet brode of silke, and set full hye
And sikerly, she had a likerous iye
Full small ipulled were her browes two
And tho were bent, and blacke as any sloo
She was moche more blisfull for to see
Than is the newe Perienet tree
And softer than the woll is of a wether

And by her girdel hong a purse of Leather
Tassed with silke, and perled with Latoun
In all this worlde, to seken up and doun
There nis no man so wise, that couth thence
So gaie a popelote, or so gaie a wenche
Full brighter was the shinyng of her hewe
Than in the toure the Noble forged newe
But of her song, it was so loude and yerne
As any Swalowe sittyng on a berne
Thereto she couthe skippe, and make a game
As any Kidde or Calfe folowyng his dame
Her mouth was swete, as braket or the meth
Or hoorde of apples, lyng in hate or heth
Winsyng she was, as is a iolie colt
Long as a maste, and vpright as a bolt
A brooche she bare on her lowe collere
As brode as the bosse of a buckelere
Her shoes were laced on her legges hie
She was a primrose, and pigsnie
For any lorde to liggen in his bedde
Or yet for any good yoman to wedde.

Now sir and eft sire, so befell the caas
That on daie this Hende Nicholas
Fell with this yong wife to rage and pleie
While that her husbonde was at Oseney
As clerkes been full sotell and queinte
And priuely he caught her by the queinte
And saied: I wis but I haue my will
For derne loue of the lemman I spill
And helde her faste by the haunche bones
And saied: lemman loue me well at ones
Or I woll dien also God me saue

And she sprong as a colt in a traue
And with her hedde she writeth fast awaie
And saied: I woll not kisse thee by my faie
Why let be quod she, let be Nicholas
Or I woll crie out harrowe and alaas
Doe awaie your hondes for your curtesie.

This Nicholas gan mercie for to crie
And spake so faire, and profered hym so fast
That she her loue graunted hym at last
And swore her othe, by S. Thomas of Kent
That she would been at his commaundemēt
When that she maie her leiser well aspie
My husbande is so full of ielousie
That but ye waite well, and be priue
I wote right well I nam but dedde, quod she Ye mote be full derne as in this caas

Naie thereof care ye nat, quod Nicholas
A clerke had litherly beset his while
But if he couth a Carpenter begile
And thus thei were accorded, and iswore
To a waten a tyme as I haue saied before
And whē Nicholas had doen thus euery dele
And thanked her about the lendes wele
He kissed her swete, and taketh his Sautrie
And plaieth fast, and maketh melodie
Than fell it thus, that to the parische cherche
(Christes owne worckes for to werche)
This good wife went vpon an holie daie
Her forhedde shone as bright as any daie
So was it washe, when she lete her werke.

Now was there of ꝑ chirch a parish clerke
The whiche that was cleped Absolon
Croule was his heere, and as golde it shon
And strouted as a fanne large and brode
Full straight and euen laie his iolie shode
His rode was redde, his iyen graie as Goos
With Poles windowes coruen on his shoos

In

The Millers tale.

In hosen redde he went ketoudly
Girde he was full small and properly
All ines kirtle of light waget
Full faire and thicke been the poinctes set
And therebpon he had a gate surpise
As white as the blossome on the rise
A merie childe he was, so God me saue
Well coud he let blood, clippe, and shaue
And make a charter of lond, and a quitaunce
In twētie maner coud he trippe and daunce
After the schole of Oxenforde tho
And with his legges casten to and fro
And plaie songes on a small Ribible
Therto he song sometyme a loude quinible
And as well coud he plaie on a Geterne
In all the toune nas brewhous ne Tauerne
That he ne visited with his solas
There any gaie Tapstere was
But soth to saie he was somwhat squaimus
Of fartyng, and of speache daungerous
This Absolon, that was ioily and gaie
Goeth with a Censer on a Sondaie
Censyng the wiues of the parishe faste
And many a louely looke on hem he caste
And namely on this Carpenters wife
To looke on her hym thought a merie life
She was so proper, and swete as Licorous
I dare well saine if she had been a Mous
And he a Catte, he would haue her hēt anon
This Parishe clerke, this ioily Absolon
Hath in his harte soche a loue longyng
That of no wife he tooke none offeryng
For curtesie he saied he would none
The moone, when it was night bright shone
And Absolon his Geterne hath itake
For paramours he thought for to wake
And forth he goeth, ielous and amerous
Till he came to the Carpenters hous
A litle after the Cockes had icrowe
And dressed hym by a shot windowe
That was bpon the Carpenters wall
He singeth in his voice gentle and small
Now dere ladie, if thy will be
I praie you that ye would rewe on me
Full well accordyng to his Geternyng.
This Carpenter awoke, & heard him syng
And spake vnto his wife anon
What Alison, heres thou not Absolon
That chaūteth thus vnder our boures wall?
And she answerd her husebond there withal
Yes God wote, I heare hym euery dele
This palleth forth, what wol ye bet thā wele
Fro daie to daie, this ioily Absolon
So woeth her, that hym was wo bygon
He waketh all the night, and all the daie
He kēbeth his lockes brode, & made him gaie
He woeth her by meanes and brocage
And swore, he would been her owne page
He singeth brokkyng as a Nightingale
He sent her piment, methe, and spiced ale
And wafres pipyng hotte out of the glede
And for she was of toun, he profered her mede
For some folke woll be wonne for richelle
And sum for strokes, and sum with gētilnesse
Sumtime to shewe his lightnesse & maistrie
He plaieth Herodes on a skaffolde hie
But what auaileth hym, as in this caas?
So loueth she this Hende Nicholas
That Absolon maie blowe the Bockes horne
He ne had for his labour but a scorne
And thus she maketh Absolon her Ape
And all his requeste tourneth to a iape
For soth this prouerbe it is no lie
Men saie thus alwaie, the nye slie
Maketh the ferre loue to be lothe
For though that Absolon be wood or wrothe
Bicause that he ferre was from her sight
Thus nye Nicholas stoode in his light.
But now beare thee well Hende Nicholas
For Absolon maie waile and syng alas
And so bifell it on a Saterdaie
This Carpenter was gone to Osnaie
And Hende Nicholas and Alison
Accorded were to this conclusion
That Nicholas should shapen hem a while
This selie ielous Carpenter to begile
And if so be the game went a right
She should slepe in his armes all night
For this was his desire and hers also
And right anon, without wordes mo
This Nicholas no lenger would tarie
But doeth full soft vnto his chamber carie
Bothe meate and drinke, for a daie or twaie
And her housebonde bade her for to saie
If that he asked after Nicholas
She should saie she nist where he was
Of all that daie she sawe hym not with eye
She trowed he was in some maladie
For no crie that her maide coud call
He nolde answere, for naught y might befal.
Thus palleth forth all the ilke Saterdaie
That Nicholas still in his chamber laie
And ete, dranke, and slept, & did what him lift
Till Sundaie, that the Sunne goeth to rest
This selie Carpenter hath great maruelle
Of Nicholas, or what thing might hym ayle
And saied: I am a drad by sainct Thomas
It stondeth not aright with Nicholas
God shilde that he died sodainly
This worlde is now full tikell sekerly

I ſaw to day a corſe borne to cherche
That now on mõday laſt I ſaw him werche
Go vp (q he vnto his knaue) anone
Cleape at his doze, & knocke faſt with a ſtone
Loke how it is, and tel me boldely.
This knaue went vp full ſturdely
And at the chambze doze, while that he ſtode
He cried and knocked as he were woode
What how: what do ye maiſter Nicholay:
How may ye ſlepe al this long day:
But all for nought he herde not a worde.
An hole he found ful low vpon a bozde
There as the catte was wont into crepe
And at that hole he loked in ful depe
And at the laſt he had of him a ſight.
This Nicholas ſate euer gaping vpright
As he had keyked on the newe mone
A downe he goeth, & tolde his maiſter ſone
In what aray he ſaw this ylke man.
This carpenter to bliſſen him began
And ſaid: now helpe vs ſeynt Frideſwide
A man wot lytle what ſhal him betide
This man is fallen, with his Aſtronomie
In ſome woodneſſe, oz in ſome agonie
I thought aye well how it ſhould be Men ſhoulden not know of Gods priuete
Ye bleſſed be alway the leude man
That naught but onely his byleſe can.
Right ſo ferde another clerke with aſtronomy
He walked into the feldes for to pry
Vpon the ſterre, to wete what ſhould befall
Til he was in a marlpit yfall
He ſaw not that, yet by ſainte Thomas
Me reweth ſore on Hinde Nicholas
He ſhal be arated out of his ſtudiyng
If that I may, by Jeſus heuen king.
Get me a ſtaffe, that I maie vnderſpore
While that thou Robyn heueſt vp the doze
He ſhal out of his ſtudieng, as I geſſe
And to the chamber doze he gan him dreſſe
His knaue was a ſtrong carle for the nones
And by the halſe bare vp the doze at ones
Into the floze the doze fell anone.
This Nicholas ſate as ſtil as any ſtone
And euer gaped vpward into the eyre.
This carpenter wend he were in diſpeyre
And hente him by the ſhoulders mightily
And ſhoke him harde, and cried ſpitously
What Nicholas, what how loke a doun
Awake, and thinke on Chriſtes paſſion
I crouche thy from elues, & fro wicked wightes
Therwith the nightſpel he ſaid anon rightes
On four halues, of the houſe about
And on the dreſhfolde of the doze without Jeſu Chriſt, and ſainte Benedight
Bliſſe this houſe from euery wicked wight
Fro the nightes mare the wite Pater noſter
Where wonneſt thou ſaint Peters ſuſter:
And at the laſt this Hende Nicholas
Gan for to ſike ſore, and ſaid alas
Shal al this world be loſt eftſones now:
This carpenter anſwerd: what ſayſt thou:
what thinke on god, as we do men ỳ ſwinke
This Nicholas anſwerd fetche me drinke
And after wol I ſpeke in priuete
Of certaine thinges, that toucheth the & me
I wol tellen it none other man certaine.
This carpẽter goth doun, & cometh againe
And brought of mighty ale a large quarte
And whã ỳ eche of hem had dronkẽ his parte
This Nicholas, his doze faſt ſhette
And doune the carpenter by him ſette
And ſaid: Iohan hoſte myn leſe and dere
Thou ſhalt vpon thy trouthe ſwere me here
That to no wight ỳ ſhalt my counſell wrey
For it is Chriſtes counſaile that I ſay
And if thou tel it any man, thou art forloze
For this vengeaũce thou ſhalt haue therfore
That if thou wray me, thou ſhalt be woode.
Nay Chriſt it forbid for his holy bloode
Nd tho this ſely man, I am no bladde
Ne though I ſay it, I am not lefe to gabbe Say what thou wolte, I ſhal it neuer tell
To child ne wife, by him that harowed hell.
Now John (q Nicholas) I wol nat lye
I haue yfounden in mine aſtrologie
As I haue loked in the moone bright
That now on monday nert, at quarter night
Shal fall a rayne, & that ſo wild and woode
That halfe ſo great was neuer Noes floode
This world (he ſaid) in leſſe than in an houre
Shal al be dreynte, ſo hidous is the ſhoure
Thus ſhal mankinde drenche, & leſe her life.
This carpẽter anſwerd & ſaid: alas mi wife
And ſhal ſhe drenche: Alas myn Aliſoun
For ſorow of this he fel almoſt adoun
And ſaid: is there no remedy in this caas:
yes yes ful good (q Hende Nicholas)
If thou wolt werche after loze and rede
Thou maiſt not werchẽ after thin owne hede
For thus ſaith Salomon, that was ful trew
Worke al by coũſayle, & thou ſhalte not rew.
And if thou wilt werken by good counſaile
I vndertake, without maſte oz ſaile
Yet ſhal I ſaue her, and the and me.
Haſt thou not herde how ſaued was Noe:
whã that our lord had warned him byforne
That al the world with water ſhuld be lorne yes (q the carpenter) ful yore a go.
Haſt thou not herde (q Nicholas) alſo:

The Millers tale.

The sorow of Noe with his felechippe
Or that he might gete his wife to chippe
Him had leuer, I dare wel vndertake
At thilke time, than al his wethers blake
That she had a chip her self alone
And therfore wost thou what is best to done?
This asketh haste, and of an hasty thing
Men may not preche ne make tariyng
Anon go get vs faste into this inne
A kneding trowe or eis a kemelyn
For echo of vs, but loke that they ben large
In which men mowe swimme as in a barge
And haue therin vitailes sufficiant
But for a day, fye on the remenant
The water shall aslake and gon away
Aboute prime vpon the next day
But Robyn may not wete of this thy knaue
Ne eke thy maide Gille, I may not saue
Aske not why: for though thou aske me
I wol not tel goddes priuete
Suffiseth the, but if thy wittes be madde
To haue as great a grace as Noe hadde
Thy wife shall I wel saue out of doute
Go now thy way, and spede the herr aboute
But whan thou hast for her, & the, and me
Y getten vs these kneding tubbes thre
Than shalt thou hange hem in ỹ rofe full hie
That no man of our purueyaunce espie
And whan ỹ hast don thus as I haue saide
And hast our vitaile faire in hem ylaide
And eke an are to smithe the corde a two Whan ỹ the water cometh, that we may go
And breake an hole on hie vpon the gable
Vnto the garden warde, ouer the stable
That we may freely passen forth our way
Whan that the great shoure is gon away
Thã shal thou swim as mery I vndertake
As doeth the white ducke after her drake
Than wol I clepe, how Alison, how John
Be mery: for the floode wol passe anon
And thou wolt sain, haile maister Nicholay
Good morow for I se wel that it is day
And than we shal be lordes al our life
Of al the world, as was Noe and his wife
But of one thing I warne the ful right
Be wel auised on that ylke night
That we ben entred into the chippes bord
That none of vs ne speke not a word
Ne clepe ne cry, but ben in his prayere
For it is goddes own heste dere.
Thy wife & thou mote hange fer a twynne
For that bytwirt you shall be no sinne
No more in lokyng than there shal in dede
This ordinaunce is said, go god the spede
To morow at night, whã men ben al a slepe
In to our kneding tubbes woll we crepe
And sitten there, abiding goddes grace
Go now thy way, I haue no lenger space
To make of this no lenger sermoning
Men sayn thus: send the wise, & say nothing
Thou art so wise, it nedeth the not to teche
Go saue our lyues, and that I the beseche.
This sely carpenter goth forth his way
Ful ofte he said alas, and welaway
And to his wife he tolde his priuete
And she was ware, and knewe it bet than he What al this queinte cast was for to sey
But natheles, she ferde as she would dey
And said: alas, go forth thy way anone
Helpe vs to shape, or we be deed echone
I am thy trewe very wedded wife
Go dere spouse, and helpe to saue our life.
Lo, which a great thing is affeccion
Men may dye of ymagination
So depe may impression be take.
This sely carpenter beginneth to quake
Him thinketh verily that he may se
Noes flodde come walting as the see
To drenchen Alison, his hony dere
He wepeth, waileth, and maketh sory chere
He siketh, with many a sory thought
He goth, and getteth him a kneding trough
And after a tubbe, and a kemelin
And priuely he sent hem to his in
And hinge hem in the rofe ful priuely
His owne hand, he made him ladders three
To climben by the ronges, and by the stalkes
Into the tubbes hongyng by the balkes
And hem vitailed, both trough and tubbe
With breed and chese, & good ale in a tubbe
Suffising right ynowe, as for a day
But er that he had made all this array
He sent his knaue, and eke his wenche also Vpon his nede to London for to go
And on the monday, whan it drowe to night
He shette his doore, without candel light
And dressed al thing, as it should be
And shortly clomben vp al thre
They seten stil not fully a forlong way
Now pater noster clum, said Nicholay
And clum ỹ Johan, and clum said Alison
This carpenter said his deuocion
And stil he sitte, and bidden his prayere
Awayting on the rayne, if he it here.
The deed slepe, for wery bisinesse
Fel on this carpenter, right as I gesse
Aboute curfewe time, or litell more
For trauaile of his goste he groneth sore
And eft he routeth, for his heed mislay
And down of ỹ ladder than stalketh Nicholay

And

And Alison ful soone after she spedde
Without wordes mo thei went to bedde
There as the carpenter was woned to lye
There was the reuel, and the melody
And thus lieth Alison and Nicholas
In bisinesse of mirthe and solas
Til that the bel of laudes gan to ring
And freres in the chaunsell gon to sing.
This parish clerke, this amerous Absolon
That is for loue alway so wo bygon
Upon the monday was at Oseney
With company, him to disporte and play
And asked vpon a case a cloistere
Ful priuely, after Iohn the carpentere
And he drew him a parte out of the chirche
And said I not: I saw him not here wirche Sithe saturday, I trow that he be went For timbre, there our Abbot hath him sent
For he is wont for timbre for to go
And dwellen at the graunge a day or two Or els he is at his house certaine
Wher that he be, I can not sothly saine.
This Absolon, ful ioly was and light
And thought, now is my time to walk al night
For sekerly, I saw him nat sterine
Bout his dore, sith day began to spring
So mote I thriue, I shal at cockes crowe
Ful priuely knocke at his windowe
That stant ful lowe vpon his boures wall
To Alison wol I now tellen all
My loue longing: for yet I shall nat misse
That at the leest way I shall her kisse
Some maner comforte shal I haue parfaye
My mouth hath itched al this long daie
That is a signe of kissing at the leest
Al night me mette eke, that I was at a feest
Therfore I wol go slepe an hour or twey
And al the night than wol I walke and pley.
Whan that the first cocke hath crowe anon
Up rist this ioly louer Absolon
And him arayeth gay, and in queinte deuice
But first he cheweth greyns and licorice
To smellen swete, or he had kempte his here
Under his tonge a trueloue he bere
For therby he wende to ben gracious
He roweth to the carpenters house
And stil he stante vnder the chot windowe
Unto his brest it raught, it was so lowe
And softe he knocked, with a semly soun.
What do ye honycombe, swete Alisoun:
My faire birde, my swete sinamome
Awaketh lemman myn, and speketh to me
Ful litel thinken ye vpon my wo
That for your loue I swelt there as I go
No wonder is though I swelt and swete
I mourne as doth the lambe after the tete
Wyls lemman, I haue lucke loue longing
That like a turtle trew is my morning
I may not eaten no more than may a maide
Go fro the window iacke fool, she saide
As helpe me god and swete saint Iame
I loue a nother, or els I were to blame
Wel bet than thee (by Iesu) Absolon
Go forthe thy way, or I wol caste a stone
And let me slepe, a twenty diuel way
Alas q Absolon, and welaway
That true loue was euer so yuel bysette
Than kisse me, sin it may be no bette
For Iesus loue, and for the loue of me.
Wilt thou thā go thy way therwith q she:
Ye certes lemman, q this Absolon
Than make the redy (q she) I come anon
And vnto Nicholas she said still Now peace, and thou shalt laugh thy till
This Absolon doun set him vpō his knees
And said: I am a lorde at al degrees
For after this, I hope there cometh more
Lemman thy grace, & swete birde thy more.
The window she vndoth, and that in haste
Haue do (q she) and spede the faste
Let not our neighbours the aspy.
This Absolō gan wipe his mouth ful drie
Derke was the night, as pitche or cole
And at the window she put out her ers hole
And Absolon him selfe, neither bet ne wers
But with his mouthe he kist her bare ers
Ful sauorly, or he were ware of this.
Abacke he sterte, and thought it was amis
For wel he wist, a woman had no berde
He felte a thing al rowe, and long herde
And said: fye, alas what haue I do:
Te he q she, and clapte the window to
And Absolon goeth forth a sory paas
A berde a berde, said Hende Nicholas
By goddes corpus, this goeth faire and wele.
This sely Absolon herde it euery dele
And on his lippe he gan for angre bite
And to him selue he said, I shal the quite Who rubbeth now, who frotheth now his lips
With dust, with sonde, with straw, with chips
But Absolon: that saith ful often alas
My soule betake I to Sathanas
But me were leuer than al this toun, q he
Of this dispite auenged for to be.
Alas (q he) alas that I ne had pleynt
His hotte loue is colde, and all yqueint
For fro the time that he had kist her ers
Of paramours he set not a hers
For he was healed of his maladye
Ful ofte paramoures he gan defie

The Millers tale.

And wepe as dothe a childe that is ybete
A lofte pace he wente ouer the strete
Unto a smith, men callen dan Gerueys
That in his forge smiteth plow harneys
He sharpeth shares, and culters besily
This Absolon knocketh all esily
And said vndo Gerueys, and that anon
What who art thou? It am I Absolon
What Absolon, what for Christes swete tre
Why rise ye so rathe? ey benedicite
What eyleth you? sum gay gyrle god it wote
Hath brought you thus on the berytote
By saynte note, ye wote wel what I mene.
This Absolon ne raught not a bene
Of al his play, no word againe he gaffe
He had more to we on his dishaffe
Than Geruays knew, and said frend so dere
The hote cultre, in the chymeney here
As lene it me, I haue there with to done
I woll bring it the againe ful sone.
Geruays answered certes were it golde
Or in a poke nobles al vntolde
Thou shouldest it haue, as I am true smith
Eye Christes foote, what wol ye don therwt Therof (q Absolon) be as be may
I shall wel tellen the by to morow day
And caught the culter by the colde stele
Ful softe out at the dore gan he stele
And went vnto the carpenters wal
He coughed first, and knocked there withal
Upon the window, right as he did ere.
This Alison answerd: who is there
That knocketh so: I warante he is a thefe.
why nay (q he) god wot my swete lefe
I am thyn Absolon, thyn owne derling
Of gold (q he) I haue the brought a ring
My mother yaue it me, so god me saue
Ful fine it is, and therto wel ygraue
This wol I yeue the, if thou me kisse.
This Nicholas was risen for to pisse
And thought he would amenden all the iape
He should kisse his ers er that he shape
And vp the window did he hastely
And out his ers he put ful priuely
And ouer the buttocke, to the haunche boon
And therwith spake this clerke, this Absolon
Spek swete birde, I not where thou arte.
This Nicholas anon let fleen a farte
As great as it had ben a thunder dent
That with the strok he was wel ny yblent
And he was redy with his yron hote
And Nicholas in the arse he smote.
Of goeth the skin an hondbrede aboute
The hotte coltor brende so his toute
And for the smert he wende for to die
As he were woode, he gan for to crye
Helpe, water, water, for goddes herte.
This carpenter out of his slomber sterte
And herde one cry water, as he were woode
And thought, alas now cometh Noes floode
And sette him vp without wordes mo
And with an axe, he smote the corde a two
And doun goth al, he found neither to sell
Breed ne ale, but doun shortly he fell
Upon the flore, and there a swowne he lay.
Up sterte than Alison and Hende Nicholay
And cried out, and harrow in the strete
The neighbours, both smal and grete
In ronne, for to gauren on this man
That aswoune lay, paliche and wan
For with that fall brosten hath he his arme
But stonden he must vnto his owne harme
For when he spake, he was yborne adoun
With Hende Nicholas, and Alisoun
They tolde euery man, that he was woode
He was agaste so of Noyes floode
Through fantasie, that of his vanite
He had getten him kneding tubbes thre
And had hem honged in the rofe aboue
And that he prayed hem for goddes loue
To sitten in the roofe par company
The folke gan laughen at his fantasy
And in to the roofe they kyken and they gape
And turned al his ernest into a iape
For what so this carpenter answerde
It was for naught, no man his reason herde
With othes great, he was aswore adoun
That he was holden wood in al that toun
For euerich clerke anon helde with other
They said ꝑ man was wod, my leue brother
And euery wight gan laughen at this strife
Thus swiued was the carpenters wife
For al his keping, and his ielousie
And Absolon hath kist her nether eye
And Nicholas is shalded in the toute
This tale is done, and god saue al the route.

¶ Here endeth the Millers tale: and herafter folowethe
Reues Prologue.

Whan folke had laughed at this nyce caas
Of Absalon and Hynd Nicholas
Dyuers folke dyuersly they saide
But for the more part they lough and playde
Ne at this tale I saw no man him greue
But it were onely Oswolde the Reue

Bicause

Bycause he was of carpenters craft
A litell pse in his herte plaft
He gan to grutchen and blamen it a lite Sothly q he, ful wel couth I the quite With blering of a proude millers eye
If that me lift to speke of ribaudrye
But ek I am old, me lust not play for age
Gras se time is done, my fodder is forage
This white coppe writeth myn olde peres
For fötime yolow was, now white ben myn
But yet I fare as doth an openers (heres
That yhe frute is euer lenger the wers
Tyl it be rotten in mollohe, or in stre
We olde men, I dreden so fare we Till we be rotten can we not be ripe
We hoppen alway, while the world wol pipe
For in our wyl there stiketh euer a naile
To haue an hore heed and a grene taile
As hath a leke, for though our might be gone
Our wil desireth foly euer in one
For whā we may not don, thā wol we speken
Yet in our alden olde, is fyre preken
Four gledes han we, whiche I shall deuise
Iuaunting, lieng, angre, and couetise
These four sparkles longen on to elde
Our olde limmes mowe wel ben vnwelde
But will ne shall not faile, that is sothe
And yet haue I alway a coltes tothe
As many a yere as it is passed henne
Syn that my tappe of life began to renne
For liberly, whan I was borne anone
Dethe drowe the tappe of life, and let it gone
And euer sins hath the tappe rronne
Till that almost al emptie is the tonne
The streme of life now droppeth on ꝑ chimbe
The sely tonge may wel ringe and climbe
Of wretchednes, that passed is full yore
With olde folke saue dotage is no more.

Whan ꝑ our host had herde this sermoning
He gan to speke as lordly as a king
And said: what amounteth al this witte?
What shall we speke all daie of holy writte?
Thy diuell made a Reue to preche
Or a souter a shipman, or a leche.
Say forthy thy tale, and tary not the time
Lo Depforde, and it is halfe way prime Lo Grenewiche, that many a shrewe is in
It were time thy tale for to begin

Now sirs q this Oldwolde the Reue
I pray you al, that ye not you greue
That I answere, and somdele set his houle
For lefull it is with force, force of houle.
This dronken Miller hath ptolde vs here
How that begiled was a carpentere
Parauenture in scorne, for I am one
And by your leaue, I shall him quite anon
Right in his churles termes woll I speke
I pray to God his necke mote breke
He can well in mine eye sene a stalke
But in his owne he can not sene a balke.

¶ Here endeth the Reues prologue.

¶ Here beginneth the Reues tale.

AT Trompyngton, not far fro Cambridge
There goth a broke, and ouer that a bridge
Upon the whyche broke ther stant a mell
And this is very soth, as I you tell
A Miller was there dwelling many a day
As any pecocke he was proude and gay
Pypen he couthe, and fischen, and nettes bete
And turne cuppes, and wel wraftle and shete
Ye by his belte he bare a long pauade
And of a swerde ful trenchaft was the blade
A foly popere bare in his pouche
Ther nas no man for perill durst him touche
A Sheffelde thwitel bare he in his hose
Round was his face, a camused was his nose
As pilled as an ape was his scull
He was a market beater at the full
There durst no wight honde on him ledge
But he ne swore he shulde abedge
A theefe he was forsothe, of corne and mele
And that a slie, and vlaunt for to stele
His name was hoten Deynous Simkyn
A wife he had, comen of noble kyn
The parson of the toune her father was
With her he yafe ful many a panne of bras
For that Simkyn should in his bloode alye
She was ycoftred in a nonnerye
For Simkyn wolde no wife, as he saide
But she were well ynourifshed, and a maide
To saue his eftate of yomanrie
And she was proude, and pert as a pie
A full fayre sight was it vpon hem two
On holy daies byfore her would he go
With his tipet wounden about his heed
And she came after in a gite of reed
And Simkyn had hosen of the same
Ther durst no wight clepen her but dame
Was none so hardy, that went by the way
That with her ones durst rage or play
But if he woulde be slaine of Simkin

The Reues tale.

with pauade, or with knife, or bodkyn
For ielous folkes ben perillous euermo
Algates they would her wiues wende so
And eke for she was somdele smoterliche
She was as digne as water in a diche
And as full of hoker, and of besmare
As though that a lady should her spare
What for her kinred, and her norteiry
That she had lerned in the nonnery.

A doughter had they bet wirt hem two
Of twenty yere, withouten any mo
Sauing a child that was of halfe yere of age
In cradell it lay, and was a proper page
This wenche thicke and wel ygrowen was
With camelid nose, and eyen gray as glas
With buttockes brode, & brestes round & hye
But right faire was her heare I wol nat lye

The person of the toun, for she was so faire
In purpose was to maken her his heyre
Both of his catell, and of his mesuage
And straunge he made it of her mariage
His purpose was to bestowen her hie
Into some worthy blode of auncetrie
For holy churches good mote ben dispended
On holy churches blode that is discended
Therfore he would, his holy blode honour
Though that he holy church should deuour.

Great soken hath this Miller out of dout
With whete and malte, of all the land about
And namely there was a great college
Men clepen it the Solere hall of Cambrege
Ther was her whete & eke her malt iground
And on a day it happed in a stound
Sicke lay the Manciple, on a malady
Men wenden wisely that he should dy
For which this miller stale both whete & corn
An hundred time more than before
For ther before, he stale but curteisly
But he now was a theef outrageously
For which the warden chidde and made fare
But therof set the Miller nat a tare
He craked, bosted, and swore it nas not so

Than were ther yonge poore scolers two
That dwelten in the hall, of whiche I say
Testife they were, and lusty for to play
And onely for her mirthe, and her reuelry
Upon the warden busily they cry
To yeue hem leaue, but a litel stounde
To gon to mill, to se her corne yground
And hardely they durst lay her necke
The Miller shuld not stealen hem half a pecke
Of corne by sleight, ne by force hem reue

And at the last the warden yaue hem leue
Iohan hight that one, & Aleyn hight ỳ other
Of a town they wer both, ỳ hight Strother
Farre in the North, can I nat tell where

This Aleyn maketh all redy his gere
And on a horse, the sacke he cast anon
Forth goth Aleyn the clerke, and also John
With good sworde & bucheler by her side
Iohan knew the way, him nedeth no gide
And at the mil doore the sacke down he layth

Aleyn spake first: al hayle Simkin sayth
How fares thy faire doughter, and thy wife?

Aleyn welcom (q Simken) by my life
And John also: how now? what do ye here?
By god Simond (q John) nede has no pere,
Him behoueth serue himself ỳ has no swayn
Or els he is a fole, as clerkes sayn
Our Manciple I hope he will be dred
Swa werkes aye the wanges in his heed
And therfore is I come, and eke Aleyn
To grinde our corne & cary it home agayn
We pray you spede vs hemce in that ye may

It shalbe done, q Simken, be my fay
What woll you don, while it is in hande
By god, right by the hopper wol I stande
Od John: & sen how gates the corn goth in Yet saw I neuer by my father kyn
How that the hopper wagges to and fra

Aleyn answerede: Iohan wilt thou sa
Than woll I beneth by my croune
And se how the mele falles adoune
Into the troghe, that shalbe my disporte
Od John, in fay I may ben one of your sorte
I is as yll a Miller as is ye.

This Miller smilleth at her nicite
And thought al nys don but for a wyle
They wene that no man may hem begile
But by my thrifte, yet shall I blere her eye
For all the sleight in her philosofie
The more queinte clerkes that they make
The more woll I steale whan I take
In stede of flour yet wol I geue hem brenne
The greteft clerkes ben not the wiseft menne
As whilom to the wolfe spake the Mare
Of all her art counte I not a tare

Out at the doore he goeth full priuely
Whan that he saw his time, subtelly
He loked vp and doun, til he had yfounde
The clerkes horse, ther as he stode ybounde
Behind the Mill, vnder a lessell
And to the horse he goth him faire and well
He strippeth of the bridel right anon.

And when ỳ horse was lose, he gan to gon
Towarde the fen, there wilde mares rinne
And forth, w wehe, through thicke & thinne
The Miller goeth agayn, no word he said
But doth his note, and w these clerkes plaid
Til that her corne was faire & wel igrounde

And

And when the meale was sacked and ibound
This Jhon goth out, & found her hors away
And gan to crie, harowe and welaway
Our horse is loste Alein for Goddes benes
Step on thy feete man, come forth al atenes
Alas our warden has his palfrey lorne.
This Alein al forgate both mele and corne
All was out of mynde his husbondrie
What, whilhe waie is he gon: he gan to crie
The wife came leping inward at a renne
She saied alas, he goeth to the fenne
With wilde Mares, as fast as he maie go tinthanke come on his hond, & bond hym so
And he that better should haue knit the rein
Alas & Jhon, Alein for Christes pein
Laie doune thy swerde, & I shal mine ail wa
I is full swift God wete as is a raa
By Goddes sale he shall not shape vs bathe:
why ne hadest thou put the capel in & lathe:
Ill heile Alein by God thou is a sonne
These selie clerkes han full fast ironne
Toward the fenne Alein and eke Jhon
And whā the Miller saw that thei wer a gon
He halse a bushell of her floure hath take
And bad his wife knede it in a kake
He saied, I trowe the clerkes were aferde
Yet can a Miller make a clerkes berde
For all her art, yet let hem gon her waie
Lo where thei gon, let the children plaie
Thei get hym not so lightly by my croune.
These selie clerkes rennen vp and doune
With hepe hepe, iolla, wartherere
Go whistle thou, and I shall hepe hym here
But shortly, till it was very night
Thei couth not, though thei did all her might Her capell catche, he ranne awaie so fast
Till in a diche thei caught hym at the last.
Werie and wete as beastes in the rain
Cometh sely Jhon, & with him cometh Alein
Alas (& Jhon) the daie that I was borne
Now are we driuen to hethen and to shorne
Our corne is stole, men woll vs fooles call Bothe the warden, and our felowes all
And namely the Miller, waila waie
Thus plaineth Jhon, as he goth by the waie
Toward the Mill, and bayarde in his honde
The Miller sittyng by the fire he fonde
For it was night, and ferther might thei nort
But for the loue of God thei hym besought
Of herbrough and ease, as for her peny.
The Miller saied ayen, if there been any Soche as it is, yet shall ye haue your part
My house is straite, but ye haue lerned art
Ye can by argument make a place
A mile brode, of twentie foote of space
Let see now if this place maie suffice
Or make it romer with speche, as is your guise
Now Simond (saied Jhon) by S. Cutberde
Ye is thou mery, and that is faire answerde
I haue herd sai, mē should take of twa thinges
Swilke as he findes, or swilke as he bringes
But specially I praie thee hoste dere
Get vs sum mtat & drinke, and make vs chere
And we will paie truely at the full
With emptie hond, men maie no haukes tull
Lo here our siluer redie for to spende.
The Miller to & toune his doughter sende
For ale and bread and rosted hem a goos
And bound her hors he shuld no more go loos
And in his owne chamber he made a bedde
With shetes and with chalons faire ispredde
Not from his owne bedde, ten fote or twelue
His doughter had a bedde all by her selue Right in the same chamber, by and by
It might be no bette, and the cause why
There was no roumer herbrough in & place
Thei soupen, & thei speken of mirthe & solace
And dronken euer strong ale at best
About midnight went thei to rest
Well hath this Miller vernished his hedde
Full pale he was for dronken, & nothing reddē
He galpeth, and he speketh through his nose
As he were in the quache, or in the pose
To bedde he goeth, and with hym his wife
As any Jaie was she light and iolife
So was her iolie whistell well iwette
The cradell at the beddes feete was sette
To rocken, and to reue the childe to suke
And whan that dronken was al in the cruke
To bedde went the doughter right anon
To bedde goeth Alein and eke Jhon
There nas no more, hem neded no dwale
This Miller hath so wisely bibbed ale
That as an hors he snorteth in his slepe
Ne of his taile behinde he tooke no kepe
His wife bare to hym a bordon wel strong
Men might hem heare rounte a forlong
The wenche routeth eke par compagnie.
Alein the clerke, that heard this melodie
He poked on Johan, and saied: slepest thou:
Herdst thou euer swilke a sang er now:
Lo swilke a couplyng is it wirt hem all
A wilde fire on her bodies fall,
Who heard euer swilke a ferly thyng
Ye, thei shall haue the floure of euill endyng
All this lang night tides me no rest
But yet nafore, all shall be for the best
For Jhon (saied he) as euer mote I thriue:
If that I maie, yon wenche woll I swiue
Some esement hath la we shapen vs

The Reues tale.

For Johan, there is a lawe that saieth thus
That if a man in one poinct been a greued
That in an other he shall be releued
Our corne is stollen, sothly it is no naie
And we haue had an euill sit to daie
And sin I shall haue none amendement
Again my losse I will haue myne esement
By Goddes sale, it shall none other be.
This Johan answered: Alein, auise thee
The Miller is a perilous man, he saied
And if that he out of his slepe abraied
He might doen vs bathe a vilanie
Alein answered: I coût hym not worth a flie
And vp he rest, and by the wenche he crept.
This wenche laie vpright, and fast slept
Till he so nye was, er she might aspie
That it had been to late for to crie
And shortly for to sain, thei were at one
Now plaie Alein, for I woll speake of Jhon.
This Jhon laie still a forlong waie or two
And to hymself he maketh routh and wo
Alas (q he) this is a wicked iape
Now maie I sale, I is but an Ape
Yet hath my felowe somwhat for his harme
He hath the Millers doughter in his arme
He auntreth hym, and hath his nede ispedde
And I lie as a drasse sacke in my bedde
And whan this iape is tolde an other deie
I shall be holde a dasse, or a cokeneie
I woll arise, and auntre me it by my faie
Unhardie is unsely, thus men saie.
And vp he rose, and softely he went Unto the cradell, and in his arme it hent
And bare it softly to his beddes fete
Sone after the wife her routyng lete
And gan awake, and went her out to pisse
And came again, and gan the cradell misse
And groped here & there, but she found none
Alas (q she) I had almoste misgone
I had almoste gone to the clerkes bedde
Eye benedicite, than had I foule ispedde
And forth she goeth, till she the cradell fonde
She gropeth alwaie further with her honde
And found the bedd, & thought nat but good
Bicause that the cradell by it stoode
And nist where she was, for it was derke
But faire and well she crept in by the clerke
And lieth full stil, & wold haue caught a slepe
Within a while this Jhon the clerke vp lepe
And on this good wife he laied full sore
So merie a fit had she nought full yore,
And priked hard and depe, as he were madde
This iolie life haue these two clerkes ladde
Till that the thirde cocke began to sing
Alein waxe werie in the daunyng
For he had swonken all the long night
And saied, fare well Malin swete wight
The daie is comen, I maie no lenger bide
But euermo, where so I go or ride
I am thine owne clerke, so haue I hele.
Now dere lemman (q she) go, farewele
But or thou go, one thyng I woll thee tell
When thou wendest homward by the Mell
Right at the enter of the doore behinde
Thou shalt a cake of halke a bushell finde
That was imaked of thyne owne meale
Whiche that I helpe my sire to steale
And good lemman God thee saue and kepe
And with that worde she gan almost to wepe
Alein vprist and thought er it dawe
He would go crepe in by his felawe
And found the cradell with his hande anon
By God thought he, all wrong haue I gon
My hedde is tottie of my swinke to night
That maketh me that I go not aright
I wot wel that by the cradel I haue misse go Here lieth the Miller and his wife also
And forth he goeth on twentie deuill waie
Unto the bedde, there as the Miller laie
He wende haue cropen by his felowe Jhon
And by the Miller he crept in anon
And caught hym by the necke, & soft he spake
And saied: Jhon, thou swinesshed awake.
For Christes soule, and here a noble game
For by that lorde, that called is sainct Jame
As I haue thrise in this short night
Swiued the Millers doughter bolt vpright Whilest thou hast, as a coward been agaste.
ye false harlot (q the Miller) haste
I false traitour, false clerke (q he)
Thou shalt be dedde by Goddes dignite
Who durst be so bolde to disparage
My doughter, that is come of soche linage
And by the throte bolle he caught Alein
And he hym hent dispitously again
And on the nose he smote hym with his fiste
Doune ran the blood streme vpon his breste
And in the flore, with mouth and nose idroke
Thei walowen, as doeth pigges in a poke
And vp thei gon, and doune ayene anon
Till that the Miller spurned on a stone
And doune he fell backward vpon his wife
That wist nothyng of this nice strife
For she was fall a slepe a litteli wight
With Jhon ỹ clerke, that waked had al night
And with the fall out of her slepe she braied
Helpe holie crosse of Bromholme she saied
In manus tuas, lorde to thee I call
I wake Simonde, the fende is on me fall
My harte is broken, helpe I am but dedde

There

There lieth one on my wombe & on my hedde
Helpe Simkin, for these false clerkes fight
This Jhon stert vp, as fast as euer he might
And graspeth by the walles to and fro
To finde a staffe, and he stert vp also
And knewe the estres bet than did this Jhon
And by the wall he founde a staffe anon
And sawe a litell whemeryng of a light
For at an hole in shone the Moone bright
And by that light he sawe hem bothe two But sikerlie he nist who was who
But as he sey a white thyng in her ye
And when he gan this white thing aspie
He wende the clerke had weared a volupер
And with ꝑ staffe he drowe alwaie ner & ner
And wende haue hit this Alein at full
And smote the Miller on the pilled skull
That doun he goth, and cried harrow I die
These clerkes bete hym well, and let hym lie
And araieth hem, and tooke her hors anon
And eke her meale, and on her waie thei gon
And at the Mille doore thei tooke her cake
Of halfe a bushell floure, well ibake.

Thus is the proud Miller well ibete
And hath ilost the grindyng of the whete
And paied for the supper euery dele
Of Alein and of Jhon, that bete hym wele
His wife is swiued, and his doughter als
Lo loche it is a Miller to be fals
And therefore this prouerbe is full soth
Hym dare not well wene that iuell doth
A gilour shall hym self begiled be
And God that sitte in hie Maieste
Saue all this companie, great and smale
Thus haue I quite the Miller in his tale.

Here endeth the Reues tale, and here followeth the Cokes Prologe.

THE Coke of Lõdon while the Reue spake
For ioie he thought the clawde him on the bake
A ha (ꝙ he) for Christes passion
This Miller hath a sharp conclusion
Upon his argument of herbigage
Well saied Salamon in his langage
Ne bryng not euery man into thyn hous
For herbrowyng by night is perelous
Well ought a man auised for to be Whom that he brought into his priuete
I praie to God so yeue me sorowe and care
If euer sithen I hight Hodge of Ware
Herd I Miller dette ilette a werke
He had a iape of malice in the derke.
But God forbid that we stinten here
And therefore if ye vouchsafe to heare
A tale of me, that am a poore man
I woll tell you as well as I can
A litell iape, that fell in our citee
Our hoste saied, I graunt it thee
Now tell on Rodger, looke that it be good
For many a pastie hast thou letten blood
And many a Jacke of Douer hast thou sold
That hath been twise hotte and twise cold
Of many a pilgrim hast thou Christes curse
For of thy persle yet fare thei the worse
That thei haue eaten with thy stoble Goos
For in thy shoppe is many a Flie loos
Now tell on gentle Rogere by thy name
But yet I praie thee be not wroth for game
A man maie saie ful soth in game and plaie.
Thou saiest full soth (ꝙ Roger) by my faie
But soth play, quade play, as ꝑ Flemig saith
And therefore Henry Bailly by thy faith
Be thou not wroth, for we departen here
Though that my tale been of an hostelere
But nathelesse, I woll not tellen it yet
But er we part, iwis thou shalt be quit
And therewithall he lough and made chere
And saied his tale, as ye shullen after here.

Here endeth the Cokes Prologue, and here followeth his tale.

AN gentile whilom dwelte in our cite
And of the craft of Victaillers was he Galiarde he was, as goldfinche in the shawe
Broune as a berie, a proper short felawe
With lockes blacke, kemt full fetously
Daunce he couth full well and iolily
He was called Perkin Reuelour
He was as full of loue and paramour
As is the hiue full of honie swete
Well was the wenche with hym might mete
At euery Bridall would he sing and hoppe
He loued bette the Tauernes than the shoppe
For when any ridyng was in Cheape
Out of the shoppe thither would he lepe
Till that he had of all the sight isein
And daunced well, he would not come agein
And gather hym a meiny of his sort

The man of Lawes prologue.

To hope and syng, and make soche disport
And there thei sette Steuin sor to mete
To plaien at the dice in soche a strete
For in the cite nas there no prentise
That kairer couth casten a paire of dise
Then Perkin couth, and therto he was fre
Of his dispence, in place of priuite
That found his maister well in his chafare
For oftymes he founde his bore full bare
For liberly, a prentise reuelour
That haunteth dise, riot, or paramour
His maister shall it in his shoppe abie
All haue he no part of the Minstralcie
For theft and riot, thei been conuertible
All can he plaie on Gettron or on Rebible
Reuell and truth, as in lowe degree
Thei been full wroth al daie, as men maie se
This iolie prentise, with his maister abode
Till he were nie out of his prentishode
All were he snibbed bothe early and late
And somtyme ledde with reuell to Newgate
But at the last, his maister him bethought
Upon a daie, whan he his paper sought
Of a prouerbe, that saieth this same worde
Well bette is rotten apple out of horde
Than that it rote all the remnaunt
So fareth it by a riotous seruaunt
It is moche lesse harme to let hym passe
Than he shend al the seruauntes in the place
Therfore his maister gaue hym a quitaunce
And bad him go, with sorowe and mischaūce
And thus this iolie prentise had his leue
Now let hym riot all the night or leue
And for there is no theke without a louke
That helpeth hym to waste or to souke
Of that he bribe can, or borowe maie
Anon he sent his bedde and his araie
Unto a compere of his owne sort
That loued dise, reuell and disport
And had a wife, that held for countenaunce
A shoppe, and swiued for her sustenaunce.

Here endeth the Cokes Tale, and here followeth the man of lawes Prologue.

OUR hoste sawe well, that the bright Sonne
The arke of his artificiall daie hath ronne
The fourth parte, and halfe an houre more
And though he were not depe expert in lore
He wiste it was the eightene daie
Of Aprill, that is the messanger to Maie
And sawe well, that the shadowe of euery tre
Was in length, the same quantite
As was the bodie erect, that caused it
And therefore by the shadowe he toke his wit
That Phebus, whiche ỳ shone clere & bright
Degrees was fourtie clomben of hight
And for that daie, as in latitude
It was ten of the clocke, he gan conclude
And sodenly he plight his horse about.
Lordinges (quod he) I warne you all the rout
The fourth part of this daie is gon
Now for the loue of God and of sainct Jhon
Leseth no tyme, as ferforth as ye maie
Lordinges ỳ time wasteth bothe night & daie
And stealeth from vs, what priuely slepyng
And what through negligēce, in our waking
As doth the streme, that turneth neuer again
Discendyng fro the mountain into the plain
Well can Seneke, and many a Philosofre
Bi wailen tyme, more than gold in cofre
For losse of catteil maie recouered be But losse of tyme shendeth vs (quod he)
It would not come ayen withouten drede
No more than woll Malkins maiden hede
When she hath lost it in her wantonnesse
Let vs not mowlen thus in idelnesse.
Sir man of Lawe (quod he) so haue I blis
Till vs a tale anon, as forward is Ye been submitted, through your fre assent
To stonden in this case at my iudgement
Acquiteth you now of your behest
Than haue you doen your deuer at the lest.
Hoste (quod he) de pardeux teo assent
To breake forward is not myne entent
Biheste is dette, and I woll hold faine
All my behest, I can no better faine
For soch law as a mā yeueth an other wight
He should himself vsen it by right
Thus woll our text: but natheless certain
I can right now no thriftie tale faine
That Chaucer (though he can but lewdly
On Metres and in rimyng craftely)
Hath saied hem, in soche Englishe as he can
Of old tyme, as knoweth many a man
And if he haue not saied hem leue brother
In one booke, he hath saie hem in an other
For he hath told of louers vp and doun
Mo than Ouide made of mencion
In his Epistels, that been full old
What should I tellen hem, sithē thei ben told:
In youth he made of fire all alone
And sithen he hath spoken of euerichone
These noble wiues, and these louers eke
Who so that woll his large volume seke
Cleped the sainctes liues of Cupide

Ther

There maie he see the large woundes wide
Of Lucresse, and of Babilon Thisbe
The swerd of Dido for the false Enee
The tree of Phillis for her Demophoon
The plaint of Dieanire, and of Hermion
Of Iriadna, and of Hipsipilee
The barain ile stondyng in the see
That dreint Liandre for Hero
The teares of Helein, and eke the wo
Of Brixeis, and of Laodomia
The cruelte of Quene Media
The little children hongyng by the hals
For the Jason, that was of loue so fals
Of Hipermistra, Penelope, and Alceste
Your wifehod he commendeth with the beste
But certenly no wonde ne writeth he
Of thilke wicked ensample of Canace
That loued her owne brother sinfullie
Of soche cursed stories I saie fie
Or els of Tyro Ippoloneus
How that cursed kyng Antiocus
Birafte his doughter of her maidenhede
That is so horrible a tale for to rede
When he her drewe vpon the pament
And therefore he of full auisement
Nolde neuer write in non of his sermons
Of soche vnkinde abhominacions
Ne I ne woll non reherce, yef that I maie
But of my tale how shall I doen this daie
Me were lothe be likened douties
To Muses, that men clepeth Piriades
Methamorpholeos wotte what I mene
But natheles I recche not a bene
Though I come after hym with haubake
I speake in prose, and let hym rimes make
And with that worde, he with a sober chere
Began his tale, as ye shullen after here.

Here endeth the man of Lawes Prologue, and here folo-weth his tale.

Hatefull harme, condicio of pouert
With thurst, with cold, w hunger so confounded
To asken helpe, thee sha-meth in thyn hert
If thou non aske, w nede thou art so wounded that very nede vnwrappeth al thy woūds hid Maugrie thyn hed, thou must for indigence
Or stele, or begge, or borowe thy dispence.

Thou blamest Christ, and saiest ful bitterly
He misdeparteth richesse temporall
Thy neighbour thou witest sinfully
And saiest thou hast to litell, and he hath all Parfaie (saiest thou) sumtime he reken shall Whan that his tale shall brenne in glede
For he nought helpeth nedefull in her nede.

Herken what is the sentence of the wise
Better is to dien, than to haue indigence
Thyn self neighbour woll thee dispise
If thou be poore, farwell thy reuerence
Yet of the wiseman take this sentence
All the daies, poore men been wiche
Beware therefore or thou cum to the priche.

If thou be poore, thy brother hateth thee
And all thy friendes fleeth fro thee, alas
O riche marchauntes full of wele be ye
O noble prudent folke as in this caas
Your bagges been not filde with ambes aas
But with wele sinke, ȳ renneth for your chaunce
At Christenmalle, merie maie ye daunce.

Ye seken londe and see for your winninges
As wise folke ye knowen all the state
Of reignes, ye been fathers of tidynges
And tales, bothe of peace and debate
I was right now of tales desolate
Here that a marchant, gone is many a yere
Me taught a tale, whiche ye shullen here.

In Surrey whilom dwelt a companie
Of Chapmen riche, and there to sadde and true
That wide where senten her spicerie
Clothes of golde, and Satten riche of hewe
Her chafare was so thriftie and so newe
That euery wight hath deintie to chafare
With hem, and eke to sellen hem her ware.

Now fell it, that the maisters of that sorte
Han shapen hem to Rome for to wende
Were it for chapmanhode, or for disporte
Non other messenger would thei thither sende
But come hem self to Rome, this is the ende
And in soche place as thought hem auaūtage
For her entent, thei taken her herbigage.

Sojourned hā these marchantes in ȳ toun
Certain tyme, as fell to her pleasance
But so bifell, that the excellent renoune
Of the emperours doughter dame Custance
Reported was, with euery circumstaunce vnto these Surrein marchātes, in soch wise
Fro daie to daie, as I shall you deuise.

This

The man of Lawes tale.

This was the comen voice of euery man
Our Emperour of Rome, God hym se
A doughter hath, that sithē the world began
To reken as well her goodnes as her beaute Nas neuer soche an other as is she
I praie to God in honour her susteine
And would she were of al Europe the quene.

In her is hie beautie, without pride
Youth, without grenhed or folie
To al her workes vertue is her guide
Humbles hath slain in her all tyrannie
She is a mirrour of all curtesie
Her hert is very chamber of holines
Her honde minister of fredome and almes.

And al this voice was soth, as God is true
But now to our purpose let vs tourne ayen
These marchātes han don fret her ships new
And whan thei han this blisful maiden sein
Home to Surrey been thei went agein
And doen her nedes, as thei han doen yore
And liuen in welth, I can saie no more.

Now fel it, ỹ these marchātes sodēn in grace
Of hym that was the Soudan of Surrie
For whan ỹ thei came frō any straunge place
He would of his benignē curtesie
Maken hem good chere, and besilie aspie
Tidynges of sondrie realmes for to lere
The wonders that thei might seen or here.

Emong other thynges specially (sauce
These marchātes haue him told of dame Cu-
So greate nobilesse, in ernest seriously
That this Soudā hath cauzt so great plesāce
To han her figure in his remembraunce
And all his lust, and all his besie cure
Was for to loue her, while his life maie dure.

Parauenture in that ilke large booke
Which that cleped is the heuen, iwriten was
With sterres, whan that he is birth tooke
That he for loue should han his death, alas
For in the sterres, clerer than nis the glas
Is written God wot, who so could it rede
The death of euery man withouten drede.

In sterres many a winter there biforе
Was writtē the death of Hector ỹ of Achilles
Of Pompei and Julius, or thei were borе
The strief of Thebes, and of Hercules
Of Sampson, Turnus, and of Socrates
The death: but that mens wittes been so dul
That no wight can well rede it at the full.

This Soudon for his priuie counsail sent
And shortly of this matter for to pace
He hath to hem declared all his entent ỹ said hem certain, but if he mizt haue grace
To haue Custance, within a litell space
He nas but dedde, and charged hem to hie
To shapen for his life some remedie.

Diuers men, diuerslỹ thei saiden
The argument thei casten vp and doun
Many a subtell reason forth thei laiden
Thei speken of Magike, and abusioun
But finally, as in conclusioun
Thei can not seen in that non auauntage
Ne in non other waie, saue in mariage.

Then sawe thei therein soche difficulte
By waie of reason, to speake all plain
Bicause that there was soche diuersite
Bitwene her bothe lawes, that thei sain
Thei trowe that no christē prince would fain
Wedden his child vnder our lawes swete
That vs was tauzt, by Mahoūd our prophet

And he answerd: rather than I lese
Custance, I would be christen doutles
I mote been hers, I maie non other chese
I praie you hold your argumentes in pees
Saueth my life, and be not recheles
To getten her, that hath my life in cure
For in this wo, I maie not long endure.

What nedeth greater delatacion
I sate, by treatie and ambassadzie
And by the Popes mediacion
And all the chirche, and all the cheualrie
That in destruction of Maumetrie
And in encrease of Christes lawe dere
Thei been accorded, as ye shall here.

How that the Soudan and his baronage
And all his lieges, should ichristened be
And he shall han Custance in mariage
And certain gold, I not what quantite
And her to finde sufficient surete
Thelame accord was sworne on either side
Now faire Custance, almightie god thee gide

Now woulden fain men waiten, as I gesse
That I should tellen all the purueiance
That the Emperour of his nobilesse
Hath shapen for his doughter dame Custance
Well maie men knowen, ỹ so great ordinance
Maie no man tellen in a litell clause
As was araied for so high a cause.

Bishoppes

Bishoppes ben shapen wt her for to wende
Lordes and ladies, and knightes of renoune
And other folke ynowe this is the ende
And notified is throughout the toun
That euery wight, with great deuotioun
Shoulde pray Christ, that he this mariage
Receiue in gree, and spede this voiage.

The day is come of her departing
I say the wofull day natural is come
That ther may be no lenger tariyng
But forwarde they hem dresse al and some Custance, that with sorowe is all ouercome
Full pale arist, and dressed her to wende
For well she sey, there is none other ende.

Alas, what wondre is it though she wept:
That shal be sent to a straunge nation
Fro frendes, that so tenderly her kept
And to be bounden vnder subiection
Of one, she knoweth not his condicion
Husbondes ben all good and han ben yore
That knowen wiues, I dare say no more.

Father (she said) thy wretched childe Custãce
Thy yong daughter, fostred vp so softe
And ye my mother, my soueraigne plesance
Ouer al thing (out take Christ on lofte)
Custaunce your childe her commaundeth oft Unto your grace: for I shal to Surrye
Ne shal I neuer more se you with eye.

Alas, vnto the Barbary nation
I must anon, sithen it is your will
But Christ that starfe for our redemption
So yeue me grace, his hestes to fulfill
I wretched woman no force though I spill
Women arn borne to thraldom and penaunce
And to ben vnder mannes gouernaunce.

I trow at Troy, whã Thurus brake ỹ wal
Of Ilyon, ne whan brent was Thebes cyte
Ne Rome for the harme of Hanybal
That Romans hath ituenquelshed times thre
Nas herd, such tendre weping for pite
As was in the chambre for her departing
But forth she mote, whether she wepe or sing.

O first mouing cruel firmament
With thy diurnal swegh, that croudest aye
And hurtlest al fro Est to Occident
That naturally would hold another way
Thy crouding set the heuen in such array
At the beginning of this feirs voiage
That cruel Mars hath slaine this mariage.

O infortunate assendent tortuous
Of which the lorde is helpeles fal, alas
Out of his angle, into his derkest house.
O Mars, O occisier, as in this caas
O feble Mone, vnhappy ben thy paas
Thou knittest ỹ there thou nart not receiued
Ther thou were wel, fro thence art ỹ waiued.

Imprudent Emperour of Rome, alas
Was there no philosofer in thy toun
In no time bette than other in suche cas
Of voiage, is there non electioune
Namely to folke of hie condicioun
Nat whan a rote is of a birthe inowe
Alas we ben to leude, or to slowe.

To ship is brought this wofull faire mayd
Solempnely, with euery circumstaunce
Now Jesus Christ be with you all (she sayd)
Ther nis no more, but farewel faire Custãce
She paineth her to make good countenance
And forthe I let her sayle in this manere
And tourne I woll againe to my matere.

Explicit prima pars: & sequi-
tur pars secunda.

The mother of the Soudon, wel of vices
Aspied hath her sonnes playn entent
Howe he wol lete his olde sacrifices
And right anon, the for her counsaile sent
And they ben comen, to know what she ment
And whan assembled was this folke in fere
She set her doun, and said, as ye shal here.

Lordes (ỹ she) ye knowen euerychone
Howe that my sonne is in point to lete
The holy lawes of our Alkaron
Yeuen by goddes messenger Machomete
But one auowe to grete god I hete
The life shal rather out of my body stert
Or Machometes lawe go out of my hert.

What should vs tiden of this newe lawe
But thraldome to our bodies and penaunce
And afterwarde in hel to ben drawe
For we reneyed Mahounde our creaunce:
But lordes, wol ye make assuraunce
As I shal say, assenting to my lore
And I shall make vs safe for euermore.

They sworen, and assenten euery man

To liue with her and dye, and by her stonde
And eueriche in the best wise that he can
To strengthen her, shall his frendes fonde
And she hath this empryse take in honde
Which ye shall here, that I shall deuise
And to hem all she spake in this wise.

We shul vs first faine, christendome to take Cold water shall not greue vs but a lite
And I shall soche a reuell and a feast make That as I trowe, I shall the Soudon quite For tho his wife be christened neuer so white
She shall haue nede to washe awaie the rede
Though she a font ful of water with her lede

O Soudonnesse, roote of iniquite
Virago, thou Sympram the second
O serpent vnder femeninete
Like to the serpent depe in hell ibound
O fained woman, all that maie confound
Vertue and innocence, through thy malice
Is bredde in thee, a nest of euery vice.

O Sathan enuious, sin thilke daie
That thou were chaced from our heritage
Well knewest thou to women the old waie
Thou maidest Eue to bring vs in seruage
Thou wolt fordoen this christen mariage
This instrument, so wela waie the while Makest thou of women, whan ỹ wolt begile

This Soudonnesse, whō I blame ỹ werie
Let priuely her counsaile gon her waie
What should I in this tale lenger tarie?
She rideth to the Soudon on a daie
And saied hym, that she would reny her laie
And christendome of prestes hondes fong
Repentyng her, the Hethen was so long.

Beseching hym, to doen her that honour
That she might haue the christen folke to fest
To plesen hem, I woll doen my labour
The Soudon saieth, I woll doen at you hest
And knelyng, thanked her of that request
So glad he was, he nist not what to saie
She kist her sonne, ỹ home she goth her waie

Arriued been these christen folke to lond
In Surre, with a great solempne route
And hastely this Soudon sent his sond
First to his mother, and all the reigne about
And saied, his wife was comen out of dout
And praiden hem for to riden against ỹ quene
The honour of his reigne for to sustene.

Great was the prese, and riche was ỹ rai
Of Surreyens, and Romaines imette ifere
The mother of the Soudon, riche and gaie
Receiueth her with all glad chere
As any mother might her doughter dere
Vnto the nert cite there beside
A soft paas solempnely thei ride.

Nought trowe I, the triumphe of Julius
Of whiche that Lucan maketh soche a boste
Was roialler, and more curious
Than was thassemblyng of his blikfull hoste
But this Scorpion, this wicked goste
The Soudonnesse, for all her flatteryng
Cast vnder all this, full mortally to styng.

The Soudō cometh himself sone after this
So rially, that wonder is to tell
He welcometh her with moche ioie and blis
And thus in mirthe and ioie I let hem dwell
The fruict of euery tale is for to tell
Whan time come, men thought it for the best
That reuell stint, and men gon to rest.

The tyme come, this old Soudonnesse
Ordained hath the feast, of whiche I told
And to the feast, christen folke hem dresse
In generall, bothe yong and old
There maie men feast and rialte behold
And deintes mo than I can deuise
But all to dere thei boughten it or thei rise.

O Soudon, wo ỹ euer thou art successour
To worldly blisse, springed with bitternesse
The ende of ioie, of our worldly labour
Wo occupieth the ende of our gladnesse
Herken this counsaile, for thy sikernesse
Upon thy glad daie haue thou in mynde
The vnware wo or harm, ỹ cometh behinde.

For shortly to tellen at a worde
The Soudon, and the christen euerichone
Been all to hewe, and sticked at the borde
But it were onely dame Custance alone
This old Soudonnesse, curled crone
Hath with her frendes doen this cursed deed
For she her self would all the countrelede

Ne there was Surreien non ỹ was cōuerted
That of the counsaile of the Soudon wot
That he nas all to hewe, er he asterted
And Custance han thei taken anon forthot
And in a shippe all sternelesse (God wot)
Thei han her set, and bidden her lerne to saile
Out of Surrey ayenward to Ytale.

I

I certayn treſour, that ſhe thider ladde
And ſoth to ſayne, vitaile great plente
They han her yeuen, and clothes eke ſhe had
And forth ſhe ſailleth in the ſalte ſe
O my Cuſtaunce, ful of benignite
O Emperours yong doughter dere
He that is lorde of fortune, be thy ſtere.

She bleſſeth her, & with full pitous voice
Unto the croſſe of Chriſt, thus ſaid ſhe.
O clere, o welful auter, holy croice
Reed of the lambes blood, ful of pite
That weſhe the world fro the olde iniquite
Me fro the fende, and fro his clawe kepe
That day that I ſhal drenchen in the depe.

Victorious tree, proteccion of trewe
That onely worthy were for to bere
The king of heuen, with his woundes newe
The whit lambe, that hurt was with a ſpere
Flemere of feendes, out of him and here
On whiche thy limmes, faithfully extenden
Me kepe, & yeue me might my life to amenden

Yeres and daies fleteth this creature
Throughout the ſee of Grece, unto the ſtraite
Of Marocke, as it was her auenture
O, many a ſory meale may ſhe baite
After her deth ful oft may ſhe waite
Or that the wilde waues would her drine
Unto the place there ſhe ſhould ariue.

Men mighte aſken, why ſhe was not ſlayn
Eke at the feeſt, who might her body ſaue?
I anſwere to that demaunde agayn
Who ſaued Daniel in that horrible caue?
Ther euery wight, wer he maiſter or knaue
Was with the Lion frette or he aſterte
No wight but God, that he bare in his hert.

God liſt to ſhewe his wonderful miracle
In her for ſhe ſhould ſene his mighty werkes
Chriſt that is to euery harme triacle
By certain meanes often, as knowen clerkes
Doth thing for certayn ende, þ full derke is To mans witte, that for our ignoraunce
Ne can nat know his prudent purueyaunce.

Now ſith þ ſhe was not at þ feeſt yſlawe
Who kepeth her fro the drenching in the ſee?
Who kept Jonas in the fiſches mawe
Til he was ſpouted out at Niniue?
Wel may men know, it was no wight but he
That kept the people Ebrak from drenching
With drie fete, through the ſee paſſing

Who hath the four ſpirites of the tempeſte
That power had, bothe to anoye londe & ſee
Bothe northe and ſoute, and alſo weſt & eſte
Anoyeth neyther ſee, ne londe, ne tre Soothly the commaunder therof was he
That fro the tempeſt ay this woman kepte
As wel whan ſhe woke as whan ſhe ſlepte

Wher might this wom̃ mete & drinke haue?
Thre yere and more, how laſteth her vitaile?
Who fed the Egipcian Mary in the caue
Or in deſert (none but Chriſt ſans faile)
Fiue thoulād falke it was as great marualle
With loues fiue and fiſches two to fede
God ſent his foyſon at her great nede.

She driueth forth into our Occian
Throughout the wilde ſee, till at the laſt
Under han holde, that nempne I ne can Fer in Northumberlond, the wawe her caſt
And in the ſande her ſhippe ſticked ſo faſt
That thence nolne it not of all a tide
The wil of Chriſt was þ ſhe ſhould ther abide.

The conſtable of the caſtel doun is fare
To ſene this wrecke, & al the ſhip he ſought
And found this wery woman full of care
He founde also the treſoure that ſhe brought
In her langage, mercy ſhe beſought
The life of her body for to twin
Her to deliuer of wo that ſhe was in.

A maner latin corrupte was her ſpeche
But algates therby was ſhe vnderſtonde
The conſtable, whan him liſt no lenger ſeche
This wofull woman brought he to londe
She kneleth doun, and thanketh gods ſonde
But what ſhe was, ſhe would no man ſey
For foule ne fayre, though ſhe ſhould dey.

She ſaid ſhe was ſo maſed in the ſee
That ſhe forgate her minde, by her trouth
The conſtable of her hath ſo great pite
And eke his wife, that they wepen for routh
She was ſo diligent withouten slouth
To ſerue and pleſe eueriche in that place
That al her louen, that loken in her face.

The cõſtable, & dame Hermegilde his wife
Were painems, and that contre euery where But Hermegilde loued her right as her life
And Cuſtaunce hath ſo long ſoiourned there
In oriſons, with many a bitter tere
Til Jeſu hath conuerted through his grace
Dame Hermegilde, cõſtableſſe of that place.

The man of Lawes tale.

In all that londe durst no chriſten route
All chriſten folke been fled from the countre
Through painims, that conquered all about
The plagues of the Northe, by londe and ſee
To Wales fledde the chriſtianite
Of old Bretons, dwellyng in that Ile
There was her refute, for the meane while.

But yet nas ther neuer chriſtē Bretō ſo exiled
That there nas ſome in her priuete
Honoured Chriſt, and Hethen folke begiled
And nie the caſtell ſoche there dwellen thre
That one of hem was blind, & might not ſe
But it were with thilke iyen of his mynde
With whiche men ſeen, after thei been blynd.

Bright was the Sōne, as in Somers daie
For whiche the conestable, and his wife alſo
And Cuſtance, han taken the right waie
Toward the ſea, a furlong waie or two
To plaien, and to romen to and fro
And in her walke, thre blinde men thei met
Croked and old, with iyen faſt ishet.

In the name of Chriſt, cried this blind Bretō
Dame Hermegilde, yeue me ſight again
This lady ware a kraied of the ſoun
Leſt that her huſbonde, sheerly for to ſain
Would her for Jeſus Chriſtes lore haue ſlain
Til Cuſtance made her bold, & bad her werche
The will of Chriſt, as dougter of his cherch

The conestable wore abaſhed of that ſight
And ſaied: what amounteth all this fare?
Cuſtance anſwerd: ſir it is Chriſtes might
That helpeth folke out of the fendes ſnare
And ſo ferforth she gan our la we declare
That she the conestable, er that it was eue
Cōuerted hath, & on Chriſt made him bileue.

This Cōſtable was nothing lord of this place
Of whiche I ſpeake, there he Cuſtance fonde
But kept it ſtrongly, many a Winter ſpace under Alla, kyng of Northumberlonde
That was full wiſe, and worthy of his hond
Again the Scottes, as men maie well here
But tourne I well again to my matere.

Sathan, that euer by waiteth to begile
Sawe of Cuſtance all her perfeccioun
And caſt anon how he might quite her wile
And made a yong knight, þ dwelt in the toun
Loue her ſo hot, of foule affeccion
That verely, him thought that he ſhould ſpil
But he of her ones might haue his will.

He woeth her, but it auailed nought
She would doe no ſynne by no weie
And for diſpite, he compaſſed in his thought
To maken her on ſhamfull death to deie
He waiteth whan the Conestable is awaie
And priuely on a night he crept
In to Hermegildes chamber while ſhe ſlept.

Werie forwaked in her orilons
Slepeth Cuſtance and Hermegilde alſo
This knight, through Sathans temptaciōs
All ſoftly is to the bedde igo
And cut the throte of Hermegilde a two
And laied the blody knife by dame Cuſtance
And wēt his waie, ther god yeue hi miſchāce

Sone after cometh the cōſtable home again
And eke Alla, that kyng was of that londe
And ſawe his wife diſpitously ſlain
For whiche he wept and wrong his honde
And in the bedde the bloody knife he fonde
By dame Cuſtance, alas what might she ſay?
For very wo, her witte was all awaie.

To kyng Alla was told all this miſchance
And eke þ time, and where, and in what wiſe
That in a ſhippe was founden this Cuſtance
As here before ye han heard me deuiſe
The kynges hart, for pite gan agriſe
When he ſawe ſo benigne a creature
Fall in diſeaſe and in miſaduenture.

For as the lābe toward his death is brought
So ſtant this innocent biforen the kyng
This falſe knight, þ hath this treſō wrought
Bereth her in hond, þ she hath don this thing
But natheleſſe there was great murnyng
Emong the people, and ſaid thei can not geſſe
That ſhe had doen ſo greate a wickedneſſe.

For thei han ſeen her euer ſo vertuous
And louyng Hermegile, right as her like
Of this bare witneſſe eueriche in the hous
Saue he that Hermegile ſlow with his knife
This gētle kyng hath caught a great motife
Of this witnes, & thought he would enquire
Deper in this caſe, the trouth to lere.

Alas Cuſtance, thou haſt no champion
Ne fight canſt thou not, ſo wela waie
But he that ſtarfte for our redempcion
And bond Sathan, and yet lith there he laie
So be thy ſtrong champion this daie
For but if Chriſt on the miracle kithe
Without gilt thou ſhalt been ſlain al swithe.

Sle

She set her doun on knees, & thus she said
Immortall God, that sauedest Susanne
Fro fals blame, and thou mercifull maide
Marie I meane, doughter to sainct Anne Biforne whose childe angels syng Osanne
If I be giltiesse of this felonie
My socour be, or els shall I die.

Haue ye not seen sometyme a pale face
(Emong a prees) of hem that hath been lad
Toward his deth, wher as hem get no grace
And soche a colour in his face hath had
That mē might knowe his face ꝑ was bistad
Emonges all the faces in that rout
So stant Custance, and loketh her about

O Quenes liuyng in prosperite
Duchesses, and ye ladies euerichone
Haue some routhe on her aduersite
An Emperours doughter stant alone
She hath no wist, to whō to make her mone
O blood roiall, that stondeth in this drede
Ferre been thy frendes at thy greate nede.

This Alla kyng, hath soche compassioun
As gentle hart is full of pite
That fro his yen ran the water doun.
Now haskely doe fet a booke (quod he)
And if this knight woll swere, how that she
This woman slowe, yet woll we vs auise
Whom that we woll shall been our iustice

A Breton boke, written with Euangeles
Was set, and thereon he swore anone
She giltie was, and in the meane whiles
An honde hym smote on the necke bone
That doune he fill atones, as a stone
And bothe his yen brast out of his face
In sight of euery body in that place.

A voice was heard, in generall audience.
That saied: Thou hast disclandred giltles
The doughter of holy chirche, in hie presence
Thus hast thou doen, and yet I hold my pees
Of this marueile, agast was all the prees
As dismaide folke, thei stonden euerichone
For drede of wreche, saue Custance alone.

Great was the drede, & eke the repentance
Of hem that hadden wrought suspeccion
Upon this sely innocent Custance
And for this miracle, in conclusion
And by Custances mediacion
The kyng, and many an other in that place
Conuerted was, thanked be goddes grace.

This fals knight, was slain for his vntroth
By iudgement of Alla haskely
And yet Custance had of his death great roth
And after this, Jesus of his mercie
Made Alla wedden full solempnely
This holy maide, that is so bright and shene
And thus hath christ made Custance a quene

But who was wofull, if I should not lye
Of this weddyng, but Donegelde and no wo
The kynges mother, full of tyrannie
Her thought her cursed hart brast a two
She would not her soonne had doe so
Her thought a dispite, that he should take So straunge a creature vnto his make.

We list not of the chaffe ne of the stree
Make so long a tale, as of the corne
What should I tell of the realte
Of ꝑ mariage, or whiche course goth beforne
Who blowith in a trompe or in an horne
The fruict of euery tale is for to saie
Thei eaten and drinken, daunce and plaie.

Thei gon to bed, as it was skill and right
For though that wiues ben full holy thinges
Thei must take in pacience a night
Soche maner necessaries, as ben pleasynges
To folke that han wedded hem with ringes
And late a litell her holinesse aside
As for the tyme, it maie none other betide.

On her he gatte a man child anone
And to a bishop, and to his constable eke
He toke his wife to kepe, whan he is gon
To Scotlande ward, his fomen for to seke
Now faire Custāce, ꝑ is so humble and meke
So long is gon with child till that still She halt her chamber, abiding Christes will

The time is come, a man child she bare Mauricius at fontstone thei hym call
This constable doth forth come a messanger
And wrote to his king that cleped was Alla
How that this blisfull tidyng is befall
And other tidynges nedefull for to saie
He taketh the letter, & forth he goth his waie

This messanger to doen his auauntage
Unto the kynges mother rideth swithe
And saluieth her full faire in his language
Madame (quod he) ye maie be glad and blithe
And thanked God an hundred thousand sithe
My lady quene hath child, withouten dout
To ioie and blisse of all this reigne about.

The man of Lawes tale.

Lo here the letters sealed of this thing
That I mote beare, in all the haste I maie
Yeue ye woll ought vnto your sonne the king
I am your seruaunt bothe night and daie
Donegilde answerde, as at this tyme naie
But here I woll all night thou take thy rest
To morowe woll I saie thee what my lest.

This messanger dronke sadly both ale & wine
And stollen were his letters priuely
Out of his bore, while he slept as a swine
And counterfected was full subtelly
In other letter, wrough full synfully
Unto the kyng directe of this mattere
Fro his Constable, as ye shal after here.

The letter spake, the quene deliuered was
Of so horrible a fendlishe creature
That in the castell non so hardy was That any while durst therein endure
The mother was an Elfe by auenture
I come, by charmes or by sorcerie
And euery wight hateth her compante.

Wo was this king, whā he the letter had sein
But to no wight he told his sorowe sore
But with his owne hand he wrote agein
Welcome the sonde of Christ for euermore
To me, that am newe learned in his lore
Lorde, welcome be thy lust and thy plesance
My lust I put all in thyne ordinaunce.

Kepeth this child, all be it foule or faire
And eke my wife, vnto my home comming
Christ whan hym lest, maie send me an heire
More agreable than this, to my liking
This letter he sealed, priuely weeping
Whiche to the messanger was taken sone
And forth he goth there is no more to doen.

O messanger fulfilled of dronkennesse
Strong is thy breth, thy limmes faltren aie
And thou bewraiest all secretnesse
Thy mynde is lorne, thou iangliest as a Jaie
Thy face is tourned in a newe araie
There dronkennesse reigneth in any rout
There nis no counsaile hid withouten dout.

O Donegild, I me haue non English digne
Unto thy malice, and thy tirannie
And therefore to the fende I thee resigne
Let hym endite of thy traitrie
Fie mannishe fie: O naie by God I lie
Fie fendishe spirit for I dare wel tell
Though thou here walke, thy spirit is in hel.

This messanger cometh fro the king again
And at the kynges mothers hous he light
And she was of this messanger full fain
And pleased hym in all that euer she might
He dronke, and well his girdell vnder pight
He slepeth, and he snoreth in his gise
All night, till the Sonne gan arise.

Eft were his letters stollen euerichon
And counterfected letters in this wise
The king commaundeth his constable anon
Upon pain of hangyng on an hie iewise
That he ne should suffren in no wise
Custance, within his realme for to abide
Three daies, and quarter of a tide.

But in the same shippe, as he her fonde
Her and her yong sonne, and all her gere
He should croude, and put fro the londe
And charge her, that she neuer eft come there
O Custance, well maie thy ghost haue fere
And slepyng in thy dreame, been in penance
When Donegilde, cast all this ordinance.

This messanger on the morow whā he woke Unto the castell halt the nert waie
And to the Constable he the letter tooke
And whan that he this pitous letter seie
Full oft he saied (alas) and welawaie
Lord christ (quod he) how may this world endure
So full of synne is many a creature.

O mightie God, if that it be thy will Sin thou art rightful iudge, how may it be
That thou wolt suffer innocence to spill:
And wicked folke to reigne in prosperite
O, good Custance (alas) so wo is me
That I mote be thy turmentour, or els deie
On shames death, there nis non other weie.

Wepen bothe yong and old in that place
When that the kyng this cursed letter sent
And Custance with a dedly pale face
The fourth daie, toward her shippe she went
But natheless, she taketh in good entent
The wil of Christ, and kneling in that strōde
She saied lorde, aie welcome be thy sonde.

He that me kept fro that false blame
Whiles I was on the londe emonges you
He can me kepe fro harme, and eke fro shame
In the salt sea, although I se not how
As strong as euer he was, he is now
In hym trust I, and in his mother dere
That is to me, my saile and eke my stere.

Her

Her litel childe lay weping in her arme
And kneling petously, to him she saide
Peace litell sonne, I wol do the none harme
With that her kercher of her hed she braide
And ouer his litell eyen she it laide
And in her arme, she lulleth it full faste
And into heauen her eyen vp she caste.

Mother (q she) and mayde bright Mary
Sothe is, that through womans eggement
Mankinde was lore, & dampned aye to dye
For whiche thy childe was on crosse rent
Thy blisfull eyen sawe all his turment
Than is there no comparison betwene
Thy wo, and any wo that man may sustene

Thou se thy child yslaine before thyn eyen
And yet nowe liueth my litell childe parfay
Now lady bright, to whom al wofull cryen
Thou glory of womanheed, thou fayre may Thou hauen of refute, bright sterre of day
Rewe on my childe, of thy gentelnesse
That rewest on euery rufull in distresse

O litell childe (alas) what is thy gilte?
That neuer wroughtest sinne, as yet parde
Why wol thin harde father haue the spilte?
O mercy: dere constable (q she)
Is let my litle childe dwell here with the
And if thou darst not sauen him fro blame
So kisse him ones, in his fathers name

Therwith she loketh backwarde to ỹ londe
And said: farewell husbande routhlesse
And vp she rist, & walketh doune the strande
Towarde the shippe her foloweth al the prees
& euer she praieth her child to holde̅ his pees
And taketh her leue, and with an holy entent
She blesseth her, and into the shippe she went

Vitayled was the shippe, it is no drede
Habundantly, for her a full longe space
And other necessaries that should nede
She had inowe, hereid by goddes grace
For wind & wedder, almighty God purchace
And bring her home, I can no better say
But in the see, she driueth forth her way

Alla the king cometh home sone after this Unto his castell, of whiche I tolde
And asketh were his wife and his childe is
The constable gan about his hert to colde
And playnly al the maner him tolde
As ye han herde, I can tell it no better
And shewed the king his seale and his letter

And said: lorde as ye commaunded me
Upon paine of death, so haue I done certayn
This messanger turmented was, till he Must beknowen, and tell plat and playn
Fro night to night, in what place he had layn
And thus by witte subtell enquiring (spring
Ymagined was, by whome this harme gan

The hand was knowen, & the letter wrote
And all the venim of this cursed dede
But in what wise, certainely I note
The effecte is this, that Alla out of drede
His mother slow, that may men plainly rede
For that she traytour was to her alegaunce
Thus endeth olde Donegilde, w mischaunce

The sorow that this Alla night and day
Maketh for his childe, and for his wife also
There is no tonge that it tel may
But nowe woll I to Custaunce go
That fleteth in the see, in paine and wo
Fyue yere and more, as liked Christes sonde
Or that her shippe approched vnto londe

Under an hethen castell, at the last
Of whiche the name in my text I not finde
Custaunce and eke her childe the see vp cast
Almighty god, that saueth al mankinde
Haue on Custaũce, & on her child some minde
That fallen is in hethen hond efte sone
In point to spill, as I shall tell you sone

Doun fro ỹ castel cometh ther many a wight
To gauren on this shippe, and on Custaunce
But shortly fro the castell on a night
The lordes steward god yeue him mischaũce
A theefe, that had renied our creaunce
Came into the shippe alone, & said he shoulde
Her lemman be, whether she would or nolde

Wo was the wrtiched woman tho bygon
Her child, and she cried pittously
But blisful Mary halpe her anon
For with her strogling, wel and mightily
The theefe fel ouer the borde, all sodaynly
And in the see he drenched for vengeaunce
And thus hath Christ vnwemmed kept custãce

O foule lust of luxure, lo thine ende
Nat onely that thou fointest mans minde
But verely, thou wolt his body shende
The ende of thy werke, or of thy lustes blind
Is cõplaining: how many one may men find
That not for werke somtime, but for thẽtent
To don this sinne, bene either slaine or shent

How maie this weke woman haue ꝑ strēgth
Her to defende againſt this renegate?
O Golias, vnmeaſurable of length
How might Dauid make thee ſo mate?
So yonge, and of armure ſo deſolate
How durſt he looke on thy dredfull face?
Well maie men ſeen, it is but Goddes grace.

Who yaue Judith courage or hardinelle
To ſlean hym Holofernes in his tent
And to deliuer out of wretchednelle
The people of God? I ſaie, for this entent
That right as God, ſpirit and vigore ſent
To hem, and ſaued hem out of miſchance
So ſent he might and vigor to Cuſtance.

Forth goth her ſhip throughꝰ narow mouth
Of Subalter and ſept, ſletyng aie
Somtyme weſte, & ſomtime North & South
And ſometyme Eaſt, full many a werie daie
Till Chriſtes mother, ibleſſed be ſhe aie
Hath ſhapen, through her endleſſe goodneſſe.
To make an ende of all her heuineſſe.

Explicit ſecunda pars, & ſequitur pars tertia.

NOw let vs ſtint of Cuſtãce but a throwe
And ſpeake we of the Romaine Emperour
That out of Surrey hath by letters knowe
The ſlaughter of Chriſten folke, and diſhonour
Doen to his doughter, by a falſe traitour
I meane the curſed wicked Soudonneſſe
That at the feaſt, let ſlean bothe more & leſſe.

For which this Emperour hath ſent anon
His ſenatour, with roiall ordinaunce
And other lordes, God wote many one
On Surreiens to doen hie vengeaunce
Thei brẽnen, ſlean, & bringen hē to miſchãce
Full many a daie: but ſhortly this is the ende
Homward to Rome, thei ſhapen hem to wẽd.

This ſenatour repaireth with victorie
To Rome ward, ſailyng full roially
And met the ſhip driuyng, as faith the ſtorie
In whiche Cuſtance, ſat full petouſly
Nothyng knewe he what ſhe was, ne why
She was in ſoche araie, ne ſhe nolde ſeie
Of her eſtate, though ſhe ſhould deie.

He bringeth her to Rome, and to his wife
He yaue her, and her yonge ſonne alſo
And with the ſenatour ſhe ladde her life
Thus can our lady bring out of wo
Wofull Cuſtaunce, and many an other mo.
And longe time dwelled ſhe in that place
In holy werkes euer, as was her grace.

The ſenatours wife her aunte was
But for al that, ſhe knew her neuer the more
I will no lenger tary in this caas
But to king Alla, the whiche I ſpake of yore
That for his wife wepeth, and liketh ſore
I wol retourne, and let I will Cuſtaunce
Under the ſenatours gouernaunce.

King Alla, which ꝑ had his mother ſlayn
Upon a day fell in ſuche repentaunce
That if I ſhortly tellen al ſhal, and playn
To Rome he cometh, to receiue his penaunce
And putten him in the popes ordinaunce
In hye & in lowe, and Jeſu Chriſt be ſought
Forgeue his wicked werkes, that he wrought

The fame anon through Rome town is borne
How Alla king, ſhal come on pilgrimage
By herbegers that wenten him beforn
For whiche the ſenatour, as was vſage
Rode him againe, and many of his linage
As well to ſhewen his hye magnificence
As to done any king reuerence

Great chere doth this noble ſenatour
To king Alla, and he to him alſo
Eueriche of hem doth other great honour
And ſo befell, that on a day or two
This ſenatour is to king Alla go
To feſte, and ſhortly if I ſhall not lye
Cuſtaunces ſonne went in his companye

Sum mã wold ſayn, at ꝑ requeſt of cuſtãce
This ſenatour had ladde this childe to feſt
I may not tellen euery circumſtaunce
Be as be may, there was he at leſt
But ſoth it is, right at his mothers heſt
Byfore Alla, during the meate ſpace
The childe ſtode, loking in the kinges face.

This Alla kig, hath of this child gret wõder
And to the ſenatour he ſaid anon
Whoſe is ꝑ fayre child, that ſtondeth yonder?
I not (ꝙ he) by god and by ſainte John
A mother he hath, but father hath he non
That I of wote, but ſhortly in a ſtound
He tolde Alla, how the childe was found.

But

But God wote (q the Senatour also)
So vertuous a liuer in my life
Ne sawe I neuer, as he, ne heard of mo
Of worldly woman, maiden, ne of wife
I dare well saie, she had leuer a knife
Through her brest, than been a womā wicke
There is no man couth bring her to the prick

Now was the child as like Custance
As possible is, a creature for to be
This Illa hath the face in remembraunce Of dame Custance, and theron mused he yeue that the childes mother were aught he
That is his wife, and priuely he light
And spedde hym fro the table, that he might.

Parfai he thought, þ satome is in min hed
I ought deme of skilfull iudgement
That in the salt sea my wife is ded
And after ward he made his argument what wote I, if Christ hath hither sent My wife by sea: as well as he her sent
To my contry, fro thens that she was went.

And after anon, hom with the Senatour
Goth Illa, for to see this wonder chaunce
This Senatour doeth Illa great honour
And hastely he sent after Custaunce
But trusteth well, her lust not to daunce when she wiste wherefore was that sonde Unneth vpon her feete might she stonde.

when Illa sawe his wife faire he her gret
And wept, that it was routh to for see
For at the first loohe he on her set
He knewe well verely, that it was she
And for sorowe, as dombe stant as a tree
So was her hart shet in distresse when she remembred his vnkindnesse.

Twise she soumed in his owne sight
He wepeth and hem excuseth pitously
Now God (q he) and his hallowes bright
So wisly on my soule haue mercie
That of your harme, as giltelesse am I
As is Mauris my sonne, so like your face
Els the fende me fetche out of this place.

Lōg was the sobbyng, and the bitter pain
Or that her wofull hart might cease
Great was the pite to heare hem complain
Through which plaintes gā her wo encrese
I praie you all my labour to release
I maie not tell her wo, till to morow
I am so werie to speake of her sorow.

But finally, whan the sothe is wist
That Illa giltlesse was of her wo
I trowe an hundred tymes been thei kist
And sothe a blesse is there betwirt hem two
That saue the ioie, that lasteth euermo
There is no like, that any creature
Hath sein or shal, while the world maie dure

Tho praied she her husbonde mekely
In releasyng of her pitous paine
That he would praie her father specially
That of his Maiestie he would encline
To vouchsafe some daie with hym to dine
She praied hym eke, he should be no waie
Unto her father no worde of her to saie.

Sum men would saie, þ the child Maurice
Doeth this message vntill this Emperour
But as I gesse, Illa was not so nice
To hym that was of so soueraigne honour
As he that is of christen folke the flour
Sent any child, but it is bette to deme
He went hymself, and so it maie well seme.

This Emperour graunted gentelly
To come to diner, as he hym besought
That all was redy he loked besily
Upon this child, & on his doughter thought Illa goeth to his inne, and as he him ought Arraied for this feast in euery wise
As ferforth as his connyng maie suffice

The morow came, and Illa gan him dresse
And eke his wife, the Emperour for to mete
And forth thei ride in ioie and in gladnesse
And whan she sawe her father in the strete
She light doune and falleth him to fete
Father (q she) your yong child Custance
Is now full clene out of your remembrance.

I am your doughter Custance (q she)
That whilom ye han sent into Surrie
It am I father, that in the salt see was put alone, and dampned for to die
Now good father I you mercie crie
Sende me no more into Heathennesse
But thanken my lorde here of his kindnesse.

who can the pitous ioie tellen all
Betwirt hem three? sin thei been thus imette
But of my tale make an ende I shall
The daie goeth fast, I woll no lenger lette
This glad folke to dinner been sette
In ioie and blisse, at meate I let hem dwell
A thousande folde well more than I can tell

This

The Squiers tale.

This child Mauris was sithen Emperour
Made by the Pope, and liued christenly
To Christes churche he did greate honour
But I lette all this storie passen by
Of Custance is my tale specially
In old Romain gestes men maie finde
Mauris life, I beare it not in mynde.

This king Illa, when his tyme seie
With this Custance, his holy wife so swete
To Englonde been thei come the right weie
Where as thei liue in ioie and in quiete
But litell while it lasteth I you hete
Ioie of this worlde, for tyme woll not abide Fro daie to night, it chaungeth as the tide.

Who liued euer in soche delite a daie
That he ne meued either in conscience
Or ire, or talent of some kin affraie
Enuie or pride, or passion, or offence:
I ne saie, but for this ende, and this sentence
That litell while in ioie or in plesance
Lasteth the blisse of Illa with Custance.

For death, that taketh of hie & low his rēte
When passed was a yere, euin as I gesse
Out of this worlde kyng Illa hente
For whō Custance hath full greate heuinesse
Now let vs praien God his soule blesse
And dame Custance, finally to saie
Toward the toune of Rome goth her waie.

To Rome is come this holy creature
And findeth her father hole and sounde
Now is she shaped all her auenture
And when that she her father hath ifounde
Doune on her knees she goeth to ground
Weping for tenderneslle in her hart blithe
She herieth God, an hundred thousand sithe

In vertue and holy almesdede
Thei liuen all, and neuer a sonder wende
Till death departen hem, this life thei lede
And fareth now well, my tale is at an ende
Now Jesu Christ, ỹ of his might maie sende
Ioie after wo, gouerne vs in his grace
And kepe vs all, that been in this place.

Thus endeth the man of Lawes Tale.

Here followeth the Squiers Prologue.

Our hoste on his stirops stoode anon
And said: good men herkeneth euerichon
This was a thriftie tale for the nones
Sir parisshe prieste (q he) for Goddes bones
Tell vs a tale, as was thy forward yore
I see well that ye learned men in lore
Can moche good, by Goddes dignite.
The Parson him answerde, benedicite
What eileth the man, so sinfully to swere:
Our hoste answerd, O Jenkin, be ye there
Now good men (q our hoste) herkeneth to me
I smell a loller in the winde (q he)
Abideth for Goddes digne passion
For we shall haue a predicacion
This loller here, woll preachen vs somwhat.
Naie by my fathers soule, that shall he nat
Saied the Squier, here shall he nat preache
Here shall he no Gospell Glose ne teache
We leueth all in the great God (q he)
He would sowen some difficulte
Or sprng cockell in our cleane corne
And therefore hoste, I warne thee beforne
My ioly bodie, shall a tale tell
And I shall ringen you so merie a bell
That I shall waken all this companie
But it shall not been of Philosophie
Ne Philisse, ne termes queinte of lawe
There is but litell Latin in my mawe

Here endeth the Squiers Prologue, and here after followeth his tale.

At Sarra, in the londe of Tartarie
There dwelt a kyng that warred Surrete
Throughout which ther died many a doughtie man
This noble king was called Cambuscan
Whiche in his tyme was of so great renoun
That there nas no where, in no region
So excellent a lorde in all thyng
Hym lacked nought, that longeth to a kyng
As of the secte of whiche he was borne
He kept his laie to whiche he was sworne
And thereto he was hardie, wise, and riche
And pitous and iuste alwaie iliche
True of his worde, benigne and honourable
Of his corage, as any centre stable
Yong, freshe, and strong, in armes desirous

Is any bacheler of all his hous
I faire persone he was, and fortunate
And kept alwaie so roiall astate
That there nas no where soche an other mā.
This noble king, this Tartre, this Cābuscā
Had two soonnes by Eltheta his wife
Of whiche the eldest hight Algarsife
That other was cleped Camballo.
A doughter had this worthie kyng also
That yongest was, and hight Canace
But for to tell you all her beaute
It lithe not in my tong, ne in my connyng
I dare not vndertake so hie a thyng
Myn Englische ehe is vnsufficient
It must been a Rethor ercellent
That couth his colours, longyng for the art
If he shoud discriue here euery part
I am none soche, I mote speake as I can
And so bifell, that this Cambuscan
Hath twentie winter borne his diademe
As he was wont, fro yere to yere I deme
He let the feast of his natiuite
Doen crien, throughout Satra his cite
The last Idus of Marche, after the yere.
Phebus the Sunne, full iolie was & clere
For he was nie his exaltacion
In Marces face, and in his mancion
In Aries, the collerike, the hote signe
Full lustie was the weather and benigne
For which the foules, ayenst the sunne shene what for the season, and the yong grene
Full loude song her affeccions
Hem semed haue getten hem proteccions
Ayen the swerde of winter kene and cold.
This Cābuscan, of which I haue you told
In roiall vestementes, sitte on his deis
With diademe, full hie in his paleis
And helde his feast so roiall and so riche
That in this worlde nas there non it liche
Of whiche, if I shall tell of all the arraie
Than would it occupie a Sommers daie
And eke it nedeth not to deuise
At euery course, the order of her seruice
I woll not tell of her straunge sewes
Ne of her Swannes, ne of her Heronsewes
Eke in that londe, as tellen knightes old
There is some meate, that is full dainte hold
That in this londe men retche of it but small
There is no man that maie reporten all.
I will not tarie you, for it is prime
And for it is no fruict, but losse of tyme
Unto my first purpose I woll haue recourse.
And so bifell that after the third course
While that this king sitte thus in his noblai
Herkening his minstralles her thinges plaie
Biforne hym at his borde deliciously
In at the hale doore all sodainly
There came a knight on a stede of braste
And in his honde a brode mirrour of glasse
Upon his thombe he had of golde a tyng
And by his side a naked swerde hongyng
And vp he rideth to the hie borde
In all the halle ne was there spoke a worde
For marueile of the knight, hym to behold
Full besily thei waiten yong and old
This straunge knight þ come thus sodenly
All armed saue his hedde, full roially
Salued kyng and quene, and lordes all
By order, as thei sitten in the hall
With so hie reuerence and obeisaunce
As well in speche as in countenaunce
That Gawaine with his old curtesie
Though he come ayen out of fairie
Ne could hym not amende of no worde
And after this, before the hie borde
He with a manly voice saied his message
After the forme vsed in his languge
Without vice of sillable or of letter
And for his tale should seme the better
Accordant to his wordes was his chere
As teacheth art of speache hem that it lere
All be that I can not sowne his stile
Ne I ne can not climben so hie a stile yet saie I thus as to my comen entent
Thus moche amounteth all that euer he ment
If it so be, that I haue it in my mynde
He saied: The kyng of Araby and of Inde
My liege lorde, on this solempne daie
Salueth you, as he best can and maie
And sendeth you in honour of your feest
By me that am redy at your heest
This stede of braste that easily and well
Can in the space of a daie naturell
This is to saie, in four and twentie houres
Where so ye list, in drought or in shoures
Beren your bodie into euery place
Into whiche your hart willeth to pace
Without weme of you, through foull or faire
Or if ye liste to fleen in the eire
As doeth an Egle, whan hym list to sore
This same stede shall beare you euermore
Withouten harme, till you ben there you list
Though that ye slepen on his backe and rest
And turne again with the writhyng of a pin
He that it wrought could full many a gin
He waited full many a constellacion
Or he had doen this operacion
And knewe full many a seale & many a bond.
This mirrour eke þ I haue in myn hond
Hath soche a might, that men maie in it se

When

Whan there shall fallen any aduersitee
Unto your reigne, or to your self also
And openly see, who is your friend and foe
And ouer all this, if any ladie bright
Hath set her hart on any maner wight
If he be false, she shall the treason see
His newe loue, and all his subteltee
So openly, that there shall nothyng hide.
Wherfore again this lustie Sommer tide
This mirrour and this ring, that ye maie se
He hath sent to my ladie Canace
Your excellent doughter that is here.
The vertue of this ring, if ye woll here
Is this, that if she lift it for to were Upon her thombe, or in her purse it bere
There is no foule, that fleeth vnder heuen
That she ne shall vnderstonde his steuen
And knowe his meanyng openly and plain
And answere hym in his langage again
And euery gralle that groweth vpon rote
She shal well knowe, & whom it wol do bote
All be his woundes neuer so depe and wide.
This naked swerde, ꝑ hangeth by my side
Soche vertue hath, ꝑ what man so ye smite
Throughout his armure it woll kerue & bite were it as thicke as a braunched oke
And what man that is wounded w the stroke
Shall neuer be hole, till that you list of grace
To stroken him with the platte in thilk place
There he is hurt, this is as moche to sain
Ye mote with the platte swerde again
Stroken him in the wound, and it wol close
This is very sothe withouten glose
It faileth not, whiles it is in your hold.
And whā this knizt hath thus his tale told
He rideth out of the halle, and doun he light
His stede, which that shone as Sonne bright
Stante in the court still as any stone
The knight is in to chamber ladde anone
He is vnarmed, and to the meate isette
And all that harneis biforne hym sette
This is to saine, the swerd & eke the mirrour
All borne was into the hye tour with certain officers ordeined therefore
And to Canace the ring is bore
Solempnely, there she sate at the table
But sikerly without any fable
The horse of brasse, that maie not be remeued
It stant, as it were to the ground igliewed
There maie no man out of the place it driue
For none engine, or windlas, or polliue
And cause why, for thei can not the craft
And therefore in the place thei han it laft
Till ꝑ the knight hath taught hem ꝑ manere
To voiden hem, as ye shall after here.

Great was ꝑ prees, that swarmed to & fro
To gauren on the hors, that stonden so
For it so hye was, and so brode and long
So well proporcioned for to been strong
Right as it were a stede of Lumbardie
Therwith so horsly, and so quicke of eye
As it a gentle courser of Poile were
For certes, fro his taile to his ere Nature ne art coud hym not amende
In no degree, as all the people wende
But euermore her moste wonder was How that he couth gon, and was of bras
It was of fairie, as the people semed
Diuers folke diuersly thei demed
As many heddes, as many wittes there been Thei murmure, as doeth a swarme of Been
And maden shilles after her fantasies
Reherlyng of the old Poetries
And saied it was like the Pegase
The hors that had winges for to flee
Or els it was the Grekes hors Sinon
That brought Troie to destruccion
As men in this old bookes rede.
Myn hart (ꝑ one) is euermore in drede
I trowe some men of armes been therein
That shapen hem this citee for to win
It wer right good, ꝑ soche thinges wer know
And other rowned to his fela we lowe
And saied he lied, for it is rather like
An apparence made by some Magike
As Jogglours plaien at these feastes greate
Of sodry thoughtes, thus thei iangle & treat
As leude people demeth comenly
Of thynges that been made more subtelly
Than thei can in her leudnesse comprehende
Thei demen gladly to the badder ende
And some of hem wondren on the mirrour
That borne was vp to the maister tour
How men might in it soche thynges se.
An other answerd, certes it might well be Naturally by compositions
Of Angels and of slie reflections
And saiden, in Rome was soche on Thei speken of Alocen and Vitillion
And Aristote, that writeth in her lines
Of queint mirrours, and of prospectiues
As knowen thei that han her bookes heard.
And other folke han wondred on ꝑ sweard
That would perce throughout euery thyng
And fell in speche of Telophus the kyng
And of Achilles for his queinte spere
For he couth with it heale and dere
Right in soche wise as mē maie w the swerd
Of which right now ye haue your selue herd
Thei speken of sondrie hardyng of metall

And

And speken of medici..s eke withal
And how, and whan it should hardned be which is vnknowe algate to me.
Tho speke they of Canaces ring
And sayden al, that suche a wonder thing
Of crafte of ringes herde they neuer non Saue that Moses, and king Salomon
Had a name of conning of suche arte
Thus saien the people, & drawen hem aparte
But natheless, some sayden that it was wonder to maken of lerne aschen, glas
And yet is glas not like aschen of lerne
But for they han knowen it so lerne
Therfore thei lesen her iangling & her wōder
As sore wondren some on cause of thunder
On ebbe and flud, on gossomer, and on miste
And on all thing, til the cause is wiste.
Thus iangleu they, and demen and deuise
Till that the king gan fro his borde arise.
Phebus hath lefte the angle meridionall
And yet ascending was the beest royall
The gentle Lion with his Aldrian whan that this Tartre king Cambuscan
Rose from his bord, there as he sate full hye
Before him goth the loude minstralcye
Till he came to his chambre of paramentes
There as they sownen diuers instrumentes
That is like an heuen for to here.
Now dauncen lusty venus children dere
For in the fisshe her lady sat full hye
And loketh on hem with a frendly eye.
This noble king is set vpon his trone
This straunge knight is set to him ful sone
And in the daunce he goeth with Canace
Here is the reuel and the iolyte
That is not able a dull man to deuise
He must han know loue and her seruise
And ben a freshliche man, as freshe as May That should you deuise suche array.
who couthe tellen you ye forme of daunces
So vncouth, and so freshe countenances:
Suche subtil lokinges, and dissimulinges
For drede of ialouse mens apperceiuinges
No man but Launcelot, and he is deed
Therfore I passe ouer al this lustyheed
I say no more, but in this iolynesse
I lete hem, til men to supper dresse.
The stewarde biddeth spices for to hye
And eke the wine, in all this melodye
The vshers and the squiers ben ygone
The spices and the wine is comen anone
They eten & drōken, & whan this had an ende
Vnto the temple, as reason was, they wende
The seruice is done, they soupen all by day
What nedeth it to rehersen her array:
Eche man wot wel, that at a kinges feest
Is plenty, to the most and to the leest
And deintes mo, than ben in my knowing
And after supper goeth this noble king
To sen this horse of brasse, with all his route
Of lordes and of ladies him aboute
Such wondring ther was on this hors of bras
That sithen the great siege of Troye was There as men wondred on an horse also Ne was there such a wondring, as was tho
But finally, the king asketh the knight
The vertue of this horse and the might
And praid him to tellen of his gouernaunce.
The horse anon gan to trippe and daunce whan ỹ this knight laide hond on his raine
And said, sir there is no more to saine
But whan you liste to riden any where Ye mote trill a pyn, stante in his ere whiche I shal tel you bytwene vs two Ye mote nempne him to what place also
Or to what countre you list to ride
And whan ye come there you list abide Bid him discende, and trille another pyn
For therin lieth the effect of all the gyn
And he wol downe discende, & don your will
And in that place he wol abide still Though al ỹ world had the contrary sworne
He shal not thens be ythrowe ne yborne
Or if you list bid him thens gon
Tryl this pyn, and he wol vanishe anon
Out of the sight of euery maner wight
And come ayen, be it day or night whan that you list to clepen him againe
In such a gyse, as I shall to you saine
Bytwirt you and me, and that ful sone
Ride whā you list ther nys no more to done
Enfourmed whan ỹ king was of ỹ knight
And hath conceiued in his wit aright
The maner and the forme of al this thing
Ful glad and ful blith, the noble king
Repayreth to his reuel, as byfore
The bridel is in the toure yborne
And kept among his iewels lefe and dere
The horse vanished, I not in what maner
Out of her sight, ye get no more of me
But thus I lete in luste and iolyte
This Cambiscan, his lordes festing
Till well nye the day began to spring.

Explicit prima pars:

secunda.

The Squiers tale.

The noyce of digestion, the slepe
Gan on hem winke, and bad hem take kepe
That mirthe, drinke, and labour wol haue reste
And with a galping mouth hem al he keste
And said, it was time to lye adoun
For blod was in his dominacioun Cherisheth blod, natures frende (q he)
They thanken him galping, by two by thre
And euery wight gan drawen him to his rest
As slepe hem bade, they toke it for the best.
Her dremes shul not now ben itolde for me
Ful were her heedes of fumositie
That causeth dreames, of whiche there is no
They slepen, til it was prime large (charge
The most part, but it were Canace
She was ful mesurable, as women be
For of her father had she take her leue
To gon to rest, sone after it was eue
Her list not appalled for to be
Nor on the morow, vnrestliche for to se
And slept her first slepe, and awoke
For suche a ioy she in her hert toke
Both of her queynt ringe, and of her mirrour
That twenty times she chaunged her colour
And in her slepe, right for impression
Of her mirrour, she had a vision wherfore, or the sonne vp gan glide
She cleped her maistresses her beside
And said, her list for to arise.
These olde women, that ben gladly wise
As is her maistres, answered her anon
And said: madame, whider woll ye gon
Thus erly? for folke ben all in rest.
I woll (q she arise) for me liste
No lenger for to slepe, but walken aboute.
Her maistresse cleped women a great route
And vp they rise, wel ten or twelue
Vp riseth freshe Canace her selue
As ioly and bright, as the yonge sunne
That in the Ram is four degrees vp ronne
No higher was he, whan she redy was
And forth she walketh an easie paas
Arrayed after the lusty season sote
Lightly for to playen, and to walken on fote
Nought but fiue or sixe of her meyne
And in a trenche, fer in the parke goeth she.
The vapour, which that fro the erthe glode
Maketh the sunne to seme ruddy and brode
But natheles, it was so fayre a sight
That it made al her hertes for to light what for the season, and for the morowning
And for the foules that she herde sing
For right anon, she wiste what they ment
Right by her songe, and knew al her entent.
The knot why, that euery tale is tolde
If it be taried til lust be colde
Of hem that han it herkened after yore
The sauour passeth, euer lenger the more
For fulsomnes of prolixite
And by the same reason thinketh me
I should vnto the same knot condiscende
And make of her walking sone an ende.
Amidde a tre, for drye as white as chalke
As Canace was playing in her walke
There sat a falcon ouer her heed full hye
That with a pitous voyce gan to crye
That all the wodde resouned of her cry
And beaten had her selfe so pitously with both her winges, til the reed blode
Ran endlonge the tre, there as she stode
And euer in one, she cried and shright
And with her beke, her selfen so she pight
That there nas Tigre, ne cruel beste
That dwelleth in wodde, either in forreste
That nolde han wepe, if that thei wepe coude
For sorow of her, she shright alway so loude
For there was neuer yet man on liue
If that he couthe a faucon wel discriue
That herde of such another of fayrenesse
As wel of plumage, as of gentilnesse
Of shappe, of all that might irekened be A faucon peregryn than semed she
Of frende londe, and euermore as she stoode
She swouded now & now, for lacke of blode
Til welny is she fall fro the tree.
This fayre kinges doughter, this Canace
That on her finger bare the queinte ring
Thrugh which she vnderstode wel euery thig
That any foule may in his leden sayne
And coude answere him in his leden again
Hath vnderstande, what this faucon seyde
And welny for routhe almost she deyde
And to the tree she goeth ful hastely
And on this faucon ful pitously
And helde her lappe abrode, for well she wiste
The faucon must fallen from the twiste whan she swouned next, for lacke of blood
A longe while to waiten there she stoode
Til at the last she spake in this manere vnto the hauke, as ye shalen after here.
what is the cause, if it be for to tell
That ye ben in this furial paine of hell?
Quod Canace, vnto this hauke aboue
Is this for sorow of death, or losse of loue?
For as I trowe, these ben causes two
That causen most a gentil hert wo
Of other harme it needeth not to spehe

For

For ye vpon your selfe you wreke
Which proueth wel, that either ire or drede
Mote ben enchelon of your cruel dede
Syn that I se none other wight you chace
For the loue of god, so doth your selfe grace
Or what may be your helpe, for west or est
Ne sawe I neuer er now, no birde ne beest
That farde with him selue so pitously
Ye slee me with your sorow verily
I haue of you so great compassioun
For goddes loue come fro the tre adoun
And as I am a kinges doughter trewe
If that I verely the causes knewe
Of your disease, if it lay in my might
I would amende it, certes or it be night
As wisely helpe me great god of kinde
And herbes shall I right ynowe finde
To hele with your hurtes hastely.

Tho shright this faucon yet more spitously
Than euer she did, and fel to grounde anone
And lieth a swoune deed as is a stone
Till Canace hath in her lappe itake
Unto the time she gan of swoune awake
And after that she of swoune gan abreyde
Right in her haukes leden thus she seyde
That pite renneth soone in gentyl hert
(Feling his semilitude in paines smert)
As proued al day, as men may se
As wel by werke as by authorite
For gentle hert kepeth gentilnesse
I se wel, that ye haue of my distresse
Compassion, my faire Canace
Of very womanly benignite
That nature in your principles hath sette
But for non hope for to fare the bette
But for to obey vnto your hert free
And for to make other be ware by me
As by the whelpe chastised is the Lion
Right for that cause, and for that conclusion
While that I haue a leyser and a space
Myne harme I wol confessen or I pace
And euer while that one her sorowe tolde
That other wepte, as she to water wolde
Til that the faucon badde her to be still
And with a sike, thus she said her till.

There I was bredde, alas that ilke day
And fostred in a roche of marble gray
So tenderly, that nothing eyleth me
I ne wist what was aduersite
Til I coude flie, ful hye vnder the skie
There dwelt a Tercelet me fast by
That semed wel of al gentilnesse
All were he ful of trayson and of falsnesse
It was so wrapped vnder humble chere
And vnder hewe of trouth, and in such manere
Vnder plesaunce, and vnder busy payn
That no wight coud haue wende he coud fayn
So depe in greyne he died his colours
Right as a serpent hideth him vnder flours
Till he may se his time for to bite
Right so, this god of loues ipocrite
Doth so his serymones and obeysaunce
With his dissimuling, and faire assemblaunce
That souneth vnto gentilnesse of loue
As in a tombe is all the faire aboue
And vnder the cors, suche as ye wote
Suche was this ipocrite colde and hote
And in this wise he serued his entent
That saue the fende, non wist what he ment
Til he so long had weped and complained
And many a yere his seruice to me yfained
Til that myn hert, to pitous and to nice
All innocent of his cruel malice
For ferde of his deth, as thought me
Upon his othes and his surete
Graunted him loue, vpon this condition
That euermore mine honour and my renoun
Were saued, bothe preuy and apert
This is to say, that after his desert
I yaue him al min hert and al my thought
God wote, and in other wise nought
And toke his hert in chaunge of myn for aye
But soth he is said, gone sithen many a day
I trewe wight and a theef thinketh not one
And whan he sawe the thing so fer igone
That I graunted him fully my loue
In suche a gise, as I haue said aboue
And yeuen him my true herte as free
As he swore he yaf his hert to me
Anon this tigre, full of doublenesse
Fyl on his knees with so deuout humblesse
With hie reuerence, and eke by his chere
So like a gentill louer, as of manere
So rauished, as it semed for ioye.
That neuer Troylus ne Paris of Troy
Jason certes, ne non other man
Sin Lameth was, that alderfirst began
To louen two, as writen folke before
Ne neuer sithen Adam was borne
Ne couthe man by twenty thousande parte
Counterfete the sophimes of his arte
Ne were worthy to vnbocle his galoche
Ther doublenesse or fayning should approche
Ne so couth thanke a wight, as he did me
His maner was an heuen for to se
Til any woman, were she neuer so wise
So paynteth he his chere point deuise
As wel his wordes, as his countenaunce
And I so loued him for his obeysaunce
And for the trouthe that I demed in his here

That if so were that any thing him smert
Al were it neuer so lite, and I it wist
We thought I felt deth at my hert twist
And shortly, so ferforth this thing went
That my will was his willes instrument
That is to saye, my will obeied his will
In all thing, as ferre as reason fill
Keping the boundes of my worship euer
Ne neuer had I thing so lefe ne so leuer
As him god wote, ne neuer shal no mo
This last lenger then a yere or two
That I supposed of him nothing but good.
But finally, thus at the last it stode
That fortune would that he must twin Out of that place, which that I was in Where me was wo, it is no question
I can not make of it discription
For o thing dare I tell boldely
I knowe what the paine of deth is therby
Such harm I felte, that he ne might beleue
So on a day of me he toke his leue
So sorowfully eke, that I wende verely
That he had felte as moche harme as I
Whan that I herd him speke, and sawe his hewe
But natheles, I thought he was so trewe
And eke that he repaire should againe
Within a litteli while sothe to saine
And reason wold eke, that he must go
For his honour, as ofte happeth so
That I made vertue of necessite
And toke it well, sithe it must nedes be
As I best might, I hidde fro him my sorow
And toke him by the hond, S. John to borow
And said thus: lo I am yours all Beth suche as I haue ben to you and shall
What he answerd, it nedeth not reherce
Who can sayn bet than he, who can do werse Whan he hath al wel isaid, than hath he don Therfore behoueth him a longe spone
That shal eten w a fende, thus herde I say
So at the last he mote forth his way
And forth he fleeth til he come there him lest Whan it come him to purpose for to rest
I trowe he had thilke tert in minde
That al thing repairing to his kinde
Gladeth hem selue, thus sain men as I gesse
Men louen of kinde newfanglenesse
As briddes don, that men in cages fede
For though p night and day take of hem hede
And strawe her cage faire and softe as silke
And giue hem sugre, hony, breed and milke
Yet right anon as his doore is vp
He with his fete wold sporne adoun his cup
And to the wood he wold, and wormes eate
So newfangle ben they of her meate
And louen nouelries of proper kinde
No gentilnesse of blode may hem binde
So ferde this Tercelet, alas the day
Tho he were gentel borne, freshe and gay
And goodly for to se, and humble and free
He saw vpon a time a kite flee
And sodainly he loued this kite so
That al his loue is clene fro me go
And hath his trouth falsed in this wise
Thus hath the kite my loue in her seruice
And I am lorne without remedy.
And with p worde this faucon gan to cry
And swouned ofte in Canaces barme
Gret was the sorow for that haukes harme
That Canace, and al her women made
They nist how they might her faucon glade
But Canace home bereth here in her lappe
And softely in plaisters gan her wrappe
There as she w her beche had hurt her selue
Now can not Canace but herbes delue
Out of the grounde and make salues newe
Of herbes precious and fine of hewe
To helen with the hauke fro day to night
She doeth her besinesse, and all her might
And by her beddes heed she made a mewe
And couered it with veluettes blewe
In signe of trouthe, that is in women sene
And al without p Mewe is painted grene
In whiche were painted al these false foules
As ben these tidefes, tercelettes, and owles Right for dispite were painted hem beside Pyes on hem for to cry and chyde.
This leue I Canace her hauke keping
I wol no more, as now speke of her ringe
Til it come efte to purpos for to sain
How that this faucon gate her loue again
Repentaunt, as the story telleth vs
By mediation of Camballus
The kinges sonne, of whiche I of tolde
But henforthe I wol my proces holde
To speken of auentures, and of batails
That yet was neuer herd of so gret marueils
First wol I tel you of Cambuscan
That in his time many a cite wan
Howe that he wan Theodora to his wife
And after wol I speake of Algarsife
For whom full oft in great perill he was Ne had he ben holpen by the horse of bras
And after woll I speake of Camballo
That fought in listes with the brethren two
For Canace, er that he might her win
And there I left, I woll agayn begin.

Explicit secunda pars,

Appollo

Appollo whirleth vp his chare so hie
Till that the god Mercurius house he flie.

¶ There can be founde no more of this forelaid tale, whiche hathe ben sought in diuers places.

¶ Here foloweth the wordes of the Marchaunte to the Squier, and the wordes of the Hoste to the Marchaunte.

In faith Squier thou haste the wel iquit
And gentely, I prayse well thy wit
Od the Marchaunt, considering thine youth.
So felingly thou spekest, I the alouth
Is to my dome, there is non that is here
Of eloquence, that shalbe thy pere yf ȳ thou liue, god geue thi right good chaūce
And in vertue sende the perseueraunce
For of thy speking I haue great deinte
I haue a sonne, and by the Trinite
I had leuer than twenty pounde worth londe (Though it now were fallen in my honde)
He were a man of suche discrecion
As that ye ben: fye on possession
But if a man be vertuous with all
I haue my sonne snibbed, and yet shall
For he to vertue listeth nat to entende
But for to play at dise, and to spende
And lese all that he hath, is his vsage
And he had leuer talke with a page
Than to commen with any gentill wight
Where he might lerne gentilnesse aright
Straw for your gentilnesse (ȳ our hoste)
What Marchant, pardy wel thou woste
That eche of you mote tellen at the lest
A tale or two, or breken your behest
That knowe I well (ȳ the Marchāt) certain
I pray you haue me nat in disdain
Though I to this man spekе a word or two Tell on thy tale withouten wordes mo
Gladly sir hoste (ȳ he) I woll obey
Unto your wil, now herkeneth what I sey
I wol you not contrary in no wise
As farre as my wittes may suffice
I pray to god that it may plesen you
Than wote I well, it is good inow.

¶ Thus endeth the wordes of the hoste and the Marchant, and here foloweth the Marchauntes prologue.

Wepinge and wailing, care and other sorowe
I haue ynowe, bothe euyn and eke a morowe
Od the Marchant, and so haue other mo
That wedded be, I trow that it be so
For well I wote it fareth so by me
I haue a wife, the worst that maie be
For though the fende coupled to her were
She wold him ouermatch I dare well swere
What should I reherse in speciall
Her high malice: she is a shrewe at all
Ther is a long and a large difference
Betwirte Griseldes great patience
And of my wife the passing cruelte
Were I vnbounde, also mote I the
I would neuer efte come in the snare
We wedded men liue in sorow and care
I saye who so woll, and he shal finde
That I say soth, by saint Thomas of Inde
As for the more parte, I say not all
God shelde that it should so befall
Ah good sir hoste, I haue wedded be
These monethes two, and more not parde
And yet I trowe he that all his life
Hath wedded be, though men him rife
In to the herte, ne couthe in no manere
Tell so muche sorowe, as I now here
Conde tell, of my wiues cursednesse
Now ȳ our hoste Marchāt so god the blesse
Syn ye ben so much knowe of that arte
Ful hertely I pray you tell vs parte:
Gladly ȳ he, but of myn owne sore
For sory hert I tell may no more.

¶ Here endeth the Marchaunte prologue, and here foloweth his tale.

Whilom there was dwelling in Lumbardy
A worthy knight, that borne was at Pauy
In whyche he lyued in grate prosperite
And sixty yere a wifeles man was he
And folowed aye his bodely delite
On women, there as was his appetite
As don these foles that ben seculeres
And when that he was past sixty yeres
Were it for holinesse or dotage
I can nat sain, but suche a great corage
Had this knight to ben a wedded man

That day and night he doth all that he can
To espy, where that he wedded might be Praiyng our lord to graunten him that he Mighten ones knowen of that blisful life
That betwirt an husbonde and his wife
And for to liuen vnder that holy bonde
With which god first man and woman bonde
Non other life (said he) is worthe a bean
For wedlocke is so esly and so clean
That in this worlde it is a paradise
Thus sayth this olde knight that is so wise.
And certainly, as sothe as god is king
To take a wife, it is a glorious thing
And namely when a man is olde and hore
Than is a wife the fruite of his tresore
Than should he take a yonge wife and a faire
On which he might engendren him an heire
And lede his life in ioy and in solace
Where as these bachelers singen alas
When that they finden any aduersite
In loue, which nis but childes vanite
And trewly it sitte well to be so
That bachelers han oft paine and wo
On brotell grounde they bilden brotelnesse
They find freelte, whan they wenē sekernesse
They liue but as birdes or beestes
In liberty, and vnder nice arestes
There as a wedded man in his estate
Liueth a life blessfully and ordinate
Under the yoke of mariage ybounde
Wel may his hert in ioye and blisse habounde
For who can be so burome as a wife?
Who is so trewe and eke so tentife
To kepe him sicke and hole, as is his make
For wel no wo she will him not forsake
She nis not wery him to loue and serue
Though that he lye bedrede till he sterue
And yet some clerkes sain, that it is nat so
Of which Theophrast is one of tho
What force though Theophrast list to lie
Ne take no wife (q he) for husbondrie
Is for to spare in housholde thy despence
A trewe seruaunt doeth more diligence
Thy good to kepe, than thin owne wife
For she wol claime halfe parte all her life
And if that thou be sicke, so god me saue
Thy very frendes or a trewe knaue
Wol kepe the better, thā she that waiteth aye
After thy good, and hath don many a daye
And if thou take a wife to the vntrewe
Full oft time it shall the sore rewe
This sentence, and an hundred sithes worse
Writeth this man there, god his bones curse
But take no kepe of suche vanite
Defieth Theophrast, and herkeneth me.

A wife is goddes yefte verely
All other maner yeftes hardely
As londes, rentes, pasture, or commune
Or mouables, all ben yeftes of fortune
That passen, as a shadow on a wall
But dred nat, if plainly spekē I shall
A wife wol last and in thin house endure
Wel lenger than thee list paraventure
Mariage is a full great sacrament
He which hath no wife I holde him shent
He liueth helples, and all desolate
I speke of folke, in seculer estate.
And herkeneth why, I say not this for noust
A woman is for mannes helpe ywrought
The hye God, when he had Adam maked
And saw him alone bely naked
God of his great goodnesse said than Lette vs maken an helpe to this man
Like to him selfe, and than he made Eue
Here may ye se, and hereby may ye preue
That a wife is mans helpe and comforte
His paradise terrestre and his disporte
So burome and so vertuous is she
They must nedes liue in vnite
One flesche they ben, a two soules as I gesse
Hat but one hart in wele and in distresse
A wife, ah saint Mary, benedicite
How might a man haue any aduersite
That hath a wife? certes I can nat say
The blisse that is betwirte hem twey
There may no tonge tellen or herte thinke
If he be pore, she helpeth him to swinke
She kepeth his good, wasteth neuer a dell
All that her husbonde lust, her liketh well
She sayth nat ones nay, when he sayth ye
Do this (saith he) a redy sir (saith she)
O blisful order of wedlocke precious
Thou arte so mery, and eke so vertuous
And so commended, and so approued eke
That every man that halt him worth a leke
Upon his bare knees ought all his life
Thanken god, that him hath sent a wife
Or pray to God him for to sende
A wife, to last vnto his liues ende
For than his life is sette in sekernesse
He may not be deceiued, as I gesse
So that he werche after his wiues rede
Than may he boldely bearen vp his hede
They ben so trewe and also wise
For which, if thou wilt werchen as the wise
Do alway so, as women wol the rede
Lo how that Jacob, as these clerkes rede
By good counsayle of his mother Rebecke
Bounde the kidde skin about his necke
For which his fathers benelon he wan

Lo

Lo Judith as the storie tell can
By wise counsaill Goddes people kept
And slue him Holofernes while he slept
And Abigail by counsaill how she Saued her husbonde Nabali, whan that he Should haue be slain. And loke Hester also By good counsaill deliuered out of wo
The people of God, & made him Mardochee
Of Assure enhaunsed for to be.
There nis nothing in gree superlatife
(As saieth Senec) aboue an humble wife
Suffre thy wiues tongue, as Caton bit
She shall cōmaunde, and thou shalt suffre it
And yet she woll obeie of curtesie
A wife is keper of thine husbondrie
Well maie the sicke man waile and wepe
There as there nis no wife the house to kepe
I warne thee, if wisely thou wilt werche
Loue thy wife, as Christ loueth his cherche
If thou loue thy self, thou louest thy wife
No, no man hateth his flesche: but in his life
He fostreth it, and therefore bid I thee
Cherishe thy wife, or thou shalt neuer ithee
Husbond and wife, what so men iape or play
Of worldly folke holde the selier waie
Thei be so knit, there maie non harme betide
And namely vpon the wiues side
For whiche Januarie, of whiche I told Considred hath in his daies old
The lustie life, the vertuous quiete
That is in mariage honie swete
And for his frendes on a daie he sent
To tellen hem the effect of his entent.
With face sadde, his tale hath he hem told
He saied frendes, I am hoore and old
And almoste (God wot) on the pittes brinke
Upon my soule somwhat must I thinke
I haue my bodie foolily dispended
Blessed be God, it shall ben amended
For I woll been certain a wedded man
And that anon in all the hast I can Unto some maide, faire and tender of age
I praie you shapeth for my mariage
All sodainly, for I woll nat abide
And I woll fonden to espie on my side
To whom I maie be wedded hastely
But for as moche as ye been more than I
Ye shullen rather soche a thing espien
Than I, and there me lust best to alien
But one thing warne I you my frēdes dere
I woll non old wife haue in no manere
She shall not passe fiftene yere certain
Old fiche and yong flesche woll I haue fain
Better is (q he) a Pike then a Pikereell
And better than old Beefe is the tender veell
I woll no woman of thirtie winter age
It nis but Beanstrawe and great forage
And eke these old widowes (God it wote)
Thei connen so moche craft in Wades bote
So moche broken harme whan hem list
That with hem should I neuer liue in rest
For sondrie scholes maketh subtell clerkes
A woman of many scholes halfe a clerke is But certainly, a yong thing maie men gie
Right as mē maie warm Waxe vō hādes plie
Wherefore I saie you plainly in a clause
I nill non old wife haue for this cause.
For if so were that I had mischaunce
And in her couth haue no plesaunce
Than should I lede my life in aduoutrie
And so streight to the deuill whan I die
Ne children should I non vpon her geten
Yet had I leuer houndes had me eaten
Than that mine heritage should fall
In straunge bondes: and thus I tell you all
I dote nat, I wotte the cause why
Men should wedden, and furthermore wot I
There speaketh many a man of mariage
That wot no more of this than doth my page
For whiche causes men should take a wife
If he maie nat liue chaste his life
Take him a wife with great deuocion
Bicause of lefull procreacion
Of children, to the honour of God aboue
And not onely for paramour or for loue
And for thei shoulden Lecherie eschue
And yelde his dettes whan that it is due
Or for that eche man should helpen other
In mischief, as a suster should the brother
And liue in chastite full heauenly.
But sirs (by your leaue) that am not I
For God be thanked, I dare make auaunt
I fele my limmes hole and sufficiaunt
To doen all that a man belongeth to
I wotte my selue best what I maie do
Though I be hore, I fare as doeth a tree
That blossometh er that fruict i wore be
The blossomed tree is neither drie ne dedde
I fele no where hore but on my hedde
Mine hart and my limmes been as grene
As Laurell is through the yere to seen
And sithen that ye han heard all mine entent
I praie you to my will ye woll assent.
Diuers men diuerfly hem told
Of mariage, many ensampies old
Some blameth it, some praiseth is certain
But at the last, shortly for to sain
(As all daie falleth alteracion Betwirt frendes and disputacion)
There fell a strief betwirt his brethren two

Of whiche that one was cleped Placebo
Justinus lothly called was that other
Placebo saied: O January brother
Full litell nede han ye my Lorde so dere
Counsaill to are of any that is here
But that ye been so full of sapience
That you ne liketh for your hie prudence
To waiue fro the worde of Salomon
This worde saieth he vnto euerichone
Worke all thyng by counsaill, thus saied he
And than shalt thou nat repent thee
But tho that Salomon speke soche a worde
Mine owne dere brother and my Lorde
So wisely God my soule bring to ease & rest
I hold your owne counsaill for the best.
For brother mine, take of me this mottse
I haue been now a court man all my life
And God wote, though I now vnworthy be
I haue stonden in full great degree
Abouen Lordes in full great estate
Yet had I neuer with non of hem debate
I neuer hem contraried truely
I wote well that my lorde can more than I
That he saieth, I holde it ferme and stable
I saie the same, or els thing semblable
A full greate foole is any counsailour
That serueth any Lorde of hie honour
That dare presume, or ones thinke it
That his counsail should passe his lordes wit
Naie, Lordes be no fooles be my faie
Ye haue your self spoken here to daie
So hie sentence, so holy, and so well
That I consent, and confirme euery dell
Your wordes all, and your opinion
By God there nis no man in all this toun
Ne in Italie, could bette haue saied
Christ holdeth hym of this full well a paied
And truely it is an hie corage
Of any man that is stopen in age
To taken a yong wife, by my father kin
Your hart hongeth on a holy pin
Doeth now in this mater right as you lest
For finally I hold it for the best.
Justinus that aie sat and herde
Right in this wise to Placebo he answerde
Now brother mine be pacient I you praie
Sith ye haue said, now herkneth what I saie
Seneck emong other wordes wise
Saieth, that a man ought hym well auise
To whom he yeueth his londe or his catell
And sithens I ought auise me right well
To whom I giue my goodes a waie fro me
Well moche more I ought auised be
To whom I giue my bodie: for al waie
I warne you well it is no childes plaie
To take a wife without auisement
Men must enquire (this is mine assent)
Whether she be sober, wise, or dronkelewe
Or proude, or other waies a shrewe
A chider, or a waster of thy good
Other riche or poore, or els a man is wood
All be it so, that no man finde shall Non in this worlde, that trotteth hole in all
Ne man, ne beast, soche as men can deuise
But natheles, it ought inough suffice
With any wife, if so were that she had Mo good thewes, than her vices bad
And all this asketh laiser to enquere
For God wot I haue wepte many a tere
Full priuely, sith I had a wife
Praise who so will a wedded mannes life
Certain I finde in it but cost and care
And obseruaunces of all bitles bare
And yet God wotte, my neighbours about
And namely of women many a rout
Sain that I haue the moste stedfast wife
And eke the meekest one that beareth life
But I wot best, where wringeth me my shoe
Ye maie for me, right as you list doe
Auise you, ye been a man of age
How that ye entren into mariage
And namely with a yong wife and a faire
By him that made water, yearth, and aire
The yongest man that is in all this rout
Is besie inowe to bring it about
To haue his wife alone, trusteth me
Ye shall not plesen her yeres thre
This is to sain, to doen her pleasaunce
A wife asketh full moche obseruaunce
I praie you that ye be not euill apaied.
Well (q this January) and hast thou al said
Straw for thy Senec, and for thy prouerbes
I count it not worth a pannier of herbes
Of schoole termes, wiser men than thou
As thou hast heard, assenteth it right now
To my purpose Placebo, what saie ye?
I saie it is a cursed man (q he)
That letteth Matrimonie sekerly
And with that worde thei risen sodainly
And been assented fully, that he should Be wedded whan him list, & where he would High fantasie and curiousnesse
Fro daie to daie, gan in the soule empresse
Of January, about his mariage
Many a faire shappe, and many faire visage
Ther passeth through his hart night by night
As who so toke a mirrour polished bright
And set it in a comon market place
Than should he se many a figure pace
By his mirrour, and in the same wise

Gan

San Januarie within his thought deuise
Of maidens, whiche that dwellen beside He wist not where he might abide
For if that one had beautie in her face
In other stont so in the peoples grace
For her sadnesse and her benignite
That of the people greatest voice had she
And some were riche and had bad name
But nethelesse, bet wirt earnest and game
He at last appointcted hym on one
And let all other frow his hart gone
And chese her of his owne auctho'itee
For loue is blinde all daie, and maie not see
And whan that he was in his bedd ibrought
He purtreide in his hart and in his thought
Her fresche beaute, and her age tender
Her midle small, her armes long and slender
Her wise gouernaunce, and her gentilnesse
Her womanly bearyng, and her sadnesse
And whan he was on her condiscended
Him thouzt his choise might nat ben amended
For whan that he himself concluded had Him thought eche other mennes wit so bad
That impossible it were to replie
Ayenst his choice, this was his fantasie
His frendes sent he to, at his instaunce
And praieth hem to don him that pleasaunce
That hastely thei would to him come
He would bredgen her labour all and some Nedeth no moze for him to go ne ride
He was appointcted there he would abide Placebo came, and eke his frendes sone
And alderfirst he bad hem all a bone
That non of hem non argumentes make Ayenst his purpose that he hath itake which purpose was pleasant to God (said he)
And very ground of his prosperite.
He said there was a maiden in the toune whiche of beautie hath greate renoune
All were it so, she were of small degre Suffiseth him her youth and her beautie which maide he said, he would haue to wife
To leden in ease and his holines of life
And thanketh God, ꝑ he might hauen her all
That no wight his blisse parten shall
And praieth hem to labour in this nede
And shapeth that he faile nat to spede
For than he saied, his spirite was at ease
Than is (ꝙ he) nothyng maie me displease
Saue O thing pricketh in my conscience
The whiche I wol rehearse in your presence
I haue (ꝙ he) heard saie full yore ago
There maie no man haue parfite blisses two
This is to saie, in yearth and eke in heauen
For though he kept him fro the sinnes seuen
And eke from euery braunche of thilke tree
Yet is there so parfite prosperitee
And so greate ease and lust in mariage
That euer I am agast now in mine age
That I shall lede now so merie a life
So delicate without wo or strife
That I shal haue mine heuen in yearth here
For sithen very heauen is bought so dere
With tribulacion and great penaunce
How should I than liuyng in soch pleasaunce
As all wedded men doen with their wiues
Com to the blisse, ther Christ eterne on liue is
This is my drede, and ye my brethren tweie
Aslotteth me this question I you preie.
Justinus, whiche that hated his folie
Answerd anon right in his iaperie
And for he would his long tale abrege
He would non auctho'rite allege
But saied: sir, so there be non obstacle
Other than this, God of his hie miracle
And of his mercie maie so for you werche
That er ye han your rightes of holy cherche
Ye maie repent of wedded mannes life
In whiche ye sain is neither wo ne strife
And els God forbede, but if he sent
I wedded man grace him to repent
Well after, rather than a single man
And therefore sir, the best rede that I can Despeireth you not, but haue in memorie
Paraucnture she maie be your purgatorie
She maie by Goddes meane & Goddes whip
Than shall your soule vp to heauen skip
Swifter than doeth an arowe out of a bowe
I hope to God hereafter ye shall knowe
That there nis non so great felicitee
In mariage, ne neuer non shall bee
That you shall let of your saluacion
So that ye vse it as skill is and reason
The lustes of your wife attemperatly
And that ye please her nat to amorously
And that ye kepe you eke from other sin
My tale is doen, for my witte is thin
Beth not agast hereof my dere brother
But let vs wade fro this matter to an other
The wife of Bathe, if ye vnderstande
Of mariage, whiche ye haue in hande
Declareth full well in a little spate
Fareth now well. God haue you in his grace.
And with this word, Justine & his brother
Han take her leaue, and eche of hem of other
For whan thei sawe it must nedes be Thei wrought so by wise and slie treate
That she this maide whiche Maie hight
As hastely as euer that she might Shall wedded be to this Januarie

The Marchauntes tale.

I trowe it were to long to you to tarie
If I you told of euery escrite and bonde
By whiche he was seoffed in his londe
Or for to herken of her riche araie
But finally icomen is the daie
That to chirche bothe been thei went
For to receiue the holy Sacrament
Forth cometh ỹ prieſt, w̄ ſtole about his necke
And badde her be like Sara and Rebeck
In wiſedome and trueth of mariage
And ſaied his oriſons, as is the vſage
And crouched hem, & bad God ſhuld hem bleſs
And made all ſeker inowe with holines
Thus been thei wedded with ſolempnite
And at feaſt ſitteth he and ſhe
With other worthy folke vpon the deies
All full of ioie and bliſſe is the palaies
And full of inſtrumentes and of vitaile
The moſte deintes of all Itaile
Before him ſtode inſtrumentes of ſoch ſoun
That Orpheus, ne of Thebes Amphion
Ne made neuer ſoche a melodie.
At euery cours came loude minſtralcie
That neuer Ioab tromped for to here
Neither Theodomas yet halfe ſo clere
At Thebes, whan the citee was in dout
Bacchus the wine hem ſkinketh all about
And Uenus laugheth on euery wight
For Januarie was become her knight
And would bothe aſſain his corage
In liberte, and eke in mariage
And with her fire bronde in her hond about Daunceth before the bride and all the rout
And certainly, I dare well ſaie right this Emenius that God of weddyng is Saw neuer in his life, ſo mery a wedded mā
Hold thou thy peace thou poet Marcian
That writeſt vs that ilke weddyng merie
Of Philologie and hym Mercurie
And of the ſonges that the Muſes ſong
To ſmall is bothe thy penne and eke thy tong
For to diſcriuen of this mariage
Whā tēder youth hath iwedded ſtouping age
Ther is ſoche mirth, ỹ it maie not be written Aſſaieth your ſelf, than maie ye witten
If that I lacke or non in this matere
Maie that ſitte, with ſo benigne a chere
Her to behold, it ſemed fairie
Quene Heſter loked neuer with ſoche an ye
On Aſſuere, ſo meke a looke hath ſhe
I maie you nat deuiſe all her beaute
But thus moche of her beautie tell I maie
That ſhe was like the bright morow of May Fulfilde of al beautie, and of pleaſaunce
This Januarie is rauiſhed in a traunce
And at euery tyme he looked in her face
But in his hart, he gan her to manace
That he ỹ night, in his armes wold her ſtrein Harder, than euer Paris did Helein
But natheles, yet had he greate pite
That thilke night, offende her muſt he
And thought alas, O tender creature
Now would God ye might well endure
All my corage, it is ſo ſharpe and kene
I am agaſt, ye ſhall it nat ſuſtene
But God forbede, that I did all my might Now would God that it were ware night
And that the night would laſt euer mo
I would that all theſe people were ago
And finally he doeth all his labour
As he beſt might, ſauyng his honour
To haſt hem fro the meate in ſubtill wiſe
The tyme came, that reaſon was to riſe
And after that men dauncen, and drinke faſt
And ſpices all about the houſe thei caſt
And full of ioie and bliſſe is euery man
All but a ſquier, that hight Damian
Whiche carfe before the knight many a daie
He was ſo rauiſhed on his Lady Maie
That for very pain he was nye wode
Almoſt he ſwelt, and ſwouned ther he ſtode
So ſore hath Uenus hurt hym w̄ her brande
So freſhe ſhe was, and therto ſo licande
And to his bedde he went hym haſtely
No more of him at this tyme ſpeake I
But there I let hym wepe inowe and plain
Till the freſhe Maie woll rewen on his pain
O perilous fire, ỹ in the benſtraw bredeth
O familier foe, that his ſeruice bedeth
O ſeruaunt traitour, falſe homely hewe
Like to the Adder ſlie in boſome vntrue
O Januarie dronken in pleſaunce
God ſhilde vs all from your iniquitaunce
Of mariage, ſe how this Damian
Thyne owne ſquier and thy borne man
Entendeth to doen thee villanie
God graunt thee thine homely foe to eſpie
For in this worlde nis wers peſtilence
Than homely foe, all daie in thy preſence
Parformed hath the ſunne his arke diurne
No lenger maie the body of him ſoiourne
On orizont, as in that latitude
Night with his mantill, that is darke & rude
Gan for to ſprede, the Hemiſperie about
For whiche departed is the luſtie rout
Fro Januarie, with thonke on euery ſide
Home to her hous luſtely thei ride
There as thei doen her thinges, as hem leſt
And whan thei ſawe her tyme to go to reſt Sone after this luſtie Januarie woll

woll go to bedde, he would no lenger tarie
He drinketh Ipocras, clareie, and bernage
Of spices hote, to encrease his corage
And many a lectuarie had he full fine
Soche as the curſed monke dan Conſtantine
Hath written in his booke of Coitu
To eten hem al he nolde nothyng eſchewe
And thus to his priuie frendes ſaied he
For Goddes loue, as ſone as it maie be Let voied all this houſe in curteis wiſe ſone
Hen drinken, and the trauers drue anon
So haſted Januarie, it muſt be doen
The bride was brought to bed as ſtill as ſton
And whā the bed was with the prieſt iblefſed
Out of ỹ chāber hath euery wight hē dreſſed
And Januarie hath faſt in armes take His freſhe Maie, his paradiſe, his make
He lulleth her, he kiſſeth her full oft
With thiche brikels of his berde vnſoft
Like the ſhin of Houdiſh, as ſharp as brere
For he was ſhaue all newe in his manere
He rubbeth her vpon her tender face
And ſaied thus: Alas, I mote treſpace
To you my ſpouſe, and you greatly offende
Or tyme come that I woll doune diſcende
But natheles, conſidereth this (ỹ he)
There nis no workeman, what ſo euer he be
That maie bothe wirche well and haſtely
This woll be doen at leiſer parfitly
It is no force how long that we plaie
In true wedlocke coupled be we t'waie
And bleſſed be the yoke that we been in
For in our actes we mowe doe no ſin
A man maie doe no ſynne with his wife
Ne hurt hym ſelf with his owne knife
For we haue leaue to plaie vs by the lawe
Thus laboureth he, till the daie gan dawe
And than he taketh a ſoppe of fine clarre
And vpright in his bedde than ſitteth he
And after that he ſingeth full loude and clere
And kiſſ his wife, and maketh wanton chere
He was all coltiſhe, and full of ragerie
And full of gergon, as is a flecked Pie
The ſlacke ſkin about his necke ſhaketh
While that he ſang, ſo chaūteth he & craketh
But god wot what Maie thought in her hert
Whan ſhe hym ſawe, vp ſitting in his ſhert
In his nyght cappe, with his necke lene
She praiſeth not his playing worth a Bene
Than ſaied he thus: my reſt woll I take Now daie is come, I maie no lenger wake
And doun he laied his hed, and ſlept til prime
And āfter ward, whan that he ſawe his time
Up riſeth Januarie, but the freſhe Maie
Holdeth her chamber to the fourth daie
As vſage is of wiues for the beſt
For euery labour ſomtyme mote haue reſt
Or els long maie he not endure
This is to ſaie, no liues creature
Be it fiſhe or beaſt, bridde or man.
Now woll I ſpeake of wofull Damian
That langureth for loue, as ye ſhall here
Therefore I ſpeake to hym in this manere.
I ſaie, O ſely Damian, alas
Anſwere to this demaunde, as in this caas
How ſhalt thou to thy lady freſhe Maie
Tell thy wo: She woll alwaie ſaie naie
Eke if thou ſpeake, ſhe woll thy wo bewraie
God do thyn helpe, I can no better ſaie
This ſicke Damian in Venus fire
So brenneth, that he dieth for deſire
For whiche he put his life in auenture
No lenger might he in this wiſe endure
But priuely a penner gan he borowe
And in a letter wrote he all his ſorowe
In maner of a complaint or a laie
Unto this faire and freſhe lady Maie
And in a purſe of ſilke, hongyng on his ſhert
He hath it put, and laied it at his hert
The Moone at noon tide that ilke daie
(That Januarie hath wedded freſhe Maie)
Out of Taure was in the Cankre gleden
So long hath Maie in her chamber bidden
As cuſtome is, vnto theſe nobles all
A bride ſhall not eaten in the hall
Till daies four, or three at the leaſt
Ipaſſed been, than let her gon to feaſt.
The fourth daie cōplete fro noon to noon
Whan that the hie Maſſe was idoen
In hall ſat this Januarie and Maie
As freſhe as is the bright Somers daie
And ſo bifell, how that this good man
Remembreth hym vpon this Damian
And ſaied: ſainct Mary, how maie this be
That Damian entendeth not to me:
Is he ale ſicke: or how maie this betide:
His ſquiers, which that ſtoden him beſide
Excuſed hym, bicauſe of his ſickneſſe
Whiche letted hym to doen his buſineſſe
Non other cauſe might make hym tarie
That me forthinketh (ỹ this Januarie)
He is a gentle ſquire be my trouth
If that he died, it were harme and routh
He is as wiſe, diſcrete, and ſecre
As any man that I wote of his degre
And therto manly and ſeruiſable
And for to be a thriftie man right able
But after meate, as ſone as euer I maie
I woll my ſelf viſet hym, and eke Maie
To doen hym all the conſort that I can

And

The Marchauntes tale.

And for that worde, hym blessed euery a man
That of his bounte and of his gentilnesse
He would so comforten in his distresse
His squier, for it was a gentle deede.
Dame (quod this Januarie) take good heede
That after meate, ye and your women all (whan ye haue ben in chaber out of this hal)
That all ye gone to see this Damian
Doeth hym disport, he is a gentill man
And tellen hym that I woll hym visite
Haue I nothyng but rested me a lite
And spede you fast, for I woll abide Till that ye slepe fast by my side
And with that worde he gan to hym call
A squier, that was Marchall of his hall
And told hym certain thing that he would.
This fresh Maie hath streight her way ihold
With all her women, vnto this Damian Doune by his beddes side sat she than Conforting hym as goodlie as she maie.
This Damian, whan that he his time say
In secrete wise, his purse and eke his bill (In whiche he had written all his will)
Hath put into her honde withouten moze
Saue that he sighed wonders depe and soze
And sothly, to her right thus saied he Mercie, and that ye discouer nat me
For I am dedde, if that this thyng be kid
This purse hath she in her bosome hid
And went her waie, ye get no moze of me
But vnto Januarie icome is she
And on his beddes side she sit full soft
He taketh her, and killeth her full oft
And laied hym doun to slepe, and that anon
She fained her, as that she must gon
Ther as ye wote, that euery wight hath nede
And whan she of this bill hath taken hede
She rent it all to cloutes, and at last
Into the priuie, sothly she it cast.
Who studieth now but faire freshe Maie
And adoun by Januarie she laie
That slept, till the cough hath hym awaked
Anon he prated her to stripe her all naked
He would of her (he said) haue some plesance
He saied her clothes did hym encombrance
And she obeieth be she lefe or loth
But lest that precious folk be with me wroth
How that he wrought, I dare nat to you tell
Or wheder she thought it paradise or hell
But I let hem worche in her wise
Till euensong ryng, that thei must arise.
Were it by destenie or by aduenture
Were it by influence, or by nature
Or constellacion that in soche estate
The heuen stoode, that tyme fortunate
(was for to put a bill of Venus werkes)
For all thyng hath tyme, as saien clerkes
To any woman for to gete her loue
I can not saie, but the great God aboue
That knoweth, that non act is causeles
He deme all, for I woll hold my pees.
But soth is this, how that this fresh Maie
Hath take soche impression that daie
Of pite, on this licke Damian
That fro her hart she driue ne can
The remembraunce for to doen hym ease
Certain (thought she) who this thing displease
I reche not, for this I hym assure
I loue hym best of any creature
Though he no moze had than his shert.
Lo pite renneth sone in gentle hert
Here maie ye se, how excellent franchise
In women is, whan thei hem narow auise
Some tyraunt is, as there been many one,
That hath an hart as hard as any stone
Whiche would haue let hym sterue in ꝑ place
Wel rather thā haue graunted him her grace
And her reioised in her cruell pride
And not haue retched to been an homicide.
This gentill Maie, fulfilled of all pite Right so of her honde a letter made she
In whiche she graunted hym her very grace
There lacketh nought, but onely time & place
Where that she might to his lust suffice
For it shall be, right as he woll deuise
And whan she sawe her tyme vpon a daie
To visite this Damian goth this faire Maie
And suttelly this letter doune she thrust
Under his pillowe, rede it if hym list
She taketh him by the hōd, & hard him twist
So secretly, that no wight of it wist
And bad him ben all hole, and forth she went To Januarie, whan that he for her sent Up riseth Damian the nexte mozowe
All passed was his sicknes and his sorowe
He kēbeth him and proineth him and piketh
And doeth all that his Lady lust and liketh
And eke to Januarie he goeth as lowe
As euer did a dogge for the bowe
He is so pleasaunt to euery man
For craft is all, who that it can
That euery wight is fain to speken him good
And fully in his ladies grace he stood
Thus let I Damian about his nede
And in my tale, forth I woll procede.
Some clerkes holden that felicite Stont in delite, and therfore certain he
This noble Januarie with all his might
In honest wise as longeth to a knight
Shope hym to liue full deliciously

His

His housing, his array, as honestly
To his degre, was made as a kinges
Among other of his honest thinges
He had a garden walled all with stone
So faire a garden was there neuer none
For out of dout, I verily suppose
That he that wrote the Romant of the Rose Ne couth of it the beaute wel deuise
Ne Priapus, ne might not suffise
Though he be god of gardens, for to tell
The beaute of the garden, and of the well
That stont vnder a laurer alway grene
Ful oft time king Pluto and his quene
Proserpina, and al her fayrie
Disporten hem, and maken melody
About that well, and daunced as men tolde
This noble knight, this January the olde
Such deynte hath, in it to walke and play
That he wol suffre no wight to bere the kaye
Saue he him selfe, for the smal wicket
He bare alway of siluer a clicket
With which, whan that him list vnchet
And whan that he wold pay his wife her det
In somer season, thider would he go
And May his wife, and no wight but they two
And thiges which that were not don a bedde
He in ỳ garden perfourmed hem and spedde
And in this wise, many a mery day
Liued this January and this freshe May
But worldly ioye may nat alway endure
To January, ne to no liuing creature.
O sodaine hape, O thou fortune vnstable
Like to the Scorpion disceiuable
That flatrest vỳ thy heed whan ỳ wolt stinge
Thy taile is deth, thrugh thine enuenoming
O brotell ioye, O swete poison queint
O monster, that so sodainly canst peint
Thy giftes, vnder the hewe of stedfastnesse
That thou disceiuest bothe more and lesse
Why hast thou January thus disceiued?
And haddest him for thy frende receiued
And now thou hast beraft him both his eyen
For sorow of which desireth he to dyen
Alas, this noble January that is so fre
Amidde his lust and his prosperite
Is woxen blind, and all sodainly
His dethe therfore desireth he vtterly
And therwithal, the fire of ielousy
(Lest that his wife should fall in some foly)
So brent his hert, that he would faine
That some man, both him and her had slaine
For neuer after his death, ne in his life
Ne would he that she were loue ne wife
But euer liue a widowe in clothes blacke
Sole, as the turtle doth ỳ hath lost her make
But at the last, after a moneth or twaie
His sorowe gan to swage, soth to saie
For whan he wist it might non other be
He patiently tooke his aduersite
Saue out of dout maie he nat for gone
That he nas ielous euer more in one
Whiche ielousie, it was so outragious
That neither in hall ne in none other hous
Ne in non other place neuer mo
He nolde suffer, neither ride ne go
But if that he had honde on her alwaie
For which full often wepeth freshe Maie
That loued Damian so benignely
That she wote either die sodainly
Or she wote haue him at her lest
She watteth whan her hart should to brest
Upon that other side Damian
Become is, the sorowfullest man
That euer was, for neither night ne daie
Ne might he speake a worde to freshe Maie
As to his purpose of no soche matere
But if that Januarie must it here
That had an hande vpon her euer mo
But nathe les, by writing to and fro
And preuy tignes, wist he what she ment
And she knew all the tignes of his entent.
O January, what might the it auaile
Tho thou mightest se, as fer as shippes saile
For as good is a blinde man disceiued be
As to be disceiued, whan that a man may se.
Lo Argus, which had an hundred eyen
For al that euer he couth pore and prien
Yet was he blent, and god wot so ben mo
That wenen wisely that it is not so
Passe ouer is an ease, I say no more.
The fresh May, of whith I spake of yore
In warme ware hath printed this clicket
That January bare of that small wicket
By which vnto his gardein oft he went
And Damian that knew her entent
The clicket counterfaited priuely
There nis no more to say, but hastely
Some wonder by this clichet shall betide
Which ye shall heren, if ye wol abide.
O noble Ouide, soth sayest thou god wote
What fight is it, though it be long and hote
That he nil finde it out in some manere
By Pyramus and Thisbe, may men lere
Thouz they were kept ful long streit ouer all
They ben accorded, rowning through a wal
Ther nis no wight couth finde such a sleight
But now to purpose, er the daies eight
Were passed, er the moneth Iule befill
That January hath caught so great a will Through eggyng of his wife him for to play

The Marchauntes tale.

In his garden, and no wight but thei tway
That in a morow, vnto this May said he Rise vp my wife, my loue, my lady fre
The turtell voice is herde my lady swete
The winter is gon, with al his raines wete
Come forth now with thin eyen columbine
Now fayrer ben thy brestes than is wine
The garden is enclosed all about Come forth my white spouse out of dout
Thou hast me wounded in my hert, o, wife
No spotte in the nas in all thy life
Come forth and let vs taken our disport
I chese the for my wife and my comfort
Such olde leude wordes vsed he
On Damian a signe made she
That he shuld go before with his clicket
This Damian hath opened this wicket
And in he stert, and that in suche manere
That no wight might it se ne here
And stil he sat vnder a bushe anon.
This January, as blinde as is a ston
With May in his hande, and no wight mo
Into his fresh garden is he go
And clapte to the wicket sodainly.
Now wife (q he) here nis but thou and I
That arte the creature that I best loue
For by that lord that sit vs all aboue
I had leuer dien on a knife
Than the offende, dere true wife
For goddes sake thinke how I the chees
Nat for couetise, ne other good doutles
But onely for the loue I had to the
And though that I be olde and may not se
Be to me true, and I wol tell you why
Certes, thre thinges shall ye win therby
First loue of Christ, & to your self honour
And all mine heritage, toune and tour
I giue it you, maketh charters as ye lift
This shal be don to morow er sunne rift
So wisely god my soule bring to blisse
I pray you on couenaunt that ye me kisse
And though that I be ielous wite nought
Ye ben so depe enprented in my thought
That whan I consider your beaute
And therwithal, the vnlikly elde of me
I may not certes, though I should die
Forbere, to ben out of your company
For very loue, this is withouten dout
Now kisse me wife, and let vs rome about
This fresshe May whan she these wordes herd
Benignely to January answerd
But first and forwarde she began to wepe
I haue (q she) a soule for to kepe
As wel as ye, and also myn honour
And of wifehode thilke tender flour
Whiche that I haue ensured in your honde
Whan that the priest to you my body bonde
Wherfore I wol answere in this manere
By the leaue of you my lorde so dere
I pray god that neuer dawe that day
That I ne sterue, as foule as woman may Yf euer I do to my kinne that shame
Or els that I empayre so my name
That I betraise, and if I do that lacke
Do stripe me, and put me in a sacke
And in the nert riuer do me drenche
I am a gentil woman, and no wenche
Why speke ye thus, but men ben euer vntrew
And women haue reprefe of you, aye new Ye can non other cõmuning, I leue
But speke to vs of vntrust and repreue
And with ꝑ word she saw where Damian
Sate in the busshe, and knele he began
And with her finger signes made she
That Damian should climbe vpon a tre
That charged was with fruite, & vp he went
For verily he knewe all her entent
And euery signe that she couth make Wel bet than January her owne make
For in a letter she had tolde him all
Of this mater, how that he worch shall
And thus I let him sitte in the pery
And January and May roming full mery.
Bright was the day, & blew the firmamẽt
Phebus of gold doun hath his stremes sente
To gladen euery flour with his warmenesse
He was that time in Geminy, as I gesse
But litle fro his declinacion
The cause of Iouis exaltacion
And so befil that bright morow tide
That in the garden, on the farther side
Pluto, that is the king of Fayrie
And many a lady in his company
Folowing his wife, the quene Proserpine
Eche after other right as a line
Whiles she gadred floures in a mede
In Claudian ye may the story rede
How in his grisely carte he her fette
This king of Fayry doun him sette
Upon a benche of turues fresshe and grene
And right anon thus said he to his quene.
My wife (q he) that may nat say nay
The experience so proueth euery day
The treason, which that women doth to mi
Ten hundred thousande tel I can Notable, of your vntrouth and brotelnesse
O Salomon, richest of all richesse
Fulfilde of sapience, and of worldly glory
Full worthy ben thy wordes in memory
To euery wight, that wit and reason can

Thus

Thus prayseth he the bounte of man
Among a thousande men yet fonde I one
But of all women fonde I neuer none
Thus saith ỹ king, ỹ knoweth your wicked-
And Jesus Filius Sirach, as I gesse (nesse
Ne speketh of you but selde reuerence
A wilde fire, a corrupt pestilence
So fall vpon your bodies yet to night
Ne se ye not this honorable knight:
Bicause (alas) that he is blinde and olde
His owne man shall maken him cokolde
Lo where he sitte, the lechour in the tre
Now wol I graunt of my maiesse unto this olde blinde worthy knight
That he shal haue againe his eye sight whan that his wife would done him villany
Than shal he know al her harlotry
Both in repreue of her and other mo. ye shal (q Proserpine) and woll ye so:
Now be my mothers soule sir I swere
That I shal yeuen her sufficient answere
And al women after for her sake
That though they ben in any gilte itake with face bolde, they shullen hem selue excuse
And bere hem doun, that wold hem accuse
For lacke of answere, non of hem shull dien
All had he sey a thing with both his eyen yet should we women so visage it hardely
And wepe and swere, and chide subtelly
That ye shal ben as leude as gees
What recketh me of your auctorites:
I wot wel this Jewe, this Salomon
Fonde of vs women foles many one
But though he ne fonde no good woman yet there hath he fonde many another man
Women ful trewe, full good, & full vertuous
Witnesse of hem that dwell in Christes hous
With martyrdom, they preued her constaunce
The Romain festes eke make remembraunce
Of many a very true wife also
But sir, be not wroth that it be so
Though that he said he fond no good womā
I pray you take the sentence of the man
He ment thus, that in souerayn bounte
Nys non but god, that sitteth in trinite.
Eye, for very god that nis but one what make ye so muche of Salomon:
what though he made a tēple goddes hous:
what though he were riche and glorious
So made he a temple of false goddes
How might he don a thing, ỹ more forbod is Parde as faire as ye his name enplaster
He was a lechour, and an idolastre
And in his elde, very god forsoke
And if that god nadde (as saith the boke) yspared him for his fathers sake, he should Haue lost his reigne soner than he wolde
I set nat of all the villany
That ye of women write, a butterflie
I am a woman, nedes mote I spelle
Or els swel, til mine hert breke
For sithen he said, that we ben iangleresses
As euer mote I hole broke my tresses
I shall nat spare for no curtesy
To spelle hem harme, that wolde vs villany.
Dame (q this Pluto) be no lenger wrothe
I giue it vp: but sithe I swore myn othe
That I would graunt him his sight ayen
My word shal stand, ỹ warne I you certeyn
I am a king, it set me not to lye.
And I (q she) a quene of Fayrie
Her answere she shall haue I vndertake
Let vs no mo wordes herof make
For soth I wol no lenger you contrary.
Now let vs turne againe to January
That in the garden with this faire May Singeth merier than the Popingay
You loue I best, and shall, and other non
So long about the aleyes is he gon
Till he was comen ayenst thilke pery where as this Damian sitteth ful mery
On hye, among these freshe leues grene
This freshe May, that is so bright & shene
Gan for to sike, and said: alas my side
Now sir (q she) for ought that may betide
I must haue of these peres that I here se
Or I mote die, so sore longeth me
To eten of the small peres grene
Helpe for her loue that is heuen quene
I tel you wel a woman in my plite
May haue to frute so great an appetite
That she may dyen, but she it haue.
Alas (q he) that I ne had here a knaue
That couth climbe, alas, alas (q he)
For I am blind, ye sir no force (q she)
But would ye bouchsafe for goddes sake
The pery in your armes for to take
For wel I wotte that ye mistrust me Than should I climbe well ynough (q she)
So I my fote might sette vpon your backe
Forsoth said he, in me shall be no lacke
Might I you helpe with myn hert blode
He stoupeth doun, & on his backe she stode
And caught her by a twist, and vp she goth
Ladies I pray you be not wroth
I can nat glose, I am a rude man
And sodainly anon this Damian
Gan pullen vp the smoche, and in the thrōge
A great tent, a thrifty and a longe
She said it was the meriest fyt

The Marchauntes tale.

And sodainly anon this Damian
Gan pullen vp the smocke, and in the thrōge
A great tent, a thrifty and a longe
She said it was the merieste fyt

That euer in her life as she was at yet
My lordes tent serueth me nothing thus
It foldeth twifolde by swete Jesus
He may nat swiue worth a leke
And yet he is full gentil and ful meke
This is leuer to me than an euensong
And whan that Pluto saw this wrong
To January he gaue again his sight
And made him se alswell as euer he might
And whan he had caught his sight againe
Ne was there neuer man of thing so faine
But on his wife his thought was euer mo
Up to the tree he cast his eyen two
And saw how Damian his wife had drelled
In suche manere, it may not be expressed
But if I would spekе vncurtesly
And vp he gal a roring and a crie
As doth the mother whan the childe shall dye
Out helpe, alas (haro we) he gan to crye
For sorow almost he gan to dye
That his wife was swiued in the pery
O stronge lady store what dost thou?
And she answered: sir what ayleth you?
Haue pacience and reason in your minde
I haue you holpen of both your eyen blinde
Up peril of my soule, I shal nat lien
As me was taught to helpe with your eyen
Was nothing bette for to make you see
Than strogle with a man vpon a tree
God wot I did it in ful good entent
Strogle (quod he) ye algate in it went Stiffe and rounde as any bell
It is no wonder though thy bely swell
The smocke on his brest lay so thecke
And euer me thought he pointed on ỹ brecke
God giue you both on shames deth to dien
He swiued the, I saw it with mine eyen
And els I be honged by the halse
Than is (quod she) my medicin salse
For certain, if that ye might se
Ye would nat say thekе wordes to me
Ye haue some glimsing, and no parfite sight
I se (quod he) as wel as euer I might Thanked be god, with both mine eyen two
And by my trouth me thought he did so Ye mase ye mase, good sir (quod she)
This thanke haue I for that I made you se
Alas (quod she) that euer I was so kinde
Now dame (quod he) let all passe out of minde
Come doun my lefe, and if I haue missaide
God helpe me so, as I am yuel apaide
But by my fathers soule, I wende haue seyn
How that this Damian had by the syen
And that thy smocke had lien vpon his brest
Ye sir (quod she) ye may wene as ye lest
But sir, a man that waketh out of his slepe
He may not sodainly wel taken kepe
Upon a thing, ne se it parfitely
Till that he be adawed verily
Right so a man that longe hath blinde be
He may not sodainly so wel sye
First whan the sight is newe comen again
As he that hath a day or two ysain
Till that your sight istadied be a while
There may full many a sight you begile
Beware I pray you, for by heuen king
Ful many a man weneth to se a thing
And it is al another than it semeth
He that misconceiueth ofte misdemeth
And with that worde she lept doun fro ỹ tre
This January, who is gladde but he?
He kisseth her, he clippeth her full ofte
And on her wombe he stroketh her ful softe
And to his paleis home he hath her lad
Now good men I pray you, beth ye al glad Thus endeth here my tale of January
God blesse vs al, and his mother Mary.

¶ Thus endeth the Marchauntes tale and here foloweth the wife of Bathes prologue.

Experience, thoughe [illegible]e authorite
Were in this worlde, is right ynow for me
To speke of wo that is in ma-

For lordings, sith I twelue yeres was of age
Thanked be god, that is eterne on liue
Husbondes at chirche dore haue I had fiue
If I so ofte might haue wedded be
And all were worthy men in her degre.
But me was tolde not long ago i wis
That sithen Christ went neuer but onis
To wedding, in the cane of Galilee
That by thilke ensample taught he me
That I ne should wedded be but ones.
Lo here, which a sharpe word for the nones
Beside a well, Jesu god and man
Spake in reprefe of the Samaritan
Thou hast had fiue husbandes (quod he)
And that ilke man that now had the

What he ment therby I can not sain
But that I aske a pointe, why the fifte man

How many might she haue in mariage?

Men may deuine, and glosen vp and doun
But wel I wotte expresse without lie
God badde vs for to were and multiplie
That gentil text can I well vnderstonde
Eke wel I wote (he said) myn husbonde
Should leaue father & mother, & take to me
But of numbre no mencion made he
Of bigamie or of octogamye why shoulde men speake of it villany?
Lo he the wise king Salamon
I trow had wiues mo than on
As would god it lefull were to me
To be refreshed halfe so oft as he
Which a gifte of god had he, for his wyues
No mã hath such, that in this world a liue is God wote this noble king, as to my witte
The first night had many a mery fitte
With eche of hem, so well was him alsue
Blessed be god, I haue had fiue
Welcome the sixte when euer he shall
For soth I woll not kepe me chaste in all
When myn husbonde is fro the world ygon
Some christen man shal wedde me anon
For than the apostel saith, that I am fre
To wedde a goddeshalfe, where it liketh me
He saith, that to be wedded is no sinne Better is to be wedded than to brinne what recketh me though folke say villany
Of shrewde Lameth, and of his bigamy
I wote wel Abraham was an holy man
And Jacob eke, as fer as euer I here can
And eche of hem had wiues mo than two
And many another holy man also Where can you say in any maner age
That euer god defended mariage
By expresse wordes? I praie you tell me
Or where commaunded he virginite?
I wote as well as ye, it is no drede
The Apostel, when he spake of maidenhede
He said, therof precept had he none
Men may counsaile a woman to be one
But counsailing is no commaundement
He put it in our owne iudgement
For had god cõmaunded maidenhede
Then had he dampned wedding out of drede
And certes, if there were no sede ysowe
Virginite than wherof should it growe?
Poule durst not commaund at the lesse
A thing, of whiche his master yaf none hesse
The darte is set vp for virginite
Catche who so may, who renneth best let se.
But this worde is not taken of euery wight
But there as god list yeue it of his might I wotte well that the apostel was a mayde
But nethelesse, though that he wrote & saide
He would that euery wight were such as he
All nis but counsaile to virginite
And for to ben a wife, he yaue me leue
Of indulgence, so it be not to repreue
To wedde me, if that my make die
Without excepcion of bigamie
All were it good no woman for to touche
He ment as in his bedde or in his couche
For peril is, both fire and towe to assemble
Ye know what this ensample may resemble
This is al and some, he held virginite
More parfite than wedding in freelte.
Freelte clepe I, but if that he and she Would lede her life all in chastite
I graunt it well, I haue none enuye
Though maidenhede preferre bigamye
It liketh hem to be clene in body and goste
Of mine estate I wol make no boste
For well ye knowe, a lord in his housholde
Hath nat euery vessell all of golde
Some ben of tre, and don her lordes seruice
God clepeth folke to him in sondry wise
And eueriche hath of god a proper gifte
Some this, some that, as him liketh shifte
Virginite is great perfeccion
And continence eke with deuocion
But Christe, that of perfeccion is well
Badde not euery wight he should go sell
All that he had, and giue it to the poore
And in suche wise folowe him and his fore
He spake to hem, that would liue parfitly
And lordinges (by your leaue) that am nat I
I wol bestowe the floure of al myn age
In the actes and fruite of mariage
Tell me also, to what conclucion
Were membres made of generacion?
And of so parfite wise a wight ywrought
Trusteth well, they were nat made for nought
Glose who so wol, and saye vp and doun
That they were made for purgacion
Of vrine, and other thinges smale
And eke to knowe a female from a male
And for non other cause, what say ye no?
The experience wotte wel it is not so
So that the clerkes be not with me wrothe
I say that thei were maked for bothe
This is to sayn, for office, and for ease
Of engendrure ther we not God displease why should men els in her bokes sette
That man should yelde to his wife her dette
Now wherwith shuld he pay his paiment?
If he ne vsed his sely instrument
Than were they made vpon a creature
To purge vrine, and eke for engendrure
But I say not that euery wight is holde

That hath ſuche harneſſe as I to you tolde
To gon and vſen hem to engendrure
Than ſhould men take of chaſtite no cure
Chriſt was a mayde, and ſhapen as a man
And many a ſainte, ſithen the world began Yet liued they euer in parfite chaſtite
I nill enuy no virginite
Let hem with brede of pure whete be fedde
And let vs wiues eate barly bredde
And yet with barly bred, Marke tell can
Our lord Jeſu refreſhed many a man
In ſuch a ſtate as god hath cleped vs
I wol perſeuer, I nam not precious
In wifehode wol I vſe myn inſtrument
As frely as my maker hath it ſent
If I be daungerous, god giue me ſorow
Myn huſbōd ſhal it haue both euin & morow
When that him liſt come forth & pay his det
In huſbonde wol I haue I wol not let Whiche ſhalbe both my dettour & my thrall
And haue his tribulacion with all
Upon his fleſhe, while that I am his wife
I haue the power during al my life
Upon his proper body, and nat he Right thus the apoſtle tolde to me
And bad our huſbondes for to loue vs well
Al this ſentence me liketh euery dell.
Up ſtert the Pardoner, and that anon
Now dame q he, by god and by ſeint John Ye ben a noble prechour in this caas
I was about to wedde a wife, alas
What, ſhould I bye it on my fleſhe ſo dere?
Yet had I leuer wedde no wife to yere
Abide q ſhe, my tale is not begon
Nay, thou ſhalte drinke of another ton
Er that I go, ſhal ſauer worſe then ale
And when that I haue told forth my tale
Of tribulacion that is in mariage
Of whiche I am expert in al myn age
This is to ſay, my ſelfe hath ben the whippe
Than maiſt ꝑ cheſe whider thou wolt ſlippe
Of thilke tonne, that I ſhal ſette abroche
Beware of it, er thou to nere approche
For I ſhall tell enſamples mo than ten
Who ſo wol not be ware by other men
By him ſhal other men corrected be Thoſe ſame wordes writeth Ptholome
Rede in his almageſt, and take it there.
Dame I wol pray you, if your wil were Said this Pardoner, as ye began
Tel forth your tale, ſpareth for no man
And teche vs yong men of your practike
Gladly (q ſhe) if it may you like
But that I pray to al this company
If that I ſpeke after my fantaſy
As taketh not a greſe of that I ſay
For mine entent is not but to play
Now ſirs, than ſhal I tel forth my tale:
As euer mote I drinke wine or ale
I ſhal ſay ſoth. Tho huſbondes that I had Thre of hem were good, and two were bad
The thre good men were riche and olde
Unnethes might thei the ſtatute holde
In which they were bounden vnto me
Ye wot well what I meane of this parde
As god me helpe, I laugh whan I thinke
How pitouſly a night I made him to ſwinke
But by my fay, I tolde of it no ſtore
They had me yeue her londe and her treaſore
Me neded no lenger to do diligence
To winne her loue, and do hem reuerence
They loued me ſo wel by god aboue
That I ne tolde no deinte of her loue
A wiſe woman will buſy her euer in one
To get her loue, there as ſhe hath none
But ſithen I had hem holly in mine honde
And that they had giue me all her londe
What, ſhould I take kepe hem for to pleaſe
But if it were for my profite and myn eaſe
I ſet hem ſo a worke by my faie
That many a night they ſongen wel a waie
The bacon was not fet for hem I trowe
That ſome men haue in Eſſex at Dōmowe
I gouerned hem ſo wel after my lawe
That eche of hem full bliſſfull was and fawe
To bring me gay thinges fro the fayre
They were ful fain whan I ſpake hem faire
For god it wot, I chidde hem ſpitouſly
Now herkeneth how I bere me properly.
Ye wiſe wiues that can vnderſtonde
Thus ſhul ye ſpeke, and bere hem on honde
For halfe ſo boldly there can no man
Swere and lye, as a woman can
I ſay not this by wiues that ben wiſe
But if it be, whan thei hem miſſe auiſe
A wiſe wife ſhall, if that ſhe can her goode
Bere hem in honde the cowe is woode
And take witneſſe of her owne mayde
Of her aſſent: but herkeneth how I ſayde.
Sir olde keynarde, is this thyn aray
Why is mine neighbours wife ſo gay?
She is honoured ouer all where ſhe gothe
I ſitte at home, and haue no thrifty clothe
What doſt thou at myn neighbours houſe
Is ſhe ſo fayre? art thou ſo amorous?
What rowneſt thou vn to our maid? benedicite
Sir olde lechour, let thy iapes be
And if I haue a goſſip or a frende
(Without gilte) thou chideſt as a fende
If that I walke or play vnto his houſe

Thou

Thou comeſt home as dröken as a Mouſe
And preacheſt on thy benche with iuell preſe
Thou ſaieſt to me, it is a great miſchefe
To wedde a poore woman for coſtage
And if that ſhe be riche of high parage
Than ſaieſt thou, it is a very tourmentrie
To ſuffer her pride and her Melancolie
And if that ſhe be faire, thou very knaue
Thou ſaieſt that euery holour woll her haue Shе maie no while in chaſtite abide
That is aſſailed on euery ſide
Thou ſaieſt ſome folke deſiren vs for richeſſe
Some for our ſhape, & ſome for our fairneſſe
And ſome, for ſhe can either ſing or daunce
And ſome for gentilneſſe or for daliaunce
Some for her hondes and her armes ſmale
Thus goeth all to the deuill by thy tale.
Thou ſaiſt men maie not kepe a caſtel wal
It maie ſo long aſſailed be ouer al
And if that ſhe be foule, thou ſaieſt that ſhe
Coueth euery man that ſhe maie ſe
For as a ſpaniell, ſhe woll on him lepe
Till that ſhe find ſome mã that wol her chepe
Ne non ſo graie Goſe goth there in the lake
(As ſaieſt thou) woll been without her make
And ſaieſt, it is a hard thing for to welde
A wight, that no man woll his thonke helde
Thus ſaiſt thou lorell, whã thou goeſt to bed
That no wiſe man nedeth for to wed
Ne no man that entendeth vnto heuin
With wilde thunder dent and fire leuin
Mote thy wicked neche be to broke.
Thou ſaiſt, dropping houſes, and ele ſmoke
And chiding wiues, maken men to flee
Out of her owne hous, ah, Benedicite what aileth ſoche an old man for to chide?
Thou ſaieſt, we wiues woll our vices hide
Till we be faſt, and than we woll hem ſhewe
Well maie this be a prouerbe of a ſhrewe.
Thou ſaiſt, ỳ oxen, hors, aſſes, and houndes
Thei been aſſaied at diuers ſtondes
Baſins, lauers, er that men hem bie
Spones, ſtooles, and all ſoche huſbondrie
And ſo be pottes, clothes, and araies
But folke of wiues maken non aſſaies
Till thei been wedded, old dotarde ſhrewe
And ſaieſt, how we wol than our vices ſhewe
Thou ſaieſt alſo, that it diſpleaſeth me
But if that thou wilt praiſe my beautie
And but thou poore alwaie on my face
And clepe me faire dame in euery place
And but thou make a feaſt on that ilke daie
That I was borne, & make me freſche and gay
And but thou doen to my norice honour
And to my chamber within my bour
And to my fathers folke, and his allies
Thou ſaieſt thou old barell full of lies.
And yet of our prentiſe Jenkin
For his criſpe heer, ſhining as gold fine
And for he ſquireth me bothe vp and doune
Haſt thou caught a falſe ſuſpeccion
I woll him nat, tho thou wer ded to morowe.
But tel me this, why hideſt thou with ſorowe
The keies of thy cheſt awaie fro me?
It is my good as well as thine parde what, weneſt ỹ make an idiot of our dame?
Now by that lorde that called is ſainct Jame
Thou ſhalt nat both though thou wer wood
Be maiſter of my body and of my good
That one thou ſhalt forgon maugre thin yẽ what helpeth it of me to enquere and ſpien?
I trowe thou wouldeſt locke me in thy chiſt?
Thou ſhouldeſt ſaie: wife, go where you liſt
Take your diſport, I woll leue no tales
I knowe you for a true wife dame Ales
We loue no mã, that taketh kepe or charge where that we go, we woll be at our large.
Of al men ibleſſed mote he be
The wiſe Aſtrologien Dan Ptholome
That ſaieth this prouerbe in his almageſt
Of all men his wiſedome is the beſt
That recketh not who hath the world in hõd
By this prouerbe thou ſhalt vnderſtonde
Haue thou inow, what dare the reche or care
How merely that other folke fare
For certes, old dotarde by your leue
Ye ſhall haue queint inow at eue
He is to great a nigarde that woll werne
A man, to light a candle at his Lanterne
He ſhall haue neuer the leſſe light parde
Haue thou inow, thou darſt not plain thee:
Thou ſaieſt alſo, that if we make vs gaie
With clothes, or with precious arraie
That it is perill of our chaſtite
And yet with ſorowe, thou muſt enforcẽ thee
And ſaie theſe wordes in the Apoſtles name
In habite made with chaſtite and ſhame
Ye women ſhould appareile you (ỹ he)
And nat in trefled heer, and gaie perre
Ne perril, ne with gold, ne clothes riche.
After the text, ne after thy rubriche
I will not worche as moche as a Gnatte
Thou ſaieſt alſo, I was like a Catte
But who ſo would ſenge the Cattes ſkinne
Than would the Catte dwellen in his Inne
And if the Cattes ſkinne be ſlicke and gaie
She will nat dwell in hous halfe a daie
But forth ſhe woll or any daie be dawed
To ſhewe her ſkin, and gon a Catrewawed
Thus thou ſaieſt, if I be gaie for ſhrewe

I woll ren out, my borell for to shewe
Sir old foole, what helpeth thee to spien
For though thou plaie Argus with his, c. iyē
To be my wardcors, as he can best
Insaith he shall not kepe me but my lest
Yet couth I make his berde, so mote I thee
Thou saiest eke, þ there been thinges three
The whiche troublen all this yerth
And that no wight maie endure the yerth
O, lefe sir shrewe, Jesu shorte thy life
Yet preachest thou, & saiest: an hateful wife
I rekened is, for one of these mischaunces
Been there non other resemblaunces:
That ye make liken your parables to
But if a sely wife be one of tho.
Thou likenest eke, womans loue to hell
To barain londe, there water maie not dwel
Thou liknest it also to wilde fire
The more it brenneth, the more it hath desire
To consume any thing that brent would be.
Thou saiest, right as wormes shendē a tre
Right so a wife destroieth her husbonde
This knowen thei that been to wiues bonde
Lordinges, right thus as ye haue vnderstōd
Bare I stiffely mine old husbonde on honde
That thus thei saiden in her dronkenesse
And all was fals, but as I tooke witnesse
Of Jenkin, and of my nece also O Lorde the pain I did hem, and the wo
Full giltles by Goddes swete pine
For as an hors, I couth both bite and whine
I couth plain, though I were in the gilt
Or els often time I had been spilt
Who so first to Mill cometh, first grint
I plained first, and so was our ware islint
Thei were full glad to excusen hem bliue
Of thing, that thei a gilt neuer in her life
Of wenches would I beare hem on honde
Whā that for sick, vnnethes might thei stond
Yet tickled I his hart, for that he Wende I had of him so great cheerte
I swore, that all my walking out by night
Was for to espie wenches, that he dight
Under that colour had I moche mirthe
For all soche wit, is giuen vs in our birthe
Disceipt, weping, spinning, God hath giue
To women, kindly while that thei liue
And thus of O thing I maie auaunt me
At thende I had the best in eche degre
By sleight or force, or by some maner thing
As by continuall murmure or grutching
Namely a bedde had thei mischaunce
There would I chide, and don no pleasaunce
I would no lenger in the bedde abide (If I felt his arme ouer my side)
Till he had made his raunsom vnto me
Than would I suffre him to doe his nicete
And therefore, euery man this tale I tell
Wiue who so maie, all been for to sell
With empty hōdes men maie no haukes lure
For winning would I all his lust endure
And make me than a fained appetite
And yet in Bacon had I neuer delite
That maked me euer that I would hem chide
For though the Pope had sitten hem beside
I would not spare hem at her owne borde
For be my truth I quit him worde for worde
As helpe me very God omnipotent
Tho I right now should make my testament
I ne owe hem a worde, but it is quitte
I brought it so about by my witte
That thei must giue it vp, as for the best
Or els had we neuer been in rest
For though he looked as woode as a Lion
Yet should he faile of his conclusion.
Than would I saie, good lefe take kepe
How mekely looketh wilken our shepe
Cum nere my spouse, & let me kisse your cheke
Ye should be all pacient and meke
And haue a swete spiced conscience
Sith ye so preache of Jobs pacience
Suffreth al waie, sith ye so well can preache
And but if ye doe, we shall you teache
That it is so faire to haue a wife in pees
One of vs two mote obeien doutles
And sith a man is more reasonable
Than a woman is, ye must been sufferable
What aileth you to grutche thus and grone
Is it for ye would haue me queint alone?
Why take it all: lo, haue it euery dell
Peter I shrewe you, but ye loue it well.
For if I would sell my belchose
I couth walke as freshe as any rose
But I woll kepe it for your owne toth
Ye be to blame by God, I saie you soth
Soche maner wordes had we on honde
Now woll I speake of my fourth husbonde.
My fourth husbonde was a reuelour
This is to saie, he had a paramour
And I was yong and full of ragerie
Stubburne and strong, and ioly as a Pie
Well coud I daunce, to an harpe smale
And sing i wis as a Nitingale
Whā I had dronken a draught of swete wine
Metellus, the foule churle the swine
That with a staffe biraft his wife her life
For that drōk wine: though I had be his wife
Ne should he not haue daunted me fro drinke
And after wine of Venus must I thinke
For also seker, as cold engendreth haile

A licorus mouth must haue a lecherous taile
In women vinolent is no defence
This knowe lecherous by experience.
But lorde Christ, when it remembreth me
Upon my youth, and my iolite
It tickleth me about the hart roote
Unto this daie it doeth my hart boote
That I haue had my worlde, as in my time
But age alas, that all woll enuenime
Hath me biraft my beaute, and my pith
Let go fare well, the deuill go therwith
The floure is gon, there nis no more to tell
The bran (as I best can) now mote I sell
But yet to be right merie woll I fonde
Now forth to tell of my fourth husbonde.
I saie I had in hart great dispite
That he of any other had delite
But he was quit, by God and sainct Joce
I made hym of the same woode a croce
Not of my body in no foule manere
But certainly, I made folke soche chere
That in his owne grece I made him frie
For anger, and for very ielousie
By God, in yearth I was his purgatorie
For whiche I hope his soule be in glorie
For God it wote, he sat full oft and song
Whan that his shoe full bitterly him wrong
There was none, saue God and he, that wist
In many while, how sore that I him twist
He died whan I came fro Jerusalem
And lieth in graue vnder the Rode beem
All nis his tombe so curious
As was the sepulture of him Darius
Whiche that Appelles wrought so subtelly
It is but wast to burie him preciously
Let him fare wel, god giue his soule good rest
He is now in his graue and in his chest.
Now of my fifth husbonde woll I tell
God let neuer his soule come in hell
And yet was he to me the most shrewe
That fele I on my ribbes all by rewe
And euer shall, vnto mine ending daie
But in our bedde he was so fresshe and gaie
And therewithall, he couth so well me glose
Whan that he would haue my bely chose
That though he had me bete one euery bone
He couth winne ayen my loue anone
I trowe I loued him the better, for that he Was of his loue so daungerous to me
We women haue, if that I shall nat lie
In this mattere, a queint fantasie
Waite what thing we maie nat lightly haue
Thereafter woll we all daie crie and craue Forbid vs thing, and that desiren we Prese on fast, and than woll we flee
With daunger vttren we all our chaffare
Great prees at market maketh dere ware
And to great chepe is hold at to little price
This knoweth euery woman that is wise
My fifth husbonde, God his soule blesse
Whiche I tooke for loue and no richesse
He some tyme was a clerke in Oxenforde
And had left schole, & went at home to borde
With my gossip, dwelling in our toun
God haue her soule, her name was Alisoun
She knewe my hart, and eke my priuite
Better than our parishe prieste so mote I thee
To her bewraied I my counsaill all
For had my husbonde pist against the wall
Or doen a thing, that should haue cost his life
To her, and to an other worthy wife
And to my nece, whiche that I loued well
I would haue told his counsaill euery dell
And so I did full often God it wote
That made his face full oft redde and hote
For very shame, and blamed him oft, for he Had told to me so great a priuite.
And so befill, that ones in a Lent
So oft time I to my gossip went
For euer yet I loued to go gaie
And for to walke in Marche, Aprill, & Maie
Fro hous to hous, to harken sondrie tales
That Jenkin clerke, and my gossip dame Ales
And I my self, into the fieldes went
My husbonde was at London all that Lent
I had the better laiser for to plese
And for to see, and eke for to be sene
Of lustie folke, what will I where my grace
Was shapen for to been, or in what place:
Therefore made I my visitacions
To vigilles, and to processions
To preaching eke, and to pilgrimages
To plaies of miracles, and to mariages
And wered on my gaie scarlet gites
These wormes, these moughtes, ne these mites (ne
Upon my parill fret hem neuer a dell
And woll thou why? for they were wed well
Now woll I tell forth what happed me
I saie, that in the fieldes walked we Till truely we had soche daliaunce
This clerke and I, that of my purueiaunce
I speake to him, and saied how that he
If I were wedowe, should wedde me
For certainly, I saie for no bostaunce
Yet was I neuer without purueiaunce
Of mariage, ne of other thinges eke
I hold a Mouses wit not worth a leke
That hath but one hole to sterten to
And if that faile, than is all idoe
I bare him on hand he had enchaunted me

My dame taught me lozloth that subtilte
And eke I saied, I met of him all night
He would a slain me, as I laie vpright
And all my bedde was full of very blood
But yet I hope truely he shoul doe me good For blood betokeneth gold, as I was taught and al was fals, I dzemed of him right nauzt
But as I followed aie my dames lore
As well of that, as of other thinges more.
But now sir let me se, what shall I sain
A ha, by God I haue my tale again
Whan that my fourth husbond was on bere
I wept algate, and made sozie chere
As wiues moten, for it is vsage
And with my kerchefe couered my visage
But for that I was purueied of a make
I wept but small, and that I vndertake
To church was my husband borne on morow with neighbours, that for him made sorow
And Jenkin our clerke was one of tho
As helpe me God, whan that I sawe him go
After the bere, me thought he had a paire
Of legges and of feete, so cleane and so faire
That all my hart, I yaue vnto his hold
He was I trowe twentie winter old
And I was fourtie, if that I shall saie sothe
But yet I had alwaie a Coltes tothe
Gaptothed I was, and that became me wele
I had the print of dame Venus seale
As helpe me God, I was a lustie one
And faire, riche, and yong, and well bigone
And truely, as mine husbonde told me
I had the best queint that might be
For certes I am all fully Venerian
In felyng, and my hart is Marcian
Venus me yaue my lust and my licorousnesse
And Mars yaue me my sturdie hardinesse
Min alcendent was Taure, & Mars therein
Alas alas, that euer loue was sin
I followed aie mine inclinacion
By vertue of my constellacion
That made me I couth not withdrawe
My chamber of Venus from a good felawe
Yet haue I Martes marke vpon my face
And also in a nother priuie place
For God so wisely by my saluacion
I loued neuer by no discrecion
But euer followed mine appetite
All were he short, long, blacke, or white
I tooke no kepe, so that he liked me
How poore he was, ne eke of what degre
What should I saie, but at ỹ monethes ende
This ioly clerke Jenken, that was so hende
Hath wedded me with greate solempnite
And to him yaue I all the londe and fee
That euer was yeuen me here biforе
But afterward repented me full sore
He nolde suffre nothing of my list
By God he smote me ones with his fist
For that I rent out of his booke a lefe
That of that stroke, my eres wer defe
Stubborne I was, as is a Lionesse
And of my tongue a veray iangleresse
And walke I would, as I had doen biforе Fro hous to hous, although he had it sworn
For which full oft time would he preache
And me of old Romain iestes teache
How he Sulpicius Gallus left his wife
And her forsoke terme of his life
Not but for open hede he her saie
Looking out at his dooze on a daie
In other Romain tolde he me by name
That for his wife was at a Sommer game
Without his weting, he forsoke her eke
And than would he vpon his Bible seke
That ilke prouerbe of Ecclesiaste
Wher he commaundeth, and forbiddeth faste
A man shal not suffre his wife go roile about
Than would he saie right thus out of dout
Who so buildeth his hous all of salowes
And prieeth his blind hors ouer the falowes
And suffreth his wife for to seche hallowes
He is worthy to be honged on the gallowes
But all for nought, I set not an hawe
Of his prouerbes, ne of his old sawe
Ne I would not of him corrected be
I hate him that my vices telleth me
And so doe mo (God wote) than I
This made him wode with me all vtterly
I nolde not forbeare him in no caas
Now woll I saie you soth by S. Thomas
Why that I rent out of his booke a lefe
For which he smote me, that I was defe
He had a boke, that gladly night and daie
For his disport, he would rede alwaie
He cleped it Valerie, and Theophrast
At which booke he lough alwaie full fast
And eke there was a clerke somtime at Rome
A Cardinall, that hight sainct Jerome
That made a booke ayenst Jouinian
In which booke there was eke Tertulian
Crisippus, Trotula, and Helowis
That was Abbesse nat ferre fro Paris
And eke the parables of Salomon
Ouides art, and bookes many one
And all these were bounden in one volume
And euery night and daie was his custome (Whan he had leiser and vacacioun
From other worldly occupacioun)
To reden in this booke of wicked wiues

Pr

He knewe of hem mo legendes and liues
Than been of good women in the Bible
For trusteth well, it is an impossible
That any clerke would speake good of wiues
But if it been of holy sainctes liues
Ne of non other woman neuer the mo
Who peinteth the Lion, tell me who?
By God, if women had written stories
As clerkes han, within her oratories (nesse
They would haue writtē of mē more wicked
Than all the marke of Adam maie redresse
The children of Mercurie and Uenus
Been in her working full contrarious
Mercurie loueth wisedome and science
And Uenus loueth riot and dispence
And for her diuers disposicion
Eche falleth in others exaltacion
And thus God wote, Mercurie is desolate
In Pisces, where Uenus is exaltate
And Uenus falleth where Mercurie is reised
Therefore no woman of no clerke is preised
The clerke whan he is old, & maie nought do
Of Uenus werkes, not worthe his old shoe
Than sit he doune, and writ in his dotage
That women can not kepe her mariage
But now to purpose, why I told thee
That I was beaten for a booke parde
Upon a night Jenkin, that was our sire
Redde vpon his booke, as he sate by the fire
Of Eue first, that for her wickednesse
Was all mankinde brought to wretchednesse
For whiche þ Jesu Christ himself was slain
That bought vs with his hart blood again
Lo here expresse of women maie ye finde
That woman was the losse of all mankinde
Tho rad he me how Sampson lost his heres
Sleping, his leman cut hem with her sheres
Through which treason lost he both his yen
Tho rad he me, if that I shall not lien
Of Hercules, and of his Deianire
That caused him to set himself a fire
Nothing forgat he the care and the wo
That Socrates had with his wiues two
How that Xantippe cast pisse on his hedde
This sely man sat still, as he were dedde
He wiped his hedde, no more durst he sain
But er the thunder stint there cometh rain
Of Pasiphae, that was Quene of Crete
For shrewednesse him thought that tale swete
Fie, speake no more, it is a grisely thing
Of her horrible lust and her liking
Of Clitennestra for her lecherie
That falsely made her husbonde for to die
He rad it with well good deuocion
He told me eke, for what occasion
Amphiaraus at Thebes lost his life
My husbonde had a legende of his life
Eriphilem that for an ouche of gold
Hath priuely vnto the Grekes told
Where that her husbonde hid him in a place
For whiche he had at Thebes sory grace
Of Lima told he me, and of Lucie
Thei bothe made her husbondes for to die
That one for loue, that other was for hate
Lima her husbonde on an euin late
Enpoisoned had, for that she was his foe
Lucia likerous loued her husbonde so
That for he should alwaie vpon her thinke
She gaue him soche a loue maner drinke
That he were dedde, er it were morowe
And thus algates husbondes han sorowe
Than told he me, how one Latumeus
Complained to his felowe Arius
That in his garden growed soche a tree
On whiche (he said) that his wiues three Honged himself for hartes despitous
O lefe brother (q̄ this Arius)
Yeue me a plant of this blissfull tree
And in my garden planted shall it be
Of later date of wiues hath he redde
That some han slain her husbandes in bedde
And let her lechour dight hem all the night
Whiles that the cors laie in flore vpright
And some had driuen nales in her brain
Whiles thei slepe, & thus thei haue hem slain
Some haue yeue hem poison in her drinke
He spake more harme than hart maie thinke
And therewithall he knewe mo proverbes
Thā in this world ther groweth grasse or herbes Bet is (q̄ he) thine habitacion
Be with a Lion, or a foule Dragon
Than with a woman vsing for to chide
Bet is (q̄ he) high in the rofe to abide Than with an angrie wife doun in an hous
They been so wicked and so contrarious
They haten, that their husbondes louen aie
He saied, a woman cast her shame awaie
Whan she cast of her smocke: and farther mo
A faire woman, but she be chast also
Is like a gold ring on a Sowes nose
Who could wene, or who could suppose
The wo, that in mine hart was and pine
And whan I sawe he would neuer fine
To reden on this cursed booke all night
All sodainly three leues haue I plight
Out of his booke, right as he radde, and eke
I with my fist so tooke him on the cheke
That in the fire he fell backward adoun
And vp he stert, as doeth a wode Lion
And with his fist he smote me on mine hedde

That

The wife of Bathes tale.

That in the floze I laie as I were dedde
And whan he seie how still that I laie
He was agast, and would haue fled awaie
Till at the last out of my swoun I braied
Oh, hast thou slain me falsе theefe I saied
For my londe thus hast thou murdred me:
Er I be dedde, yet woll I ones kisse thee
And nere he came, and kneled faire a doun
And saied: dere suster, swete Alisoun
As helpe me God I shall thee neuer smite
That I haue doen it is thy selfe to wite
Forzeue it me, and that I thee beseke
And yet eft sones I hitte him on the cheke
And saied: theefe, thus moche am I be wreke
Now woll I die, I maie no lenger speke.
But at the last, with mokell care and wo
We fell accorded within our seluen two
He yaf me all the bridell in myne honde
To haue the gouernaunce of hous and londe
And of his tongue, and of his honde also
And made hem brenne his booke anon tho
And whan I had gotten vnto me
By maistrie, all the soueraintе
Than he saied: mine owne true wife
Doe as thou list, the terme of all thy life
Kepe thyne honour, and eke mine estate
After that daie we had neuer debate
God helpe me so, I was to him as kinde
As any wife fro Denmarke vnto Inde
And also true, and so was he to me
I praie to God, that sitte in Maiestie
So blisse his soule, for his mercie dere
Now woll I saie my tale if ye woll here.
The frere lough whā he had heard all this Now dame (quod he) so haue I ioie or blis
This is a long preamble of a tale
And whā the Sompner herd the frere gale
Lo (quod this Sompner) by Goddes armes two
A frere woll entermete him euermo
Lo good men, a flie and eke a frere
Woll fall in euery dishe and eke matere
What speakest thou of preambulacion?
What amble or trot, either peace or sit a doun
Thou letтest our disport in this mattere.
Ye woltt thou so sir Sompner (quod the frere)
Now by my faie I shall, er that I go Tell of a Sompner, soche a tale or two
That all the folke shull laugh in this place.
Now elis frere I beshrewe thy face
(Quod this Sompner) and I beshrewe me
But if I tell tales two or thre
Of freres, er I come to Sittyngburne
That shall make thine hart for to murne
For well I wot thy pacience is goon.
Our hoste cried peace, and that anoon
And saied: let the woman tell her tale
Ye faren as folke, that dronken been of ale
Doe dame, tel forth your tale, and that is best
All redy sir (quod she) right as you lest
If I haue licence of this worthy frere
Yes dame, tell forth your tale, I woll it here.

Here endeth the wife of Bathes Prologue, and here beginneth her Tale.

In the olde daies of kyng Artoure (Of whiche the Bretons speaken great honour
All was this londe fulfilled of fairie
The Elfe quene, with her ioly companie
Daunsed full oft in many a grene mede
This was the old opinion as I rede
I speake of many an hundred yere a go
But now can no man se none elfes mo
For now the great charite and praiers
Of limitours and other holy freres
That serchen euery lande and euery streme
As thicke as motes in the Sunne beme
Blissing halles, chambers, kichens, and bowres
Citees, borowes, castelles, and hie toures
Thropes, Bernes, shepens, and Deiries
This maketh, that there been no fairies
For there as wont to walke was an Elfe
There walketh now the limitour himself
In vndermeles, and in morwnynges
And saieth his Mattins, and his holy thinges
As he goeth in his limitacioun
Women maie go safely vp and doun
In euery bushe, and vnder euery tre
There nis none other incubus but he
And he ne will doen hem no dishonour.
And so fell it, that this kyng Artour
Had in his house a lustie bacheler
That on a daie come ridyng fro the riuer
And happed, that alone as he was borne
He sawe a maide walkyng him biforne
Of whiche maide anon, maugre her hed
(By very force) he bereft her maidenhed
For whiche oppression was soche clamour
And soche pursute vnto kyng Artour
That dampned was this knight to be dedde
By course of lawe, and should haue lost his hed
Peraventure soche was the statute tho
But that the Quene, and other ladies mo
So long praiden the king of grace
Till he his life graunted in that place

And yaue him to the quene, al at her will
To chese where ỹ she wuld him saue or spill
The quene thãketh ỹ king wt all her might
And after this, thus spake she to the knight whan she sey her time on a day.
Thou standeth yet (qꝑ she) in such aray
That of thy life yet hast thou no suerte
I graunt the thy life, if that thou cãst tell me what thing is it, that women most desiren
Beware, and kepe thy necke bone from yren
And if thou canst not tel it me anon yet wol I yeue the leue for to gon
A twelue moneth and a day, to seke and lere
An answere sufficient in this matere
And suertie wol I haue, er that thou passe
Thy body for to yelde in this place.
Wo was the knight, & sorowfully he siketh
But what: he may not don al as him liketh
And at last he chese him for to wende
And come ayen, right at the yeres ende with such answer, as god wold him purueye
And taketh his leue, & wẽdeth forth his way
He seketh euery house and euery place where as he hopeth for to finde grace
To lerne, what thing women louen most But he ne couth ariuen in no coost where as he might finde in this matere
Two creatures accordyng ylere
Some said, women loued best richesse
Some said honour, some said iolynesse
Some said riche aray, some said lust a bed
And ofte time to ben widowe and wed
Some said, that our herte is moste y esed whan that we ben flatered and y plesed
He goeth ful nye the sothe, I wol not lye
A man shall winne vs best with flaterye
And with attendaunce, and with busines
Ben we ilymed both more and lesse.
And some men sain, how ỹ we louen best
For to ben fre, and do right as vs lest
And that no man repreue vs of our vice
But say that we be wise, and nothing nice
For trewly there nis none of vs all
If any wight wol clawe vs on the gall
That we nil hike, for that he saith vs sothe
Assaye, and he shal finde it, that so dothe
For be we neuer so vicious within we woll be holden wise and cleane of sin.
And some men sain, ỹ great delite haue we
For to ben holde stable and eke secre
And in o purpose stedfastly to dwell
And nat bewray thing that men vs tell
But that tale is not worth a rake stele
Parde we women can nothing hele
Witnesse of Midas, woll ye here the tale?

Ouide, among other thinges smale
Said, Midas had vnder his long heres
Growing on his heed, two asses eres
The which vice he hidde, as he best might Ful subtelly from euery mannes sight
That saue his wife, there wiste of it no mo
He loued her most, and trusted her also
He prayed her, that to no creature
She nolde tellen of his disfigure.
She swore him, nat for all ỹ world to win
She nolde do that villany, ne that sin
To makẽ her husbonde haue so foule a name
She nold nat tel it for her owne shame
But natheles, her thought that she dide
That she so long should a counsaile hide
Her thought it swol so sore about her hert
That nedely some word she must a sert
And sith she durst tellen it to no man
Doun to a marris fast by she ran
Til she came there, her hert was on a fyre
And as a bittour bumbeth in the myre
She laid her mouth vnto the water adoun
Bewray me not thou water with thy soun
Quod she, to the I tell it, and to no mo
My husbonde hath long Asses eres two
Now is myn hert al hole, now it is out
I might no lenger kepe it out of dout.
Here mowe ye se, though we a time abide yet out it mote, we can no counsaile hide
The remnaunt of the tale, if ye wil here
Redeth Ouide, and there ye may it lere.
This knight, of which my tale is specially Whã that he sawe, he might not come therby
This is to say, what women louen moste within his herte sorouful was his goste
But home he goth, he might not sojourne
The day was come, he must home returne
And in his way, it happed him to ride
In al his care, vnder a forest side where he sawe vpon a daunce go
Of ladies foure and twenty, and yet mo
Toward the daunce, he drowe him, & ỹ yerne
In hope that some wisdome shoulde he lerne
But certainly, er that he came fully there
Vanished was the daunce, he nist not where No creature saw he that bare life
Saue in ỹ grene, he saw sitting an olde wife
A fouler wight there may no man deuise
Againe the knight the olde wife gan arise
And said: sir knight, here forth lieth no way
Tell me what ye seken by your fay Peraduenture it may the better be
This olde folke conne muche thing (qꝑ she)
My lefe mother (qꝑ this knight) certaine
I nam but deed, but if that I can saine

The wife of Bathes tale.

What thing it is, that women most desire
Coud ye me wisse, I wold quite wel your hire Plight me thy trouth here in my hãd (q she)
The nert thing that I require of the Thou shalt it do, if it be in thy might
And I wol tel it you, or it be night.
Haue here my trought (q ỹ knizt) I graut
Than q she, I may me wel auaunt
Thy life is safe, for I wol stonde therby
Upon my life, the quene wil say as I
Let se, which is the proudest of hem all
That wereth on a kerchefe or a call
That dare say nay, of that I shall you teche
Let vs go forth without lenger speche.
Tho rowned she a pistel in his ere
And bad him to be glad, and haue no fere.
Whã they ben comen to ỹ court, this knizt
Said, he had hold his day, as he hadight
And redy was his answere, as he saide
Ful many a noble wife, and many a maide
And many a widow, for that they be wise
(The quene her selfe, sitting as a iustise)
Assembled ben, his answere for to here
And afterward this knight was bode apere
To euery wight cõmaunded was silence
And that the knight should tel in audience
What thing that worldly women loued best
This knight ne stode not stil as doth a best
But to his question anon answerde
With manly voice, that al the court it herde
My liege lady: generally, q he Women desiren to haue souerainte
As well ouer her husbondes as her loue
And for to ben in maistrie hem aboue
This is your most desire, though ye me kill Doth as you list, I am here at your will.
In al the court nas there wife ne maide
Ne widow, that contraried, that he saide
But said, he was worthy han his life
And with that word, up sterte the olde wife
Which ỹ the knight sonde sitting on ỹ grene
Mercy (q she) my soueraine lady quene
Er that your court depart do me right
I taught this answere vnto this knight
For which he plight me his trouth there
The first thing I would of him requere
He wold it do, if it lay in his might Before the court than pray I the sir knight (Qd she) that thou me take vnto thy wife
For wel thou wost, that I haue kept thy life
If I say falle, say nay vpon thy fay.
This knight answerd, alas and wela way
I wot right wel that such was my behest
For goddes loue chese a newe requeste
Take al my good, and let my body go.
Nay q she, than I shrewe vs both two
For though that I be foule, olde, and pore
I nolde for al the metall ne the ore
That vnder yerth is graue, or lithe aboue
But if I thy wife were and thy loue.
My loue (q he) nay my dampnacion
Alas that any of my nacion
Should euer so foule disparaged be But al for nought, the ende is this, that he Constrained was, ỹ nedes muste he her wed
And taketh this olde wife, and goth to bed.
Now wolden some men say parauenture
That for my negligence, I do no cure
To tellen you the ioye and the array
That at the feast was that ilke day.
To the which thing answere shortly I shal
I say there nas no ioy ne feest at al
There nas but heuinesse and muche sorowe
For priuely he wedded her on a morowe
And al day after hidde him as an oule
So wo was him, his wife loked so foule.
Gret was ỹ sorow ỹ knizt had in his thought
Whã he was with his wife a bedde ibrought
He walweth, and turneth to and fro.
His olde wife lay smiling euermo
And said: O dere husbonde, O benedicite
Fareth euery knight thus as ye?
Is this the lawe of king Artours house?
Is euery knight of his loue so daungerous?
I am your owne loue, and eke your wife
I am she, which that saued hath your life
And certes yet did I neuer you vnright
Why fare ye thus with me the first night
Ye faren like a man that had lost his wit
Fy, what is my gilt? for gods loue tel me it
And it shal be amended if I may.
I mended (q this knight) alas nay nay
That wol not ben amended neuer mo
Thou art so lothly, and so olde also
And therto comen of so lowe a kinde
That litle wõder is thouz I walowe & winde
So would god (q he) mine hert would breste.
Is this (q she) the cause of your vnreste?
ye certainly q he, no wonder nis.
Now sir (q she) I couth amende al this
If that me list, er it were daies thre
So wel ye might beare you vnto me.
But for ye speke of such gentilnesse
As is discended out of olde richesse
That therfore shullen ye be gentilmen
Such errogaunce is not worthe an hen.
Lo who that is most vertuous alway
Preuy and aperte, and most entendeth aye
To do the gentil dedes, that he can Take him for the greatest gentilman.

Christ

Christ would we claimed of hi our gētilnesse
Not of our elders, for our olde richesse
For though they yeue vs all her heritage
For which we claymen to ben of hie parage yet may thei not byqueth, for nothing
To none of vs, her vertuous liuing
That made him gentilmen icalled be
And bad vs folowen hem in such degre.
Wel can the wise poete of Florence
That hight Daunte, speke in this sentence
Lo in suche maner rime is Dauntes tale
Ful selde vp riseth by his braunches smale Prowesse of man: for god of his goodnesse wol that we claime of him our gentilnesse
For of our elders may we nothing claime
But temporal thing, ỹ men may hurt & maime Eke euery wight wot this as wel as I
If gentilnes were planted naturally
Unto a certaine linage doun the line
Preuy and aperte, than wold thei neuer fine
To done of gentilnesse the faire office
Thei might don no vilany ne vice Take fire and beare it into the derkest hous
Bitwirt this and the mount Caucalus
And let men shitte the doores, and go thenne yet wol the fire as fayre lye and brenne
As twenty thousande men might it beholde
His office natural aye wol it holde
Up peril of my life, till that it dye.
Here may ye se well, how that gentrye
Is not annexed to possession
Sithen folke don not her operacion
Alway as doth the fyre, lo in his kinde
For god it wot, men may ful often finde
A lordes sonne done shame and vilany
And he that wol haue prise of his gentry
For he was borne of a gentil house
And had his elders noble and vertuous
And nil him selfe don no gentil dedes
Ne folow his gentil auncetre that deed is
He nis not gentil, be he duke or erle
For vilaines, sinful dedes maketh a cherle
For gentilnesse nis but the renomie
Of thine auncetors, for her highe bountie
Which is a strong thing to thy persone
For gentilnesse commeth fro god alone
Than cometh our very gentilnesse of grace
It was nothing biqueth vs with our place.
Thinketh how noble, as saith Valerius
Was thilke Tullius Hostilius
That out of pouertie rose to hie noblesse
Redeth Seneck, and redeth eke Boece
There shall ye seen expresse, no drede is That he is gentile, that doth gentile dedes
And therfore dere husbond, I thus conclude Al were it that mine auncetors were rude yet may that hie god, and so hope I
Graunt me grace to liue vertously
Than am I gentil, whan I beginne
To liue vertuously, and leuen sinne.
And there as ye of pouertie me repreue
The hie god, on whom that we bileue
In wilful pouerte chese to lede his life
And certes euery man, maide, and wife
May vnderstonde, Jesu heuen king
Ne would not chese a vicious liuing.
Glad pouert is an honest thing certaine
This wol Seneck and other clerkes saine
Who so would holde him paide of his pouert
I holde him riche, all had he not a shert
He that coueiteth is a full pore wight
For he wold han, that is not in his might
But he ỹ nought hath, ne coueiteth to haue
Is rich, although ye hold him but a knaue
Very pouert is sinne properly
Juuenal saith of pouert merily
The poore man, whan he goeth by the way
Byfore theues, he may singe and play
Pouert is hatefull good: and as I gesse
A ful great bringer out of bustinesse
A great amender eke of sapience
To him that taketh it in pacience
Pouert is, although it seme elenge
Possession, that no wight wol chalenge.
Pouerte ful often, whan a man is lowe
Maketh his god and eke him selfe to knowe.
Pouert a spectacle is, as thinketh me
Through which one may his very frendes se
And therfore, sin that I you not greue
Of my pouert, no more me repreue.
Now sir, eke of elde ye repreued me
And certes sir, though none auctorite
Were in no boke ye gentils of honour
Saine that men shuld an olde wight honour
And clepe hem father for her gentilnesse
And autours shal I finde, as I gesse.
Now there as ye sain, ỹ I am foule and olde
Than drede you not to ben a cokewolde
For filthe, elthe, and foule, also mote I the Ben great wardeins vpon chastite
But natheles, sin I know your delite
I shal fulfil your worldly appetite
Chese now (q she) one of these thinges twey
To haue me foule and olde, til that I dey
And be to you a trewe humble wife
And neuer you displease in al my life
Or els wol you haue me yong and faire
And take your auenture of the repayre
That shal come to your house, because of me
Or in some other place, may well be.

The Freres Prologue,

Now chese your seluen whether ỹ you liketh
This knight auiseth him, and sore siketh
But at the laste, he said in this manere:
My lady and my loue, and wife so dere
I put me in your wise gouernaunce
Chese ye your selfe, whiche maye be more ple-
And most honour to you & me also (saunce
I do no force whether of the two
For as you liketh, it suffiseth me.
Than haue I gote of you ỹ maistry (q̃ she)
Sin I may chese, and gouerne as my liste
Ye certes wife (q̃ he) I holde it for the beste
Kisse me (q̃ she) we be no lenger wrothe
For by my trueth, I woll be to you bothe
This is to say, to be bothe fayre and good
I pray to God that I mote sterue wood
But I to you be also good and trewe
As euer was wife, sithen ỹ world was newe
And but I be to morow as faire to sene
As any Lady, Empresse, or Quene
That is betwene Est and est the west
Doth with my life right as you lest Cast vp the courtein, and loke how it is.
And when this knight sawe al this
That she so fayre was, and so yonge therto
For ioye hent her in his armes two
His herte bathed in the bathe of blisse
A thousande times a rowe he gan her kisse
And she obeyed him in euery thing
That mought done him pleasure or liking
And thus they liued vnto her liues ende
In parfite ioye: and Iesu Christ vs sende
Husbondes meke, yong, and freshe a bedde
And grace to ouerlyue hem that we wedde.
And I pray to God, to shorte her liues
That will not be gouerned by her wiues
And old, and angry nigardes of dispence
God sende hem soone a very pestilence.

Here endeth the wife of Bathes tale, and here beginneth the Freres Prologue.

This worthye limitour, this noble Frere
He made alway a maner louring chere vpon the Sompner, but for honeste
No vilaynes worde as yet to him spake he
But at the last, he said to the wife Dame, God yeue you right good life ye haue touched here, also mote I the
In scole matter, a full great difficulte
Ye haue said muche thing right wel I saye
But dame, here as we riden by the waie vs nedeth not to speken but of game
And lette auctorities a goddes name
To preching, and to schole of clergie.
But if it like vnto this companie
I wol you of a Sompner tell a game
Parde ye maie well knowe by the name
That of a Sompner may no good be said
I pray, that none of you be yuell apaide
A Sompner is a renner vp and doun
With maundementes, for fornication
And is ybeate at euery tounes ende.
Tho spake our host & said: sir ye shuld ben
And curteis, as a man of your estate (hende
In this companie we wol no debate Telleth your tale, and let the Sompner be Nay (q̃ the Sompner) let him say to me
What so him liste: whan it cometh to my lot
By God I shall him quite euery grote
I shall him tell whiche a great honour
It is, to be a flattering limitour
And eke of many an other maner crime
Whiche needeth nat to reherse at this time
And of his office I shall him tell ywis
Our host answerde: peace, no more of this
And afterwarde he said vnto the frere
Tel forth your tale, mine owen maister dere.

Here endeth the Freres prologue, and here after folo-weth his tale.

Whylom there was dwelling in my countre
An Archedeken, a man of hye degre
That boldly dyd execucion
In punishinge of fornication
Of witchecrafte, and eke of baudrye
Of defamacion, and aduoutrie
Of churche reues, and of testamentes
Of contractes and lacke of sacramentes
Of vsery, and of simony also
But certes lecherours dyd he muche wo
They shoulden sing, if they weren hent
And smale tythers they were soule ishent
If any person would vpon hem plaine
There might astert hem no pecunial paine
For smale tithes, and smale offringe
He made the people petously to singe
For er the bishop caught hem with his hoke
They were in the archedekens boke
And than had he (through his iurdiction)

Power

power to done on hem correction
He had a Sompner redy to his honde
A lier boye was there non in Englonde
For subtelly he had his espiayle
That taught him where he might auayle
He couthe spare of lechours one or two
To techen him to foure and twenty mo
For though this sompner wode wer as an hare
To tell his harlotrye I woll not spare
For we ben out of his correction
They haue of vs no iurdiction
Ne neuer shullen, terme of all her liues.
Peter so ben women of the shrewes.
(Qd this Sompner) ypput out of our cure.
Peace with mischaūce & with misauenture
Said our hoste, and let him tell his tale
Now telleth forth and let the Sompner gale
He spareth not, mine owne maister dere.
This false theef, this sompner (q the Frere)
Had alway baudes redy to his honde
As any hauke to lure, in Englonde
That telleth him al the secre that they knew
For her aquaintaunce was nat come a new
They weren his aprouers priuely
He tolde him selfe a great profite therby
His maister knew not alway what he wan
Without maundement, a leude man
He coude sōmon, on paine of christes curse
And they were glad to fillen his purse
And made him greate feestes at the nale
And right as Iudas had purses smale
And was a theef: right suche a theef was he
His maister had but halfe his duetie
He was (if I shall yeue him his laude)
A theef, a sompner, and eke a baude.
He had eke wenches of his retinue
That whether sir Roberde, or sir Hue
Or Iohn, or Rafe, or who so that it were
That lay by hem, they tolde it in his eere
Thus were the wenches and he of one assent
And he would fetche a fained maundement
And sommon hem to the chapiter bothe two
And pill the man, and let the wenche go
Than wold he say, frende I shall for thy sake
Do striken the out of our letters blake
Thou dare no more as in this case trauaile
I am thy frende, there I may the auaile
Certaine he knew of bribries mo
Than possible is to tel in yeres two
For in this world nis dogge for the bowe
That can an hurt dere from an hole knowe
Bet than the Sompner knew a false lechour
Or auouter, or els any paramour
For that was the fruite of al his rente
Therfore on it he sette al his entente.

And so befel that ones on a day
This Sompner waiting euer on his pray
Rode for to sommon an olde wedowe a ribibe
Fayning a cause, for he would haue a bribe
And happed that he saw before him ride
A gay yoman vnder a forest side
A bowe he bare, and arrowes bright a shine
He had vpon him a courtpie of grene
An hatte vpon his heed with stringes blake
Sir q this Sompner, haile and well itake
Welcome q he, and euery good felawe
Whider rides ꝑ vnder the grene wode shawe
Said this yoman, wolte thou ferre to day?
This Sompner him answerd, and said: nay
Here fast by (q he) is mine entent
To riden, for to reysen vp a rent
That longeth to my lordes duete.
Art thou than a bayliue (q he)
He durst nat than, for very filth and shame
Say that he was a Sompner, for the name
Depardieux, q this yoman lefe brother
Thou art a bayly, and I am another
I am vnknowen, as in this countre
Of thine acquaintaunce I wol pray the
And eke of brotherhed, if that thou list
I haue golde and siluer in my chist
Yf that ye happe to come in our shire
All shall be thine, right as thou wolte desire
Graūt mercy q this sompner, by my faithe
Euerich in other his trueth laithe
For to be swore brethren, til they dey
And with that word they riden forth her wey
This sompner with ꝑ, was as ful of iāgles
As ful of venim, as ben these wariangles
And euer requiring vpon euery thing
Brother q he, where is your dwelling
Another day, if that I shuld you seche
This yoman him answerd in softe speche
Brother q he, ferre in the North contre
Where as I hope sometime I shall the se
Or we departe, I shall the so well wisse
That of mine house thou shalte neuer misse.
Now brother q the sompner, I you pray
Teche me, while we riden by the way
Sith that ye ben a bayly, as am I
Some subtelte, tel me faithfully
In mine office, how I may most winne
And spareth not for conscience ne for sinne
But as my brother, tel me how don ye
Now by my trouth brother dere, said he
As I shall tellen thee a faithful tale
My wages ben full straite and smale
My lorde is harde to me and daungerous
And mine office ful labourous
And therfore, by extorcion I leue

Forsoth al that men wol me yeue
Algate by sleyght or by violence
From yere to yere I wyn al my dispence
I can no better telleu faithfully
Now certes q the sompnour, so fare I
I spare not to take god it wote
But if it be to heuy or to hote
That I may getten in counsayle priuely
No maner conscience of that haue I
Nere myn extorcion, I might not liuen
Of such iapes wol I not be shriuen Stomake ne conscience know I non
I shrewe al these shrift fathers euerychon
Wel be we met by god and swet saint Iame
But leue brother, tel me thy name
Qd this Sompner in this meane while
This yoman gan a litle for to smile
Brother q he, woite thou that I the telle
I am a fende my dwelling is in hell
And here I ride about my purchasing
To wete ware I may get any thing
My purchase is theffect of all my rent
Loke how thou ridest for the same entent
To win good, thou rekkest never how Right so fare I, for ride wol I now
Unto the worldes ende for a pray
Ah, q this sompner, benedicite, what ye say
I wende ye were a yomon trewly
Ye haue a mannes shappe as well an I
Haue ye a figure than determinate
In hel, there ye ben in your estate?
Nay certainly q he, there haue we none
But whan vs liketh, we can take vs one
Or elis make you seme we ben shape
Somtime like a man or like an ape
Or like an Angel can I ride or go
It is no wonder thing though it be so
A lousy iuggler can disceue the
And parde yet can I more craft than he Why q ꝑ Sompnour, ride ye than or gon
In sondry shappe, and not al way in one?
For we q he, wol vs such forme make
As moste able is our prayers for to take What maketh you to haue al this labour?
Ful many a cause lefe sir Sompnour
Said this fende, but all thing hath time
The day is shorte, and it is passed prime
And yet ne gote I nothing in this day
I wol entende to winning, if that I may
And nat entende our wittes to declare
For brother mine, thy wittes ben all to bare
To vnderstande al, though I wold tel hem the But for thou askest why labouren we
For somtime be we goddes instrumentes
And meanes to done his commaundementes
When that him luste on his creatures
In diuers arte and in diuers figures
Withouten him we haue no might certain
If that him liste to stonden there again
And somtime at our prayer haue we leue
Onely the body, and nought the soule to greue
Witnesse of Job, whom we deden wo
And somtime haue we might of bothe two
This is to sain, of body and soule eke
And somtime we ben suffred for to seke
Upon a man, and don his soule vnrest
And nat his body, and all is for the best
When he withstandeth our temptacion
It is a cause of his saluacion
Al be it that it was not oure entent
He shuld be sake, but that we would him hent
And sometime be we seruauntes vnto man
As the archbishoppe saint Dunstan
And to the apostle eke seruaunt was I yet tell me q this Sompnour faithfully
Make ye you newe bodies thus alway
Of elementes? the fende answerde nay
Somtime we fain, and somtime we arise
With deed bodies in sondrie wise
And speke as reuably, faire and well
As the Phitonesse did to Samuell
And yet would some men say it was nat he
I do no force of your deunite
But o thing I warne the, I wol not Iape
Thou wolt algates wete howe we be shape
Thou shalt herafterward (my brother dere)
Come, where the nedeth not of me to lere
For thou shalt by thine owne experience
Conne in the chare rede of this sentence
Bette than Vergill, while he was on liue
Or Dauut also. Now lette vs ride blyue
For I wol holde company with the Till it be so that thou forsake me
Nay q this Sompnour ꝑ shall not betide
I am a yoman knowen full wide
My trouth wol I hold to the, as in this caas
For though thou were the deuill Sathanas
My trouth wol I holde to my brother
As I am sworne, and eche of vs to other
For to be trewe brother in this caas
And brother, we gon to our purchaas
Take thou thy parte, that men woll the yeue
And I shal mine, and thus shall we both leue
And if that any of vs haue more than other
Let him be trew, a parte it with his brother
I graunt q the deuill, by my fay
And ꝙ that worde they riden forth her way
And right at thentring of the tounes ende
(To which the sompner shope him for to wende)
They saw a carte, that charged was ꝙ hay
Whiche

whiche that a carter droue forth on his waie Depe was the waie, for whiche the cart stood
This carter smote, & striued as he were wood
Hett scot hett brok, what spare ye for ꝑ stones
The fende q he, you fetche body and bones
As ferforth as euer ye were stoled
So moche wo as I haue for you tholed
The deuill haue al, bothe hors, cart, and haie q this Sompner, here shal we haue a praie
And nere the fende he drue, as nought ne wer
Full priuely, and rouned in his ere Herken brother hersen, by thy faith
Hearest thou what the carter saith?
Hent it anon, for he hath yeue it thee
Bothe haie and cart, and eke his caples three Naie q the deuill God wotte neuer a deie
It is not his entent trust me wele
Aske him thy self, if thou trowest not me
Or els stint a while and thou shalt se
This carter thacked his hors on the croupe
And thei begon to drawe and to stoupe
Hett now q he, that Jesus Christ you blesse
And all his hondy werke, both more and lesse
That was well it wight mine own liard boy
I praie God saue the and saiuct Loy
Now is my cart out of the slowe parde.
Lo brother q the fende, what told I thee
Here maie ye seen mine own dere brother
The carle spake o thig but he thought another
Let vs go forth about our viage
Here win we nothing vpon carriage
Whan ꝑ thei comen, fo what out of the toun
This Sompner to his brother gan to roune
Brother q he, here wonneth an old rebecke
That had almoste as lefe to lese her necke
As for to yelde a peny of her good
I woll haue, xii. d. tho that she were wood
Or I woll compne her to our office
And yet God wotte of her I knowe no vice
But for thou canst nat, as in this countre
Winne thy cost, take here ensample of me.
This Sõpner clappeth at ꝑ wedowes gate
Come out he saied, thou old veritrote
I trowe thou hast some frere or preest w thee
Who clappeth there said this wife, benedicite
God saue you sir, what is your swete will
I haue q he, of sommons of the here a bill
Vp pain of curling looke that thou be
To morowe before our Archdeacons kne
To answere to the court of certain thinges
Now lorde q she, Jesu king of kinges
So wisely helpe me, as I ne maie
I haue been sicke, and that full many a daie
I maie nat go so ferre, q she, ne ride
But I be dedde, so pricketh it in my side
Maie I not take a libell sir Sompnour
And answere there by my proctour
To suche thing as men would appose me
Yes q this Sompner, paie anon let se
Twelfe pens to me, and I will the acquite
I shall no profite haue here of but lite
My maister hath the profite and not I Come of and let me ridden hastely
Giue me. xii. pens I maie no lenger tary
Twelfe pens q she, lady sainct Mary
So wisely helpe me out of care and sinne
This wide world though I should it winne
Ne haue I nat. xii. d. within my holde
Ye knowe well, that I am poore and olde
Kith your almesse on me poore wretche
Naie than q he, the foule fende me fetche
If I thee excuse, though ꝑ shouldest be spilt
Alas q she, God wotte yet haue I no gilt
Paie me q he, or by swete sainct Anne
I woll beare awaie the newe panne
For debt, whiche thou owest me of old
When thou madest thy husbonde cokold
I paied at home for thy correccion
Thou liest q she, by my saluacion
Ne was I neuer er now, widowe ne wife
Sompned vnto your courte in all my life
Ne neuer I nas but of body trewe
Vnto the deuill blacke and rough of hewe Yeue I thy body and my panne also.
And whan the deuill heard her curse so
Vpon her knees, he saied in this manere
Now Mably, mine owne mother dere
Is this your will in earnest that ye seie
The deuill q she, fet him er he die
And panne and all, but he woll him repent.
Naie old stotte, that is not mine entent,
Quod this Sompner, for to repent me
For any thing that I haue had of thee
I would I had thy smocke and euery clothe.
Now brother q the deuill, be not wrothe
Thy body and this panne is mine by right
Thou shalt with me to hell yet to night
Where thou shalt knowen of our priuite
More than a maister of diuinite
And with ꝑ word the foule fende him hent
Body and soule, he with the deuill went Where that Sompners haue their heritage
And God that made after his Image
Mankinde, saue and guide vs and some
And leave the Sõpner good man to become Lordinges I coud haue told you, ꝑ this frere
Had I had leiser, of this Sompner here
After the tert of Christ, Poule, and Jhon
And of other doctours many one
Suche paines, as your hartes might agrise

Albeit so, that no tongue maie it deuise
Though that I might a thousand Winter tel
The peines of that cursed hous of hell
But for to kepe vs from that cursed place
Wake, and praie Jesu of his grace
So kepe vs from the temptour Sathanas
Harkeneth this word, beware as in this caas
The Lion sitteth in his awaite alwaie
To slea the innocent, if that he maie
Disposeth aie your hartes to withstond
The fend, that thou would make thral & bond
He maie not tempt you ouer your might
For Christ woll be your champiõ and knight
And praieth, that this Sompner him repent
Of his misdede, er that the fende him hent.

Here endeth the Freres tale, and beginneth the Sompners Prologue.

This Sompner in his stirropes hie stoode
Upon this Frere, his hart was so woode
That like an Aspen lefe he quoke for ire
Lordinges (quod he) but one thing I desire
I you beseche, that of your curtesie
Sithens ye han heard this false Frere lie
As suffereth me I maie my tale tell
This Frere boasteth that he knoweth hell
And God wote that is little wonder
Freres and fendes been but little asonder
For parde, ye han oft time heard tell
How that a Frere rauished was to hell
In spirite ones by a vision
And as an Angell led him vp and doun
To shewe him the paines that there were
In all the place saw he not a Frere
Of other folke he sawe inow in wo
Unto the Angell spake the Frere tho
Now sir quod he, han Freres soche a grace
That none of hem shall come in this place:
yes quod this Angell, many a millioun
And vnto Sathanas lad he him adoun
And now hath Sathanas seche a taile
Broder than of a Carike is the saile Hold vp thy taile thou Sathanas (quod he)
Shewe forth thine ers, let the Frere se
Where is the nest of Freres in this place
And er that halfe a furlong waie of space
Right as Bees swarmen out of an hiue)
Out of the Deuilles ers thei gan driue
Twentie thousande Freres on a rout
And throughout hell swarmed all about
And comen aien, as fast as thei might gon
And in to his ers thei crepten euerichon
He clapt his taile ayen, and laie still.

This Frere, whan he loked had his fill
Upon the turmentes of this sory place
His spirite God restored of his grace
Unto his body ayen, and he awoke
But natheles, yet for fere he quoke
So was the deuilles ers aie in his minde
That is his heritage of very kinde.
God saue you all, saue this cursed Frere
My prologue woll I ende in this manere.

Here endeth the Sompners Prologue, and followeth his Tale.

Lordinges there is i Yorkshire, as I gesse
A marishe countre called Holdernesse
In which there went a Limitour about
To preache, and eke to begge it is no doubt
And so befell that on a daie this Frere
Had preached in a churche in his manere
And specially aboue euery thing
Exited he the people in his preaching
To trentals, and to yeuen for Goddes sake Wherwith men mighten holy houses make
There as diuine seruice is honoured
Not there as it is wasted and deuoured
Ne there it nedeth not for to be yeuen
As to possessioners that mowen els leuen
Thonked be God, in wele and haboundaunce
Trentals deliuereth (quod he) fro penaunce
Her frendes soules, as well old as yong
If that thei be haskely isong
Not for to hold a Preest ioly and gaie
(He signeth not but one Messe a daie)
Deliuereth out (quod he) anon the soules
Full hard it is with flesche hoke or with oules
To bee iclawed, or to brenne or bake
Now spedeth you haskely for Christes sake.

And when this Frere had said al his entit
With qui cum patre, forth his waie he went Whã folk in church had yeue him what hẽ lest
He went his waie, no lenger would he rest
With scrip and tipped staffe, itucked hie
In euery hous he gan to pore and prie
And begged meale and chese, or els corne
His felowe had a staffe tipped with horne
A paire of tables all of Iuorie

And

I pointell polished ketouslie
And wrote alwaie the names as he stood
Of all folke, that yaue hem any good Ichaunce as he would for hem prcie yeue vs a bushell wheate, Malte, or Rcie
I Goddes kichell, or a trippe of Chese
Or els what ye list, I maie not chese
I Goddes halfpenie, or a Masse peny
Or yeue vs of your Brawne, if ye haue any
A dagon of your blanket, leue dame
Our suster dere, lo here I write your name
Bacon or Bese, or sochc thing as ye sinde
I sturdie harlot went him aie behind
That was her hostes man, and bare a sacke
And that men yaue hem, laied it on his backe
And whan he was out at the dooze anon
He plained awaie the names euerichon
That he before had written in his tables
He serued hem with nifles and with fables.
Maie there thou liest Sompner (q̄ ỳ Frere)
Peace (q̄ our hoste) for Cbrists mother dere
Tell forth thy tale, and spare it not at all.
So thriue I (q̄ the Sompner) so I shall.
So long he went fro hous to hous till he Came to an hous, ther as he was wont to be Refreshed more than in an hundred placis
Sicke laie the good man, whose the place is Bedred vpon a couche lowe he laie
Deus hic (q̄ he) O Thomas frend good daie
Saied this Frere, curtesly and soft
Thomas God yeld it you, full oft
Haue I vpon this benche faren full weale
Here haue I eaten many a mery meale
And fro the benche he droue awaie the Catte
And laied adoune his potent and his hatte
And eke his scrip, and set him soft adoune
His felawe was go walked in to the toune
Forth with his knaue, into that hostelrie
Where as he shope him that ilke night to lie.
O dere maister, q̄ this sicke man
How haue ye faren sithen March began
I sawe you nat this fourtenight and more.
God wote (q̄ he) laboured haue I full sore
And specially for thy saluacion
Haue I saied many a precious orison
And for our other frendes God hem blesse
I haue this day been at your church at messe
And said a sermon, after my simple wit
Not all after the text of holy writ
For it is hard to you, as I suppose
And therfore I woll teache you all the glose Glosing is a glorious thing certain
For letter slaeth, as we clerkes sain
There haue I hem taught to been charitable And spend her good there as it is reasonable
And there I sawe our dame, a where is she Yonder in the yarde I trowe she be Saied this man, and she woll come anon
Eie maister welcome ye be by sainct Johan
Saied this wife, how fare ye hartely
This Frere ariseth vp full curtesly
And her enbraseth in his armes narowe
And kisseth her swetly, and chirketh as a sparow
With his lippes, dame (q̄ he) right wele
Is he that is your seruaunt euery dele
Thãked be God, that you haue soule and life
Yet sawe I not this daie so faire a wife
In all the churche, so God saue me ye God amende all faultes sir (q̄ she)
Algates welcome ye be, by my faie
Graunt mercie dame, ỳ haue I found alwaie
But of your greate goodnesse, by your leue
I woll praie you, that ye not you greue
I woll with Thomas speake a little throwe
These curates been full negligent and slowe
To groper tenderly a mannes conscience
In christ, and in preaching is my diligence
And to studie on Peters wordes and Poules
I walke to kithe christen mennes soules
To yelde Jesu Christ his proper rent
To spreade his wordes, is all mine entent.
Now by your leue dere maister (q̄ she)
Chideth him well for sainct Charite
He is aie angrie as a pisse mire
Though that he haue all that he can desire
Though I hi wrie a night, ỳ make hi warme
And ouer him laie my legge or mine arme
He groneth like our boze that lieth in the stie
Other dispoit of him right none haue I
I maie not please him in no maner caas.
O Thomas, je vous die, Thomas Thomas
This maketh ỳ fend, this must been amended
Ire is a thing that God highly defended
And therof woll I speake a worde or two Now maister (q̄ the wife) er that I go
What woll ye dine? I woll go there about.
Now dame (q̄ he) je vous die sanz dout
Haue I not of a Capon but the liuer
And of your white bread, but a shiuer
And after that a rosted Pigges hedde
(But I nolde not for me no beast were dedde)
Than had I inow for my sustisaunce
I am a man of little sustenaunce
My spirite hath his fostring in the Bible
My bodie is aie so redy and so penible
To wake, that my body is distroide
I praie you dame, be ye nought anoide
Though I so frendly you my counsaile shew
By God, I nolde haue told it but a fewe
Now sir (q̄ she) but one worde er you go

The Sompners tale.

My child is dedde, within these wekes two Sone after that ye went out of this toun
His death saw I by reuelacioun
Saied this frere, at home in our dortour
I dare well sain, er that halfe an hour
After his death, I saw him borne to blisse
In mine auision, God me so wisse
So did our serten, and our fermerere
That han been true freres this liftie yere Thei maie now, God be thanked of his lone Waken her Jubelie, and walken alone
And vp I arose, and all our couent ehe
With many a teere trilling on our cheke
Withouten noise or clattering of belles
Te deum was our song, and nothing elles
Saue that to Christ I saied an orison
Thanking him of my reuelacion
For sir and dame, trusteth me right well
Our orisons been more effectuell
And more we seen of Christes secret thinges
Than dorell folke, although thei wer kinges
We liue in pouerte, and in abstinence
And dorell folke in richesse and dispence
In meate and drinke, and in her foule delite
We han this worldly lust all in dispite
Lazar and Diues, liueden diuersely
And diuers guerdons had thei thereby
Who so woll praie, he must fast and be cleane
And fatte his soule, and make his body leane
We fare as saieth the Apostle, clothe and food
Sufficeth vs, though thei be not full good
The clennesse and the fasting of vs freres
Maketh that Christ accepteth our praiers.
Lo Moises, fourtie daies & fourtie night
Fasted, er that the hie God of his might Spake with him in the mount of Sinai
With emptie wombe, fasting many a daie
Receiued he the lawe, that was written
With Gods finger, and wel ye witten
In mount Oreb, er he had any speche
With the high God, that is our soules leche
He fasted long, and was in contemplaunce.
Aaron, that had the tẽple in gouernaunce
And eke the other priestes euerichone
Into the temple whan thei should gone
To praien for the people, and doen seruice
Thei nolde drinke in no maner wise
No drinke, that dronke might hem make
But there in abstinence praie and wake,
Lest that thei deiden, take hede what I saie
But thei be sobre that for the people praie
Ware that I saie, no more for it sufficeth
Our Lorde Jesu, as holy writte deuiseth
Yaue vs ensample of fasting and praiers
Therefore we Mendicantes, we sely freres
Been wedded to pouert and continence
To charite, humblenesse, and abstinence
To persecucion for rightwisnesse
To weping, misericorde, and clennesse
And therefore maie ye se that our praires
(I speake of vs mendicant, we freres)
Been to the hie God more acceptable
Than yours, with your feast at your table.
Fro Paradise first, if I shall not lie
Was man chased out for his glotonie
And chast was man in Paradise certain
But herken now Thomas what I shall sain
I haue no text thereof, as I suppose
But I finde it in maner of a glose
That specially our swete Lorde Jesus
Spake this by freres, whan he saied thus Blessed be thei that poore in spirite been
And so forth all the Gospell maie ye seen whither it be liker our perfeccion
Or hers that swimmen in possession
Fie on her pompe, and on her glotonie
And in her leudnesse, I hem defie
Me thinketh thei been like Jouinian
Fat as a whale, and walking as a Swan
As vinolent as botell in the spence
Her praier is of full little reuerence whã thei for soules saie the psalme of Dauid Lo bouffe thei sain (Cor meum eructauit) who foloweth Christes Gospell & his lore
But we that humble be, chaste, and poore
Werkers of Gods worde, and not auditours
Therefore right as an hauke at a sours
Up springeth in to the eire, so praires
Of charitable and chast bulie freres
Maken her sours to Gods eares two Thomas Thomas, so mote I ride or go
And by that lorde that cleped is sainct Yue
Ne ỹ our broder were, ỹ shouldest not thriue
For in our Chapitre praie we daie and night
To Christ, that he thee sende health & might Thy body for to welden hastely
God wote ỹ he, nothing therefor fele I
As helpe me Christ, as in fewe yeres
Haue I spended vpon diuers maner freres
Well many a pound, yet fare I neuer the bet
Certain my good haue I almoste beset
Farewell my good, for it is almoste ago.
The frere answered, o Thomas doest ỹ for what nedeth thee diuers freres seche?
what nedeth him that hath a parfite leche?
To sechen other leches in the toun
Your inconstaunce is your confusioun
Hold ye me than, or els our couent
To praien for you insufficient
Thomas, that iape nis not worth a Mite

Your

your maladie is for we haue to lite
A yeue that couent half a quarter Otes
And yeue that couent four and twētie grotes
And yeue that Frere a pennie, and let him go
Nay nay Thomas, it may nothing be so
What is a farthing worth parted in twelue?
Lo, eche thing that is oned in him selue
Is more strong, than whan it is so shattered
Thomas, of me thou shalt not been iflattered
Thou woldst haue all our labour for nought
The hie God, ỳ all this worlde hath wrought
Saith, that the workman is worthy his hire
Thomas, naught of your treasour I desire
As for my self, but that all our couent
To pray for you is ay so diligent
And for to builden Christes owne chirche
Thomas, if ye woll learne for to wirche
Of building vp of chirches may ye finde
If it be good, in Thomas life of Inde.

Ye liggen here full of angre and of ire
With which ỳ diuell setteth your hart on fire
And chiden here this holy innocent
Your wife, that is so meke and pacient
And therefore trowe me Thomas if you lefte
Ne chide not with thy wife, as for the beste
And beare this worde a way by thy faithe
Touching soche thing, lo what ỳ wise saieth
Within thy house be thou no Lion
To thy subiectes doe thou none oppression
Ne make not thine acquaintaunce to fle
And yet Thomas, eftsones charge I thee
Beware of her that in thy bosom slepeth
Ware thee of the serpent, that so slily crepeth
Under the gralle, and stingeth full subtelly
Beware my soonne, and herken paciently
That twēty thousand men han lost her liues
For striuing with her lemmans & her wiues
Now sens ye haue so holy and meke a wife
What nedeth you Thomas to make strife?
There nis iwis no serpent so cruell (whan men treden on his taile) ne half so fel
As a woman is, whā she hath caught an ire
Vengeaunce is than all her desire.

Ire is a sinne, one of the greatest of seuen
Abhominable vnto the high God of heuen
And to himself it is a distruccion
This euery leude Vicare and Parson
Can saie, how ire engendreth homecide
Ire is in sothe the executour of pride
I could of ire saie so moche sorowe
That my tale should last till to morowe
And therefore I praie God bothe day & night
That to an irous man he sende little might
It is greate harme, and eke greate pitee
To set an irous man in hie degree.

Whilom there was an irous potestate
As saieth Seneke, that during his estate
Vpon a daie out ridden knightes two
And as fortune would it should be so
That one of hem came home, ỳ other nought Anon the knight before the iude is brought That said thus: thou hast thy felowe slain
For whiche I deme thee to the death certain
And to an other knight commaunded he Go lede him to the death I charge thee
And happed as thei went by the weie
Toward the place, there he should deie
The knight came, which mē wend had be ded
Than thought thei it was the best rede
To lede hem bothe to the Judge again
Thei saiden lorde, the knight hath not slain
His felowe, here he stant hole alliue.
Ye shullen be dedde (q he) so mote I thriue
That is to saie, bothe one, twoo, and three
And to the first knight, right thus spake he.
I dampned thee, thou must algate be dedde
And thou must also lese nedes thine hedde
For thou art cause why thy felowe dieth
And to the third knigh, right thus he saieth
Thou hast not don that I commaunded thee
And thus he did hem slean all three.

Irouie Cambises was eke dronkelewe
And aie delited him to been a shrewe
And so bifell, a lorde of his meine
That loued well vertuous moralite Saied on a daie bitwirt hem two right thus
A lorde is lost, if he be aught vicious
And dronkennesse eke is a foule record
Of any man, and namely of a lorde
There is many an ye and many an eere Awaiting on a lorde, he not where
For Goddes loue drinketh more temperatly
Wine maketh a man to lese wrichedly
His minde, and his limmes euerichone.
The riuers shalt thou se (q he) anone
And preue it by thine owne experience
That wine ne doeth to folke no soche offence
There nis no wine bireueth me my might
Of honde, of foote, ne of mine ye sight
And for despite he dronke mochell more
An hundred times than he did before
And right anon, this cursed irous wretche
Let this knightes soonne biforne him fetche
Cōmaunding him he should biforne him stond
And sodainly he tooke his bowe in honde
And vp the string he pulled to his eere
And w an arrowe he slough the child there.
Now whither haue I a siker hond or none
Or hee? Is all my might and minde agone?

Fat)

Hath wine bireuen me mine iyen light:
what shuld I tell the answer of the knight
His sonne was slain, there is no more to saie
Beware therefore, with lordes how ye plaie
Sing Placebo, and I shall if I can
But if it be vnto a poore man
To a poore man, one should his vices tell
But not to a lord, though he should go to hel

Loirous Cirus, thilke Percien
How destroied he the riuer of Gisen:
For that an hors of his was dreint therein
Whan he went Babilon to winne
He made that the riuer was so small
That men might ride and waden ouer all
Lo, what saied he, that so well teache can Ne be no felowe to none irous man
Ne with no wode man walke by the waie
Lest thou repent, I woll no farther saie
Now Thomas leue brother, leaue thin ire
Thou shalt me finde as iust, as is a squire Hold not the diuels knife aie in thine harte
Thine anger doeth thee all to sore smarte
But shewe to me all thy confession.
Naie (q the sicke man) by sainct Simon
I haue be shriue this daie of my Curate
I haue told him all mine estate
Nt nedeth no more to speake of it, saieth he
But if me list, of mine humilite.
Yeue me thā of thy gold, to make our cloister q he, for many a muskle and many an Oister
Whan other men haue been full well at ease
Hath been our foode, our cloister for to rese
And yet God wot, vnneth the foundament
Parformed is, ne of our pauement
Is not a tile yet within our wones
By God we owen fourtie pound for stones
Now helpe Thomas, for him ꝑ harowed hell
For els mote we our bookes sell
And if you lacke our predicacion
Than goeth this worlde all to destruccion
For who so woll fro this worlde vs bireue
So God me saue, Thomas by your leue
He would bireue out of this world the sonne
For who can techen & worchen as we conne
And that is not of little time (q he)
But sith Helie was, or Helise
Han Freres been, that finde I of recorde
In charite, ithonked be our Lorde
Now Thomas, for sainct charite
And doune anon he sitteth on his kne.
This sicke man wore nie woode for ire
He would the Frere had been a fire
With his false dissimulacion
Soche thinges as been in my possession
(q he) that maie I giue, and none other
Ye sain me thus, how ꝑ I am your brother
Yes certes (q this Frere) trusteth me wele
I tooke our dame our letter and our sele
Now (q he) well, and somwhat shal I yeue
Unto your holy couent, while I liue
And in thine honde, thou shalt it haue anon
On this condicion, and other none
That thou depart it so, my leue brother
That euery Frere, haue as moche as other
This shalt thou sweare on thy profession
Without fraude or cauelacion.
I swere it (q the Frere) by my faieth
And therewithall his honde in his he laieth
Lo here my faithe, in me shall be no lacke.
Than put thine honde doune by my backe
Saied this man, and grope well behinde
Bineth my buttocke, there thou shalt finde
A thing that I haue hid in priuite
Ah, thought the Frere, that shall go with me
Adoune he stokth his hande to the clift
In hope to finde there some good gift
And whan this sicke man felt this Frere
About his towell, groping here and there
Amid his honde, he let the Frere a farte
There nis no capell, drawing in a carte
That might haue let a farte of soche a soun
The Frere vp start, as doeth a wode Lion
A false churle (q the Frere) for Goddes bonn
This hast thou in dispite doe, for the nones
Thou shalt abie this farte, if I maie
His meinie, that heard of this affraie
Came leping in, and chased out the Frere
And forth he goeth, with a ful angrie cheer
And let his felowe, there as laie his store
He looked as he were a wilde Bore
He grinted his tethe, so was he wroth
A sturdie pace doune to the Court he goth
Wher as there wōned a man of great honour
To whom that he was alwaie confessour
This worthy man, was lorde of that village
This Frere came, as he were in a rage
Where as this lorde sat eating at his borde
Unnethes might the Frere speake O worde
Till at the last he saied, God you se
This lorde gan looke, and saied Benedicite
What Frere Jhō, what maner worlde is this
I see well that somthing is a mis
Ye loke as though ꝑ wodde wer full of thris Sit doune, and tell me what your griefe is
And it shall be amended, if that I maie
I haue (q he) had a dispite to daie
God yelde it you, adoune in your village
That in this worlde, is none so poore a page
That he nolde haue abhominacioun

Of that I haue receiued in your toun
And yet me greueth nothing so sore
As that the olde churle, with lockes hore
Blaspemed hath our holy couent eke.
Now maister (q this lord) I you beseke
No maister sir (q he) but seruitour
Though I haue had in schole that honour
God liketh not, that men vs Raby calle
Neither in market, ne in your large halle.
No force (q he) but tell me of your grefe.
Sir (q this Frere) an odious mischefe
This day is betide, to mine ordre, and to me
And so per consequens to eche degre
Of holy churche, God amende it sone.
Sir (q the lord) ye wot what is to done
Distemper you not, you ben my confessour
Ye ben the salte of the erth, and the sauour
For goddes loue your pacience now holde
Telleth me your grefe: and he anon him tolde
As ye han herd byfore, ye wot wel what
The lady of the house, aye still sat
Til she had herde what the Frere saide.
Eye gods mother (q she) a blisfull maide
Is there nought els, tel me faithfully
Madame (q he) how thinketh ye therby
How that me thinketh: so God me spede
I say a churle hath done a churles dede
What should I say, God let him neuer the
His sicke heed is ful of vanite
I holde him in a maner of frenesie.
Madame (q he) by God I shal not lye
But I in any wise may ben on him a wreke
I shal saunder him ouer al, where I speke
That false blaspemour that charged me
To parte it, that might not departed be
To euery man iliche, with mischaunce.
The lord sat still, as he were in a traunce
And in his hert he roled vp and doun
How that this churle had imaginacioun
To shewe such a probleme to the Frere
Neuer erst ne now ne herde I such a matere
I trowe the Diuel put it in his minde
In al Arsmetrike there shal no man finde
Byforne this day, of suche a question
Who should make a demonstracion:
That euery man should haue ilyke his parte
Of a sowne or sauour of a tarte
O nice proude churle, I shrewe thy face.
Lo sirs (q the lord) with hard grace
Who euer herde of suche a thing or now:
To euery man ilike, tell me how:
It is an impossible, it may not be Eye nice churle, God let hem neuer the
The rombling of a tarte, and euery soun
Nys but of eyre reuerberacioun
And euer it wasteth litel and litel away
There is no man can demen, by my fay
If that it were departed equally
What: lo my churle: lo, yet how shrewdly
Unto my confessour to day he spake
I holde him certaine a demoniake.
Now eteth your meate, & let ỹ churle go play
Let him go hongen him selfe a Diuel way.
Now rode the lordes squier at the borde
That carfe his meate, & herd word by word
Of all thing, of whiche I haue you saide
My lord (q he) be not yuell apaide
I couthe tel for a gowne clothe
To you sir frere, so that ye ben not wrothe
How that this carte should euen ideled be Amonges your couent, if it liketh the.
Tel on (q ỹ lord) and thou shalt haue anon
A gowne clothe, by God and by sainte John
My lord (q he) whan ỹ the weder is faire
Withouten winde, or perturbing of ayre
Let bring a carte whele here into this hall
But loke he haue his spokes all
Twelue spokes hath a carte whele cõmenly
And bring me than .xii. freres, wote ye why:
For thirtene is a couent as I gesse
Your confessour here, for his worthinesse
Shal performe vp the nombre of his couent
Than shullē they knelen adoun by one assent
And to euery spokes ende, in this manere
Full sadly lay his nose shall a frere
Your noble confessour there, God him saue
Shal holde his nose vpright vnder the naue
Than shal this churle, w̄ bely stiffe & tought
As any tabour, hither ben ibrought
And set him on the whele, right of this carte
Upon the naue, and make him let a farte
And ye shullen se, vp perill of my life
By preue, whiche is demonstratife
That equally the soune of it wil wende
And eke the stinke, vnto the spokes ende
Saue that this worthy man your cõfessour
(Bycause he is a man of great honour)
Shal haue the first frutes, as reson is
The noble vsage of Freres yet is this.
The worthest man of hem shull first be serued
And certainly, he hath it well deserued
He hath to day taught vs so moche good
With preching in the pulpet there he stood
That I may vouchesafe, I say for me
He had the first smell of fartes thre
And so wolde al his brethren hardely
He bereth him so faire and holyly.
The lord, ỹ lady, & eche man, saue the Frere
Said that Jenken spake in this matere
As wel as Ouide did or Ptholome

Touching the churles saide subtilte
And hie wit made him speke as he spake
He nis no foole, ne no demoniake
And Jenken hath iwonne a newe goune
My tale is done, we ben almost at toune.

¶ Here endeth the Sompners tale, and here foloweth the clerkes of Orenfordes Prologue.

SIr Clerke of Orford, our host saide
Ye ride as still and coye, as doth a maide
Were newe spoused, sitting at the borde
This daye ne herde I of your mouth a worde
I trowe that ye study aboute some sophime
But Salomon saith, al thing hath time
For goddes sake, bethe of better chere
It is no time now to studie here
Tell vs some mery tale by your fay
For what man is entred into a play
He nedes mote vnto that play assent
But preacheth not, as Freres done in lent
To make vs for our olde sinnes to wepe
Ne that thy tale make vs not to slepe.
Tel vs some mery thing of auentures
Your termes, your figures, & your coloures
Kepe hem in store, til so be that ye endite
High stile, as whan men to kinges write
Speketh so plaine at this time, I you pray
That we may vnderstonde what ye say.
This worthy Clerke beningly answerde
Host (quoth he) I am vnder your yerde
Ye haue of vs as now the gouernaunce
And therfore wol I do you obeysaunce
As farre as reason axeth hardely
I woll you tell a tale, whiche that I
Lerned at Padow, of a worthy Clerke
As preued is by his wordes and his werke
He is now deed, and nailed in his cheste
I pray to God sende his soule good reste.
Fraunces Petrarke, the laureat poete
Hight this clerke, whose Rhetorike sweete
Enlumined all Italie of poetrie
As Liuian did of Philosophie
Or lawe, or other arte particulere
But deth that wol not suffre vs dwellen here
But as it were the twinkling of an eye
Hem both hath slaine, and all we shal dye.
But for to tellen of this worthy man
That taught me this tale, as I first began
I say that he first with hie stile enditeth
(Or he the body of his tale writeth)
A proheme, in which discriueth he Piemount, and of Saluce the countre
And speketh of Apenniny the hilles hye
That ben the boundes of west Lumbardie
And of mount Vesulus in speciall
Where as the Poo, out of a wel small Taketh his first spring and his fours
That eastwarde euer increseth in his cours
To Emelle ward, to Ferare, and to Venise
The which a long time were to deuise
And truely, as to my iudgement
Me thinketh it a thing impartinent
Saue that him list conuey his matere
But this is his tale as ye shullen here.

¶ Here endeth the prologue of the Clerke of Orforde, and here foloweth his tale.

THere is, in the west side of Italie
Doun at the rote of Vesulus the colde
A lusty plaine, habundaunt of vitaile
Where many a toun and tour thou maist behold
That founded were, in time of fathers olde
And many another delectable sight
And Saluces, this noble countre hight.

A Marques whilom was in that londe
As were his worthy elders him before
And obeysaunt aye redy to his honde
Were all his lieges, bothe lesse and more
Thus in delite he liued, and hath done yore
Beloued & drad, through fauour of fortune
Both of his lordes, and of his commune.

Therwith he was, as to speke of linage
The gentilest borne of al Lombardy
A faire person, and strong, and yonge of age
And ful of honour and curtesy
Discrete inow, his countre for to gye
Saue in some thinges he was to blame
And Walter was this yonge lordes name

I blame him thus, that he cõsidred nought
In time comming, what him might betide
But on his lust present was all his thought
And for to hawke and hunt on euery side
Weiny all other cures let he slide
And eke he ne would, that was worst of all wedde

wedde no wife, for ought that might befall

Onely that pointe his people bare fo fore
That flockmele on a day to him they went
And one of hem, that wifeſt was of lore
(Or els that the lorde wolde beſt aſſent
That he ſhould tel him what his people ment
Or els coude he ſhewe ſuche matere)
He to the Marques ſaid, as ye ſhullen here.

O noble Marques, your humanite
Aſſureth vs, and yeueth vs hardinelle
Is ofte time as is neceſſite
That we may to you tell our heuinelle
Accepteth lord of your gentilnelle
That we to you with pitous hert plaine
And let your eares nat my voice diſdaine.

All haue I not to done in this matere
More than another hath in this place
Yet for as muche, as ye my lord ſo dere
Haue alway ſhewed me fauour and grace
I dare the better aſke of you a ſpace
Of audience, to ſhewen our requeſte
And ye my lord to done right as you leſte.

For certes lord: ſo wel vs liketh your
And al your werkes, & euer haue don, that we Ne could our own ſelfe deuiſen how
We might more liuen in felicite
Saue one thing lord, if it your wil be
That for to be a wedded man, you leſt
Thã wer your people in ſouerain hertes reſt.

Boweth your necke vnder the blifful yoke
Of ſouerainte, and not of ſeruiſe
Which men clepen ſpouſaile or wedlocke
And thinketh lord, amõg your thouztes wiſe
How that our daies paſſen in ſondry wiſe
For though we ſlepe or wake, renne, or ride
Ay fleeth the time, it wol no man abide.

And though your grene youth floure, as yet
In crepeth age alway as ſtill as ſtone
And deth manaſeth euery age, and ſmyte
In eche eſtate, for there eſcapeth none
And alſo certain, as we knowen echone
That we ſhul dye, and vncertaine we all
Ben of that day, that dethe ſhall on vs fall

Accepteth than of vs the tre we entent
That neuer yet refuſed your heſte
And we wol al lorde, if ye wol aſſent
Chefe you a wife in ſhorte time, at the beſt
Borne of the gentilleſt and of the meſt
Of all this londe, ſo that it ought ſeme
Honour to god & you, as nere as we can deme

Deliuer vs out of al this buſy drede
And take a wife, for hie goddes ſake
For if it ſo befell, as god forbede
That thorow deth, your linage ſhould ſtake
And that a ſtraunge ſucceſſour ſhould take your heritage, O wo were vs on liue
Wherfore we pray you haſtely to wiue.

Her meke praier and her pitious chere
Made the Marques for to haue pite
Wel ye (q he) mine owne people dere
To that I neuer erſt thought, conſtraine me
I me reioiced of my liberte
That ſelden time is founde in mariage
There I was free, I mote ben in ſeruage.

But natheles, I ſe your true entente
And truſt vpon your wit, and haue done aye
Wherfore of my fre will I woll aſſente
To wedden me, as ſone as euer I may
But there, as ye haue profred me to day
To chefe me a wife, I you releſe
That choice, and praie you of that profer ceſe

For God it wote, that children often been Vnlike her worthy elders, hem before
Bounte cometh al of God, & not of the ſtreen
Of which thei ben engendred and ibore
I truſt in goddes bounte, and therfore
My mariage, mine eſtate, and reſt
I him betake, he may don as him leſt.

Let me alone in cheſing of my wife
That charge vpon my backe I wol endure
But I you pray, and charge vpon your life
That what wife I take, ye me enſure
To worſhip her, whiles her life maie dure
In worde and werke, here and els where
As ſhe an Emperours doughter were

And furthermore, thus ſhall ye ſwere, ſy ye
Areſt my choice ſhall neuer grutch ne ſtriue
For ſithe I ſhal forgo my liberte
At your requeſt, as euer mote I thriue
There as mine hert is ſet, there wol I wiue
And but ye woll aſſent, in ſoche manere
I pray you ſpeketh no more in this matere.

With herty will thei ſwore and aſſent
To all this thing, there ſaid no wight nay
Beſeching him of grace er thei went
That he would hem graunt a certaine day

Of this spousaile, as soone as euer he may
For yet alway the people somwhat dredde
Lest this Marques wolde no wife wedde.

He graunted hem a day, suche as him lest
On which he wold be wedded seuerly
And said he did all this at her request
And thei with humble entent full buxumly
Kneling vpon her knees full reuerently
Him thonked all, and thus thei han an ende
Of her entent, and home ayen thei wende

And here vpon he tolde his officers
Commaunding for the feest to purueay
And to his priuy knightes and squiers
Suche charge yaue, as he liste on hem lay
And thei to his commaundement obey
And eche of hem doth his diligence
To don to the feest reuerence.

Explicit prima pars, & sequi-
tur pars secunda.

AMought ferre fro thilke place honorable
Where this Markes shope his mariage
There stode a thrope, of sight full delectable
In whiche poore folke of that village
Hadden her beestes and herbigage
And of her labour tolke her sustenaunce
After that the erthe yaue hem habundance

Among this pore folke, ther dwelled a man
Whiche that was holden poorest of hem all
But hye god somtime sende can
His grace vnto a litel ore stall
Janicola men of that thrope him call
A doughter had he, faire ynoughe to sight
And Grisilde this yonge maiden hight.

But for to speke of vertuous beaute
Than was she one the fairest vnder sonne
And full porely ifostred was she
No likerous lust was in her hert ironne
Wel ofter of the wel than of the tonne
She dronke, and for she would vertue plese
She knewe wel labour, but not idle ese.

But though this maide were tender of age
Yet in the brest of her virginite
There was enclosed, sadde and ripe corage
And in great reuerence of charite
Her olde poore father fostred she
A lewe shepe spinning on the feld she kept
She would not ben idle til she slept.

And whē she homward came, she wold brig
Wortes and herbes, times full ofte
Whiche she shradde and sethe for her liuing
And made her bed full harde, & nothing softe
And aye she kept her fathers life on lofte
With euery obeisaunce and diligence
That child might do to the fathers reuerēce

Upon Grisilde the poore creature
Well ofte hath the Marques set his eye
As he an hunting rode parauenture
And when it fell, that he might her aspie
He not with wanton loking of folie)
His eyen cast vpon her, but in sadde wise
Upon her chere, he would him ofte auise.

Cōmending in his hert her womanhede
And eke her vertue, passing euery wight
Of so yong age, as well in chere as in dede
For though the people haue no great insight
In vertue: he considered full right
Her bounte, and disposed that he would Her wedde, if he euer wedde should.

The day of wedding com, but no wight can Tell, what woman it should be
For which meruaile, wondred many a man
And saiden, whan thei were in her priuite
Woll not our lord yet leaue his vanite
Woll he not wedde, alas alas, the while
Why woll he thus himselfe and vs begile.

But natheles this Marques hath do make
Of gemmes, set in golde and in asure
Broches and ringes, for Grisildes sake
And of her clothing, tolke he the mesure
Of a maiden like to her stature
And eke of other ornamentes all
That to soche a wedding should fall

The time drowen, in the same day
Approched, that the wedding should be
And all the paleis put was in array
Bothe halle and chambre, eche in his degre
Houses of office stuffed with great plente
There maist thou se all dainteous vitaile
That may be founde, as ferre as lasteth Itaile

This royall Marques, richely araide
Lordes and ladies in his companie
The whiche that to the feest were praide
And

And of his retinue the bachelerie
With many a soune of sondrie melodie
Unto the village, of whiche I tolde
In this aray, the right way hath holde

Grisilde (God wote of this full innocent
That for her was shape all this aray)
To fetche water at a well went And cometh home as sone as euer she may
For wel she heard say, that ilke day
That the Marques shuld wed, & if she might
She would faine seen some of that sight.

She thought: I wold vd other maidens stonde
That den my felowes in our dore and se
The Marques, and therto wol I fonde
To don at home, as sone as it may be
The labour, whiche that longeth to me
And than may I at leyser it beholde
If she the way to the castel holde.

And as she would ouer the threshold gon
The Marques came, and gan her for to call
And she sette doun her water potte anon
Beside the threshold of the ore stall
And doun vpon her knees she gan to fall
And with sadde countenaunce she kneled still Til she had herd what was the lordes will

This thoughtful Marques spake to ỹ maide
Wel soberly, and said in this manere
Where is your father Grisilde, he said?
And she with reuerence and mekechere
Answered, lord he is al redy here
And in she goeth, without lenger lette
And to the Marques she her father sette

He be the honde than toke this olde man
And said thus, whan he had him aside
Janicola, I neither may ne can Lenger the plesaunce of mine hert hide
If that thou vouchesafe, whatsoeuer betide
Thy doughter wol I take, or that I wende
As for my wife, to my liues ende.

Thou louest me, I wot wel certaine
And art my faithfull liegeman ibore
And al that liketh me, I dare well saine
It liketh the, and specially therfore
Tel me that point, that I haue said before
If that thou wolt to this purpose drawe?
To take me for thy sonne in lawe.

This sodaine case, the man astoned so
That reed he wert abasshed, and al quaking
He stode, ne vnneth said he wordes mo
But only thus ỹ he lorde my willing
Is as ye wol, ne ayenst your liking
I woll nothing, ye be my lord so dere
Right as you list, gouerne this matere.

Than wol I thus ỹ this Marques sothly
That in thy chambre, I, you, and she Haue a collation, and woteth thou why?
For I wol aske her, if her wil be
To be my wife, and rule her after me
And al this shal she done in thy presence
I wol not speke out of thine audience

And in the chambre, while thei were about
The treties, whiche ye shall after here
The people came into the house without
And wondred hem, in how honest manere
So tentifly she kept her father dere
But vtterly Grisilde wonder might
For neuer erst saw she suche a sight.

No wonder is though she be astoned
To se so great a gest come in to that place
She was neuer to suche gestes woned
For whiche she loked with ful pale face
But shortly fro this mater for to pace
These weren the wordes ỹ the Marques said
To this benigne and very faithfull maid

Grisilde he said, ye shall well vnderstonde
It liketh vnto your father and me
That I you wedde, and ehe it may so stonde
As I suppose, that ye wol that it so be But these demaundes I aske first (ỹ he)
That sithen it shal be done in hasty wise
Wol ye therto assent, or els you auise.

I say thus, be ye redy with good herte
To all my lust, and that I frely may
As me best liketh, though ye laugh or smerte
And neuer ye to grutche, night ne day
Whan I say yea, that ye say not ones nay
Neither i worde, ne by frowning countenaunce
Swere this, and here I swere our aliaunce.

Wondring vpon these wordes, quaking for (drede
She said: lord, indigne & vnworthy
Im I, to thilke honour, that ye me bede
But right as you wol, so wol I
And here I swere, that neuer willingly
In word, werke, ne thought, I nil you disobie
For to be deed, though me were loth to die.

This is inough Grisilde mine (ỹ he)

And forth he goth with a sobre chere
Out at the dore, and after came she
And to the people, he said in this manere
This is my wife, & he that standeth here
Honoureth her, and loueth her, if you pray
Who so me loueth, there nis no more to say.

And for that nothing of her olde gere
She should bring in to his house, he badde
That women should dispoilen her right there
Of whiche these ladies were nothing gladde
To hādle her clothes, in whiche she was clad
But natheless, this maiden bright of hewe
Fro fote to heed thei clothed han all newe.

Her heer han thei kembed, ỹ lay vntressed
Ful rudely, and with her fingers smale
A croune on her heed thei han idressed
And sette it ful of ouches great and smale
Of her array, what should I make a tale
Cunneth the people her fnew for her fayrnesse
Whan she transformed was in such richesse

This Marques hath her spoused w a ringe
Bought for the same cause, and then her set
Vpon an horse snowe white, wel amblinge
And to his paleis, or he lenger let
With ioyfull people, that her ladde and met
Conueyed her, and thus the day they spende
In reuell, til the sonne gan discende

And shortely forth this tale for to chace
I say, that to his newe Marquesse
God hath sent suche fauour of his grace
That it semed not, as by her likelinesse
That she was borne and fedde in rudenesse
As in a cote, or in an oxe stall
But norished in an Emperours hall.

To euery wight, she woxen is so dere
And worshipful, ỹ folk ther as she was bore
And fro her birthe, fnewher yere by yere
Cunneth trowed thei, but durst haue swore
That to Janicola, of whiche I spake before
She doughter nas, for as by coniecture
Hem thought she was another creature.

For thoughe that euer vertuous was she
She was encreased in suche excellence
Of thewes good, set in hie bounte
And so discrete, and faire of eloquence
So benigne, and digne of reuerence
And coude the peoples heartes so enbrace
That eche her loued that loked in her face.

Not onely of Saluce in the toun
Published was the bountie of her name
But eke beside, in many a regioun
If one saide well, an other said the same
So spradde of her bountie the fame
That men and women, bothe yong and olde
Gone to Saluces her to beholde.

This walter lowly, and full royally
Wedded hathe with fortunate honeste
In gods peace: liueth ful easely
At home, and outward grace inough had he
And for he sawe that vnder lowe degre
Was honest vertue hid, the people him helde
A prudent man, and that is seene well seldē.

Not onely this Grisilde, through her wit
Couthe al the feate of wifely humblesse
But eke, whan the case required it
The comen profite could she redresse
There nas discorde, rancour, ne heuinesse
In al the londe, that she ne couthe apese
And bring hem all wisely in rest and ese

Though her husbonde absent were or non
If gentlimen, or other of her contre
Were wrothe, she would bring hem at one
So wise and ripe wordes had she
And iugement of so great equite
That she fro heuen sent was, as men wende
People to saue, and euery wrong to amende.

Not long time after this Grisilde
Was wedded, she a doughter had ibore
Al had she leuer haue borne a man childe
Glad was ỹ Marques and his folke therfore
For though a maide childe came al before
She may to a man childe attaine
By likelihode, sithens she is not baraine.

Explicit secunda pars, & incipit pars tertia.

Here fell, as it befalleth oft times mo
Whā that this childe had sucked but a throwe
This Markes in his herte longed so
To tempt his wife, her sadnesse to knowe
That he ne might out of his herte throwe
This merueylous desire, his wife to assaye
Needelesse God wot, he thought her to affraye

He

He had assayed her inough biforе
And fonde her euer good, what nedeth it
Her for to tempt? And alwaie more and more
Though some man praise it for a subtill wit
But as for me, I saie full euill it sit
To assaie a wife, whan that it is no nede
And put her in anguishe and in drede.

For whiche this Marques wrought this ma-
He came alone a night ther as she laie (nere
With sterne face, and right vgly chere
And saied thus: Grisilde (q he) that daie
That I tooke thee out of thy poore araie
And put thee in estate of hie noblesse
Thou hast not that forgoten, as I gesse.

I saie Grisilde, the present dignite
In whiche I haue put thee, as I trowe Maketh not thee forgetfull for to be
That I thee toke in poore estate full lowe
For any welе, thou must thy self knowe
Take hede of euery worde what I saie
There is no wight that hereth but wel waie

Thou wotest thy self, how ỹ thou cam here
Into this hous, it is not long ago
And though to me thou be both lefe and dere
Vnto my gentils thou art nothing so
Thei saie, to hem it is greate shame and wo
For to been subiect, and been in seruage
To thee, that borne art in so smale a village.

And namely sith thy doughter was ibore
These wordes haue thei spoken doubtles
But I desire, as I haue doen before
To liue my life with hem, in rest and pees
I mai not in this case be recheles
I mote doen with thy doughter, for the best
Not as I would, but as my gentils lest.

And yet God wote, this is full loth to me
But nacheles without thy witting
I woll nought doe, but this I woll (q he)
That thou to me assent, as in this thing
Shewe now thy pacience, in thy werking
That thou me hight and swore in our village
That daie that maked was our mariage.

whan she had heard all this, she not ameued
Neither in word, in chere, ne in countenaūce
For as it semed, she was not agreued
She saied lorde, all lieth in your pleasaunce
My child and I, with hartely obeisaunce
Been yours all, and ye maie saue or spill
With your owne, worketh your owne will.

There maie nothing, so God my soul saue
Liken to you, that maie displease me
Ne I desire nothing for to haue
Ne drede for to lese, saue onely ye
This will is in my harte, and aie shall be
No length of time, or death it maie deface
Neither chāge my corage into an other place

Glad was the Marques of her answering
But yet he fained as he were not so
All dreery was his chere, and his looking whan that he should out of the chamber go Sone after this, a forlong waie or two
He priuely had told all his entent
Vnto a man, and to his wife him sent

In maner of a sergeant was this priuy man
The whiche he faithfull oft found had
In thinges great, and eke soche folk well can Doen execucion of thinges bad
The lorde knewe well, he him loued and drad
And whan this sergeant wist his lordes will Into the chamber he stalked him full still.

Madame he saied, ye mote forgeue it me
Though I do thing, which I am constrained Ye be full wise, and full well knowe ye
That lordes hestes maie not be fained
Thei maie well be wailed and complained
But men must nedes vnto her lust obaie
And so woll I, there nis no more to saie.

This child I am commaunded to take
And spake no more, but vp the child he hent Dispitously, and gan a chere to make
As though he would haue slain it or he went Grisilde must all sucker, and consent
And as a lambe, she sitteth meke and still
And let this cruell Sergeant doe his will.

Suspect was the fame of this man
Suspect his face, suspect his worde also Suspect the time in whiche he this began
Alas her doughter, that she loued so
She wende he would haue slain it right tho
But natheles, she neither wept ne sihed
Conforming her to that the Marques liked.

But at the last to speake she began
And meekely she the Sergeant praide
(So as he was a worthy gentell man)
That she might kisse her child er that it deide
And in her barme, this little child she leide
With full sad face, and gan the child blisse

And lulled it, and after gan it kisse.

And thus she saied in her benigne voice
Farwell my child, I shall thee neuer see
But sithen I haue marked thee with ỳ croice
Of thilke father iblisſed mote thou bee
That for vs died vpon the Roode tree
Thy soule little child, I him betake
For this night shalt thou dien for my sake.

I trowe that to a norice in this caas
It had been harde, this routh for to se
Well might a mother than crie alas
But natheleſſe, so sad and stedfast was she
That she endured all her aduersite
And to the Sergeant meekely she saied
Haue here ayen your little yong maide.

And goth now (ỳ she) & doth my lordes heſt
And o thing would I praie you of your grace
But if my lorde forbid it you at the leſt
Burieth this little body in some place
That no beaſtes ne birdes it to rate
But he no worde to that purpose would saie
But toke the child and went anon his waie.

This Sergeaunt came to the lorde again
And of Grisildes wordes, and of her chere
He told him worde by worde, short and plain
And him presented with his doughter dere
Somwhat this lord had routh in his maner
But natheleſſe, his purpose held he still
As lordes doen, whan thei woll haue her wil

And badde the sergeaunt that full priuely
He should this child well soft wind & wrappe
With all the circumstaunce tenderly
And carie it in a cofer, or in a lappe
But on pain of his hedde of to swappe
That no man should knowe of his entent
Ne whens he came, ne whither he went.

But at Boleine, to his suster dere
That thilke time of Pauie was Countesſe
He should it take, and shewe her this matere
Beseching her to doen her businesſe
This child to foſtre in all gentelneſſe
And whose child that it was, he bad her hide
From euery wight, for ought ỳ might betide

This sergeãt goth, & hath fulfilled this thing
But to this Marques now retourne we
For now goeth he full oft imagining
If by his wiues chere, he might se
Or by her wordes, perceiue that she Were chaunged, but he neuer could finde
But euer in one ilike sadde and kinde.

As glad, as humble, as buſie in seruage
And eke in loue, as she was wont to be
Was she to him, in euery maner wise
Ne of her doughter one worde spake she None accident, for none aduersite
Was seen in her ne neuer, her doughters name
Nempned she, for ernest ne for game.

Explicit tertia pars, et incipit pars quarta.

In this estate, passed been four yeres
Er she with childe was, but as God would
A man child she bare by this Walteres
Well gracious, and faire to behold
And whan folke it to the father told
Not onely he, but all the countre mery
Was for the child, & God thei thonke & hery.

Whan it was two yere old, and fro the breſt
Departed from his norice on a daie
This Marques cought yet an other leſt
To tempten his wife eft sones, if he maie
O nedeles was she tempted, I dare well saie
But wedded men ne conne no measure
Whan thei finde a pacient creature.

Wife (ỳ this Marques) ye haue herd or this My people heuely beareth our mariage
And namely sithen my sonne borne is Now is it worse than euer in our age
The murmure slaeth my hart and my corage
For to my eres cometh the voice so smart
That it well nie destroied hath my hart.

Now saie thei thus, whan Walter is agon
Than shall the blood of Janicola succede
And been our lorde, for other haue we non Soche wordes saie my people, it is no drede
Well ought I of soche murmure take hede
For certainly I drede soche sentence
Though thei not plainly speke i min audience

I would liue in peace, if that I might Wherfore I am disposed vtterly
As I his suster serued by night
Right so I thinke to serue him priuely
Thus warne I you, that ye not sodainly
Out of your self, for no wo should outraie
Beth pacient, and therof I you praie.

I haue (q̄ she) saied, and euer shall
I will ne nill nothing certain
But as you list: nought greueth me at all
Though q̄ my doughter & my soonne be slain
At your commaundement: this is to sain
I haue had no part of childzen twain
But first sickenesse, and after wo and pain.

Ye been our lozde, doth wt your own thing
Right as you list, and taketh no rede of me
For as I left at home my clothing
When I came first to you, right so (q̄ she) Left I my will, and all my liberte
And toke your clothing: wherfore I you pray
Doe your will, I will to it obaie.

And certes, if I had prescience
Your will to knowe, er ye your lust me told
I would it doen, without negligence
But now I wote your lust, & what ye would All your pleasaunce, stirme and stable I hold
For wist I that my death would doen you ese Gladly would I suffer it you to plese.

Death maie make no comparisoun
Unto your loue: and whā this Marques saie
The constaunce of his wife, he cast adoun
His yen twoo: and wondzed how she maie
In soche pacience, suffereth all this arraie
And forth he goth, with dzery countenaunce
But to his hart, it was full great pleasaunce

This eiger Sergeaunt, in thesame wise
That he her doughter caught, right so he Or worse, if he coud wers deuise
Hath hent her sonne, that was full of beaute
And euer in one so pacient was she
That she no chere made of heuinesse
But kisseth her child, and after gan him blisse

Saue this she praied him, if that he might
Her little sonne he would in yearth graue
His tender limmes, delicate to sight
Fro foules and fro beastes to saue
But she none answere of him might haue
He went his waie, as he nothing rought
But to Boleine he tenderly it brought.

This Marques wondzed euer lēger q̄ more Upon her pacience, and if that he Ne had sothly knowen there before
That parfitly her childzen loued she
He would haue wende, that for some subtelte
And of malice, or cruell corage
That she had suffred this with sad visage.

But he knewe well, q̄ nert himself certain
She loued her childzen best, in euery wise
But now of women would I aske fain
If these assaies might not suffise
What coud a sturdie husbonde more deuise
To preue her wifehode, and her stedfastnesse
But be continuyng euer in sturdinesse.

But there be folke of soche condicion
That whan thei han a certain purpose take Thei couth not stint of her intencion
But as thei were bounden to a stake
Thei will not of that purpose slake
Right so this Marques, hath fully purposed
To tempt his wife, as he was first disposed.

He waiteth, if by wordes or countenaunce
She were to him chaunged of corage
But neuer could he finde variaunce
She was aie in one hart and visage
And euer the further that she was in age
The more truer (if it wer possible)
She was to him in loue, and more penible.

For which it semeth thus, that of hem two
There nas but one will: for as Walter lest Thesame lust was her pleasaunce also
And God be thonked, all fell for the best
She shewed well, for no worldly unrest
A wife, as for her self, nothing should Willen in effect, but as her husbonde would.

The sclaunder of Walter, wonder wide spzad
That of cruell harte, full wzetchedly (For he a poore woman wedded had)
Hath murdzed both he his childzen prively
Whiche murmure was emong hem comonly
No wonder was: for to the peoples ere Ther came no word, but q̄ thei murdzed were

For which, there as his people there bifore
Had loued him wel, disclaūdzed of his defame
Made hem, that thei hated him therfore
To been a murtherer is an hatefull name
But natheless, for earnest ne for game
He of his cruell purpose would not stent
To tempt his wife, was all his entent.

Whan q̄ his doughter. xii. yere was of age
He to the court of Rome, in subtell wise (Enformed of his will) sent his message
Commaunding hem, soche billes to deuise
As to his cruell purpose maie suffise
How that the Pope, for his peoples rest
Bad him wedde an other, if that him lest.

I saie he bad, thei should counterfete
The Popes bulle, making mencion
That he hath leue, his first wife to lete
As by the Popes dispensacion
To stint rancour and discencion
Betwirt his people & him, thus spake the bul
The whiche thei han published at the full.

The rude people, as no wonder nis
Wenden full well, it had been right so
But whan these tidinges come to Grisildis
I deme, that her hart was full wo
But she was leche sadde euermo
Disposed was this humble creature
The aduersite of fortune to endure.

Abiding euer his lust and his pleasaunce
To whom she was yeuen, hart and all
As to her worldly sufficiaunce
But certainly, if I this storie tell shall
This Marques i written hath in speciall
A letter, in whiche he shewed his entent
And priuely, he it to Boloine sent.

To the Erle of Pauie, whiche that had tho
Wedden his suster: he praied specially
To bringen him ayen his children two
In honourable estable all openly
But one thing he him praied all vtterly
That he to no wight, thouz men wold enquere Should tellen whose children thei were.

But saie that the maidē should wedded be Vnto the Marques of Saluce anon
And as the Erle was praied, so did he
For at a daie iset, he on his waie is gon
Toward Saluce, and lordes many one
In riche araie, this maiden for to gide
Her yong brother riding by her side.

Araied was toward her mariage
This maiden freshe, full of gemmes clere
And her brother, that seuen yere was of age
Araied was eke freshly in his manere
And thus in great nobles and glad chere
Toward Saluce, shapen her iournaie
Fro daie to daie, riding forth her waie.

Explicit quarta pars, et sequitur pars quinta.

Mōg al this, after his wicked vsage
This Marques his wife yet to tempten more
To the vtterest prose of her corage
Fully to haue experience and lore
If that she were as stedfast (as before)
He on a day in open audience
Ful boistously hath said her this sentence.

Certes Grisild, I had inough of pleasaūce
To han you to my wife, for your goodnesse
And for your trouth, and your obeysaunce
Not for your linage, ne for your richesse
But I now know in very sothfastnesse
That in great lordship, if I me wel auise
There is great seruitude in sondry wise.

I may not done, as euery ploughman may
My people me constraineth for to take Another wife, and crien day by day
And eke the pope this rancoure for to slake
Consenteth it, that dare I vndertake
And truely, thus much I wol you say
My new wife is coming by the way.

Be strong of hert, & voide anon her place
And thilke dowery that ye brought to me
Take it ayen, I graunt it of my grace
Retourneth to your fathers house (q he)
No man may alway haue prosperite
With euen herte, I rede you to endure
The stroke of fortune, or of auenture.

And she ayen answerd in pacience:
My lord (q she) I wote and wiste alway
How that betwirt your magnificence
And my pouert, no man can ne may Maken no comparison, it is no nay
I held me neuer digne in no manere
To ben your wife, ne yet your chamberere

And in this house, there ye me lady made
(The hie God take I, as for my witnesse And al so wisely, as he my soule glad)
I held me neither lady ne maistresse
But humble seruaunt to your worthinesse
And euer shal, while my life may endure
Abouen euery worldly creature

That ye so long of your benignite
Haue holde me in honour and nobley (where I was not worthy for to be)
That thonke I God & you, to whom I prey
So yelde it you, there is no more to sey
Vnto my father gladly wol I wende
And with him dwell to my liues ende

There I was fostred of a childe ful small Til I be deed, my life there wol I lede

I wido we clene in herte, body and all
For sithen I yaue to you my maydenhede
And am your trew wife, it is no drede
God shilde suche a lordes wife to take Another man, to husbonde or to make.

And of your new wife, God of his grace
So graunt you welth and high prosperitie
For I wol gladly yeue her my place
In which I was blisful wont to be For sithen it liketh you my lorde (q she)
(That whilom weren al my hertes rest)
That I shal gon: I shal go whan you lest.

But there as ye me profred such dowayre
As I first brought, it is wel in my minde
It were my wretched clothes, nothing faire
The which to me now were ful hard to finde
Oh, good god: how gentil and how kinde:
Ye semed by your speche and your visage
The day that maked was our mariage:

But soth is said, algate I finde it trewe
For in effecte it is proued now on me
Loue is not olde, as whan it is newe
For certes lord, for none aduerlite
To dien in this case, it shal neuer be
That euer in word or worke I shal repent
That I you yaue mine hert in good entent

My lord ye wote, that in my fathers place ye did me stripe out of my poore wede
And richely ye clad me of your grace
To you brought I naught els out of drede
But faith, nakednesse, and maidenhede
But here ayen your clothing I restore
And eke my wedding ringe for euermore

The remnaunt of your iewels redy be Within your chambre, dare I safely saine
Naked out of my fathers house (q she)
I came: and naked I mote turne againe
If your plesaunce would I solow faine
But yet I hope it be not your entent
That I smocheles out of your paleis went

Ye coulde not do so dishoneste a thing
That ilke wombe in whiche your childre lay
Shulde before the people, in my walking
Be sene al bare: wherfore I you pray
Let me not like a worme go by the way
Remembreth you mine owne lord so dere
I was your wife, though I vnworthy were

Wherfore in reward of my maidenhede
Which I to you brought, and not ayen bere
As bouchesafe to yeue me to my mede
But soche a smocke as I was wont to were
That I therwith may wrie the wombe of here
That was your wife: here I take my leue
Of you, mine owen lord, lest I you greue.

The smocke (q he) that vpon thy backe
Let it be stil, and bere it forth with the
But wel vnneth that worde he spake
But went his way, for routhe and pite
Before the folke her selfe stripeth she
And in her smocke, with foote & heed all bare Toward her fathers house forth is she fare

The folke folowed weping in her wey
And fortune euer the curled as they gone
But she fro weping kept her eyen drey
Ne in this time, worde spake she none
Her father, that this tidinges herde anone
Cursed the date and time, that nature
Shope him to ben a liues creature.

For out of doute, this olde pore man
Was euer suspect of her mariage
For euer he demed, sithen it began
That whan the lord ifilled had his corage
Him would thinke it was a disparage
To his estate, so lowe for to alight
And boiden her, as sone as euer he might.

Ayenst his doughter hastely goth he (For he by the noise of folke knew her cõming)
And with her olde cote as it might be
He couered her, ful sore weping
But on her bodie might he it not bring
For rude was the cloth, and she more of age
By daies fele than was her mariage.

Thus with her father, for a certaine space
Dwelleth this flore of wifely pacience
That neuer by her wordes, nor by her face
Before the folke, ne eke in absence
Ne shewed she, that her was done offence
Ne of her hye estate no remembraunce
Ne had she, as by her countenaunce.

No wonder is, for in her great estate
Her gost was euer in plaine humilite
No tender mouth, ne hert delicate
Ne pompe, ne semblaunce of roialte
But full of pacience and benignite
Discrete, and prudelesse, and aye honorable
And to her husbande euer meke and stable.

Men

When speake of Job, & moste of his humblesse
Is clerkes (whan hem list) can well endite
Namely of men: but in sothfastnesse
Though clerkes praise women but a lite
There can no man in humblesse hem aquite
As women can: ne be halfe so true
As women been, but it befall of newe

Explicit quinta pars: & sequitur pars sexta.

THro Boloine is the Erle of Pauie come
Of whiche the fame sprong to more and lesse
And to the peoples eares, all and some was couth eke, how a newe Marquesse
He wt him brought, in pompe & soche richesse
That was neuer seen with mannes eye
So noble araie, in west Lumbardie

The Marques, that shope & knewe al this Er that this Erle was come, sent his message
To thilke poore and sely Grisildis
And she with humble hart, and glad visage
Not with swelling hart in her corage
Came at his heste, and one her knees her set
And reuerently and wisely she him gret.

Grisilde (q he) my will is utterly
This maide, that wedded shall be vnto me
Received be to morowe all so rotally
As it is possible in my hous to be
And eke that euery wight in his degre
Haue his estate in sitting and seruice
And also pleasaunt, as ye can best deuise.

I haue no woman sufficient certain
The chambres for to araie in ordinaunce
After my luste, and therfore woll I fain
That thine were all soche gouernaunce
Thou knowest eke of old all my pleasaunce
Though thine araie be bad, and euill beseie
Doe thou thy deuer at the lest weie.

Not onely lorde that I am glad (q she)
To doen your luste, but I desire also
You for to please, and serue in my degre
Withouten faining, and shall euer mo
Ne neuer for no weale, ne for no wo
Ne shall the ghost within my hart stent
To loue you best, withall my true entent.

And with ꝑ worde, she gan the hous to dight
And tables to set, and beddes to make
And pained her to doen all that she might Prayeng the chamberers for Gods sake
To hasten hem, and fast swepe and shake
And she the moste seruisable of hem all
Hath euery chamber araied, and his hall.

Abouten vndren gan this Erle alight that wt him brought these noble childre twey
For whiche the people ran to se that sight
Of her araie, so richely besey
And than at erste emonges hem thei sey
That walter was no foole, though him lest
To chaunge his wife: for it was for the best.

For she is fairer, as thei demen all
Than is Grisilde, and more tender of age
And fairer fruict bitwene hem shall fall
And more pleasaunt, for her hie linage
Her bother eke, so faire was of his age
That him to seen ꝑ people had cauȝt plesaūce
Commẽding now the Marques gouernaūce

O sterne people, vnstad and vntrue
Ay vndiscrete, and chaunging as a fane
Delighting euer in rumer that is newe
For like the Moone euer waxe ye and wane
Euer full of clapping, dere inough a iane
Your dome is fals, your cõstaūce euill preueth
A full great foole is he that on you liueth.

Thus saiden sad folke in that cite whan that the people gased vp and doun
For thei were glad, right with the noueite
To haue a newe lady of her toun
No more of this make I now mencioun
But to Grisilde ayen woll I me dresse
And tellen her constaunce, and her busines.

Well busie was Grisilde on euery thing
That to the feast was appertinent
Right nauȝt was she abashed of her clothing
Though thei wer rude, and somwhat to rent
But with glad chere, to the yate is went
With other folke, to greten the Marquesse
And after doeth she forth her busines.

With right glad chere, the gestes she receiueth
And duromly, euerich in his degre
That no man defaute there perceiueth
But euer they wondren, what she might be
That in so poore aray was for to se
And coud such honour, and reuerence
And worthily they praysen her prudence

In

In all the meane while she ne stente
This maiden ech her brother to commende
With al her hert, and benigne entente
So wel, that no man coud her prise amende
But at the last, whan these lordes wende
To sitten adoun to meate, he gan to call
Grisilde, as she was busy in the hall.

Grisilde (q he) as it were in his play
How liketh the my wife, and her beaute
Right wel my lorde (q she) for in good fay
I fairer saw I neuer none than she
I pray to God so yeue you prosperite
And so hope I, that he wol to you sende
Plesaunce inough, vnto your liues ende

But one thing I beseche, and warne also
That ye pricke with no turmenting
This tender maiden, as ye han do mo
For she is softred in her norissching
More tenderly, in my supposing
She could not aduersite endure
As could a pore softred creature.

And whan this walter saw her pacience
Her glad chere, and no malice at all
And he so ofte hath done her offence
And she aye constant, and stable as a wall
Continuing euer her innocence ouer all
This sturdy Marques, gan his hert dresse
To rewe vpon her wifely stedfastnesse.

This is inough, Grisilde mine (q he)
Be no more agast, ne euell apaide
I haue thy faith, and thy benignite
As well as euer woman was assaide
In great estate, or poorely araide
Now know I dere wife thy stedfastnesse
And her in armes tooke, and gan to kesse.

And she for wonder, took therof no kepe
She herde not what thing he to her saide
She fared as she had sterte out of her slepe
Till she out of her maslednesse abraide
Grisilde (q he) by god that for vs deide
Thou art my wife, and none other I haue
Ne neuer had, as God my soule saue

This is thy doughter, which y hast supposed
To ben my wife, and none other faithfully
And this shall be mine heir, as I haue dispo-Thou bare hem in thy body truely (sed
At Bolaine haue I kept hem sikerly
Take hem ayen, for now maist thou not say
That thou hast lorne any of thy children tway

And folke, that other wise han said of me
I warne hem wel, y I haue done this dede
For no malice, ne for no cruelte
But for to assay in the thy womanhede
And not for to sley my children, God forbede
But for to kepen hem priuely and still Til I thy purpose knew, and all thy will whan she this herd, a swoune doun she falleth

For pitous ioy, and after her swouning
She both her yong children to her calleth
And in her armes, pitously weping
Enbraced hem bothe, tenderly kissing
Ful like a mother, with her salte teeres
She bathed both her visage and her heeres

O which a pitous thing it was to se
Her swouning, and her pitous voice to here Graunt mercy lord, god thanke it you (q she)
That ye haue saued me my children dere
Now recke I neuer to be deed right here
Sithen I stond in your loue, and in your grace
No force of deth, ne whan my spirite pace.

O tendre, O derr, O yong children mine
Your wofful mother wende stedfastly
That cruel houndes, or some foule vermine
Had eten you, but god of his mercy
And your benigne father, so tenderly
Hath done you kepe: and in that same stounde
All sodainly she swapte doun to the grounde.

And in her swouning, so sadly holdeth she
Her children two, whan she gan hem enbrace
That with great sleight and difficulte
The children from her armes thei gan to race
O many a tere, on many a pitous face
Doune ran, of hem that stoden there beside Vnneth aboute her might no man abide.

walter her gladdeth, and her sorow slaketh
She riseth vp al abashed from her traunce
And euery wight her ioy and feest maketh
Til she hath caught ayen her countinaunce walter her doth so faithfully plesaunce
That it was deintie to seen the chere
Betwixt hem two, whan thei were met ifere

These ladies, whan thei her time sey
Han taken her, and into chambre gon
And strippen her out of her rude arrey
And in a clothe of Gold, that bright shone
With a croune of many a riche stone
Vpon her heed, thei her in to hall brought:
And there she was honoured as she ought.

The Clerke of Orenforydes tale.

Thus hath this pitous day a blisful ende
For euery man and woman dothe his might
This day in mirth and reuel to dispende
Til on the welken shone the sterres bright
For more solempne, in euery mannes sight
This feest was, and greater of costage
Than was the reuel of her mariage.

Wel many a yere, in hie prosperite
Liuen these two, in concorde and in rest
And richely his doughter maried he Unto a lorde, one of the worthiest
Of al Itaile, and than in peace and rest
His wiues father in his courte he kepte
Til that his soule out of his body crepte.

His sonne succedeth in his heritage
In rest and peace, after his fathers day
And fortunate was ehe in mariage
Al put he not his wife in great assay
This world is not so strong, it is no nay
As it hath ben in olde times yore
And herkneth what thautour saith therfore.

This story is said, not for ỹ wiues should Folowen Grisilde, as in humilite
For it were impertable tho thei would
But that euery wight in his degre
Sholde be constaunt, in al aduersite
As was Grisild, wherfore Petrarke writeth
This storie, which with hie stile he enditeth

For sith a woman was so pacient
Unto a mortall man, wel more we ought Receiue all in gree that God vs sent
For great skill he preueth that he wrought
But he ne tempteth no man that he bought
As saith saint Jame, if ye his pistell rede
He preueth folke but a day, it is no drede.

And suffreth vs as for our exercise
With sharpe scourges of aduersite
Wel ofte to be beaten, in sondrie wise
Not for to know our wil, for certes he Or we were borne, knew al our freite
And for our best, is al his gouernaunce
Let vs liue than in vertuous suffraunce

But one word herkeneth lordinges or ye go
It were ful harde to finde now a dayes
In al a countre Grisildes thre or two
For if thei were put to suche assayes
The gold of hem hath so bad a layes
With brasse, for thoughe it be faire at eye
It would rather brast a two than plie

For which here, for ỹ wiues loue of Bathe
Whose life and secte, mighty God maintene
In high maistry, or els ware it skathe
I wil with lusty hert, fresche and grene
Say you a song, to glad you I wene
And let vs stinte of ernest matere
Herkeneth my sõg that saith in this manere.

Lenuoye de Chaucer a les mariz de nostre temps.

Grisilde is deed and eke her pacience
And bothe at ones buried in Itaile
For whiche I crye in open audience
No wedded man be so hardy to assaile
His wiues pacience in trust to finde
Grisildes, for in certaine he shall faile.

O noble wiues, ful of hie prudence
Let no humilite your tonge naile
Ne let no clerke haue cause ne diligence
To write of you a storie of such meruaile
As of Grisilde, pacient and kinde
Lest Chechifface swalow you in her entraile

Foloweth Ecco, that holdeth no silence
But euer answereth at the countre taile
Beth no adalled for your innocence
But sharpely taketh on you the gouernaile
Enprinteth wel this lesson in your minde
For commen profite, sithnesse it may auaile

Ne dredeth hem not, doth hem no reuerence
For though thin husbande armed be in maile
The arrowes of thy crabbed eloquence
Shall perce his brest, and eke his aduentaile
In ielousye ehe, loke thou him binde
And ỹ shal make him couch as doth a quaile

If ỹ be faire, there folke ben in presence
Shewe thou thy visage, and thine apparaile
If thou be foule, be fre of thy dispence
To get the frendes aye do thy trauaile
Be aye of chere, as light as lefe on linde
And let him care, wepe, wringe, and waile.

Ye archwiues, stõdeth aye at your defence
Sith ye be strong, as is a great camaile
Ne suffreth not, that men do you offence
And ye shlendre wiues, feble as in bataile
Beth eygre as any tigre is in Inde
Aye clappeth as a mil, I you counsaile.

Here endeth the Clerke of Orforydes tale.

Here

¶ Here folowethe the wordes of our Hoste.

This worthy clerck, whā ended was his tale
Our Hoste said and swore by cockes bones
Me were leuer than a barel of ale
My wife at home had herd this legende ones
This is a gentel tale for the nones
Is to my purpose, wiste ye my will But thing that wol not be, let it be still.

¶ Here endeth the wordes of our Hoste, and here folowethe the Frankeleins Prologue.

Hese old gentill Britons in her daies
Of diuers auentures maden laies Rimed first in her mother tonge which layes, with her instrumentes thei song
Or els reden hem for her plesaunce
And one of hem haue I in remembraunce Whiche I shal say, as willing as I can.
But sirs, bicause I am a boxel man
At my beginning first I you beseche
Haue me excused of my rude speche
I lerned neuer Rhetorike certaine
Thing that I speke, mote be bare and plaine
I slept neuer on the mounte of Pernaso
Ne lerned neuer Marcus Tullius Cicero
Colours ne know I none, withouten drede
But suche colours as growen in the mede
Or els suche as men dien or painte
Coloures of Rhetorike, ben to me quainte
My spirite feleth not of suche matere
This is my tale, if ye wol it here.

¶ Here endeth the Frankeleins prologue, and here folowethe the Frankeleins tale.

In Armorike, that called is Britaine
There was a knight, that loued & did his paine
To serue ladyes in hys best wise
And manye a labour, and many a great empryse
He for his lady wrought, er she were wonne
For she was one the fayrest vnder sonne
And eke therto comen of hie kinrede
That wel vneth durst this knight for drede
Tel her his wo, his paine, and his distresse
But at the last, she of her worthinesse
And namely for his meke obeysaunce
Hath suche a pite caught of his penaunce
That priuely she fill of his accorde
To take him for her husbonde and her lorde
Of such lordship, as me haue ouer her wiues
And for to lede in the more blisse her liues
Of his free wil, he swore her as a knight
That neuer in al his life, day ne night
He should he take vpon him no maistry
Againe her wil, ne kithe her ielousy
But her obey, and folowe her wil in all
As any louer to his lady shall Saue that the name of souerainte
That would he haue for shame of his degre.
She thonked him, & with ful great humblesse
She said: sir, sithe of your gentilnesse
Ye profred me to haue so large a raine
Ne would God neuer betwixt vs twaine
As in my gilte, were either werre or strife
Sir, I wol be your trewe humble wife
Haue here my trueth, til that my hert breste
Thus ben thei bothe in quiet and in reste.
For one thing sirs, safely dare I seine
That frendes, euerich other must obeine
If thei wol long holden compainie
Loue wol not be constrained by maistrie when maistry cometh, the God of loue anon
Beateth his winges, and farewell he is gon
Loue is a thing, as any spirite free
Women of kinde desiren liberte
And not to be constrained as a thrall
And so done men, if I soothe saie shall Loke who that moste pacient is in loue
He is at his auauntage all aboue
Pacience is an hie vertue certaine
For it venquisheth, as these clerkes saine
Thinges that rigour shall neuer attaine
For euery word, men may not chide or plaine
Lerneth to suffer, or els, so mote I gone
Ye shall it lerne whether ye woll or none
For in this world certaine, no wight ther is That he ne doth or saieth sometime amis
Ire, sickenesse, or constellacion
Wine, wo, or chaunging of complexion
Causeth ful ofte, to don amisse or speken
On euery wrong, a man may not be wreken
After the time, must be temperaunce
To euery wight that can of gouernaunce
And therfore, hath this worthie wise knight
To liue in ease, suffraunce her bight
And she to him ful wisely gan swere

That neuer ſhould ther be default in here
Here may men ſe, humble and wiſe accorde
Thus hath ſhe take her ſeruaunt & her lorde
Seruaunt in loue, and lord in mariage
Than was he bothe in lordſhip and ſeruage
Saruage: nay, but in lordſhip aboue
Sithen he hath both his lady and his loue
His lady certes, and his wife alſo
The whiche that lawe of londe accordeth to
And when he was in this proſperite
Home with his wife he goth, into his contre Nat ferre fro Dēmarke, ther his dwelling was Where as he liueth in ioye and ſolas
Who coude tell, but he had wedded be
The ioy, the eaſe, and the proſperite
That is betwixt an huſbonde and his wife
Euermore laſted this bliſſful life
Til that this knight, of which I ſpeke thus
That of Caere Juda, was cleped Arueragus
Shope him to dwel, a yere or twaine (gus
In Englond, that cleped was Britaine
To ſeken in armes worſhip and honour
For all his luſte he ſette in ſuche labour
And dwelt ther two yere, the boke ſaith thus Now wol I ſtint of this Arueragus
And ſpeke I wol of Dorigen his wife
That loueth her huſbonde as her hertes life
For his abſence, wepeth ſhe and ſiketh
As don theſe noble wiues when hem liketh
She mourneth, waileth, faſteth, & plaineth
Deſire of his preſence, her ſo conſtraineth
That al this wide world ſet ſhe at nought
Her frendes, which knewe her heuy thought Conforten her, in all that euer they may
They preachē her, and tellen her night & day
That cauſeles ſhe ſlewe her ſelfe, alas
And euery comfort poſſible in this caas
They don to her, with all her buſineſſe
And al for to maken her leue her heuineſſe.
By proceſſe, as ye knowen euerichone
Men mowen ſo longe grauen in a ſtone
Til ſome figure therin printed be
So long han they comforted her, till ſhe
Receiued hath by hope and by reſon
The enprinting of her conſtellacion
Through which her gret ſorow gan aſwage
She may not alway enduren ſuche a rage
And eke Arueragus in all this care
Hath ſent his letters home of his welfare
And that he wol come haſtely againe
Or elſ had this ſorow her herte ſlaine.
Her frendes ſawe her ſorow gan to ſlake
And praiden her on knees, for goddes ſake
To come and romen in her companie
Away to driuen her derke fantaſie
And finally ſhe graunted that requeſte
For wel ſhe ſawe it was for the beſte.
Now ſtode her caſtell faſt by the ſee
And often with her frendes walked ſhe
Her to diſport on the bankes hie
Where as ſhe many ſhippes and barges ſie
Sailing her courſe, where hem liſte go
But yet was that a parcell of her wo
For to her ſelfe ful oft alas ſaid ſhe
Is there no ſhippe, of ſo many as I ſe
Wol bring home my lord: than were my her
Warished of theſe bitter paines ſmert.
Another time, would ſhe ſitte and thinke
And caſt her eyen doun warde fro the brinke
But when ſhe ſawe the griſly rockes blake
For very feare, ſo would her hert quake
That on her fete ſhe might not her ſuſtene
Than would ſhe ſit adoun upon the grene
And pitouſly into the ſee beholde
And ſay right thus, with ſorouful ſikes colde
Eterne God, that through thy purueyaūce
Ledeſt this world, by certeine gouernaunce
In idle as men ſain, doſt thou nothing make
But lord, theſe griſly fendely rockes blake
That ſemen rather a foule confuſion
Of werke, than a faire creacion
Of ſuche a parfite God, wiſe and full ſtable
Why haue ye wrought this werk vnreſonable
For by this werke, north, ſouth, weſt, ne eſte
Ther nis foſtred, man, birde, ne beſte
It doth no good, but anoyeth
See ye not lord, how mankinde it diſtroieth
An hundred thouſande bodies of mankinde
Haue rockes ſlain, al be they not in minde
Sin mankind is ſo faire a part of thy werke
That thou it madeſt like thy owne werke
Than ſemed it ye had a great cherte
Toward mankinde, but how then may it be
That ye ſuche menes maken it to diſtoyen:
Which menes don no good, but euer anoyen.
I wote wel clerkes woll ſaine as hem leſt
By argumentes, that all is for the beſt
Though I ne can not the cauſes wel knowe
But thilke God, ỹ made the winde to blowe
As kepe my lord, this is my concluſion
To clerkes lette I al this diſputacion
And wolde God that all theſe rockes blake
Were ſonken in to hell for his ſake.
Theſe rockes ſlee mine heart for feare
Thus would ſhe ſay with many a pitous teare
Her frendes ſawe it was for her no diſport
To romen by the ſee, but diſcomfort
And chapen hem to plain ſomwhere elles
They leden her by riuers and by welles
And eke in other places delectables

They

They dauncen and they plaien at the tables
So on a day, right in the morowe tide Unto a gardeine, that was there beside
In which that thei had made her ordinaunce
Of vitailes, and other purueyaunce
They gon and plain hem al the long day
And this was in the firte morowe of May
Which May hath painted w his soft floures
This gardaine full of leues and of floures
And craft of mannes honde so curiously
Irayed had this gardaine truely
That neuer nas there garden of suche prise
But if it were the very paradise
The odour of floures, and the freshe sight
Would haue made any hert light
That euer was born, but if to gret sickenesse
Or to great sorowe helde it in distresse
So was it full of beaute, with plesaunce.
And after dinner gonne thei daunce
And singe also, saue Dorigene alone
That yet vnto her self made her mone
For she ne sey him on the daunce go
That was her husbonde, and her loue also But natheless, she must her time abide
And with good hope, let her sorowe slide.
Upon this daunce, among other men
Daunced a squier before Dorigen
That fresher was, and iolier of aray
As to my dome, then is the moneth of May
He singeth, and daunceth, passing euery man
That is or was, sithen the world began
And therwithall, a men shoulde him discriue
One of the best faring men on liue
Yonge, stronge, vertuous, riche, and wise
And wel beloued, and holden of great prise
And shortely, if I the sothe tell shall Unwitting of this Dorigen at all
This lusty squier, seruaunt to Venus
Whiche icleped was Aurelius
Had loued her beste of any creature
Two yere and more, as was his auenture
But neuer durst he tell her his greuaunce
Withouten cuppe he dronke al his penaunce
He was dispaired, nothing durst he say
Saue in his songes, somwhat wold he wray
His wo, as in general complaining
He said he loued, and was beloued nothing
Of whiche matere made he many layes
Songes, complaintes, roundels, verilayes
How that he durst not his sorow tell
But languish, as dothe a fury in hell
And die he muste (he said) as did Ecco
For Narcillus, that durst not tell his wo.
In other maner than ye herde me say
He durst not he to her his wo bewray
Saue parauenture somtime at daunces
There yonge folke kepen her obseruaunces
It may well be, he loked on her face
In suche a wise, as men that asken grace
But nothing wiste she of his entent
Natheless it happed, er thei thence went Bicause that he was her neighbour
And was a man of worship and honour
And had knowen him oft times yore
They fell in speche, and so forth more & more Unto his purpose than drowe Aurelius
And when he sawe his time he said thus.
Madame (q he) by god that this world made
So that I wist, that I might your hert glade
I would that day, that your Aruyragus
Went ouer the see, that I Aurelius
Had went ther? I should neuer come againe
For wel I wote my seruice is in vaine
My guerdon nis but bresting of mine hert
Madame rueth vpon my paines smert
For with one worde ye may me slee or saue
Here at your fote God would? I wer graue
I ne haue as now no leiser more to sey
Haue mercy swete, or ye wol do me dey.
She gan to loke vpon Aurelius
Is this your wil (q she) and say ye thus?
Neuer erst (q she) ne wist I what ye mente
But now I know Aurelius your entente
By thilke God, that yaue me soule and life
Ne shal I neuer be vntrewe wife
In word ne in werke, as far as I haue wit
I wol ben his to whom I am knit
Take this for a finall answere of me
But after this in plaie thus said she.
Aurelius (q she) by god aboue
Yet wol I graunt you to ben your loue
(Sithen I se you so pitously complaine)
Loke what day that endlong Britaine
Ye remeue all the rockes, stone by stone
That thei ne let shippe ne bote to gone
I say whē ye haue made these costes so clene
Of rockes, that there nis no stone sene
Than wol I loue you best of any man
Here haue my trueth, in al that euer I can.
Is there none other grace in you (q he?)
No by that lord (q she) that maked me
For wel I wote that it shall neuer betide
Let suche folie out of your hert glide
What deintie should a man haue in his life
For to go loue another mannes wife?
That hath her body when so that him liketh
Aurelius full oft sore siketh
Wo was Aurely, whan he this herde
And with a sorouful chere he thus answerde
Madame (q he) this were impossible

Then mote I die on sodeint dethe horrible
And with that worde he turned him anone.
Tho come her other frendes cuerichone
And in the aleyes romeden vp and doun
And nothing wiste of this conclusion
But sodainly began to reuell newe
Till that the bright sonne lost his hewe
For the orizont hath reft the sonne his light
This is as muche to say, as it was night
And home they gon in ioy and in solas
Saue onely wretched Aurelius, alas
He to his house is gon with sorowfull harte
He said he might not from his dethe asterte
Him semed, that he felte his hert colde
Up to heuen his hondes gan he holde
And on his knees bare, he set him adoun
And in his rauing said this orisoun
For very wo out of his witte he braide
He ne wist what he spake, but thus he saide
With pitous hert hath his cõplaint begonne
Unto the goddes, and first vnto the sonne
He said: God Apollo and gouernour
Of euery plante, herbe, tree, and flour
That yeuest after thy declinacion
To ilke of hem his time and ceson
As thine herberow chaungeth low and hie
Lord Phebus, cast thy mercisble eye
On wretched Aurelius, which am but lorne
Lo lorde, my lady hath my dethe if worne
Without gilt, but thy benignite
Upon my deedly hert haue some pite
For wel I wot lorde Phebus, if ye lefte
Ye may me helpe saue my lady befte
Now vouche ye saue, that I you deuise
How that I maye beholpen and in what wise.
Your blisful suster Lucina the shene
That of the see is goddesse and quene
Though Neptunus hath deitee in the see Yet empresse aboue him is she Ye knowen wel lord, right as her desire
Is to be quickened and lighted of your fire
For whiche that she foloweth you full besily
Right so the see desireth naturally
To folowen her that is goddesse
Both of the see, and riuers more and lesse
Wherfore lorde Phebus, this is my requeft
Do this miracle, or do mine hert breft
That now next at this opposicion
Which in signe shal be the Lion
As praieth her so great a floode to bring That fiue fadome at the leaft, it ouer spring
The highest roche in Armorike Britaine
And let this floode dure yeres twaine
Then certes to my lady may I say
Holdeth your hest, the roches ben away
This thing may ye lightly don for me
Pray her to goon no faster course than ye
I say thus, praieth your suster that she go
No faster course than ye in yeres two Than shal she be at the ful alway
And spring floode lasting both night and day
And but she vouchesafe in suche manere
To graunt me my soueraine lady dere
Pray her to sinken euery roche adoun
Into her owne derke regioun
Under the ground, there Pluto dwelleth in Or neuer more shall I my lady win
Thy tẽple in Delphos, wol I barfote seke
O lord Phebus, se the teares on my cheke
And on my paine haue some compassion
And with that word, in swoune he fel adoun
And long time he lay in a traunce.
His brother, which ỹ knew of his penaunce
Up caught him, and to bed him brought Dispeyred in this turment and this thought
Lette I this wofull creature lie
Chese he whether he wol liue or die.
Arueragus with heale and greate honour
(As he that was of cheualry the flour)
Is comen home, and other worthy men
O blisful art thou now Dorigen
That hast thy lusty husbonde in thine armes
That freth knight, ỹ worthy man of armes
That loueth the, as his owen hertes life
Nothing like him to be imaginatife
If any wight had spoken (while he was out)
To her of loue, therof had he no dout
He entendeth not to suche matere
But daucth, iusteth, and maketh her good chere
And thus in ioy and blisse I let hem dwell
And of wofull Aurelius wol I tell.
In langour and in turmente dispitous
Two yere and more, lay wretched Aurelius
Er any lote on erth he might gone
Ne comfort in this time had he none
Saue of his brother, whiche was a clerke
He knewe of al this wo and al this werke
For to non other creature certain
Of this matere, durst he no worde sain
Under his brest he bare it more secre
Then euer did Pamphilus for Galathe
His brest was hole without for to seen
But in his hert aye, was the arrowe keen
And well ye knowen that of a surfanure
In surgery, is perilous the cure
But men might touch ỹ arow or com therby
His brother wepeth and waileth priuely
Till at the last him fel in remembraunce
That while he was at Orliaũce in Fraunce
(As these clerkes ponge that ben liberoule)

Coreden artes that been curious
Seken in euery halue and in euery Yerne
Perticuler science for to lerne
He him remembred that vpon a dele
Ir Orliaunce in studie a booke he sele
Of Magike naturell, whiche his felawe
That was in that time a bacheler of lawe
Ill were he there to learne an other craft
Had priuely vpon his dere staff
Whiche booke spake of mochell operacions
Touching the foure and twentie Mansions
That longen to the Moon, and soche folie
Is in our daies is not worthe a Flie
For holy churche saieth in our bileue
Ne suffreth non illusion vs to greue
And whā this boke was in his remēbraunce
Anon for ioie his harte gan daunce
And to himself he saied priuely
My brother shall be warished sikerly
For I am siker that there be sciences
By whiche men maken diuers aparences
Soche as these subtell tregetores plaie
For oft at feastes haue I well heard saie
That tragetors, within an hall large
Haue made come in water and a barge
And in the halle rowen vp and doun
Somtime hath semed a grim Lion
And somtime floures spring as in a mede
Somtime a vine, and grapes white and rede
Somtime a castell of lime and stone
And whan hem liked, voiden hem anon
Thus semed it to euery mannes sight.

Now than cōclude I thus, if that I might Ir Orliaunce some old felawe finde
That had this Moones Mansions in minde
Or other Magike naturall aboue
He should wel make my brother haue his loue
For with an apparaunce a clerke maie make
To mannes sight, that all the rockes blake
Of Britain, wer auoided euerichone
And shippes by ꝑ brinke to comen and gone
And in soche forme enduren a yere or two Than wer my brother warished of his wo
Than must he nedes hold her biheste
Or els he shall shame her at the leste

What should I make a lenger tale of this?
Unto his brothers bedde he comen is
And soche comfort he yaue him for to gon
To Orleaunce, that he vp sterte anon
And on his waie than is he forth ifare
In hope to been lessed of his care.

Whan thei wer comen almoste to that cite (But if it were a two forlong or three)
A yong clerke roming by himself thei met
Whiche that in Latin thriftely hem gret
And after ward he saied a wonder thing
I know we the cause of your comming
And er thei farther any foote went
He told hem all that was in her entent

This Briton clerke asked him of folkes
The whiche he had knowen in old daies
He answerde him, that thei dedde were
For whiche he wept oft full many a tere.

Doune of his horse Aurelius light anon
And with this Magicien forth is he gon
Home to his house, and made him well at ese
Hem lacked no vitaile that hem might plese
So well araied an hous as there was one
Aurelius in his life saw he neuer none

He shewed him, or he went to suppere
Forestes and parkes, full of wilde dere
There saw there Hartes, with hornes hie
The greatest that euer wer seen with ie
He se of hem an hundred slain with houndes
And some of arowes bled with bitter woundes
He saw, whan voided were the wilde dere
These fauconers, vpon a faire riuere
That with the haukes han the Heron slain

Tho saw he knightes iusting in a plain
And after this he did him soche pleasaunce
That he him shewed his lady in a daunce
On whiche himself daunced as him thought
And whā this maister ꝑ this magike wrought Saw it was time, he clapped his hondes to
And fare well our reuell, all was ago
And reneued neuer out of his hous
While thei saw all this sight meruellous
But in his studie there his bookes be Thei saten still, no wight but thei three.

To him this maister called his squier
And saied him thus, is redy our supper
Almoste an houre it is, I vndertake Sithen I you bad our supper redy make Whan that these worthy men went with me
Into my studie, there as my bookes be.

Sir (ꝙ the squier) whan it liketh you
It is all redy, though ye woll right now.

Go we suppe than (ꝙ he) for the best
These amorous folke some time mote haue rest

And after supper fell thei in trete
What somme should this maister guerdon be
To remeue all the rockes of Britain
And eke from Gironde to the mouth of sain.

He made it straunge and swore so god him saue
Lasse thā a thousand pound wold he not haue
Ne gladly for that somme nolde he it doen.

Aurelius with blissfull herte anon
Answerd thus: Fie on a thousande pound
This wide worlde, whiche men saie is round
I would it yeue, if I were lorde of it

This bargain is fulðriue, for we be knit
Ye shall be paied truely by my trouth
But loke now for no negligence or slouth
Ye tarien vs here no lenger than to morowe
Quod (q̄ this clerke) here my trouth to borow
To bedde is gon Aurelius whan him leste
And well nie all night he had his rest
What for his labour, and his hope of blisse
His wofull harte of penaunce had a lisse.
Upon the morowe whan that it was daie
To Britain toke thei the right waie
Aurelius, and this Magicine him beside
And been discended there thei would abide
And this was, as the boke doeth remember
In the cold frostie season of December.
Phebus wared old, and hewed like Laton
That afore in his hote declinacion
Shone as ỹ brenning gold, w̄ stremes bright
But now in Capricorne adoune he light
Where as he shone full pale, I dare well sain
The bitter frost, with the slidder rain
Destroied hath the grene in euery yerde
Janus sit by the fire with double berde
And drinketh of his bugle horne the wine
Biforn him stont braune of the tusked swine
And nowell crieth euery lustie man
Aurelius, in all that euer he can Doeth to this maister chere and reuerence
And praieth him to doen his diligence
To bringen him out of his paines smart
Or with a swerd that he would slit his hart.
This clerke soche routh hath on this man
That night & daie he spedeth him that he can
To waite a time of his conclusion
This is to saie, to make illusion
Or soche an apparence or iogelrie
I ne can no termes of Astrologie
That he and euery wight should wene & saie
That of Britain the rockes wer awaie
Or els thei wer sonken vnder the ground
Till at the last he hath his time ifound
To make his iapes and his wretchednesse
Of soche superstitious cursednesse
His tollitan tables he forth brought Full well corrected, him lacked nought
Neither his collect, ne his expans yeres
Ne his rootes, ne his other geres
As been his centris, and his argumentes
And his proporcionell conuenientes
For his equacions in euery thing
And by his eight spheres in his werking
He knew ful well how far alnath was shoue
Fro the hedde of thilke fire Aries aboue
That in the ninth spere considered is Full subtelly he had calked all this
And whan he had found his first Mansion
He knewe the remnaunt by proporcion
And knewe the rising of the Moon wele
And in soche race, the terme and euery dele
And knewe also his other obseruaunces
For soche illusions and soche mischaunces
As Heathen folke vsed in thilke daies
For whiche ne maked he no lenger delaies
But throughout his magike, for a weke or tway
It semed that all the rockes wer away.
Aurelius, whiche that dispeired is Whither he shall haue his loue, or faire amis
Awaiteth night and daie on this miracle
And whan he knewe there was non obstacle
But that voided were these rockes euerichon
Doune to the maisters fete he fell anon
And saied, I wofull wretche Aurelius
Thanke you lorde and lady mine Venus
That me hath holpen fro my cares cold
And to the tẽple his waie forth hath he hold Where as he knewe he should his lady se
And whan he sawe his time, anon right he
With dredfull harte, and with humble chere
Salued hath his souerain lady dere.
My right full lady (q̄ this wofull man)
Whom I serue and loue, as I best can
And lothest wer of all this worlde displease
Nere it that I for you haue soche disease
That I must die here at your feete anon
Nought would I tel you how wo is me begon
But certes either must I die or plain
Ye slea me gilteles for dery pain
But of my death, though ye haue no routh
Auisen you, er that ye breaken your trouth
Repenteth you, for that ilke God aboue
For ye slea me, because that I you loue
For madame, well ye wot that ye haue might Not that I chalenge any thing of right
Of you my souerain lady, but of your grace
But in a garden yonde in soche a place
Ye wote right well what ye might me
And in my honde your trouth plight ye
To loue me best, God wote ye saied so:
All be it I am worthy thereto
Madame I speake for the honour of you
More than for to saue my hartes life now
I haue doen right as ye commaunded me
And if ye vouchsafe, ye maie go se
Doeth as you list, haueth your best in minde
For quicke or ded, right there ye shall me finde
In you lieth all to doe me liue or deie
But well I wote the rockes been awaie.
He toke his leue, and she astonied stoode
In all her face there nas a droppe of bloode
She wende neuer han come in soche a trappe
Alas

Alas (q̄ she) that euer this should happe
For wende I neuer by possibilite
That soche a mister or maruaile might be
It is against the processe of nature
And home she goeth a sorowfull creature
For very feare vnnethes maie she go
She wepeth and waileth a daie or two
And swouneth, that it was routh to se
But why it was to no wight told she
For out of toune was gon Aruiragus
But to her self she spake, and saied thus
In her complaint, as ye shall after here
With face pale, and with sorowfull chere.
Alas (q̄ she) on thee fortune I plain
That vnware hast wrapped me in thy chain
Fro whiche to escape, wot I no socour
Saue onely death, or els dishonour
One of these two behoueth me to chese
But natheles, yet had I leuer to lese
My life, than of my body to haue a shame
Or know me my self false, or lese my name
And with my death, I maie be quit iwis
Hath there not many a wife er this
And many a maide, islain her self alas
Rather than with her body doen trespas
And certes lo, these stories been witnesse
Whan thyrtie tyrauntes, full of cursidnesse
Had slain Phidon, in Athenes at the feest
They commaunded his doughters to arest
And bringen hem before hem in dispite
All naked, to fulfill her foule delite
And in her fathers blood, he did hem daunce
Upon ỹ pauemēt, God yeue him mischaunce
For whiche this wofull maidens ful of drede
Rather than thei would lesen her maidēhede
They priuely been stert into a well
And drenched hem self, as bokes tell.
They of Messene let enquire and seke
Of Lacidomony fiftie maidens eke
On which they would haue doen her lecherie
But there was none of all that companie
That she nas slain, and with a glad entent
Chese rather for to dien, than for to assent
To been oppressed of her maidenhede
Why should I than to die been in drede.
Lo eke the tyraunt Aristoclides
That loued a maid, that hight Stimphalides
Whan that her father slain was on a night
Unto Dianes temple goth she anon right
And hent the Image, with her armes two Fro whiche Image would she neuer go
No wight might fro it her hondes race
Till she was slain, right in the self place.
Now lithnes ỹ maidens had soche dispite
To been defouled with mannes foule delite
Well ought a wife rather her self slae
Than be defouled, as thinketh me.
What shall I saie of Hasdruballes wife
That at Cartage birafte her self her life
For whā she sawe ỹ Romanes wan the toun
She toke her children all, and lept adoun
Into the fire, and chese rather to die
Than any Roman did her vilanie.
Hath not Lucrece islain her self, alas
At Rome, there she oppressed was
Of Tarquine, for her thought it was shame
To liue, whan that she had lost her name.
The eight maidens of Meletie also Han slain hem selue for very drede and wo
Rather than folk of Gaule should hē oppresse
More than a thousande stories, as I gesse
Couth I now tell as touching this matere.
Whan Idradas was slain, his wife so dere
Her self slowe, and let her blood to glide
In Idradas woundes, brode and wide
And saied, my body at the lest waie
There shall no wight defoule if I maie.
What should I mo ensamples hereof sain
Sithens that so many han hem slain
Well rather than thei would defouled be
I woll conclude that it is best for me
Well rather slea my self in some manere
As did Demotius doughter dere
Bicause that she nolde not defouled be.
O Sedasus, it is full great pite
To reden how thy doughters diden, alas.
That slowen hem self for soche a maner caas
As greate a pite was it or well more
The Theban maiden, that for Nichanore
For one of Macedone had her oppressed
With her death her maidenhede she redressed
What shall I sain of Nicerates wife
That for soche case birafte her self her life.
How true was eke to Alcibiades
His loue, that for to dien rather chees
Than for to suffren his body vnburied be.
Lo whiche a wife was Alceste (q̄ she)
What saieth Homere of good Penelope.
All Grece knoweth of her chastite.
Parde of Laodomia is written thus
That whā at Troie was slain Protheselaus
No lenger nolde she liue after his date.
Thesame of noble Portia tell I maie
Withouten Brutus couth she not liue
To whom she had all her harte igiue.
The perfite wifehode of Artemisy
Honoured is, throughout all Barbary
Oh Thenta Queene, thy wifely chastite
To all wiues maie a mirrour be.
Thesame thing I saie of Bilia

Of

Of Rodogone, and eke Valeria.
Thus plained Dorigene a daie or t weie
Purpoling euer that she would deie
But natheles vpon the third night
Home came Trueragus, the worthy knight
And asked her why she wept so sore
And she gan wepen euer lenger the more
Alas (q she) that euer was I borne
Thus haue I said (q she) thus haue I sworne
And told him all, as ye haue heard before
It nedeth not to rehearce it no more
This husbond w glad chere in sondry wise
Answerd and saied, as I shall you deuise
Is there aught els Dorigene but this:
Naie naie (q she) God helpe me so as wis
This is to moche, and it were Goddes will.
ye wife (q he) let slepe that is still
It maie be well yet parauenture to daie ye shall your trouth hold by my faie
For God so willy haue mercie on me
I had well leuer sticked for to be
For very loue whiche that I to you haue
But if ye should your trouth saue
Trouth is the hiest thing that men may kepe
But with that worde he brast anon to wepe
And said, I you forbid on pain of death
That neuer whiles you lasteth life or breath
To no wight tell of this misaventure
As I maie best I woll my wo endure
Ne make no countenaunce of heuinesse
That folke of you maie deme harme ne gesse
And forth he cleped a squier and a maide
Goth forth anon with Dorigene he said
And bringeth her in soche a place anone
Thei toke her leue, and on her waie thei gone
But thei ne wist why she thider went
She nolde no wight tell her entent.
This squier, whiche that hight Aurelius
On Dorigene, whiche that was so amerous
Of aventure happed her to mete
Amid the toune, right in the hie strete
As she would haue gon the waie forth right
Toward the garden, there as she had hight
And he was to the garden ward also
For well he spied whan she would go
Out of her hous, to any maner place
But thus thei met of auenture or of grace
And he saluteth her with glad entent
And asked of her whider that she went.
And she answerd half as she wer mad
Vnto the garden as my husbond badde
My trouth for to hold, alas alas
Aurelius gan wondren of this caas
And in his harte had great compassion
Of her chere, and of her lamentacion
And of Aruiragus the worthy knight
That bad her hold all that she had hight
So loth he was y she should breke her trouth
And in his hart he caught of it greate routh
Conlidring the best on euery side
That fro his lust wer him better abide Than doe so hie a churlishe wretchidnesse
Ayenst fraunchise, and ayenst all gentilnesse
For whiche in fewe wordes saied he thus Madame, saieth to your lorde Aruiragus
That sithen I se this great gentilnesse
Of him, and eke I se well your distresse
That ye to me should hold your trouth
Certes me thinketh it were great routh
I haue well leuer euer to suffer wo
Than depart the loue bitwirt you two
I you release madame into your honde
Quite euery surement and euery bonde
That ye haue made to me, as here biforne
Sithens thilke time that ye were borne
My trouth I plizt, I shall you neuer repreue
Of no behest, and here I take my leue
As of the truest and the best wife
That euer yet I knewe in all my life
But euery wight beware of her biheste
On Dorigene remembreth at the leste
Thus can a squier doen a gentill dede
As well as can a knight, withouten drede.
She thonked him vpon her knees all bare
And home vnto her husbonde is she fare
And told him all, as ye han heard me said
And be ye siker, he was so well apaied
That it were vnpossible me to write
What should I lenger of this case endite
Aruiragus, and Dorigene his wife
In souerain blisse leden forth her life
Neuer after was there anger hem bitwene
He cherished her, as though she wer a Quene
And she was to him true for euermore
Of these two folkes ye get of me no more.
Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorne
Cursed the time that euer he was borne
Alas (q he) alas that euer I beheight
Of pured gold a thousande pound of weight
Vnto this Philosopher, how shall I doe:
I se no more, but that I am fordoe
Mine heritage mote I nedes sell
And ben a begger, here maie I no leger dwell
And shame all my kinrede in this place
But I of him maie get better grace
But natheles I woll of him assaie
At certain daies, yere by yere to paie
And thonke him of his great curtesie
My trouth woll I kepe, I woll not lie
With harte sore, he goth vnto his coffer

And

And brought gold vnto the Philosopher
The value of liue hundred pound as I gesse
And him besecheth of his gentilnesse
To graunt him daies of the remenaunt
And saied: maister I dare well make auaunt
I failed neuer of my trouth as yet
For sikerly my debt shall be quite Towardes you, how that euer I fare
To gon a begging in my kirtell bare
But would ye vouchsafe vpon suerte
Two yere or three for to respite me
Than were I well, for els mote I sell
Mine heritage, there is no more to tell.
This Philosopher soberly answerde
And saied thus, whan he this worde herde
Haue I not hold couenaunt vnto thee?
yes certes, well and truely (q he)
Hast thou not had thy lady as thee liketh?
No no (q he) and sothly he siketh.
what was the cause, tell me if ỹ thou can?
Aurelius anon his tale began
And told him all as ye han heard bifore
It nedeth not to rehearce it any more.
He saied Aruiragus of gentilnes
Had leuer die in sorowe and in distresse
Than his wife were of her trouth fals
The sorowe of Dorigene he told him als
How loth she was to been a wicked wife
And that she had leuer haue lost her life
And ỹ her trouth she swore through innocence
She neuer erst heard speake of apparence
That made me haue of her so great pite
And right as frely as he sent her to me
As frely sent I her to him again
This is all & some, there nis no more to sain.
The Philosopher answerd, leue brother
Eueriche of you did gentilly to other
Thou art a squier, and he is a knight
But God forbid, for his blisfull might
But if a clerke could doen a gentill deede
As well as any of you, it is no dreede
Sir I release thee thy thousande pound
As now thou were crope out of the ground
Ne neuer er now haddest thou knowen me
For sir, I woll not taken a peny of thee
For all my craft, ne nought for my trauaile
Thou hast ipaied right well for my vitaile
It is inough, and far wel and haue good daie
And tooke his horse, & rode forth on his waie.
Lordinges this questiõ would I aske now
Whiche was the moste fre, as thinketh you
Now telleth me, er that I ferther wende
I can no more, my tale is at an ende.

Here endeth the Frankeleins tale.

Here beginneth the second Nonnes Prologue.

The minister and the norice vnto vices
Whiche that menne clepen in Englishe idelnesse
That is Porter of the gate of delices
To eschue, and by her contrary her oppresse
That is to sain, by lefull besinesse well ought we to doen our entent
Lest that the fende through idelnesse vs hent.

For he that with his thousande cordes slie
Continually vs waiteth to be clappe
Whan he maie man in idelnesse espie
He can so lightly catche him in his trappe
Till that a man be hent, right by the lappe
He nis not ware the fende hath him in hond well ought vs werche, & idelnesse withstond.

And though men dredden neuer for to die
Yet se men well by reason doubtles
That idelnesse is roote of slogardie
Of which ther cometh neuer no good encres
And slithnes that sloth holdeth hem in a lees
Onely to slepe, and for to eate and drinke
And to deuouren all that other swinke.

And for to put vs from sothe idelnesse
That cause is of so great confusion
I haue here doen my faithfull besinesse
After the Legende in translacion
Right of thy glorious life and passion
Thou w thy garlond, wrought w rose & Lely Thee mean I, maide & martir sainct Cecily.

And thou that art floure of virgins all
Of whom that Bernard list so well to write
To thee at my beginning first I call
Thou comfort of vs wretches, doe me endite
Thy maidẽs deth, ỹ wan through her merite
The eterne life, and of the fende victorie
As men maie after rede in her storie.

Thou maiden & mother, douzter of thy sonne
Thou welle of mercie, sinfull soules cure
In whom ỹ god of bounte chese for to wonne
Thou humble and hie ouer euery creature
Thou noblest, so farre ouer nature
That no disdain the maker had of kinde
His sonne in blood & flesche to cloth & winde.

whiche in the cloistre of thy blisfull sides

Tooke

The second Nonnes tale.

Of the mannes shape, the eterne loue and pees
That of the true compas, Lorde and guide is Whom heauen, yerth, and sea, withouten les Ilie herien, and thou virgine wemles
Bare of thy body, and dwellest maiden pure
The creatour of euery creature.

Assembled is in the magnificence
With mercie, goodnes, and with soche pitee
That thou art the sonne of excellence
Not onely that helpest hem that prayen thee
But often time of thy benignite
Full frely, or that men thine helpe beseche
Thou goest before, and art her liues leche.

Now help ȳ blisfull, and meke faire maide
Me flemed wretche, in this desert of gall
Thinke on the woman of Canane, that saied
That whelpes eaten some of ȳ crōmes small
That from her Lordes table been ifall
And though ȳ I vnworthy doughter of Eue
Be sinfull, yet accepteth my beleue.

And for that faith is ded withouten werkis
So for to werche, yeue me witte and space
That I be quit frō the place that most derk is O that thou art so faire and full of grace
Be mine aduocate in that hie place
There as without ende is song Osanna
Thou Christes mother, & doughter of Anna

And of thy light, my soule in prison light
That troubled is by the contagion
Of my body, and also by the wight
Of yearthly lust, and also false affeccion
O hauen, O refute, O saluacion
Of hem that been in sorowe and distresse
Now helpe, for to my werke I woll me dresse.

Yet I praie you that reden that I write
Forgeueth me, that I doe no diligence
This ilke storie subtelly to endite
For both haue I the wordes and the sentence
Of him that at the sainctes reuerence
The storie wrote, and folowen her legende
And praie you that ye wol my werke amende

First woll I you the name of sainct Cecily
Expoune, as men mate in her storie se
It is to saie in Englishe, heuens lilly
For pure chastnes of virginite
Or for the witnesse had of honestte
And grene of conscience, and of good fame
The sote sauour Lilly was her name,

Or Cecily is to saie, the waie to blinde
For the ensample was by good teaching
Or els Cecily, as I written finde
Is ioigned by a maner conioigning
Of heauen and Lia, in her figuring
The heauen is set for thought of holinesse
And Lia, for her lasting besinesse.

Cecily maie ehe be saied in this manere
Wanting of blindnes, for her great light
Of sapience, and for her thewes clere
Or els Lo, this maidens name bright
Of heauen & Leos cometh, of which by right
Men might the heauen of people her call
Ensample of good and wise werkes all.

For Leos people, in Englishe is to saie
And right as men maie in the heauen se
The Sunne, and Moon, & sterres euery wai
Right so men ghostly, in this maiden fre
Sawen of faith, the great magnanimite
And ehe the clerenes hole of Sapience
And sondrie werkes, bright of excellence.

And right so as these Philosophers write
That heauen is swift, round, & ehe brenning
Right so was faire Cecily the white
Full swift and besie in euery good working
And round and hole in good perseuerying
And brenning euer in charite full bright
Now haue I declared you what she hight.

Here endeth the second Nonnes Prologue, and beginneth her Tale.

This maiden bright Cecile, as her life saith was comen of Romains and of nodle kinde
And so forth fostred vp in the faith
Of Christe, and bare his Gospell in her minde
She neuer ceassed, as I written finde
Of her praier, and God to loue and drede
Besechyng him to kepe her maidenhede.

And whan this maide should vnto a man
Iwedded be, that was full yong of age
Whiche that icleped was Valerian
And daie was come of her mariage
She full deuout and humble in her corage
Under her robe of gold, that sat full faire
Had next her flesche iclad her in an heire.

And

And whiles that the organs made melodie
To God alone thus in herte song she O lorde, my soule and eke my body gie Unwemmed, lest I confounded be
And for his loue that died vpon a tre
Euery second or thirde day she faste
Ye bidding in her orisons full faste.

The night cam, and to bed must she gone
With her husbonde, as often is the manere
And priuely she said vnto him anon
O swete and wel byloued spouse dere
There is a counsaile, and ye wol it here
Which that right faine I wold to you saine
So that ye me ensure, it not to bewraine.

Ualerian gan fast vnto her swere
That for no case, ne thing that might be
He should neuer to none bewraien here
And than at erste, thus to him said she
I haue an angel, whiche that loueth me
That wt great loue, where so I wake or slepe
Is redy aye, my body for to kepe

And if that he may felen out of drede
That ye my touche or loue in vilony
He right anon will slee you with the dede
And in your youth thus shall ye dye
And if that ye in clene loue me gye
He wol you loue as me, for your clennesse
And shewe you of his ioye and brightnesse.

This Ualerian, corrected as God wolde
Answerd ayen, if I shal trust the Let me that aungel se, and him beholde
And if that it a very aungel be Than wol I done as thou hast prayed me
And if thou loue another man forsothe
Right wt this sword thā wol I slē you bothe

Cecile answerd anon in this wise
If that ye lust, that Angel shul ye se
So that ye trowe on Christ, and you baptise Goth forth to Via apia (q she)
That frō this toun ne stante but miles thre
And to the pore folke that there dwell
Say hem right thus, as I shal you tell.

Tel hem that I Cecile, you to hem sende
To shewen you the good Urban the olde
For secret nedes, and for good entent
And whan that ye saint Urban han beholde
Tel him the wordes, that I to you tolde
And whan that he hath purged you fro sinne
Than shal ye se that Angel er ye twinne.

Ualerian is to that place igon
And right as him was taught by his lerning
He founde this holy Urban anon
Among these saintes burials louting
And he anon, without tarieng
Did his message, and whan he had it tolde
Urban for ioy, gan his hondes vp holde.

The terēs from his eyen let he fall
Almighty God, O Jesu Christ (q he)
Sower of chaste counsaile, hierde of vs all
The frute of thilke sede of chastite
That thou hast sowe in Cecile, take to the Lo like a besy bee, withouten gile
The serueth aye thine owne thral Cecile

For thilke spouse, that she toke but newe
Full like a fierse Lion, she sendeth here
As meke as any lambe was to ewe
And with that word, anon there gan apere
An olde man, clad in white clothes clere
That had a boke with letters of gold in hōd
And gan biforne Ualerian for to stond.

Ualerian as deed fel doun for drede
Whan he this olde man saw standing so
Whiche forthwith anon he herde him rede
O lord, O faith, O God withouten mo
Of Christendome, and father of al also Abouen al, and ouer al euery where These wordes al with Gold written were.

Whā that was rad, thā said this olde man
Leuest thou this thing or none, say ye or nay
I leue al this thing (q Ualerian)
Tho vanished the olde man, he nist where
And pope Urban him christened right there.

Ualerian goth home, and findeth Cecile
Within his chambre, with an aungel stonde
This aungel had of rose and of lillye
Crounes two, the whiche he bare in honde
And first to Cecile, as I vnderstonde
He yaue that one, and after gan he take
That other to Ualerian and her make.

With body clene, & wt vnwemmed thought Kepeth aye wel these crounes (q he)
From paradise to you I haue hem brought Ne neuer more shullen they rotten be Ne lese her swete sauour, trusteth me
Ne neuer wight shal sene him with eye
But he be chast, and hate vilonie

The second Nonnes tale.

And thou Valerian, for thou so sone Assentedest to good counsaile also Say what þ list, & thou shalt haue thy bone
I haue a brother (q Valerian tho)
That in this world I loue no man so
I pray you that my brother may haue grace
To knowe the trouth, as I do in this place.

The angel answerd, God liketh your request
And both with the palme of martirdom
Shal ye come vnto the blisfull feest
And w that worde Tiburce his brother come
And whan that he the sauour vndernome
Whiche that the roses and the lilies caste
Within his hert he gan to wonder faste.

And said: I wonder this time of the yere
Whence that this sote sauour cometh so
Of roses and lilies, that I smell here
For though I had him in mine hondes two
The sauour might in me no deper go
The swete smel, that in mine hert I finde
Hath chaunged me al in another kinde.

Valerian said, two crounes haue we Snowe white & rose reed, that shineth clere
Which that thine eyen han no might to se
And as thou smellest hem thrugh my praiere
So shalt thou seen him my leue brother dere
If it so be that thou wilte without slouthe
Bileue a right, and knowe the very trouthe.

Tiburce answed, saiest thou this to me
In sothnesse, or in dreme herken I this:
In dremes (q Valerian) han we be Vnto this time, brother mine i wis
But now at erst, our dwelling in trouth is How wast thou (q Tiburce) & in what wise
Od Valerian, that I shal the deuise.

The angel of god hath me þ trouth itaught
Which thou shalt seen, and thou wilt reney
The idols, and be clene, and els naught
And of the miracles of these crounes twey
Saint Ambrose in his preface list to sey
Solempnely this noble doctour dere
Commendeth it, and saith in this manere.

The palme of martirdom for to receiue
Seint Cecile, fulfilled of Gods yefte
The world & eke her chambre gan she weiue
Witnesse Tiburce, and Eeciles shrifte
To which God of his bounte wolde shifte
Crounes two, of floures wel smelling
And made the angel hem tho crounes bring
The maid hath brought hem to blisse aboue
The world hath wist what it is worth certain Deuocion and chastite well for to loue
Tho shewed him Cecile all open and plaine
That al idolles ben but thinges in vaine
For they ben dombe, and therto they ben deie
And charged him his idoles for to leie.

Who that troweth not this, a beest he is (Od this Tiburce) if that I shal not lie
She kissed his brest whan she herde this
And was ful glad he couthe trouth espie
This day take I the for mine allie
Said this blisful maiden fayre and dere
For after that she said as ye may here.

Lo right so as the loue of Christ (q she)
Made me thy brothers wife, right in þ wise
Anon for mine alye here take I the Sithens that thou wolt thine idols dispise
Go with thy brother now, and the baptise
And make the clene, so þ thou maist beholde
The angels face, of which thy brother tolde

Tiburce answerde, and said: brother dere
First tell me whether I shal, and to what man
To whom he said, come forth w good chere
I wol the lede vnto the pope Urban
To Urban brother mine Valerian
(Od this Tiburce) wilt thou me thider lede
Me thinketh that it were a wonder dede

Ne menest thou not Urban (q he tho)
That is so oft dampned to be deed
And wonneth in halkes to and fro
And dare not ones put forth his heed
Men should him brenne in a fire so reed
If he were founde, and men might him spie
And we also, that bere him companie.

And while we seken thilke diuinite
That is thidde in heuen priuely
Algate idrent in this world should we be
To whom Cecile answerde boldely
Men might drede well and shilfully
This life to lese, mine owne dere brother
If this were liuing onely and non other.

But there is better liuing in other place
That neuer shalbe loste, ne drede the nought
Which goddes son vs told through his grace
That fathers sonne hath al thing wrought
And al þ wrought is with a shilfull thought
The gost that from the father gan procede
Hath souled him without any drede.

By

By word and by miracle, lo goddes sonne
When he was in this worlde, declared here:
That there is other life there men may wõne
To whom answerd Tiburce: O suster dere
Ne saidest thou right nowe in this manere
There nas but one god lorde in sothfastnesse
And now of three how may ꝑ bere witnesse.

That shal I tel (quod she) or that I go
Right as a man hath sapiences thre
Memory, engine, and intellecte also
So in suche beyng of diuinite Thre persons may there right wel be Thus gan she there ful besily him preche
Of Christes sonne, and of his paines teche

And many pointes of his passion
How Gods sonne in this world was wholde
To do mankinde plaine remission
That was bounde in sinnes and cares colde
Al these thinges she vnto Tiburce tolde
And after this Tiburce in good entent
With Valerian to pope Urban went.

That thonked god, & with glad hert & light
He christened him, & made him in that place
Perfite in his lerning goddes knight
And after this Tiburce gate suche grace
That euery day he saw in time and space
The Aungel of God, and euery maner boone
That he God asken, it was sped ful soone

It were full harde by order for to saine
How many wonders Jesu for him wrought
But at the last, to tell shorte and plaine
The sergeaunt of the toun hem sought
And hem byfore Almache ꝑ prouost brought Which hem aposed, and knew al her entent
And to the Image of Jupiter hem sent.

And said, who so wol do no sacrifice
Swappe of his heed, this is my sentẽce here
Anon these martirs, that I you deuise
One Marimus that was an officere
Of the prefectes, and his councelere
Hem hent, & whan he forth the saintes lad
Him selfe he wepte for pite that he had

Whan Marimus had herd this saintes lore
He gate hem of the turmentours leue
And had hem to his house withouten more
And with her preching, er that it were eue
Thei gon from the turmentour reue
And from Marimus, & from his folke echone
The false faith, to trowen in God alone.

Cecile came, whan it was woren night
With preestes, that him christened al in fere
And afterward, whan day was woren light
Cecile hem said with a sober chere
Now Christes own knightes leue and dere
Casteth al away the werkes of derknesse
And armeth you in armour of brightnesse

Ye han forsoth idone a great bataile (serued
Your cours is don, your faith hathe you con-
Goth to the croune of life that maie not faile
The rightful iuge, whiche ye han serued
Shal yeue it you as ye it deserued
And whan this thing was said, as I deuise
Men lad hem forth to done the sacrifice

But whã they were vnto the place ibrought
To tell shortly the conclusioun
They nolde ensence ne sacrifice right nought
But on her knees, they saten hem adoun
With humble herte and sadde deuocion
And losten bothe her heedes in the place
Her soules went to the king of grace.

This Marimus that saw the thing betide
With pitous teares tolde it anon right
That he her soules saw to heuen glide
With aungels full of clerenesse and of light
And with his word conuerted many a wight
For whiche Almachius did him so to bete
With whippes of lede, til he his life gan lete

Cecile him toke, and buried him anon
By Tiburce and Valerian sothly
Within her buriyng place vnder a stone
And after this Almachius hastely
Bad his ministers fetchen openly
Cecile, so that she might in his presence
Do sacrifice, and Jupiter encence

But they conuerted at her wise lore
Wepten full sore, and paue full credence
Vnto her worde, and criden more and more
Christ goddes sonne, without difference
Is very God, this is all our sentence
That hath a seruaunt so good him to serue
Thus with o voice we trow though we sterue

Almachius, that herde al this doyng
Bad fetche Cecile, that he might her se
And alderfirst this was his asking
What maner woman arte thou (quod he)
I am a gentill woman borne (quod she)
I aske of the (quod he) though it the greue
Of thy religion and of thy beleue.

ye haue begon your question folishly
Qd she, that wolde two answers conclude
In one demaunde, ye alken leudly
Almachius answerde to that similitude
Of whence cometh thine answere so rude
Of whence (q she) when that he was frained
Of conscience, and of good faith vnfained.

Almachius said, ne takest thou none hede
Of my power: and she him answerde this Your might (q she) ful litell is to drede
For euery mortall mannes power nis
But like a bladder full of winde i wis
For with a nedles point, when it is iblowe
May al the boste of it be laide full lowe.

Full wrongfully begannest thou (q he)
And yet in wrong is thy perseueraunce
Wostе thou not how our mighty princes fre
Haue thus cõmaunded and made ordinaũce?
That euery christen wight shal haue penaũce
But if that he his christendome with sey
And gon al quite, if he wol it reney.

Your princes erren, as your nobles dothe
Qd tho Cecile, in a wode sentence
Ye make vs gilty, and it is not sothe
For ye that knowen wel our innocence
For as muche as we done a reuerence
To Christ, and for we bere a christen name
Ye put on vs a crime and eke a blame.

But we that knowen thilke name so
For vertuous, we may it not withsey
Almachius answerd, chese one of these two
Do sacrifice, or christendome reney
That thou mowe scapen by that wey
At whiche worde the holy blisfull maide
Gan for to laughe, and to the iudge she saide

O iudge confused in thy nicete
Wolt thou that I reney innocence
To make me a wicked wight (q she)
Lo ne dissimuleth here in audience
He stareth and woddeth in his aduertence
To whom Almachius said: O sely wretche
Thou wostе not howe farre my might maye (stretche

Hath not our might princes yeuen
To me, bothe power and eke auctorite
To make folke to dien or to liuen
Why speketh thou so proudly than to me?
I ne speke it not but stedfastly (q she)
Not proudely, for I say as for my side
I hate deedly thilke vice of pride.

And if thou drede not a sothe for to here
Than wol I shewen al openly by right
That thou hast made a full great lesing here Thou saist thy princes han yeuen the might Bothe to slee and eke to quicke a wight
Thou ne maiste but onely lyue bireue
Thou hast non other power ne leue.

But thou maist say, thy prices han ỹ made
Minister of dethe, for if thou speke of me
Thou liest, for thy power is full naked
Do way thy boldnesse, saide Almachius the
And do sacrifice to our goddes er thou go
I recche not what wrong thou me profer
For I can not suffre, as can a philosopher

But thilke wronges may I not endure
That thou spekest of our gods here (q he)
Cecile answerd, O nice creature
Thou saidst no word sithens ỹ spakest to me
That I knewe therwith thy nicite
And that thou were in euery maner wise
A leude officer, and a vaine iustice.

Ther lacketh nothing to thine vtter eyen
That ỹ nart blind, for thing that we seen al
That is a stone, that men well may aspien
That like stone, a God thou wolt it call
I rede the let thine honde vpon it fall
And tast it wel, and stone thou shalte it finde
Sens that ỹ seest not with thin eyen blinde

It is a shame that the people shall
So scorne the, and laugh at thy folye
For comenly men wot it well ouer all
That mighty God is in his heuens hye
And these ymages, wel maiste thou aspie
To the ne to hem selfe may they not profite
For in her effecte, they be not worth a mite

Thus and suche other wordes said she
And he wore wroth, & bad she should be lede Home to her house, and in her house (q he)
Brenne her in a bathe, with flames rede
And as he bad, right so was done the dede
For in a bathe they gan her fast shuten
And night & day great fire vnder they beten.

Al the long night, and eke the day also
For al the fire, and eke the bathes hete
She sat al colde, and felt of it no wo
It made her not a droppe hote swete
But in that bath her life she mote lete
For Almachie, with a ful wicked entent
To sleen her in the bathe, his sonde sent

The

Thre strokes in the neche he smote her tho
The turmentour, but for no maner chaunce
He might not smite al her necke a two
And for there was that time an ordinaunce
That no mā should do no person such penaūce
The fourth stroke to smite, soft or sore
This turmentour durst smite no more.

But halfe deed, with her neche yeruen there
He left her lye, and on his way he went
The christen folke that aboute her were
With shetes home ful faire her hente
Thre daies liued she in this turmente
And neuer ceased she the faith to teache
That she had fostred hem, she gan to preche

And hem she yaue her mouables & her thing
And to the pope Urban betoke hem tho
And sayd, I asked this of the heuen king
To haue respite thre daies and no mo
To recommaunde to you er that I go
These soules, and that I might so werche
Here of mine house perpetuelliche a cherche.

Saint Urban, with his dekens priuely
The body fette, and buried it by night
Among his other saintes honestly
Her house the churche of saint Cecile highe Saint Urban halowed it, as he wel might
In whiche vnto this day, in noble wise
Men don to Christ and to his saintes seruise.

Here endeth the seconde Nonnes tale, and here beginneth the prologue of the Chanons yeman.

Whan ended was the life of saint Cecile
Er we fully had ridden fiue mile
At Boughton vnder the blee, vs gan a take
A man, that clothed was in clothes blake
And vnder that he had a white surplise
His hakney, that was all pomely grise
So swette, that it wonder was to se
It semed that he had pricked miles thre
The horse eke that his yoman rode vpon
So swette, that vnneth might he gon
About the paytrell stode the fome ful hye
He was of fome as flecked as a pye
A male twikolde on his croper lay
It semed that he caried litell aray
All light for sommer rode this worthy man
And in my hert wondren I began
What that he was, till I vnderstode
How that his cloke was sewed to his hode
For whiche, when I had longe auised me
I demed him some chanon for to be His hatte hinge at his backe by a lace
For he had ridden more than trot or pace
He rode aye pricking as he were wode
A clote leke he had laide vnder his hode
For swette, and for to kepe his heed fro hete
But it was ioye for to se him swete
His forehead dropped, as a stillatory
Were ful of plantaine or of peritory
And when he was come, he gan cry
God saue (qd he) this ioly company
Fast haue I pricked (qd he) for your sake Because that I wolde you ouer take
To ridden in this mery company
His yoman was eke ful of curtesy
And said sirs, nowe in the morowe tide
Out of your hostrie I sawe you ride
And warned here my lorde and soueraine
Whiche that to ridden with you is ful faine
For his disporte, he loueth daliaunce.
Frēd for thy warning god yeue ỳ good chāce
Then said our host, certaine it wolde seme
Thy lorde were wise, and so I may wel deme
He is ful iocunde also dare I laye
Can he ought tell a mery tale or twaye
With whiche he glade may this companie.
Who sir my lorde? ye without lie
He can of mirthe and eke of iolite
Not but inough also sir trusteth me
And ye him knewe also wel as do I
Ye would wonder how wel and thriftely
He couthe werke, and that in sondry wise
He hath taken on him many a great empryse
Whiche were ful harde, for any that is here
To bringe aboute, but they of him it lere
As homely as he rideth amonge you
If ye him knew, it wold ben for your prowe
Ye wolde not forgon his aquaintaunce
For mochell good I dare laye in balaunce
All that I haue in my possession
He is a man of hie discression
I warne you wel he is a passing wise man.
Wel (qd our host) I pray the tel me than
Is he a clerke or non? tell what he is.
A clerke, nay he is greter thē a clerke twis
Said the yoman, and in wordes fewe
Hoste of his crafte somwhat wol I shewe
I say my lorde can suche a subtelte
But all his craft ye may not wete of me
And somwhat helpe I yet to his werching
That all the grounde that we be on riding
Til we com to Canterbury toune

He coulde al clene turne vp and doune
And paue it al of siluer and of golde.
And whan this yoman had thus itolde
Unto our hoste: he saide benedicite
This thing is wonder meruailous to me
Sens that thy lorde is of so hie prudencence (Bycause of whiche, men should him reuerence)
That of his worshipp recketh he so lite
His ouerest sloppe is not worth a mite
As in effecte to him, so mote I go
It is al baudy and to tore also Why is thy lorde so slothfulliche I the pray
And is of power better clothes to beye
If that his dede acorde with thy speche
Tell me that, and that I the beseche.
Why (q this yeman) wherto aske ye me?
God helpe me so, for he shal neuer thee
But I wol not auowe that I saie
And therfore kepe it secret I you praie
He is to wise in fay, as I beleue
That is ouerdone nil not preue
And right as clerkes saine, it is a vice Wherfore I holde him in that, leude and nice
For whan a man hath ouer great a wit
Ful ofte it happeth him to misusen it
So doth my lorde, and that me greueth sore
God amende it, I can say you no more.
Therof no force good yeman (q our host)
Sens of the comming of thy lord thou wost
Tel nowe he dothe, I pray the hertely
Sens that he is so crafty and so sly
Wher dwellen ye, if it to tell be?
In the suburbes of a toune (q he)
Lurking in hernes and in lanes blinde
Where thefe robers, and theues by kinde
Holden her priuy fearful residence
As they that dare not shewen her presence
So fare we, if that I shal say the soth.
Yet (q our host) let me talke to the Why art thou so discoloured in thy face?
Peter (q he) God yeue it harde grace
I am so vsed in the hote fire to blowe
That it hath chaunged my colour as I trowe
I am not wont in no mirrour to prie
But swinke sore, and lerne to multiplie
We blondren euer, and poosen in the fire
And for al that, we failen of our desire
For euer we lacken our conclusion
To much folke we do illusion
And borowe gold, be it a pounde or two Or ten or twelue, or many summes mo
And make hem wene at the lest way
That of a pounde we coulde make tway
Yet is it faile, and aye han we good hope
It for to done, and after it we grope
But that science is so ferre vs biforne
We mowe not al though we had it swore
It ouertake, it flyt away so fast
It wol vs make beggers at the last.
Whiles this yeman was thus in his talking
This Chanon drewe him nere, and herd al thing
Which this yeman spake, for suspection
Of mennes speche euer had this Chanon
For Cato saieth, he that gilty is Demeth al thing be spoken of him i wis
Bicause of that, he gan so nighe to draw
To his yeman, to herken al his sawe
And thus he said vnto his yeman tho
Holde now thy peace, and spek no wordes mo
For if thou do, thou shalte it sore abie
Thou slaunderest me here in this companie
And eke discouerest that thou shuldest hide.
Ye (q our host) tel on what so euer betide
Of al this threting, reche the not a mite.
In faith (q he) no more do I but lite
And whan this Chanon saw it would not be
But his yeman would tel his priuite
He fledde away for very sorowe and shame.
A (q the yeman) here shall rise a game
All that I can, anon wol I you tell
Sens he is gon, the foule fende him quell
For neuer here after, woll I with him mete
For peny ne for pounde, I you behete
He that me brought first vnto that game
Er that he die, sorow haue he and shame
For it is ernest to me by my faithe
That fele I well, what so any man saithe
And yet for al my smert and al my greue
For al my sorowe, labour and mischefe
I couthe neuer leaue it in no wise
Now wolde God my witte might suffice
To tellen all that longeth to that arte
But natheleffe, yet woll I tel you a parte
Sens that my lord is gon, I wol not spare
Suche thing as I know I wol declare.

¶ Here endeth the Prologue of the Chanons yeman, and here foloweth his tale.

With this chanon I dwelt seuen yere
And of his science I am neuer the nere
All that I had, I haue lost therby
And God wotte, so hath many mo than I
There I was wonte to be right freshe and gay
Of clothing, and eke of other good aray

Now

Now maie I weare an hose vpon mine hedde
And where my colour was both fresh & redde
Now is it wanne, and of a leaden he we Who so it vseth, sore shall him rue
And of my swinke, yet blered is mine eye
Lo whiche auauntage it is to multiplie
That sliding science, hath me made so bare
That I haue no good, where that euer I fare
And yet I am endetted so thereby
Of gold, that I haue borowed truely
That while I liue, I shall it quite neuer
Let euery man be ware by me euer
What maner man that casteth him therto
If he continue, I hold his thrift ido
So helpe me God, thereby shall he neuer win
But empte his purse, & make his wittes thin
And what he, through his madnesse and folie
Hath lost his owne good, through ieopardie
Than he entiseth other men thereto
To lese her good, as himself hath do
For vnto shrewes, rope it is and eke
To haue her fellowes in pain and disese
For thus was I ones learned of a clerke
Of that no charge, I woll speke of our werke
When we be there, as we shall exercise
Our sluishe craft, we lemen wonder wise
Our termes been so clergiall and so quainte
I blowe the fire, till mine hart faint.
What should I tell eche proporcion
Of things, whiche we werchen vpon:
As on sliue or sixe vnces, maie well be
Of siluer, or of some other quantite
And bese me to tellen you the names
Of Orpiment, brent bones, pyron squames
That into pouder grounden been full small
And in an yearthen potte, how put is all
And salt iput in, and also papere
Vpon these pouders that I speake of here
And well icouered, with a lampe of glas
And of moche other thing that there was
And of the pottes and glas englutyng
That of the aire might passe out nothing
And of the esie fire and smart also Whiche that was made, & of the care and wo
That we had in our matters subliming
And in amalgaming, and calsening
Of quicksiluer, icleped Mercury crude
For all our sleight, we can not conclude
Our Orpiment, and sublimed Mercurie
Our ground litarge eke on prophirie
Of eche of these, vnces a certain
Not helpeth vs, our labour is in vain
Ne eke our spirites assencion
Ne yet our matters, that lien all sire adoun
How we in our werking nothing auaile
For lost is all our labour and our trauaile
And all the cost, a twentie deuill waie
Is lost also, whiche we vpon it laie.
There is also full many an other thing
That is to our craft appertaining
Though I by order hem me rehearce can Bicause that I am a leude man yet woll I tellen hem, as they come to minde
Though I ne can set hem in her kinde
As Bole Armoniake, Verdegrece, Boracе
And sondrie vessels made of yearth and glas
Our vrinals, and our disconsories
Viols, crosselles, and sublimatories
Concurbites, and alembekes eke
And other soche, deare inough a leke
It needeth not to rehearce hem all Waters rubifying, and Boles gall
Arsenike, sal Armoniake, and Brimstone
And herbes cold I tell eke many one
As Egremonie, Valerian, and Lunarie
And other soche, if that me list to tarie
Our lampes brenning bothe night and daie
To bringen about our craft, if that we maie
Our fournice eke of calcinacion
And of waters albification
Vnslaked lime, chalke, and gleire of an eye
Pouders diuers, ashes, dong, pisse, and cleie
Sered pokettes, salt Peter, and Vitriole
And diuers fires, made of wood and cole
Sal Tartre, Alcaly, and sal preparate
And combust matters, and coagulate
Cley made with hors dung, mans heere, and oile
Of tartre alum, glas, berme, wort, & argoile
Resagor, and other matters enbibing
And eke of our matters encorporing
And of our siluer citrinacion
Our sementing, and eke fermentacion
Our ingotes testes, and many mo.
I woll you tell as was me taught also
The foure spirites, and the bodies seuen
By order, as oft I heard my lorde nemene.
The first spirite quicke siluer cleped is
The second Orpiment, the third Sal
Sal Armoniake, the fourth Brimstone
The bodies seuen eke, lo here hem anone
Sol gold is, and Luna siluer we threpe
Mars yron, Mercury quicke siluer we clepe
Saturnus leade, and Jupiter is Tinne
And Venus Coper, by my father kinne.
This cursed craft, who so woll exercise
He shall no good haue that maie him suffice
For all the good he spendeth there about
He lese shall, thereof haue I no doubt
Who so that listen to vtter his folie
Let him come forth and learne to multiplie

And euery man, that hath ought in his cofer
Let him appere, and were a Philosopher
I shaunce that craft is so light for to lere
Nay nay God wote, all be he Mõke or Frere
Priest or Chanon, or any other wight
Though he sit at his boke both day & night
In learning of this elusiue nice loze
All is in vain, and parde moche moze
Is to lere a leude man this subtelte
Fie speake not thereof, it will not be
All could he lettrure, or could he none
As in effect, he shall finde it all one
For bothe two, by my saluacion
Concluden in multiplicacion
Iliche well, whan thei haue all ido
This is to sain, thei failen bothe two Yet forgate I moche rehearsaile
Of waters corosife, and of limaile
And of bodies mollification
And also of her induracion
Oiles, ablusions, metall fusible
To tellen you all, would passe any bible
That O where is, wherefore as for the best
Of all these names now would I rest
For as I trowe, I haue you told inow
To reise a fende, all looke he neuer so row.
I nay let be the Philosophers stone
Elixer cleped, we siken fast echone
For had we him, than were we siker inow
But vnto God of heauen I make auowe
For all our craft, whan that we han all ido
And all our sleight, he will not come vs to
He hath made vs spende moche good
For sorowe of whiche, almost we wãre wood
But that good hope crepeth in our hart
Supposing euer, though we sore smart
To been relqued of him afterward
Supposing and hope is sharpe and hard
I warne you well it is to siken euer
That future temps hath made men disceuer
In trust thereof, all that euer thei had Yet of that art, thei could not ware sad
For vnto him it is a bitter swete
So semeth it, for ne had thei but a shete
Which þ thei might wrappen hem in a night
And a bratte to walken in a daie light
Thei wouldẽ hem sel, & spend it on this craft
The conne not stint, till nothing be laft
And euermore, where that euer thei gone
Men maie hem ken by smell of Brimstone
For all the worlde thei stinken as a Gote
Her sauour is so Rammishe and so hote
That though a man a mile from hem be
The sauour will enfect him trusteth me
Lo, thus by smelling, & by threde bare aray
If that men list, this folke knowe thei maie
And if a man woll aske him priuely
Why thei be clothed so vnthriftely
Right anon thei woll rowne in his ere
And sain, if that thei aspied were Men woll hem slea, bicause of her science
Lo thus these folke bitraien innocence
Passe ouer this, I go my tale vnto
Er that the potte be on the fire ido
Of metalles, with a certain quantite
My lorde hem tempereth, and no man but he Now he is gon, I dare saie boldly
For as men sain, he can doen craftily
Algate I wote well he hath soche a name
And yet full oft he renneth in the blame
And wote ye how, full oft it happeth so
The pot to breaketh, and farwell all is go
These metalles been of so great violence
Our walles maie not make hem resistence
But if thei were wrought of lime and stone Thei percen so, & through the wall thei gone
And some of hem sinken into the grounde
Thus haue we lost by times many a pounde
And some are scattered all the floze about
Some lepen into the role withouten doubt Tho þ the fende not in our sight him shewe
I trowe that he with vs be, that ilke shrewe
In hell where that he is lorde and sire
Ne is there no moze wo, ne angre ne ire
Whan that our pot is broke, as I haue saied
Euery man chite, and holte him iuell apaied
Some saied it was long of the fire making
Some saied nay, it was on the blowing
Than was I ferde, for that was mine office
Straw (q the third) ye been leude and nice
It was not tempred as it ought to be.
Nay (q the fourth) stint and herken me
Bicause our fire was not made of Beche
That is the cause, and none other so theche
I can not tell whereon it is along
But well I wot great strief is vs emong.
What (q my lorde) there nis no moze to doen
Of these perilles I woll be ware eft sone
I am right siker, that the potte was craied
Be as be maie, be ye not amased
As vsage is, let swepe the flooze as swithe
Plucke vp your hart, and be glad and blithe.
The mullocke on an heape iswept was
And on the flooze cast a canuas
And all this mullokе in a Siue ithrowe
And isifted and iplucked many a throwe.
Parde (q one) somwhat of our metall
Yet is there here, though we haue not all
And tho this thing mishapped hath as now
An other time it maie been well inow

me

we mote put our good in auenture
I Marchaunt parde, maie not aie endure
Trusteth me well in his prosperitee
Somtime his good is drouned in the see
And somtime it cometh safe vnto the londe
Peace (q my lorde) & nert time I wol londe
To bring our craft all in an other plite
And but I doe sirs, let me haue the wite
There was default in somwhat well I wote
In other saied, the fire was ouer hote
But be it hote or cold, I dare saie this
That we concluden euer more a mis
We failen of that whiche we would haue
And in our madnesse euermore we raue
And whan we be togither euerichone
Euery man semeth as wise as Salomon
But al thing, which that shineth as the gold
Is not gold, as I haue heard told
So euery appell that is faire at eye
Is not good, what so men clappe or crie
Right so it fareth emong vs
He that semeth the wisest by Jesus
Is moste foole, whan it cometh to the prefe
And he that semeth truest is a thefe
That shall ye knowe, er that I frō you wende
By that I of my tale haue made an ende.

There was a Chanon of Religioun
Emonges vs, would enfect all a toun
Though it as greate were as Niniue
Rome, Alisaundre, Troie, and other thre
His sleight and his infinite falsnesse
There couth no man writen as I gesse
Though that he might liue a thousande yere
In all this worlde of falsnesse nis his pere
For in his termes he woll him so winde
And speake his wordes in so slie a kinde
Whan he comen shall with any wight
That he woll make him dote anon right
But it a fende be as himself is Full many a man hath he begiled er this
And mo woll, if that he maie liue a while
And yet men riden and gone ful many a mile
Him for to seke, and haue aquaintaunce
Not knowing of his false gouernaunce
And if ye lust to giue me audience
I woll it tellen here in your presence.

But worshipfull Chanons religious Ne deemeth not that I sclaunder your hous
Although my tale of a Chanon be
Of euery order some shrewe is parde
And God forbid that all a companie
Should rue a singuler mannes folie
To slaunder you is not mine entent
But to correct that misse is ment
This tale was not onely told for you
But eke for other mo, ye wote well how That emong Christes Apostles twelue
There was no traitour but Judas him selue
Than why should the remnaunt haue blame
That giltelesse were, by you I saie the same
Saue onely this, if ye woll herken me
If any Judas in your couent be Remeueth him betime, I you rede
If shame, or losse maie causen any drede
And be nothing displeased I you praie
But in this caie herketh what I saie.

In London was a priest annuellere
That there in had dwelt many a yere
Which was so plesant & so seruisable
Vnto the wife, where he was at table
That she would suffer him nothing to paie
For borde ne clothing, went he neuer so gaie
And spending siluer had he right inow
Thereof no force, I woll procede as now
And tell forth my tale of the Chanon
That brought this priest to confusion

This false Chanon came vpon a daie
Vnto this priestes chamber, where he laie
Beseching him to lene him a certain
Of gold, and he would quite him ayen
Leneth me a Marke q he but daies three
And at my daie I woll quite it thee
And if it so be, that thou finde me false
An other daie hang me by the halse
This priest tooke him a marke, & that swith
And this Chanon him thanked oft sith
And toke his leue, and went forth his way
And at third daie brought his money
And to this priest he toke this gold ayen
Whereof this priest was glad and fain
Certes (q he) nothing anoieth me
To lene a man a noble, two or three Or what thing were in my possession
Whan he so true is of condicion
That in no wise he breake woll his daie
To such a man I can neuer saie naie.
What q this Chanon, should I be vntrue Naie, that were thing fallen of new Trouth is a thing that I woll euer kepe
Vnto the daie, in whiche I shall crepe
Into my graue, or els God forbede
Beleueth this as siker as your crede
God thanke I, and in good time be it saied
That there nas neuer man yet iuill apaied
For gold ne siluer that he to me lent
Ne neuer falsheде in mine harte I ment.
And sir q he now of my priuite
Sens ye so goodliche haue been to me
And bith to me so greate gentilnesse

Somwhat

Som what to quite with your kindnesse
I woll you shewe, if ye woll it lere
(I shall it shewe to you anon right here)
How I can werche in Philosophie
Taketh good hede, ye shall it se with your ye
That I woll doe a maistrie or I go.
ye sir (q the priest) and woll ye so
Mary therof I praie you hartely.
At your commaundement sir truely
(q the Chanon) and els God forbede
Lo how this theefe couth his seruice bede
Full soth it is that sothe profered seruice
Stinketh, as witnesseth the old wise
And that full sone I woll it verifie
In this Chanon, rote of all trecherie
That euermore delite hath and gladnesse
Sothe fendly thoughtes in his hart empresse
How christes people he may to mischef bring God kepe vs from his false dissimuling.
What wist this priest w whō that he delt
Ne of his harme comming nothing he felt
O sely priest, O sely innocent
With couetise anon thou shalt be blent
O graceles, full blind is thy conceite
Nothing art thou ware of his disceite
Whiche that this fore hath shapen to thee
His wilie wrenches thou maiest not flee
Wherefore to go to the conclusion
That referreth to thy confusion
Unhappie man, anon I woll me hie
To tell thine vnwitte ne thy folie
And eke the falsnesse of that other wretche
As ferforth as my conning woll stretche
This Chanō was my lorde ye would wene
Sir hoste in faith, and by the heauen Quene
It was an other Chanon, and not he:
That can an hundred folde more subtelte
He hath betraied folke many a time
Of his falsnesse it doleth me to rime
Euer whan I speake of his falshede
For shame of him, my cheekes waren rede
Algates thei beginnen for to glowe
For rednesse haue I none, right well I know
In my visage, for fumes diuerce
Of metals, whiche ye haue heard me reherce
Consumed and wasted hath my rednesse
Now take hede of this Chanons cursednesse.
Sir (q he) to the priest, let your man gon
For quicksiluer, that we it had anon
And let him bring vnces two or three
And whan he cometh, as fast shull ye se
A wonder thing, whiche ye saw neuer er this Sir (q the priest) it shall be doen i wis
He bad his seruaunt fetche him this thing
And he all redy was at his bidding
And went him forth, and came anon again
With this quicke siluer, shortly for to sain
And toke these vnces three to the Chanoun
And he hem laied well and faire adoun
And bad the seruaunt coles for to bring That he anon might go to his werking.
The coles right anon wer ifet
And this Chanon toke out a crosselet
Of his bosome, and shewed it tō the priest
This instrumēt (q he) whiche that thou seest
Take in thy hond, and put thy self therin
Of this quicksiluer an vnce and begin
In the name of Christ to were a Philosopher
There be full fewe, whiche I would it profer
To shewe hem so moche of my science
For here shull ye se by experience
That this quicksiluer I woll mortifie
Right in your sight anon withouten lie
And make it as good siluer and as fine
As there is any in your purse or mine
Or els where, and make it malliable
And els hold me false and vnstable
Emonges folke euer to appere.
I haue a pouder, that cost me dere
Shall make all good, for it is cause of all My conning, whiche I you shewe shall Voideth your man, and let him be thereout
And shet the doore, whiles we been about
Our priuetie, that no man vs espie
Whiles that we werken in our Philosophie.
All as he bad, fulfilled was in dede
This ilke seruaunt anon out yede
And his maister shet the doore anon
And to her labour spidily thei gon
This priest at this cursed Chanōs bidding
Upon the fire anon set this thing
And blewe the fire, and belied him full fast
And this Chanon into this crosset cast
A pouder, I not whereof it was Imade, either of chalke, yearth, or glasse
Or som what els, was not worth a flie
To blind with the priest, and bad him hie
These coles for to couchen all aboue
The crosselet, for in token that I thee loue (q this Chanon) thine hondes two Shall werke all thing that here shall be do.
Graūt mercie (q the priest) & was full glad
And couched coles, as the Chanon bad
And while he besy was, this fendly wretche
This false Chanon the foule fende him fetch
Out of his bosome toke a Bechen cole
In whiche full subtelly was made an hole
And therein was put of siluer limaile
An vnce, and stopped was without faile
The hole with ware, to kepe the limaile in

And vnderstandeth that this false gin
Was not made there, but it was made biforе
And other thinges that I shall you tell more Hereafter, which that he with him brought Er he came there, to begile him he thought
And so he did, or thei went a twinne
Till he had tourned him, could he not blinne
Yt dulleth me, whan that I of him speke
On his falshede, fain would I me wreke
If I wist how, but he is here and there
He is so variaunt, he bideth no where.
But taketh hede sirs now for Gods lotte
He toke his cole, of whiche I spake aboue
And in his honde he bare it priuely
And whiles the priest couched besily
The coles, as I told you er this
This Chanon saied, frende ye doen amis
This is not couched as it ought to be But sone I shall amende it (q he)
Now leme medle therewith but a while For of you haue I pite by sainct Gile
Ye been right hotte, I se well how ye swete
Haue here a clothe and wipe awaie the wete
And while the priest him wiped hace
This Chanon toke the cole, I shrewe his face
And laied it abouen apon the midward
Of the crosset, and blewe well afterward
Till that the coles gon fast bren.
Now yeue vs drinke, q this Chanon then
As swithe all shall be well I vndertake Sit we doune, and let vs mery make
And whan this Chanons Bechen cole
Was brent all, the limaile out of the hole
Into the crosselet anon fell adoun
And so it must nedes by reasoun
Sens it so euen aboue couched was But thereof wist the priest nothing, alas
He demed all the coles liche good
For of the sleight, nothing he vnderstood.
And whan this Alkamister sawe his time
Reiseth vp sir priest (q he) and stondeth by me
And for I wote well ingot haue I none
Goth walketh forth, and bring a chalke stone
For I will make it of thesame shappe
That an ingot is, if I maie haue happe
And bring ehe with you a bolle or a panne Full of water, and ye shall se than How that our besines shall hap and preue
And yet for ye shall haue no mikeleue
Ne wrong conceite of me in your absence
I will not been out of your presence,
But go with you, and come with you again.
The chamber doore, shortly to sain
Thei opened and shet, and wet forth her weie
And forth with hem thei caried thei keie
And comen ayen withouten any delaie
What should I tary all the long daie
He toke the chalke, and shope it in the wise
Of an yngot, as I shall you deuise.
I saie he toke out of his own sleue
A teine of siluer, iuell mote he cheue
Whiche that was but an vnce of weight
And taketh hede now of his cursed sleight
He shope his yngot, in length and in brede
Of the teine, withouten any drede
So slily that the priest it not aspide
And in his sleue again he gan it hide
And from the fire toke vp his matere
And into the yngot it put with mery chere
And into the water vessell he it cast
Whan that him list, and bad the priest as fast
Loke what there is, put in thin honde a grope
Thou shalt finde there siluer as I hope
What diuell of hell should it els be Shauing of siluer, siluer is parde.
He put in his honde, and toke vp a teine
Of siluer fine, and glad in euery vaine
Was this priest, whan he sawe it was so Gods blessing and his mothers also
And all Hallowes, haue ye sir Chanon
Saied this priest, and I her malison
But and ye vouchsafe to teache me
This noble craft and this subtelte
I will be yours, in all that euer I maie q the Chanon, yet will I make assaie
The second time, that ye mow take hede
And been expert of this, and in your nede
Anotver daie assaie in mine absence
This discipline, and this craftie science
Let take an other vnce (q he) tho
Of quicksiluer, withouten wordes mo
And doen therwith, as I haue doen er this With that other, whiche that now siluer is
The priest him beseeth in all that he can
To doen as this Chanon, this cursed man
Commaunded him, and fast blewe the fire
For to come to the effect of his desire
And this Chanon, right in the meane while
All redy was, this priest eft to begile
And for a countinaunce in his honde bare
An halowe sticke, take kepe and beware
In thende of whiche an vnce and no more
Of siluer limaile put was all before
Was in his sole, and stopped with waxe wele
For to kepen in his limaile euery dele
And whiles this priest was in his businesse
This Chanon with his sticke gan him dresse
To him anon, and his pouder cast in
As he did erst, the deuill out of his skin
Him torne, I praie to God for his falshede

For

For he was euer falſe in thought and dede
And with his ſticke, aboue the croſſelet
That was ordained with that falſe iet
He ſtirreth the coles, till all relent gan
The ware again the fire, as euery man
But he a foole be, wote well it mote nede
And all that in the hole was, out yede
And into the croſſelet haſtely it fell

The Prieſt ſuppoſed nothing but well
But beſied him faſt, and was wonder fain
Suppoſyng nought but trouth, ſoth to ſain
He was ſo glad, that I can not expreſſe
In no maner his mirth and his gladneſſe
And to the Chanon he profered eft ſone
Body and good: ye (q̄ the Chanon) anone
Tho I be poore, craftie thou ſhalt me finde
I warne thee yet is there more behinde

Is there any Coper here within ſaied he?
ye ſir (q̄ the Prieſt) I trowe there be.
Els go buie ſome, and that aſwithee?
Now good ſir go forth thy waie and bithe.

He wēt his waie, and w̄ the coper he came
And this Chanon in his honde it name
And of that coper waied out but an vnce
All to ſimple is my tong to pronounce
As tō miniſter of my wit the doubleneſſe
Of this Chanon, rote of all curſedneſſe
He ſemed frendly, to hem ꝑ knew him nought
But he was fendly, both in werke & thought
It werieth me to tell of his falſeneſſe
And natheles, yet woll I it expreſſe
To the entent that men maie beware therby
And for none other cauſe truely.

He put this vnce of coper into the croſſelet
And on the fire as ſwithe he hath it ſet
And caſt in pouder, & made the prieſt to blow
And in his working for to ſtoupe low
As he did erſt, and all nas but a iape
Right as him liſt, the prieſt he made his Ape
And afterward in the ingot he it caſt
And in the panne put it at the laſt
Of water, and in he put his owne hond
And in his ſleue, as ye biſore hond
Heard me tell, he had a ſiluer teine
He ſlily tooke it out, this curſed heine
Can witing this prieſt of his falſe craft
And in the pannes botome he hath it laft
And in the water rombleth to and fro
And wonder priuely tooke vp alſo
The coper teine, not knowing this prieſt
And hid it and hent him by the breſt
And to him ſpake, and thus ſaid in his game
Stoupeth adoune, by God ye be to blame
Helpeth me now, as I did you whilere
Put in your hond, and loketh what is there.

This prieſt tooke vp this ſiluer teine anon
And than ſaied the Chanon, let vs gon
With theſe three teines, whiche we hā wrought
To ſome Goldſmith, and wete if it be ought For by my faith, I nold for my hood
But if it were ſiluer fine and good
And that as ſwithe proued ſhall be.

Into the Goldſmith, with theſe teines three Thei went, and put them in aſſaie
To fire and hammer, might no man ſaie nay
But thei wer as them ought for to be.

This ſotted prieſt, who was gladder thā he Was neuer birde gladder ayenſt the daie
Ne Nightingale, ayenſt the ſeaſon of May
Was neuer none, that liſt better to ſing
Ne lady luſtier in carolling
And for to ſpeake of loue and womanhede
Ne knight in armes, to doen a hardy dede
To ſtonden in grace of his lady dere
Than had this Prieſt, this craft to lere
And to the Chanon, thus he ſpake, and ſaid
For the loue of God, that for vs all deid
And as I maie deſerue it vnto you
What ſhall this receit coſt, telleth me now

By our lady (q̄ this Chanon) it is dere
I warne you well, ſaue I and a Frere
In England, there can no man it make.

No force (q̄ he) now ſir for Gods ſake
What ſhall I paie, tell me I you praie.

I wis (q̄ he) it is full dere I ſaie
Sir at one worde, if that ye liſt it haue
Ye ſhall paie fourtie pound, ſo God me ſaue
And nere the frendſhip that ye did er this
To me, ye ſhould paie more i wis.

This prieſt ꝑ ſomme of fourtie pound anon
Of nobles fet, and told hem euerichon
To this Chanon, for this ilke receite
All his worching was fraude and deceite.

Sir prieſt he ſaid, I hepe for to haue no loos
Of my craft, for I would it wer kept cloos
And as you loue me, kepeth it ſecre
For and men knowe all my ſubteite
By God men would haue ſo great enuie
To me, bicauſe of my Philoſophie
I ſhould be dedde, there wer non other way

God it forbid (q̄ the prieſt) what ye ſaie
Yet had I leuer ſpend all the good
Whiche that I haue, and elſ ware I wood
Than that ye ſhould fallen in ſoche miſchef
For your good will haue ye right good preef
(q̄ the Chanon) and fare well graunt mercy
He went his waie, & neuer the prieſt him ſey
After that daie: & whā that this prieſt ſhould Maken aſſaie, at ſoche time as he would
Of this receite, farwell it nold not be

Lo thus be iaped and begiled was he Thus maketh he his introduction
To bring folke to her distruction.
Considereth sirs, howe in eche estate
Betwixt men and gold is debate
So ferforth, that vnnethes there is none
This moultiplying blindeth so many one
That in good faith, I trowe that it be
The grettest cause of such scarsite
These philosophers speken so mistily
In this crafte, that men can not come therby
For any wit that men haue nowe a daies
They may well chattre & iangle as do ỳ iayes
And in her termes, set her lust and paine
But to her purpose shul they neuer attaine
A man may lightly lerne, if he haue ought To multiplie, and bring his good to nought
Lo, such a lucre is in this lusty game
A mans mirth it wol turne all to grame
And empten also great and heuy purses
And maken folke to purchase curses
Of hem that han also her good ilente
O fye for shame, they that han be brente
Alas, can not they flie the fires hete ye that it vsen, I rede that ye it lete
Lest ỳ ye lesen al, for better than neuer is late Neuer to thriue, were to longe a date
Though ỳ ye prolle aye, ye shall it neuer find Ye ben as bolde as is bayarde the blind
That blundereth forth, a peril casteth he none
He is as bolde to renne ayenst a stone
As for to go beside in the way
So faren ye, that multiplien I say
If that your eien can not sene a right
Loketh that your minde lacke not his sight
For though ye loke neuer so brode and stare ye shall not winne a mite in that chaffare
But wast al that ye may repe and renne
Withdrawe the fire, leste it to faste brenne
Medleth with that art no more I mene
For if ye done, your thrift is gon full clene
And right as I swithe I wol you tellen here
What ỳ the philosophers sain in this matere
Lo thus saith Arnolde of the newe toun
As his rosarie maketh mencioun
He saith right thus, withouten any lie
There may no man Mercurie mortifie
But if it be with his brothers knowleging
Lo how that he, which first said this thing
Of Philosophers father was, Hermes
He saith how the dragon doutles
Ne dieth not, but if he be slaine
With his brother: And this is for to saine
By the dragon Mercury, and none other
He vnderstode ỳ brimstone was his brother
That out of Sol and Luna were ido we
And therfore said he, take hede to my sawe
Let no man beste him this arte for to seche
But he that the entencion and speche
Of Philosophers vnderstonde can
And if he do, he is a leude man
For this science, and this conning (q he)
Is of the secre of the secres parde.
Also there was a disciple of Plato
That on a time said his maister to
As his boke Senior wol bere witnesse
And this was his demaunde in sothfastnesse
Tell me the name of the priuy stone.
And Plato answerd vnto him anone
Take the stone that Titanos men name.
Which is that (q he) Magnatia is the same
Said Plato: ye sir and is it thus?
This is ignotum per ignotius
What is Magnatia, good sir I you pray.
It is a water that is made I say
Of elementes four (q Plato)
Tel me the roche good sir (q he tho)
Of that water, if it be your will.
Nay nay (q Plato) certaine that I nill
The Philosophers were ilworne echone
That they shuld discouer it vnto none
Ne in no boke it write in no manere
For vnto Christ it is so lefe and dere
That he wol not that it discouered be
But where it liketh to his deite
Man to enspire and eke for to defende
Whan that him liketh, lo this is his ende.
Than conclude I thus, sens ỳ god of heuen
Ne will not that the philosophers nemen
How that a man shal come vnto this stone
I rede as for the beste, let it gone
For who so maketh God his aduersary
Is for to werche any thing in contrary
Vnto his wil certes neuer shal he thriue
Though that he multeply terme of his liue
And there a pointe, for ended is my tale
God sende euery true man bote of his bale.

Here endeth the tale of the Chanons yeman, and here foloweth the doctour of phisikes Prologue.

Whan this yeman his tale ended had
Of this false Chanon, whiche was so bad
Our hoste gan say, truely and certaine
This priest was begiled, soth for to saine

He wening for to be a Philosopher
Til he right no golde left in his cofer
And sothly this preest had all ther iape
This cursed Chanon put in his hoode an ape
But al this passe I ouer as now
Sir doctour of phisicke, yet I pray you
Tel vs a tale of some honest matere
It shal be done, if that ye wol it here
Said this doctour, and his tale bygan anon
Now good men (q he) herkeneth euerichon.

Here endeth the doctour of Phisikes prologue, and here beginneth his tale.

There was, as telleth vs
Titus Liuius
A knight, yeleped was Virginius
Fulfilled of honour and of worthinesse
And strong of frendes, & of richesse.

A doughter he had by his wife
And neuer had he mo in all his life
Fayre was this maide in excelent beaute
Abouen euery wight that man may se
For nature hath, with soueraine deligence
Formed her in so great excellence
As though she would say, lo I nature
Thus can I forme and painte a creature
Whan that me liste, who can me counterfete
Pigmalió not, though he alway forge & bete
Or graue or painte, for I dare well saine
Appelles, or zeusis, should werche in vaine
To graue or painte, or forge or bete
If they presumed me to counterfete
For he that is the fourmer principal
Hath made me his vicar generall
To fourme and painte erthly creaturis
Right as me liste, for al thing in my cure is Vnder the moone, that may wane and ware
And for my werke, no thing wol I fare
My lorde and I ben fully of acorde
I made her to the worship of my lorde
So do I all mine other creatures
Of what colour they be, or of what figures
Thus semeth me that nature would say.

This maide was of age. xii. yere and tway
In whiche that nature hath suche delite
For right as she can paint a lilye white
And rody as rose, right with suche painture
She painted hath this noble creature
Er she was borne, vpon her limmes fre
Where als brighte as suche colours shoulde be
And Phebus died had her tresses grete
Like to the stremes of his burned hete
And if that excellent were her beaute
A thoulande folde more vertuous was she
In her ne lacketh no condicion
That is to preise, as by discrecion
As wel in body as in gostе, chaste was she
For which she floured in virginite
With al humilite and abstinence
With al attemperaunce, and pacience
With mesure eke, and bering of aray
Discrete she was in answering alway
Tho she were wise as Pallas, dare I saine
Her faconde eke, full womanly and plaine
No counterfetted termes had she
To seme wise: but after her degre
She spake, and all her wordes more and lesse
Sowning in vertue and in gentilnesse
Shamefast she was, in maides shamfastnesse
Constant in hert, and euer in busines
To driue her out of all slogardie
Bacchus had of her mouthe no maistrie
For wine and youth done Venus encrece
As men in fyre wol casten oyle or grece
And of her owne vertue vnconstrained
She hath ful ofte her sicke ifained
For that she would flie the company
Where likely was to treten of foly
As is at festes, at reuels, and at daunces
That ben occasions of daliaunces
Suche thinges maken children for to be
To sone rype and bolde, as men may se
Whiche is ful perilous, and hath ben yore
For al to sone may she lerne lore
Of boldenesse, when she is a wife.

And ye maistresses in your olde life
That lordes doughters han in gouernaunce
Ne taketh of my worde no displesaunce
Thinke that ye ben set in gouerninges
Of lordes doughters, onely for two thinges
Either for you han kepte your honestе
Either ye han fall in frelte
And knowen well inough the olde daunce
And conne forsake fully mischaunce
For euermore, therfore for Christes sake
Kepeth wel tho that ye vndertake.

A thefe of benefon that hath forlaste
His libertee and al his thewes craste
Can kepe a forest beste of any man
Now kepeth hem wel, for and ye wol ye can Loketh well, to no vice that ye assent
Lest ye be dampned for your euill entent
For who so dothe, a traytour is certain
And taketh kepe of that I shall you saine
Of al treyson soueraine pestilence

Is, when a wight betraieth innocence ye fathers, and eke ye mothers also Though ye han children, be it one or mo
Yours is the charge of al her sufferaunce
Whiles they ben in your gouernaunce
Beth ware, that by ensample of your liuing
Eyther by your negligence in chastising
That they ne perishe: for I dare wel say
If that they don, ye shal ful sore abay
Under a shepherde softe and negligent
The wolf hath many a shepe & lambe to rent
Sufficeth one ensample now as here
For I mote turne ayen to my matere.
This maide of which I tel my tale expresse
She kepte her selue, she neded no maistresse
For in her liuing maidens might rede
Is in a boke, euery good worke and dede
That longeth to a maide vertuous
She was so prudent and so bounteous
For whiche out spronge on euery side
Bothe of her beaute and of her bounte wide
That thorow ȳ londe they preised her echon
That loued vertue, saue enuy alone
That sory is of other mennes wele
And glad is of her sorowe, and vnhele
The doctour maketh this discripcion
This maide went on a day into the toun
Toward the temple, with her mother dere
As is of yonge maidens the manere.
Now was there a iustice in the toun
That gouernour was of that region
And so befel, this Justice his eyen cast
Upon this maide, auising her ful fast
As she came forby, there as the Judge stode
Anon his hert chaunged and his mode
So was he caught ȳ beaute of this maide
And to him selfe ful preuely he saide
This maide shal be mine for any man
Anon the fende into his hert ran
And taught him sodainly, by what sleight
The maide to his purpose winne he might
For certes, by no force, ne by no mede
Him thought he was not able for to spede
For she was stronge of frendes, and eke she Confirmed was in suche soueraine beaute
That well he wist he might her neuer winne
As for to make her with her body sinne
For whiche with great deliberacion
He sent after a client into the toun
The whiche he knew ful subtil and ful bold
This iudge vnto this clerk his tale hath told
In secrete wise, and made him to ensure
He shuld tell it vnto no creature
And if he did, he should lese his hede
When assented was this cursed rede
Glad was the iudge, and made good chere
And yaue him giftes precious and dere.
When shapen was al this conspiracie
Fro point to point, how that his lecherie
Parfourmed should be ful subtelly
As ye shullen after here openly
Home gothe this client ȳ hight Claudius
This false iudge, that hight Appius
So was his name, for it is no fable
But knowen for an historiall thing notable
The sentence of it sothe is out of dout
This false iudge gothe now fast about
To hasten his delite, al that he may
And so befel, that sone after on a day
This false iudge, as telleth vs the storie
As he was wonte, sate in his consistorie
And yaue his domes vpon sondry caas
This false client came forth a ful gret paas
And said lorde, if it be your will
As doth me right vpon this pitous bill
In whiche I plaine vpon Virginius
And if he wol say it is not thus
I wol proue it, and finde good witnesse
That sothe is, that my bill wol expresse
The iudge answerd, of this in his absence
I may not yeue diffinite sentence
Let do him call, and I woll gladly here
Thou shalt haue right, and no wrong here
Virginius came to wete the iudges will
And right anon was radde this cursed bill
The sentence of it, was as ye shall here.
To you my lorde Appius so dere
Sheweth your poore seruaunt Claudius
How that a knight called Virginius
Ayenst the lawe, and ayenst al equite
Holdeth expresse ayenst the will of me
My seruant, which that is my thral by right
Which from mine hous was stole on a night
Whiles she was full yonge, I wol it prue
By witnesse lord, so that ye you not greue
She is not his doughter, what so he say
Wherfore my lorde iustice I you pray
Yelde me my thral, if it be your will Lo this was al the sentence of that bill.
Virginius gan vpon the client beholde
But hastely, er he his tale tolde
He would haue defended it, as shuld a knight
And by witnesse of many a trewe wight
That al was false, that said his aduersary
This cursed iudge would no lenger tary
Ne here a worde more of Virginius
But yaue his iudgement, and said thus.
I deme anon this client his seruaunt haue
Thou shalt no lenger her in thine house saue
Go bring her forth, and put her in our warde

This cliēt shal haue his triał, thus I awarde
And when this worthy knight Virginius
Through the assent of the iudge Appius
Must by force his dere doughter yeuen
Unto the iudge, in lechery to liuen
He gothe him home, and set him in his hall
And lette anon his dere doughter call
And with face deed as ashen colde
Upon her humble face he gan beholde
With fathers pite, sticking through his hert
Al wolde he not from his purpose conuert.
Doughter (q he) Virginia by thy name
There ben two wayes, either deth or shame
That thou muste suffer, alas ỳ I was borne
For neuer thou deseruedest wherfore
To dien, with a swerde or with a knife
Oh dere doughter, comfort of my life
Whiche I haue fostred vp with such plesaūce
That thou ne were out of my remembraunce
O doughter, which that art my last wo
And in my life my laste ioye also O iemme of chastite, in pacience
Take thou thy dethe this is my sentence
For loue and not for hate thou muste be deed
My pitous honde mote smite of thine heed
Als that euer Appius the sey
Thus hath he falsely iudged thee to dey
And tolde her al the tale, as ye before
Han herd, it nedeth not to tell it more.
O mercy dere father (q this maide)
And with that word, both her armes laide
Aboute his necke, as she was wonte to do
The teeres braste out of her eyen two
And sayd, O good father shal I die
Is there no grace is there no remedie?
No certes dere doughter mine (q he)
Than yeue me leaue father mine (q she)
My death to complaine a litel space
For parde, Jepte yaue his doughter grace
For to complaine, er he her slough, alas
And God it wot, nothing was her trespas
But that she ranne her father first to se
To welcome him, with great solempnite
And with that word she fel a swoune anon
And after whan her swouning was gon
She riseth vp and to her father sayde
Blessed be God that I shall die a mayde
Yeue me my deth, er that I haue a shame
Doth with your child your wil a gods name
And with that word, she praieth him ful ofte
That with his swerd he should smit her softe
And with that word, a swoune doune she fell
Her father with sorouful hert and fell
Her heed of smote, and by the toppe it hente
And to the iudge he it yaue in presente
As he sat in dome in consistorie.
Whan the iudge it sawe, as saith the storie
He bad take him, and honge him also fast
But right anon al the people in thrast
To saue the knight, for routh and for pite
For knowen was the iudges iniquite
The people anon had suspecte in this thing
By maner of this clientes chalenging
That it was by the assent of Appius
They wist wel that he was lecherous
For whiche vnto Appius they gon
And kesten him in prison right anon
Where as he slewe him self, and Claudius
That seruaunt was vnto this Appius
Was demed for to be honged vpon a tre
But Virginius, of his great pite
So prayed for him, that he was exiled
And els certes he had ben begiled
The remnaunt were honged, more and lesse
That consented were to his cursidnesse.
Here may men se how sin hath his merite
Beware, for no man wot how god wol smite
In no degre, ne in no maner wise
The worme of conscience wol arise
Of wicked life, though it so priuy be
That no man wote of it but God and he Whether he be leude man or lered
He not how sone he may ben afered
Therfore I rede you this counsaile take Forsake sinne, or sinne you forsake

Here endeth the doctour of Phisikes tale, and foloweth the wordes of the hoste.

Our Host gan swere as he were woode
Harowe (q he) by nayles and by bloode
This was a false theefe, and a cursed iustice
As shamefull dethe, as herte may deuise
Come to the iustice and her aduocas
Algate this sely maiden is slaine, alas
Alas to dere abought she her beaute
Wherfore I say, that all men may se
That yeftes of fortune, or of nature
Ben cause of dethe of many creature
Her beaute was her dethe, I dare wel saine
Alas so pitously as she was slaine
But herof wol I not procede as nowe
Men haue full ofte more harme than prowe
But truely mine owne maister dere
This is a petous tale for to here
But nathelesse, passe ouer is no force

I pray

I pray to God to saue thy gentle corce
And thy vrinalles, and thy iordanes
Thine ypocras, and eke thy galianes
And euery bore ful of letuarie
God blesse hem and our lady saint Marie
So mote I the, thou arte a proper man
And ilyke a prelate by saint Runian
Saue that I can not speke wel in terme
But wel I wote, thou dost min hert to yerne
That I haue almost caught a cardiacle
By corpus domini, But I haue triacle
Or els a draught of moiste corncr ale
Or but I here anon a nother mery tale
My hert is lost, for pite of this maide
Thou belamy, thou John pardener he saide
Tel vs some mery tale, or iape, right anon.
It shal be don (quod he) by saint Runion
But first (quod he) here at this ale stake
I woll bothe drinke, and eate of a cake
But right anone, these gentels gon to crye
Nay, let him tell vs of no rebaudrye
Tel vs som mortal thing, that we mow lere
Some witte, and than wol we gladly here
I graunt (quod he) iwis, but I mote thinke
On some honest thing, whiles I drinke.

¶ Here endeth the wordes of the host, and here folowe the prologue of the Pardoner.

Ordinges (quod he) in chyrch when I preche
I paine me to haue an hautein speche
And ring it out, as round as doth a bell
For I can all by roote, that I tell My teme is alwaie, and euer was (Radix omnium malorum est cupiditas)
First I pronounce fro whence I come
And then my billes I shewe al and some
Our liege lorde seale on my patent
That shewe I first, my body to warrent
That no man be so bolde, preest ne clerke
Me to disturbe, of Christes holy werke
And after that, I tel forth my tales
Bulles of Popes, and of Cardinales
Of Patriarkes, and of Bishopes I shewe
And in latin I speke wordes a fewe
To sauer with my predicacion
And for to stere men to deuocion
Than shewe I forth my long christal stones
Ycrammed ful of cloutes and of bones
Relikes they ben, as wene they echone
Than haue I in laton a shoder bone
Whiche that was of an holy iewes sheepe.
Good men say I, take of my wordes keepe
If that this bone be washen in any wel
If cowe or calfe, sheepe, or ore swel
That any worme hath eten, or hem stonge
Take water of this wel, and washe his tonge
And it is hole anon: and farthermore
Of pockes, and of scabbes, and euery sore
Shall shepe be hole, that of this well
Drinketh a draught, take keepe of that I tell.
If the good man that beestes oweth
Wol euery day, er the cocke croweth
Fasting drinke of this wel a draught
As thilke holy iewe our elders taught
His beestes and his store shall multiply
And sirs, also it healeth ielosye
For though a man be fall in ielous rage
Let make with this water his potage
And neuer shall he more his wife mistrist
Though he in soth the defaute by her wist
Al had she take preestes two or three Here is a mittaine eke, that ye may se
He that his hande wol put in this mittaine
He shal haue multiplying of his graine
When he hath sowen, be it whete or otes
So that he offer good pens or grotes.
And men and wome, o thing I warne you
If any wight ben in this churche now
That hath done sinne horrible, that he Dare not for shame of it shriuen be
Or any woman, be she ponge or olde
That hath made her husbond cokewolde
Such folk shul haue no power ne no grace
To offer to my relikes in this place
And who so findeth him out of such blame
Commeth vp and offre in goddes name
And I assoyle him by the auctorite
Suche as by bulle was graunted to me.
By this gaude haue I wonne euery yere
An hundred marke, sithen I was pardonere
I stonde like a clerke in my pulpet
And the leude people ben doune iset
I preche so as ye haue herd here before
And tel an hundred iapes more
Than paine I me to stretche forth my necke
And est and west, vpon the people I becke
As doth a doue, sitting vpon a berne
My hondes and my tonge gon full yerne
That it is ioy to se my besinesse
Of auarice and of suche cursednesse
Al my preching is for to maken hem free
To yeuen her pens, and namely vnto me
For mine entent is not but for to winne
And nothing for correction of sinne

The Pardoners prologue.

I reche neuer whan that they ben beried
Though her soule gon a blackburied
For certes many a predication
Cometh oft time of ivel entencion.
Some for plesaunce of folke, & for flatery
To ben auaunced by hipocrisy
And some for veine glory, and some for hate
For whan I dare not other waies debate
Than wol I sting hem with my tõge smerte
In preching, so that he shall not asterte
To ben diffamed falsely, if that he Hath trespased to my bretherne or to me
For though I tell not his propre name
Men shall wel knowe that it is the same
By signes, or by other circumstaunces
This quite I folke, ỹ doth vs displesaunces
Thus put I out my venim vnder hewe
Of holinesse, to semen holy and trewe
But shortly mine entent I wol deuise
I preche of nothing but of couetise
Therfore my teme is yet, and euer was
Radix omnium malorum est cupiditas
Thus can I preache ayenst the same vice Whiche that I vse, and that is auarice
But though my selfe be gilty in that sinne
Yet can I maken other folke to twinne
From auarice, and sore hem to repent
But that is not my principall entent
I preche nothing but for couetise
Of this matere, it ought inough suffise.
Than tell I hem ensamples many one
Of olde stories, longe time agone
For leude people louen tales olde
Whiche thinges they can well report & holde
What trowe ye: whiles that I may preche
And winne gold and siluer for to teche
That I wol liue in pouert wilfully:
Nay nay, I thought it neuer trewly
For I wol preche and begge in sondrie lõdes
I wol not do no labour with mine hondes
Ne make bashettes and liue therby
Bicause I wol not begge idelly
I wol none of the apostels countrefete
I wol haue money, mault, chese, and whete
Al were it yeuen of the poorest page
Or of the poorest widdow in a village
Though her childrẽ should sterue for famine
Nay, I wol drinke the licoure of the wine
And haue a ioly wenche in euery toun
But herkeneth lordinges my conclusioun
Your liking is that I should tel a tale
Now I haue dronken a draught of corny ale
By God I hope I shal tel you a thing
That shal by reason ben at your liking
For though my selfe be a full vicious man
A moral tale yet I you tell can
Which I am wont to preche, for to winne
Now holde your peace, my tale I wol begin.

¶ Here endeth the Pardoners prologue, and here folo-weth his tale.

In Flaũders whilom there was a company
Of yonge folke, that haũted foly
As hasard, riot, stewes, and tauernes where as with harpes, lutes, and geternes
They dauncen and plaien at dice night & day
And eten also, ouer that her might may Through which they don the deuil sacrifice within the deuils temple, in cursed wise
By superfluite abhominable
Her othes ben so great and so dampnable
That it is grisly for to here hem swere/
Our blissed lordes body they al to tere/
Hem thought Iewes rent him not inough
And eche of hem at others sinne lough.
And right anon comen in tombesteres
Fetis and smale and ponge foiteres
Singers with harpes, baudes, and wafereres
Whiche that ben verely the deuils officers
To kindle and blowe the fire of lechery
That is anered vnto glotony
The holy writte take I to me witnesse
That lechery is in wine and dronkenesse.
Lo how that dronken Lothe vnkindely
Lay by his daughters two vnwetingly
So dronke he was, he nist what he wrought
And therfore sore repent him ought Herodes, who so wol the storie seche
There may ye lerne, and by ensample teche
When he of wine was replete at his feste
Right at his owne table, yaue his heste
To sleen Iohan the Baptiste ful giltelesse
Seneke saith eke good wordes doutlesse
He saith he can no difference finde
Betwixt a man that is out of his minde
And a man that is dronkelewe
But woodnesse that is fallen in a shrewe
Persseuereth lenger than doth dronkenesse
O glotony, ful of cursidnesse
O cause first of our confusion
O originall of our dampnacion
Til Christ had bought vs w his blode again
Lo how dere, shortely for to sain
Bought was first this cursid vilanie

Corrupt

Corrupt was al this world through glotonie
Adam our fornfather, and his wife also Fro Paradise, to labour and to wo
Were driuen for that vice, it is no drede
For whiles that Adam fasted, as I rede
He was in Paradise, and whan that he Eate of the fruict, defended on the tre
Anon he was out cast to wo and pain
O glotonie, on thee well ought vs to plain
Oh, wist a man how many maladies
Foloweth of excesse and of glotonies
He would been the more measurable
Of his diete, sitting at his table
Alas the short throte, the tender mouthe
Maketh that East and West, North & South
In yearth, in aire, in water, men to swinke
To getten a gloton deinte meate and drinke
Of this matter, o Paule wel canst thou treat
Meate vnto wombe, & wombe eke vnto meat
Shall God destroie bothe as Paule saieth
Alas, a foule thing it is by my saieth
To saie this worde, and fouler is the dede
Whan men so drinketh of the white and rede
That of his throte he maketh his priue
Through thilke cursed superfluite.
The Apostle saieth, weping full pitoully
There walken many, of whiche told haue I
I saie it now weping with pitous voice
There been enemies of Christes croice
Of which the ende is death, wõbe is her God
O belie, O wombe, O stinking cod
Fulfilled of dong and of corrupcion
At either ende of the foule is the soun
How greate cost and labour is to finde
Thise cokes: how thei stamp, strein, & grinde
And tourne substaunce in to accident
To fulfill all thy likerous talent
Out of the hard bones knocken thei
The mary, for thei cast it not awaie
That maie go through the gullet sake & sotte
Of spicerie, of leaues, barke, and rote
Shall been his sauce imade by delite
To maken hem haue a newer apetite
But certes he that haunteth sothe delites
Is deade, whiles that he liueth in the vices
A lecherous thing is wine and dronkenes
Is full of striuing and of wretchednes
Oh dronken man, disfigured in thy face
Sower is thy breath, foule art ỹ to embrace
And through thy drõken nose sowneth ỹ soun
As tho thou saidest aie, Sampson Sampson
And yet God wot Sãpson dronk neuer wine
Thou fallest, as it wer a sticked swine
Thy tong is lost, and all thine honest cure
For dronkennesse is very sepulture
Of mannes witte, and his discrecion
In whom that drinke hath domination
He can no counsaile kepe, it is no drede
Now kepe you fro the white and fro the rede
Namely fro the white wine of Lepe
That is to sell in Fishe streate and in Chepe
This wine of Spain crepeth subtelly
And other wines growing fast by
Of whiche riseth soche fumosite
That whã a man hath dronk draughtes thre
And weneth that he be at home in Chepe
He is in Spain, right at the toune of Lepe
Nought at Rochell, ne at Burdeaux toun
And than woll he saie, Sampsoun Sãpsoun
But herkeneth lordinges o word, I you pray
That all the souerain actes, dare I saie
Of victories in the old Testament
That through very God, that is omnipotent
Were doen in abstinence and in praier
Loketh the Bible, and there ye mow it lere
Loketh Attila, the greate conquerour
Died in his slepe, with shame and dishonour
Bleding aie at his nose in dronkennesse
A capitain should liue in sobernesse
And ouer all this, auise you right well
What was commaunded vnto Lamuel:
Not Samuel: but Lamuel saie I
Redeth the Bible, and findeth it expresly
Of wine yeuing to hem that haue iustice
No more of this, for it maie inough suffice

And now that I haue spoke of glotonie
Now woll I defende you hasardrie
Hasarde is very mother of lesinges
And of deceipt, and cursed forswearinges Blaspheme of Christ, mãslauzter, & wast also
Of battaile of time, and of other mo
It is repreue, and contrary to honour
For to be holden a common hasardour
And euer the hier that he is of estate
The more he is holden desolate
If that a Prince vse hasardrie
In all gouernaunce and policie
He is as by comen opinion
Hold the lesse in reputacion
Stilleb̃ that was hold a wise ambassadour
Was sent into Corinth with full great honour
Fro Calidone, to maken hem aliaunce
And whan he came, happed this chaunce
That all the greatest that wer of the londe
Playing at hasarde he hem fonde
For whiche, as sone as it might be
He stale him home ayen to his countre
And saied, there woll I not lese my name
I will not take on me so greate defame

For to alie you to none hasardours
Sendeth other wiser embassadours
For by my trouth, me were leuer die
Than I should you to hasardours alie
For ye that been so glorious in honours
Shall not alie you with hasardours
As by my will, ne by my treatie
This wise Philosopher, thus saied he.
Loke eke how to king Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the boke saieth vs
Sent him a pane of Dice of gold in scorne
For he had vsed hasardrie there biforne
For whiche he held his glory and his renoun
At no value or reputacioun
Lordes might finde other maner plaie
Honest inough to driue the daie awaie.

Now woll I speke of othes false and great
A worde or two, as other bokes entreat
Great swearing is thing abhominable
And false swearing is yet more reprouable
The hie God forbad swearing at all
Witnesse of Mathew, but in speciall
Of swearing, saieth the holy Jeromie
Thou shalt sweare soth thine othes, & not lie
And sweare in dome and eke in right witnes
But idle swearing is a cursednes
Behold and se that in the first table
Of hie Gods hestes honourable
How that the seconde heste of him is this Take not my name in idelnesse amis
Lo, he rather forbiddeth soche swearing
Than homicide, or any other cursed thing
I saie as thus, by order it stondeth
This knoweth thei ꝑ his hestes vnderstōdeth
How that the seconde heste of God is that
And further more, I woll thee tell all plat
That vengeaunce shall not part fro his hous
That of his othes is to outragious
By Goddes precious hart, and his nailes
And by the bloud of Christ, that is in Hailes Seuen is my chaunce, and thin fiue and three
By Goddes armes, if thou falsly plaie me
This dagger shall through thine harte go
This fruict cometh of thilke bones two Forswearing, ire, falsnesse, and homicide
Now for the loue of Christ, that for vs dide
Leaueth your othes, bothe great and smale
For I shall tell you a meruailous tale.
These riottours three, of whiche I tell
Longe erst or prime rong any bell
Were set hem in a Tauerne to drinke
And as thei sat, thei heard a Bell clinke
Biforne a cors, that was caried to his graue
That one of hem gan call to his knaue
Go bette (quod he) and aske redily
What cors is this, that passeth forth by
And loke that thou report his name wele.
Sir (quod he) it nedeth neuer a dele
It was me tolde er ye came here two houres
He was parde an old felowe of yours
And sodainly was he slain to night
For dronke as he sat on his benche vpright
There came a priuie thefe, men clepen death
That in this countrey all the people slaeth
And with his speare he smote his hart atwo
And went his waie, withouten wordes mo
He hath a thousande slain, this pestilence
And maister, er ye come in his presence
Me thinketh that it were necessarie
For to beware of soche an aduersarie
Bethe redy for to meten him euermore
Thus taught me my dame, I saie no more.
By sainct Mary, saied this Tauernere
The child saieth sothe, for he hath this yere
Henes ouer a mile, slain in a great village
Bothe man and woman, child and page
I trowe his habitacion be there
To been auised, great wisedom it were Er that he did a man dishonour.
Ye Gods armes (quod this riottour)
Is it soche peril with him for to mete?
I shall him seche by stile and eke by strete
I make a vowe, by Goddes digne bones
Herkeneth felowes, we three been all ones
Let eche of vs hold vp his honde to other
And eche of vs become others brother
And we woll slea this false traitour death
He shall be slain, that so many slaeth
By Gods dignite, er that it be night.
Togider han these three her trouthes plight
To liue and die eche of them with other
As though he were his owne brother
And vp thei sterten all dronken in this rage
And forth thei gone, toward that village
Of whiche the Tauerner hath spoken biforn
And many a grisly othe han thei swore
And Christes blessed body thei to rent
Death shall be dedde, and we maie him hent
Whan thei han gone not fully a mile
Right as thei would haue troden ouer a stile
An old poore man with hem met
This old man full mekely hem gret
And saied, now lordinges God ye see.
The proudest of these riottours three Answerd ayen, what chorle with hard grace
Why art thou all forwrapped saue thy face?
Why liuest thou so long in so great age?
This old man gan loken in his visage
And saied thus: for I can not finde

I man, though I walked into Inde
Neither in citee, ne in no village
That would chaunge his youth for mine age
And therfore mote I haue mine age still
As long time as it is Goddes will.
Ne death alas, nill not haue my life
Thus walke I like a restlesse caitife
And on ỳ ground, which is my mothers gate
I knocke with my staffe erliche and late
And saie, leue mother let me in Lo how I vanishe, flesshe, blood, and skin
Alas, whan shall my bones been at reste
Mother with you would I chaunge my cheste
That in my chamber long time hath be Ye for an heren clout to wrappe in me
But yet to me she woll not doen that grace
For whiche full welked is my face
But sirs, to you it is no curtesie
To speaken vnto an old man vilanie
But he trespace in worde either in dede
In holy writ, ye maie your self well rede
Ayenst an old man, hore vpon his hedde
Ye should arise, therfore I you rede
Ne doeth vnto an old man no harme as now
No more than ye would a man did you
In age, if that ye maie so long abide
And God be with you, whether ye go or ride
I mote go thider as I haue to go
Nay old chorle, by God thou shalt not so
Saied these other hasardours anon
Thou partest not so lightly by sainct Jhon
Thou spakest right now of thilke traitor death
That in this countrey all our frendes slaeth
Haue here my trouth thou art his espie
Tell where he is, or els thou shalt die
By God and by the holy Sacrament
For soothely thou art of his assent
To slea vs yong folke, thou falsse theefe.
Now sirs, if it be to you so lefe
To finde death, tourne vp this croked waie
For in that groue I left him by my faie
Vnder a tree, and there he woll abide Ne for your boste he nill him nothing hide
See ye yonder oke, right there ye shal him finde
God saue you, that bought agen mankinde
And you amende, thus saied this old man.
Than ouerriche of these riotours ran
Til they cam to the tree, and there they found
Florines of gold ycoigned round
Well nie a seuen bushels, as hem thought.
No lenger than after death they sought
But eche of hem so glad was of that sight
For that the florens so faire been a dight
That doune they sit, by the precious horde
The worst of hem spake the first worde

Brethern (q̃ he) take kepe what I saie
My wit is great, though I borde or plaie
This treasure hath fortune to vs yeuen
In mirthe and iolite our life to liuen
And lightly as it commeth, so woll we spend
Hey, Goddes precious harte: who wend
To daie, that we should haue so faire a grace
But might this gold be caried fro this place
Home to my house, or els to yours (For well I wote that all this gold is ours)
Than were we in hie felicite
But truely by daie it maie not be Men would saie, that we were theues strong
And for our owne treasure doen vs hong
This treasure must icaried be by night
As wisely and as slily as it might Wherfore I rede, let loke emong vs all
To drawe, and let se where the cutte wol fall
He that hath the shortest cut with hart blith
Shall renne to the toune, and that ful swith
To bring vs bread and drinke full priuely
And two of vs shall kepe full subtelly
This treasure well, and if he woll not tarie
Whan it is night, we woll this treasure carie
By one assent, where as vs liste best
That one of hem brought grasse in his fest
And bad hem draw, and loke on whõ it wold fal
And it fell on the yongest of hem all
And forth toward the toune he went anon
And also sone as he was gon
That one of hem spake vnto that other
Thou wost well, thou art my sworne brother
Thy profite woll I tell thee right anone
Thou wost well that our felowe is gone
And here is gold, and that full greate plentee
That shall departed be emong vs three
But natheless, if that I can shape it so
That it departed were emong vs two Had I not doen a frendly tourne to thee
That other answerd, I not how ỳ might be.
I woll well that the gold were ours two
What should we doe, that it might be so:
Shall it be counsaile (saied the first shrew)
And I shall tell thee in wordes fewe
What we woll doen, and bring it well about
I graunt (q̃ that other) out of doubt
That by my trouth, I woll thee not bewrain
Now (q̃ he) thou wost well we been twain
And twain of vs shall stronger be than one
Loke whan he is set, and than anone
Arise, as though thou wouldest ẅ him plaie
And I shall riue him through the sides tway
Whiles ỳ thou struggelest ẅ him as in game
And with thy dagger, loke thou doe the same
For than shall all the good departed be

My

The Pardoners tale.

My dere frende, betwixt thee and me
Than maie we bothe our lustes fulfill
And plaie at Dice, right at our owne will
And thus accorded been these thre wes twaie
To slea the third, as ye heard me saie.

This yongest, which that went to ỹ toune
Full often in his hart he rolled vp and doune
The beaute of these florens faire and bright
O Lorde (quhe) if so were that I might Haue all this treasour to my self alone
There nis no man, that liueth vnder trone
Of God, that should liue so mery as I
And at the last the fende our enemy
Put in his thought that he should poison bete
With which he might slaen his felowes twey
For why, the fende fonde him in soche liuing
That he had leue to sorowe him to bring
For this was vtterly his entent
To slaen hem bothe, and neuer to repent

And forth he goth, no lẽger would he tary
Into the toune, vnto a Potecary
And praied him that he would him sell
Some poison, that he might his rattes quell
And eke there was a Polkat in his hawe
That as he saied, his Capons had ifawe
And said, he would wreken him if ỹ he might
Of vermin, that distroied hem by night.

The Poticarie answerd, thou shalt haue
A thing, as wisly God my soule saue
In all this worlde there nis no creature
That eateth or drinketh of this confecture
Not but ỹ mountenaunce of a corne of whete
That he ne shall his life anon forlete
Ye sterue he shall, and that in lesse while Thã thou woldest gon a pace, not but a mile
This poison is so hearde and so violent.

This cursed man hath in his honde hent
This poison in a box, and sithe he ran Into the nert streate vnto a man
And borowed him large botels thre
And in the two, the poison poured he
The third he kept cleane for his drinke
For all the night he shope him for to swinke
In caryng of the gold out of that place
And whan this riottour, with sorie grace
Hath filde with him his great bottels thre
To his felowes ayen repaired he.

what nedeth it thereof to sermon more?
For right as thei had cast his death before
Right so thei han him slain, and that anone
And whã this was doen, than spake that one
Now let vs sit and drinke, and make vs mery
And afterward thei woln his body bury
And after that it happed hem parfaas
The one toke the botel, therin ỹ poison was
And dronke, and yaue his felowe drinke also Through whiche anon thei sterue both two

But certes I suppose that Auicenne
Wrote neuer in no canon, ne in no fenne
More wonder sorowes of empoisonning
Than had these wretches two in her ending
Thus ended been these homicides two
And eke the false enpoisonner also

O cursed sinne, full of all cursidnesse
O traitour homicide, O wickednesse
O glotenie, luxure, and hasardie
Thou blasphemour of Christ with vilanie
And othes greate, of olage and of pride
Alas mankinde, how maie it betide
That to thy creatour, which ỹ thee wrought
And with his precious blood thee bought
Thou art so false and so vnkinde, alas

Now good men, God forgeue you your trespas
And ware you fro the sinne of auarice (pas
Mine holy pardon, maie you all warisshe
So that ye offer nobles or sterlinges
Other els siluer spones, broches or ringes
Bowweth your hedde vnder this Bulle
Cometh vp ye wiues, and offreth of your wolle
Your names here I enter in my rolle anon
Into the blisse of heauen shull ye all gon
I you assoile by mine high powere
Ye that offren, as cleane and eke clere
As ye were borne. Lo sirs, thus I preache
And Jesu Christ, that is our soules leache
So graunt you his pardon to receiue
For that is best, I woll you not disceiue
But sirs, one worde forgate I in my tale
I haue reliques, and pardon in my male
As faire as any man in Englonde
Whiche were yeuen me by the Popes honde
If any of you woll of deuocion
Offren, and haue mine absolucion
Cometh forth anon, and kneleth her adoun
That ye maie haue part of my Pardoun
Or els taketh pardon as ye wende
All newe and fresshe, at euery tounes ende
So that ye offren alwaie newe and newe
Nobles or pens, whiche been good and trewe
It is greate honour to eueriche that is heer
That ye maie haue a sufficient pardoner
To assoile you, in countre there ye ride
For auentures, which that maie betide
For peraventure there maie fall one or twe
Doune of her hors, and breke her necke a two Loke whiche seurtie it is to you all
That I am in your felowship ifall
That maie assoile you bothe more and lasse whan that the soule shall fro thy body passe
I rede that our hoste shall beginne

For

For he is moste enuelopt of sinne
Cometh forth sir hoste, and offer first anon
And thou shalt kisse the relikes euerichon
Ye for a grote, vnbokell anon thy purse.
Nay nay (q he) thā haue I chrystes curse
Let be (q he) it shall not be so theiche
Thou wouldest make me kisse thin old breche
And sware it were a relike of a sainct
Though it wer with thy foundemēt depaint
But by the crosse, whiche sainct Helain fond
I would I had thine coilons in mine hond
In stede of relikes, or of sanctuarie
Let cut hem of, I woll help thee hem to carie
Thei shull be shrined in an hogges torde
This Pardoner answered not a worde
So wroth he was, he would no worde saie.
Now (q our hoste) I woll no lenger plaie
With thee ne with non other angrie man.
But right anon the worthy knight began
When that he saw that al the people lough
No more of this, for it is right inough
Sir Pardoner, be merry and glad of chere
And ye sir hoste, that been to me so dere
I praie you that ye kisse the Pardoner
And Pardoner, I praie thee drawe thee nere
And as we did, let vs laugh and plaie
Anon thei kissed, and riden forth her waie.

Here endeth the Pardoners tale, and here beginneth the Shipmannes Prologue.

Now frendes saied our hoste so dere
How liketh you by Jhon the Pardonere:
He hath vnbokeled well the male
He hath vs tolde right a thriftie tale
As touching of his misgouernaunce
I praie to God yeue him good chaunce
As ye han heard, of these riottours three Now gentill Mariner, hartely I praie thee
Tell vs a good tale, and that right anon
It shall be doen, by God and by sainct Jhō Saied this Mariner, as well as euer I can
And right anon his tale he thus began.

Here endeth the Shipmannes Prologue.

Here foloweth the Shipmannes Tale.

A Marchaunt whilom dwelled at sainct Denise
That rich was, for which men held him wise
A wife he had, of excellent beaute
And compinable, and reuelous was she Whiche is a thing that causeth more dispēse
Than worth is all the chere and reuerence
That men hem doen, at feastes and at daūces
Soche salutacions and countinaunces
Passeth, as doeth the shadowe on a wall
But woe is him that paie mote for all
The sely husbonde algate he mote paie
He mote vs bothe clothe and eke arraie
All for his owne worshippe, richely
In whiche arraie we daunce iolily
And if that he maie not, parauenture
Or els lust no soche spence endure
But thinketh, that it is wast and tlosse
Than mote an other paie for our losse
And lende vs gold, and that is perilous
This noble Marchaunt held a noble hous
For whiche he had all daie great repaire
For his largesse, and for his wife was faire.
That wonder is: but herkeneth to my tale.
Emong all his gestes great and smale
There was a Monke, a faire man and a bold
I trowe thurtie winter he was old
That euer in one, was drawing to that place
This yong Monke, that so faire was of face
Iquainted was with this good man
Sithens that he first knowlege began
That in his hous, as familier was he
As it is possible any frende to be
And for as moche, as this good man
And eke this Monke, of whiche I began
Were bothe two borne in one village
The Monke him claimed, as for cosinage
And he again saied not ones nay
But was as glad thereof, as foule of daie
For to his harte it was a great pleasaunce
Thus been thei knit with eterne alliaunce
And eke of hem gan other for to ensure
Of brotherhed, whiles her life maie dure
Free was Dan Jhon, & namely of dispens
As in that hous, and full of diligence
To doe pleasaunce, and eke great costage
He forgate not to yeue the leste page
In all that hous, but after her degre
He yaue the lorde, and sithen his meine
Whā that he came, some maner honest thing
For whiche thei wer as glad of his comming
As foule is faine, whan the sunne vp riseth

No

No more hereof as now, for it sufficeth.
But so befell, this Marchaunt on a daie
Shope him to make redy his araie
Toward the toune of Bruges for to fare
To buie there a porcion of ware
For whiche he hath sent to Paris anon
A messenger, and praied hath Dan Jhon
That he should come to S. Denis to plain
With him, and with his wife, a day or twain
Or he to Bruges went, in all wise
This noble Monke, of which I you deuise
Hath of his Abbot, as him list licence
Bicause he was a man of hie prudence
And eke an officer, out for to ride
To seen her graunges, and her bernes wide
And vnto sainct Denis he cometh anon
Who was so welcome, as my lord Dã Jhõ
Our dere cosin, full of curtesie
With him he brought a iubbe of Malueisie
And eke an other full of fine vernage
And volatily, as was aie his vsage
And thus I let hem both eate, drinke, & plaie
This marchant & this monke, a daie or tway
The third daie this Marchaunt vp riseth
And on his nede sadly him auiseth
And vp into his counting hous goth he
To reken with himself, as well maie be
Of tiel he were, how it with him stood
And how he spended had his good
And if that he encreased were or none
His bokes and his bagges many one
He laieth afore him, on his counter borde.
Full riche was his treasour and his horde
For whiche ful fast his counter doore he shet
And eke he nolde no man should him let
Of his accomptes, for the meane time
And thus he sate till it was passed prime.
Dan Jhon was risen in the morowe also
And in the garden walked to and fro
And hath his thinges saied full curtesly
This good wife come walking priuely
Into the garden, there he walked soft
And him salueth, as she hath doen full oft
A maiden child came in her companie
Whiche as her lust, she maie gouerne and gie
For yet vnder the yerde was the maied.
O dere cosin Dan Jhon, she saied
What aileth you so rathe to arise?
Nice (q he) it ought inough suffice
Fiue houres for to slepen on a night
But it were for an old palled wight
As been these old wedded men, that lie & dare
As in a forme sitteth a weary hare
All forstraught, with houndes great & smale
But dere nece, why loue ye so pale?
I trowe certes, that our good man
Hath you laboured, sith this night began
That you were nede to resten hastely
And with that worde he lough full merely
And with his own thought he wore all reed.
This faire wife, gan to shake her heed
And saied thus, ye God wote all (q she)
Naie cosin mine, it stondeth not so with me
For by that God that yaue me soule and life
In al the realme of Fraunce, is there no wife
That lesse lust hath to that foray plaie
For I maie singen alas, and wela waie
That I was borne, but to no wight (q she) Dare I not tell, how it stont with me
Wherfore I thinke out of this world to wende
Or els of my self sone to make an ende
So full I am of drede and eke of care.
This Mõke began vpon this wife to stare
And saied alas, naie nece God forbede
That ye for any sorowe, or for any drede
Fordo your self, but telleth me your grief
Peraventure I maie in your mischief
Counsaile or helpe, and therfore telleth me
All your anoie, for it shall secre be
For on my Porthose I make an othe
That neuer in my life, for lese ne lothe
Ne shall I not of no counsaile you bewraie.
The same ayen to you (q she) I saie
By God and by this Porthose, I you swere
Though men would me all in peces tere
Ne shall I neuer, for to go to hell
Bewraie O worde, of thing that ye me tell
Nor for no colinage, ne for aliaunce
But verely for loue and affiaunce
Thus been thei swore, and here vpon hirfe
And ilke of hem told other what hem lifte.
Cosin (q she) if I had a space
As I haue none, and namely in this place
Than would I tell a legende of my life
That I suffred haue, sith I was a wife
With mine husbond though he be your cosin
Naie (q this Monke) by God & S. Martin
He nis no more cosin vnto me
Than is this leke, that hongeth on the tree
I clepe him so, by sainct Denis of Fraunce
To haue the more cause of aquaintaunce
Of you, whom I haue loued specially
Aboue all other women sikerly
This swere I you on my profession
Telleth your griefe, lest he come adoun
And hasteth you, and goth your waie anon
My dere loue (q she) O my Dan Jhon
Full lefe me were this counsaile to hide
But out it mote, it maie no lenger abide
My husbonde is to me the worste man
That

That euer was, sithe the worlde began
But sithen I am a wife, it sit not to me
To tellen no wight of our priuite
Neither in bed, ne in none other place
God shilde I should tell it for his grace
A wife ne should not say of her husbonde
But al honour, as I can understonde
Saue vnto you, thus much tel I shall
As helpe me god, he is nought worthe at all
In no degre, the value of a flie
But yet me greueth most his nigardie
And wel ye wot, that women naturally
Desiren thinges sixe, as wel as I
They wolden that her husbondes should be Hardy, and wise, riche, and therto free
And buxom to his wife, and frendlyshed
But by that ilke lorde that for vs bled
For his honoure, my selfe to array
A sonday next, I mote nedes paye
An hundred frankes, or elsam I lorne
Yet were my leuer that I were vnborne
Than me were done a slaunder or a vilanie
And if mine husbonde eke might it aspie
I nere but lost, and therfore I you pray
Lene me this summe, or elis mote I dey
Dan John I say, lene me this hundred frankes
Parde I wol not faile you my thankes
Ilthat ye like to do that I you pray
For of a certaine day I wol you pay
And to don you what plesaunce and seruice
That I may don, right as ye like deuise
And but I do, God take on me vengeaunce
As foule as euer had Genilon of Fraunce.

This gentil monke answerd in this manere
Now truly mine owne lady dere
Thane (quod he) on you so great routhe
That I you swere, and plight my trouthe
That whan your husbond is to Flaunders ifare
I wol deliuer you out of all this care
I wol bring you an hundred frankes
And with that he caught her by the flankes
And her embraced hard, and kissed her ofte
Goth now your way (quod he) al stil and softe
And let vs dine as sone as euer ye may
For by my kalender it is prime of the day
Goth now, and beth as true as I shal be.

Now els God forbid sir said she
And forth she goth, as ioly as a pie
And bad the cokes that they should hem hie
So that men might dine, and that anone
Up to her husbonde is this wife gone
And knocked at his counter doze boldely
Quiet la (quod he) Peter it am I
And he how long wol ye fast?
How long time wol ye recken and cast
Your sommes, your bokes, and your thinges?
The diuel haue part of al such reckenynges
Ye haue inough (quod he) of goddes sonde
Come doun to day, and let your bagges stonde
Ne be ye not ashamed, that Dan John Shal fasting al this longe day gon?
What let vs go here masse and go dine.

Wife (quod this man) litell canst thou diuine
The curious besinesse that we haue
For of chapmen, so God me saue
And by that lorde that called is Seint Yue
Scarsly among twenty, twelue shal thriue
Continuelly, lasting vnto their age
We may wel make cheere and good visage
And driue forth the world, as it may be
And kepe our estate in priuite
Til we be deed, or elis that we play
A pilgrimage, or gone out of the way
And therfore haue I great necessite
Upon this queinte world to auise me
For euermore we mote stonde in drede
Of happe and fortune, in our chapmanhede
To Flaunders wol I gone to morow at day
And come ayene as sone as euer I may
For whiche my dere wife, I the beseche
As be to euery wight buxom and meke
And for to kepe our good be curiouse
And honestly gouerne wel our house
Thou hast inough, in euery maner wise
That to a thrifty housewife may suffise
Thee lacketh none array, ne no vitaile
Of siluer in thy purse thou maiest not faile
And with that worde, his counter doze he shette
And doune he goth, no longer wold he lette
And hastely a masse was there sayde
And spedely the tables were layde
And to dinner faste they hem spedde
And richely the chapman this monke fedde.

And after dinner, Dan John soberly
This chapman toke a parte al priuely
And said him thus, cousin it stondeth so
That wel I se, to Bruges ye wol go
God and seint Austen spede you and gide
I pray you cousin wisely that ye ride
Gouerneth you wel also of your diete
Al temperatly, and namely in this hete
Betwixt vs two needeth no straunge fare
Farwel cosin, God shilde you fro care
If any thing there be by day or night
And it lie in my power or in my might
That ye me wol commaunde in any wise
It shal be done, right as ye wol deuise
O thing or that ye go, if that it may be
I wolde praie you for to lene me
An hundred frankes, for a weke or twey

For certaine beestes, that I mote nedes bey
To store with a place that is ours
God helpe me so, I would it were yours
I shall not faile surely at my day
Not for a thousande frankes, a mile way
But let this thing be secrete, I you pray
For yet this night these beestes mote I bey
And fare now wele, mine owne cosin dere
Graunt mercy of your cost and your chere

This noble marchaunt, gentilly anon
Answerde and said, O cosin Dan John
Now sikerly, this is a smale requeste
My golde is yours, whan that you leste
And not onely my golde, but my chaffare
Take what you list, God shilde that ye spare
But one thing is, ye knowe it well ynough
Of chapmen, that her money is her plough
We may creaunce while we haue a name
But goodlesse for to be it is a shame
Pay it ayen, when it lieth at your ese
After my might, faine would I you plese.

The hundreth frankes set he forth anon
And priuely toke hem to Dan John
No wight of this worlde, wist of this lone Sauing this Marchaunt, & dan John alone
Thei drinke & speake, & rome a while and pley
Till that Dan John rideth to his abbey.

The morow came, & forth rid this marchāt
To flaūders ward, his prentes brought him
Til he came to Bruges, wel & merely (auaūt
Now goth this Marchaunt, wel and bestily
About his nedes, and bieth, and creaunseth
He neither plaieth at dice ne daunceth
But as a Marchaunt, shortely to tell
He ledde his life, and there I let him dwell.

The sonday next ỳ this Marchāt was gon
To seint Denis is comen Dan John
With croune and berde al fresh & newe ischaue
In al this house, there nas so litell a knaue
Ne no wight els, but he was ful faine
For ỳ my lord Dan John was comen againe
And shortely to the pointe for to gon
This faire wife accordeth with Dan John
That for these. C. frankes he should al night
Haue her in his armes bolte vpright
And this acorde parformed was in dede
In mirthe al night a bely life they lede
Til it was day, that Dan John yede his way
And bad the meine farwel & haue good day
For non of hem, ne no wight in the toun
Had of Dan John any suspectioun
And forth he rideth, home to his abbey
Or where him liste, no more of him I sey.

This marchaunt, when ended was ỳ faire
To saint Denis he gan for to repaire
And with his wife he maketh feest and cher
And telleth her that the chaffare is so dere
That nedes must he make a cheuesaunce
For he was bonden in a reconysaunce
To paie twenty thousande shildes anon
For which this Marchant is to Paris gon
To borow of certaine frendes that he had A certain frankes, and som with him he lad
And when he was comen in to the toun
For chierte and great affeccioun
Unto Dan John he first gothe him to pley
Nought for to borowe of him no money
But for to wete and se of his welfare
And for to tellen him of his chaffare
As frendes don, when they ben mette in fere

Dan John him maketh feest & mery cher
And he him tolde ayen full specially
How he had bought, ful wel and graciously Thonked be God, all hole his Marchaundise
Saue that he muste in all maner wise
Maken a cheuesaunce, as for his beste
And then should he be in ioy and reste
Dan John answerd, certes I am right faine
That ye in heale be comen home again
And if I were riche, as haue I blisse
Of twēty thousand shildes should ye not miss
For ye so kindely, this other day
Lent me golde, and as I can and may
I thonke you, by God and by saint Jame
But natheles, I toke it vnto our dame
Your wife at home, the same golde againe
Upon your benche, she wote it wel certaine
By certaine tokens, that I can her tell
Now by your leue, I may no lenger dwell
Our abbot wol out of this toun anon,
And in his company I mote gon
Grete wel our dame, mine owne nece swete
And farewell dere cosin, till we mete.

This Marchant that was ful ware & wise
Creaunced hath, and eke paide in Paris
To certaine lombardes, redy in her hondes
This sōme of golde, & gate of hem the bondes
And home he goth, as mery as a popingay
For wel he knewe he stode in suche aray
That nedes must he win by that viage
A thousande frankes, aboue all his costage.

His wife ful redy mete him at the yate
As she was wonte, of olde vsage algate
And al that night in mirth thei be lette
For he was riche, and clerely out of dette
Whā it was day, this marchaūt gan embrace
His wife al newe, and kissed her in her face
And vp he goeth, and made it wonder tough
No more (quod she) by God ye haue ynough
And wantonly ayen with him she plaide

Till

Til at the laste this marchaunt thus saide.
By God (q he) I am a litel wrothe
With you my wife, although it be me lothe
And wote ye why? by God as I gesse
For ye haue made a maner of straungenesse
Betwirt me and my cosin Dan John
Ye should haue warned me, or I had gon
That he had you an hundred frankes paide
By redy token, and helde him euill apaide
For that I to him spake of cheuesaunce
Me semed so, as by his countenaunce
But natheles, by God our heuen king
I thought not to aske of him nothing
I praie the wife, ne do no more so
Tell me alwayer that I fro the go
If any dettour, hath in mine absence
Paide the, lest through thy negligence
I might him aske a thing that he hath paide
This wife was not a ferde ne affraide
But boldely she saide, and that anon
Mary I defie that false monke Dan John
I kepe not of his tokens neuer a dele
He toke me certaine golde, I wote it wele
What euill the dome on his monkes snoute
For God it wote, I wende without doute
That he had yeue it me, bicause of you
To don therwith mine honour and my prow
For cosinage, and eke for belle chere
That he hath had ful often times here
But sithe I se it stonte in suche disioynte
I wol answere you shortely to the pointe
Ye haue mo slacke dettours than am I
For I wol paie you well and redely
Fro day to daie, and if so be I faile
I am your wife, score it on my taile
Or els I shall paie it as sone as euer I may
For by my trueth, I haue on mine aray
And not in waste, bestowed it euery dele
And for I haue bestowed it so wele
To your honour, for goddes sake I say
As be not wrothe but let vs laugh and playe
Ye shall my ioly body haue to wedde
By God I nil not pay you but a bedde
For yeue it me, mine owne spouse dere
Turneth hither ward, and make better chere
This marchant sawe ther was no remedy
And for to chide, it was but a foly Sithen that the thing may not amended be Now wife he said, and I forgeue it the
But in thy life, be no more so large
Kepe bet my good, this yeue I the in charge
Thus endeth nowe my tale, and God vs sende
Caling inough, vnto our liues ende.

Here endeth the Shipmans tale.

Here foloweth the wordes of our Hoste.

Well said by corpus domini (q our Hoste)
Nowe longe mote thou saile by the coste
Thou gentil maister, gentil marinere
God giue the wōke a thousande last quad yere
A ha felowes, beware of suche a tape
The mōke put in the marchātes hode an ape
And in his wiues eke, by saint Austin
Draweth no monkes more into your inne
But now passe ouer, and let vs seke aboute
Who shall tel now first of all this route
Another tale, and with that worde he saide
As curtesly, as it had ben a maide.
My lady prioresse, by your leue
So that I wist that I shuld you not greue
I wolde me, that ye tellen sholde
A tale nexte, if so be that ye wolde
Now wol ye vouchsafe, my lady dere
Gladly (q she) and said in this maner.

Here endeth the wordes of our hoste, and here beginneth the Prioresses prologue.

Domine dominus noster: quam admirabile est nomen tuum in vniuersa terra.

Lorde our lorde, thy name how merueilous
Is in this wide worlde ispraad (q she)
For not only thy laude precious
Parfourmed is, by men of diginite
But by the mouthe of children thy bounte
Parfourmed is, for on the breest sucking
Somtime shewen thei thine heriyng.

Wherfore in laude, as I can best and may
Of the and of the white lilly floure
Whiche that thei bare, and is a maide alwayr
To tellen a storie, I wol do my laboure
Nought that I may encrese her honoure
For she her selfe is honour and rote
Of bountie, next her sonne, of soules bote.

O Mother maiden, O maiden & mother free
O bushe vnbrent, brenning in Moyses sight
That rauishedest downe fro the deite
Through thin hūblesse, the goost ỹ in the light
Of whose vertue, when he in thin hert pight

The Prioresses tale,

Conceiued was the fathers sapience
Helpe me to tel it in thy presence.

Lady thy bounte, and thy magnificence
Thy vertue and thy great humilite
There may no tonge expresse, in no science
For sometime lady, er men praie to the Thou goest before, of thy benignite
And gettest vs the light through thy prayere
To giden vs vnto thy sonne so dere.

My conning is to weake, O blisful quene
For to declare thy highe worthinesse
That I ne may the weight sustene
But as a childe of twelue moneth old or lesse
That can vnnethes any worde expresse
Right so fare I, and therfore I you pray
Gideth my songe, that I shal of you say.

Here endeth the Prioresses prologue, and here foloweth her tale.

THere was in Asie, in a greate cite
Amonges christen folke a iewrie
Sustened by a lorde of that countre
For foule vsury, and lucre of villany
Hateful to Christ, and to his company
And through the strete mē might ride or wēde
For it was fre, and open at euery ende.

A litel schole of Christen folke there stode Doun at ỹ farther ende, in whiche ther were Children an hepe, comen of Christen blode
That lerned in that schole, yere by yere
Such manere doctrine, as men vsen here
This is to say, to singe and to rede
As smale children done in her childehede

Amōges these childrē was a wedowes son
A litel clergion, that. vii. yere was of age
That day by day to schole was his won
And also eke, where he sey the image
Of Christes mother, had he in vsage
As him was taught, to knele a doun and say
An Aue maria, as he goth by the way.

Thus hath this wedow, her litel child itaught
Our blisful lady, Christes mother dere
To worship aye, and he forgate it naught
For the sely childe, would al day sone lere
But aye, whan I remēbre me on this matere
Saint Nicholas stōdeth euer in my presence
For he so yonge to Christ did reuerence

This litel childe his litel boke lerning
As he sate in the schole at his primere
Ye (Alma redemptoris mater) herd sing
As children lered her antiphonere
And as he durst, he drewe aye nere and nere
And herkened to the wordes and the note
Til he the first verse couth al by rote.

Nouȝt wist he what this latin was to say
For he so yonge and tender was of age
But on a day his felowe gan he pray
To expoune him the song, in his langage
Or telle him why this song was in vsage
This praide he him to construe and declare
Ful ofte time, vpon his knees bare

His felowe, which that elder was than he Answerd him thus, this songe I haue herd say was made of oure blessed lady fre
Her to salewe, and eke her for to prey
To den our helpe, and succour when we dey
I can no more expoune in this matere
I lerne songe, I can but smal grammere

And is this songe made in reuerence
Of Christes mother, said this innocent?
Now certes I wol done my diligence
To conne it al er Christenmasse be went Though that I for my primer shal be shent
And should be beten thrise in an houre
I wol it conne, our lady to honoure.

His felaw taught him homwarde prively
Fro day to day, til he couthe it by rote
And than he songe it wel and boldely
Fro worde to worde, acording to the note
Twise a day it passeth through his throte
To scole warde, & homeward when he went On Christes mother set was all his entent

As I haue saide throughout the iewrie
This litel childe as he came to and fro
Ful merely than would he singe and crye
O Alma redemptoris mater, euer mo
The swetenesse hath his herte perced so
Of Christes mother, that to her to pray
He can not stinte of singing by the way

Our first foe, the Serpent Sathanas
That hath in Jewes hert his waspes nest
Up swale and said, O ebrayke people alas

Is this a thing to you that is honeste
That suche a boy shal walke as him leste
In your dispite, and singen of suche sentence
Whiche is against your lawes reuerence

From thence forth, the Iewes han conspired
This innocent out of this worlde to chase
An homicide therto han thei hired
That in an aley, had a priuy place
And as the childe gan forby to pace
This cursid Iewe him hent, and helde faste
And cutte his throte, and in a pitte him caste

I say that in a wardrope thei him threwe
Where that the Iewes purged her intraile
O cursid folke, of herodes all newe
What may your yuel entent you auaile
Murder wol out, certes it woll not faile
And namely ther ỹ honor of God shal sprede
The bloud out crieth on your cursid dede

O mater, sowned vnto virginite
Now maiste thou sing folowinge euer in on The white lambe celestiall (q he)
Of whiche the great euangeliste seint John
In Pathmos wrote, which saith ỹ they gon
Before this lambe, and sing a songe al newe
That neuer flesshly woman thei ne knewe.

This pore widowe, awaiteth al the night
After her litell childe, and he came nought
For whiche as soone as it was day light
With face pale for drede and busy thought
She hath at scole, and els where him sought
Til finally, she gan so farre aspie
That he was laste seine in the Iewrie

With mothers pite, in her breste enclosed
She goth as she wer halfe out of her minde
To euery place, where she hath supposed
By likelihode her childe for to finde
And euer on Christes mother, meke and kinde
She cried, and at last thus she wrought
Among the cursid Iewes she him sought

She freneth and she praieth pitously
To euery Iewe that dwelleth in thilke place
To tellen her, if her childe went there by They say nay, but Jesu of his grace yaue in her thought, within a litell space
That in that place, after her sonne she criede
Where he was caste, in a pitte beside.

O great God, that performist thy laude
By mouthe of innocence, lo here thy might
This Iemme of chastite, this Emeraude
And eke of martirdome the rubie bright
There he with throte icorue lay vpright
He (Alma redemptoris) gan to singe
So loude that all the place gan to ringe

The christen folke, ỹ through the strete went
In comen, for to wonder on this thing
And hastely thei for the Prouost sent
He came anone, without tarieng
And herieth Christ, that is of heuen king
And eke his mother, honoure of mankinde
And after that, the Iewes let he binde

This childe with pitous lamentacion
Was vp taken, singing his songe alway
And with honoure, and great procession
Thei carien him to the nerte abbey
His mother sowning by the bere lay
Vnneth might people that were there
This newe Rachell bring fro his bere.

With turment ỹ with shamfull deth ilke one
This Prouost doth these Iewes for to sterue
That of this murdre wiste, and that anone
He nolde no suche cursidnesse obserue yuel shal he haue, that iuel wol deserue
Therfore with wild horse he did hem drawe
And after warde he honge him by the lawe.

Vpon his bere aye, lieth this innocent
Before the chefe aulter, whiles ỹ masse last
And after that, the abbot with his couent
Hem spedde, for to bury him als faste
And when they holy water on him caste yet spake ỹ child, whē sprint was holy water
And songe, O alma redemptoris mater

This abbot, which that was an holy man
As monkes ben, or els ought to be
This yonge childe to couer he began
And saide: O dere childe, I hailse the
By vertue of the holy Trinite
Tell me what is thy cause for to sing
Sithens thy throte is cutte to my seming.

My throte is cutte, vnto my nekke bone
Said this childe, as by way of kinde
I shoulde haue deyde, ye longe time agone
But Jesu Christ, as ye in bokes finde
Wol that his glory laste and be in minde
And for the worship of his mother dere yet may I sing (O alma) loude and clere.

This wel of mercy, Christes mother swete

The Prioresses tale.

I loued alway, as after my conning
And when that I my life should forlete
To me she came, and badde me for to sing
This antem verely in my dying
As ye han herde, and when that I had songe
Me thought she layd a graine vpon my tonge

Wherfore I sing, and sing mote certaine
In honour of the blisful maiden fre
Til fro my tonge of taken is the graine
And after that, thus she said to me
My litle childe, nowe wol I fetche the
When that the graine is fro thy tong itake
Be not agaste, I wol the not forsake,

This holy monke, this abbot him mene I
His tōge out caught, and toke away the grayne
And he yaue vp the goste ful softly
And when this abbot had this wonder seyne
His salte teres trikled doune as reyne
And groffe he fel all flate to the grounde
And stil he lay, as he had ben ibounde.

The couent lay eke vpon the pament
Weping and heriyng Christes mother dere
And after that thei risen, and forth ben went
And toke away this martir fro the bere
And in a tombe of marble stones clere
Enclosen they his litle body swete
There he is now, God lene vs for to mete.

O yonge Hewe of Lincoln slaine also With cursid Iewes, as it is notable
For it is but a litel while ago
Praie eke for vs, we sinful folke vnstable
That of his mercy, God be merciable
On vs, his great mercy multiply
For the reuerence of his mother Mary.

¶ Here endeth the Prioresse tale. And here foloweth the wordes of the Hoste to Chaucer.

When said was this miracle, euery man
As sobre was, as wonder was to se
Till that our hoste to japen began
And than at erste, he loked vpon me
And said thus: what man arte thou (q he)
Thou lokest, as thou wouldest finde an hare
For euer vpon the grounde I se the stare

Approche nere, and loke vp merely
Now ware you sirs, and let this mā haue place
He in the waste is shapen as wel as I
This were a popet in armes to embrace
For any woman, smale and faire of face
He semeth elriche by his countenaunce
For vnto no wight dothe he daliaunce

Say now sōwhat, sithēs other folke han said
Tel vs a tale of mirthe and that anon
Hoste (q he) ne be not euil apaide
For other tale certes can I none
But of a rime, I lerned yore agone
Ye that is good (q he) we shullen it here
Som deinte thing, me thinketh by thy chere.

¶ Here endeth the wordes of the Hoste and here foloweth the rime of sir Thopas.

Listeneth lordinges in good intent
And I wol tell verament
Of Mirthe and of solas
All of a knight was faire and gent
In batayle and in turnament
His name was sir Thopas.
I borne he was in ferre countre
In Flaunders, al beyonde the see
At Popering in the place.
His father was a man ful fre
And a lorde he was of that countre
As it was goddes grace.
Sir Thopas was a doughty swaine
White was his face as paine maine
His lippes reed as rose
His rudde is like scarlet in graine
And I you tell in good certaine
He had a semely nose.
His heer, his berde was like safroun
That to his girdel raught adoun
His shone of cordewane.
Of Bruges were his hosen broun
His robe was of chekelatoun
That cost many a iane
He couthe hunt at the wilde dere
And ride an hauking for by the riuere
With grey gosshake on honde
Therto he was a good archere
Of wrastling was there none his pere
There any Ram should stonde.
Full many a maide bright in boure
They mourne for him paramoure
Whan hem were bet to slepe.

But

But he was chast, and no lechoure
And swete as is the Bramble floure
That beareth the redde hipe.
And so befell vpon a daie
Forsoth, as I you tell maie
Sir Thopas would out ride.
He worth vpon his stede graie
And in his honde a launce gaie
Long sworde by his side.
He pricketh through a faire forest
Therein was many a wilde beest
Ye bothe Buche and Hare.
And as he priched North and Este
I tell you, him had almeste
Betide a sorie care.
There springen herbes greate and small
The Licores and the Setuall
And many a clowe Gelofer
And Nutmuges, to put in ale whither it be newe or stale
Or for to lie in cofer.
The birdes singen, it is no naie
The Sperhauke and the Popingaie
That ioie it was to here.
The Throstell che made his laie
The Wodcocke vpon the spraie
She song full loude and clere.
Sir Thopas fell in loue longing
And whan he heard the Throstill sing
He pricketh as he were wood
His faire stede in his pricking
So swette, that men might him wring
His sides were all blood.
Sir Thopas eke so wearie was
For pricking on the soft graas
So fiers was his corage
That doune he laied him in that place
To maken his stede some solace
And gaue him good forage.
Oh, sainct Mary, benedicite
What aileth this loue at me
To binde me so sore?
Me dreamed all this night parde
An elfe quene shall my lemman be
And slepe vnder my gore.
An Elfe Quene will I loue i wis
For in this worlde no woman is Worthy to be my make in toune
All other women I forsake
And to an Elfe Quene I me take
By dale and eke by doune.
Into his sadell he clombe anone
And pricked ouer stile and stone
An Elfe Quene for to espie.
Till he so long hath ridden and gone
That he fonde in a priuie wone
The countre of Fairie. So wilde
For in that countre nas there none
Neither wife ne childe
Till him there came a great Giaunt
His name was called sir Oliphaunt
A perillous man of deede.
He said childe, by Termagaunt
But if thou prike out of my haunt
Anon I slea thy stede with mace.
Or euer I go out of this place
Here is the Quene of Fairie.
With Harpe and Pipe, and Simphonie
Dwelling in this place.
The child said, als so mote I thee
To morowe will I meten thee whan I haue mine armoure.
And yet I hope par ma foie
That thou shalt with this launce gaie
Abien it full sore: Through thy mawe
Shall I perce, if I maie
Or it be fully prime of the daie
For here thou shalt be slawe.
Sir Thopas drowe abacke full fast
This Giaunt at him stones cast
Out of a full stalke sling.
But faire escaped sir Thopace
And all was through Gods grace
And through his faire bering.
Yet listeneth lordinges to my tale.
Merier than the Nightingale
For now I will ye roune.
How sir Thopas, with sides smale
Pricking ouer doune and dale
Is comen ayen to toune.
His merry men commaunded he
To maken him bothe game and gle
For nedes must he fight.
With a Giaunt, with heddes three
For paramoures and iolite
Of one that shone full bright.
Doe come he said my minstrales
And iestors, for to tellen vs tales
Anon in mine arming.
Of Romaunces that been roials
Of Popes and of Cardinals
And eke of loue longing.
They set him first the swete wine
And Meede eke in a Mazeline
And roiall spicerie.
Of Ginger bread that was full fine
Of Licores and eke Comine with Suger that is trie.
He did next his white lere
Of cloth of lake fine and clere

The rime of sir Thopas.

A breche and ehe a sherte.
And nert his shert an haketon
And ouer that an haberion
For percing of his herte.
And ouer that a fine hauberke
Was all iwrought of Jewes werke
Full strong it was of plate.
And ouer that his cote armoure
As white as is the Lilly floure
In whiche he would debate.
His shilde was all of gold so redde
And therin was a Bores hedde
A carbocle by his side.
And there he swore on ale and bread
How that the Giaunt should be dead
Betide what betide.
His iambeux were of cure buly
His sword the bet the of Jurie
His helme of Laton bright.
His sadell was rof ruel bone
His bridle as the Sunne shone
Or as the Moone light.
His speare was of fine Sypres
That biddeth warre, and nothing peace
The hedde full sharpe igrounde.
His stede was all dapple graie
Ye goth an aumble by the waie
Full softly and round in londe.
Lo Lordes mine, here is a fit
If ye woll any more of it
To tellen it woll I fonde.

NOw hold your mouth for charite
Bothe knight and Ladie fre
And herkeneth to my spell.
Of battaile and of cheualrie
And of Ladies loue drerie
Anon I woll you tell.
Men speken of Romaunces of pris
Of Horne child, and of Ipotis
Of Beuis, and of sir Gie
Of sir Libeaus, and Blaindamoure
But sir Thopas, he beareth the floure
Of riall cheualrie.
His good stede he bestrode
And forth vpon his waie glode
As sparke out of the bronde.
Upon his creste he bare a toure
And therin sticked a Lilly floure
God shilde his cors fro shonde.
And for he was a knight auentrous
He nolde slepen in none hous
But ligge in his hood.
His bright helme was his wanger
And by him fedde his destrer
Of herbes fine and good.
Himself dronke water of the well
As did the knight sir Perciuell
So worthy vnder wede.

Here endeth the rime of sir Thopas, and beginneth the wordes of our Hoste.

NO more of this for Goddes dignite
(quod our hoste) for thy makest me
So wery of thy very leudenes
That alle wit my God my soule blesse

Ifter the whiche, this merie tale I write
And therefore herheneth, what I shall saie
And let me tell my tale I you praie.

Here endeth the wordes of our hoste, and here beginneth Chaucers Tale of Melibeus.

A yong manne called Melibeus, mightie and riche, begate vpon his wife that called was Prudence, a doughter which that called was Sophie.

Upon a daie bifell that he for his disport is went into the feldes him to plaie: His wife and eke his doughter hath he lefte within his hous, of whiche the dores were faste ishet. Foure of his old foes han it aspied, and setten ladders to the walles of his hous, and by the windowes been entred, and bet his wife, and wounded his doughter, with fiue mortall woundes, in fiue sondrie places: That is to saie, in her feete, in her hondes, in her eares, in her nose, and in her mouthe, and lefte her for ded, and wenten her waie.

Whan Melibeus retourned was into his hous, and see all this mischief, he like a mad man renting his clothes, gan to wepe & crie.

Prudence his wife, as ferforth as she durst besought him of his weping for to stint: But not for thy, he gan to wepe and crie euer lenger the more.

This noble wife Prudence remembred her vpon the sentence of Ouide, in his boke that cleped is the remedy of loue, wher as he saith he is a foole that disfourbeth the mother to wepe, in the death of her childe, till she haue wepte her fill, as for a certain time: and than shall a man doen his diligence with amiable wordes, to recomfort and praie her of her weping for to stinte. For whiche reason this noble wife Prudence, suffered her husbande to wepe and crie, as for a certain space: and whā she saw her time, she saied him in this wise. Alas my Lorde (q she) why make ye your self for to be like a foole? For soth it apperteineth not vnto a wise manne, to maken soche a sorowe. your doughter with the grace of God, shall warisshe and escape. And all were it so that she right now were ded, ye ne ought not as for her death your self distroy. Seneca saith the wise manne shall not take to greate discomfort for the death of his children, but certes he should suffre it in patiēce, as well as he abideth the death of his owne proper person.

This Melibeus answerde anon and said: what man (q he) should of his weping stint, that hath so great a cause for to wepe: Jesus himself our Lord, wepte for the death of Lazarus his frende. Prudence answered, certes well I wot, a temperate weping is nothing defended, to him that sorowfull is, emonge folke in sorow, but it is rather graunted him to wepe. The Apostle Poule vnto the Romanes writeth, menne should reioice with him that maketh ioie, and wepe with soche folke as wepen. But though a temperate weping be graunted, certes outragious weping is defended. Measure of weping should be considered, after the lore that teacheth vs Seneca, whan that thy frende is dedde (q he) let not thin yen to moiste been of teeres, ne to moch drie: although teeres comen to thine yen, let hem not fal. And whan thou hast forgon thy frende, doe diligence to get an other frende: and this is more wisedome than for to wepe for thy frende, whiche thou hast lorne, for therein is no bote. And therfore if ye gouerne you by sapiēce, put away sorowe out of your harte. Remembreth you that Jesus Sirake saieth, a man that is ioious and glad in hart it him conserueth florishing in his age: But sothely a sorowfull harte maketh his bones drie. He saieth eke thus, that sorowe in harte slaeth full many a manne. Salomon saieth, that right as moughthes in the shepes fleise anoieth the clothes, and the smale wormes the tree, right so anoieth sorowe the harte of man, wherfore vs ought as well in the death of our children, as in the lose of our temporall goodes, haue pacience.

Remember you vpon pacient Jobe, whan he had lost his children and his temporalle substaunce, and in his body endured and receiued full many a greuous tribulacion, yet saied he thus: Our Lorde it sente to me, our Lorde hath biraft it me, right so as our lorde would, right so it be don, iblessed be the name of our Lorde. To these forsaied thinges Melibeus vnto his wife Prudence answerde: All thy wordes (q he) been true, and they profitable, but truly mine harte is troubled with this sorowe so greuously, that I not what to do. Let call (q Prudence) your true frendes all and thy linage, whiche that been wise, & tell eth to hem your case, & herheneth what they saie in counsailing, and gouern you after her sētēce. Salomō saith, werke al thy things by counsaile.

counsaile, and thou shalt neuer rue. Than by counsaile of his wife Prudence, this Melibeus, let cause a greate congregacion of people, as Surgiens, Physicions, olde folke and young, and some of his olde enemies reconciled as by her semblante to his loue and to his grace: and therwithal there came sum of his neighbours, that did him reuerence more for dreade than for loue, as it happe ofte.

There comen also full many subtill flatterers, and wise Aduocates lerned in the lawe. And whan these folkes togeders assembled were, this Melibeus in sorowfull wise, shewed hem his case, and by the maner of his speache, it semed that in harte, he bare a cruell ire, redy to doen vengeaunce vpon his foos and sodainly he desired that warre should begin, but natheielle yet asked he counsaile vpon this matter. A Surgien by licence and assente of soche as were wise vp rose, and vnto Melibeus saied, as ye shall heare.

Sir (q he) as to vs Surgiens appartaineth, that we do to euery wight the best that we can, where as wee been withholden, and to our paciente that wee dooen no damage: wherfore it happeth many time and oft, that whan two men haue eueriche wounded other, one Surgien healeth hem bothe, wherfore vnto our art it is not pertinent to norish warre, ne parties to supporte. But certes, as to the warishing of your doughter, al be it so that perilously she bee wounded, we shall doe so tentife busines fro daie to night, that w the grace of GOD, she shall been whole and sounde, as sone as is possible. Almoste right in the same wise the Phisiciens aunswerde, saue that thei saiden a fewe woordes more: That right as maladies been by her contraries cured, right so shall man warishe warre by peace. His neighbours full of enuie, his fained frendes that semed reconciled, and his flatterers, maden semblaūce of weping, and empaired and agrutched moche of this matter, in praising greatly Melibe, of might, of power, of richesse, and of frēdes, dispising the power of his aduersaries: and saied vtterly, that he anon should wreken him on his foos, and begin warre.

Up rose than an Aduocate that was wise, by lerne and by counsaile of other that were wise, and saied: The nede for the whiche we been assembled in this place, is full heauie thing, & a great matter, bicause of the wrong and of the wickednesse that hath be doen, and etc by reason of great damages, that in time comming been possible to fallen for the same and eke by reason of the great riches and power of the parties bothe, for the whiche reasons, it wer a full great perill to erren in this matter. Wherfore, Melibeus this is our sentence, we counsaile you aboue al thing, that right anon thou doe thy diligence, in keping of thy proper person, in such a wise that thou ne wante none espie ne watche, thy body for to saue: And after that, we counsaile that in thine hous thou set sufficient garrison, so that thei maie as well thy bodie as thy hous defende: but certes to mouen warre, or to doen sodainly vengeaunce, we maie not deme in so little time, that it were profitable, wherfore we aske leiser and space, to haue deliberacion in this case to deme, for the commō prouerbe saith thus: He that sone demeth sone shall repent. And eke men sain, thilke Judge is wise that sone vnderstondeth a matter, & iudgeth by leiser: For all be it tarying bee noisull, algate it is not to be reproued in yeuing of iudgement, ne in vengeaunce taking, whan it is sufficiente and reasonable. And that shewed our lorde Jesu Christ by ensample, for whan the woman was taken in auoutrie, and was brought in his presens to knowē what shuld bee doen of her persone, all be it that he wist well himself what he would answere, yet nolde he not answere sodenly, but he would haue deliberaciō, and in the ground he wrote wise, and by this cause we aske deliberacion: and we shal thā by the grace of god counsaile you that thing that shall be profitable.

Up sterte than the yong folke at ones, and the most part of that companie haue shoned this olde wise man, and begon to make noise and said. Right so as whiles that iron is hot men should smite, right so men should wrēke her wronges while that thei been freshe and newe, and with loude voice thei cried, warre. warre. Up rose the one of the olde wise, and with his hond made countenaunce that thei should holden [illegible] stil, & yeuen him audiēce. Lo[illegible] there is ful many a man that crieth [illegible] warre, that wote full litle what warre [illegible] meneth. Warre at his beginning hath so greate an entring and so large, that euery wight maie enter whā him liketh and lightly find warre: but certes what ende thereof shall fall, it is not lightly to knowe. whan that warre is ones begon, there is full many a child vnborn of his mother [illegible] that shall sterue yong, bicause of thilke warre, other elles liue in sorowe, or dien in wretchednesse: And therefore or that any warre be bigon, menne must haue greate counsaile and good delibe-racion. And whan this old manne wende to enforcen his tale by reson, well nie al at ones bigon for to rise, for to breaken his tale, and bidden him full ofte his woordes to abregge: for certes he that preacheth to hem that ilste not to heare his wordes, his sermon hem an-noieth. For Jesus Sirake saieth, the weping in Mushe is a noious thinge. This is as moche to saie, as moche auaileth it to speake bifore folke to whiche his speache anoieth, as it is for to singen bifore hem that wepe. And whan this wise mā. saw that him wan-ted audience, all shamfast he set him adoun a-gen. For Salomon saith: there as thou maist not haue audience, enforce thee not to speake I le well (q this wilemam) that the common prouerbe is sothe, that good counsaile wan-teth, whan it is moste nede.

Yet hadde this Melibeus in his counsaile many folke, that priuely in his eare counsai-led him certain thinges, and counsailed him the contrary in generall audience. whā Me-libeus had heard that the greatest part of his counsaile, were accorded that he should make warre, anon he consented to her counsailing and fully affirmed her sentence. Than dame Prudence, what that she sawe her husbonde hope him, for to awreke him on his enemies, and to begin warre: she in full humble wise, whan she sawe her time, saied to him these woordes. My Lorde (q she) I you beseche as hartly as I dare or can, ne hast you not to fast and for all guerdons yeue me audience. For Peter Alphons saieth. who so doeth to thee good or harme, hast thee not to quite it, for in this wise thy frend wol abide, and thine ene-mie shall the lenger liue in dreade. The Pro-uerbe saieth, he hasteth well that wisely can abide: And in wicked hast is no profite.

This Melibe answerd to his wife Pru-dence: I purpose not (q he) to werke by thy counsaile, for many causes and reasons, for certes euery wighte would holde me than a foole. This is to saie, if I for thy counsailing would chaunge thinges that been ordained and affirmed by so many wise. Secondely, I saie that all women been wicked, and none good of hem al. For of a thousande men saith Salomon, I fonde one good man: but certes, of all women founde I neuer non. And also certes, if I gouerned me by thy counsaile, it should seme that I had yeue thee ouer me the maistrie: and God forbid that it so were. For Jesus Sirake saieth, that if the wife haue maistrie, she is contrarious to her husbonde. And Salomon saieth. Neuer in thy life, to thy wife, ne to thy childe, ne to thy frende, ne yeue no power ouer thy self. for better it wer that thy children, aske of thy thinges that hem nedeth, than thy self to be in the handes of thy children. And also if I woll werche by thy counsaile, certes my cousaile must be som time secrete, till it were time that it must bee knowen: and this ne maie not be, if I should be counsailed by thee. whan dame Prudence full debonairly and with great patience, had heard all that her husbonde liked for to saie, thā asked she of him licence for to speake, and saied in this wise. My lorde (q she) as to your first reson, it maie lightly been answerd. For I saie that it is no folie to chaunge counsaile whan the thing is chaunged, or els whā the thing semeth otherwise than it semed afore. And moreouer I saie, though that ye haue sworne and behight to performe your empryse, and by iust cause ye doe it not: men should not saie therfore ye wer a lier and forsworne. For the boke saith, that the wise man maketh no lesing, whan he tourneth his corage for the better. And albeit that your empryse bee esta-blished, and ordeined by greate multitude of folke, yet dare you not accomplisshe thilke or-dinance but you liketh: for the trouth of thin-ges, and the profite been rather founden in fewe folke that been wise and full of reason, than by great multitude of folke, there euery man crieth and clattereth what him liketh: sothly soche multitude is not honest. And as to the second reason, where as ye saie, that al women been wicked: saue your grace. Certes ye displise al women in this wise, and he that al displiseth, as saith the boke, al displeaseth. And Senecke saieth, that who so woll haue sapience, shall no man dispraise, but he shall gladly teach the science that he can, without presumpcion or pride: and soche thinges as he nought ne cā, he shall not been a shamed to learne hem, and to enquire of lesse folke than himself. And that ther hath ben many a good woman, maie lightly be proued: for certes sir our lorde Jesu Christ nolde neuer han descen-ded to be borne of a woman, if al women had be wicked. And after that, for the great bonte that is in womē. our lorde Jesu Christ, whan he was risen fro death to life, appered rather to a woman, thā to his Apostles. And though that Salomon saied, he fonde neuer wo-men good, it folowth not therefore that all women be wicked: for though ỳ he ne founde no good woman, certes many an other man hath founde many a woman full good and true. Or elſe paraventure the entente of Salomon was this, that in ſouerain bounte he found no woman, this is to ſay: that there is no wight that hath parfite bounte ſaue god alone, as he himſelf recordeth in his Euangelie. For there nis no creature ſo good, that him ne wanteth ſom what of the perfeccō of God that is his maker. Your third reaſon is this, ye ſay that if that ye gouerne you by my counſaile, it ſhould ſeme that ye had reue me the maiſtrie and the lordſhip of your perſon. Sir ſaue your grace it is not ſo, for if ſo were that no man ſhould bee counſailed but onely of hem that han lordſhip and maiſtrie of his perſone, men nolde not be counſailed ſo ofte. For ſothly thilke man that aſketh counſaile of a purpoſe, yet hath he fre will whither he woll doe after that counſaile or non. And as to your fourth reaſon, there as he ſaine that the ſāgierie of women can hide thinges that thei wote not, as who ſo ſaieth, that a womā can not hide that ſhe wote. Sir, theſe wordes been vnderſtonde of women that been iangelers and wicked, of whiche women men ſain that thre thinges driuen a manne out of his hous, that is to ſaie, ſmoke, dropping of rain, and wicked wiues. And of ſuche women Salomon ſaieth, that a man were better dwell in deſerte, than with a woman that is riotous. And ſir by your leaue it am not I, for ye haue ful oft aſſaied my great ſiſte and my greate pacience, and eke how well that I can hide and heale thinges, that men oughten ſecretly to hiden. And ſothly as to your fift reaſon, where as ye ſaie that in wicked counſail women vanquiſhe men: God wot that thilke reſon ſtant here in no ſtede: for vnderſtondeth now ye aſſen counſaile for to doe wickednes: And if ye would werken wickednelle, & your wife reſtraineth thilke wicked purpoſe, and ouercome you by reaſon and by good counſail, certes your wife ought rather to be praiſed than blamed. Thus ſhould ye vnderſtond the Philoſopher that ſaieth, in wicked counſaile women venqueſhe her huſbondes. And there as ye blame al women and her reaſōs, I ſhall ſhewe you by many enſamples, that many women haue be ful good, and yet been, and her counſaile wholſome and profitable. Eke ſome men han ſaied, that the counſaile of women is either to dere, or to little worth. But albeit ſo that full many women be bad, and her counſaile vile and nought worth, yet han menne found full many a good woman, and full diſcrete and wiſe in counſailing. Lo Jacob through the counſaile of his mother Rebeche, wan the benilon of his father, and the Lordſhip of all his brethern. Judith throwe her good counſaile, deliuered the cite of Bethulie, in whiche ſhe dwelt, out of the hond of Holofern that had it all beſieged, & would haue deſtroied it. Abigaile deliuered Nabal her huſbond, fro Dauid the king, that would haue ſlaine him, and appeaſed the ire of the king by her wit, and by her good counſaile. Heſter by her coūſaile enhaunced greatly the people of God, in the reigne of Aſſuerus the king. And the ſame bountie in good counſailing of many a good woman male men rede and tell. And furthermore, whan that our Lorde had created Adam our former father, he ſaied in this wiſe: It is not good to been manne alone: make we an helper to him ſelf ſemblable. Here male ye ſee that if that women were not good, and her counſaile good and profitable, our Lorde God of heauen nolde neither han wrought hem, ne called hem the helper of man, but rather confuſion to man. And there ſaied a clerke ones in two verſes, what is better than golde? Jaſper. what is better than Jaſper? Wiſedome. And what is better than wiſedome? Woman. And what is better than a good woman? That is a good man. And what is better than a good man? Nothing. And ſir, by many other reſons male ye ſeen, that many women been good, and eke her counſaile good and profitable. And therefore ſir, if that ye woll truſten my counſaile, I ſhall reſtore you your doughter hole and ſounde, and eke that I woll doe you ſo moche, that ye ſhall haue honour in this caſe.

Whan Melibe had heard the wordes of his wife Prudence, he ſaied thus. I ſee well that the wordes of Salomon be ſoth. For he ſaith the wordes that be ſpoken diſcretly by ordinaunce, been Honie combes, for thei yeuen ſwetneſſe to the ſoule, and holſomneſſe to the body. And wife becauſe of thy ſwete wordes and eke for I haue proued & aſſaied thy great ſapience and thy greate trouth: I woll gouerne me by thy counſaile in all thing.

Now ſir (q dame Prudence) and ſithens that ye vouchſafe to be gouerned by my counſaile, I woll enforme you how that ye ſhall gouerne your ſelf, in chooſing of your coūſellours. ye ſhall firſt in all your werke, meekly beſeching beſechyng to the hie God that he woulde be youre counſailour, and thayeth you to ſuche entent that he yeue you counſayle and comforte, as taughte Thobie his ſonne. At all times thou ſhalte bliſſe God, and praie him to dreſſe thy waies, and loke eke that thy counſailes been in him euer more. Saint James ſaieth, if anye man of you haue nede of ſapience, aſke it of God. And afterwarde, than ſhullen ye take counſaile in youre ſelfe, and examine well your owne thoughtes, of ſuche thinges as you thinken that been beſte for youre profite. And than ſhal ye driue fro your herte thinges that bee contrarious to good counſayle: that is to ſaye, ire, couetiſe, and ſlouthe.

Firſt he that aſketh counſaile of himſelfe, certes he muſte be withouten ire and wrath in himſelfe, for many cauſes. The firſte is this: He that hath great ire and wrath in himſelfe he weneth alwaye that he may doe thing that he may not do. And Secondly, he that is yrous and wrothful, he may not well deme: And he that maye not well deme, maye not well counſell. The thirde is this, he that is yrous and wroth, as ſaieth Seneke, maie not ſpeke but blameſull thinges, and with thilke vicious wordes he ſtirreth other folke to angre and to ire. And eke ſir ye muſte driue couetiſe out of your herte. For the Apoſtle ſaieth, that couetiſe is the rote of al harmes. And truſteth right well that a couetous man ne can not deme ne thinke but onely to fulfil the ende of his couetiſe: and certes that ne may neuer be accompliſhed, for euermore, the more habundaunce that he hath of richelles, the more he deſireth. And ſir ye muſte alſo driue oute of your hert haſtineſſe: For certes ye may not deme for ꝑ beſt a ſodaine thought that falleth in your herte, but ye muſte auiſe you on it full ofte: For as ye haue herde here biſore, the comen Prouerbe is this. He that ſone demeth, ſone repenteth.

Sir, ye ne be not alway in like diſpoſicion, for certes ſome thing that ſemeth ſomtime to you that is good for to do, an other time it ſemeth to you the contrarie.

And whan ye han taken counſaile in your ſelfe, and han demed by good deliberacion ſuche thing as you ſemeth beſte, than rede I you that ye kepe it ſecrete. Bewraye ye not your counſaile to no perſon, but if ſo be that ye wene ſikerly that through your bewraiynge, your condicion ſhall be to you the more profitable. For Jheſus Sirake ſaieth: neyther to thy foe ne to thy frende, diſcouer not thy ſecret, ne thy folie: for they woll yeue you audience and lokinge, and ſupportacion in your preſence, and ſcorne you in yor abſence. Another Clerke ſaieth, that ſcarſly ſhall you finde anie perſon that maye kepe counſayle ſecretly. The boke ſaieth, while that thou kepeſt thy counſaile in thine herte, thou kepeſt it in thy priſon: and whan thou bewrayeſt thy counſaile to anie wighte, he holdeth the in his snare. And therefore you is better to hide your counſaile in your hert, than to praie him to whome ye haue bewrayde your counſaile, that he woll kepe it cloſe ſtill. For Seneca ſaieth: If ſo be that thou maiſte not thine owne counſaile hide, howe darſte thou praie anie other wight thy counſaile ſecret to kepe. But natheleſſe if thou wene ſikerly that the bewraiynge of thy counſaile to a perſon wol make thy condicion ſtonde in the better plighte, than ſhalte thou tell him thy counſaile in this wiſe. Firſt thou ſhalte make no ſemblant whether the were leuer peace or warre, or this or that, ne ſhewe him not thy will ne thine entent: for truſte well that comenly theſe counſailours ben flatterers, namely the counſailours of great lordes, for they enforce hem alway rather to ſpeke pleaſaunt wordes enclinynge to the lordes luſte, than wordes that ben trew or profitable, and therfore men ſaye that the riche man hath ſelde good counſaile, but if he haue it of himſelfe. And after that thou ſhalt cõſider thy frendes and thine enemies. And as touchinge thy frendes, thou ſhalte conſider whiche of hem ben moſte faithfull and moſt wiſe, and eldeſt, and moſte approued in counſaillinge: and of hem ſhalt thou aſke thy counſaile, as the caſe requireth.

I ſay, that firſt ye ſhall call to your counſaile your frendes that ben trewe. For Salomon ſaieth: that right as the herte of a man deliteth in ſauoure that is ſote, right ſo the counſaile of trewe frendes yeueth ſweteneſſe to the ſoule. And he ſaieth alſo, there maye nothing be likened to the trewe frende: For certes golde ne ſiluer be not ſo muche worth as the good will of a trewe frende. And alſo he ſaith that a trew frẽde is a ſtrong defence, who ſo that it findeth hath a great treaſure. Than ſhall ye alſo conſider if that your true frendes be diſcrete & wiſe: for the boke ſaith, aſke alwaye thy counſaile of them that be wiſe. And by this ſame reaſon ſhall ye call to your counſaile your frendes that ben of age, ſuche as ſeme and ben expert in many thinges, and ben approued in counſailing. For the boke ſaieth, that in olde menne is ſapience, and in longe time the prudence. And Tullius ſaieth, that greate thinges ben not aye accompliſhed by ſtrength, ne by deliuernelle of body, but by counſaile, by auctorite of perſones, and by ſcience: the whiche thre thinges ne ben not feable by age, but certes they enforce and encreace daye by daye and than ſhall ye kepe this for a generall rule.

Firſte ſhall ye call to your counſayle a fewe of your frendes that ben eſpeciall. For Salomon ſaieth, many frendes haue thou, but amonge a thouſande chooſe thee one to be thy counſailour: For al be it ſo that thou firſte, ne tell thy Counſaile but to a fewe, thou mayſte afterwarde tell it to moe folke if it be nede. But loke alwaie that thy counſailers haue thoſe condicions that I haue ſayd before, that is to ſaie, that thei be trew, wiſe, and of olde experience. And werke not alway in euery nede by one Counſailer alone: for ſometime behoueth it to bee counſailed by manie. For Salomon ſaieth, ſaluacion of thinges is where as there be many counſayllers.

Nowe haue I tolde you of whiche folke ye ſhall be counſailed: nowe wol I tel you whiche counſaile ye ought to eſchue. Firſt ye ſhal eſchue the counſailinge of fooles. Salomon ſaith, take no counſaile of a foole: for he woll counſaile but after his owne luſt and his affeccion. The boke ſaith, that the propertie of a foole is this: He troweth lightly harme of euery man, and lightly troweth all bountie in himſelfe. Thou ſhalte eſchue the counſailing of all flatterers, which as enforcen hem rather to praiſe your perſon by flattery, than for to tell you the ſothfaſtneſſe of thinges. Wherefore, Tullius ſaieth, amonge all the peſtilence that ben in frendeſhip, the greateſt is flatery. And therfore it is more nede that thou eſchue and drede flaterers, than any other people. The boke ſaith, thou ſhalt rather flee fro the ſwete wordes of flateryng and praiſing, than fro the egre wordes of thy frendes that ſaith the ſothes. Salomō ſaith, that the wordes of a flaterer is a ſnare to catche innocence. He ſaith alſo, he that ſpeketh to his frende wordes of flaterie and of pleſaunce, he ſetteth a net before his fete to catche him. And therfore Tullius ſaith. Encline not thine eeres to flaterers, ne take no counſaile of flaterers. And Caton ſaieth. Truſte the well, & eſchue the wordes of ſwetenelle and of pleaſaunce. And eke thou ſhalte eſchue the counſailing of thine olde enemies that ben reconciled. The boke ſaith, that no wight returneth ſafelie into the grace of his olde enemie. And Eſope ſaith, ne truſt not to hem, to which thou haſt ſomtime had warre or enemite, ne tel hem not thy counſaile. And Seneke telleth the cauſe why it maye not be. for he ſaieth, there as greate fire hath longe time endured, that there dwelleth some vapoure of hete. And therfore ſaith Salomon. in thine olde foe truſte thou neuer. For ſikerly though thine enemy be reconciled, & make the ſigne of humilite, and loute to the with his heed, truſte him neuer: for certes he maketh thilke fained humilite more for his profite then for any humilite, or for any loue of thy perſon, becauſe that he demeth to have victory ouer thy perſone by ſuch fained countinaunce, the whiche victorie he might not haue by ſtrife or warre. And Petrus Alphons ſaith, make no felowſhip with thine olde enemies, for if thou do hem bountie, they wollen peruert it to wickednelle. And eke thou muſt eſchue the counſailing of hem that ben thy ſeruauntes, and beren thee greate reuerence: for peraventure they ſain it more for drede than for loue. And therfore ſaith a philoſopher in this wiſe. There is no wight partitly true to him that he dredeth. And Tullius ſaith, there is no might ſo great of any emperour that long may endure, but he have loue of the people and drede. Ye ſhall eſchue alſo the counſailing of folke that ben dronkelewe, for they ne can no counſaile hide. For Salomon ſaith, ther nis no priuite there as reigneth dronkneſſe. Ye ſhal haue alſo in ſuſpecte the counſailing of ſuche folke as counſaile you one thing priuely, and coūſaile you the contrarie openly. For Catōdozie ſaieth, that it is a maner of ſlieght to hinder his enemy when he ſheweth to done a thing openly, and werketh priuely the contrary. Thou ſhalte haue alſo in ſuſpecte the counſailing of wicked folke, that be alwaie full of fraude. And Dauid ſaithe, that bliſſful is the manne that hath not folowed the counſaylinge of frowes. Thou ſhalt alſo eſchue the counſailing of yonge folke, for her counſailing is not ripe, as Salomon ſaieth.

Nowe ſir, ſithens I haue ſhewed you of ſuche folke as ye ſhal be counſailed of, and folowe it: nowe woll I teche you howe ye ſhall eramine your counſayle. After the doctrine of of Tullius, in examininge of youre counsailours, ye shall consider many thinges.

First thou shalt consider thilke thing that thou purposest, and vpon that thinge that thou wolte haue counsaile, that bery trueth be said and conserued, this is to say, tel truely thy tale for he that saieth false, may not well be counsailed in that case, of whiche he lieth. After this thou shalte consider the thinges that accorden to that thou purposest for to doe by thy counsailours, if reason accorde therto, and eke if thy might maie attaine therto: and if the more parte and the better parte of your counsailours accorden therto or no. Than shalt thou consider what thing shall folowe of her counsailinge: As hate, peace, warre, grace, profite, or domage, and many other thinges: and in all thinges thou shalte chose the beste, and weyue all other thinges. Than shalt thou consider of what rote is engendred the matter of thy counsaile, and what fruite it may cõceiue and engender. Thou shalt eke consider all the causes, from whenche they be sprong. And when thou haste examined thy counsaile, as I haue said, and which party is the better and more profitable, and haste approued it by many wise folke and olde, than thou shalt consider, if thou maiste performe it and make of it a good ende. For certes reason wol not that any man shal beginne a thinge, but if he might performe it as him ought: ne no wight shoulde take vpon him so heute a charge, but that he might bere it. For the prouerbe saith, he that to muche embraceth distraineth litell. And Caton saith, assaie to do suche thinges as thou hast power to done, lest the charge oppresse the to sore, that the behoueth weiue thinge that thou haste begonne. And if so be that thou be in doute, whether thou maist performe a thing or none, chose rather for to suffer than to beginne. And Peter Alphons saieth, if thou hast might to do a thing, of which thou must repent, it is better holde thy tonge still than for to speke. Than maiste thou vnderstonde by stronger reasons, that if thou hast power to performe a werke of whiche thou shalte repent thee, than is it better thou suffer than begin. wel saine they that defenden euerie wight to assaye a thing of whiche he is in dout whether he maye performe it or none. And after when ye haue examined your counsaile (as I haue saide before) and knowe well that ye maye performe your empryse: conferme it than sadly till it be at an ende.

Nowe it is reason and time that I shewe you, whan and wherfore that ye may chaunge your counsaile, without reproefe. Sothly a man may chaunge his purpose and his counsaile, if the cause ceaseth, or whan a new case betideth. For the lawe saith, that vpon thinges that newly betideth, behoueth newe counsaile. And Seneke saieth, if thy counsaile is come to the eares of thine enemies, chaunge thy counsaile. Thou maiste also chaunge thy counsaile, if so be thou finde that by errour or by any other cause, harme or damage maie betide. Also if thy counsaile be dishoneste, other els come of dishoneste cause, chaunge thy counsaile. For the lawe saieth, that all behestes that be dishoneste, ne ben of no value: And eke, if so be that it be vnpossible or maye not gladly be performed or kepte.

And take this for a generall rule, that euery counsaile that is enfourmed so strongly, that it may not be chaunged for no condicion that maie betide, I say that ilke counsaile is wicked.

Melibeus, when he had herde the doctrine of hys wyfe Dame Prudence, aunswerde in this wise. Dame (q he) as yet vnto this time ye han well taught me, as in gouernaile howe I shall gouerne me in the chosinge and in the withholdinge of my counsaile: But nowe would I faine that ye would condiscende in especiall, howe that ye semeth by our counsaylours that we haue chose in this present nede.

My lorde (q she) I beseche you in all humblesse, that ye woll not wilfully replie ayenst my resons, ne distemper your hert though I speke thing that you displese, for God wot as in mine entente, I speke it as for youre beste and for youre honoure and profite eke, and sothly I hope that your benignite woll take it in pacience. And trusteth me wel that your counsaile in this case ne should not (as to speke properly) be called a counsailinge, but a mocion or a mouinge of folye, in whiche counsaile ye haue erred in many a sondrie wise.

Firste ye haue erred in the assemblinge of your counsailours: For firste ye should haue cleped a fewe folke to your counsaile, and after ye might haue shewed it to mo, if it had be nede. But ye haue cleped to your counsaile a great multitude of people, ful chargeous and full noyous for to here. Also ye haue erred, for there as ye shoulde haue onelie cleped to your counsaile your trewe frendes, olde and wise, ye haue cleped straunge folke, yonge folke, false flatterers, and enemies reconsiled, and folke that done you reuerence withouten loue. And eke ye haue erred, for ye haue brought with you to your counsaile, ire, couetise, and hastinesse, the which thre thinges ben contrary to euery good counsaile, honest and profitable, the whiche thre thinges ye haue not distroyed neither in your selfe ne in your counsaillours, as ye ought. Ye haue erred also for ye haue shewed to your counsaylours your talent and your affectiõs to make warre anon, and for to doe vengeaunce, and they haue espide by your wordes, to what thing ye ben enclined: and therefore han they rather counsailed you to your talent, than to youre profite. Ye han erred eke, for it semeth that you suffiseth to haue bee counsailed by these counsaillours onely, and with litle auisement, where as in so hie and in so great a nede, it had been necessarie mo counsaillours, and more deliberacion to performe your empryse. Ye han erred also, for ye haue not examined your counsaile in the forsayd maters, ne in dewe maner as the case requireth. Ye haue erred also, for ye made no diuision betwene your trew frendes and your fayned counsaillours: ne ye haue not knowen the will of your trew counsaillours and frendes, olde, and wise, but ye haue caste all her wordes in an hochepot, and enclined your herte to the more parte and to the gretter nombre of fooles than of wise men. And therfore the counsaylinges that been at congregacions and multitudes of folke, there as men take more regarde to the nombre than to the sapience of persons, ye sene well, that in suche counsaylinges, fooles han the maistrie. Melibe answerde and said ayen: I graunt well that I haue erred, but there as thou haste told me here biforne, that he nis not to blame that chaungeth his coũsaile in certaine case, and for certaine and iuste cause, I am all redye to chaunge my counsaillours righte as thou woldest deuise. The Prouerbe saieth, for to done sinne is mannishe, but certes for to perceuer longe in sinne, is werke of the Diuell.

To this sentence answereth anon dame Prudence and saide: Examineth (q she) well youre counsayle, and let vs se whiche of hem hathe spoke moste resonably, and taughte you beste counsaile. And for as muche as the examinacion is necessarie, lette vs begin at Surgens and Phisiciens, that first spake of this mater. I say that Phisiciens and Surgiens haue saide you in your counsayle discretly, as hem ought: and in her speche sayde full wisely, that to the office of hem appertaineth to donne to euerye wighte honour and profite, and no wight to anoie, and after her crafte to done great diligẽce vnto the cure of hem, which they haue in her gouernaũce. And sir, right as they haue answerde wisely and discretly, righte so rede I that they ben hiely and souerainly guerdoned for her noble speche, and eke for they shull more done their ententife besinesse in the curacion of your doughter, for al be it so they been your frendes, therfore shullen ye not suffre, that they serue you for naught, but ye ought thereafter guerdon hem, and pay hem her largesse. And as touching the prepositicion, whicheth Phisiciens entreteden in this case, this is to saine, that in maladies is, that contrarie is warished by an other contrarie: I wold faine knowe howe ye vnderstonde thilke texte, and what is your sentence. Certes (q Melibeus) I vnderstond it in this wise. Righte as they han done me a contrarie, so should I done hem an other, for righte as they han venged hem vpon me, and done me wronge, right so wol I venge me vpon hem, and done hem wrong, and than haue I cured one contrarye by an other.

Lo lo (q dame Prudence) howe lightly is euery mã enclined to his owne desire and his owne pleasaunce. Certes (q she) the wordes of the Phisiciens ne shoulde not ben vnderstõd in that wise, for certes wickenelle is not contrarie to wickednelle, ne vengeaunce is not contrarie to vengeaunce, ne wronge to wronge, but euerye of hem encreseth and engendreth other. But certes the wordes of the Phisiciens should be vnderstond in this wise, for good and wickednelle ben two cõtraries, and peace and warre, vengeaunce, and forfraunce, discord, and accorde, and many other thinges: But certes wickednelle shalbe warished with goodnes, discorde by accorde, warre by peace, and so forthe in other thinges. And therto accordeth saint Paule the Apostell in many places: He saith, ne yelde not harme for harme, ne wicked speche for wicked speche, but do wel to hem that don to the harme, and blesse them that saith the harme. And in many other places he amonisheth peace & accord. But now wol I speke of the counsaile which was yeue vnto you by menne of Lawe, and the wise folke, and olde folke, that sayden all by

by one acorde as ye herde beforne, that ouer all thinges ye shall done your besinesse and diligence to kepe your persone, and to warnestore your house: And they saide also, that in this case ye ought to werchen ful wisely and with great deliberacion. And sir, as to the first pointe, that toucheth the keping of your person: ye shall vnderstonde that he that hath warre, shal euer deuoutly and meekely praien, biforne all thinges, that Jesu Christ of his mercy woll haue him in his protection, and to be his soueraine helper at his nede: For certes in this worlde there nis no wight that mate be counseiled and kept sufficiently with out the keping of our lorde Jesu Christe. To this sentence acordeth the Prophet Dauid that saith: If God ne kepte the Cite, in idel waketh he that it kepeth. Nowe sir, than should he committe the kepinge of your person to your true frendes, that ben approued and iknowe, and of him should ye aske helpe, your person to kepe. For Caton saith: If thou haue nede of helpe aske it of thy frendes, for there nis none so good a Phisicien as thy true frende. And after this than shall ye kepe you fro all straunge folke, and fro liers, and haue alwaie in suspecte her companie. For Peter Alphons saieth. Ne take no company by the waie of no straunge man, but if so be that thou haste knowen him of lenger time: And if so be that he fall in to thy companie, parauenture withouten thyne assente and good will, enquire than as subtelly as thou canste of his conuersacion, and of his life biforne, and faine thy waie, saiyng thou woldest go thider as thou woste not go, and if he bere a spere, holde thee on the righte side of him, and if he beare a swerde, holde the on the leste side of him. And than shall ye kepe you wisely from all maner of suche people as I haue saide you here beforne, and hem and her counsaile eschue. And after this than shall ye kepe you, in suche manner, that for anye presumpcion of your bodely strength, that ye dispise not ne acounte not the might of your aduersary so lite, that ye lette the kepinge of your person for your presumpcion, for euery wise man dredeth his enemy. And Salomon saith: A very foole is he that of al hath drede: But certes he that thorowe hardenesse of his hert and through the hardinesse of him selfe, hath to great presumpcion, him shall yuell betide. Than shall ye euermore encounterwaite, enbushementes, and all espiaile. For Seneke saieth: The wise man that dredeth harmes, eschueth harmes: He ne falleth in to no perilles, that peril eschueth. And all be it so that thou seme, that thou be in secret place, yet shalt thou alwaie done diligence in keping of thy person, this is to saie, ne be not negligent to kepe thine owne person, not onely for thy greatest enemy, but also for thy leste enemy. Seneke saith, a man that is wel aduised, he dredeth his leste enemie. Ouide saieth, that the litel wesell wol slee the great Bulle and the wilde Herte. And the prouerbe saieth, that a litell thorne woll greue a king ful sore, and a litell hounde woll holde the wilde Bore. But natheles I say not thou shalt be so cowarde, that thou doute where as is no drede. The boke saieth, that some me haue great inele to disceiue, but yet thei drede to be disceiued. And kepe thee fro the companie of skorners: For the boke saith, with skorners ne make no cõpany, but flie her wordes as venim.

Nowe as to the seconde pointe, where as youre wyfe Counsaylours counsayled, you to warnestore your house with great diligence, I would fayne knowe howe ye vnderstonde this the wordes, and what is your sentence.

Melibeus answerde and said, certes I vnderstonde it in this wise, that I shall warnestore mine house with toures, suche as haue castels, and other maner edifices, and armure and archeries, betwene whiche thinges I may my person and my house so kepe and defende, that mine enemies shullen bee in drede mine house to approche. To this sentence answerde anon Prudence. warnishinge (quod she) of hie toures and of hie edifices, is with great costages and with great trauaile, and whan that they ben accomplished, yet ben they not worth a stra we, but if they ben defended with trewe frendes, that been olde and wise. And vnderstondeth well, that the gretest and the strongest garnison that riche men may haue, as well to kepen her person as her goodes is, that they be biloued with her subiectes, and with her neighbours. For thus saieth Tullius, that there is a maner garrison, that no man mate venquishe ne discomfite, and that is a lorde to be biloued of his citezins, and of his people.

Nowe sir, as to the Thirde pointe, where as your olde and wise Counsailours saide, that ye ought not sodainly ne hastely procede in this nede, but that ye oughten purueyen and apareyle you in this case, with great diligence and deliberacion. Uerely I trowe that they saied right treuly and right soth. For Tullius saith: In euery dede or thou begin it, apparaile thee with great diligence. Than saie I, in vengeaūce taking, in warre, in bataile, and in warnestoringe, or thou begin I rede that thou aparaile the therto, and do it with great deliberacion. For Tullius saithe: The longe apparailing tofore the bataile, maketh short victorie. And Cassidorus saithe: The garrison is stronger, whan it is longe time auised. But nowe let vs speke of the Counsayle that was a corded by youre neighbours, such as done you reuerēce withouten loue, your olde enemies reconciled, your flatterers, that counsailed you certaine thinges priuely, and openly counsailed you the contrarie. The ponge folke also, that counsailed you to venge you, and to make warre anon. Certes sir, as I haue saide byfore, ye haue greatlie erred to clepe suche maner of folke to your counsaile, whiche counsailours ben inoughe reproued by the resons aforesaid. But natheless let vs now discende to the speciall. Ye shull first procede after the doctrine of Tullius. Certes the trouthe of this mater or of this counsaile, nedeth not diligently to enquire, for it is well wiste, which they ben that han don you this trespas and villanie, and howe many trespasours, and in what maner they haue done all this wronge to you, and all this villany. And after this, than shull ye examine the seconde condicion, whiche Tullius addeth in this matter. For Tullius putteth a thing, whiche that he clepeth consenting: this is to saie, who ben thei, and whiche ben they, and howe manie, that consenten to thy coūsaile in thy wilfulnesse, to done hastie vengeaunce. And let vs consider also who ben they, and howe manie they ben that consented to your aduersaries. As to the firste point, it is well knowen whiche folke they be, that consented to your hastie wilfulnesse. For truely all tho that counsaile you to maken sodaine warre, ne be not your frendes. Let se nowe whiche ben they that ye holden so greatly your frendes, as to your person: For albeit so that ye be mighty and riche, certes ye been but a lone: for truely ye ne haue no childe but a doughter, ne ye haue no brethren ne Cosins Germains, ne none other nie kinrede, wherefore your enemies should stinte to plede with you, ne to distroy your person. Ye know also that your richesse mote bee dispended in diuerse parties. And whan that euerie wight hath his parte, they wollen take but litell regarde to venge your death. But thine enemies ben thre, and they haue many Brethern, Children, Cosins, and other nie kinrede: and though so were, that thou haddest slaine of hem two or thre, yet dwelleth there inowe to auenge her death, and to slee thy person. And though so be that your kinrede be more stedfaste and liker than the kinne of your aduersaries, yet neuertheless your kinrede is but after kinrede, for they ben but litell sibbe to you, and the kinne of your enemies ben nie sibbe to hem. And certes as in that, her condicion is better than is yours. Than lette vs consider also of the counsailinge of hem, that counsailen you to take sodaine vengeaunce, whether it accorde to reson or non: And certes ye knowe wel nay, for as by right and reson, there may no man take vengeaunce of no wight, but the iudge that hath iurisdiction of it, when it is graunted him to take vengeaunce hastilie, or attemperatlie as the Lawe requireth. And yet more ouer of thilke worde that Tullius clepeth consenting, thou shalte consent if that thy might and thy power maye consente and suffise to thy wilfulnesse, and to thy counsailours: And certes thou maiste well saie naye, for liberlye as for to speke properly, we maie doe nothing but suche thinges as we maie done rightfully: and certes rightfully ye may take no vengeaūce, as of your own proper auctorite. Than maye ye se that your power ne consenteth not ne accordeth not with your wilfulnesse. Nowe lette vs examine the thirde point, that Tullius clepeth cōsequence. Thou shalt vnderstonde that the vengeaunce that thou purposest for to take is consequent, and therof foloweth an other vengeaunce, perill, and warre, and other damages withouten nūbre, of which we be not ware, as at this time. And as touchinge the fourthe pointe, that Tullius clepeth engendring thou shalte consider, that this wronge whiche that is don to the, is engendred of the hate of thin enemies, and of the vengeaunce taking vpon hem, that wolde engender another vengeaunce, and muchel sorow and wastinge of richesse, as I sayde ere. Nowe sir, as touchinge the fifte pointe, that Tullius clepeth causes, whiche is the laste pointe, thou shalt vnderstonde, that the wronge that thou haste receiued hathe certayne causes, whiche that clerkes callen ayen, and efficient, and causa longinqua, and causa propinqua, that is to saie, the ferre cause, and the nighe cause. The ferre cause is almightie God, that is cause of all thinges. The nere cause is the thre enemies. The cause accidētall was hate. The cause materiall, been the fiue woundes of thy doughter. The cause formalle, is the maner of their werking that brought ladders and clambe in at thy windowes. The cause finall was for to slea thy doughter, it letted not in as moche as in theim was. But for to speake of the ferre cause, as to what ende thei should come, or finally what shall betide of theim in this case, ne can I not deme, but by coniecting and supposing: For wee shall suppose that thei shall come to a wicked ende, bicause that the boke of decrees saieth. Seld or with greate paine, been causes brought to a good ende, whan thei been badly begon.

that

Now sir, if men would aske me, why that God suffered menne to doe you this villanie. Truly I can not wel answere, as for no sothfastnesse. For the Apostle saieth, that the sciences, and the iudgementes of our lorde God almightie been full depe, there maie no man comprehende ne serche hem. Nathelelle by certaine presumpcions and coniectinges, I hold and bileue, that God whiche that is full of Justice and of rightoulnelle, hath suffered this betide, by iust cause reasonable.

Thy name is Melibee, this is to saie, a mā that drinketh Honie. Thou hast dronke so moche honie of swete temporell richelle, and delices of honours of this worlde, that thou art dronke, and hast forgotten Jesu Christe thy creatour: Thou ne hast not dooen to him soche honour and reuerēce as thee ought, ne thou ne hast not taken hede to the wordes of Ouide, that saieth. Under the Honie of the goddes of thy bodie, is hid the venime that slaeth thy soule.

And Salomon saieth: if it so be that thou hast found honie, eate of the same honie, that that suffiseth: for if so be that thou eate of the same honie out of measure, thou shalt spewe, and also be nedy and poore. And parauēture almightie God Jesu Christ, hath thee in dispite, and hath tourned awaie fro thee his face, and his eares of misericorde and mercie. And also he hath suffred and giue licēce, that thou thus shouldest bee punished and chastised, in the maner that thou hast trespased and offended. Thou haste doen sinne against our Lorde Christe, for certes the three enemies of mankinde, that is to saie: the flesche, the fend, and the worlde, thou haste suffred hem entre into thine harte wilfully, by the windowes of thy bodie, and hast not defēded thy self sufficiētly ayenst their assaultes, and their temptacions, so that thei haue wounded thy soul in fiue places, this is to saie: the dedly sinnes that been entered into thy harte by thy fiue wittes. And in the same maner our Lorde Christ hath would and suffred, that thy three enemies been entered into thy hous, by the windowes, and haue wounded thy doughter in the forsaied maner.

Cruely (q Melebee) I see well that ye enforce you moche by wordes to ouercome me, in soche maner, that I shall not benge me on mine enemies, shewing me ỳ perilles and the euils that might fall of this vengeaunce, but who so would consider in all vengeaunces, the perilles and euills that might sue of vengeaunce taking, a man would neuer take vengeaunce, and that were harme: for by the vengeaunce taking, been the wicked men discouered fro the good mē. And thei that haue will to doe wickednelle, restrain their wicked purpose, whā thei se the punishing and chastising of the trespasours: and yet saie I more that right as a singuler persone sinneth, in taking vengeaunce of an other man, right so sinneth the iudge, if he doe no vengeaunce of hem that haue deserued. For Seneke saieth thus: That maister he saith is good, that preueth shrewes. And as Cassiodor saieth: A mā dredeth to dooe outrages, whan he wote and knoweth, that it displeaseth to the Judges & souerains. And an other saith: the iudge that dredeth to dooe right, maketh men shrewes. And sainct Poule the Apostle saieth in his Epistle, whan he writeth vnto the Romaines, that the Judge beare not the speare without cause, but thei beare it to punishe the shrewes and misdoers, and for to defende the good menne.

If ye woll than take vengeaunce of your enemies, ye shull retourne and haue your recourse to the Judge, that hath the iurisdiccion vpon hem, and he shall punish hem, as the lawe asketh and requireth.

A ha, saied Melibee, this vengeaunce liketh me nothing, I bethinke me now, and take heede how that fortune hath nourished me fro my childhode, and hath holpe me to passe many a strong paas: Now I would assaie her, trowing with Goddes help, that she shall helpe me my shame for to auenge.

TRuely saied Prudence, if ye woll worke by my counsaile, ye shall not assaie fortune by no waie: ne ye shall not lene or bowe vnto her, after the worde of Seneke. For thinges that been foolishly dooen, and that been dooen in hope of fortune, shall neuer come to good ende. And as thesame Seneke saith: the more clere and the more shining that fortune is, the more brittle and the soner broke she is. Trusteth not in her, for she is not stedfaste ne stable. For whā thou trowest to be moste sure and stedfast of her helpe, she woll faile and disceiue thee. And where as ye saie, that fortun hath nourished you fro your childhode, I say that in so moche ye shall the lesse trust in her, and in her wit. For Seneke saith: what man that is nourished by fortune, she maketh him a great foole. Now thā sith ye desire and aske vengeaunce, and the vengeaunce that is don after the lawe, and biforе the iudge, ne liketh you not, and the vengeaunce that is doen in hope of fortune, is perilous and vncertaine, than haue ye none other remedie, but for to haue your recourse vnto the souerain iudge, that vengeth al villanies and wronges. And he shal venge you, after that himself witnesseth, where as he saith: leaue the vengeaunce to me, and I shall doe it.

Melibe answerde, if I ne venge me of the villanie, that men haue dooen to me, I sommō or warne hem, that haue doen to me that villanie, and all other, to doe me an other villanie. For it is written: if thou take no vengeaunce of an old villanie, thou sommonestе thine aduersaries, to dooe thee a newe villanie: and also for my sufferaunce, men would dooe me so moche villanie, that I might neither beare it ne sustain it, and so should I bee put and holden ouer lowe. For men saine, in mikell suffring shall many thinges fall vnto thee, whiche thou shalt not mowe suffre.

Certes (q Prudence) I graunt you, that ouer moche suffraunce is not good, but yet ne soloweth it not therof, that euery persone, to whom men doe villanie, should take of it vēgeaunce: for that appertaineth and longeth all onely to Iudges, for thei should venge the villanies and iniuries: And therefore those twoo auctorities, that ye haue saied afore, been onely vnderstonde in the Iudges: For whan thei suffer ouer moche the wrōges and villanies to bee doen, without punishmente, thei sommon not a man all onely for to dooe newe wronges, but thei commaunde it. Also a wise man saith, that the Iudge that correcteth not the sinner, cōmaundeth and biddeth him dooe sinne. And the Iudges and soueraines, might in their londe so moche sufferer of the shrewes and misdooers, that thei should by soche suffrance, by processe of time, were of soche power & might, that thei should put out the Iudges and the Soueraines fro their places, and at laste, make hem lese her Lordshippes.

But let vs now suppose, that ye haue leue to venge you: I saie ye bee not of might and power, as now to venge you, for if ye woll make comparison vnto the might of your aduersaries, ye should finde in many thinges, that I haue shewed you er this, that their condicion is better than yours, and therfore saie I, that it is good as now, that ye suffer and be pacient.

Furthermore, ye knowe wel that after the common sawe, it is a woodnesse, a manne striue with a strōger, or a more mightie man than he is himself, & for to striue with a man of euen strength, that is to saie, with as strong a manne as he is, it is peril: and for to striue with a weaker man, it is folie, and therfore should a manne flie striuing, as mikell as he might. For Salomon saieth: It is a greate worship to a man, to kepe him fro noise and strief: and if it so befall and hap, that a man of greate might and strength than thou art, doe thee greuaunce: studie and busie thee rather to stille the same greuaunce, than for to venge thee. For Seneke saieth, that he putteth him in great peril, that striueth with a greater māne than he is himself. And Cato saieth, if a manne of higher estate or degree, or more mightie thā thou, doe thee anoy or greuaunce, suffer him: for he that ones hath greued thee, maie an other time releue thee and helpe thee. Yet sette I case ye haue licence for to venge you, I saie that there been full many thinges, that shall restrain you of vengeaunce taking, and make you for to encline to suffre, and for to haue pacience in the wronges that haue been doen to you. First and formest, if ye woll consider the fautes that been in your own persone, for whiche fautes God hath suffred you haue this tribulacion, as I haue saied to you here beforе. For the Poete saieth, that we ought paciently take the tribulacions that come to vs, whan that we thinke and consider, that wee haue deserued to haue thē. And sainct Gregorie saieth, that whan a manne considereth well the nombre of his defautes and of his sinnes, the paines and the tribulacions that he suffereth, seme the lesse vnto him. And in as moche as him thinketh thinketh his sinnes, more heuie and greuous in so moche semeth his paine the lighter and the easier vnto him. Also ye owe to encline and bowe your harte, to take the pacience of our Lorde Jesu Christ, as saieth sainct Peter in his Epistles. Jesu Christ he saith hath suffred for vs, and yeuen ensample to euery man to folowe and sue him, for he did neuer sinne ne neuer came there a villainous worde out of his mouth. whan men cursed him, he cursed hem not. And whan mē bete him he manaced hem not. Also the great pacīce, which Sainctes that been in Paradise, haue had in tribulacion that they haue suffered, without her deserte or gilte, ought moche stirre you to pacience. Furthermore, ye shul enforce you to haue pacience, considering that the tribulacions of this worlde but little while endure, and soone passen been and gone, and the ioye that a man seketh to haue by pacience in tribulations is perdurable, after that the Apostle saieth in his Epistle. The ioye of God he saieth, is perdurable, that is to saie, euerlasting. Also troweth and bileueth stedfastly, that he is not well norished and well taught, that can not haue pacīce, or wol not receiue pacience. For Salomon saieth, that the doctrine & the witte of a man, is knowen by pacience. And in an other place he saieth, that he that is pacient, gouerneth him by greate prudence.

And the same Salomon saith. The angrie and wrothefull man maketh noises, and the pacient man attempreth and stilleth hem. He saith also, it is more worth to be pacient thā to be right strong. And he that maie haue the Lordship of his owne hart, is more to praise, than he that by his force or strengthe, taketh greate citees. And therefore saieth sainct James in his Epistle, that pacience is a greate vertue of perfeccion.

CErtes (q Melibee) I graunte you Dame Prudence, that pacience is a greate vertue of perfeccion, but euery manne maie not haue the perfeccion that ye seke, ne I am not of the nomber of right perfite men. For mine harte maie neuer bee in peace, vnto the time it be auenged. And albeit, so that it was great perill to mine enemies, to doe me a villanie, in taking vengeaunce vpō me, yet take thei no heede of the perille, but fulfilled her wicked will and her corage: and therefore me thinketh men ought not repreue me, though I put me in a little perill, for to auenge me, and though I doe a greate excesse, that is to saie: that I venge one outrage by an other.

Ih (q dame Prudence) ye saie your will as you liketh: but in no case of the world, a man should not do outrage ne excesse, for to venge him. For Casiodor saieth, that as euill doeth he, that vengeth him by outrage, as he that doeth the outrage. And therfore ye shall bēge you after the order of right, that is to saie, by the Lawe, and not by excesse, ne by outrage. And also if you wol venge you of the outrage of your aduersaries, in other maner thān right commaundeth, ye sinne. And therfore saieth Seneke: that a man shal neuer venge shrewdnesse by shrewdnesse. And if ye saie that right alketh to defende violence by violence, and fighting by fighting: certes ye saie soth, whā the defence is doen without interuall, or without taryng or delaie, for to defende him, and not for to venge him. And it behoueth that a man put soch attemperaunce in his defence, that men haue no cause ne matter to repreue him, that defendeth him of outrage and excesse, for els were it againe reason. Parde ye knowe well, that ye make no defence as now, for to defende you, but for to venge you: and so sheweth it, that ye haue no will to doe your deede attemperately, and therefore me thinketh that pacience is good. For Salomō saieth, that he that is not pacient, shall haue greate harme.

CErtes saied Melibe I graunte you, that whan a man is impaciente and wrothe, of that that toucheth him not, and that appertaineth not vnto him, though it harme him it is no wonder. For the lawe saith, that he is culpable, that entremetteth or medleth with soche thinges, as appertaineth not vnto him. And Salomon saith, that he that entremetteth of the noise or strife of an other manne, is like to him that taketh a straunge hounde by the eares: for right as he, that taketh a straunge hounde by the eares, is other while bitten by the hond, right so in the same wise, it is reason that he haue harme, that by his impaciēce, medleth him of the noise of an other man, where as it appertaineth not vnto him. But ye knowe well that this deede, that is to saie, my griefand my disease, toucheth me right nigh. And therfore though I be wrothe and impacient, it is no meruaile: and saluing your grace, I can not see that it might greately harme me, though I take bēgeaunce, for I am richer and more mightie.

than mine enemies bee: And well knowe ye that by money and by hauyng greate possi-ssions, been all thinges of this worlde gouerned. And Salomon saieth, all these thinges obeie to money.

Whan Prudence had heard her husbonde, auaunte him of his richesse and his money, dispraising the power of his aduersaries, she spake and saied in this wise. Certes deare sir, I graunte you that ye be riche and mightie, and that the richesse is good to hem that haue well gotten hem, and that well can vse theim. For righte as the bodie of a manne mate not liue without the soule, no more maie it liue without the temporell goodes, and by richesse maie a manne get him greate frendes. And therefore saieth Pamphillus: If a Nerthes doughter he saieth be riche, she maie chese of a thousande menne, whiche she woll take to her husbonde: for of a thousand one woll not forsake her ne refuse her. And this Pamphillus saith also: if thou be right happie, that is to saie, if thou bee riche, thou shalte finde a greate nomber of fellowes and frendes. And if thy fortune chaunge, farewell frenship and felowship, for thou shalte be alone without any compaine, but if it bee the companie of poore folke. And yet saieth this Pamphillus more ouer, that thei that been bonde and thrall of linage, shal be made worthy and noble by the richesses. And right so as by the richesses there come many goodnesses, right so by pouertie come there many harmes and euilles, for greate pouertie constraineth a manne to doe many euilles. And therefore calleth Cassiodor pouertie the mother of ruine, that is to saie, the mother of ouerthrowing or of falling doune. And therfore saieth Peter Alfolce: One of the greatest aduersities of this world, is whan a free man by kinde or of birth, is constrained by pouertie, to eate the almose of his enemie. And the same saieth Innocente, in one of his bookes: He saith, that sorowfull and mishappe is the condicion of a poore begger, for if he aske not his meate, he dieth for hunger, and if he aske he dieth for shame: and algates necessite constraineth him to aske. And therefore saieth Salomon, that better is to die, than for to haue soche pouertie. And as the same Salomon saieth: Better it is to die of bitter death, than for to liue in soche wise. By these reasons that I haue saied vnto you, and by many other reasons that I could saie, I graunt you that richesses been good, to hem that hem well getten, and to hem that well bien tho richesses: And therefore woll I shewe you how ye shall behaue you in gathering of richesses, & in what maner ye shullen vse hem.

Firste, ye shall gette hem withouten greate desire, by good leiser, softingly and not ouer hastely, for a manne that is to desiring to gette richesse, habandoneth him firste to theft and to all other euilles. And therfore saieth Salomon: he that hasteth him to busily to wexe riche, he shall bee none innocente. He saieth also, that the richesse that hastly commeth to a manne, sone and lightly goeth and passeth from a manne, but that richesse that cometh little and little, wexeth alwaie and multiplieth. And sir, ye shall get richesse by your wit and by your trauaile, vnto your profite, and that without wrong or harme doing to any other persone. For the Lawe saieth, there maketh no manne him self riche, if he doe harme to an other wight, this is to saie: that nature defendeth and forbiddeth by righte, that no manne make himself riche, vnto the harme of an other person. And Tullius saith that no sorowe ne no dreade of death, ne nothing that maie fall vnto a man, is so moche ayenst nature, as a man to encreace his owne profite, to the harme of an other mane. And though the greate and mightie menne, getten richesses more lightly than thou, yet shalte thou not bee idle, ne slowe to doe thy profite, for thou shalte in all wise flie idelnesse. For Salomon saith, that idelnesse teacheth a man to doe many euills. And the same Salomon saieth, that he that trauaileth and busieth him to tilthe his londe, shal eate bread: but he that is idell, and casteth him to no businesse ne occupacion, shall fall into pouertie, and die for hunger. And he that is idell and slowe, can neuer find conenable time for to doe his profite. For there is a verifier saieth, that the idell manne excuseth him in Winter, because of the greate cold, and in Sommer because of the heate. For these causes saith Caton, waketh and encline you not ouer moche for to slepe, for ouer moche rest nourisheth and causeth many vices. And therefore saieth sainct Hierom, doe some good deedes, that the deuil whiche is our enemie, ne finde you not vnoccupied, for the deuil ne taketh not lightly vnto his werking, soche as he findeth occupied in good werkes.

Than thus, in getting richesses ye must flie idelnesse. And afterwarde ye shull vse the richesses, whiche ye haue gote by your wit and by

by your trauaile, in soche maner, that men hold you not to scarce, ne to sparing, ne foole large, that is to saie, ouer large a spender: for right as men blame an auaricious man, bicause of his scarcitie and chincherie, in the same wise is he to blame, that spendeth ouer largely. And therefore saith Caton: vse (saith he) the richesses that thou hast gotte in soche maner, that menne maie haue no matter, ne cause to call thee nother wretche ne chinche: for it is a great shame to a manne, to haue a poore harte, and a riche purse. He saieth also, the goodes that thou hast gote, vse theim by measure, that is to saie, spende measurably, for thei that foolishly waste and dispende the goodes that thei haue, whā thei haue no more proper of her owen, than thei shape hem to take the goodes of an other manne. I saie than that ye shall flie auarice, vsing your richesse in soche maner, that men saie not that your richesses been buried, but that ye haue hem in your might, and in your weloing. For a wise man repreueth the auaricious man, and saieth thus in this verses two. Whereto and why burieth a manne his goodes by his great auarice, and knoweth well, that nedes he must die, for death is the ende of euery mā, as in this present life? And for what cause or encheson toineth he him, or knitteth he him so faste vnto his gooddes, that all his wittes mowe not disceuer him, ne departe him fro his gooddes, and knoweth well, or ought to knowe, that whan he is ded, he shall nothing beare with him out of this worlde.

And therfore saieth sainct Augustin, that the auaricious manne is likened vnto helle, that the more it swalloweth, the more desire it hath to swalowe and deuoure. And as wel as ye would eschue, to bee called an auaricious manne or chinche, as wel should ye kepe and gouerne you in soche a wise, that menne call you not foole large. Therfore saith Tullius: The goodes of thine hous, ne should not be hid ne kept so close, but that thei might be opened by pite and debonairte, that is to saie to yeue hem parte that haue greate nede. Ne thy goodes should not be so open, to be euery mannes gooddes. After warde in getting of your richesses, and in vsing hem, ye shall alwaie haue three thinges in your harte, that is to saie, our lorde God, conscience, and good name. First, ye shall haue God in your harte, and for no richesse ye should dooe any thing, whiche maie in any maner displease GOD your creatour & maker. For after the worde of Salomon, it is better to haue a little good with the loue of GOD, than to haue moche good and Treasoure, and lese the loue of his Lorde GOD. And the Prophete saieth, that better it is to be a good manne, and haue little good and Treasoure, than to bee holden a shrewe, and haue greate richesse. And yet I saie ferthermore, that ye should alwaie dooe your businesse to gette you richesse, so that ye get hem with good conscience. And the Apostle saith, that there nis thing in this worlde, of whiche wee should haue so greate ioye, as whan our conscience beareth vs good witnesse. And the wise manne saieth: That the substaunce of a manne is full good, whan sin is not in mannes conscience. After warde in getting of your richesses, and in vsing of hem ye must haue greate businesse, and greate diligence, that your good name be alwaie kept and cōserued. For Salomon saieth, that better it is, and more it auaileth a man to haue a good name, than for to haue many richesses: And therfore he saieth in an other place. Doe greate diligence saieth Salomon, in keping of thy frendes, and of thy good name, for it shall lenger abide with thee, than any treasoure, be it neuer so precious. And certes he should not bee called a greate gentleman, that after God and good conscience all thinges left, ne doeth his diligence and businesse, to kepe his good name. And Casiodor saith, that it is a signe of a gentle harte, whan a manne loueth and desireth to haue a good name. And therfore saieth sainct Augustin, that there been two thinges that been right necessarie and also nedefull: and that is good conscience, and good lose, that is to saie: good conscience to thine owne persone inwarde, and good lose for thy neighbour outwarde. And he that trusteth hym so moche in his good conscience, that he dispiseth and setteth at nought his good name or lose, and recketh not though he kepe not his good name, nis but a cruell churle.

Sir, now haue I shewed you how ye should dooe in getting richesses, and how ye should vse hem: and I se well that for the trust that ye haue in your richesses, ye wol moue warre and battaile. I counsaile you that ye begin no warre, in truste of your richesses, for thei ne suffise not warres to maintain. And therfore saieth a Philosopher: That manne that desireth and would algates haue warre, shal neuer haue suffisaunce: for the richer that he is, the greater dispences muste he make, if he wol!

woll haue worship and victorie. And Salomon saith, that the great richesses that a mā hath, the more dispēdours he hath. And therfore, sir, albeit so that for your riches, ye may haue moche folke, yet behoueth it not, ne it is not good to begin warre, where as ye maie in other maner haue peace, vnto your worship and profite: For the victorie of battailes that been in this worlde, lieth not in greate nomber or multitude of people, ne in the vertue of man, but it lieth in the will, and in the hond of our lorde God almightie. And therfore Judas Machabeus, whiche was Gods knight, whan he should fight against his aduersarie, that had a greater nōber, and a greater multitude of folke, and strōger than was his people of Machabe, yet he recomforted his little companie, and saied right in this wise: Also lightly said he, maie our Lorde God almightie, yeue victorie to a fewe folke, as to many folke, for the victorie of a battaile, commeth not by the greate nomber of people, but it cōmeth from our Lorde GOD of heauen. And deare sir, for as moche as there is no manne certaine, if it be worthie that God yeue him victorie or not, after that Salomon saieth, therefore euery manne should greatly dreade warres to begin: and bicause that in battailes fall many perills, & happeth other while, that as sone is the great manne slain, as the little manne. And as it is written in the seconde booke of Kinges: The deedes of battailes ben auēturous, and nothing certain, for as lightly is one hurte with a Speare, as an other: and for there is greate peril in warre, therfore should a man flie and eschue warre in as moche as a manne maie goodly: For Salomon saieth, he that loueth perille, shall fall in peril.

After that Dame Prudence had spoken in this maner, Melibe answerde and saied, I see well dame Prudence, that by your faire wordes and youre reasons, that ye haue shewed me, that the warre liketh you nothing, but I haue not yet heard your counsaile, howe I shall doe in this nede.

Certes (saied she) I counsaile you that ye accorde with your aduersaries, and that ye haue peace with hem. For sainct James saith in his Epistle: That by concorde and peace, small riches were greate: and by debate and discorde, riches decaie. And ye knowe well, that one of the greatest and moste souereine thing that is in this worlde, is vnite & peace. And therfore saieth our Lorde Jesu Christe to his Apostles, in this wise: wel happy been thei, that loue and purchase peace, for thei be called the childen of God. Ah, saied Melibe, nowe se I well, that ye loue not mine honour ne my worship. ye knowe well that mine aduersaries, haue begon this debate and brige by their outrage. And ye se well that thei ne require ne praie me of peace, ne thei aske not to be recōciled. Woll ye than that I go meke me, and obeye me to hem, and crye hem mercie: For sothe that were not my worship. For right as menne saie, ouer greate humblenes engendereth disprisinge, so fareth it by to greate himilite or mekenesse.

Than began dame Prudence to make semblaunte of wrathe, and saied: Certes sir, saue your grace. I loue your honour and profite as I doe mine owne, and euer haue doe: ye n none other neuer see the contrary. And yet i I had saied, that ye should haue purchase peace and recōciliacion, I ne had moche mi take me, ne saied a misse. For the wiseman saieth: the discencion beginneth by an othe man, and the reconciling beginneth by th selfe. And the Prophete saieth: flie shrewdn and doe goodnesse, seke peace and folowe it in as moche as in thee is. yet saie I not, tha ye should rather pursue to your aduersaries for peace, than thei should to you: for I knowe well that ye been so hard harted, that ye wol doe nothing for me. And Salomon saieth: he that hath ouer harde an harte, he at last shall mishappe or misbetide.

Whan Melibe had heard dame Prudence make semblaunte of wrathe, he saied in this wise. Dame I praie you, that ye be not displeased of thing that I saie, for ye knowe wel that I am angrie and wrothe, and that is no wonder: and thei that been wrothe, wot not well what thei doe, ne what thei saie. Therfore the Prophete saieth: that troubled eyen haue no cleare sight. But saie and counsaile me as you liketh, for I am ready to doe right as ye woll desire: And if ye repreue me of my folie, I am the more holde to loue and praise you. For Salomon saith, that he that repreueth him that doeth folie, he shall finde greater grace, than he that deceiueth him by swete wordes.

Than saied Dame Prudence, I make no semblaūt of wrath ne of anger, but for your greate profite, for Salomon saith: he is more wrothe, that repreueth or chideth a foole for his folie, shewing him semblaunt of wrath, than he that supporteth him and praiseth him him in his misdoyng, and laugheth at his folie. And this same Salomon saieth afterwarde: That by the sorowfull visage of a manne, that is to saye, by the sorie and heuy countenaunce of a manne, the sole correcteth and amendeth him selfe.

Than said Melibe, I shall not conne answere vnto so manie faire reasons as ye put to me and shewe: saye shortly your will and your counsaile, and I am al redy to performe and fulfill it.

Than Dame Prudence discouered all her will vnto him and said. I counsaile you (said she) aboue all thinges, that ye make peace betwene God and you, and be reconsiled vnto him and to his grace, for as I haue saide you here before, god hath suffred you to haue this tribulacion and disease for your sinnes: and if ye do as I saye you, God woll sende youre aduersaries vnto you, and make hem fall at your fete, redy to do your will and your commaundement. For Salomon saieth, whan the condicion of man is pleasaunt and liking to God, he chaungeth the hertes of the mans aduersaries, and constraineth hem to beseche him of peace and of grace. And I pray you let me speke with your aduersaries priuely, for thy shall not knowe that it be of your wil or your assent: And than whan I knowe theyr will and their entent, I maye counsaile you the more surely.

Dame saide Melibe, doeth your will and your liking, for I put me holly in your disposicion and ordinaunce.

Than dame Prudence, whan she sawe the good will of her husbonde, delibered and toke aduise in her selfe, thinking howe she might bringe this nede vnto a good conclusion and to a good ende: And whan she sawe her time, she sente for these aduersaries to come vnto her in a priue place. And shewed wisely vnto hem the great goodes that come of peace, and the great harmes and perils that ben in warre, and said to hem in a goodlye maner: how that hem ought haue great repētaunce of the iniury and wrong, that they had done to Melibeus her lord, and vnto her and to her doughter.

And whan they herd the goodly wordes of Dame Prudence, they were so supprised and rauished, and had so gret ioye of her, that wōder was to tell.

Ah, lady (saide they) ye haue shewed vnto vs the dulcinge of swetnesse after the saiyng of Dauid the Prophet. For the reconsiling whiche we be not worthy to haue in no manere. But we ought require it with greate cōtricion and humilite, that ye of your goodnesse haue presented vnto vs. Now se we wel, that the science and conning of Salomon is full trewe, for he saith: That swete wordes multiply and encreace frendes, and maketh shrewes to be debonaire and meke.

Certes (said they) we put our dede and all our matter and cause, all holly in your good will, and been redy to obey at the commaundement of our lorde Melibeus. And therfore dere and benigne lady: we praie and beseche you, as mekely as we can and maie, that it like vnto your greate goodnesse, to fulfill in dede, your goodly wordes. For we consider and knowe, that we haue offended and greued our Lorde Melibeus out of measure: so forthe ỹ we be nat of power to make him amendes. And therfore we oblige and binde vs and our frendes, for to doe all at his will and commaundemente: but parauenture he hath suche heuinesse, and suche wrathe to vs warde, bycause of our offence, that he woll enioyne vs suche a paine, as we mowe not beare ne sustayne. And therefore noble lady, we beseche your womanly pite, to take suche aduisement in this nede, that we ne oure frendes be nat disherited ne distroied, through our folye.

Certes (said Prudence) it is an harde thing and right perillous, that a man put him all vterly in arbitracion and iudgement, and in the might and power of his enemie: For Salomon saith: leueth me, and yeueth credence to that I shal say: Ne yeueth neuer the power ne gouernaunce of thy goodes, to thy son, to thy wife, to thy frende, ne to thy brother: ne yeue thou neuer mighte ne maistrye ouer thy body while thou liuest. Nowe, sith he defendeth that a man should nat yeue to his brother ne to his frende, the might of his bodye. By a stronger reason he defendeth and forbideth a manne to yeue himselfe to his enemie. And natheles I counsaile you that ye mistrust nat my lorde: for I wote well and know verely, that he is debonair and meke, large, curteis, and nothing desirous ne coueitous of goodes ne riches. For there is nothing in this worlde that he desireth, saue onlye worship and honoure. Furthermore I knowe, and am right sure, that he shall nothinge doe in this nede, without my counsaile: and I shall so werke in this case, that by the grace of oure lorde God, ye shall be reconsiled vnto vs.

Than said they with on: voice, worshipful lady we put vs & our goodes all fully in your will and disposicion, and been redy to come, what daie that it liketh vnto your noblesse to limite vs or assine vs for to make our obligacion and bonde, as stronge as it liketh vnto your goodnesse, that we mowe fulfill the wil of you and of my lorde Melibe.

When dame Prudēce had herd the answere of these men, she bad hem goe ayen priuely and she returned to her lord Melibe, and tolde him howe she founde his aduersaries full repentaunt, knowleging full lowly her sinnes and trespas, and how thei were redy to suffer all paine, requiring and prayeng him of mercy and pite.

Than saide Melibe, he is well worthy to haue pardon and forgeuenesse of his sinne, that excuseth not his sinne, but knowlegeth and repenteth him, asking indulgence. For Seneke saith, there is the remission and forgeuenesse, where as the confession is: for confession is neighbour to innocence. And therefore I assent and confirme me to haue peace, but it is good that we doe nought without the assent and wil of our frendes.

Than was Prudence right gladde and ioyfull, and saide: Certes sir, ye haue well and goodly answerde: forright as by the counsaile, assente, and helpe of your frendes, ye haue be steered to benge you and make war: Right so, without ther counsayle shall ye not accorde you, ne haue peace with your aduersaries. For the lawe saieth: there is nothing so good, by waie of kinde, as a thing to be vnbounde by him that it was ibounde.

Than dame Prudence, without delay or tarying, sent anone her messanger, for her kinsfolke and her olde frendes, whiche that were trewe and wise: and tolde hem by order, in the presence of Melibe, all the mater, as it is aboue expressed and declared. And prayed hem that they would saye their aduise and counsaile, what best were to do in this nede. And when Melibeus frendes had taken her aduise and deliberacion of the forsaide mater, and had examined it by greate besinesse and diligence. Thei yaue ful counsaile for to haue peace and reste, and that Melibe should receiue with good hert his aduersaries, to forgeuenesse and mercy.

And when dame Prudence had herde thassent of her lorde Melibe, and the counsaile of his frendes accorde with her will and her entencion, she was wonderly glad in her hert, and said. There is an olde prouerbe (saide she) That the goodnesse that thou maiste doe this daie, doe it, and abide it not, ne delaye it nat till the nexte daye. And therefore I counsayle, that ye sende your messengers, suche as be discrete and wise, vnto your aduersaries: telling hem on your behalfe, that if they woll treate of peace and accorde, that they shape hem without delay or tariyng, to come vnto vs: whiche thinge performed was in dede. And when these trespassours, and repenting folke of her folies, that is to saye, the aduersaries of Melibeus, had herde what these messengers saide vnto hem, they were right gladde and ioyfull, and answerde full meekely and benignely, yeldinge grace and thankes to her lorde, Melibee, and to all his companie: and shope hem without delaye to go with the messengers, and obeyed the commaundement of her lorde Melibeus. And right anone they toke her waye to the court of Melibe, and toke with hem some of their true frendes to make faith for hem, and to be her borges: And whan they were comen to the presence of Melibe, he said to hem these wordes. It stondeth thus, said Melibe, and sothe it is, that causeles and without skill and reason, ye haue done great injuries and wronges to me and my wife Prudence, and to my doughter also, for ye haue entred in to my house by violēce, and haue don such outrage, that all men know wel that ye haue deserued dethe. And therefore woll I knowe and wete of you, whether ye woll put the punishing and the chastising and the vengeaūce of this outrage, in the will of me and of my wife, or ye wol not.

Then the wisest of hem thre answerde for hem al, and said, Sir (said he) we knowe well that we ben vnworthy to come to the court of so great a lorde and so worthy as ye be, for we haue so greatly mistaken vs, and haue offended and agilted in such wise againe your high lordeship, that truely we haue deserued the dethe, but yet for the great goodnesse and debonairte, that all the worlde witnesseth of your person, we submitte vs to the excellence and benignite of your gracious lordeship, and ben redy to obey to all your commaundementes, beseching you, that of your mercyable pite ye woll consider our great repentaunce, and lowe submission, and graunte vs forgeuenesse of our outragious trespasse and offence: for wel we knowe, that your liberall grace and mercye stretche ferther in to the goodnesse

goodnesse, than doen our outragious giltes and trespalles into the wickednesse. Al be it that cursidly and dampnably we haue agilted against your high lordship.

Than Melibe toke hem vp fro the ground full benignely, and receiued her obligacions and her bondes, by her othes vpon her pledges and borowes, and assyned hem a certaine day to returne vnto his court for to receyue and accept sentence and iudgement, that Melibeus would commaunde to be don on hem, by the causes aforsaid, which thinges ordained, euery man returned to his house.

And when dame Prudence sawe her time, she fained and asked her lorde Melibe, what vengeaunce he thought take on his aduersaries.

To which Melibe answerde, and said: Certes (said he), I thinke and purpose me fully to disherite hem of all that euer they haue, and for to put them in exile for euer.

Certes said dame Prudence, this were a cruell sentence, and muche ayenst reason. For ye be riche inough, and haue no nede of other mennes riches. And ye might lightly in this wise gete you a couetous name, whiche is a vicious thing, and ought be eschewed of euery good man. For after the sayyng of the apostel. Couetise is rote of all harmes. And therfore it were better to you lese so muche good of your owne, than for to take of their good in this maner. For better it is to lese good with worship, than to winne good with villanie and shame. And euery man ought to do his diligence and his businesse, to gete him a good name. And yet shall he not only busy him in kepinge his good name, but he shall also enforce him alwaie to doe some thinge, by whiche he maye renewe his good name. For it is written, that the olde good lose of a manne or good name, is soone gon and paste, whan it is not renewed. And as touchinge, that ye saie that ye woll exile your aduersaries: that thinketh me muche ayenst reason, and out of measure, considringe the power, that they haue yeue you vpon them self. And it is writte: that he is worthy to lose his priuilege, that misuseth the mighte and power that is giuen him. And I sette case, ye might enioyne hem that paine by righte and lawe, whiche I trowe ye maie not doe: I saie, ye might not put it to execution, for peraventure than it were like to turne to the warre, as it was before. And therfore if ye woll that men do you obeisaunce, ye muste demeane you more courteisly, that is to saye: ye muste yeue more easy sentences and iudgement. For it is written: he that most curteisly cōmaundeth, to him men most obey. And therfore I praye you, that in this necessite and in this nede, ye caste ye to ouercome your hert. For as Seneke saieth: he that ouercometh his hert, ouercometh twise. And Tully saieth: there is nothing so cōmendable in a great lord, as when he is debonaire and mekе, and apeseth him lightly. And I pray you that ye wol now forbere to do vengeaunce in suche a maner, that your good name maie be kept and conserued, and that men maie haue cause and matter to praise you of pite and mercy: and that ye haue no cause to repent you of thing that is done. For Seneke saith: he ouercometh in an yuell manere, that repenteth him of his victorie. wherfore I praye you, lette mercy be in your hert, to theffect and entent, that god almighte haue mercie vpon you in his laste iudgement. For saint James saieth in his Epistel: iudgement without mercy shal be do to him, that hath no mercy of another wight.

whan Melibe had herde the great skilles and reasons of dame Prudence, and her wise informacions and teachinges, his herte gan encline to the will of his wife: considring her trewe entent, confirmed him anon and assented fully to worke after her counsayle: and thanked God, of whome procedeth all goodnesse and vertue, that him had sent a wife of so greate discretion. And whan the day came that his aduersaries should apeare in his presence, he spake to hem goodly, and saide in this wise.

Al be it so, that of your pride and high presumpcion and folie, and of your negligence and vnconninge, ye haue misborne you, and trespaced vnto me, yet for as mikell as I se and beholde your great humilite, and that ye be sory and repentaunt of your giltes, it constraineth me to doe you grace & mercy: wherfore I receiue you to my grace, and forgeue you holly all the offences, iniuries, and wronges, that ye haue doen ayenste me and mine, to theffecte and ende, that God of his endeles mercy woll at the time of our dyinge forgeue vs our giltes, that we haue trespaced to him in this wretched worlde. For doutlesse if we bee sory and repentaunt for the sinnes and giltes, whiche we haue trespaced in the sight of our lord God: he is so fre and so merctable, that he woll forgiue vs our giltes, and bring vs to the blisse that neuer shal haue ende. Amen.

Here endeth the tale of Chaucer, and here foloweth the Monkes prologue.

Whan ended was the tale of Melibee
And of Prudence, and her benignite
Our hoste saide, as I am faithful man
And by the precious corps Madrian
I had leuer than a barel of ale
That goodlefe my wife had herde this tale
For she nothing is of suche pacience
As was this Melibeus wife Prudence
By goddes bones, when I bete my knaues
She bringeth me the great clubbed staues
And crieth, slee the dogges euerichone
And breke bothe backe and euery bone
And if that any neighbour of mine
Wol not in churche to my wife encline
Or be so hardy, to her to trespace
Whā she cometh home, she rampeth i my face
And crieth false cowarde wreke thy wife
By corpus domini, I wol haue thy knife
And thou shalt haue my distaf, and go spinne
Fro day til night, she wol thus beginne.
Alas she saith, that euer she was shape
To wedde a milksop, a cowarde ape
That wol be ouerleide with euery wight
Thou darst not stonde by thy wiues right
This is my life, but if that I woll fight
And out at dore, anon I mote me dight
And els I am loste, but if that I
Be like a wilde lion, fole hardy
I wot wel she wol do me slee some day
Some neighbour, and than go my way
For I am perilous with knife in honde
Al be it that I dare not her withstonde
For she is bigge in armes by my faith
That shal he finde, that her misdoth or saith
But let vs passe away from this mattere
My lord he said, sir mōke: be mery of chere
For ye shall tell vs a tale truely
Lo Rochester stondeth here fast by Ride forth min owen lord, breke not our game
But by my trouth I know not your name
Wheder I shal cal you my lorde dan Jhon
Or dan Thomas, dan Robert, or dan Albon
Or of what house be ye, by your father kin
I vowe to God, thou hast a ful faire chin
It is a gentle pasture ther thou gost
Thou art not like a pinaunt or a ghost
Upon my faith thou arte some officere
Some worthy Sexten, or some Celerere
For by my fathers soule, as to my dome
Thou art a maister, when thou art at home
No poore cloisterer, ne no poore nouise
But a gouernour wary and wise
And therwith of braune and of bones
A wel faring person for the nones
I prie to God yeue him confusion
That first the brought in to religion
Thou woldest be a tredefoule aright Haddest thou as great leue, as I haue might
To perfourme al thy lust in ingendrure
Thou haddest begotten many a creature
Alas, why werest thou so wide a cope
God yeue me sorowe, and I were pope
Not onely thou but euery mighty man
Though he were shore hight vpon his pan
Should haue a wife, for al this world is lorn
Religion hath take vp al the corne
Of treding, and bosel men ben chrimpes
Of feble trees there cometh wretched imps
This maketh that our heires be so slender
And feble, that thei may not well engender
This maketh that our wiues wol assay
Religious folke, for they may better pay
Of Venus paimentes, than mowe we God wote no lustheburghs paie ye
But be not wroth my lord, though I play
Ful ofte in game a sothe haue I herde say.
This worthy monke toke al in pacience
And said, I wol do my diligence
As ferre as souneth into honeste
To tell you a tale, ye two or thre
And if ye liste to herken hitherwarde
I wol you saine, the life of saint Edwarde
Or els tragidies first I wol tell
Of whiche I haue an hundred in my cell.
Tragidy is to tell a certaine storie
As olde bokes maken memorie
Of hem that stode in great prosperite
And be fallen out of hie degre
In to misery, and ended wretchedly
And thei ben versified comenly
Of fote fele, whiche men cal exametron
In prose eke ben endited many on
And in metre, many a sondry wise
Lo, this ought inough to suffise
Now herkeneth, if you lust for to here
But first I beseche you in this matere
Though I by order tell not these thinges
Be it of Popes, Emperours, or Kinges

Item

Iter her ages, as men writen finde
But tellen hem, some before & some behinde
As it cometh nowe to my remembraunce
Haue me excused of mine ignoraunce.

Here endeth the Monkes prologue, and here beginneth his tale.

I will bewaile in maner of tragedy
The harme of hem that stoden in hie degre
And fill, so that ther nas no remedy
To bring hem out of her aduersite
For certaine, whan that fortune list to flie
There may no man of her & course withholde
Lette no man trust on blinde prosperite
Beth ware by this ensample yonge and olde.

Lucifer.

At Lucifer, though he an angel were
And nat a man, at him will I beginne
For though fortune may nat angel dere
From hie degre, yet fel he for his sinne
Doun in to hell, where he is yet inne
O Lucifer, brightest of angels all
Now art thou Sathanas, & maist not twin
Out of misery, in whiche thou art fall.

Adam.

Lo Adam, in the felde of Damascene
With goddes owne finger wrought was he
And not begoten of mannes sperm vncleene
And welte al paradise sauing o tree
Neuer worldely man had so hie degre
As Adam, til he for misgouernaunce
Was driuen out of his high prosperite
To labour and to hell, and to mischaunce

Sampson.

Lo Sampson, which that was annũciate
By the angel, longe or his natiuite
And was to God almighty consecrate
And slode in nobles while he might se
Was neuer suche another, as was he
To speke of strength, and therto hardinesse
But to his wines tolde he his secre (nesse
Through which he slough him for wretched-

Sampson this noble & mighty champion
Without weapen, saue his handes twey
He slough and al to rente the lion
Towarde his wedding, walking by the wey
His false wife coulde him so please and pray
Til she his counsaile knewe, and she vntrewe
Vnto his foes, his counsaile gan bewray
And him forsoke, and tolde another newe

An hundred fores tolde Sampson for prie
And al her tailes he togither bonde
And set the fores tailes al on fire
For he in euery taile hath put a bronde
And thei brent all the cornes in that londe
And her oliues, and her vines eke
A thousãd men eke he slough with his honde
And had no weapen, but an asse cheke.

Whan thei were slaine, so thristed him & he Was wel nie lorne, for which he gan to prey
That God wold of his paine, haue some pite
And sende him drinke, or els mote he dey
And of this asse cheke, that was so drey
Out of a wange tothe, sprange anon a well
Of whiche he dronke inough, shortly to sey
Thus halpe him God, as Iudicum can tell.

By very force, at Gasa on a night
Maugre the Philistens of that cite
The gates of the toune, he hath vp plight
And on his backe, icaried hem hath he High on an hill, where as men might hem se
O noble mighty Sampson, lefe and dere
Had thou not tolde to women thy secre
In al this worlde ne had be thy pere.

This Sãpson neither sider drãke ne wine
Ne on his heed came rasour none ne shere
By precepte of the messangere diuine
For all his strength in his heeres were
And fully twenty yere by yere
Of Israel, he had the gouernaunce
But after soon shall he wepe many a tere
For women shal bring him to mischaunce

Vnto his lemman Dalida he tolde
That in his heeres, al his strength lay
And falsely to his foes she him solde
And sleping in her barme vpon a day
She made to clippe or shere his heres away
And made his fomen al his craft espien
And whan that thei him fonde in suche aray
They bounde him fast, and put out his eyen

But er his heeres were clipped or ishaue
There was no bonde that might him binde
But nowe is he put in prison in a caue
Where as thei made him at & querne grinde
O noble Sampson, strongest of mankinde
O whilom iudge in glory and richelle
Now maist thou wepe & thine eyen blinde

Sith ꝑ art from wele fal in to wretchednesse

The ende of this caitife was, as I shal sey
His fomen made a fest vpon a daie
And made him, as their sole before hem play
And this was in a temple of great araie
But at the last he made a soule a fraie
For he two pillers shoke, and made hem fall
And doune fel the temple al, and there it laie
And sloughe himself, and eke his fomen all

This is to say, the princes euerichone
And eke there thousād bodies were ther slain
With falling of the great temple of stone
Of Sampson wol I no more sain
Beth ware by this ensample olde and plain
That no men tel her counsaile to her wiues
Of such thing as thei would haue secret fain
If that it touche her limmes or her liues.

Of Hercules.

Of Hercules the soueraine conqueroure
Singen his werkes, laude, and hie renoun
For in his time of strength he bare the floure
He slough and rafte the skin of the lion
And of the Centaurs, laide the boste adoun
He Harpias slewe, the cruel birdes fell
He the golden appels rafte fro the dragon
He drewe out Cerberus the hounde of hell.

He slewe the cruel tiraunt Busirus
He made his horse to frete him flesh & bone
He sloughe the very serpent venemous
Of Ichelous two hornes, braue he that one
And he slewe Cacus, in a caue of stone
He sloughe the giaunt Antacus the stronge
He sloughe the grisly Boze, and that anon
And dare his heed vpon his spere longe.

Was neuer wight, sith the world began
That sloughe so many monsters, as did he Through the wide world, his name ran
What for his strength and his bounte
And euery realme went he for to se
He was so strong, ꝑ no man might him let
And at bothe the worldes endes, he Trophe
In stede of bounder, of brasse a pillour set.

A lemman had this noble champion
That hight Deianire, as fresh as Maye
And as clerkes make mencion
She hath him sent a shirt fresh and gaie
Alas this shirte, alas and well awaie
Enuenemed was subtelly with all
That er he had weared it halfe a daie
It made his flesh all fro his bones fall.

But natheless, some clerkes her excusen
By one that hight Nessus, that it maked
Be as be may, I wol her not accusen
But on his body, the shirte he ware al naked
Til the flesche was with the venim flaked
And when he sawe none other remedie
In hote coles, he hath himselfe raked
For with no venim dained he to die.

Thus sterfe this worthy mighty Hercules
Lo, who may trust in fortune any throwe
For him that foloweth al the worlde of pres
Or he be ware, is ofte laide ful lowe
Ful wise is he, that him selfe can knowe
Beware, for when that fortune liste to glose
Than waiteth she, her man doune to throwe
By suche a way, as he would leste suppose.

Nabuchodonosor.

The mighty trone, the precious tresor
The glorious septer, and royal maiestē
That hath the king Nabuchodonosor
With conge vnneth may discriued be
He twise wanne Hierusalem, that cite
The vessel of the temple he with him lad
At Babilon was his soueraine se
In whiche his glory and his delite he had.

Of Hierusalem, he did do gelde anone
The fayrest children of the blode royall
And make eche of hem to ben his thrall
Amonge all other Daniell was one
That was the wisest of euerichone
For he the dremes of the king expouned
Where as in Caldee clerkes were there none
That wist to what fine his dreme souned

This proude king let make a statu of gold
Sixty cubites longe, and seuen in brede
To whiche ymage, bothe yonge and olde
Commaunded he loute, and haue in drede
Or in a fornei, ful of flames rede
He should be deed, that would not obey
But neuer would assent to that dede
Daniell, ne his yong felowes twey

This king of kinges, proude and elate
Wende God, that sitteth in maieste
Ne might him nat bireue of his estate
But sodainly he loste his dignite
And like a beest, him semed for to be
And ete hey as an oxe, and laye therout
In rain, with wilde beestes walked he Til a certain time was come about

And like an Egles fethers were his heres

And his neiles like birdes clawes were God releued him at certain yeres
And gaue him wit, & than with many a tere
He thonked God, and all his life in fere
Was he, to doe amisse, or more trespace
And ere that he laied was on his bere
He knew that God was full of might & grace

Balthasar.

HIs sonne, whiche ỹ hight Balthasare
That helde ỹ reign after his faders daie
He by his fader could not beware
For proude he was of harte, and of arraie
And ete an ydolastre was he aie
His high estate, assured him in pride
But fortune cast him doun, and there he laie
And sodainly his reigne gan deuide.

A feast he made vnto his lordes all Upon a time, he made him blith be
And than his officers gan he call Goth bring forth the vessels (q he)
Whiche that my father, in his prosperite
Out of the temple of Hierusalem birafte
And to our Goddes thonken we
Of honour, that our elders with vs lafte.

His wife, his lordes, and his concubines
He dronken, whiles her appetites laft
Out of this noble vessels, sondrie wines
And on a wall, this king his yen caft
And sawe an hond armeiesse, that wrote fast
For feare of whiche he quoke, and sighed sore
This hond that Balthasar made so sore agast Wrote (Mane techel phares) and no more.

In all that londe, Magicien was ther non
That could expoune what this letter ment
But Daniel expouned it anon
And saied, king, God thy father sent Glorie and honour, reign, treasour, and rent
And he was proude, & nothing God he drad
And therfore great wrath God vpō him sent
And him birafte the reigne that he had

He was out cast of mannes companie
With Asles was his habitacion
And eate hate as a beast, in weate and drie
Till that he knewe, by grace and by reason
That God of heauen hath dominacion
Ouer euery reigne, and euery creature
And than had God of him compassion
And him restored his reigne and his figure

Eke thou that art his sonne, art proud also
And knowest all these thinges priuely
And art rebell to God, and his so
Thou dranke eke of his vessells boldly
Thy wife eke, and thy wenches sinfully
Dronke of the same vessells sondrie winis
And herted false Goddes cursedly
Therefore to thee shapen great paines.

This hond was sent fro God, ỹ on the wal
Wrote (Mane techel phares) trust me
Thy reigne is doen, thou wotest not all Deuided is thy realme, and it shall be To Medes and to Perciens (q he)
And that same night, the king was slawe
And Darius occupied his dignite
Though he therto had neither right ne lawe.

Lordinges, here ensample mowe ye take
How that in lordship is no slikernesse
For whan that fortune will a man forsake
She beareth awaie his reigne, & his richesse
And eke his frendes, bothe more and lesse
And what man hath frēds, through fortune
Mishap will make him enemies as I gesse
This prouerbe is full soth, and full commune

Zenobia.

ZEnobia of Palmerie Quene
(As writeth Perciens of her noblesse)
So worthy was in armes, and so kene
That no wight passed her in hardinesse
Ne in linage, ne in none other gentilnesse
Of kinges blood of Perce she is descended
I saie that she had not moste fairenesse
But of her shap she might not be amended

From her childhode I finde that she fled
Office of a woman, and to wood she went
And many a wilde Hartes blood she shed
With arrowes broad, that she to hem sent
She was so swift, that she anon hem hent
And whan that she was elder, she would kill
Lions, Libardes, and Beres all to rent
And in her armes welde hem at her will.

She durst wilde beastes dennes seke
And renne in the mountaines all the night
And slepe vnder a bushe, and she could eke Wrastell by verey force, and by verey might
With any yong man, were he neuer so wight
There might nothing in her armes stonde
She kept her maidenhed from euery wight
To no man dained she to be bounde.

But at last, her frendes hath her maried
To Odenat, a Prince of that countre

All were it so, that she hem long taried
And ye shall vnderstonde, how that he Had soche fantasies as had she
But natheless, whan thei were knit in fere
Thei liued in ioye and in felicite
For eche of hem had other lefe and dere.

Saue one thing, she nolde neuer assent
By no waie, that he should by her lie
But ones, for it was her plain entent
To haue a child, the worlde to multiplie
And also sone as she might aspie
That she was not with childe with that dede
Than would she suffer him to do his fantasie
Eftsones, and not but ones out of drede.

And if she were with child at that cast
Nomore should he plaie that game
Till fully fourtie daies were past
Than would she ones suffer him the same
All were this Odenat wilde or tame
He gate no more of her, for thus she saied
It was to wiues lecherie and shame
In other case, if men with hem plaied.

Two sonnes by this Odenat had she
The whiche she kept in vertue and lettrure
But now vnto our tale tourne we
I saie that so worshipfull a creature
And wise therwith, and large with measure
So penible in warre, and curteis eke
Ne more labour might in warre endure
Was non, though al this world mē wold seke

Her riche araie, ne might not be told
As well in vessell as in her clothing
She was all cladde in pierrie and in gold
And eke she left not for none hunting
To haue of sondrie tongues folke knowing
Whan that she leiser had for to entende
To learne bookes was all her liking
How she in vertue her life might dispende.

And shortly of this storie for to treate
As doughtie was her husbonde as she
So that thei conquered many reignes great
In the Orient, with many a faire cite Apperteinaunt vnto the Maiestie
Of Rome, and with strength helde them fast
Ne neuer might her foe men doe her flee
All the while that Odenates daies last.

Her battailes, who so liste hem for to rede
Ageinst Sapor the king, and other mo
And how all this proces fell in dede
Why she cōquered, & what title she had therto
And after of her mischief and of her wo
How that she was besieged, and itake
Let him to my maister Petrarke go
That writeth inough of this, I vndertake.

Whan Odenat was dedde, she mightily
The realmes held, and with her owne honde
Ayenst her foes she fought truely
That ther was no prince ne king, in al þ lond
But were glad, if thei that grace fonde
That she ne should vpon his londe warrey
With her thei made aliaunce by bonde
To be in peace, and let hem ride and pley.

The Emperour of Rome Claudius
Ne him before, the Romain Galien
Ne durst neuer be so corageous
Ne non Armen, ne non Egipcien
Ne Surrien, ne none Arabien
Within the field, that durst with her fight
Lest that she would hē with her hondes slen
Or with her meine, put hem to flight.

In kinges habite went her sonnes two
As the heires of her realmes all
And Hermanno and Titamallo
Her names were, as Perciens hem call
But aie fortune, hath in her honie gall
This mightie Quene, maie no while endure
Fortune out of her reigne made her to fall
To wretchednelle, and to misauenture.

Aurelian, whan that the gouernaunce
Of Rome came in his hondes twey
He shope vpon this quene to doe vengeaunce
And with his legions, he toke his wey
Toward Zenobia, and shortly for to saie
He made her flie, and at last her hent
And fettered her, and eke her children twai
And wan the lond, & home to Rome he went.

Emong other thinges that he wan
Her chare, that of gold was wrought & pierre
This greate Romaine, this Aurelian
Hath with him lad, that for men should se
Before his triumphe walked she
With golden chaines on her necke hanging
Crouned she was, as after her degre
And full of pierre charged her clothing.

Alas fortune, she that whilom was Dredefull to kinges, and to Emperoures
Now gaureth all the people on her, alas
And she that helmed was in starke stoures

And

And wan by force tounes strong, and toures
Shall on her hedde now were autremite
And she that bare the scepter full of floures Shall beare a distaffe, her coste for to quite.

Nero.

Although that Nero were as vicious
As any fende, that lieth full low adoun
Yet he, as telleth vs Suetonius
All this worlde had in subieccioun
Bothe East and West, and Septentrion
Of Rubies, Saphers, and of Perles white
Were all his clothes broudred vp and doun
For he in gemmes greatly gan delite.

More delicate, more pompous of araie
More proude, was neuer Emperour, than he
That ilke clothe that he had wared o daie
After that time, he nolde it neuer se
Nettes of gold threde had he great plente
To fisshe in Tiber, whan him list to plaie
His lustes were as lawe, in his degre
For fortune as his frende would him obaie.

He Rome brent for his delicacie
The Senatours he slue vpon a daie
To heare how her wiues would wepe & crie
And slowe his brother, and by his sister laie
His mother made he in a pitous araie
For he her wombe let slitte, to beholde
Where he conceiued was, so wela waie
That he so little of his mother tolde.

No teares out of his yen, for that sight
Ne came, but laied, a faire woman was she Greate wonder is, that he coud or might Be Domisman, of her dedde beaute
The wine to bring him commaunded he
And dranke anon, non other wo he made
Whan might is ioigned vnto cruelte
Alas, to depe will the venime wade

In youth a maister had this Emperour
To teache him lettrure, and curtesie
For of moralite he was the floure
And in his time, but if his bookes lie
And whiles his maister had of him maistrie
He made him so conning and so souple
That long time it was or tirannie
Or any vice, durst in him vncouple.

Seneh his maister was, of which I deuise
Because Nero had of him soche drede
For he for his vices would him chastise
Discretly as by worde, and not by dede
Sir he would saie, an Emperour mote nede
Be vertuous, and hate tirannie
For whiche he made him in a bathe to blede
On bothe his armes, till he must die.

This Nero had eke of a customaunce
In youth, ayenst his maister to rise
Which afterward, him thought greate grevaunce
Because he oft would him chastise
Therfore he made him die in this wise
To chose in a bathe to die in this manere
Rather than to haue an other tutmentise
And thus hath Nero slain his maister dere

Now fell it so, that fortune list no longer
The high pride of Nero to cherishe
For tho he were strong, yet was she stronger
She thought thus, by God I am to nice
To set a man, that is fulfilled of vice
In hie degre, and an Emperour him call
By God out of his seate I woll him trice
Whan he least weneth, sonest shall he fall.

The people rose vpon him on a night
For his defaute, and whan he it aspied
Out of his dores anon he hath him dight
Alone, and there he wende haue been alied
He knocked fast, and aie the more he cried
The faster shette thei the doores all
Tho wist he well, he had himself begiled
And went his waie, no lenger durst he call.

The people cried and rombled vp and doun
That with his eares he heard how thei saied
Where is this false traunt, this Neroun
For feare full nere out of his wit he braied
And to his Goddes, right pitously he praied
For socoure, but it might not betide
For drede of this, him thought that he deide
And ran into a gardein, him to hide.

And in this gardaine, found he chorles twey
Sitting by a fire greate and redde
And to the chorles two he gan to prey
To slea him, and to girde of his hedde
That to his body, whan he were dedde,
Were no dispite doen, for his defame
Himself he slough, he could no better redde
Of whiche fortune lough and had game.

Holofernes.

Was neuer capitain vnder a king
That reignes mo, put in subiecciou
Ne stronger was in field, of all thing
As in his time, ne greater of renoun

Ne

No more pompous in high presumpcioun
Than Holoferne, whiche fortune aie kiste
And so licourously lad him vp and doun
Till that he dedde was er that he wiste.

Not onely that this worlde had of him awe
For leting of richesse and liberte
But he made euery man renie his lawe Nabuchodonosor was lorde, saied he None other God should honoured be Ayenst his hest, there dare no wight trespace
Saue in Bethulia, a strong cite
Where Eliachem was priest of that place.

But take kepe of the death of Holoferne
Amid his hoste, he dronke laie all night
Within his tent, large as is a berne
And yet for all his pompe, and all his might Judith, a woman, as he laie vpright
Sleping, his hedde of smote, and fro his tent
Full priuely she stale, from euery wight
And with his hedde, vnto her toun she went.

Antiochus.

What nedeth it of king Antiochus
To tell his high and roiall maieste?
His greate pride, his werke benemus
For soche an other man nas neuer as he Redeth what that he was in Machabe
And redeth the proude wordes that he saied
And why he fill from his prosperite
And in an hill, how wretchedly he died.

Fortune hym had enhaunsed so in pride
That verily he wende he might attain
Vnto the sterres, vpon euery side
And in a balaunce, to wey eche mountain
And all the floudes of the se restrain
And Goddes people had he moste in hate
Hem would he slea, in turment and in pain
Wening that God ne might his pride abate

And for that Nichanore and Timothe
By Jewes were venquished mightily Vnto the Jewes soche an hate had he
That he bad greithe his chare full hastely
And swore and sated, full dispitously
Vnto Hierusalem he would ertsone
To wreke his ire on it full cruelly
But of his purpose was he let full sone.

God for his manace him sore smote
With inuisible wounde, aie incurable
That in his guttes carfe so and bote
That his paines was importable

And certainly the wreche was reasonable
For many a mannes guttes did he pain
But frō his purpose, cursed and dampnable
For all his smert, he nolde him not restrain.

But bade anon, aparaile his hoste
And sodainly, or he than was ware
God daunted all his pride, and all his boste
For he so sore fell out of his chare
That all his limmes and his skin to tare
So that he ne might go ne ride
But in a chaire, men about him bare
All forbruised bothe backe and side.

The wreche of God him smote so cruelly
That in his body wicked wormes crept
And therwithall he stanke so horribly
That none of all his meine, that him kept whether that he woke or els slept
Ne might not of him the stinke endure
And in his mischief he wailed and ehe wept
And knewe God, Lorde of euery creature

To all his hoste, and to himself also Full lothsome was the stinke of his caraine
No man might him beare to ne fro
And in his stinke, and in his horrible pain
He sterfe full wretchedly on a mountain
Thus hath this robbour, and this homicide
That many a man made to wepe and plain
Soche guerdon, as belongeth to pride.

Alexander.

The storie of Alexander is so commune
That euery wight, ỹ hath discrecioun
Hath hardiom what or al, of his fortune
This wide worlde, as in conclusioun
He wan by strength, and for his renoun
Thei were glad for peace vnto him sende
The pride of man, and boste he laied adoun
Where so he came, vnto the worldes ende.

Comparison might yet neuer be maked
Betwirt him, and an other conquerour
For al this world, for dred of him hath quaked
He was of knighthode, and of fredome flour
Fortune him made the heire of high honour
Saue wine & womē, nothing might aswey
His high entent in armes and labour
So was he full of louing corage.

what price wer it to him, though I you told
Of Darius, and of a hundred thousande mo
Of princes, Erles, and knightes bold
Whiche he conquered, and brought to wo

I tale as ferre as a man maie ride or go the world was his, what shuld I more deuise
For though I wrote and told you euer mo
Of his knighthode, it might not suffice.

Twelue yere he reigned, as I rede Machabe Philippes soonne of Macedone he was
That first was king of Grece, that countre
O worthy gentill Alexander, alas
That euer should thee fall soche a caas Enpoisonned of thy folhe thou were Thy lice, fortune hath tourned into an ace
And yet for thee ne wept she neuer a tere.

Who shall yeue men teres to complain
The death of gentilnesse, and of fraunchise
That all the worlde welded in his demain
And yet him thought it might not suffice
So full was his corage of high empryse
Alas, who shall me helpe to endite
False fortune, and poison to dispise?
The whiche of all this wo I wite.

Julius Cesar.

By wisedome, manhode, and high labour
From humble bed to roiall Maieste
Up rose he, Julius the Conquerour
That all the Occident, by londe and see
Wan by strength of honde, or els by trete
And vnto Rome made him tributarie
And sith of Rome, Emperour was he Till that fortune were his aduersarie

O mightie Cesar, that in Thessaly
Ayenst Pompei, father thine in lawe
That of the Orient had the chiualrie
As ferre as that the daie beginneth to dawe
Thē through knighthode hast take and slawe
Saue fewe folke, that with Pompeius fled
Through which ye purtest al the orīēt in awe
Thanke fortune, that so well thee sped.

But now a little while I woll bewaile
This Pompei, this noble gouernour
Of Rome, whiche that fled at this battaile
I saie one of his men, a false traitour
His hedde of smote, to winne him fauour
Of Julius, and to him the hedde brought Alas Pompei, of the Orient conquerour
That fortune vnto soch a fine thee wrought

To Rome again repaireth Julius
With his triumphe laureate full hie
But on a time Brutus Cassius
That euer had of his hie estate enuie
Full priuelie had made conspiracie
Ayenst this Julius, in subtell wise
And cast the place, in whiche he should die
With bodkins, as I shall you deuise.

This Julius vnto the Capitoll went Upon a daie, as he was wont to gone
And in the Capitoll, anon him hent
This false Brutus, and his other sone
And sticked him with bodkins anone
With many a wound, and thus thei let him lie
But neuer grutched he at no stroke but one
Or els at twoo, but if his storie lie.

So manly was this Julius of harte
And so well loued estately honeste
That tho his dedly woundes so sore smarte
His mantell ouer his hippes caste he
For no man should se his priuite
And as he lave in dying on a traunce
And wiste verily that die should he
Of honestie yet had he remembraunce

Lucan to thee this storie I recommende
And to Sueton, and Valerie also
That of this storie writen worde and ende
How that these conquerours two Fortune was first a frende, and sithe a foe
No man trust vpon her fauour long
But haue her in awaite for euermo
Witnesse on all the conquerours strong

Crelus.

The riche Crelus, whilom king of Lide
Of which Crelus, Cirus sore him dread
Yet was he caught amid all his pride
And to brenne, men to the fire him led But soche a rain doun frō the firmamēt had
That queint the fire, and made him to scape
But to beware yet no grace he had Till fortune on the galowes made him gape

Whan he escaped was, he could not stint
For to begin a newe araie again
He wende well, for that fortune him sent Soche hap, that he escaped through the rain
That of his foes he might not be slain
And ene a sweuen vpon a night he met
Of whiche he was so proude, and ene so fain
That in vengeaunce he all his harte set.

Upon a tree he was, as him thought
Ther Jupiter him wisshe, both back and side
And Phebus ene a laire to well him brought To drie him with, and therwith were his pride
And to his doughter that stode him beside

whiche

Which that he knewe in his sentence habound
He bad her tell what it signified
And she his dreame right thus did expound.

The tree (q she) the galous is to meane
And Jupiter betokeneth Snowe and rain
And Phebus, with his towell so cleane
Betokeneth the Sunne beames, soth to sain
Thou shalt honged be, father certain Rain shall thee washe, & sunne shall thee drie
Thus she warned him full plat & full plain
His doughter, that called was Phanie.

And honged was Crefus the proude king
His roiall throne might him not auaile
Tragedie is none other maner thing
Ne can in singing crie ne bewaile
But for that fortune aldaie will assaile
With vnware stroke, ỳ reignes ỳ been proude
For whā men trusteth her, than wol she faile
And couer her bright face with a cloude.

Peter of Spain.

O Noble, o worthy Petro, glorie of Spain
Whom fortune held so high in Maiestie
Well ought men thy pitous death complain
Out of thy londe, thy brother made thee flie
And after at a siege by subtelte
Thou wer betraied, and sadde vnto his tent
Where as he with his owne honde slue thee
Succeding in thy reigne and in thy rent.

The felde of snowe, w thegle of black therin
Caught w the limrod, coloured as the glede
He drewe his cursednesse, and all this sinne
The wicked nesse was werker of this dede
Not Charles, Oliuer, that take aie hede
Of trouth and honour, but of Irmorike
Genillion Oliuer, corrupt for mede
Brought this worthie king in sothe a brike.

Petro king of Cipre.

O worthy Petro, king of Cipre also
That Alisandrie wan by high maistrie
Full many an heathen wroughtest thou wo
Of whiche thine owne lieges had enuie
And for nothing, but for thy chiualrie
Thei in thy bed han slain thee by the morow
Thus can fortune her whele gouern and gie
And out of ioye bring men to sorowe

Barnabo viscounte.

Of Millan greate Barnabo viscounte
God of delite, & scourge of Lumbardie
Why should I not thine infortune accounte
Sens in estate thou clomben were so hie
Thy brothers sōne, that was thy double alie
For he thy neuewe was, and sonne in lawe
Within his prison made thee to die
But why ne how not I, that thou wer slawe

Hugeline of Pise.

Of the erle Hugeline of Pise the lāgour
There maie no tong tell for pite
But little out of Pise stont a toure
In whiche toure in prison put was he
And with him been his little children three
The eldest scarcly fiue yere of age
Alas fortune, it was a greate cruelte
Soche birdes for to put in soche a cage.

Dampned was he to die in that prison
For Roger, whiche that bishop was of Pise
Had on him made a false suggestion
Through which the people gan vpō him rise
And put him in prison, in soche a wise
As ye haue heard, and meat and drinke hede
So small, that vnneth it maie suffise
And ther withall it was full poore and bade.

And on a daie befell, that in that houre
When ỳ his meate wont was to be brought
The geilour shette the doores of the toure
He heard it well, but he spake right nought
And in his harte anon there fell a thought
That thei for hunger would doe him dien
Alas (q he) alas that I was wrought
Therewith the teares fell fro his yen.

His yong sonne, that three yere was of age
Vnto him said, father father, why do ye wepe
When will the geilour bring our potage
Is there no morsell bread that ye doe kepe
I am so hungrie, that I maie not slepe
Now would God that I might slepe ever
Than should not hunger in my wombe crepe
There nis nothing but bread ỳ me wer lever.

Thus daie by daie, this child began to crie
Till in his fathers arme adoune it laie
And saie, farwell father I mote die
And kist his father, and deide the same daie
And when the wofull father did it sey
For wo, his armes two he gan to bite
And saied alas, fortune and welawaie
Thy false whele, my wo all maie it wete.

His children wend, that it for hunger was That he his armes gnewe, and not for wo
And saied: father, doe not so (alas)

But rather eate the flesh vpon vs two
Our flesshe thou yaue vs, take our flesshe vs fro
And eate inough, right thus thei to him said
And after that within a day or two Thei laid hem in his lappe adoun, and deide

Thus ended is this mighty erle of Pise
Him selfe dispeired eke, for hunger starke
From high estate fortune away him carke
Of this Tragedy, it ought inough suffise
Who so wol here it in a longer wise
Redeth the great poete of Itaile
That hight Dante, for he can it all deuise
Fro point to point, not a worde wol he faile.

¶ Here endeth the Monkes tale.

¶ Here stinteth the knight the Monke of his tale, and here foloweth the prologue of the Nonnes Preest.

HO (q the knight) good sir no more of this
That ye haue said, is right ynough iwis
And mokel more, for litell heuinesse
Is right inough to muche folke, I gesse
I saie for me, it is a great disease
Where as men haue be in welth and ease
To here of her sodaine fal, alas
And the contrary is ioye and solas
As when a man hath ben in pore estate
And clymbeth vp, and wereth fortunate
And there abideth in prosperite
Swiche thinges is gladsome, as thinketh me
And of suche thing were good for to tell.
Pe (q our hoste) by saint Poules bell
Ye say right soth, this monke clappeth loude
He spake, how fortune couered with a cloude
I wote not what, and also of a Tragedy
Right now we ye herde, and perdy no remedy
It is for to be wailen, ne complaine
That that is done, and als it is a paine
As ye haue saide, to here of heuinesse
Sir monke no more of this, so God you blesse
Your tale anoyeth all this cõpany
Suche talking is not worth a butterfly
For therin is there no disport ne game
Therfore sir monke, dan Piers by your name
I pray you hertely, tell vs som what elles
For sikerly, nere clinking of your belles
That on your bridell honge on euery side
By heuen king, that for vs all dide
I should er this han fallen doune for slepe
Al though the slough had ben neuer so depe
Than had your tale al be tolde in vaine
For certainly, as that these clerkes saine
Where as a man may haue none audience
Nought helpeth it to tell his sentence
And wel I wote the substaunce is in me
If any thing, shal well reported be Sir, say som what of hunting I you pray
Nay (q this monke) I haue no lust to play
Now let an other tel, as I haue tolde.
Thã spake our hoste with rude speche & bolde
And said: vnto the Nonnes preest anon
Come nere ỹ preest, come hither thou sir Ihon
Tel vs such a thing, as may our hertes glade
Be blithe, though thou ride vpon a iade
What though thy horse be both foule & lene
If he wol serue the, recche not a bene
Loke that thy herte be mery euer mo
Yes sir (q he) yes host, so mote I go
But I be mery, iwis I wol be blamed
And right anon, his tale he hath atamed
And thus he saide, vnto vs euerichon
This swete preest, this goodly man sir Ihon

¶ Here endeth the Prologue of the Nonnes preest, and here foloweth his tale.

A Pore wedowe, somdele istept in age
Was whilom dwelling in a poore cotage
Beside a groue, stonding in a dale
This widowe, of which I tel you my tale
Sens the day that she was last a wife
In pacience, ledde a full simple life
For litell was her catell and her rent
By husbondry, of suche as God her sent
She fonde her self, & eke her doughters two Thre large sowes had she, and no mo
Thre kine, and eke a shepe that hight Mall
Wel fooly was her boure, and eke her hall
In whiche she ete many a slender mele
Of poinant sauce, ne knewe she neuer a dele
Ne deinty morcell passed through her throte
Her diet was accordaunt to her cote
Repletion ne made her neuer sike
Attemperate diete was her phisike
And exercise, and hertes sufficiaunce
The gout let her nothing for to daunce
Ne apoplexie shent nat her heed
No wine dranke she, white ne reed

Her boꝛde was moſt ſeꝛued ꝙ white & blacke Wilke & bꝛoun bꝛeed, i which ſhe fõde no lack Seinde bakon, and ſomtime an eye oꝛ twey
Foꝛ ſhe was as it were a maner dey.

A yerde ſhe had, encloſed al aboute
With ſticheꝭ, and dꝛie diched withoute
In whiche ſhe had a cocke hight Chaũteclere
In al the lande, of cꝛowing nas his pere
His voice was merier than the mery oꝛgon
On maſſe daies, that in the churches gon
Wel ſiꝛerer was his cꝛowing in his loge
Than is a clocke, oꝛ in an abbey an oꝛloge
By nature he knew ech̃e aſſencion
Of the equinoctial in the toun
Foꝛ when degrees. xv. were aſſended
Than cꝛew he, that it might not be amended

His come was redder than the fine coꝛall
And battelled, as it had be a caſtell wall
His bill was blacke as any get it chone
Like aſure were his legges and his tone
His nailes whiter than the lilly floure
And like the burned golde was his coloure.

This gentel cocke, had in gouernaunce
Seuen hennes, to done his pleſaunce
Which were his ſuſters and his paramours
And wonder like to him, as of colours
Of whiche the fayꝛeſt hewed in the thꝛote
Was called faire damoſell Pertelote
He fethered her a hundꝛed times a day
And ſhe him pleſeth, al that euer ſhe may Curteis ſhe was, diſcrete, and debonaire
And compenable, and bare her ſelfe ſo faire
Sens the time that ſhe was ſeuenight olde
That trueliche, ſhe hath the hert in holde
Of Chaunteclere, loking in euery lith
He loueth her ſo, that wel was him therwith
But ſuche a ioye it was to here him ſing whan the bꝛight ſunne gan to ſpꝛing
In ſwete acoꝛde, my lefe is fꝛre in londe
Foꝛ that time as I haue vnderſtonde
Beeſtes and birdes couthe ſpeke and ſinge

And it ſo fell, that in the dawninge
As Chaunteclere, among his wiues all
Sat on his perche, that was in the hall
And nerte him ſat his faire Pertelote
This Chaũteclere gan to grone in his thꝛote
As a man in his dꝛeme is dꝛenched ſoꝛe
And whã that Pertelot thus herde him roꝛe
She was agaſt, and ſaid herte dere what eyleth you to grone in this manere
Ye be a very ſleper, fie foꝛ ſhame.

And he anſwerd thus, by God madame
I pꝛay you, that ye take it not in greꝛe
By God I mette, I was in ſuche miſchiefe
Right now, that yet mine hert is ſoꝛe afright
Now God (ꝙ he) my ſweuen reꝛede aright
And kepe my body out of foule pꝛiſoun
Me mette, that I romed vp and doun
Within our yerde, where I ſawe a beeſt was like an houũd, & would haue made aꝛeſt
Upon my body, and would haue had me deꝛd
His colour was betwirt yelow and reed
And tipped was his taile, and both his eeꝛes with black, vnlike the remenãt of his heꝛes
His ſnoute ſmall, with glowing eyen twey
Yet foꝛ his loke, almoſt foꝛ feare I dey
This cauſeth me my groning doutleſſe.

I way (ꝙ ſhe) fie foꝛ ſhame hertleſſe
Alas (ꝙ ſhe) foꝛ by God aboue
Now haue ye loſte my hert, and al my loue
I can not loue a cowarde by my faithe
Foꝛ certes, what ſo any woman ſaithe
We all deſire, if that it might be
To haue huſbondes, hardy, wiſe, and fꝛe
And ſecrete, and no nigarde, ne no ſole
Ne him that is agaſt of euery tole
Ne none auantour, by that God aboue
How durſt ye ſay foꝛ ſhame, vnto your loue
That any ſweuen might make you a feꝛde
Haue ye no mannes hert, and haue a beꝛde
Alas, and con ye be a feꝛde of ſweuenis
Nothing but vanite god wotte in ſweuenis

Sweuens ben engendꝛed of repleccions
And of lume, and of compleccions when humours ben to habũdant in a wight certes this dꝛeme, which ye haue met to night
I tel you trouthe, ye may truſt me
Cometh of ſuperfluite, and reed colour pale
Which cauſe folke to dꝛede in her dꝛemes
Of aꝛowes, and of fire with reed lemes
Of reed beeſtes, that woll hem bite
Of contekꝛe, and of waſpes great and lite
Right as the humour of melancolye
Cauſeth many a man in ſlepe to cꝛye
Foꝛ fere of great bulles, and beres blake
Oꝛ els that blacke diuels wol hem take

Of other humours couthe I tell alſo
That werke a man in ſlepe muche wo
But I wol paſſe, as lightly as I can.
Lo Caton, whiche that was ſo wiſe a man
Said he not thus, do no foꝛce of dꝛemes

Now ſir (ꝙ ſhe) when we flie fꝛo the bemes
Foꝛ goddes loue, as taketh ſome laxatiue
Up peril of my ſoule, and of my life
I counſaile you the beſt, I wol not lie
That bothe of colour, and of melancolye
Ye purge you, and foꝛ ye ſhul not taꝛie
Though in this toune, be none apotecaꝛie
I ſhal my ſelfe two herbes teche you.
That ſhall be foꝛ your heale, & foꝛ your pꝛo

And

And in our yerde, tho herbes shall I finde
The whiche I haue of her propertee by kinde
To purge you bineth, and eke aboue
For yet not this, for goddes owne loue
Ye be right colerike of complection
Where the sunne is in his ascention
Ne finde you not replete of humours hote
For if ye do, I dare wel lay a grote
That ye shal haue a feuer terciane
Or elsan ague, that may be your bane
A day or two, ye shall haue digestiues
Of wormes, or ye take your laraties
Of laurel, centorie, and of fumetere
Or els of elder beries, that growe there
Of Catapuce, or of gaitres bereis
Of herbe yue, growing in our yerde ỹ mery is Pluche hem vp as thei growe, & eate hem in
Be mery husbonde, for your father kin
Dredeth no dreme, I can say no more
Madame (q̃ he) gramercy of your lore
But natheless, as touching dan Caton
That of wisdome hath so great renoun
Though he bade no dremes for to drede
By God, men may in olde bokes rede
Of many a man, more of auctorite
Than euer Caton was, so mote I the
That al the reuers saieth of his sentence
And haue wel founde by experience
That dremes ben significacions
As wel of ioye, as of tribulacions
That folke endure, in this life present
There nedeth to make of this none argumẽt
The very preue sheweth it in dede
One of the greatest auctours that men rede
Saith thus, that whilom two felowes went
On pilgrimage, in ful good entent
And happed so, thei come in to a toun
Where as there was suche congregacion
Of people, and eke of straite herbigage
That thei ne founde, as muche as a cotage
In whiche thei both might logged be Wherfore thei mote of necessite
As for that night, departe company
And eche of hem goeth to his hostelry
And take his lodging, as it would fall
That one of hem, was lodged in a stall
Farre in a yerde, with oxen of the plough
That other man was lodged wel inough
As was his auenture, or his fortune
That vs gouerneth all, as in comune
And so befel, longe or it were day
This man mette in his bedde, there as he lay
How that his felowe gan vpon him call
And said (alas) for in an ores stall
This night shal I be murdered, there I lie
Now helpe me dere brother or I die
In al haste, come to me (he said)
This man out of his slepe for feare abraid
But whan he was waked of his slepe
He turned him, and took of this no kepe
Him thought his dreme was but a vanite
Thus twise in his slepe dremed he
And at thirde time, yet his felawe
Cam as him thought, & said I nowe am slawe
Beholde my bloudy woundes, depe and wide
Arise vp erly, in the morow tide
And at the west gate of the toun (q̃ he)
A carte ful of donge, there shalt thou se
In whiche my body is hide ful priuely
Do thou that carte areste boldely
My golde caused my deth, for thy to saine
And told him euery point how he was slaine
With a ful petous face, pale of hewe
And trust wel his dreme he founde right trewe
For on the morow, as sone as it was day
To his felowes inne, he took the way
And when that he came to the ores stall
After his felowe, he began to call.
The hostelere answerde him anon
And said, sir your felowe is gon
As sone as it was day, he went out of ỹ toun
This man gan fal in suspeccion
Remembring of his dremes that he mette
And forth he goeth, no lenger would he lette
Vnto the west gate of the toune, and fonde
A donge carte, as it were to donge londe
That was arated in the same wise
As ye haue herde the deed man deuise
And with hardy herte he gan to crie
Vengeaunce and iustice of this felonie
My felowe murdred is this same night
And in this carte he lieth, gaping vpright
I cry out on the ministers (q̃ he)
That should kepe and rule this cite
Harowe alas, here lieth my felowe slaine
What should I more of this tale saine?
The people out start & cast the cart to grounde
And in the middell of the donge thei founde
The deed man, that murdred was al newe.
O blisful God, that arte so good and trewe
Lo, howe thou bewrayest murdre alway
Murdre wol out, that se we day by day
Murdre is so wlatsome and abhominable
To God, that so iuste is and reasonable
That he ne wol it suffre healed to be Though it abide a yere, two, or three Murdre wol out, this is my conclusioun
And right anon, the ministers of the toun
Haue hent the carter, and sore him pined
And eke the hostelere so sore engined

That thei beknew her wickednelle anone
And were honged by the necke bone
Here maie ye ſe that dremes ben to drede.
And certes, in the ſame lefe I rede
Right in the nert chapiter after this
I gabbe not, ſo haue I ioye and blis
Two men would haue paſſed ouer the ſe
For certaine cauſes, into a ferre countre
If the winde ne had be contrarie
That made him in a cite to tarie
That ſtode ful mery vpon an hauen ſide
But on an day, ayenſt an euen tide
The winde gan chaunge, and blewe as hem leſt
Joly and glad, they went to reſt
And caſt hem ful erly for to ſaile
But herken, to one man fell a great meruaile
To one of him in ſleping as he lay
He met a wonders dreme, again the day
Him thought a man ſtode by his beddes ſide
And him commaunded, that he ſhould abide
And ſaid him thus, if thou to morow wende
Thou ſhalt be dreint, my tale is at an ende.
He woke, and tolde his felow what he mette
And praied him his voyage for to lette
As for that day, he prayd him for to abide
His felowe that laie by his beddes ſide
Gan for to laugh, and ſcorned him ful faſte
No dreme (quod he) may ſo my herte agaſte
That I woll let for to do my thinges
I ſet not a ſtrawe for thy dreminges
For ſweuens ben but vanites and iapes
Men meten al day of oules and of apes
And eke of many a maſe ther withall
And dremen of thing that neuer was, ne ſhal
But ſithe I ſe that thou wolt here abide
And thus ſlouthe wilfully thy tide
God wote it rueth me, and haue good day
And thus he toke his leue, and went his way
But er he had halfe his courſe ſailed
I not why, ne what miſchaunce it ayled
But caſuelly the ſhippes botome to rent
And ſhip and men, vnder the water went
In ſight of other ſhippes beſide
That with hem ſailed at the ſame tide
And therfore faire Pertelot ſo dere
By ſuch enſamples olde, maiſt thou lere
That no man ſhould be to recheleſſe
Of dremes, for I ſay the doutleſſe
That many a dreme ful ſore is for to drede
Lo in the life of ſaint Kenelme we rede
That was Kenelphus ſonne, the noble king
Of Mercurike, how Kenelm mette a thing
A litel er he were murdred on a day
His murder in his viſion he ſay
His norice him expouned it euery dele
His ſweuen, and badde him kepe him wele
For treaſon, but he was but ſeuen yere olde
And therfore litell tale he therof tolde
Of any dreme, ſo holy was his herte
By God, I had rather than my ſherte
That ye haue herde his legende, as haue I Dame Pertelot, I ſay to you truely
Macrobius, that writeth the auiſion
In Affrike, of the worthy Scipion
Affirmeth dremes, and faieth that thei been Warning of thinges, that we after ſeen
And ferthermore I pray you loketh well
In the olde Teſtament, of Daniell
Yf he held dremes for vanite
Rede eke of Joſeph, and there ſhal ye ſe
Wonders ben ſomtime, but I ſay nat all
Warning of thinges, that after ſhall fall.
Lo of Egipt the king, that hight Pharao
His baker, and his butteler alſo
Wheder they felt none effecte in dremes:
Who ſo wol ſeke actes of ſondrie remes:
May rede of dremes a wonder thing
Lo Creſus whiche was of Lide king
Mette he not that he, ſatte vpon a tre Whiche ſignified he ſhould honged be Lo Adromeda, that was Hectors wife
That day that Hector ſhould leſe his life
She dremed in the ſame night beforne
How the life of Hector ſhould be lorne
Yf that day he went vnto bataile
She warned him, but it might not auaile
He went for to fight neuer the leſſe
But he was ſlaine anone of Achilles
But that tale is to long to tell
And eke it is nigh day I may nat dwell
Shortely I ſay, as for concluſion
That I ſhall haue of this auiſion
Aduerſite: and I ſay farthermore
That I ne tell of laxatiues no force
For they ben venemous, I wote it wele
I hem defie, I loue hem neuer a dele
But let vs ſpeke of mirthe, and ſtinte all this Madame Pertelot, ſo haue I blis
Of one thing God hath me ſent large grace
For when I ſe the beautie of your face
Ye ben ſo ſcarlet reed about your eyen
It maketh al my drede for to dien
For alſo ſiker, as In principio
Mulier eſt hominis confuſio.
Madame, the ſentence of this latin is Woman is mannes ioye and his blis
For when I feele on night your ſoft ſide
Al be it that I may not on you ride
For that our perche is made ſo nare we alas
I am ſo full of ioye and of ſolas

That

That I defie bothe sweuen and dreme
And with ỹ word he flewe doun fro the beme
For it was day, and eke the hennes all
And with a chuckle, he gan them for to call
For he had founde a corne lay in the yarde
Royall he was, and no more a ferde
He fedde his Pertelot twenty time
And tradde her eke as ofte, er it was prime
He loketh as it were a grimme leoun
And on his toes he romed vp and doun
Him deined not to set his fete to the grounde
He chuckled, when he had a corne ifounde
And to him than ran his wiues all
As royall as a prince in his hall
Leaue I this Chaunteclere, in his pasture
And after woll I tel of his aduenture.
Whan ỹ moneth in whiche ỹ world began
That hight Marche, ỹ God first made man
Was complete, and passed were also Sith Marche began, twenty daies and two Befell that Chaunteclere, in al his pride
His seuen wiues walking him beside Cast vp his eien to the bright sunne
That in the signe of Taurus was irunne
Fourty degrees and one, and somwhat more
He knew by kinde, and by none other lore
That it was prime, & crew with blisful steuen
The sunne he saide is clombe vp to heuen
Fourty degrees & one, & somwhat more I wis
Madame Pertelot, my worldes blisse
Herken how this blisful birdes singe
And se the freshe floures how they springe
Full is min hert of reuel, and solas
But sodainly him fel a sorowfull caas
For euer the latter ende of ioye is wo
God wote, worldely ioye is soone ago
And if a rethore coud faire endite
He in a cronicle might sauely write
As for a soueraine notabilite
Now euery wise man herken to me
This storye is al so true I vndertake
As is the boke of Launcelot du lake
That women holden in ful great reuerence
Now wol I turne ayen to my sentence.
A col fox ful of sleight and iniquitie)
That in the groue had wonned yeres thre
By high imaginacion a forne caste
The same night, thrugh the hedge braste
Into the yerde, there Chaunteclere the faire
Was wont and eke his wiues to repaire
And in a bedde of wortes still he lay
Til it was passed vndren of the day
Waiting his time, on Chaunteclere to fall
As gladly done these homicides all
That in a waite lie to murdre men

O false murdrer, rucking in thy den
O newe Scariot, and newe Ganilion
False dissimuler, O greke Sinon
That broughtest Troy vtterly to sorowe
O Chaunteclere, acursed be the morowe
That thou in thy yerde flewe from the bemes
Thou were ful well warned by thy dremes
That ilke day was perillous to the
But what ỹ God afore wote, muste nedes be
After the opinion of certaine clerkes Witnesse of him, that any clerke is That in scole is great altercacion
In this matter, and great disputacion
And hath ben, of an hundred thousande men
But I ne can nat boulte it to the bren
As can the holy doctour saint Austin
Or Boece, or the bishop Bradwardin
Whether that goddes worthy foreweting
Straineth me nedely to do a thing
(Nedely clepe I simple necessite)
Or if the free choice be graunted me
To do the same thing, or do it nought
Though God forewote it, or it was wrought
Or of his weting straineth neuer a dele
But by necessite condicionele
I wol not haue to done of suche matere
My tale is of a cocke, as ye shal here
That toke his counsaile of his wife with sorowe
To walke in the yerde vpon the morowe
That he had met the dreme, as I you tolde
Womens counsailes ben oft ful colde
Womens counsaile brought vs first to wo
And made Adam fro paradise to go
There as he was ful mery, and wel at ease
But for I not, whom I might displease
If I counsaile of wemen would blame
Passe ouer, I said it in my game (tere
Redeth authors, wher they trete of such mat-
And what they say of women, ye mowe here
These ben the Cockes wordes, and not mine
I can of women no harme deuine.
Faire in the sonde, to bathe her merely Lieth Pertelot, and al her sustres by Agenst the sunne, and Chaunteclere so free
Songe merier, than the Mermaide in the se
For Philiologus, saieth vtterly
How that they singen wel and merely
And so befell as he caste his eye
Among the wortes on a butterflie
He was ware of the fox that lay ful lowe
Nothing than list him for to crowe
But cried cocke cocke, and vp he sterte
As one that was affraide in his herte
For naturally beestes desireth to flie
Fro her contrarie, if he may it se

Tho he neuer erst had seen it with his eye.
This Chaunteclere, when he gan him espie
He would haue fledde, but the fore anone
Said gentel sir, alas: what wol ye done?
Be ye affraide of me, that am your frende?
Nowe certes: I were worse than a fende yf I to you would harme, or villanny
I am not come your counsaile to espie
But trewely the cause of my comminge
Was onely to here howe ye singe
For sothly ye haue as mery a steuen
As any angel hath, that is in heuen
Therwith ye haue of musike more feling
Than had Boece, or any that can sing
My lorde your father, God his soule blesse
And eke your mother of her gentelnesse
Haue in my house ben, to my great ease
And certes sir, ful faine would I you please.
But for men speken of singing, I wol sey
So mote I brouken wel mine eyen twey
Saue you, ne herde I neuer man so singe
As did your father in the morninge
Certes it was of herte, al that he song
And for to make his voice more strong
He would so paine him, yt with both his eyen
He must winke, so loude he must crien
And stonden on his tiptoes ther withall
And stretche forth his necke, longe and small
And eke he was of suche discrecion
That there was no man in no region
That him in songe or wisdome might passe
I haue wel redde dan Burnel the asse
Among his verses, how yt there was a Cocke
For that a preestes sonne yaue him a knocke
Upon his legges, while he was yonge and nice
He made him for to lese his benefice
But certaine there is no comparison
Betwirt the wisdom and discrecion
Of your father, and of his subtilte
Nowe singeth sir, for saint charite
Let se, can ye your father counterfete.
This Chaunteclere his winges gan to bete
As a man that could not his treson aspie
So was he rauished with his flaterie
Alas ye lordes, many a false flaterour
Is in your courte, and many a false lesingour
That please you wel more, by my faith
Than he that sothfastnesse vnto you saith
Redeth Ecclesiast of flaterie
Beware ye lordes of her trecherie.
This Chaunteclere stode hie vpon his toos
Stretching his necke, and held his eyen cloos
And gan to crowe loude for the nones
And dan Russel the fox start vp at ones
And by the gorget hent Chaunteclere
And on his backe, toward yt woode him bere
For yet was there no man that him sued
O destine, that maiste not be eschued
Alas that Chaunteclere fleweth fro the bemes
Alas his wife rought not of dremes
And on a friday fill al this mischaunce
O venus that art goddesse of pleasaunce
Sithnes yt thy seruaunt was this Chaunteclere
And in thy seruice did al his powere
More for delite, than the worlde to multiplie
Why woldest yt suffre him on thy day to die?
O Gaulfride, dere maister soueraine
That whan yt worthy kig Richard was slaine
With shot, complainedest his deth so sore
Why ne had I nowe thy science and thy lore
The fridaye for to chide, as did ye
For on a friday, sothly slaine was he Than wold I shewe you how yt I could plaine
For Chauntecleres drede, and for his paine.
Certes such cry, ne lamentacion
Nas neuer of ladies made, whan that Ilion
Was won, and Pirrus with his bright swerd
Whan he hent king Priam by the berde
And slough him (as saieth Eneidos)
As made al the hennes in the cloos
Whan they had lost of Chaunteclere the sight
But soueraynly dame Pertelot shright
Wel louder than did Hasdruballes wife
Whan that her husbonde hath lost his life
And that the Romains had brent Cartage
She was so ful of turment and of rage
That wilfully in to the fire she sterte
And brent her selfe, with a stedfast herte.
O wofull hennes, right so cried ye
As whan that Nero brent the cite
Of Rome, cried the senatours wiues
For that her husbondes should lese her liues
Withouten gilte Nero hath hem slaine
Nowe wol I turne to my tale againe.
The sely widowe, and her doughters two Herde the hennes crie and make wo
And out at the doore sterte they anon
And saw the fore toward the woode gon
And bare vpon his backe the Cocke away
And cried out harow and well away
Ha the fore, and after hem they ran
And eke with staues, many a nother man
Ran Colle our dogge, Talbot, and eke Garlond
And Malkin, with her distaffe in her honde
Ran Cowe and Calfe, and eke the very Hogges
For they so sore aferde were of the dogges
And shouting of men, and of women eke
They ran so, her hert thought to breke
They yelleden as fendes do in hell
The Duches cried as men would hem quell

The

The Geese for feare flewe ouer the trees
Out of the Hiues came the swarme of Bees
So hidous was the noise, a benedicite
Certes Iacke Strawe, ne his meine
Ne made neuer shoutes halfe so shrill
Whan that thei would any Flemming kill
As that daie was made vpon the Fore
Of brasse thei blewe the trompes and of bore
Of horne & bone, in which thei blew & pouped
And therwith thei shriked and shouted
It seemed, as though heauen should fall
Now good men I praie you herken all.
Lo how fortune tourneth sodainly
The hope and the pride of her enemy
This Cocke that laie vpon the Fore bache
In all his drede, vnto the Fore he spake
And saied, sir: if I were as ye yet should I saie, as wise God helpe me Tourneth ayen, ye proude churles all
A very pestilence vpon you fall
Now am I come vnto this woodes side
Maugre your hed, the Cocke shall here abide
I woll him eate in faith, and that anon
The Fore answerd, in faith it shal be doen
And as he spake the worde, all sodainly
This Cocke brake from his mouth deliuerly
And high vpon a tree he flewe anon
And whan the Fore sawe that he was gon
Alas (q he) O Chaunteclere alas
I haue (q he) doe to your trespas
Inasmoche as I made you aferde
Whã I you hent, & brought out of your yerde
But sir, I did it not in no wicked entent
Come doun, and I shall tel you what I ment
I shall you saie sothe, God helpe me so.
Naie than (q he) I shrewe vs bothe two
And first I shrewe my self, both blood & bones
If thou begile me ofter than ones
Thou shalt no more with thy flatterie
Doe me sing with a winking ye
For he that winketh, whan he should se
All wilfully, God let him neuer thee.
Naie (q ỹ Fore) but God yeue him mischance
That is so indiscrete of gouernaunce
That iangleth, whã that he should haue pees
Lo, soche it is for to be recheles
And negligent, and trust on flatterie
But ye that holde this tale a lie
As of a Fore, of a Cocke, and of a Hen
Taketh the moralite good men
For sainct Poule saieth, all that written is
To our doctrine it is written i wis Taketh the frute, and let the chaffe be still Now good God, if that it be thy will
As saieth my lorde, so make vs all good men
And bring vs to the high blesse. Amen.

Here endeth the tale of the Nonnes Preste, and here foloweth the Manciples Prologue.

Sir Nonnes Preste, oure hoste saied anone
I blessed be thy breche and euery stone
This was a merie tale of Chauntecler
But by my trouth, if thou were seculer
Thou woldest be a tredfoule a right
For if thou haue corage as thou hast might Thee were nede of hennes, as I wene ye more than seuen times seuentene
See whiche braunes hath this gentle priest
So greate a necke, and soche a large breest
He loketh as a Sparhauke with his yen
Him nedeth not his colours for to dien
With Brasill, ne with grain of Portingale
But sir, faire fall you for your tale
And after that, he with full merry chere
Saied to an other man, as ye shall here.
Wote ye not where stondeth a little toune
Whiche that is called Bob vp and doune
Under the blee, in Caunterburie waie
There gan our hoste to iape and to plaie
And saied, sirs: what: Dunne is in the mire
Is there no man, for praier ne for hire
That woll awake our felowe behinde
A theefe him might full lightly rob and binde
See how he nappeth, se for cockes bones
How he woll fall from his hors at ones
Is that a Coke of London, with mischaunce
Doe him come forth, he knoweth his penaunce
For he shall tell a tale by my fey
Although it be not worth a botell of Hey
Awake thou Coke (q he) God yeue the sorow
What eileth thee to slepe by the morow
Hast thou had fleen al night, or art thou drõk
Or hast thou al night wt some queen iwonke
So that thou maiest not hold vp thine hedde
This Cokeỹ was ful pale, & nothing redde
Saied, sir hoste: so God my soule blesse
There is fallen on me greate heuinesse
But I not why, me were leuer to slepe
Than the best gallon of wine in Chepe.
well (q the Manciple) if it maie doe ease
To thee sir Coke, and to no wight displease
Whiche that here ride in this companie
And that our hoste will of his curtesie
I woll as nowe excuse thee of thy tale

For in good faithe thy visage is full pale Thine eyen dase, sothly as me thinketh
And wel I wote, thy breth ful soure stinketh
That sheweth wel thou art not well disposed Of me certain thou shalt not be glosed
See how he galpeth, lo this dronken wight
As though he would vs swalowe anon right
Holde close thy mouthe, by thy father kin
The deuill of hell set his foote therein
Thy cursed breath will infect vs all
Fie stinking swine, fie foule mote thee befall
Taketh hede sirs of this lustie man
Now swete sir, woll ye iuste at the van Thereto me thinketh ye be well shape
I trowe that ye haue dronken wine ape
And that is whan men plaie at strawe.
And with his speach ỳ coke wared al wrawe
And on the Manciple he gan to nodde fast
For lacke of speache: adoun his hors him cast
Where as he laie, till that men him vp toke
This was a faire cheuesaunce of a coke
Alas that he ne had holde him by his ladill
And er that he ayen were in the sadill
There was a greate schouing to and fro
To lift him vp, and moche care and wo
So vnweldy was this sely palled goste
And to the Manciple than spake our hoste.
Because that drinke hath domination
Vpon this man, by my saluacion
I trowe he ldely woll he tell his tale
For were it wine, or old moiste ale
That he hath dronke, he speketh lo in the nose
And sniueleth fast, and eke hath the pose.
He also hath to doe more than inough
To kepe him on his caple out of the slough
And if he fall from his caple eft sone
Than shall we all haue inough to doen
In liftyng vp his dronken corse
Tell on thy tale, of him make I no force.
But yet Manciple, in faith thou art to nice
Thus openly to reprene him of his vice
An other daie he woll parauenture
Reclaime thee, and bring thee to lure
I meane he speake will of smale thinges
And for to pinche at thy reckeninges
That were not honest, if it came to prefe.
Now (q the Mãciple) ỳ wer a great mischefe
So might he bring me into the snare
Yet had I leuer paie for the Mare
Which he rideth on, thã he should wt me striue
I woll not wrathe him, so mote I thriue
That I spake, I saied it but in bourde
And wote ye what, I haue here in my gourde
A draught of wine, ye of a ripe grape
And right anon ye shall se a good iape
This Coke shall drinke thereof, if I maie
Up pain of my life he woll not saie naie
And certainly, to tellen as it was
Of this vessell the Coke dranke fast, alas
What nedeth it, he dranke inough beforne
And whan he had pouped in his horne
To the Manciple he toke the gourde again
And of the drinke the Coke was full fain
And thonked him, in soche wise as he coud
Than gan our hoste to laugh wõder loud
And saied: I se well it is necessary
Where that we gon, good drinke wt vs to carie
For that will tourne rancour and disease
To accord and loue, a many a worde to peise
O Bacchus, iblessed be thy holy name
That so canst tourne earnest into game
Worshipped and thonke be to thy deite
Of that matter ye get no more of me.
Tell on thy tale thou Manciple, I thee praie
Well sir (q he) herkeneth what I saie.

Here endeth the Manciples Prologue, and here followeth his Tale.

Whã Phebus dwelled here in yearthly adoun
As olde bookes make mencioun
He was the moste lustie bacheler
Of all the worlde, and eke the best archer
He slough Pheton the serpent, as he laie
Sleping ayenst the Sonne vpon a daie
And many an other noble worthy dede
He with his bowe wrought, as mẽ mowe rede
Plaie he could on euery minstralcie
And sing, that it was a melodie
To here of his clere voice the soun
Certes the king of Thebes, Amphion
That with his song, walled the cite Could neuer sing halfe so well as he Thereto he was the semelist man
That is or was, sithe the worlde began
What nedeth it his feture to discriue?
For in this worlde nas none so faire a liue
He was therewith fulfilled of gentilnesse
Of honour, and of perfite worthinesse
This Phebus, ỳ was floure of bachelerie
As well in fredome, as in chiualrie
For his disport, in signe eke of victorie
Of Pheton, so as telleth vs the storie
Was wont to beare in his honde a bowe
Now had this Phebus in his hous a crowe within

Within a cage ifostred many a daie
And taught it speache, as men teache a Jaie
White was this crowe, as is a white Swan
And counterfete the speache of euery man
He could, whan he should tell a tale
There was in all this world no Nightingale
He could, by an hundred thousande dele
Sing so wonderly mery and wele
Now had this Phebus in his hous a wife
Whiche that he loued more than his life
And night and daie, did euer his diligence
Her for to please, and doe her reuerence
Saue onely, if I the soth shall sain
Jelous he was, and wold haue kept her fain
For him were lothe, iaped for to be
And so is euery wight, in soche degre
But all for nought, for it auaileth nought
I good wife, that is clene of werke & thought
Should not be kept in none awaite certain
And truely the labour is in vain
To kepe a shrewe, for it woll not be
This holde I for a very nicete
To spill labour, for to kepe wiues
Thus writeth old clerkes in her liues
But now to purpose, as I first began
This worthy Phebus, doeth all that he can
To please her, wening through soch pleasaice
And for his manhode, & for his gouernaunce
That no man should put him from her grace
But God it wote, there maie no man enbrace
Is to distrain a thing, whiche that nature
Hath naturally set in a creature
Take any birde, and put him in a cage
And doe all thine entent, and thy corage
To foster it tenderly with meate and drinke
Of all dainties that thou canst bethinke
And kepe it also cleanly as thou maie
Although the cage of gold be neuer so gaie
Yet had this birde, by twentie thousand fold
Leuer in a forest, that is wide and cold
To eate wormes, and soche wretchednesse
For euer this birde will doe his busines
To escape out of his cage, whan he maie
His libertie the birde desireth aie
Let take a Cat, and foster her with milke
And tender flesche, and make her couch of silke
And let her se a Mouse go by the wall
Anon she weiueth flesche, and couche, and all
And euery deintie, that is in that hous
Soche appetite hath she to eate the Mous
Lo here hath lust his dominacion
And appetite fleeth discrecion.
I she wolfe, hath also a vilanous kinde
The leudest wolfe that she maie finde
Or lest of reputacion, that woll she take
In time whan her lust to haue a make
All these enlamples speake I by these men
That been vntrue, and nothing by women
For men haue euer a licorous appetite
On lower thing, to performe her delite
Than on her wiues, be thei neuer so faire
Ne neuer so true, ne so debonaire
Flesche is so newfangell, with mischaunce
That we ne con in nothing haue pleasaunce
That sowneth vnto vertue, any while
This Phebus, whiche thought no gile
Disceiued was, for all his solite
For vnder him an other had she
A man of little reputacion
Nought worth to Phebus, in comparison
The more harme is, it happeth oft so
Of whiche there cometh moche harme, & wo
And so befell, whan Phebus was absent
His wife anon hath for her lemman sent Her lemman, certes that is a knauishe speche
Forgeue it me, and that I you beseche.
The wise Plato saieth, as ye mowe rede
The worde must nedes acorde with the dede
If men should tell properly a thing
The worde must cosin be to the working.
I am a boistous man, right thus saie I
There is but little difference truely
Betwirt a wife, that is of hie degre
If of her body dishonest she be
And a poore wenche, other than this
If it so be thei werke both amis
But for the gentill is in estate aboue
She shall be called his lady and his loue
And for that tother is a poore woman
She shal be called his wenche or his lemman
And God it wote, mine owne dere brother
Men laie as lowe that one as that other Right so betwirt a titlelesse tiraunt
And an outlawe, or a thefe erraunt
The same I saie, there is no difference
To Alexander was told this sentence
That for the tiraunt is of greater might
By force of meine, to flea doune right
And bren hous and home, and make al plain
Lo therfore is he called a capitain
And for the outlawe hath but small meine
And maie not doe so greate an harme, as he Ne bring a countrey to so greate mischief
Men callen him an outlawe or a thief.
But for I am a man not vertruele
I woll not tell of vertes neuer a dele
I woll go to my tale, as I began,
Whā Phebus wife had sent for her lēman
Anon thei wrought all their lufte volage
This white crowe, that hing aie in the cage

Beheldc

The Manciples tale.

Beheldе their werke, and saied neuer a worde
And whan home was cum Phebus the lorde
This crowe song, cuckowe, cuckowe, cuckow what birde (q Phebus) what singest thou
Ne were thou not wont so merily to sing
That to my harte it was reioising
To heare thy voice, alas, what song is this?
By God (q he) I sing not amis
Phebus (q he) for all thy worthinesse
For all thy beaute, and thy gentilnesse
For all thy song, and thy minstralcie
For all thy waiting, blered is thine iye
With one of little reputacion
Not worth to thee in comparison
The mountenãce of a gnat, so mote I thriue
For on the bedde, thy wife I sawe him swiue what wol you more? q crow anon him told
By sad tokens, and by wordes bold
How that his wife had doen her lecherie
Him to greate shame, and to greate villanie
And tolde him eke, he sawe it with his iyen
This Phebus gan awaiward for to prien
Him thought his wofull harte brast a two
His bowe he bent, and set therin a flo
And in his ire he hath his wife slain
This is the effect, there is no more to sain
For sorowe whereof he brake his minstralsie
Both Harpe and Lute, Getern, and Sautrie
And eke he brake his arowes, and his bowe
And after that, thus spake he to the crowe
Traitour (q he) with tong of Scorpion
Thou hast me brought to my confusion
Alas that I was wrought, why nere I dedde
O dere wife, O gemme, O lustie hedde
That were to me so sad, and eke so true
Now liest thou dedde, with face pale of hewe
Full giltelesse, that durst I sweare I wis
O rakell honde, to doe so foule amis
O troubled wit, O ire retcheleſſe
That vnauised smitest giltelesse
O wantrust, full of false suspeccion
Where was thy wit and thy discrecion
O euery man beware of rekilnesse
Ne trowe nothing, without strong witnesse
Smite not to sone, or thou wete why
And be auised well and sikerly
Or ye doe any execucion vpon your ire, for suspection
Alas, a thousande folke hath rekell ire
Fully for doen, and brought hem in the mire
Alas for sorowe I woll my self slē
And to the crowe, O false theefe saied he
I woll quite anon thy false tale
Thou song whilom, like a Nitingale
Now shalt thou false theefe, thy song forgone
And eke thy white fethers euerychone
Ne neuer in all thy life shalt thou speake
Thus shall men on a traitour be awreake
Thou and thine offspring euer shall be blake
Ne neuer swete noise shall ye make
But euer cryng ayenst tempest and rain
In token, that through thee my wife is slain
And to the crowe he stert, and that anon
And pulled of his white fethers euerichon
And made him blacke, & reft him al his song
And eke his speache, & out at doore him flong
Into the deuill, whiche I him betake
And for this cause been all crowes blake.
Lordinges, by this ensãple I wol you pray
Beware, and take kepe what I saie
Ne telleth neuer no man in your life
How that an other man hath dight his wife
He woll you hate mortally certain
Dan Salomon, as wise clerkes sain
Teacheth a man to kepe his tong well
But as I saied, I am not textuell
But natheleſſe, thus taught me my dame
My sonne thinke on the crowe a godsname
My sonne kepe wel thy tong, & kepe thy frend
A wicked tong is worse than a fend
My sonne, from a fende men maie hem bles
My sonne, God of his endelesse goodnesse walled a tong with teethe, and lippes eke
For man should him auise what he speke
My sonne, full oft for to mikell speache
Hath many a man be spilt, as clerkes teache
But for little speache, spoken auisedly
Is no man shent, to speake generally
My sonne, thy tong shouldest thou restrain
At all times, but whan thou doest thy pain
To speake of God, in honour and praien
The first vertue sonne, if thou wolt leren
Is to restrain, and kepe well thy tong
Thus learne children, whan thei be yong
My sonne, of mikell speaking vnauised
(There lasse speaking had inough sufficed)
Cometh mikell harme, thus was me taught
In moche speache, sinne wanteth naught
Wostе thou wherfore a rakell tong serueth
Right as a swerde forcutteth and forkerueth
An arme on two, my dere sonne right so
A tong cutteth frendship all a two
A iangler is to God abhominable
Rede Salomon, so wise and honourable
Rede Dauid in his Psalmes, rede Seneck
My sonne speake not, ne with thy hedde bek
Dissimyle as thou wer deef, if that thou here
The ianglour speaketh of perlous matter
The Flēming saieth, learne if that thou leste
That litle iangling causeth moche reste

My sonne, if thou no wicked worde hast said
Thee dare not drede for to be bewraid
But he that hath misdaied, I dare well sain
He maie by no waie clepe his worde again
Thing that is saied, is saied, and forth it goth
Though him repent, or him be neuer so loth
He is thrall to him, to whom he hath saied
I tale, for whiche is now euill apaied
My sonne beware, and be non authour new
Of tidinges, whether thei be false or true
Where so thou come, emong hie or lowe
Kepe well thy tong, and thinke on the crowe

Here endeth the Manciples tale, and here beginneth the Plowmannes Prologue.

THe Plowman pluckede vp his plowe whan Midsomer Moone was comen in
And saied his beestes shuld eate inowe
And lige in the Grasse vp to the chin
Thei been feble bothe Ore and Cowe
Of hem nis left but bone and skinne
He shoke of her shere and coulter of drowe
And vonged his harnis on a pinne.

He toke his tabarde and his staffe eke
And on his hedde he set his hat
And saied he would sainct Thomas seke
On pilgremage he goth forth plat
In scrippe he bare bothe bread and leke
He was forswonke and all forswat
Men might haue sen through both his cheekes
And euery wang toth and where it sat.

Our hoste beheldе well all about
And sawe this man was Sunne brent
He knewe well by his senged snout
And by his clothes that were to rent
He was a man wont to walke about
He nas not alwaie in cloister pent
He could not religiouslich lout
And therefore was he fully shent.

Our hoste him ared, what man art thou?
Sir (q he) I am an hine
For I am wont to go to the plow
And earne my meate yer that I dine
Co swette and swinke I make auowe
My wife and children therewith to finde
And serue God and I wist how
But we leude men been full blinde.

For clerkes saie we shullen be fain
For her liuelod swette and swinke
And thei right nought vs giue again
Neither to eate ne yet to drinke
Thei mowe by lawe, as thei sain
Vs curse and dampne to hell brinke
Thus thei putten vs to pain
With candles queint and belles clinke

Thei make vs thralles at her lust
And sain we mowe not els be saued
Thei haue the corne and we the dust
Who speaketh there again thei saie he raued
What man (q our hoste) canst thou preache
Come nere and tel vs some holy thing
Sir q he, I heard ones teache
A priest in pulpit a good preaching.

Saie one q our hoste, I thee beseche
Sir I am redy at your bidding
I praie you that no man me reproche
While that I am my tale telling.

Thus endeth the Prologue, and here foloweth the first parte of the tale.

AStorne strife is stired newe
In many stedes in a stounde
Of sondry sedes that been sewe
It semeth that some been vnsounde
For some be greate growen vngrounde
Some been couble, simple and small
Whether of hem is falser founde
The falser foule mote him befall.

That one side is that I of tell
Popes, Cardinals, and Prelates
Parsons, Monkes, and Freres fell
Priours, Abbottes, of greate estates
Of heauen and hell thei kepe the yeates
And Peters successours thei been all
This is demed by old dates
But falshed foule mote it befall.

The other side been poore and pale
And people put out of prease
And seme caitifes sore a cale
And euer in one without encrease
I clepeth lollers and loudese
Who toteth on hem thei been vntall

Thes

The Plowmannes tale.

Thei been araied all for the peace
But falshed foule mote it befall.

Many a countrey haue I sought
To knowe the falser of these two
But euer my trauaile was for nought
All so ferre as I haue go
But as I wandred in a wro
In a wood beside a wall
Two foules sawe I sit tho
The falser foule mote him befall.

That one did plete on the Popes side
A Grifon of a grimme stature
A Pellicane withouten pride
To these lollers laied his lure
He mused his matter in measure
To counsaile Christ euer gan he call
The Grifon shewed as sharpe as fire
But falshed foule mote it befall.

The Pellicane began to preache
Bothe of mercie and of meknesse
And saied that Christ so gan vs teache
And meke and merciable gan blesse
The Euangely beareth witnesse
Lambe he likeneth Christ ouer all
In tokening that he meekest was Sith pride was out of heauen fall.

And so should euery Christened be Priestes, Peters successours
Beth lowliche and of lowe degre
And vsen none yearthly honours
Neither croune, ne curious couetours
Ne pilloure, ne other proude pall
Ne nought to cofren vp great treasours
For falshed foule mote it befall.

Priestes should for no cattell plede
But chasten hem in charite
Ne to no battaile should men lede
For inhaunsing of her owne degre
Nat wilne sittinges in hie see
Ne souerainte in hous ne hall
All worldly worship defie and flee
For who so willeth highnes foule shall fall.

Alas who maie soche sainctes call
That wilneth welde yearthly honour
As lowe as Lucifere soche shall fall
In balefull blacknesse ibuilden her boure
That eggeth the people to erroure
And maketh them to hem thrall.
So Christ I holde soche one traitour
As lowe as Lucifer soche one shall fall.

That willeth to be kinges peeres
And higher than the Emperour
Some that were but poore Freres
Now wollen ware a warriour
God is not her gouernour
That holdeth no man his permagall while couetise is her counsailour
Ill soche falshed mote nede fall.

That hie on horse willeth ride
In glitterande golde of greate araie
Ipainted and portred all in pride
No common knight maie go so gaie
Chaunge of clothing euery daie
With golden girdels greate and small
As boistous as is Bere at baie
All soche falshed mote nede fall.

With pride punished the poore
And some thei sustain with taie
Of holie churche maketh an hore
And filleth her wombe with wine and ale
With money filled many a male
And chasten churches when thei fall
And telleth the people a leude tale
Soche false traitours foule hem befall.

With chaunge of many maner meates
With song and solas sitting long
And filleth her wombe, and fast fretes
And from the meate to the gong
And after meate with harpe and song
And eche man mote hem Lordes call
And hote spices euer emong
Soche false traitours foule hem fall.

And miters mo than one or two Iperled as the quenes hedde
I stacke of golde, and pirrie to
As heuie as it were made of lead
With clothe of gold bothe newe and redde
With glitterande gold as grene as gall
By dome will dampne men to dedde
All soche traitours foule hem fall.

And Christes people proudly curse
With brode boke, and brayng bell
To put pennies in her purse
Thei woll sell bothe heauen and hell
And in her sentence and thou wilt dwell
Thei willen gelle in her gaie hall
And though the soth thou of hem tell
In greate curling shalt thou fall.

That

That is blessed, that thei blesse
And cursed that thei curse woll
And thus the people thei oppresse
And haue their lordshippes at full
And many be marchauntes of woll
And to purs pennies wol come thrall
The pore people thei al to pull Suche false faitours foule hem fall

Lordes mote to hem loute
Obeysaunt to her brode blessing
Thei riden with her royal route
On a courser, as it were a king
With sadle of golde glittering
With curious harneis quaintly crallit
Stirroppes gaye of golde mastling
Ill suche falshed foule befal it

Christes ministers clepen they bene
And rulen al in robberie
But Antichriste thy seruen clene
Attired al in tirannie witnesse of Iyons prophecie
That Antichriste is her admirall
Cilleters attired in trecherie
Il suche faitours foule hem fall who saith that some of hem may sinne

He shalbe dome to be deed
Some of hem wol gladly winne
Ilayenst that whiche God forbed
Il holiest they clepen her heed
That of her rule is regall
Alas that euer thei eeten breed
For al such falshed wol foule fall

Her heed loueth al honour
And to be worshipped in worde and dede
Kinges mote to hem knele and coure
To the Apostles, that Christ forbede
To popes hestes suche taketh more hede
Than to kepe Christes commaundement
Of gold and siluer mote ben her wede
Thei holdeth him hole omnipotent

He ordaineth by his ordinaunce
To parishe prestes a powere
To another a greater auaunce
A greater point to his mistere
But for he is highest in erth here
To him reserueth he many a point
But to Christ that hath no pere
Reserueth he neither opin no ioynt

So semeth he aboue all
And Christ aboue him nothinge
Whan he sitteth in his stall
Dampneth and saueth as him thinke
Suche pride tofore God doth stinke
An angel bad Iyon to him not knele
But only to God do his bowinge
Suche willers of worship must nede euil fele

Thei ne clepen Christ, but sanctus deus
And clepen her heed Sanctissimus
They that suche a secte sewis
I trowe thei taken hem amisse
In erth here they haue her blisse
Her lye master is Beliall
Christes people from hem wisse
For al suche false will foule fall

They mowe both binde and lose
And all is for her holy life
To saue or dampne they mowe chose Betwene hem now is great strife
Many a man is killed with a knife
To wete which of hem haue lordship shall
For suche Christ suffred woundes fiue
For all suche falshed will foule fall

Christ said: Qui gladio percutit
With swerde shall die
He bad his prestes peace and grith
And bad hem not drede for to die
And bad them be both simple and slie
And carke not for no cattell
And trusteth on God that sitteth on hie
For al false shal foule fall

These wollen make men to swere
Ayenst Christes commaundement
And Christes members al to tere
On roode, as he were newe rysent
Suche lawes thei maken by commen assent
Eche on it chooweth as a ball
Thus the poore be fully shent
But euer falshed foule it befall

Thei vsen no simonie
But sellen churches and priories
Ne they vsen no enuie
But cursen al hem contraries
And hireth men by daies and yeres
With strength to holde hem in her stall
And culleth al her aduersaries
Therfore falshed foule thou fall with purse they purchase personage

With purse thei paynen hem to plede

The Plowmannes tale.

And men of warre they wol wage
To bring her enemies to the dede
And lordes liues they wol lede
And muche take, and giue but small
But he it so get, from it shal shede
And make suche falce right foule fall

They halowe nothing but for hire
Churche, font, ne vestement
And make orders in euery shire
But priestes pay for the parchement
Of iniatours they taken rent
Therwith they smere the shepes shall
For many churches ben oft suspent
And al suche falshed yet foule it fall

Some liueth not in lecherie
But haunten wenches, widowes, & wiues
And punisheth the poore for putree
Them selfe it vleth al their liues
And but a man to them shriues
To heuen come he neuer shall
He shal be cursed as be caitiues
To hel thei saine that he shal fall

There was more mercy in Maximien
And in Nero, that neuer was good
Than is now in some of them
Whan he hath on his furred hoode
They folowe Christ that shede his bloode
To heuen, as buckette in to the wall
Suche wreches ben worse than woode
And al suche faitours foule hem fall

They giue her almes to the riche
To maunteynours, and to men of lawe
For to lordes they wol be liche
In harlottes sonne not worthe an hawe
Sothfastnesse suche han slawe
They kembe her crokettes with chrisall
And drede of God they haue doune drawe
Al suche faitours foule hem fall

They maken parsons for the pennie
And Canons of her Cardinals
Vnnethes amongest hem al any
That he ne hath glosed the gospel fals
For Christe made neuer no Cathedrals
Ne with him was no Cardinal
With a redde hatte as vsen minstrals
But falshed foule mote it befall

Their tithing, and her offring bothe
They clemeth it by possession
Therof nil they none forgo
But robben men as raunsome
The tithinge of Turpe lucrum
With these maisters is meinall
Tithinge of bribry, and larson
Will make falshed full foule to fall

They taken to ferme her compnours
To harme the people what they may
To pardoners, and false faitours
Sell her seales I dare wel say
And all to holden great arraie
To multiply hem more metall
They drede ful litel domes day
Whan al suche shal foule fall

Suche harlottes shul men diffclaunder
For they shullen make her gree
And ben as proude as Alexander
And fain to the poore, wo be ye
By yere eche priest shal pate his fee
To encrease his lemmans call Suche heerdes shul wel iuel the
And al suche falce shul foule fall

And if a man be falsely famed
And wol make purgacioun
Than wol the officers be agramed
And assigne him fro toun to toun
So nede he muste pay raunsome
Though he be clene, as is Christall
And than haue an absolution
But al suche falce shul foule fall

Though he be giltie of the dede
And that he may money pate
Al the while his purse wol blede
He may vse it fro day to day
The bishopes officers gone ful gay
And this game they vsen ouer all
The poore to pil is al their pray
Al suche falce shul foule fall

Alas, God ordained neuer suche lawe
Ne no suche crafte of couetise
He forbad it by his lawe
Suche gouernours mowen of God agrise
For al his rules is right wise
These newe pointes ben pure papall
And goddes lawe they dispice
And al suche faitours shul foule fall

They saine that Peter had the key
Of heuen and hel, to haue and holde
I trowe Peter toke no money
For no sinnes that he solde

Such

Suche successours ben to bolde
In winning al their witte they wral
Per conscience is waren colde
And al suche faitours foule hem fal.

Peter was neuer so great a fole
To leaue his key with suche a lozell
Oz take suche cursed suche a tole
Pe was aduised nothing well
I trowe they haue the key of hell
Their maister is of that place marchall
Foz there thei dzessen hem to dwell
And with false Lucifer there to fall.

Thei ben as proude as Lucifarre
Isangry, and as enuious
From good faith they ben ful farre
Incouetise they ben curious
To catche catel as couitous Ishounde, that foz hungre wol yall vngodly, and vngracious
And uedely suche falshed shal foule fall.

The Pope and he were Peters heire
Methinke he erreth in this case
Whan chose of bishops is in dispaire
To chosen hem in diuers place
I lozde shal write to him foz grace Foz his clerke anone pray he shall
So shal he spede his purchase
And al suche false foule hem fall.

Though he can no moze good
I lozdes praier shalbe spedde
Though he be wilde of wil oz wood
Nat vnderstanding what men han redde
I leude boster, and that God forbedde
Is good a bishoppe is my hozse ball
Suche a Pope is foule bestedde
And at laste wol foule fall.

He maketh bishops foz erthly thanke
And nothing foz Christes sake
Suche that ben ful fat and ranke
To foule beale none hede they take Al is wel done what euer they make Foz they shal answere at ones foz all
Foz worldes thanke, such wozch and wake
And al suche false shal foule fall.

Suche that can nat her Crede
With praier shul be made prelates
Nother canne the gospell rede
Suche shul now welde hie estates
The hie goddes frendship hem makes Thei toteth on her summe totall
Suche bere the keyes of hel yates
And suche false shal foule fall

Thei forsake foz Christes loue
Trauaile, hungre, thurst, and colde
Foz they ben ozdzed ouer al aboue
Out of youth til they ben olde
By the doze they go, nat in to the folde
To helpe their shepe they nought traual
Hired men al suche I holde
And al suche false foule hem fal

Foz Christ our king thei wol forsake
And knowe him nought foz his pouerte
Foz Christes loue they wol wake
And dzinke piement ale aparte
Of God they seme nothing a ferde
Is lusty liueth, as did Lamual.
And dziuen her shepe into desert
Al suche faitours shul foule fal.

Christ hath. xii. Apostles here
Nowe say they, there may be but one
That may not erre in no manere
Who leueth not this ben lost echone
Peter erred, so did not Ihon
Why is he cleped the principall?
Christe cleped him Peter, but himselfe the stone
Al false faitours foule hem fal.

Why cursen they the croisery
Christes christen creatures
Foz bytwene him is now enuy
To be enhaunsed in honours
And Christen liuers with her labours
Foz they leuin on no man mortal
But do to deth with dishonours
And al suche false foule hem fal

What knoweth a tilloure at the plowe
The popes name, and what he hate
His crede sufficeth to him inowe
And knoweth a cardinal by his hatte
Rough is the pooze vnrightly latte
That knoweth Christ his God royal Suche maters be not worth a gnatte
But suche false faitours foule hem fal

A king shal knele and kisse his showe
Christ suffered a sinful to kisse his fete
Me thinketh he holdeth him hie inowe
So Lucifer did, that hie set
Suche one me thinketh him selfe forget
Either to the trouth he was nat cal

The Plowmannes tale.

Chriſte that ſuffered woundes wete
Shall make ſuche falſhed foule fall.

They laieth out her large nettes
For to take ſiluer and golde
Fillen coffers, and ſackes fettes
There as they ſoules catche ſholde
Her ſeruauntes be to them vnholde
But they can doublin their rentall
To bigge hem caſtles, and bigge hem holde
And al ſuche falſe foule hem fall.

Here endeth the firſt parte of this tale and here after foloweth the ſeconde parte.

TO accorde w this worde fall
No more Engliſhe can I finde
Shewe another nowe I ſhall
For I haue moche to ſaye behinde
How prieſtes han the people pinde
As curteis Chriſte hath me hinde
And put this matter in my minde
To make this maner men amende

Shortely to ſhende hem, and ſhewe nowe
How wrongfully they werche and walke
O hie God, nothing they tell me howe
But in goddes worde, telleth many a balke
In harnes holde hem and in halke
And preachen of tithes and offrende
And vntruely of the goſpel talke
For his mercy God it amende

What is Antichriſte to ſaie
But euen Chriſtes aduerſarie
Suche hath now ben many a daie
To Chriſtes bidding ful contraie
That from the trueth clene warry
Out of the way they ben wende
And Chriſtes people vntruely cary
God for his pitie it amende

They liuen contrary to Chriſtes life
In hie pride againſt meknelle
Againſt ſuffraunce they ben ſtrife
And angre ayenſt ſobrenelle
Againſt wiſedom wilfulnelle
To Chriſtes tales litel tende
Againſt meaſure outragiouſnelle
But whan God wol it may amende

Lordely life ayenſt lowelineſſe
And demin al without mercy
And couetiſe ayenſte largeſſe
Againſt trewech trechery
And againſt almeſſe enuy
Againſt Chriſt they comprehende
For chaſtite they mainteine lechery
God for his grace this amende

Againſt penaunce thei vſe delightes
Againſt ſuffraunce ſtronge defence
Ayenſt God they vſen euill rightes
Ayenſt pitie punishementes
Open euil ayenſt continence
Her wicked winning worſe diſpende
Sobrenelle they ſette in to diſpence
But God for his goodnelle it amende

Why cleimen they holy his powere
And wranglen ayenſt al his helles
His liuing ſolowe thei nothing here
But liuen worſe than witleſſe beeſtes
Of fiſhe and fleſhe they louen feeſtes
As lordes they ben brode ikende
Of goddes poore thei haten geſtes
God for his mercy this amende

With diuers ſuche ſhal haue her dome
That ſaine that they be Chriſtes frendes
And do nothing as they ſhould done
Al ſuche ben falſer than ben fendes
On the people they ley ſuche bendes
As God is in earth they han offende
Succour for ſuch Chriſte nowe ſende vs
And for his mercy this amende

A token of Antichriſt they be
His careckes ben nowe wide iknowe Receiued to preache ſhal no man be Without token of him I trowe
Eche chriſten preeſt, to prechin owe
From God aboue thei ben ſende
Goddes worde, to al folke for to ſhowe
Sinful man for to amende

Chriſt ſent the poore for to preche
The royal riche he did not ſo
Now dare no poore the people teache
For Antichriſt is ouer al her foe
Among the people he mote go
He hath bidden, al ſuche ſuſpende
Some hath he hent, and thinketh yet mo
But al this God may wel amende

Al tho that han the worlde forſake

And liuen lowly, as God badde
Into her prison shullen be take Betin and bounden, and forth ladde
Hereof I rede no man be dradde
Christ saide, this should be shende
Eche man ought hereof be gladde
For God ful wel it wol amende

They take on hem royall power
And say they haue swerdes two
One curse to hel, one slee men here
For at his taking Christ had no mo yet Peter had of tho
But Christ, to Peter smite gan defende
And in to the sheth badde put it tho
And al suche mischeues God amende

Christ badde Peter kepe his shepe
And with his sworde forbade hem smite
Swerde is no tole with shepe to kepe
But to sheperdes that shepe wol bite
He thinketh suche sheperdes ben to wite
Iyen her shepe with swerde that contende
They driue her shepe with great dispite
But al this God may well amende

So successours to Peter be they nought
Whome Christe made these pasture
Swerde no sheperde ben ought
But he would slee, as a bochoure
For who so were Peters successoure
Should dere his shepe til his backe bende
And shadowe hem from euery shoure
And al this God may wel amende

Successours to Peter ben these
In that, that Peter Christe forsoke
That had leuer the loue of God lese
Than a sheperde had to lese his hoke
He culleth the shepe as doth the Coke
Of hem taken they woll vntrende
And falsely glose the Gospell boke
God for his mercy them amende

After Christ had take Peter the kay
Christ saide, he muste die for man
That Peter to Christ gan withsay
Christe bad him go behinde Sathan
Suche coustailours many of these men han
For worldes wele, God to offende
Peters successours they ben for than
But al suche God may wel amende

For Sathan is to say no more
But he that contrary to Christ is In this they lerne Peters lore
They sewen him whan he did misse
They folowe Peter forsoth in this
In al that Christ would Peter reprehende
But nat in that, that longeth to heuin blisse
God for his mercy hem amende

Some of the apostels they sewen in case
Of ought that I can vnderstonde
Him that betraied Christ, Judas
That bare the purse in euery londe
And al that he might sette on honde
He hidde and stale, and mispende
His rule these traitours han in honde
Almighty God hem amende

And at the last his lorde gan tray
Curstedly through his false couetise
So woulde these traine him for money
And they wisten in what wise
They be seker of the selfe enuise
From al sothnesse they ben frende
And couetise chaungen with queintise
Almighty God al suche amende

Were Christ on erth here ekte some These would dampne him to die
All his hestes they han forsdone
And saine his sawes ben heresie
And ayenst his commaundementes they crie
And dampne all his to be brende
For it liketh not hem suche losengerie
God Almighty hem amende

These han more might in Englande here
Than hath the king and all his lawe
They han purchased hem suche powere
To taken hem whom list not knawe
And say that heresie is her sawe
And so to prison wol him sende
It was not so by elder dawe
God for his mercy it amende

The kinges lawe wol no man deme
Ungerliche without answere
But if any man these misqueme
He shall be baigheth as a bere
And yet wel worse they wol him tere
And in prison wol him pende
Ingines, and other gere
Whan God woll, it may amende

The kinge tareth nat his men
But by assent of the comminalte
But these eche yere wol raunsom hem

The Plowmannes tale.

Mylerfully, more than dothe he
Her seales by yere better be Than is the kinges in extende
Her officers han greater fee
But this mischefe God amende

For who so wol proue a testament
That is nat al worth tenne pounde
He shal paye for the parchement
The thirde of the money all rounde
Thus the people is raunsounde
They saie suche parte to hem should apende
There as they gripen it goeth to grounde
God for his mercy it amende

I simple fornicacion
Twenty shillinges he shall pay
And than haue an absolucion
And at the yere vben it forthe he may Thus thei letten hem go a stray
Thei recke nat though the soule be brende
These kepen iuel Peters hay
And al suche sheperdes God amende

Wonder is, that the parliamente
And all the lordes of this londe
Here to taken so litel entente
To helpe the people out of her bonde
For thei ben harder in their bonde
Worse beate, and better brende
Than to the king is vnderstande
God him helpe this to amende.

What Bishoppes, what religions
Han in this lande as muche lay fee
Lordeshippes and possessions
More than Lordes, it semeth me
That maketh hem lese charite
They mowe not to God attende
In earth thei haue so highe degre
God for his mercy it amende

The Emperour yafe the Pope somtime
So high lordeship him about
That at laste the sely hime
The proude Pope put him out
So of this realme is in dout
But lordes be ware and them defende
For nowe these folke be wonders stoute
The king and lordes now this amende.

¶ Thus endeth the seconde parte of this tale, and hereafter folowethe the thirde,

Moyses lawe forbode it tho
That prestes should no lordshippes welde Christes gospell biddeth also
That they should no lordshippes helde
Ne Christes apostels were neuer so bolde
No suche lordshippes to hem enbrace
But smeren her shepe and kepe her folde
God amende him for his grace

For thei ne ben but counterfete
Men may know hem by her fruite
Her greatnesse maketh hem God forgete
And take his mekenesse in dispite
And thei were poore and had but lite
Thei nolde nat demen after the face
But norishe her shepe, and hem nat bite
God amende hem for his grace

Grikon.

What canst thou preche ayenst Chanons
That men clepen seculere?

Pell. Thei ben curates of many tounes
On yearth they haue great powere
They haue great prebendes and dere
Some two or thre, and some mo
Personage to ben a playing fere
And yet thei serue the king also

And let to ferme all that fare
To whom that wol moste giue therfore
Some wol spende, and some woll spare
And some wol laye it vp in store
Of cure of soule they care not fore
So thei mowe money take Whether her soules be wonne or lore
Her profites they woll not forsake

They haue a gedering procuratour
That can the pore people emplede
And robben hem as a raueinour
And to his lorde they money lede
And catche of quicke and eke of dede
And richen him and his lorde eke
And to robbe the poore can giue good rede
Of olde and yonge, of hole and sicke

They with they purchase hem lay fee
In londe, there hem liketh best
And builde also brode as a cite
Both in the East, and eke in the west
To purchase thus they ben ful prest
But on the poore they woll nought spende
Ne no good giue to goddes gest

Yet lende him some that all hath lende.

By her seruice soche woll liue
And crust that other into treasure
Though all her parishe die vnshriue
Thei woll nat giue a rose floure
Her life should be as a mirrour Bothe to lered and to leude also
To teache the people her leie labour
Soche maister men been all misgo.

Some of hem been hard nigges
And some of hem been proude and gaie
Some spende her good vpon gigges
And finden hem of greate araie
Alas, what thinke these men to saie
That thus dispenden Goddes good
At the dreadfull domes daie
Soche wretches shull be worse than wood.

Some her churches neuer ne sie
Ne neuer o penie, tinder ne lende
Though the poore parishens for hunger die
O penie on hem will thei not spende
Saue thei receiuing of the rente
Thei recke neuer of the reuenaunt.
Alas, the deuill hath cleane hem blente
Soche one is sathanas soiournaunt.

And slen horedome and harlotrie
Cometise, pompe, and pride
Slothe, wrathe, and the enuie
And sewen sinne by euery side
Alas, where thinke soche tabide
How woll thei accomptes yelde
From hie God thei mowe hem not hide
Soche willers witte is not worth a nelde.

Thei been so rooted in richelle
That Christes pouert is forget
Serued with so many melle
Hem thinketh that Manna is no meate
All is good that thei mowen geat
Thei wene to liue euermore
But whan God at dome is seat
Soche treasour is a feble store.

Vnneth mote thei Matins saie
For counting and courtholding
And yet be iangeleth as Jaie
And vnderstont himself nothing
He woll serue bothe Erle and King
For his finding and his fee
And hide his tithing and his offring
This is a feble charite.

Other thei been proude, or couetous
Or thei been hard, or hungrie
Or thei been liberall or lecherous
Or els medlers with Marchandrie
Or maintainers of men with maistrie
Or stewardes, countours, or pleadours
And serue God in ypocrisie
Soche priestes been Christes false traitours

Thei been false, thei been vengeable
And begilen men in Christes name
Thei been vnstedfast and vnstable
To traie her lorde, hem thinketh no shame
To serue God thei been full lame
Goddes theues, and falsely steale
And falsely Goddes worde defame
In winning is her worldes weale.

Antichrist these serue all
I praie thee who maie saie naie?
With Antichrist soche shull fall
Thei folowen him in deede and saie
Thei seruen hem in riche araie
To serue Christ soche falsely fain
Why, at the dreadfull domes daie
Shull thei not folowe him to pain?

That knowen hemself that thei doen ill
Yenst Christes commaundement
And amende hem neuer ne will
But serue sathan by one assent
Who saieth sothe he shall be shent
Or speaketh a yenst her false liuing
Who so well liueth shall be brent
For soche been greater than the king.

Popes, Bishops, and Cardinals
Chanons, Parsons, and Vicare
In Goddes seruice I trowe been fals
That Sacramentes sellen here
And been as proude as Lucifere
Eche man loke whether that I lie
Who so speaketh a yenst her powere
It shall be holden heresie.

Loke how many orders take Onely of Christ, for his seruice
That the worldes goodes forsake
Who so taketh orders, or other wise
I trowe that thei shall fore agrise
For all the glose that thei conne
Ill sewen not this assise
In euill time thei thus begonne.

Loke how many emong hem all

The Plowmannes tale.

Holden not this hie waie
With Antichrist thei shullen fall
For thei wollen God betraie
God amende hem that best maie
For many men thei maken shende
Thei weten well the sothe I saie
But the deuill hath soule hem biende.

Some on her churches dwell
Apparailled poorely, proude of porte
The seuen sacramentes thei doen sell
In cattell catching is her comfort
Of eche matter thei wollen mell
And doen hem wrong is her disport
To afraie the people thei been fell
And hold hem lower than doeth the lorde.

For the tithing of a Ducke
Or of an Apple, or an Ie
Thei make men sweare vpon a boke
Thus thei soulen Christes faie
Soche beaten euill heauen haie
Thei mowen assoile, thei mowe shrine
With mennes wiues strongly plaie
With true tillers shrewe and swine.

At the wrestling, and at the wake
And chiefe chauntours at the nale
Market beaters, and medling make Hoppen and houten with heue and hale
At faire fresshe, and at wine stale
Dine and drinke, and make debate
The seuen Sacramentes set a saile
How kepe soche the kaies of heauen gate.

Mennes wiues thei wollen hold
And though that thei been right lozy
To speake thei shull not be so bold
For sompning to the Consistory
And make hem saie mouthe I lie
Though thei it sawe with her eye
His lemman holden openly
No man so hardy to aske why

He woll haue tithing and offring
Maugre whosoeuer it grutche
And twise on the daie he woll sing
Goddes priestes nere none soche
He mote on hunting with dogge and biche
And blowen his horne, and crien hey
And sorcerie vsen as a witche
Soche kepen euill Peters hey.

Yet thei mote haue some stocke or stone
Gaile painted, and proudly dighe
To maken men liuen vpon
And saie that it is full of might
About soche, men set vp great light
Other soche stockes shull stande therby
As darke as it were midnight
For it maie make no maistrie.

That it leude people se mowe
Thou Mary, thou worchest wonder things
About that, that men offren to nowe
Hongen broches, ouches, and ringes
The priest purchaseth the offringes
But he nill offer to none Image
Woe is the soule that he forsinges
That preacheth for soche a pilgrimage.

To men and women that been poore
That been Christes awne liuenelle
Men shullen offer at her doore
That suffre hunger and distresse
And to soche Images offer lesse
That mowe not sele thurst ne cold
The poore in spirite gan Christ bielle
Therfore offreth to feble and old.

Buckelers brode, and sweardes long
Baudrike, with daselardes kene
Soche toles about her neche thei hong
With Antichristi soche priestes been Upon her dredes it is well seen
Whom thei seruen, whom thei honouren
Antichristes thei been clene
And Goddes goodes fully deuouren.

Of scarlet and grene gaie gounes
That mote be shape for the newe
To clippen and kissen counten in tounes
The damoseles that to the daunce sewe
Cutted clothes to sewe her hewe
With long pikes on her shone
Our Goddes Gospell is not true
Either thei seruen the deuill or none.

Now been priestes pokes so wide
That men must enlarge the vestiment
The holy Gospell ther doen hide
For the contrarien in raiment
Soche priestes of Lucifer been sent Like conquerours thei been araied
The proude pendauntes at her arse ipent
Falsely the trueth thei han betraied.

Christ silver soche wollen aske is
And woll men crepe to the crouche None of the Sacramentes saue askes without without mede shall no man touche

On her Bishop their warant vouche
That is lawe of the decre with mede and money thus thei mouche
And thus thei sain is charite.

In the middes of her Masse
Thei nill haue no man but for hire
And full shortly let forth passe
Soche shull men finde in eche shire
That parsonages for profite desire
To liue in liking and in lustes
I dare not sain, Sans ose ten dire
That soche been Antichristes prestes

Or thei yet the bishoppes why
Or thei mote been in his seruice
And holden forth her harlotrie
Soche prelates been of feable empryse
Of Goddes grame soche men agrise
For soche matters that taken mede
How thei excuse hem, and in what wise
Me thinketh thei ought greatly drede.

Thei sain that it to no man longeth
To reproue them though thei erre
But saithly Goddes goodes thei fongeth
And therwith maintein wo and werre
Her deedes should be as bright as sterre
Her liuing, leude mannes light
Thei saie the Pope maie not erre
Hede must that passe mannes might.

Though a preest lie w his lemman al night
And tellen his felowe, and he him
He goth to Masse anon right
And saieth he singeth out of sime
His birde abideth him at his inne
And dighteth his diner the meane while He singeth his Masse for he would winne
And so he weneth God begile.

Hem thinketh long till thei be met
And that thei vsen forth all the pere
Emong the folke whan he is set
He boldeth no man halfe his pere
Of the Bishop he hath powere
To soile men, or elis thei been lore
His ablolucion maie make them shere
And wo is the soule that he singeth for.

The Griffon began for to threte
And saied, of Monkes canst thou ought
The Pellican said, thei been full grete
And in this world moche wo hath wrought
Sainct Benet, that her order brought Ne made hem neuer on soche manere
I trowe it came neuer in his thought
That thei should vse so great power.

That a man should a Monke lorde call
He serue on knees, as a king
He is as proude as Prince in pall
In meate, and drinke, and all thing
Some wearen miter and ring
With double worsted well idight
With roiall meate and riche drinke
And rideth on a courser as a knight.

With hauke and with houndes eke
With broches or ouches on his hoode
Some saie no Masse in all a weke
Of deinties is her moste foode
With lordshippes and with bondmen
This is a roiall region
Sainct Benet made neuer non of hem
To haue lordship of man ne toune.

Now thei been queint and curious
With fine clothe clad and serued cleane
Proude, angrie, and enuious
Malice is moche that thei meane
In catching craftie and couetous
Lordly liuen in greate liking
This liuing is not religious Accoiding to Benet in his liuing.

Thei been clerkes, her courtes thei ouer se
Her poore tenaunce fully thei flite
The hier that a man a merced be
The gladlier thei will it write
This is farre from Christes pouerte
For all with couetise thei endite,
On the poore thei haue no pite
Ne neuer hem cherishe but ouer with bite.

And commenly soche been comon
Of poore people, and of hem begete
That this perfection han inomen
Her fathers riden nat but on her fete
And trauailen sore for that thei eate
In pouert liueth yong and old
Her fathers suffreth drought and weate
Many hungrie meales, thurst, and cold.

And all this the Monkes han forsake
For Christes loue and sainct Benete
To pride and ease haue hem take
This religion is euill beseate
Had thei been out of religion

Thei

The Plowmannes tale.

Thei muſt haue hanged at the plowe
Threshing and diking fro toune to toune
With ſore meate, and not halfe inowe.

Therfore thei han this all forſake
And taken to riches, pride, and eaſe
Full fewe for God woll Monkes hem make Little is ſothe order for to praiſe
Sainct Benet ordained it not ſo
But bad hem be chereliche
In churliche maner liue and go
Boiſtous in yearth, and not lordliche.

Thei diſclaunder ſainct Benet
Therfore thei haue his holy curſe
Sainct Benet with hem neuer met
But if thei thought to robbe his purſe
I can no more hereof tell
But thei been like tho before
And cleane ſerue the deuill of hell
And been his treaſure and his ſtore.

And all ſoche other counterfaitours
Chanons, Canons, and ſoche diſgiſed
Been Goddes enemies and traitours
His true religion han foule diſpiſed
Of Freres I haue told before
In a making of a Crede
And yet I could tell worſe and more
But men would werien it to rede.

As Goddes goodnes no man tell might Write ne ſpeake, ne thinke in thought
So her falſhed, and her vnright
Maie no man tell that euery God wrought
The Griffon ſaied, thou canſt no good
Thou came neuer of no gentill kinde
Other I trowe thou wareſt wood
Or els thou haſt loſt thy minde.

Should holy churche haue no hedde?
Who ſhould be her gouernaile
Who ſhould her rule, who ſhould her redde
Who ſhould her forthren, who ſhould auaile
Eche man ſhall liue by his trauaile
Who beſt doeth, ſhall haue moſte mede
With ſtrength if men the churche aſſaile
With ſtrength men muſt defende her nede.

And the Pope were purely poore
Nedy, and nothing ne had
He ſhould be driuen from doore to doore
The wicked of him nolde not be drad
Of ſoche an hedde men would be ſade
And ſinfully liuen as hem luſt
With ſtrength, amendes ſoche be made
With wepen woldes from thepe be wuſt.

If the Pope and prelates would
So begge, and bid, bowe and bowe
Holy churche ſhould ſtande full cold
Her ſeruauntes lit and loupe lowe
And thei wer noughtie foule and howe
To worſhip God men would wlate
Bothe on euen and on morowe
Soche harlotrie men would hate.

Therfore men of holy churche
Should be honeſt in all thing
Worſhipfull Gods workes werche
So ſemeth it to ſerue Chriſt her king
In honeſt and in cleane clothing
With veſſels of gold and clothes riche
To God honeſtly to make offring
To his Lordſhip none is liche.

The Pellican caſt an houge crie
And ſaied alas, why ſaieſt thou ſo
Chriſt is our hedde that ſitteth on hie
Heddes ne ought we haue no mo
We been his membres bothe alſo
And father he taught vs to call him als
Maiſters to be called defended he tho
All other maiſters been wicked and fals.

That taketh maiſtrie in his name
Ghoſtly, and for yearthly good
Kinges and lordes ſhould lordſhip haue
And rule the people with milde mode
Chriſt for vs that ſhed his blood
Bad his prieſtes no maſterſhip haue
Ne carke not for clothe ne food
From euery miſchiefe he will him ſaue.

Her riche clothing ſhall be right wiſnes
Her treaſure, true life ſhall be Charite ſhall be her richeſſe
Her Lordſhip ſhall be vnite
Hope in God, her honeſte
Her veſſell cleane conſcience
Poore in ſpirite, and humilite
Shall be holy churches defence.

What ſaied the Griffon maie thee grim
That other folkes faren weie
What haſt thou to doen with her liue
Thy falſhed eche man maie feie
For thou canſt no cattell gete
But liueſt in londe as a lorell
With gloſing getteſt thou thy mete

So fareth the deuill that wonneth in hell.

He would that eche mā there should dwell
For he liueth in cleane enuie
So with the tales that thou doest tell
Thou wouldest other people destrie
With your glose, and your herelie
For ye can liue no better life
But clene in Hypocrisie
And bringest thee in wo and strife.

And therwith haue not to doen
For ye ne haue here no cure ye serue the deuill, neither God ne man
And he shall paie you your hire
For ye woll fare well at feastes
And warme clothed for the cold
Therfore ye glose Goddes heestes
And begile the people yong and old.

And all the seuen Sacramentes ye speake ayenst, as ye were liue
Ayenst tithinges, offringes & your ententes
And on our Lordes body falsely lie
And all this ye doen to liue in eale
As who saieth, there been none soche
And sain the Pope is not worth a peale
To make the people ayen him groche.

And this commeth in by fendes
To bring the christen in distaunce
For thei would that no man were frendes
Leaue thy chattring with mischaunce
If thou liue well, what wilt thou more Let other men liue as hem list
Spende in good, or kepe in store
Other mennes conscience neuer thou nilt.

ye han no cure to answere fore
What meddle ye, that han not to doen
Let men liue as thei han doen yore
For thou shalt answere for no man
The Pellican saied, sir, naie
I dispised not the Pope
Ne no Sacrament, sothe to saie
But speake in charite and good hope.

But I dispise her hie pride
Her richesse, that should be poore in spirite
Her wickednesse is knowe so wide
Thei serue God in false habite
And tournen mekenesse into pride
And lowlinesse into hie degre
And Goddes wordes tourne and hide
And that am I moued by charite.

To let men to liue so
With all my conning and all my might
And to warne men of her wo
And to tellen hem trouth and right
The Sacramentes be soule heale
If thei been vsed in good vse
Ayenst that speake I neuer a deale
For than were I nothing wise

But thei that vsen him in misse maners
Or set hem vp to any sale
I trowe thei shall abie hem dere
This is my reason, this is my tale
Who so taketh hem vnrightfullichе
Ayenst the ten commaundementes
Or by glose wrechedlichе
Selleth any of the Sacramentes.

I trowe thei doe the deuill homage
In that thei weten thei doe wrong
And thereto I dare well wage
Thei serue Sathan for all her song
To tithen and offren is holsome life
So it be doen in due manere
A man to housel in and to shriue
Wedding, and all the other in fere.

So it be nother solde ne bought
Ne take ne giue for couetise
And it be so taken it is nought
Who selleth hem so, maie sore agrise
On our lordes body I doe not lie
I saie soth through true rede
His fleshe and blood through his misterie
Is there, in the forme of brede.

How it is there, it nedeth not striue
Whether it be subget or accident
But as Christ was, whan he was on liue
So is he there verament
If Pope or Cardinall liue good liue
As Christ commaunded in his Gospell
Ayenst that woll I not striue
But me thinketh thei liue not well.

For if the Pope liued as God bedde
Pride and highnesse he should dispise
Richesse, couetise, and croune on hedde
Mekenesse and pouerte he should vse
The Grifon saied he should abie
Thou shall be brent in balefull fire
And all thy sect I shall distrie ye shall be hanged by the swire.

ye shullen be hanged and to drawe

Who

The Plowmannes tale.

Who giueth you leaue for to preache
Or speake against Goddes lawe
And the people thus falsely teache
Thou shalt be cursed with booke and bell
And disseuered from holie churche
And cleane idampned into hell
Otherwise but ye woll worche.

The Pellican saied that I ne drede
Your curling is of little value
Of God I hope to haue my mede
For it is falshed that ye shewe
For ye been out of charite
And wilneth vengeaunce, as did Nero
To suffren I woll redy be
I drede not that thou canst do.

Christ bad ones suffre for his loue
And so he taught all his seruauntes
And but thou amende for his sake aboue
I drede not all thy maintenaunce
For if I drede the worldes hate
Me thinketh I were little to praise
I drede nothing your hie estate
Ne I drede not your disease.

Woll ye tourne and leaue your pride your hie porte, and your richesse
Your curling should not go so wide
God bring you into right wisenesse
For I drede not your tirannie
For nothing that ye can doen
To suffre I am all redie
Siker I recke neuer how sone.

The Grifon grinned as he were wood
And looked louely as an Owle
And swore by cokes harte blood
He would him teare euery doule
Holy churche thou disclaundrest soule
For thy reasons I woll thee all to race
And make thy flesche to rote and moule
Losell, thou shalt haue hard grace.

The Grifon flewe forth on his waie
The Pellican did sit and wepe
And to himself he gan saie
God would that any of Christes shepe
Had heard, and itake kepe Eche a worde that here saied was
And would it write and well it kepe
God would it were all for his grace.

Plowman.

I answerd, and saied I would
If for my trauaile any man would pey

Pellican. He saied yes, these ye God han sent For thei han store of money
Plowman. I saied, tell me and thou mait
Why tellest thou mennes trespace?
Pellican. He said, to amende hem in good le
If God woll giue me any grace

For Christ himself is likened to me
That for his people died on Rood
Is fare I, right so fareth he
He fedeth his birdes with his blood
But these doen euill ayenst good
And been his foen vnder frendes face
I told hem how her liuing stood
God amende hem for his grace.

Plowman.

what aileth the Grifon, tell why
That he holdeth on the other side
For thei twoo been likely
And with kindes roben wide Pellican. The foule betokeneth pride
Is Lucifer, that high flewe was
And sith he did him in euill hide
For he agilted Goddes grace.

As birde flieth vp in the aire
And liueth by birdes that been meke
So these been flowe vp into dispaire
And shenden sely soules eke
The soules that been in sinnes seke
He culleth hem, knele therfore alas
For vnbrie Goddes forbode breke
God amende it for his grace.

The hinder parte is a Lion
I robber and a rauiner
That robbeth the people in yearth doun
And in yearth holdeth none his pere
So fareth this foule bothe ferre and nere
And with temporell strēgth the people chas
Is a Lion proude in yearth here
God amende hem for his grace.

Pellican.

He flewe forth with his winges twain
All drouping, dased, and dull
But sone the Grifon came again
Of his soules the yearth was full
The Pellican he had cast to pull
So greate a nomber neuer seen there was What maner of soules tellen I woll
If God woll giue me of his grace.

With the Grifon comen soules fele
Rauins, Rokes, Crowes, and Pie
Grate soules, agadred wele

I gurde aboue they would hie
Gledes and bolardes weren hem by White molles and puttockes token her place
And lapwinges, that wel conneth lie
This felowship han for gerde her grace

Long the Pellican was oute
But at last he commeth againe
And brought with him the Phenix stoute
The Grifon would haue flow ful faine
His foules that flewen as thicke as raine
The Phenix tho began hem chace
To flie from him it was in vaine
For he did vengeaunce and no grace

He slewe hem doune without mercy
There astarte neither free ne thrall
On him they cast a rufull crie
When the Grifon doun was fall
He bete him not, but slewe hem all
Whether he hem droue no man may trace
Under the erth me thought they yall
Alas they had a feble grace

The Pellican then ared right
For my writing if I haue blame
Who wol for me fight of flight
Who shal held me from shame
He that had a maide to dame
And the lambe that slaine was Shal held me from gostly blame
For erthely harme is goddes grace

Therfore I pray euery man
Of my writing haue me excused
This writing writeth the Pellican
That thus these people hath dispised
For I am frethe fully aduised
I will not mainteine his manace
For the Deuill is often disguised
To bring a man to euil grace

Writeth the Pellican and not me
For herof I nil not auowe
In hie me in lowe, ne in no degre
But as a fable take it ye mowe
To holy churche I will me bowe
Eche man to amende him Christe sende space
And for my writing me alowe
He that is almighty for his grace.

There endeth the Plowmans tale, and hereafter folowethe the Parsons prologue.

By that the Plowman had his tale ended
The sunne fro the southe side is discended
So lowe, that it was nat to my sight
Degrees of fiue and twenty on hight
Tenne at cloche it was, so as I gesse
For euenleuen fote, a litel more or lesse
My shadowe was at that time, as there
Of suche fete as my length parted were
In fixe fete equalle of proporcion
Therwith the moones exaltacion
I mene Libra, alway gan ascende
As we were entring at the thropes ende
For which our Hoste, as he was wont to gie
As ye in this case, this holy companie
Said in this wise, lordinges euerichone
Now lacketh vs no tale more than one
Fulfilled is my sentence and my decre
Who wol now tel a tale let se
Almoste fulfilled is my ordinaunce
I pray to God so yeue him right good chaunce
That telleth this tale to vs lustely
Sir preest (quod he) arte thou a vicary
Or art thou a parson, say soth by thy fay
Be what thou be, breke thou not our play
For euery man saue thou, hath tolde his tale
Unbokell, and shewe vs what is in thy male
For trewely me thinketh by thy chere
Thou shouldest knit vp well a great matere
Tel vs a fable anon, for cockes bones
This Person him answerde al at ones
Thou getteſt fable none tolde of me
For Poule, that writeth to Timothe
Reproueth hem that waiuen sothfastnesse
And tracheth fables, and suche wretchednesse
Why shoulde I sowe draffe out of my fiste
When I may sowe whete, if that my liſt
For whiche I saye, if that ye liſt to here
Moralite, and of vertuous matere
And than, if ye wol yeue me audience
I would ful faine at Christes reuerence
Done you pleasaunce leful, as I can
But trusteth wel, I am a sotherne man
I can not iesse, rum, ram, ruf, by letter
And God wote, rime holde I but litle better
And therfore if ye liſt, I wol not glose
I wol you tell a litel tale in prose
To knit vp all this feeſt, and make an ende
And Jesu for his grace, wit me sende
To shewe you the way, in this voyage
Of thilke perilte glorioufe pilgrimage

The Parsons tale.

Begin vpon my tale, for whiche I pray
Tel your aduise, I can not better say
But natheleſſe this meditacion
I put it aye, vnder the correccion
Of clerkes, for I am not tertuell
I take but the ſentence, trulleth well
Therfore I make proteſtacion
That I woll ſtande to correccion.
Upon this worde, we haue aſſented ſone
For as it ſemed, it was for to done
To ende in ſome vertuous ſentence
And for to yeue him ſpace and audience
And bade our Hoſte he ſhould to him ſay

Our Hoſte had the wordes for vs all
Sir preeſt (q he) now fayre mote you befall
Say that what ye liſte, & we ſhall gladly here
And with worde he ſaide in this manere

But haſteth you, the ſunne wol adoun
Beth fructuous, and that in litel ſpace
And to do wel, God ſend you his grace.

¶ Here endeth the Parſons prologue, and hereafter foloweth his tale.

Ieremi. vj. State ſuper vias, et videte, et interogate de ſemitis antiquis, que ſit via bona, & ambulate in ea: et inuenietis refrigerium animabus veſtris.

Our ſwete lorde God of heuen, that no man woll peryſhe, but woll that we turne all to the knowlege of him, and to the blikfull life that is perdurable, amoneſteth vs by the prophete Jeremie, that ſaith in this wiſe. Stondeth vpon the wayes and ſeeth, and aſketh of olde pathes: that is to ſaye, of olde ſentences, whiche is the good waie, and walketh in that waye, and ye ſhall finde refreſhing for your ſoules. &c. Manie been the waies eſpirituelles that lede folke to our lorde Jeſu Chriſt, and to the reigne of glory: Of whiche waies there is a full noble waye, and full conuenable, whiche maye not faile to man ne to woman, that through ſinne hath miſgone fro the right way of Hieruſalem celeſtiall: and this waye is called penitence, of whiche man ſhould gladly herken and enquire with al his hert, to wete what is penitence, and whiche is called penitẽce, and howe many maners bene of actions or werkinges of penitence, and howe many ſpeces there ben of penitence, and which thinges apertaine and behoue to penitence, and which thinges diſtourbe penitence.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, that penitence is the plaining of manne for the gilte that he hath doen, and no more to do any thing for which him oughte to playne. And ſome doctours ſaith, Penitence is the waimentinge of man that ſorowweth for his ſinne, and paineth him ſelfe, for he hath miſdon. Penitence with certaine circumſtaunces, is very repentaunce of a man that holte himſelf in ſorow, and other payne for his giltes: and for he ſhall be verie penitent, he ſhall firſt bewaile ſinnes that he hath done, and ſtedfaſtly purpoſe in his herte to haue ſhrifte of mouthe, and to do ſatiſfaction, and neuer to doe thing, for whiche him ought more bewayle or complaine, and continewe in good workes: or els his repentaũce may not auaile. For as ſaint Iſoder ſaieth. He is a taper and a lier, and no very repentaunt, that eftſone doth thing, for which him ought repente. Weping and not for to ſtinte to do ſinne, maye not auaile: But natheleſs men ſhall hope that at euery time that man falleth, be it neuer ſo ofte, that he may ariſe through penaunce, if he haue grace: but certaine it is great doute, for as ſaieth S. Gregorie. Sinnes that ariſeth out of ſinne, that is charged with the charge of euill vſage. And therefore repentaunt folke, that ſtinte for to ſinne, and leue ſinne or ſinne leue them, holy Church holdeth them ſiker of their ſaluacion. And he that ſinneth, and verely repenteth him in his laſt ende: holy churche yet hopeth his ſaluacion, by the great mercy of our lorde Jeſu Chriſte, for his repentaunce: but take the ſiker waye.

And nowe ſith I haue declared you, what thing is Penitence, now ye ſhal vnderſtonde, that there been three actions of Penitence. The firſte is, that a manne be baptiſed after that he hath ſinned. Saint Auguſtin ſaieth, but he be penitent for his olde ſinfull life, he may not beginne the newe clene life: For certes if he be baptiſed without penitence of his olde gilt, he retaineth the marke of baptime, but not the grace ne the remiſſion of his ſinnes, till he haue very repentaunce. An other defaute is this, that men doe deedly ſinne after that they haue receyued baptiſme. The thirde defaute is this, that men fall in venial ſinnes after her baptiſme, fro day to day.

Thereof

Therof saith saint Augustin, that penitence of good and humble folke, is the penitence of euery daie.

The speces of penitence ben thre: That one of hem is solempne: an other is cõmune, and the thirde is priuy. That penaunce that is solempne is in two maners: As to be put out of holy churche in lent, for slaughter of children, and suche maner thinge. An other is when a man hath sinned openlye, of whiche sinne the fame is openly spoken in the countrie: and than holy churche by iudgement, distraineth him for to do open penaunce.

Cõmen penaunce is, that prestes enioyne men in certaine case: as for to go perauẽture naked in pilgrimage, or bare foote. Priuy penaunce is that, that men do all daie for priuy sinnes, of whiche we shriue vs priuely, and receiue priuy penaunce.

Nowe shalt thou vnderstond, what is behouefull and necessary to very perfite penitence: and this stonte on thre thinges. Contricion of herte, confession of mouthe, and satisfaccion. For whiche saieth saint Johan Chrisostom. Penitence distraineth a man to accept benignely euery paine, that him is enioyned, with contricion of hert, and shrifte of mouthe, with satisfaction: and in werking of almaner humilite. And this is fruitfull penitence ayenste thre thinges, in whiche we wrathe our lorde Jesu Christ: this is to saye, By delite in thinkinge by rechelesse in speking, and by wicked sinnefull werking. And ayenst these wicked giltes is penitence, that maie be likened vnto a tree.

The rote of this tree is contricion, that hideth him in the herte of him that is very repentaunt, right as the rote of the tree hideth him in the earth. Of this roote of contricion springeth a stalke, that bereth braũches and leues of confession, and fruite of satisfaccion. For whiche Christ saith in his gospell. Doth digne fruite of penitence, for by this fruite men may knowe the tree, and not by the rote that is hid in the herte of manne, ne by the braunches, ne the leues of confession. And therefore our lord Jesu Christ saith thus: By the fruite of hem shal ye knowe hem. Of this roote also springeth a sede of grace, the which sede is mother of al sikernesse, and this sede is tiger's hote. The grace of this sede springeth of God thrugh remembraunce on the daye of dome, and on the paines of hell. Of this matter saieth Salomon, that in the drede of god, man forleteth his sin. The heate of this sede is the loue of God, and the desiring of the for perdurable: This heate draweth the hert of man to god, and doth him hate his sinne: For sothely there is nothing that sauoureth so wel to a childe, as the milke of his nourice, ne nothinge is to him more abhominable than that milke, whan it is medled with other meate. Right so the sinfull man that loueth his sinne, him semeth that it is to him mosle swete of any thinge, but fro that time he loueth sadly our lord Jesu Christ, and desireth the life perdurable, there is to him no thing more abhominable: For sothely the lawe of God is the loue of God. For which Dauid the prophete saieth: I haue loued thy lawe, and hated wickednesse: He that loueth God, keepeth his lawe and his worde.

This tre sawe the prophete Daniel in sprite, on the vision of Nabuchodonosor, whan he counsailed him to do penitence. Penaunce is the tree of life, to hem that it receyue, and he that holdeth him in very penitence is blessed after the sentence of Salomon. In this penitence or cõstricion man shall vnderstonde foure thinges, that is to say: What is contricion, and whiche ben the causes that moue a man to contricion, and how he shulde be contrite, and what contricion auaileth to the soule. Than is it thus, that contricion is the very sorow, that a man receiueth in his hert for his sinnes, with sadde purpose to shriue him, and to do penaunce, and neuer more to doe sinne: And this sorowe shal be in this maner, as saieth saint Bernard: It shal be hevie and greuouse, and full sharpe and poinaunte in herte.

First, for a man hath agilted his lorde and his creatoure, and more sharpe and poinaũt, for he hath agilted his father celestiall: And yet more sharpe and poynaunt, for he hath wrathed and agilted him that boughte him, that with his precious bloode hath deliuered vs fro the bondes of sinne, and fro the cruelte of the diuel, and fro the paines of hell.

The causes that ought moue a man to contricion bene fire. First a man shall remembre him of his sinnes, but loke that that remembraunce ne be to him no delite, by no waye, but greate shame and sorowe for his sinnes. For Job saith, sinfull men done worthes worthy of confession. And therefore saieth Ezechiell: I wol remembre me al the yeres of my life, in the bitternesse of my herte. And God saieth in the Apocalipse: Remembre ye from whence that ye ben fall, for before that time that ye sinned, ye were children of God, and limmes of the reigne of God: But for your sin ye ben waren thrall and soule, and membres of the fende: hate of angels, slaunder of holye churche, and soode of the false serpent, perpetual mattere of the fyre of hell: And yet more soule and abhominable, for ye trespace so oft times, as doeth an hounde that returneth ayen to eete his owne spewing: and yet be ye fouler, for your long continuing in sin, and your sinful vlage, for whiche ye be roted in your sinne, as a beeste in his donge. Suche maner of thoughtes make a manne to haue shame of his sin, and no delite. As God saith, by the prophete Ezechiel: Ye shall remembre you of your waies, and they shull displese you sothly. Sinnes ben the waies that lede folke to Hell.

The seconde cause that ought make a mã to haue disdaine of sinne is this, that as saith saint Peter: who so doth sinne, is thrall of sinne, and sinne putteth a manne in great thraldome. And therefore saieth the prophete Ezechiell: I wente forowful, in disdaine of my selfe. Certes wel ought a manne haue disdaine of sinne, and withdrawe him fro that thraldome and vilany. And lo, what saieth Seneke in this matter, he saith thus: Though I wiste, that neither god ne manne should neuer knowe it, yet would I haue disdaine for to do sinne. And the same Seneke also saieth: I am borne to greater thinge, than to be thral to my body, or for to make of my body a thrall. Ne a fouler thrall maye no man ne woman make of his bodie, than for to yeue his body to sinne, all were it the foulest churle, or the foulest woman that liueth, and lefte of value, yet is he than more soule, and more in seruitude. Euer fro the higher degre that man falleth, the more is he thrall, and more to God and to the worlde vile and abhominable. O good God, wel oughte man haue greate disdaine of sin, sith that through sinne, there he was fre he is made bonde. And therefore saieth saint Augustin: If thou hast disdaine of thy seruaunt, if he offende or sinne, haue thou than disdaine that thou thy selfe shuldest do sinne. Take rewarde of thine owne valewe, that thou ne be to soule to thy selfe. Alas well ought they than haue disdaine to be seruauntes and thralles to sinne, and sore to be ashamed of them self, that god of his endeles goodnesse hathe sette in highe estate, or yeue hem witte, strength of bodye, heale, beutie, or prosperite, and bought hem fro the death with his hert blood, that they so vnkindly, ayenst his gentilnesse, quite him so vilainously, to slaughter of her owne soules. O good God, ye women that been of greate beautie, remembreth you on the prouerbe of Salomon. He saieth he liketh a faire woman, that is a foole of her bodie, to a ringe of gold that were worne on the groine of a sowe. For right as a sowe wroteth in euery ordure so wroteth she her beaute in stinking ordure of sinne.

The thirde cause that ought meue a mã to contricion, is drede of the daye of dome, and of the horrible paines of hel. For as sainte Jerom saieth: At euery time that me remembreth of the daye of dome, I quake: for when I eate and drinke, or what so that I do, euer semeth me that the trompe sowneth in mine eare: Riseth ye vp that ben dede, and cometh to the iudgement. O good God, muche ought a manne to drede suche iudgement, there as we shall be all, as saith Poule saieth, before the seate of oure Lord Jesu Christ, where as he shal make a generall congregacion, where as no man may be absent, for certes there auayleth none essoyne ne excusation, ne not onely that our defautes shalbe iudged, but also that all our werkes shall openly be knowen. And as saieth saint Barnarde, there ne shall no pleding auayle ne no sleight: we shall yeue rekeninge, of euery idle worde. There shall we haue a iudge that maie not be disceiued ne corrupt, and why? For certes, all our thoughtes ben discouered, as to him, ne for prayer ne for mede he shall not be corrupte. And therfore saith Salomon: The wrathe of God ne wol not spare no wight, for prayer ne for yefte. And therefore at the daye of dome, there is no hope to escape. Wherfore, as saieth saint Anselm: ful great anguishe shall the sinnefull folke haue at that time: There shal the fiers and wroth iudge sitte aboue, and vnder him the horrible pitte of hel open, to distroy him that must be knowe, his sinnes, which sinnes openly be shewed before God and before euery creature. And on the lefte side, mo Diuels than ane herte maye thinke, for to hale and drawe the sinful soules to the paine of hell, and within the hertes of folke shall be the biting conscience, and without forth shal be the worlde all brenning: whither shal than the wretched sinfull man flie to hide him? Certes he may not hide

hyde him, he muſt come forth and ſhewe him. For certes, as ſaith S. Jerom, the earth ſhal caſt him out of it and the ſee alſo, and the ayre that ſhal be ful of thonder clappes and lightninges. Now ſothly, who ſo wel remembreth him of theſe thinges: I gelle that his ſinne ſhall not turne him in delite, but to great ſorowe, for drede of the paine of hell. And therfore ſaith Job to God: ſuffre lord, that I may a while bewaile and wepe, er I go without returning to the derke londe, couered with the derkneſſe of death, to the londe of miſeſe and of derkenelle, where as is the ſhadowe of death, where as there is none order or ordinaunce, but ferefull drede that euer ſhal laſt. Lo, here may you ſe, that Job praied reſpite a while, to bewepe and waile his treſpaſe: for ſothely one daye of reſpite is better than all the treſour of this world. And for as much as a man may acquite himſelf before god by penitence in this world, & not by treſour, therfore ſhould he pray to god to yeue him reſpite a while, to bewepe and waile his treſpace: for certes, al the ſorowe that a man might make fro the beginning of the world, nis but a litel thing, at regarde of the ſorowe of hell. The cauſe why that Job calleth hell the londe of derkeneſſe, vnderſtondeth that he calleth it londe or erth, for it is ſtable and neuer ſhall faile, and derke: For he that is in hell hath defaute of light materiall, for certes the derke light that ſhal come out of the fire that euer ſhal brenne, ſhal turne him al to pain that is in hell, for it ſheweth him to the horrible Diuels that him turmenteth, couered with the derkneſſe of death, that is to ſay, that he that is in hel, ſhal haue defaute of the ſight of god: for certes the ſight of god is the life perdurable. The derkeneſſe of death, been the ſinnes that the wretched man hath don, which that diſturbe him to ſe the face of god, right as the derke cloude betwirt vs and the ſunne. Londe of miſeſe, bicauſe that there ben thre maner of defautes ayenſt thre thinges that folke of this worlde haue in this preſent life, that is to ſaie: honours, delices, and richeſſe. Ayenſt honour haue they in hel ſhame and confuſiō: For wel ye wote, that men call honour the reuerence that man doth to man, but in hell is none honour ne reuerēce. For certes, no more reuerence ſhalbe do ther to a kinge, than to a knaue. For whiche God ſaith by the Prophet Jeremy: Thoſe folke that me diſpiſe, ſhal be in diſpite. Honoure is alſo called great lordſhip: there ſhall no wight ſerue other: but of harme and turment. Honoure is alſo called great dignite and highneſſe, but in hell ſhall ther be al forfroden of diuelles. As God ſaith: the horrible diuels ſhall goe and come vpon the heedes of dampned folke: and this is, for as much as the higher that ther were in this preſent life, the more ſhal ther be abated and defoiled in hell. Ayenſte the richeſſe of this world ſhal they haue miſeſe of pouerte, that ſhal be in foure thinges. In defaute of treſoure. Of which David ſaith: The riche folke that enbrace and knite al her herte to treſour of this worlde, ſhall ſlepe in the ſlepinge of death, and nothing ne ſhull they finde in her hondes of al her treſour. And more ouer the miſeaſe of hel ſhal be in defaute of meete and drinke. For God ſaith thus by Moyſes: They ſhall be waſted with honger, and the bydes of hell ſhall deuour hem, with bitter death, and the gal of the dragon ſhall be her drinke, and the venim of the Dragon her morſels. Alſo her miſeaſe ſhall be in defaute of clothing, for thei ſhal be naked in body, as of clothing, ſaue the fire in whiche they brenne, and other filthes: and naked ſhall they be of ſoule, of al maner vertues, whiche that is the clothing of the ſoule. Where been than the gay robes, the ſoft ſhetes, & the ſmal ſhertes? Lo, what ſaieth God of hem by the Prophet Iſaie, þ vnder hem ſhal be ſtrewed moughtes, and her couertures ſhal be of wormes of hel. Alſo her miſeaſe ſhalbe in defaute of frendes, for he is not poore that hath good frendes, but ther is no frende, for neither God ne no creature ſhall be frende to hem, and eche of hem ſhal hate other with dedly hate: The ſonnes and the doughters ſhall rebell ayenſt father and mother, and kinred ayenſt kinred, chide and diſpiſe eche other, bothe day and night, as God ſaieth by the prophet Micheas: And the louinge chyldren that whilom loued ſo flechly eche other, would eche of hem ete other if they might. For howe ſhould they loue together in the paines of hel, whan they hated eche other in proſperite of this life? for truſte wel, her fleſhly loue was deedly hate. As ſaith the prophet David: Who ſo that loueth wickednelle, he hateth his ſoule, & who ſo hateth his owne ſoule, certes he may loue none other wight in no maner: And therfore in hel is no ſolace ne no frēdſhip, but euer the more hinredes that ben in hel, the more curſinges, the more chidinges, and the more deedly hate there is amonge hem. Alſo they ſhal haue defaute of all maner delices, for certes delices ben after the appetites of the fiue wittes: As sight, hering, smellinge, sauouring, and touchinge. But in Hell her sight shall be full of derkenesse and of smoke, and therefore full of teares, and her heringe full of waylinge and grintinge of tethe: As saith Jesu Christ. Her nosthyrilles shal be full of stinking. And, as saith Isaie the prophete: Her sauouring shal be ful of bitter gall, and as touching of al her bodies, icouered with fire, that neuer shall quenche, and with wormes that neuer shall die. As God saith by the mouth of Isaie: and for as muche as they shal not wene that they may die for paine, and by death flie fro paine, that maye they vnderstonde in the wordes of Job, that saieth: There is the shadowe of death. Certes a shadowe hath likenesse of the thing of whiche it is shadowed, but shadowe is not þ same thing of whiche it is shadowed: right so fareth the paine of hel, it is like deth, for the horrible anguishe. And why? For it paineth hem euer as though they should die anon, but certes thei shal not die. For as saith saint Greg. to wretched caitifes shalbe death without deth, and ende without ende, and defaute without failing, for her death shall alway liue, and her ende shal euer more begin, and her defaute shal not faile.

And therfore saieth saint John the Euangelist, they shal folowe deathe, and they shall nat finde him, and they shal desire to die, and death shal flie from him. And also Job saith, that in hel is no order or rule. And al be it so, that God hath create al thing in right order, and nothing without order, but all thinges ben ordred and numbred, yet natheles they that been dampned ben nothing in order, ne holde none order, for the erth ne shal bere hem no fruite. For, as the prophete Dauid saieth: God shall distroie the fruite of the erth, as for hem, ne water, ne shal yeue hem no moisture, ne the eyre no refreshinge, ne fire no lighte. For as saieth saint Basilie: The brenning of the fire of this world shal God yeue in hell to hem that ben dampned, but the light and the clerenesse shal be yeue in Heuen to his children: right as good men yeue flesh to her children, and bones to her houndes. And for they shall haue none hope to escape, saieth sainte Job at laste, that there shal errour and grefly drede dwell with out ende. Horrour is alway drede that is to come, and this drede shal alwaie dwell in the hertes of hem that bee dampned. And therfore haue thei loste all her hope for seuen causes. First for God that is her iudge shal be without mercy to hem, and they may not please him ne none of his sainctes, ne they maie not yeue nothinge for her raunsome, ne thei shal haue no voice to speke to him, ne they may not flie fro paine, ne they haue no goodnesse in hem that they may shewe to deliuer hem fro paine. And therfore saieth Salomon: The wicked manne dieth and whan he is deed, he shall haue no hope to escape fro paine. Who so than would wel vnderstonde the paines, and bethinke him wel that he hath deserued those paines for his sinnes, certes he shoulde haue more talent to sighe and wepe, than for to singe and play. For as saieth Salomon, who so that hadde science to know the paines that ben ordained for sinne, he woulde make sorowe. That science, as saieth sainte Iustin, maketh a man to weiment in his herte.

The fourth pointe that oughte make a man haue contriction, is the sorowful remembraunce of the good that he hath lefte to doe here in earthe, and also the good that he hath loste. Sothly the good werkes that he hath lefte, either they bee the good werkes that he wroughte er he fill in deedly sinne, or elles the good werkes þ he wrought while he laie in sin. Sothly the good werkes that he did before that he fill in sinne been al mortified, astoned, and dull by olde sinning. The werkes that he did while he lay in sinne be deed, as to the life perdurable in Heuen: than the good werkes that been mortified by olde sinning, whiche he did beyng in charite may not quicke ayen without bery penitence. And of it saieth God by the mouthe of Ezechiel: If the rightfull man returne ayen fro his righte wisnesse and do wickednesse, shall he liue: nay: for al the good werkes that he hath do, ne shal neuer be in remembraunce, for he shall die in his sin. And vpō that chapitre saieth saint Gregorie thus, that we shall vnderstond this principally: If that we don deedly sin, it is for nought than to reherce or drawe in to memory the good werkes that we haue wrought before: for certes in the werking of deedly sinne, there is no truste to no good werke that we haue doen before: that is to say, as for to haue thereby the life perdurable in Heuen. But natheless the good werkes quicken and come againe, and helpe and availe to haue the life perdurable in Heuen whā we haue cōtricion: But sothly the good werkes that men don while they be in deedly sinne sinne, for as moche as thei were doen in dedly sinne, thei maie neuer quiche: For certes, thing that neuer had life, maie neuer quiche: And natheleſſe, albeit that thei auaile not to haue the life perdurable, yet auaile thei to abredge of the pain of hell, or els to get temporell richeſſes, or els that God woll the rather enlumine or light the hart of the ſinful man to haue repentaunce, and eke thei auaile for to vſe a manne to doe good werkes, that the ſende haue the leſſe power of his ſoulle. And thus the curteis Lorde Jeſu Chriſte, ne woll that no good werke bee loſte, for in ſomwhat it ſhall auaile. But for as moche as the good werkes that menne doen while thei been in good life, been all amortiſed by ſinne folowing: and alſo lithe that all the good werkes that men doen while thei bee in dedly ſinne, been vterly deade, as for to haue the life perdurable, well maie that manne that no good werke ne dooeth, ſing that newe freſche ſong (Iay tout pardu mon temps, et mon labure). For certes ſinne bireueth a man bothe goodneſſe of nature, and alſo ꝑ goodneſſe of grace. For ſothly the grace of the holy ghoſte, lareth like fire that maie not be idell, for fire faileth anon as it forleteth his werking: and right ſo grace faileth anon, as it forleteth his werking. Than leſeth the ſinfull man the goodneſſe of glory, that onely is behight to good men that labour and werke. Well maie he be ſorie than, that oweth all his life to God, as long as he hath liued, and alſo as long as he ſhall liue, that no goodneſſe ne hath to paie with his debt to God, to whom he oweth all his life: for truſt well he ſhall yeue accomptes as ſaieth ſainct Bernarde, of all the gooddes that haue been yeue him in this preſent life, and how he hath hem diſpended, in ſo moche that there ſhall not periſhe an heere of his hedde, ne a moment of an houre, ne ſhall not periſhe of his time, that he ne ſhall yeue of it a rekening.

The ſixthe thinge that ought to moue a man to contricion, is remembraunce of the paſſion that our Lorde Jeſu Chriſt ſuffered for our ſinnes. For as ſaieth ſaincte Bernarde, while that I liue, I ſhall haue remembraunce of the trauailes, that our lorde Jeſu Chriſte ſuffred in preaching, his wearineſſe in trauailing, his temptacions whan he faſted, his long watinges whan he praied his teres whan that he wept for pite of good people, the wo, the ſhame, and the filthe that menne ſaid to him: of the foule ſpitting that menne ſpitte in his face, of the buffettes that men yaue him: of the foule mowes and of the reproues that men ſaied to him: of the nailes with whiche he was nailed to the croſſe, and of all the rẽnaunt of his paſſion, that he ſuffred for my ſinnes, and nothing for his gilte. And ye ſhall vnderſtande, that in mannes ſin is euery maner order or ordinaunce, turned vp ſo doune. For it is ſothe, that God, reaſon, ſenſualite, and the bodie of man, been ordained, that eche of theſe lower thinges, ſhould haue Lordſhip ouer that other: as thus, God ſhould haue lordſhip ouer reaſon, and reaſon ouer ſenſualite, and ſenſualite ouer the body of man. But ſothly whan man ſinneth, all this order or ordinaũce, is turned vp ſo doun. And therfore than, for as moche as reaſon of man, ne woll not be ſubiecte ne obeiſaunt to God, that is his Lorde by right, therefore leſeth it the Lordſhip that it ſhould haue ouer ſenſualite, and alſo ouer the bodie of manne. And why? For ſenſualite rebelleth thã ayenſt reaſon: and by that waie leaſeth reaſon the lordſhip ouer ſenſualite, and ouer the bodie: For right as reaſon is rebell to God, right ſo is both ſenſualite rebell to reaſon, and to the body alſo. And certes this diſordinaunce and this rebellion, our Lorde Jeſu Chriſt bought vpon his precious body full deare: and herheneth in what wiſe. For as moche than as reaſon is rebell to God, therfore is man worthy to haue ſorow, and to be dedde. This ſuffred our Lorde Jeſu Chriſte for manne, after that he had be betraied of his diſciple, and diſtrained and bounde, ſo that his blood braſte out, at euery naile of his hondes, as ſaith S. Auguſtin. And ferthermore, for as moche as reaſon of manne, woll not daunt ſenſualite, whan it maie, therfore is manne worthie to haue ſhame: and this ſuffred our Lorde Jeſu Chriſt for man, whan thei ſpit in his viſage. And ferthermore, for as moche than as the caitife body of man, is rebell both to reaſon & to ſẽſualite, therfore it is worthy death, and this ſuffred our Lorde Jeſu Chriſte vpon the croſſe, where as there was no part of his bodie free, without greate pain and bitter paſſion: and al this ſuffred our lorde Jeſu Chriſt that neuer forfaited. And therefore reaſonably maie bee ſaied of Jeſu in this maner: To moche am I pained, for thinges that I neuer deſerued, and to moche defouled for ſham that manne is worthy to haue: And therfore maie the ſinfull man well ſaie, as ſaieth S.

Bernarde. Icursed bee the bitternesse of my sinne, for whiche there muste bee suffered so moche bitternes. For certes, after the diuers discordaunce of our wickednes, was the passion of Jesu Christe ordained in diuers thinges: as thus. Certes sinfull mannes soule is betraied of the deuill, by couetise of temporel prosperite, and scorned by discrete, whan that he cheseth fleshly delices, and yet it is turmēted by impacience of aduersite, and despet by seruage and subiection of sinne, and at the last it is slain finally. For this disordinaunce of sinfull man, was Jesu Christ first betraid, and after that was he bounde, that came for to vnbinde vs of sinne and of paine. Than was he descorned, ꝑ onely should haue be honoured in all thinges. Than was his vilage that ought bee desired to bee seen of all mankind, in whiche vilage Angels delite to loke, vilainously despet. Than was he scourged that nothing had trespased, and finally, thā was he crucified and slain. Than was acomplished the woordes of Isaie: He was wounded for our misdeedes, and defoiled for our felonies. Now sithe that Jesu Christ tooke on him the pain of all our wickednesses, moche ought sinfull manne wepe and bewaile, that for his sinnes, Goddes sonne of heuen should all this pain endure.

THE first thing that should meue a man to contricion, is the hope of three thinges, that is to saie: forgeuenesse of sin, and the yefte of grace for to doe well, and the glorie of heauen, with whiche God shall reward manne for his good deedes: And for as moche as Jesu Christ, yeueth vs these yeftes of his largenesse, and of his souerain bounte therfore is he called Iesus Nazarenus rex Iudeorum) Jesus is to saie, sauiour or saluacion, on whom men shal hope to haue forgeuenesse of sinnes, whiche that is properly saluacion of sinnes. And therfore saied the Angell to Joseph, thou shalte call his name Jesus, that shall saue his people of her sinnes. And hereof saieth sainct Peter: There is none other name vnder heauen, that is yeue to any man, by whiche a man maie bee saued, but onely Jesus. Nazarenus is as moche for to saie, as flourishing, in whiche a manne shall hope, that he that yeueth him remission of sinnes, shall yeue him also grace well for to doe. I was at the doore of thine harte, saith Jesus, and called for to enter: he that openeth to me, shall haue forgeuenes of his sinne. I woll entre into him by my grace, and suppe with him by the good werkes that he shall doe, whiche werkes been the foode of ꝑ soule, and he shall suppe with me, by the great ioye that I shall yeue him. Thus shall man hope for his werkes of penaunce, that GOD shall yeue him his reign, as he behight him in the Gospell. Now shal a manne vnderstande, in whiche maner shall be his contricion: I saie, that it shall bee vniuersall and totall, this is to saie: a man shall be very repentaunt, for al his sinnes that he hath doon in delite of his thought, for it is right perillous.

For there been twoo maner of consentinges, that one of hem is called consenting of affection, whan a man is moued to do sinne, and than deliteth him long, for to thinke on that sinne, & his reason apperceiueth it wel, that it is sinne ayenst the Lawe of God, and yet his reason refraineth not his foule delite to talent, thoughe he se well apertly, that it is ayenst the reuerence of God, although his reason consent not, to do that sinne in deede, yet saie some Doctours, that soche delite that dwelleth long is full perillous, albeit neuer so little. And also a man should sorowe, namely for all that euer he hath desired ayenst the Lawe of God, with perfite consenting of his reason, for thereof is no doubte, that it is dedly sinne in consenting: for certes there is no deadly sinne, but that it is first in mannes thought, and after that in his delite, and forth into consenting, and into deede. Wherfore I saie that many men, ne repent hem neuer of soche thoughtes and delices, ne neuer shriue hem of it, but onely of ꝑ deede of great sinnes out ward: wherfore, I saie that soche wicked delites been subtill begilers, of hem that shall be dampned.

More ouer, man ought to sorowe for his wicked wordes, as well as for his wicked deedes: for certes the repentaunce of a singuler sinne, and not repentaunt of al his other sinnes, or els repent him of all his other sinnes, and not of a singuler sinne, maie not auaile: For certes GOD almightie is all good, and therefore, either he forgeueth all, or els right nought. And therefore saieth sainct Augustin: I wote certainly, that God is enemie to euery sinner: and how thā he that obserueth one sinne, shall he haue forgeuenesse of those other sinnes? Naie. And more ouer, contricion should be wonder sorowfull and anguishous and therefore yeueth him GOD plainly his mercie: and therfore whan my soule was anguished guilshed, and sorowfull within me, than had I remembraunce of god, that my prater might come to him. Ferthermore, contricion muste be continuall, and that manne haue stedfast purpose to shriue him, and to amende him of his life. For lothly while contricion lasteth, man maie euer hope to haue forgeuenes. And of this cometh hate of sinne, that distroieth bothe sinne in himselfe, and also in other folk at his power. For whiche saieth Dauid: thei that loue God hate wickednesse: For to loue GOD, is for to loue that he loueth, and hate that he hateth. The last thing that men shal vnderstande is this, wherefore auaileth contricion? I saie, that contricion somtime deliuereth manne fro sinne: Of whiche Dauid saith, I saie (saied Dauid) I purposed fermely to shriue me, and thou lorde releasedest my sinne. And right so as contricion, auaileth not without sad purpose of shrifte, if manne haue opportunite, right so litle worth is shrift or satisfaction without cõtricion. And more ouer contricion distroieth the prison of helle, and maketh weake and feable all the strengthes of the deuils, and restoreth the yeftes of the holy ghost, and of all good vertues, and it cleanseth the soule of sinne, and deliuereth it fro the pain of helle, and fro the companie of the Deuill, and fro the seruage of sinne, and restoreth it to all good spirituells, and to the companie and communion of holie churche. ferthermore, it maketh him that whilom was soonne of Ire, to be the sonne of Grace: And all these thinges been proued by holie writte. And therefore, he that would set his entent to these thinges, he were full wise, for truely he ne should haue than in all his life corage to sinne, but yeue his harte and bodie to serue Christ, and thereof doe him homage. For truely our Lorde hath spared vs so mekely in our folies, that if he ne had pite of mannes soule, a sory song might we all sing.

Explicit prima pars penitentiæ et incipit pars secunda.

THE seconde parte of penitence is Confession, that is signe of contriciõ. Now shull ye vnderstonde what is confession, and it ought nedes bee doen or no, and whiche thinges bee couenable to very confession.

First shalt thou vnderstande, that confession is verie shewing of sinnes to the Priestе: this is to saie very, for he muste confesse him of all the cõdicions that belong to his sinne, as ferforthe as he can: all must bee saied, and nothing excused ne hid, and not auaunt thee of thy good werkes. Also it is necessarie to vnderstande whens that sinnes spring, and how thei entre, and whiche thei been.

Of the spring of sinnes, saith S. Poule in this wise: that right as by one man sinne entred first into this worlde, and throughsinne death, right so the death entreth into al men that sinne, and this man was Adam, by whõ sinne entred into this world, whan he brake the commaundement of God. And therefore he that first was so mightie, that he ne shuld haue died, became so that he muste nedes die, whether he would or no, and all his progeny in this worde, that in the saied man sinned. Looke that in the estate of innocencie, whan Adam and Eue were naked in Paradise, and shamed not thereof, how the serpente, wilest of all other beastes that GOD made, saied to the woman: why cõmaunded God you, that ye should not eate of euery tree in Paradise? The woman answered: of the fruict saied she of trees of Paradise we feede vs, but of the fruict of the middle tree of Paradise, God forbode vs to eate and touche, lest we should die. The serpente saied to the woman: naie naie, ye shall not die of death, for sothe God wotte that what daie that ye eate therof your iyen shall open, and ye shall be as Gods knowing good and harme. The woman thã sawe that the tree was good to feading, and faire to the iyen, and delectable to sight, she tooke of the fruite of the tree and eate, & yaue to her husbande, and he eate, and anon the iyen of hem both opened: and whan that thei knewe that thei were naked: thei sowed of Figge leues in maner of breches, to hide her mẽbers. There maie ye se that dedly sin hath first suggestiõ of the fende, as sheweth here by the Adder, & afterwarde the delite of the flesh, as sheweth by Eue, & after that, consenting of reason, as sheweth here by Adam. For trust wel though so it were, that the fende tempted Eue, that is to saie, the flesshe, and the flesshe had delite in the beautie of the fruicte defended, yet certes till that reason, that is to saie Adam, consented to the eating of the fruict, yet stoode he in the state of innocencie. Of the saied Adã tooke we the saied originall sinne, for of him fleshly discended bee wee all, and engendered of vile and corrupt mattere: And whan the soule is put put in our bodies, right anon is contract originall sinne, and that that was erst, but onely pain of concupiscence, is afterward bothe paine and sinne, & therfore we been all borne sonnes of wrath, and of dampnacion perdurable, if it nere Baptisme that wee receiue, which benimmeth vs the coulpe, but forsoth the pine dwelleth with vs as to temptacion, whiche pine hight concupiscence. This concupiscence whan it is wrongfully disposed or ordained in man, it maketh him couetie by couetise of flesche, fleshely sinne by sight of his yen, as to yerthly thinges, and also couetise of highnes by pride of harte.

Now as to speake of the first couetise, that is concupiscence, after the lawe of our members, that were lawfully made, and by rightfull iudgement of God, I saie, for almoche as manne is not obeissaunt to God, that is his Lorde, therefore is the flesche to him disobeissaunt through concupiscence, whiche is called nourishing of sinne, and occasiō of sinne. Therefore, all the while that a manne hath within him, the pine of concupiscence, it is impossible, but he be tempted somtime, & moued in his flesche to sin. And this thing maie not faile, as long as he liueth. It maie well were feble by vertue of Baptisme, and by the grace of God through penitence, but fully ne shall it neuer quenche that, he ne shall sometime bee moued in himself, but if he were all refrained by sickneſſe, or by malice of sorcerie or cold drinkes. For lo, what saieth S. Poule: the flesche coueteth ayenst the spirite, and the spirite against the flesche: thei been so contrarie and so striuen: that a manne maie nat alwaie doe as he would. Thesame S. Poule, after his greate Penaunce, in water and in lond: in water by night and by daie, in great peril, and in great pain. In lond, famine and thurst, cold and clothlesse, and ones stoned almooste to death. Yet (saied he) alas, I caitife man, who shall deliuer me fro the prisone of my caitife bodie? And sainct Jerom, whan he long time had dwelled in desert, where as he had no company but of wilde beastes, where as he had no meate, but herbes, and water to drinke, ne no bed, but the naked yerth, wherfore his flesche was blacke, as an Ethiopien for heate, and nie destroied for cold. yet (saied he) that the brenning of lecherie boiled in all his bodie. wherefore I wot well that thei be disceiued that saie, thei be nat tempted in her bodies. Witnesse saincte James that saieth, that euery wight is tempted in his own conscience, that is to saie: That eche of vs hath matter and occasion, to be tempted of the norishing of sinne, that is in his body. And therfore saieth sainct Jhon the Euangelist: if we saie that we been without sinne, we deceiue our self, and truthe is not in vs. Now shall ye vnderstonde, how sinne wexeth and encreaseth in man. The first thing is thesame norishing of sinne, of which I spake before, the fleshely concupiscence, and after that cometh suggestion of the deuill, this is to saie, the deuils belous, with which he bloweth in man the fire of concupiscence, & after that a man bethinketh him whether he woll doe or no that thing to whiche he is tempted. And this if a man withstonde and weiue, the first enckling of his flesche, and of the fende, than is no sinne, and if so be he doe not, than fealeth he anon a flame of delite, and than it is good to beware and kepe him well, or els he woll fall anone to consenting of sinne, and than woll he do it, if he maie haue time and place. And of this matter saieth Moses by the deuill, in this maner: The fende saieth, I woll chace and pursue man by wicked suggestion, and I woll take him by mouing and stering of sinne, and I woll departe my prise of my praie by deliberacion, and my lust shall be accomplished in delite, I woll draw me my sword in consenting. For certes, right as a sword departeth a thing in two peces, right so consenting departeth God fro manne, and than wolle I slea him with my honde in deede of sinne: thus saieth the fende. For certes, than is a man all dedde in soule, and thus is sinne accomplished with temptacion, by delite and cōsenting: and than is the sinne actuell. Forsoth sinne is in two maners, either it is venyall or dedly sinne. Soothly whan man loueth any creature, more thā Jesu Christ our creatour, than it is dedly sinne, and veniall sinne it is, if man loue Jesu Christe lesse than him ought. Forsoth the deede of this venial sinne is full perillous, for it mindeth ꝺ loue that man should haue to God more and more. And therfore if a man charge himself, with many soche veniall sinnes: certes but if so bee that he somtime discharge him of hem by shrifte. Thei maie full lightly minishe in him, al the loue that he hath to Jesu Christ, and in this wise skippeth veniall sinne, into dedly sinne. For certes, the more that a man chargeth his soule with veniall sinnes, the more he is enclined to fall into dedly sinne. And therfore let vs not be negligent, to charge vs of veniall all sinnes. For the Prouerbe saieth, that many small make a greate. Herken this ensample. A greate waue of the sea cometh, sometime with so gret a violence, that it drowneth the shippe. And the same harme doeth sometime the smal droppes of water, that entreth through a little creueis, into the timber, and into the botome of the shippe, if men be so negligēt, that thei discharge hem not by times. And therfore although there be a difference, betwirt these two causes of drouning, algates the shippe is drouned. Right so fareth it sometime of deadly sinne, and of anoious venyall sinnes, whan thei multiplie in man so greatly, that those worldly thinges that he loueth, through whiche he sinneth venially, is as greate in his hart as the loue of God, or more: and therfore the loue of euery thing, is not beset in God, ne doen principally for goddes sake, although that a manne loue it lesse than God, yet is it veniall sinne, and deadlie sinne whan the loue of any thing, weieth in the hart of man, as moche as the loue of God or more. Dedly sinne as saieth sainct Augustine, is whan a man tourneth his harte fro God, whiche that is very soueraine bountie, that maie not chaunge, and yeueth his hart to thing that maie chaunge and flit: and certes, that is euery thing saue God of heauen. For soth is that, if a mā yeue his loue, which that he oweth to God with all his harte, vnto a creature, certes, as moche of loue as he yeueth to the same creature, so moche he bireueth fro God, and therefore doeth he sinne: for he that is debtour to God, ne yeldeth not to God al his debt, that is to saie, all the loue of his harte. Now lith manne vnderstandeth generally, whiche is veniall sinne, than it is conenable to tell specially of sinne, whiche that many a man perauenture, demeth hem no sinnes, and shriueth him not of the same thinges, and yet natheles thei be sinnes soth ly, as these clerkes write, this is to saie: At euery time that manne eateth and drinketh, more than suffiseth to ꝑ sustenance of his body, in certaine he doeth sinne: and also whan he speaketh more than it needeth, it is sinne.

Also whan he herkeneth not benignely the complainte of the poore: Also whan he is in heale of body, and woll not fast whan other folke fast, without cause reasonable: also whā he slepeth more than needeth, or whan he cometh perchaunce to late to Churche, or to other werkes of charite: Also whan he vseth his wife without soueraine desire of engendrure, to the honour of God, or for the entent to yelde to his wife debte of his bodye. Also whan he wol not visite the sick, or the prisoner, if he may. Also if he loue wife or child, or other worldly thing, more than reson requireth. Also if he flatter or blandise more, than him ought for any necessitie. Also if he minish or withdraw the almose of the poore. Also, if he apparaile his meat more dilicioully thā nede is, or eate to hastely by likorousnes. Also, if he talke vanities at churche, or at Goddes seruice, or that he be a tatler of idle wordes of folie or vilanie, for he shall yelde accōptes of it at the date of dome. Also, whan he beigheth or assureth to doo thinges, that he maie not performe. Also, whan that he by lightnesse of folie, missaieth or scorneth his neighbour. Also, whan he hath any wicked suspeccion of thing, that he ne wote of sothfastnesse. These thinges and mo without nōber be sinnes, as saieth S. Augustine. Now shall men vnderstonde, that all bee it so that non yearthly manne maie eschue all veniall sinnes, yet maie he refrain him, by the brenning loue ꝑ he hath to our lorde Jesu Christ, and by prayers and confession and other good workes, so that it shall be but litle grief. For as saith S. Augustin. If a man loue God in soche maner, that all that euer he doth is the loue of God, or for the loue of God verely, for he brenneth in the loue of GOD: looke how moche that one drop of water, whiche doeth fall into a great fourneis full of fire, anoieth or greueth the brēning of the fire: in like maner anoieth or greueth a veniall sinne, vnto that manne, whiche is stedfast and perfite, in the loue of our sauiour Jesu Christ. Furthermore, men maie also refraine and put away veniall sinne, by commoning and receiuing worthely, the body of our sauior Jesu Christ. Also, by taking of holy water, by almose dede by general confession of Confiteor at Masse, and at Complin, and by blessing of Bishops and priestes, and by other good workes.

De septem peccatis mortalibus, & de eorum dependentiis circumstantiis, & speciebus.

NOw it is expediente to tell, whiche been the seuen dedly sinnes, that is to saie, chieftains of sinnes. Al thei ren in ó lees, but in diuers maners Now been thei called seuen Cenes, for as moche as thei be chiefe, and springe of all other ther sinnes. Of the roote of these seuen sinnes, than is Pride the generall roote of all harmes. For of this roote springeth certain braunches: as Ire, Enuie, Accidie or Sloth, Auarice or Couetise, to common vnderstonding, Glotonie and lecherie: and eche of these chief sinnes, haue her braunches and twigges, as it shall bee declared in her chapiters folowing. And though so be, that no manne can vtterly tell the nomber of twigges, and of the harmes that come of Pride. yet woll I shewe a part of hem, as ye shall vnderstonde. There is inobedience, auaunting, ipocrisie, dispite, errogance, impedēce, swelling of hart insolence, elacion, impacience, striet, contumacie, presumption, irreuerence, pertinacie, vainglorie, and many other twigges that I can not declare. Inobedience, is he that disobeieth for dispite, the commaundementes of God, to his soueraines, and to his ghostly father. Auaunter, is he þ bosteth of the harme or of the bounte that he hath doen. Ipocrite is he that hideth to shewe him sochе as he is, and sheweth him to seme sochе as he is nat. Dispitous, is he þ hath disdain of his neighboure, that is to saie, of his euin Christen, or hath dispite to doe that him ought to doe. Errogaunce, is he that thinketh that he hath thole bounties in him, that he hath nat, or weneth that he should haue hem by his desertes, or els that he demeth, he is that he is nat. Impedent, is he that for his pride, hath no shame of his pride ne sinne. Swelling of harte, is whan man reioiseth him of harme, that he hath doen. Insolence, is he that dispiseth in his iudgement all other folke, as in regarde of his value, of his conning, of his speaking, & of his bearing. Elacion, is whan he ne maie neither suffer to haue maister ne felowe. Impacience, is he that woll not bee taughte, ne rebuked of his vice, and by striet denieth trouth wittingly, and defendeth his folie. Contumacie, is he that through his indignacion, is ayenst euery aucthorite or power, of hem that been his Soueraines. Presumpcion, is whan a manne vndertaketh an empryse that him ought not to do, or els that he maie not doe, and this is called surquidie. Irreuerence, is whan man doeth not honor there, as him ought to doe, and loke to be reuerenced. Pertinacie, is whan men defende her folie, and trust to mochе on her own wit. Vainglorie, is for to haue pompe, and delite in his temporel hinelle, & glory him in worldly estates. Inagling, is whan men speake to mochе before folke, and clappeth as a mille and take no kepe what they saie.

And yet there is a priuie spice of pride, that waiteth first to be salewed, or he woll salue all be he lesse worthy than that other is. And also he waiteth or desireth to sit, or els to go aboue him in the waie, or kisse pax, to be incenced, or go to offring before his neighbour, and sochе semblable thinges, ayenst his duetie perauenture, but that he hath his hart and his entent, in sochе a proude desire, to be magnified and honoured before the people.

Now ben there two maner of prides. The of hem is within the hart of a man, and the other is without. Of whiche forsaid things sothly, and mo than I haue saied, appertain to pride, that is in the hart of man, and other spices of pride beeu without, but nathelesse that one of these spices of pride, is signe of that other, righte as the gaie leuesell at the Tauerne, is signe of the wine that is in the Cellere. And this is in many thinges: as in speache and countenaunce, and outraging arraie of clothing: for certes, if there had ben no sinne in clothing, Christ would not so haue noted, and spoken of the clothing of the riche men in the Gospell. And as S. Greg saieth, that precious clothing is coulpable for the dearth of it, and for his softenesse, and for his straungenesse and disguising: And for the superfluite, or for thinordinate scantnesse of it. Alas, maie not a man se as in our daies the sinnefull costlewe arraie of clothing, and namely in to mochе superfluite, or els inordinate scantnesse.

As to the firste sinne in superfluite of clothinge, sochе that maketh it so deare, to the harme of the people, not onely the cost of embraudering, the disguised endenting, or bordering, ounding, paling, winding, or bending, and semblable wast of clothe in vanite. But there is also the costlewe Furring in her gownes, so mochе pounling of chesel to make holes, so mochе dagging of Sheres forsche, with the superfluite in length of the forsaied gownes, trailing in the dong and in the mire, as wel of hors and also on foote, as well of man as of woman. That all that trailing is verely as in effect wasted, consumed, tredbare, and rotten with doung, rather than it is yeue to the poore, to great dommage of the forsaid poore folke, and that in sondrie wise, this is to saie that the more the clothe is wasted, the more must it cost to the poore people for the scarsenesse. And more ouer, if so be that they wold yeue suche pounsed and dagged clothing to the poore people, it is nat conuenient to were for her estate, ne sufficient to her necessite, to kepe hem fro the distemperaunce of the firmament. Upon that other side, to speake of the horrible disordinate scātnesse of clothing, as been these cutted sloppes or hanselines, that through her shortnesse couer not the shamefull membres of manne, to wicked entent. Alas, some of hem shewe the bolle of her shap, and the horrible swole membres that semeth like the maladye of Hernia, in the wrapping of her hosen, and also the buttockes of hem fare as it were the hinder parte of a she Ape in the full of the moone. And more ouer the wretched swolen mēbres that they shewe throughe disguising, in departing of her hosen, in white and reed semeth that halfe her shamefull priuy membres were slain. And if so be that they departe her hosen in other colours, as is white and blewe, or white and blacke, or blacke and reed, and so forth: Than semeth it as by variaunce of colour that the halfe part of her priuy membres, ben corrupt by the fire of saint Anthony, or by canker, or other suche mischaunce. Of the hinder parte of the buttockes it is full horrible for to see, for certes in that partie of her body there as they purge her stinking ordure, that foule partie shewe they to the people proudly in dispite of honestie, whiche honestie that Jesu Christ and his frendes obserued to shewe in her life. Nowe as to the outragious aray of women. God wote that though the vilages of some of hem seme full chaste and debonaire, yet notifyn her aray or atire, licorousnesse and pride: I say not that honeste in clothing of man or woman is vncouenable, but certes the superfluite of disordinate quantite of clothing is reprouable. Also the sinne of ornement or of apparaile is in thinges that appertaine to riding, as in company, delicate horses that ben holden for delite, that ben so faire, fatte, and costlewe, and also in many a nice knaue, that is susteined bicause of hem, in curious harneis, as in sadels, cropers, peitreis, and bridels couered with precious clothing, & riche barres of plates, of golde and of siluer. For which God saieth by Zacharie the prophete, I woll confounde the riders of suche horses. These folke take litel regarde of the riding of goddes sonne of heauen, and of his harneis when he rode vpon the Asse, and had none other harneis but the poore clothes of his disciples, ne we rede not that euer he rode on other beest. I speke this for the sinne of superfluite, and not for resonable honeste, when reason it requireth. And more ouer, certes pride is greatly notified in hoolnesse of great meine, when they ben of litel prouite or of right no profite, and namely whe that meine is felonous and dammageous to the people by hardinesse of highe lordship, or by waye of offices. For certes suche lordes sell than her lordeshippe to the Deuill of Hell, whan they sustaine the wickednesse of her meine. Or elles whan these folke of lowe degree as whose that kepe hostelries, susteine theefte of her hostellers, and that is in manie maner of discentes: those maner of folke ben the flies that folow the hony, or elis the hounds that folowe the caraine. Suche forsaied folke strangell spiritueliy her lordships: For suche, this saieth Dauid the Prophete. Wicked death mighte come on those lordeshippes, and GOD yeue that they might discende into Hell, all doun, all downe: For in her houses been iniquities and shrewednesse, and not GOD of heauen. And certes, till they doen amendement, right as God yaue his blessing to Pharao by the seruice of Jacob, and to Laban by the seruice of Joseph: Right so God woll yeue his curse to suche lordshippes, as sustaine the wickednesse of her seruauntes, but they come to amendement. Pride of the table appereth also full ofte: for certes, riche menne be called to feestes, and poore folke ben put awaye and rebuked. And also in excesse of diuers meates and drinkes, and namely suche maner balle meates and disshe meates brenninge of wilde fire: peynted & castelled with paper and semblable waste, so that it is abusion to thinke. And also in to greate preciousnesse of vessell, and curiosite of minstralcy, by whiche a man is sterred more to delices of lecherie, if so be that he sette his harte the lesse vpon oure lorde Jesu Christe, certainely it is a sinne. And certainly the delices might be so greate in this case, that a manne might lightly fall by him in to a deedly sinne. The especes that sourde of pride, sothely whan they sourde of malice imagined, auised, and fore caste, or elis of vsage ben deadly sinne, it is no doute. And when they sourde by freelte vnauised sodenly, and sodenly withdrawe ayen, all be they greuous sinnes, I gesse that they be not deedly. Nowe might menne aske, whereof that pride sourdeth and springeth. I say that somtime it springeth of ỹ goodes of nature, somtime of the goodes of fortune, and somtime of the goodes of grace. Certes the goodes of nature stondeth onely in goodes of bodye, or goodes of the soule. Certes goodes of bodie ben hele of body, strēgth, deliuernesse, beaute, gentrie, franchise. Goodes of nature of the soule, ben good wit, sharpe vnderstonding, subtel engine, vertue naturel, good memory. Goodes of fortune, be riches, hie degrees of lordships, praylinges of the people. Goodes of grace: ben science, power to suffice spirituell trauelle, benigne, vertuous contemplacion, vnderstonding, of temptacion, and semblable thinges: of whiche forsaid goodes: certes it is a full greate folie, a manne to haue pride in any of hem all. Now, as for to speake of goodes of nature, God wote that somtime we haue hem in nature asmuche to our domage as to our profit. As to speake of hele of body, truly it passeth full lightly, and also it is full ofte occasion of sickenesse of the soule: for God wote the flesche is a greate enemy to the soule: and therfore the more that the body is hole, the more we be in perill to fall. Also for to haue pride in his strength of body, it is an hie foly, for certes the flesh coueteth ayenst the spirite: and the more strong that the flesche is, the sorier maye the soule be. And ouer all this strength of body and worldly hardinesse, causeth full ofte manie manne to perill and mischaunce, and also to haue pride of his gentry, is right great foly: for oftime the gentry of the bodye, taketh awaye the gentry of the soule: and also we ben all of o father and mother: and all we been of o nature, rotten and corrupt, bothe riche and poore. For soth o maner gentry is for to praise, that appartelleth mannes courage, witte, vertue, and moralite, maketh him Christes childe. For truste well, that ouer what manne that sinne hath maystry, he is a very churle to sinne.

Nowe been there generall signes of gentilnesse: as eschewinge of vice and ribaudrye, and seruage of sinne: in worde, in werke, and continuaunce of vsing a vertue, curtesy, and clennesse, and to be liberall: that is to saye, large by measure: for that that passeth measure, is foly and sin; Another is to remembre him of bounte, that he of other folke hath receiued: An other is to be benigne to his good subiectes. wherfore saieth Seneche: there is nothing more couenable to a manne of highe astate, than debonarite and pite. And therefore these flies that men call bees, whan they make her hinge, they chese one that hathe no priche, wherwith he may stinge.

Another is, manne to haue a noble hert and a diligent, to attayne to the highe vertuous thinges. Nowe certes, a manne to haue pride in the goodes of grace, is also an outrageous foly: for those giftes of grace that shuld haue turned him to goodnesse, and to medicine, tourneth him to venim and confusion as saieth saint Gregory. Certes also, who hath pride in the goodesse of fortune, he is full great fole: For sometime is a manne a great Lord by the morne that is a caitife and a wretche or it be nighte: and sometime the riches of a man is cause of his death. Sometime the delices of a manne, is cause of vertuous maladie through whiche he dieth. Certes, the commendacion of the people is, sometime full false and brotell for to truste. This day they praise, to morowe they blame. Go wote, desire to haue commendacion of the people, hath caused death to manie a bolde manne. Nowe sithe that so is, that ye han vnderstonde what is pride, and whiche been speces of it, and whēce it sourdeth and springeth: nowe ye shall vnderstonde whiche is the remedy ayenst it. Humilite or meknesse is the remedy ayenst pride, that is a vertue, throwe whiche a manne hath very knowinge of him self, and holdeth of him selfe no prise ne daintie, as in regarde of his desertes, considering euer his freelte. Nowe ben there maner of humilites: As humilite in hert, other humilite is in mouthe, and the third is in workes. The humilite in hert is in fiue maners: That one is, whan a man holdeth himselfe as nought worth before GOD in heauen. The seconde is, whan he displeseth none other man. The thirde is, whan he recketh nat, though men holde him nought worthe. And the fourth is, whan he is not sory of his humiliacion. Also the humilite of mouthe is in foure thinges. In a temperate speche, in humilite of spech, and when he confesseth with his owne mouth, that he is such as him thinketh that he is in his herte: Another is when he prayseth the bounte of an other manne and nothing therof minisheth. Humilite also in werke, is in foure maners. The firste is, when he putteth other men before him, the seconde is to chese the lowest place ouer al, the thirde is gladly to assent to good counsaile, the fourth is, to stonde gladly to the awarde of his soueraines, or of him that is in hier degre: Certaine this is grete werke of humilite.

¶ De Inuidia.

After pride woll I speke of the foule sinne of Enuye, whiche that is after the worde of the Philosopher, sorowe of other mennes prosperite. And after the worde of saint Augustin: it is the sorowe of other mennes wele, and the ioy of other mennes harme. This foule sinne is platly ayenst the holie ghoste: Al be it so, that euery sinne is ayenste the holy ghoste: yet natheles, for as muche as bounte apertaineth properly to the holy goste: & Enuy cometh properly of malice, therefore it is properly ayenst the bounte of the holy goste. Now hath malice two spices, that is to saie, hardinesse of herte in wickednes, or els the flesche of a manne is so blinde, that he considereth nat that he is in sinne, or recketh not that he is in sinne, which is the hardinesse of the deuil. That other spice of Enuy is, when that a mā denieth trouth, when he knoweth that it is trouth and also when he repenteth the grace that God hath yeue to his neighbour: and all this is by Enuy. Certes, than is Enuy the worst sinne that is, for sothly all other sinnes be somtime onely ayenst o speciall vertue: but certes, enuy is ayenst al vertues and al goodnesse. For it is sory ayenst all the bountes of her neighboure, and in this maner, it is diuers from al other sinnes. Alas: For there ne is any sinne that it ne hath some delite in it selfe, saue only Enuy, that euer hath in it self anguish and sorowe. The speces of Enuy ben these: there is firste sorowe of other mennes goodnesse and of her prosperite, and prosperite is kindely matter of ioye: Than is enuy a sinne ayenst kinde. The seconde spece of Enuy, is ioye of other mennes harme, and that is properly like to the Deuill, that euer reioyseth him of mannes harme. Of these two speces cometh backbiting, and this sinne of backebitinge or detractinge hathe certaine speces, as thus: Some manne praiseth his neighbour by a wicked entent, for he maketh alway a wicked knot at the laste ende: alway he maketh a but at the last ende, that is digne of more blame, than is worth al the praising. The seconde spece is, that if a man be good, or doth or saith a thing to good entent, the backbiter wol turne al that goodnesse vp so doun: to his shrewde entent. The thirde is to amonishe the bountie of his neighbour. The fourthe spece of backebiting is this, that if menne spekē goodnesse of a manne, than wol the backebiter saye: Perfay suche a manne is yet better than he, in dispraising of him that menne praise. The litthe spece is this, for to consent gladly and herke gladly to the harme that men speke of other folke: This sinne is full great, and aye encreseth after the wicked entent of the backbiter. After backbiting cometh grutchinge or murmuracion, and somtime it springeth of impacience ayenst God, and somtime ayenst manne. Ayenst God it is whan a man grutcheth ayenst paine of hell, or ayenst pouerty, or losse of cattell, or ayenst raine or tēpest, or els grutcheth that he wol haue prosperite, or els for that good menne haue aduersite: and all these thinges should menne suffre pacientlȳ, for they come by the rightful iudgement and ordinaunce of God. Sometime cometh grutching of auarice, as Judas grutched ayenst Maudelein, whan she anoynted the heed of our lorde Jesu Christ, with her precious ointment. This maner murmuring is such as whan man grutcheth of goodnesse that him self doth, or that other folke doen of her owne cattell. Sometime cometh murmure of pride, as whan Simon the Pharise grutched ayenst Maudelein when she aproched to Jesu Christ and wepte at his fete for her sinnes. And somtime it sourdeth of Enuy, whan men discouer a mans harme that was priuy, or bereth him on hōde thing that is false. Murmure also is olte amonge seruaūtes that grutche when her souerains bidde hem do leuill thinges, and for as much as they dare not openly with saye the commaundement of her souerains, yet wol they say harme and grutche and murmure priuely for very dispite: which wordes they call the diuels Pater noster, though so be that the diuell had neuer Pater noster, but that leude folke yeueth it suche a name. Somtime it cometh of ire or priuy hate, that norisheth rancour in the hart as afterward I shal declare. Than cometh also bitternesse of herte, thorowe which bitternes euery good dede of his neighbour semeth to him bitter & vnsauery. Than cometh discorde that vnbindeth al maner of frendship. Than cometh scorninge of his neighbour, all do he neuer so well. Than cometh accusing, as whan man seketh occasion to anoie his neighbour, whiche is like the craste of the diuel, that waiteth both day and night to accuse vs all. Than cometh malignite, through which a manne anoieth his neighbour priuely if he may, and if he maye not algate his wicked will shall not let as for to brenne his house priuely, or enpoison or sle his beestes, and semblable thinges. Nowe woll I speke of the remedie ayenst this foule sinne of enuy. First is the loue of God principally, and louing of his neighbour as him selfe: for sothly that one ne may not be without that other. And trust well that in ỳ name of thy neighbour thou shalt vnderstande the name of thy brother, for certes all we haue one father fleshly and one mother, that is to saie Adam and Eue, and also one father spirituall, that is God of heuen. Thy neighbour art thou bounde for to loue, and will him all goodnesse, and therfore saieth God: Loue thy neighbour as thy self, that is to say, to saluation both of like & soule. And more ouer thou shalte loue him in worde and in benigne admonesching and chastisinge, and comfort him in his noyaunces, and pray for him with all thy herte. And in dede thou shalt loue him in suche wise that thou shalte do to him in charite, as thou woldest that it were don to thin owne person: and therfore thou ne shalte doe him no domage in wicked worde, ne harme in his body ne in his catel, ne in his soule by entising of wicked ensample. Thou shalte not desire his wife ne none of his thinges. Understond also that in the name of neighbour is comprehēded his enemy: Certes man shall loue his enemy by the cōmaundement of god: and sothly thy frende thou shalt loue in God. I saie thin enemie, shalt thou loue for goddes sake, by his commaundement, for if it were reason that man should hate his enemy, for-soth god nolde not receiue vs to his loue that been his enemies. Ayenst thre maner of wronges that his enemy doth to him, he shal do thre thinges as thus: ayenst hate and rancour of hert, he shal loue him in hert: Ayenst chiding and wicked wordes he shal praye for his enemy: Ayenst wicked dedes, he shall doe him bounte. For Christ saith: Loue your enemies, and praie for hē that speke you harme, and for hem that chace and pursue you: and do bountie to hem that hate you. Lo, thus cōmaundeth vs our lorde Jesu Christe to do to our enemies: For sothe nature driueth vs to loue our frendes, & parfay our enemies haue more nede of loue than our frendes, and they that more nede haue, certes to hem shall men do goodnesse. And certes in that dede haue we remembraunce of the loue of Jesu Christe that died for his enemies: And in as much as that loue is more greuous to perfourme, so muche is the more great the merite, and therfore the louing of our enemie hath confounded the deuils venim: For right as the deuil is confounded by humilite, righte so is he wounded to ỳ deth by the loue of our enemy certes than is loue the medicin that casteth out the venim of enuy fro mans herte. The spices of this place shal be more largely declared in her chapiters folowing.

¶ De Ira.

After Enuy wol I discriue the sinne of Ire, for sothely who so hath enuy vpon his neighbour, anone he woll comenlye finde him a matter of wrathe in worde or in dede, ayenst him whome he hath Enuy: And as well cometh Ire of pride as of Enuy, for sothly he that is proude or enuious is lightly wrothe.

This sin of Ire, after the discriuing of S. Austin is wicked wil to be auenged by word or by dede. Ire after the Philosopher, is the feruent bloode of man iquicked in his herte through which he would harme to him that he hateth: for certes the herte of manne by chauking and mouing of his bloode, wexeth so troubled, that it is out of all maner iudgment of reason. But ye shal vnderstonde that Ire is in two maners, that one of hem is good, and that other is wicked. The good ire is by zelousie of goodnes throughe which a man is wrothe with wickednesse, and ayenst wickednesse. And therfore saith a wise man that ire is bet than playe. This ire is with debonairte, and it is wroth without bitternesse, not wroth ayenst the man, but wroth with the misdede of the manne. As saith the prophete Dauid: Irascimini, & nolite peccare. Nowe vnderstonde that wicked Ire is in two maners, that is to saye, sodaine ire or hastie ire without auisement and cōsenting of reason: The meaninge and the sence of this is that the reason of a man ne consente not to that sodeine ire, and than it is veniall. The other ire is ful wicked, that cometh of felonie of herte, auised and caste before with wicked wil to do vengeaunce, and therto his reason cōsenteth: and sothly this is deedly sin. This ire is so displesaunt to God, that it troubleth his house, and chaseth the holy ghoste out of mans soule, and wasteth and distroieth the likenesse of god, that is to say, the vertue that is in mans soule, and putteth in him the likenesse of the deuil, and taketh the man fro that is his rightfull lord. This is a ful great pleasaūce to the deuill, for it is the deuils forneis that is eschauffed with the fire of Hell: For certes right so as fire is more mighty to distroye earthly thinges, than any other element, right so ire is mighty to distroie al spirituel thinges. Lothe howe that fire of smale coles that been almost deed vnder asshen, woll reuiue or quicke ayen when thei ben touched with brimstone, righte so ire woll euer more quicke ayen when it is touched, by the pride that is couered in mans herte. For certes fire ne maie not come out of nothinge, but if it were first in the same thing naturally: as fire is drawen out of flintes with steel. And right so as pride is many times matter of ire, right so is rancour norice and keper of Ire. There is a maner tree, as saieth saint Isodore, that whan a manne maketh fire of the saide tree, and couer the coles of it with asshen, sothely the fire of it woll last a yere or more: And right so kareth it of rancour, when it is ones conceiued in the hert of some men, certes it woll lake perauenture from one Eester day vntill an other Ester daye or more. But certes the same man is ful ferre from the mercy of God all that while.

In this forsaide deuils forneis there forge thre thewes: Pride that aye bloweth and encreaseth the fire by chiding and wicked wordes: Than stondeth enuy and holdeth hotte yron in the fire vpon the hert of man, with a payre of long tonges of longe rancoure. And than stondeth the sinne of cōtumelie or strife and chelte, and battereth and forgeth by vilanous reprefuinges. Certes this cursed sin anoieth bothe to the manne him self and also his neighboure. For sothely almoste all the harme or damage that any man dothe to his neighbour commeth of wrath: for certes outragious wrathe doth be all that euer the foule fende willeth or commaundeth him. for he ne spareth neither our lorde Jesu Christ, nether his swete mother. And in his outragious angre and ire, alas alas, full many and diuers at that time, seleth in his herte ful wickedly bothe of Christ, and also of all his halowes: Is not this a cursed vice? yes certes. Alas it taketh fro man his witte and his reason, and all his debonayre life spirituell that shoulde kepe his soule. Certes it withdraweth also goddes de welordship, and that is mās soule, and the loue of his neighboures. It striueth also al daye ayenst trouthe, it reueth him the quiete of his hart, and subuerteth his soule.

Of ire cometh these stinking engendures. Firste hate, that is olde wrath. Discorde, thorowe which a man forsaketh his olde frende that he hath loued full longe. And than commeth warre and euery maner of wrong that a man dothe to his neighbour in bodye or in catell. Of this cursed sinne of ire cometh also manslaughter. And vnderstonde well that homicide, that is manslaughter is in diuers wise.

Some maner of homicide is spirituell, and some is bodely. Spirituell manslaughter is in. vi. thinges. Firste by hate as saieth saint Jhon. He that hateth his brother, is an homicide. Homicide is also by backbiting, of whiche backbiting saieth Salomon, that thei haue two swerdes, with whiche they slee her neighbours: For sothely as wicked is to take fro him his good name as his life. Homicide is also in yeuinge of wicked counsell by fraude, as for to yeue counsayle to areise wrongful customes and talages. Of whiche saith Salomon: A Lion rorynge and a Beere hungry, be like to the cruell Lordes in withholding or abredging of the hepe or the hire of the wages of Seruauntes, or elles in bierie, or in withdrawinge of the Almesse of poore folke. For whiche the wise man saieth, Fedeth him that almoosse dieth for honger, for sothly but if ye fede him ye slee him. And all these been deedly sinnes. Bodily manne slaughter is when thou sleest him with thy tounge: In other maner is, when thou commaundest to slee a man, or elles yeuest counsaile to slee a man. Manslaughter in dede is in foure maners. That one is by lawe, right as a Justice dampneth him that is culpable to the death. But let the Justice beware that he doe it rightfully, and that he dor it not for delite to spill blood, but for keping of rightwisnesse. In other homicide is done for necessite, as when a man sleeth an other in his defence, and that he ne may none other wise escape without slaughter of his aduersarie, he doth sinne, and he shall beare penaunce as for deedly sinne. Also if a manne by case or aduenture shote an arrowe or caste a stone, with which he sleeth a mā, he is an homicide. Also if a woman by negligence ouerlieth her child in her slepinge, it is homicide and deedly sin. Also whan man disturbleth conception of a childe, and maketh a woman either bareyne by drinking of venemous herbes, throughe which she may not conceiue, or sleeth a childe by drinkes, or elis putteth certaine materiall thinges in her secret places to slee the childe, or els doth vnkindly sinne, by whiche a man or a woman shedeth her nature in maner or in a place there as a childe maye not be conceyued. Or els if so be that a woman hathe conceiued, and hurteth her selfe, and by that mishappe the childe is slayne, yet it is homicide. what say we of those women that murderen her children for bicause of eschewynge of worldely shame? Certes it is an horrible homicide. Homicide is also if a manne approche to a woman by desire of lechery, thorowe whiche the child is perished, or els smiteth a woman wittingly, through which she leseth her childe: Al these ben homicides and horrible deedly sinnes. Yet come there of ire mo sinnes, as well in worde as in thought, and dede. As he that arreteth vpon God, or blameth God of the thing of which he is him selfe gilty, or despiseth God and all his halowes, as don the cursid hasardours in diuers countreis: This cursid sinne don they, whan they lese in her herte ful wickedly of God and of his halowes. Also when they trete vnreuerently the sacrament of the auter, that sin is so gret that vnneth it may be releaced, but that the mercy of God passeth al his werkes, it is so great and be so benigne. Than cometh of ire an atterly angre, whan a man is sharply amonested in his shrifte to leaue his sinne: Than woll he be angrie, and answere hokerly and angerly, or defende or excuse his sinne by vnstedfastnesse of his flesshe, or els he did it for to holde companie with his felowes, or els he saith the fende enticed him, or els he doth it for his youthe, or els his complexion is so corragious that he may not forbeare, or els it is his destenie he saieth vnto a certaine age, or els he saith it cometh him of gentilnesse of his auncesters, and semblable thinges. All these maner of folke so wrappe hem in her sinnes, that thei ne woll not deliuer hemselfe: For sothly no wight that excuseth him selfe wilfully of his sinne, maye not be deliuered of his sinne, till that he meekly beknoweth his sinne. After this than cometh swearinge, that is expresse ayenste the commaundement of God, and this befalleth often of angre and of Ire. God saieth. Thou shalte not take the name of thy Lorde God in veine or in idell. Also oure lorde Jesu Christ saieth by the worde of sainte Mathew: Ne will ye not swere in all maner, neither by heuen, for it is goddes trone, ne by erth, for it is the bence of his fete, ne by Hierusalem, for it is the cite of a great King, ne by thine hed, for thou maiste not make an heere neyther white ne blacke: but saye by youre worde, ye, naye, naye: and what that is more, it is of euill. Thus saieth Christe. For Christes [illegible] swere not so sinfully in dismembrynge [illegible] Christe: By soule, herte, bones, and body, [illegible] certes it semeth that ye thinke that the cursed Jewes ne dismembred not inoughe the precious person of Christ, but ye dismembre him more. And if so be that the lawe compell you to swere, thā ruleth you after the lawe of god in your swering, as saieth Jeremie. iiii. cap. Thou shalte kepe thre condicions, thou shalt swere in trouth, in dome, and in right wisnesse, this is to saye, thou shalte swere soth. For euery lesinge is ayenst Christ, for Christ is verie trouthe. And thinke well this that euery greate swearer not compelled lawfully to swere, the plage shall not departe fro his hous, while he vseth such vnlefful swearing. Thou shalte swere also in dome, whan thou arte constreined by thy domes manne to witnesse trouthe: Also thou shalte not swere for enuie, neither for fauour, nether for meede, reward, but onely for right wisnesse and the declaringe of it to the honour and worshipe of God, and to the aydinge and helpe of thine euin Christen. And therefore euery man that taketh goddes name in idell, or falsely sweareth with his mouth, or els taketh on him the name of Christe to be called a Christen man and liueth ayenst Christes liuinge and his teaching, all they take goddes name in idell. Loke also what saieth saynt Peter. Actum iiii. capitu. Non est aliud nomen sub celo. &c. There is none other name saieth saint Peter vnder heuen yeue to men, in which they may be saued, that is to say, but the name of Jesu Christe. Take hede eke howe precious is the name of Jesu Christe, as saith sainte Poule ad Philipenses. ii. In nomine Iesu. &c. That in the name of Jesu euery knee of heuenly creatures, earthly, and of hel should bowe, for it is so hie and so worshipfull, that the cursed fende in hell should tremble to here it named. Than semeth it that men that swere so horribly by his blessed name, that they despise more boldely than the cursed Iewes, or els the diuel that trembleth whan he hereth his name.

Nowe certes sithe that swearing, but if it be lawfully done, is so hiely defended: much more is forswering falsely, and yet nedelest.

What say we also of hem that delite hem in swearing, and holde it a genterye or a manly deb

dede to swere great othes? And what of hem that of very vsage, ne cease not to swere great othes, all be the cause not worthe a strawe? Certes, this is horrible sinne. Swearing lodeinly, is also a greate sinne. But lette vs go now to that horrible sinne, swearing of adiuracion and coniuracion, as doen these sals Enchauntours, or Nigramacers in Basins full of water, or in a bright swearde, in a circle, in a fire, or in the shulder bone of a shepe? I can not saie, but that thei doe cursedly and damnablie ayenst Christ, and all the faith of holie churche.

What say we of hem, that beleue on Deuinales, as by flighte or by noise of birdes or of beast, or by sorte, by Geomancie, by dregmes, by chirking of doores, or craking of houses, by gnawing of rattes, and soche maner wiet chidnesse? Certes, all these thinges been defended by God, and holy churche, for whiche thei been accursed, till thei come to amendement, that on soch filth set her beleue. Charmes for woundes, or maladie of menne, or of beastes, if thei take any effect, it maie be paraventure that God suffreth it, for folke shuld yeue the more faith, & reuerence to his name.

Now will I speake of leasinges, whiche generally is false signifiaunce of woorde in entent, to deceiue his euin Christen. Some leasing, is of whiche there commeth none avauntage to no wight, and some leasing turneth to the profite and ease of a man, and to the damage of an other man. An other leasing is, for to saue his life or his catell, which cometh of delite for to lie, in which delite thei will forge a long tale, & peint it with all circumstaunces, where al the tale of the ground is false. Some leasing cometh, for he wolle sustein his wordes: Some leasing cometh of rechelesnesse without auisemente, and semblable thinges.

Lette vs now touche the vice of flatterie, whiche ne cometh not gladly but for dreade, or for couetise. Flatterie, is generally wrõgfull praising. Flatterers been the deuils norices, that norishe his children, with milke of lolingerie: for soth Salomon saith, that flatterie is worse than detraction, for sometime detraction maketh an hautein manne, be the more humble, for he dreadeth detraction, but certes flatterie maketh a man, enhaunce his harte and his countenaunce. Flatterers bee the Deuilles enchauntours, for thei make a manne to wene himself be iche, that he is nat iche. Those bee like to Judas, that betraie a manne, to sell him to his enemie. Flatterers been the deuilles Chapeleins, that euer sing Placebo. I reken flatterie in the vices of ire: for oft time if a man be wroth with an other, than will he flatter some wight, to sustaine him in his quarell.

Speake we now of soche cursing, as commeth of irous hart. Malison generally may be saied, euery maner power of harme: soche curling bereueth man fro the reigne of God, as saieth S. Poule. And ofte time soche cursing wrongfully, returneth ayen to him that curseth, as a birde that turneth again to his owne nesse. And ouer all thing, men oughte eschue to curse her childzen, and yeue to the Deuill her engendzure, as ferre forthe as in hem is: certes, it is great perti & great sinne.

Let vs than speake of chiding and repzoch whiche been full greate woundes in mannes harte, for thei vnlowe the semes of frendship in mannes harte: For certes, vnneth maie a man plainly be accorded with him, that him openly hath reuiled and repzeued, & disclaundred: This is a full ghostly sinne, as Christe saieth in the Gospel. And take hede now, that he that repzeueth his neighbour, ether he repzeueth him by some harme of pain, that he hath vpon his bodie, as Mesell, croked, harlot, or by some sinne that he doeth. Now if ye repzeue him by harme of pain, than turneth the repzeue to Jesu Christ: for pain is send by the rightwise sonde of God, and by his sufferaunce, be it meselrie, maime, or malady: and if he repzeue him vncharitably of sinne, as thou holour, thou dronkelewe harlot, and so forth. Than pertaineth that to the reioising of the deuill, whiche euer hath ioie that men doen sin. And certes, chiding maie not come but of vilanous harte, for after the habounddaunce of the harte, speaketh the mouth full oft. And ye shall vnderstond, that loke by any waie, whan any man shall chastise or correct an other, that he be ware from chiding or repzeuing: for truly but he beware, he maie ful lightly quiche the fire of angre and of wrath, whiche he should quenche: and peraventure, slaeth him, which he might chastise with benignite. For as saith Salomon: the amiable tongue is the tree of life, that is to saie, of life spirituell. And sothly, a dissolute tong slaeth the spirites of hem that repzeueth, and also of him whiche is repzeued. Lo, what saieth saincte Augustin: There is nothing so like the deuils child, as he whiche oft chideth. A seruaunte of GOD behoueth not to chide. And though that chiding bee a villainous thing, betwirt al manor folke, yet it is certes moste vncouenable, betwene a man and his wife, for there is neuer reste. And therefore saieth Salomon: An hous that is vncouered and dropping, and a chiding wife, been a like.

A manne, which is in a dropping hous in many places, though he eschue the dropping in o place, it droppeth on him in an other place: So fareth it by a chiding wife, if she chide him in one place, she woll chide him in an other: And therefore better and greatly more pleasaunt is a morsell, or little gobet of breade with lope, than an hous filled full of delices, with chiding and gnerring, saieth Salomon. Sainct Poule saith: O ye wome, beth ye subgette to your husebandes, as you behoueth and ought in God: And ye men loueth your wiues. Ad Colonicenses. iii.

Afterward speake we of scorning, whiche is a wicked sinne, and namely whan he scorneth a man for his good werkes: For certes, soche scorners fare like the foule Tode, that maie not endure to smell the swete sauour of the vine, whan it flourisheth. These scorners been parting felowes with the deuil, for thei haue ioie whan the Deuill winneth, and sorowe if he leseth. Thei been aduersaries of Jesu Christ, for thei hate that he loueth, that is to saie, saluacian of soule.

Speake we now of wicked counsaile, the whiche is a Traitoure, for he deceiueth him that trusteth in him: vt Achitofell ad Salomonem. But natheless, yet is his wicked counsaile, first ayenst himself, for as saith the wiseman: Euery false liuing hath this propertie in himself, that he that woll anoie an other man, he anoieth first himself. And men shall vnderstond, that man shall not take his counsaile of false folke, ne of angrie folke, or greuous folke, ne of folke that loue specially to moche worldly folke, namely in counsailing of soules.

Now cometh the sinne of hem that sowe and make discorde emong folke, whiche is a sinne that Christ hateth vtterly, and no wōder is: for he died for to make concorde. And more shame doe thei to Christe, than did thei that him crucified: for god loueth better that frendship bee emonges folke, than he did his owne body, whiche that he gaue for vnite. Therfore been thei likened to the deuill, that euer be about to make discorde. Now cometh the sinne of double toungue, soche as speake faire before folke, and wickedly behind, or els thei make semblaunte, as though thei spake of good entencion, or els in game and plaie, and yet thei speake of wicked entent.

Now commeth bewraiyng of counsaile, through whiche a man is defamed: certes he neth maie be restore ỳ damage. Now cometh menace, that is an open folie, for he that oft menaceth, he threatteth more than he may performe ful oft time. Now cometh idel wordes, that is without profite of him that speketh the wordes, and also of him that harkeneth the woordes: Or els idell woordes been those that been nedelesse, or without entente of naturell profite. And albeit that idel wordes, be somtime veniall sinne, yet should men doubt hem, for we shall yeue rekening of hem before God. Now cometh iangling, that may not bee without sinne. And as saieth Salomon: it is a signe of a part foly. And therfore a Philosopher saied, whan menne asked him how that he should please the people, he answearde: Doe many good werkes, and speake fewe vanites. After this cometh the sinne of iaperies, that been the deuilles Apes, for thei make folke to laugh at her iaperie, as folke doe at the gaudes of an ape: whiche iapes reprendeth sainct Poule. Loke how that vertuous wordes and holy, comfort hem that trauaile in the seruice of Christe. Right so comforteth the vilainous wordes and knackes of iapers hē, that trauaile in the seruice of the deuill. These been the sinnes of the toungue that come of ire, and of other sinnes.

¶ The remedie ayenst Ire.

The remedy ayenst Ire, is a vertue that men call mansuetude that is Debonairte, and also an other vertue that menne clepe pacience or sufferaunce. Debonairte withdraweth refraineth, the stearinges and mouinges of mannes corage in harte, in soche maner that thei ne ship nat out by anger ne Ire. Sufferaunce suffreth swetely all the anoiaunces and wronges that menne doen to man outward. S. Jerome saieth this of debonairte, that it doeth no harme to no wight, ne saieth ne for no harme that men doe ne saie, he ne chafeth ayenst reason. This vertue somtime cometh of nature: for as saith ỳ Philosopher. A man is a quiche thing by nature, debonaire and treatable to goodnes: but whā debonairte is enformed of grace, thā it is the more worth

Pacience

Pacience is an other remedy ayenst ire, and is a vertue that suffreth swetely euery mannes goodnes, and is nat wroth for no harme that is doen to him. The Philosopher saith, that pacience is the vertue that suffreth debonairly, all the outrages of aduerlite, and euery wicked worde. This vertue maketh a man like to God, and maketh him Goddes owne child: as saieth Christ. This vertue discomfiteth thine enemies. And therefore saieth the wiseman: if thou wouldest venquish thine enemie, learne to suffre. And thou shalte vnderstonde, that a man suffereth fower maner of greuaunces, in outwarde thinges, ayenst the whiche fower, he must haue fower maner of paciences.

The first greuaunce is of wicked woordes, whiche suffered Jesu Christe without grutching full paciently, whan the Jewes dispised him full oft. Suffer thou therfore pacienty, for the wiseman saith: if thou striue with a foole, though the foole be wroth, or though he laugh, al waie thou shalte haue no reste. That other greuaunce outwarde, is to haue dommage of thy cattell: There ayenst suffred Christ full pacienty, whan he was dispoiled of all that he had in this life, & that was but his clothes. The thirde greuaunce, is a man to haue harme in his body: that suffred Christ full pacientiy in all his passion. The fourth greuaunce, is in outragious labour in werkes: wherefore I saie, that folke that make her seruauntes to trauaile to greuously, or out of time, as in holy daies, sothly thei dooe greate sinne. Here ayenst suffred Christe full pacientiy, and taught vs pacience, whan he bare vpon his blessed shulders the crosse, vpō whiche he should suffre dispitous death. Here maie men learne to be pacient, for certes, not onely Christen bee paciente for loue of Jesu Christ, and for reward of the blessed life that is perdurable, but certes the olde Paynems, that neuer were Christened, commended and vsed the vertue of pacience.

A Philosopher vppon a time, that would haue beat his disciple, for his great trespace, for whiche he was moued, and brought a rod to beate the childe, and whan this child sawe the rodde, he said to his maister: what thinke ye to doe? I woll beate thee saied the maister for thy correction: Forsothe saied the childe, ye ought firste correcte your selfe, that haue lost all your pacience, for the offence of a childe. Forsoth saied the maister al weping, thou saiest soth: haue thou the rodde my dere childe, and correcte me for mine impacience. Of pacience cometh obedience, through whiche a manne is obedient to Christ, and to all hem to whiche he ought be obedient in christ. And vnderstande well, that obedience is perfite, whan that a man doeth gladly and hastely, with good harte entierly, all that he should dooe. Obedience generally, is to performe the doctrine of god, and of his soueraines, to whiche him ought to be obeisaunt in all right wisnesse.

¶ De Accidie.

After the sinnes of Enuie and Ire, now woll I speake of the sinne of Accidie: for enuie blindeth the harte of a manne, and ire troubleth a man, and Accidie maketh him heuy, thought full and penssife. Enuy and ire maken bitternesse in harte, whiche bitternesse is moder of accidie, & taketh fro him the loue of all goodnesse, than is accidie the anguisshe of trouble of harte. And sainct Augustin saieth: It is a note of goodnesse and a note of harme. Certes this is a dampnable sinne, for it doeth wrōg to Jesu Christ, in as moch as it benommeth the seruice that men ought doe to Christe, as saieth Salomon: but Accidie doeth no suche diligence. He doeth al thing with anoie, and with wrawnesse, slackenesse, and excusacion: with idelnesse & vnlust. For whiche the boke saieth. I cursed bee he, that doeth the seruice of God negligently. Than is accidie enemie to euery estate of man. For certes the estate of man, is in thre maners Either it is in the estate of innocencie, as was the estate of Adā, before that he fill into sinne, in which estate he was holde to woorke, as in praising and lauding God. An other estate is the estate of sinfull men: in whiche estate men been holde to labour in praying to God, for amendemēt of her sinnes, and that he would graunt hem to rise out of her sinnes.

An other estate, is the estate of grace, in whiche state he is holden to woorke of penitence: and certes, to all these thinges is accidie contrary, for he loueth no busincsse at al. Now certes, this foule sinne accidie, is also a full greate enemie to the liuelode of the body for it ne hath no purueiaunce ayenst temporel necessite, for it forsloweth, forslogeth, and distrouth al goodes temporell by recheleslnes.

The fowerth thing is, that accidie is like hem hem that been in the paine of hell, bicause of her sloth and heauines: for thei that be damned, ben so bound, that thei may neither wel doe ne thinke. Of accidie cometh first that a manne is anoied and encombred to doe any goodnesse, and maketh that God hath abhominacion of suche accidie, as saith S. Jhon.

Now cometh sloth, that will nat suffre no hardnesse ne penaunce: for sothly slothe is so tender and so delicate, as saieth Salomon, that he will suffer no hardnesse ne penaunce, and therfore he marreth all that he doeth. Agenst this rotten sinne of accidie and slothe, should men exercise hem self, and vse hem to do good workes: and manly and vertuously catch corage to doe, thinking ỹ our lorde Jesu Christ quiteth euery good deede, bee it neuer so lite. Vsage of labour is a greate thing. For it maketh, as saieth S. Bernarde, the labourer to haue strong armes, and harde senewes: and slothe maketh heuy, feble, and tender. Than cometh dreade to beginne to worke any good workes. For certes, he that enclineth to sin, him thinketh it is so great an empryse, for to vndertake the woorkes of goodnesse, and casteth in his harte, that the circumstaunces of goodnesse, been so greuous and weightie for to suffre, that he dare not vndertake to dooe workes of goodnes, as saith sainct Gregorie.

Now cometh wanhope, that is dispeire of the mercie of God, that cometh somtime of to moche outragious sorowe, and sometime of to moche dreade, imagining that he hath doe so moche sinne, that it will not auaile him, tho he would repent him, and forsake sinne: through whiche dispeire or dread, he abandoneth all his harte to euery maner sinne, as saieth sainct Augustine. Whiche dampnable sinne, if it continue vnto his ende, it is called sinning in the holy ghost. This horrible sin is so perillous, that he that is dispeired, ther nis no felonie ne no sinne, that he doubteth for to doe, as she weth well by Judas. Certes, aboue all sinnes than is this sinne, moste displeasaunte to Christe, and moste aduersarie. Sothly, he that dispeireth him, is like to the coward chãpion recreaunt, that flieth without nede. Alas alas, nedeles is he recreaunt, and nedelesse dispaired. Certes, the mercie of God is euer redy to the penitent person, and is aboue all his werkes. Alas can not a man bethinke him on the Gospell of S. Luke, xv. where as Christ saith, that as well shal there be ioie in heauen, vpon a sinfull manne that doeth penitence, as vpon. xcix. rightfull men that nede no penitence. Looke ferther in the same Gospel, the ioy and the feast of the good man, that had lost his sonne, whan his sonne with repentaunce was retourned to his father. Can thei not remember hem also, that (as saieth S. Luke) Chapi. xx. How that the thief that was hanged beside Jesu Christe, saied: Lord remember me, whan thou comest in thy reigne. For loth saied Christ, I saie to thee: to daie shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Certes, there is non so horrible sinner a man, that ne maie in his life bee distroied by penitence, through vertue of the passion and of the death of Christe. Alas what nede men than to be dispaired, sith that his mercy is redy and large? Alas and haue Than cometh compnolẽce, that is sluggie, slombring, whiche maketh a man heaute, and dulle in body and in soule, and this sinne cometh of slothe. And certes, the time that by waie of reason man should not slepe, is by the morowe, but if there wer cause reasonable. For sothly, the morowe tide is moste conenable, a manner saie his praiers, and for to thanke God, and to honor God, and to yeue almose to the poor that cometh first in the name of Jesu Christ.

Loe, what saieth Salomon? Who so wil by the morowe awake to seke me, he shall find me. Than cometh negligence or retchelesnes that recketh of nothing. And though that ignorance bee mother of all harmes, certes, negligence is the norice. Negligence ne doth no force, whan he shall doe a thing, whether he doe it well or euill.

The remedy of these two sinnes is, as saith the Wiseman: that he that dredeth God, spareth not to doe that he ought to dooe, and he that loueth GOD, he will dooe diligence to please GOD by his werkes, and abandone himself with all his might, well for to doe. Than cometh idelnesse, that is the yate of all harmes. An idell manne is like to a place that hath no walles, the deuill maie enter in euery side, or shote at him that is discouert by temptacion on euery side. This idelnes is the thorrube of all wicked & vilaine thoughtes, and of all ordure. Certes, the heauen is yeue to hem that will labour, and not to idel folke. Also Dauid saieth, that thei ne been not in the labour of menne, ne thei shall not be whipped with men, that is to saie in Purgatorie. Certes, than semeth it thei shall be tormented with the deuils in hell, but if thei do penaunce.

Than cometh the sinne, that men call tar-

ditas, as whan a man is so latered, or tarying or he woll tourne to God: and certes, that is a greate foly. He is like him that falleth in the ditche, and woll not arise. And this vice cometh of fals hope, that he thinketh he shal liue long, but that hope faileth full oft.

Than cometh lachesse, that is he that whā he beginneth any good worke, anon he woll leaue and stint it, as doen thei that haue any persons to gouerne, & ne take of him no more hede, anon as thei finde any contrary or any anoie. These been the newe shepherdes, that let their shepe wittingly go ren to the wolfe, that is in the breres, or doe not force of her owne gouernaunce. Of this cometh pouerte and distruction, bothe of spirituell and temporell thinges. Than cometh a maner coldenesse, that freseth the harte of man. Than cometh vndeuocion, through whiche a man is so blont, and as saith S. Bernard, hath soche langoure in his soule, that he may neither rede ne sing in holy churche, ne here ne think of no deuocion, ne trauaile with his hondes in no good worke, that it nis to him vnsauery and all apalled. Than wexeth he slow and slombry, and sone woll be wroth, and sone is enclined to hate and enuy. Than cometh the sinne of worldly sorowe, soche as is called Tristicia, that slaeth a man, as saieth saincte Poule. For certes, soche sorowe worketh the death of the soule and bodie also, for thereof cometh that a man is anoied of his owen life wherefore soche sorowe shorteth full oft the life of man, er that his time is come, by wais of kinde.

Ayenst this horrible sinne of accidie, and the braunches of the same, there is a vertue that is called Fortitudo or strengthe, that is an affection, throughe whiche a man dispiseth anoyous thinges: this vertue is so mightie and so rigorous, that it dare withstonde mightilie, and wisely kepe himself fro perilles that ben wicked, & wrastell ayenst the assaultes of the deuill, for it enhaunceth & enforceth the soul, right as accidie abateth and maketh it feble: for this fortitude may endure by long sufferraunce, the trauailes that been conuenable.

This vertue hath many speces, the first is called Magnanimite, that is to saie, greate corage. For certes, there behoueth greate corage ayenst Accidie, lest that it ne swallowe the soule by the sinne of sorowe, or distroie it by wānhope. Certes, this vertue maketh folke vndertake, hard and greuous thinges by her owen will, wisely and reasonably. And for as moche as the deuil fighteth ayenst a manne, more by subtilte and sleight, than by strēgth, therfore shall a man withstande him by wit, reason, and discrecio. Than are there the vertues of faithe, and hope in GOD and in his sainctes, to eschue and accomplishe the good workes, in the whiche he purposeth fermely to continue. Than cometh suretie of sitternesse, and that is whan a man, ne doubteth no trauaile in time cōming, of the good workes that he hath begon. Than cometh Magnificence, that is to saie, whan a man doth and performe great workes of goodnes, that he hath begon, and that is thede, why men should doe good workes. For in thaccomplishing of good workes, lieth the great guerdon. Than is there Constaunce, that is stablenes of corage, and this should be in harte by stedfast faith, and in mouth, in bearing, in there, and in deede. Also there been mo speciall remedies ayenst accidie, in diuers woorkes: as in consideracion of the paines of hell, the ioyes of heauen, and in trust of the grace of the holy ghost, that will yeue him might to performe his good entent.

De Auaricia.

After Accidie, woll I speake of Auarice, and of Couetise. Of whiche sinne S. Poule saith: the roote of all harmes is Couetise. Id Timoth. vi. For soth ly, whan the hart of manne is confounded in it self and troubled, and that the soule hath lost the comforte of God, than seketh he an idell solace of worldly thinges.

Auarice, after the discripcion of S. Augustine, is a licorousnes in hart to haue yearthly thinges. Some other folke saie, that Auarice is for to purchase many yearthly thinges, and nothing to yeue to hem that haue nede. And vnderstande, that auarice standeth not onely in lande ne catell, but sometime in science & glorie, & in euery maner of outragious thinges is auarice. And couetise is this.

Couetise, is for to couete soche thinges, ỹ thou hast nat. And Auarice is to wicked holde and kepe soch thinges, as thou hast without right. Soothly, this auarice is a sinne, that is full dampnable, for all holy writ curseth it, and speaketh ayenst that vice, for it dooeth wrong to Jesu Christe: for it taketh fro him, the loue that men to him owe, and tourneth it backewarde ayenst all reason, and maketh that the auaricious man, hath more hope in his cattell, than in Jesu Christe, and doeth more obseruaunce in keping of his treasour, than he doeth in the seruice of Jesu Christe. And therefore saieth sainct Poule: Ad Ephesios quinto: That an auaricious man is the thraldome of Idolatrie.

and

What difference is there betwixte an Idolaster, and an auaricious man? But that an Idolaster, parauenture ne hath nat but a Maumet or two, and the auaricious manne hath many. For certes, euery florein in his coser, is his maumet. And certes, the sinne of maumetrie, is the first that God defended, as in the. x. cõmaundemente it beareth witnes, in Exodi. Capi. xx. Thou shalt haue no false Goddes before me, ne thou shalt make to thee no graue thing. Thus is an auaricious man that loueth his treasure before God, an Idolaster. And through this cursed sinne of auarice and couetise, cometh these hard lordshippes, through whiche thei been streined by tillages, customes, and carriages, more than her duetie or reason is, or els take thei of her bonmenne amerciamentes, whiche might more reasonably be called extorcions, than merciamentes. Of which amerciamētes, or raunsoming of bondmen, some Lordes stewardes saie, that it is rightfull, for as muche as a churle hath no temporell thing, that it ne is his lordes, as thei saie. But certes, these lordshippes doe wrong, that bereue their bondemen, thinges that thei neuer yaue hem. Augustinus de Ciuitate dei. Libro. iv. Sothe is that the condicion of thraldome, and the first cause of thraldom was for sinne.

Thus maie ye se, that the offence deserued thraldome, but nat nature. Wherefore these Lordes ne should not moche glorifie hem in her Lordshippes, sithe that thei by naturall condicion, been not lordes ouer thralles, but for that thraldome came first by the deserte of sinne. And more ouer, there as the Lawe saieth, that temporell goodes of bonde folke, been the goodes of her Lorde: yea, that is for to vnderstonde, the goodes of the Emperour, to defende hem in her right, but not to robbe hem ne reue hem. Therefore saieth Seneca: Thy prudence should liue benignly with the thralles. Those that thou calleſt thy thralles, been Goddes people: and for humble people been Christes frendes, thei been conuerniall with the Lordes.

Thinke also, that of soche seede as cherles spring, of soche seede spring Lordes: As well may ỹ chorle be saued as the Lord. The same death that taketh the chorle, soche death taketh the Lorde. Wherefore I rede doe right so with the chorle, as thou wouldeſt that the lorde did with thee, if thou wer in his plight. Euery sinfull manne is a chorle to sinne: I rede thee Lorde certes, that thou werken soche wise with thy chorles, that thei rather loue thee than dread thee. I wote well, that there is degree aboue degree, as reason is, and skill is that menne doe her deuour, there as it is [illegible] but certes, extorcions, and despite [illegible] is dampnable.

I [illegible] understande well, that these Conquerours or Tyrauntes, made full oft thralles of hem, that been borne of royall blood, as been thei that hem conquere. This name of Thraldome was neuer erst knowe, till that Noe saied that his sonne Canam, should bee thrall to his brethren for his sinne. What saie we than of hem, that proue and doe extorcions to holie Churche: certes the swerd that menne yeue first to a knight whan he is newe dubbed, signifieth that he should defende holie Churche, and not robbe and pill it, and who so doeth is Traitour to Christe. And as saieth sainct Augustine, they been the Deuilles wolues, that strangle the Shepe of Jesu Christe, and doen worse than wolues, for sothely, whan the wolue hath full his wombe, he stinteth to strangle the shepe. But sothly, the pillours and destroiers of holie Churche goodes, ne doe not so, for they stint neuer to pill. Now as I haue saied, sith so is that sinne was first cause of thraldome, than is it thus, that at the time that all the worlde was in sin, than was all this worlde in thraldome, and in subiection, but certes sithe the time of grace came, GOD ordained that some folke should bee more hie in estate and in degree, and some folke more lowe, and that eche should bee serued in his estate.

And therfore, in some countreis there they bee thralles, whan thei haue tourned hem to the faithe, thei make her thralles free men of the thraldome: a therfore, certes the Lord oweth to his man, that the man oweth to the lorde. The Pope calleth himself seruaunte of the seruauntes of God, but for as the estate of holy Churche, ne might not haue been, ne the common profite might not haue be[illegible]

ne peace ne reste in earth, but if God had ordained that some manne hath hier degre, and some menne lower: Therfore was soueraimte ordained to kepe, maintaine, and defende her vnderlinges and her subiectes in reason, as fer forthe as it lieth in her power, and not to distroy ne confounde hem. Wherefore I saye, that those lordes that ben like woulues that deuour the possessions or the catteil of poore folkes wrongfully, without mercy or mesure, they shall receiue by the same measure that they haue mesured to poore folke, the mesure of Jesu Christ but it be amended. Nowe cometh disceite betwirt marchaunt and marchaunt. And thou shalt vnderstond that marchaundise is in two maners, that one is bodily, and that other is ghostly: that one is honest and lefull, and that other is dishonest and vnlefull. The bodely marchaundise that is lefull and honeste is this: that there as God hath ordained that a reigne or a countrie is suffisaunte to him selfe, than it is honest and lefull that of haboundaunce of this country, menne helpe an other countrie that is nedy: And therfore there muste be marchauntes to bring fro one countrie to that other her marchaundise. That other marchaundise that menne haunten with fraude, and trecherie, and disceite with lesinges and false othes, is righte cursed and dampnable. Espirituell Marchaundise is properly Simonie, that is entemtife desire to bie any thing espirituell, that is a thinge, whiche apertaineth to the saintuarie of GOD, and to cure of the soule. This desire if so be that a manne do his diligence to perfourme it, all be it that his desire ne take none effect, yet it is to him a deedly sinne, and if he be ordred, he is irreguler. Certes Simonie is called of Simon magus, that would haue boughte for temporell catel, the yefte that GOD had yeue by the holy ghost to Saint Peter, and to the Apostels: And therefore vnderstonde, that he that selleth and he that bieth thinges espirituels, ben called Simoniaches, be it by catteil be it by procuring or by flechly praier of his frendes, flechly frendes or espirituel frendes, flechly in two maners, as by kinred or other frendes: Sothly if they praie for him that is not worthy and able, it is Simonie if he take the benefice, and if he bee worthy and able there is none. That other maner is whan man or woman praieth for folke to auaūce him onely for wicked flechly affeccion which thei haue vnto the persons, and that is soule simonie. But certes in seruice, for whiche menne yeuen thinges espirituell vnto her seruauntes, it must be vnderstonde that the seruice muste be honest, or els not, and also that it be without bargeining, and that the person be able. For as saieth saint Damasen: All the sinnes of the worlde at regarde of this sinne, are as thing of nought, for it is the greatest sinne that maie be after the sinne of Lucifer and of Antichriste: For by this sinne GOD forleseth the Church and the Soule, whichhe bought with his precious bloode, by hem that yeue Churches to hem that been not worthy, for they put in theues hondes that steale the soules of Jesu Christe, and distroie his patrimonie. By suche vnworthy prieftes and curates haue leude menne lesse reuerence of the Sacramentes of holy Church, and suche yeuers of churches put the children of christ out, and put in the Church the Diuels owne sonnes: thei sell the soules that lambes should kepe to the wolf which strangleth hem: and therfore shall they neuer haue parte of the pasture of lambes, that is the blisse of Heauen. Nowe cometh hasardrie with his apertenauntes, at tables and rafles, of whiche cometh disceite, false othes, chidinges, and all rauinesse blaspheminges, and renynges of God, and hate of his neighbours, waste of goodes, mispendinge of time, and sometime manslaughter. Certes hasardours ne mowe not be without greate sinne. Of Juarice cometh also lesinges, theft, false witnesse, and false othes: and ye shall vnderstonde that these be greate sinnes, and expresse ayenst the commaundementes of God, as I haue saide. False witnesse is in worde, and also in dede: In worde, as for to bireue thy neighebours good name by thy false witnesse, or bireue him his catteil or his heritage, by thy false witnessing, whan thou for ire or for mede, or for enuie, beares false witnesse, or accuses him, or excuseth thy selfe falsely. Ware ye questmongers and notaries: certes for false witnessing was Susan in ful great sorow & paine, and many an other mo. The sin of theft is also expresse ayenst goddes hest, and in two maners, copoel and espirituel, the cōpoell theft is: Is for to take thy neibours catteil ayenst his will, be it by force or by sleight, be it by mette or by mesure: by stealinge also of false enditementes vpon him, and in borowing of thy neighbours catteil, in entent neuer to paye it ayen, and semblable thinges. Espirituel theft is sacrilege, that is to say, hurting of holy things sacred to christ in two maners, by reson of the holy place, as churches or churche yerdes: For which euery vilainous sinne that men done in suche places, may be called sacrilege, or euery violence in the semblable places. Also thei that withdrawe falsely the rightes that longe to holy churche and pleding. And generally sacrilege is to reue holy thing fro holy place, or vnholy thing, out of holy place, or holy thinge out of vnholy place.

NOwe shall ye vnderstond, that releuing of Auarice is mistericorde and pite largely taken. And menne might aske why that mistericorde and pite are releuinge of Auarice: Certes the auaricious man sheweth no pite ne mistericorde to the nedefull man.

For he deliteth him in the keping of his treasure, and nat in the relcuing ne releuing of his euin Christen. And therefore speake[illegible] first of mistericorde. Than is mistericor[illegible] saieth the Philosopher, Iustice, by w[illegible] the corage of manne is stered, by the mis[illegible] of him that is diseased. Upon whiche mistericorde foloweth pite, in performing and fulfilling of charitable workes of mercy, helpeth and comforteth him that is miseased. And certes these thinges moue & stere a man to mistericorde of Jesu Christe, that he yaue him selfe for our offence, and suffred death for mistericorde, & forgaue vs our original sinnes, and therby released vs fro the paines of hell, and minished the paines of purgatory by penitence, and yeueth grace well to doe, and at laste the blisse of Heauen. The speces of mistericorde been for to lene, and also for to yeue: for to forgeue and release, and for to haue pite in herte and compassion of the mischiefe of his euen Christen, and also to chastise there as nede is. In other maner of remedy ayenst Auarice, is resonable largesse: but sothly here behoueth the consideracion of that grace of Jesu Christ, and of the temporell goodes, and also of the goodes perdurable that Jesu christ yafe to vs, and to haue remembraunce of the death whiche he shal receiue, he knoweth not whan, where, ne who: and also that he shall forgo all that he hath, saue onely that which he hath expended in good werkes.

But for as muche, as some folke been vnmesurable, menne oughte for to auoide and eschue folish largesse, the whiche some people call waste.

Certes, he that is foole large, yeueth no[illegible] his catteli, but he leseth his catteli.

Sothly what thing that he yeueth for desire glory, as to mincstrels and to folke that desire his renome in the worlde, he hath sinne therof and none almesse: Certes he leseth foule his good that he ne seketh with ȳ yelt of his good nothing but sinne. He is like to an horse that seketh rather to drinke drouy or troubled water, than for to drinke water of the clere well. To hem apperteinen the saide cursing, that Christ shall yeue at the daie of dome, to hem that shal be dampned.

Sequitur de Gula.

AFter Auarice cometh Glotenie, which is expresse ayenst the maundement of God. Glotenie is vnmesurable appetite to eten or to drinke, or els to do inough to the vn[illegible]urable appetite disordeined couet[illegible] or to drinke. [illegible] corrupteth [illegible]s worlde, and [illegible] wel wed in the sinne of Adam and of Eue. Lobe also what saieth saincte Poule of glotony. Many (saith he) gon, of whiche I haue often said to you, and now I saye it wepinge, that been the enemies of the crosse of Christ, of whiche the ende is death, and of which her wombe is her God and her glorye, in confusion of hem that so deuour earthly thinges. He that is yeue to this sinne of Glotony, him maie no sinne withstonde, he must bee in lo[illegible] uage of all vices, for it is the Deuils hoste there he hideth and reketh him. This sinne hath manie speces: The firste is dronkenesse that is the horrible sepulture of mannes reson: and therefore whan a manne is dronke he hath loste his reason: And this is deedly sinne. But sothly whan that a manne is not wonte to stronge drinke, and parauenture not knoweth not the strength of the drinke, or hath feblesse in his heed, or hath trauailed, through whiche he drinketh the more, all be he sodainly caught with drinke, it is no deedly sinne, but veniall. The second spece of glotony is, that the spirite of a manne wexeth al troubled, for dronkennesse bireueth him the discrecion of his wit.

The thirde maner spece of Glotonie is whan a manne deuoureth his meate, and hath no[illegible]

right full maner of eating. The fowerth is, whan through the greate abundaunce of his meate, the humours in his body been distempered. The fifth is, forgetfulnesse by to moche drinking, for whiche sometime a man forgetteth er the morning, what he did on the euening before.

In other maner been distinct the speces of glotonie, after sainct Gregorie. The first is, for to eate before time to eate. The second is, whan a man giueth him to delicate meate, or drinke. The third is, whã men take to moche ouermeasure. The fourth is, curiosite, with great entent to make a apparell his meate. The fifth is, for to eate to gredely.

These been the fiue fingers of the deuilles hond, by whiche he draweth folke to sinne.

Ayenst Glotonie, the remedie is abstinence, as saieth Galiene: but that I holde nat meritorious, if he doth it for ỹ heale of his bodie. Sainct Augustine will that abstinence be doen for vertue, and with pacience. Abstinence (saith he) is litle worthe, but if a man haue good will thereto, and but if he be enforced by pacience and charite, and that men doe it for Goddes sake, and in hope to haue blisse in heauen.

The fellowes of abstinence bee attemperaunce, that holdeth the meane in all thinges. Also shame that eschueth al dishonestie. Sufficiaunce, that seketh no riche meates ne drinkes, ne doeth not force of outragious, apparelling of meate. Measure also, that restraineth by reason, the vnmeasurable appetite of eating. Soberneste also, that restraineth the outrage of drinke. Sparing also, that restraineth the delicate ease, to sit longe at meate. wherfore some folke standen of her owne will whan thei eate, bicause thei will eate at lesse leasure.

De luxuria.

After Glotonie cometh lecherie, for these twoo sinnes been so nighe cosins, that oft time thei wol nat depart. God wote this sin is full displeasant to God the forsaid himself: doe no lecherie. And therefore he putteth greate paines ayenst this sinne.

For in the old law, if a woman thrall were take in this sinne, she should bee beate with staues to death. And if she were a gentill woman, she should bee slain with stones. And if she were a Bishoppes doughter, she should be brend by Goddes commaundement.

More ouer by the sinne of Lecherie, God drowned all the worlde, and after that he brent fiue citees with thunder and lightning, and sanke hem into hell.

Now let vs speake than of the said stinking sinne of Letherie, that menne call auoutrie of wedded folke, that is to saie, if that one of hem been wedded, or els bothe. Sainct Iohn saieth, that auouterers shall bee in hell, in a stanche brenning of fire and of Brimstone, for the stenche of the ordure: certes the breaking of this Sacramente, is an horrible thing: it was made of God himself in Paradise, and confirmed by Iesu Christe, as witnesseth S. Mathew in the Gospell: A manne shall leue father and mother, and take him to his wife, and thei shall be two in one flesche.

This Sacramente betokeneth the knitting together of Christe and holie Churche. And not onely that God forbade auoutrie in deede, but also he commaunded that thou shouldest not coueite thy neighbours wife. In this helle saieth sainct Augustine, is forboden all maner couetise to doe Lecherie, Lo. what saieth sainct Mathewe in the Gospell, that who so seeth a woman, to coueitise of his lust, he hath doen Lecherie with her in his harte. Here maie ye see, that not onely the deede of this sinne is forboden, but also the desire to that sinne. This cursed sinne anoieth greuously hem that it haue: and first to her soule, for he obligeth it to sinne, and to paine of death, whiche is perdurable. Vnto the bodie anoieth it greuously also, for it drieth him and wasteth, and shenteth him, and of his blood he maketh Sacrifice to the fend of helle: It wasteth his catteil and his substaunce. And certes, if it bee a foule thing, a manne to waste his catteil on women: yet it is a fouler thing, whan that for soche ordure women dispende vpon menne, her catteil and her substaunce. This sinne as saith the prophete, taketh from manne and woman, her good fame and her honour, and it is full delectable, and pleasant to the deuil. For therby winneth the more parte of this wretched worlde. And right as a Marchaunte deliteth him moste in that chaffare, whiche he hath moste auauntage and profite of, right so deliteth the fende in this ordure.

This is that other honde of the deuill, with fiue fingers, to catche the people to his vilanie. The firste is the folisshe loking of the folisshe woman and of the folisshe man, that fleeth right as the Basilicock or cocatrice fleeth folke by venim of his sight, for the couetise of the eyen folo weth the couetise of the hart. The second finger is the vilanous touching in wicked maner. And therfore saieth Salamon: that who so toucheth and handeleth a woman, he fareth as the manne that handeleth the scorpion, which stingeth and sodainly fleeth through his enuemining, or as who so that toucheth warme pitch blemisheth his fingers. The thirde is foule wordes, whiche fareth like fire, whiche righte anon brenneth the harte. The fourthe finger is the kissing: And truely he were a great foole that would kisse the mouthe of a brenninge ouen or of a fornels. And more fooles been they that kisse in vilanie, for that mouthe is the mouthe of hel, and namely these olde dotardes folours, whiche woll kisse and flicker, and besie hem self though thei maie nought do. Certes thei ben like to hounde: for an hounde whan he cometh nigh to the roser, or by other benches, thoughe so bee that they maie not pisse, yet woll he heue vp his legge and make a countenaunce to pisse. And for that manie manne weneth that he maie not sinne for no licorousnesse that he doth with his wife. Truely that opinion is false: GOD wote a manne maie slee him self with his owne knife, and make him self dronke with his owne tonne. Certes be it wife, be it childe, or any wordly thing, that he loueth before god, it is his maumette, and he is an idolastre. A manne should loue his wife by discrecion, pacientlý and attemperatly, and than is she as though it wer his suster. The fifthe finger of the Diuelles honde is the stinking dede of lechery. Truely thy fiue fingers of glotonie the Deuill putteth in to the wombe of a man: And with his fiue fingers of lecherye he gripeth him by the reines, for to throwe him into the fornels of Hell, there as they shall haue the fire and the wormes that euer shall laste, and weping and wailing, and sharpe hungre and thrust, grimnesse of Diuels, whiche shall all to trede hem withouten ende. Of lecherie as I saide sourdeth and springeth diuers speces: as fornication, that is betwene man and woman whiche bee not maried, and is deedly sinne, and ayenst nature: All that is enemie and destruccion to nature is ayenst nature. Perfit the reason of a man telleth him wel also that it is deedly sinne, for as much as god forbad lecherie. And sainct Poule yeueth hem to reigne that nis dewe to no wight but to hir that done deedly sinne. Another sinne of lechery is to bireue a maides maidenhed, for he that dothe, certes he casteth a maiden out of the hiest degre that is in this presente life and bireueth her that precious fruite that the boke calleth the hündreth fruites. I ne can saye it none other wise in Englisshe, but in Latin it highte (Centesimus fructus) Certes he that so doth is the cause of many damages and vilanies, mo than any manne can rekne righte as he is cause of many domages for time that beestes doe in the felde, that breketh the hedge or the closure through which he is stroieth that maie not be restored: For certes no moze maidenheed be restored, than an arme that is smitte fro the bodie, maie turne ayen and were: She maie haue mercy this wote I well, if that she haue will to penitence, but neuer shall it be that she nis corrupte. And all be it so that I haue [illegible] somwhat of auoutry, also it is good to [illegible] the perilles that longe to auoutrie, for to [illegible] chewe that foule sinne. Auoutrie in latin for to saie, approchinge of an other mannes bedde, through whiche those that sometime were one flesche, abondon her bodies to other persons. Of this sinne as saieth the wise man folowe many harmes: Firste breaking of faithe, and certes in faithe is the keye of christendome: and whan that faithe is broken and loste, sothly christendom stont beine but withoute fruite. This sinne also theefte, for theefte generally is to reue a wight his thing ayenst his will. Certes, this is the foulest theft that may be, whan that a woman breketh her body for her husbonde, and yeueth it to her holour to deforle her, and stealeth her soule fro Christe, and yeueth it to the Deuil. This is a fouler theefte than for to breke a churche and steale away the chalice, for the auouterers breke the temple of God spiritually, and steale the vessell of grace that is the bodie and the soule: for whiche Christe shall destroy hem, as saieth saint Poule. Sothely of this theefte douted greatly Joseph, whan that his Lordes wife prayed him of vilanie whan he saide: Lo my Lady howe my Lord hath take to me vnder my warde, all that he hath in this world, ne nothing of his thinges is out of my power, but onely ye that be his wife: and howe should I than doe this wickednesse and sinne so horrible ayenste God, and ayenst my lorde, God it forbede. Alas, all to litell is suche trouthe nowe founde. The thirde harme is the filth, through which thei breake the commaundement of God, and defoile the auter of matrimonie, that is Christ. For certes, in so muche as the Sacrament of mariage is so noble and so digne, so muche is it greater sin for to breake it: For God made mariage in paradise in the estate of innocencie, to multiplie mankinde in the seruice of God, and therfore is the brekinge thereof the more greuous, of whiche brekinge come false heires oft time, that wrongfully occupie folkes heritages: and therfore woll Christ putte hem out of the reigne of heauen, that is heritage to good folke. Of this brekinge cometh also oft time that folke vnware wedde or sin with her owne kinrede: and namelye these harlottes that haunte bordels of these foule women, that maie be likened to a commune gonge, where as menne pourge her ordure. What saie we also of putours, that liue by the horrible sinne of putrie, and constreine women to yeue to hem a certaine rente of her bodely puterie, yea somtime of his owen wife or his childe, as done these baudes: Certes, these ben cursed sinnes. Understond also that auoutrie is sette gladly in the ten commaundementes betwene thefte and manslaughter, for it is the greatest thefte that maie be, for it is thefte of bodie and of soule, and it is like to homicide for it kerueth a two and breketh a two hem that firste were made of one flesh. And therefore by the olde lawe of GOD they should be slaine, but natheless by the lawe of Jesu Christ, that is lawe of pite, whan he said to the woman that was founde in auoutrie, and should haue be slaine with stones after the will of the Jewes, as was her lawe: Go said Jesu Christ, and haue no more will to do sinne. Sothely the vengeaunce of auoutrie is awarded to the paines of Hell, but if so be that it be disbourbed by penitence. Yet been there mo speces of this cursed sinne, as whan that one of hem is religious or els bothe, or of folke that been entred into ordre, as subdeaken, Deaken, or Priefte, or hospitaliers. And euer the hier that he is in ordre, the greater is the sinne. The thinges that greatly agredge her sinne is the breking of her auowe of chastite whan they receiued the order. And more ouer sothe is that holy order is chefe of all the tresorie of GOD and his especiall signe and marke of chastite, to shew that they been ioyned to chastite, whiche is the moste precious life that is: and these ordred folke ben specially titled to God and of the speciall meine of GOD, for whiche whan they doen deedly sinne they ben the traitours of GOD and of his people, for they liue of the people. Priestes ben Aungelles as by the dignite of her misterie, but forsoth saint Poule saieth, that Sathanas transfourmeth him in an Aungell of lighte. Sothely the Priefte that haunteth deedly sinne he may be likened the Aungell of darkenesse, transfourmed in the Aungell of light, he semeth Aungell of light, but forsoth he is Aungell of darknesse. Such Priestes be the sonnes of Hely, as the weth in the booke of Kinges, that they were the sonnes of Belial, that is the Diuell. Belial is to saie without iudge, and so fare they, hem thinketh they be free and haue no iudge, no more than hath a free bulle that taketh whiche Cowe that him liketh in the toune. So fare thei by women, for right as one fre Bull is inough for all a toune, right so is a wicked Priest corrupcion inough for all a parishe, or for al a countrey: These Priestes, as saith the boke, ne cã not ministre the misterie of priesthode to the people, ne they know not GOD, they ne helde hem not apayed, as saieth the boke, of sodden flesche that was to hem offred, but they toke by force the flesh that was raw. Certes, so these shrewes ne helde hem not apayed of rosted and sodde flesche, with whiche the people fedde hem in great reuerence, but they woll haue rawe flesshe of folkes wiues and her doughters, and certes these women that cõsent to her harlotry don great wrong to Christ and to holy Churche, all Halowes, and all Soules, for they bireue all these hem that should worship CHRIST and holy Churche, and praie for christen Soules, and therfore haue suche Priestes and her lemans also that consent to her lecherie, the curfing of all the courte christien, till they come to amendement. The thirde spece of auoutrie is somtime betwirt a manne and his wife, and that is whan they take no regarde in her assembling, but onely to her fleshly delite, as saith saint Jerome, and ne reken of nothing but that they ben assembled bicause they ben maried, all is good inoughe, as they thinke: but in suche folke hath the Diuell power, as said the angell Raphaell to Tobie, for in her assembling they put Jesu Christe out of her herte, and yeue hem selfe to all ordure. The fourthe spece is the assemble of hem that ben of one affinite, or els of hem, with which her fathers or her kinred haue dealed in the sin of lecherie: This sinne maketh hem like to houndes, that take no kepe to kinrede. And certes parentele is in two maners: eyther ghostly or fleshly: ghostly as for to deale with his godsib, for right so as he that engendreth a childe is his fleshly father, righte so is his Godfather his father espirituell: for whiche a woman may in no lesse sinne assemble with her Godsib, than with her owne fleshly brother. The fifthe spece is that abhominable sinne, of whiche abhominable sinne no man vnneth ought speake ne write, natheless it is openly rehersed in holy writ. This cursed sinne doen menne and women in diuers entent and in diuers maner: But though that holy writte speke of horrible sinne, certes holy writte maie not be defoiled, no more than the sunne that shineth on the dongehill. An other sin apperteineth to lechery that cometh sleping, and this sinne cometh often to hem that been maidens, and also to hem that bee corrupt, and this sinne menne cal Polucion, that commeth of three maners: Somtime of languissching of bodie, for the humours been to ranke and habūdaunt in the body of man, somtime of infirmite, for feblenesse of the vertue retentife, as physike maketh mencion: Somtime for surfet of meate and drinke, and somtime of vilainous thoughtes that been enclosed in mannes minde whan he goeth to slepe, whiche maie not be without sinne, for whiche menne muste kepe hem wisely, or els maie men sinne ful greuously.

Now cometh the remedie ayenst lechery, and that is generally chastite and continence, that restrayne all disordinate meuinges that come of fleshely talentes. And euer the greater merite shal he haue that most restreineth the wicked chaufinges of the ordour of this sin, and this is in two maners: That is to saie, chastice in mariage, and chastise in widowhede. Nowe shalte thou vnderstonde that matrimony is leful assembling of man and woman that receiuen by vertue of this Sacrament, the bonde throughout whiche they maie not be departed in all her life, that is to say, while that thei liue bothe. This as saieth the boke, is a ful great sacrament, god made it as I haue said in paradise, and wold himselfe be borne in mariage: and for to hallowe mariage he was at a weddinge, where as he tourned water into wine, whiche was the first miracle that he wrought in earth before his disciples. Tre we effecte of mariage clenseth fornicacion and replenisheth holy church of good linage, for that is the ende of mariage, and chaūgeth deedly sinne into venyall sin, bitwene hem that ben wedded, and maketh the hertes as one of hem that ben wedded, as well as the bodies.

Very mariage was established by God, right that sinne began, whan naturall lawe was in his right pointe in Paradise. And it was ordained that o man shoulde haue but o woman, and o woman but o man, as saith saint Augustin, by many reasons.

First, for mariage is figured betwix Christ and holy churche.

An other is for a man is heed of a woman, alway by ordinaunce it should be so. For if a woman had mo menne than one, than should she haue mo heedes than one, and that were a right horrible sinne before God, and also a woman might not please so many folkes at ones: and also there should neuer be reste ne quiete amōg hem, for eche of hem would axe her owne righte. And furthermore, no man should knowe his owne engendure, ne who shoulde haue his heritage, and the woman should be the lesse beloued.

Now cometh how that a man should bere him with his wife, and namely in two thinges: that is to saye, in sufferaunce and reuerence, as he wed Christe whan he first made woman. For he ne made her of the heed of Adam, for he should nat claime to great lordshippe, for there as the woman hath the maistrie, she maketh to muche variaunce, there nede no mo enlamples of this, the experience all day, ought inough suffice.

Also certes, god ne made not woman of the foote of Adam, for she should not be holde to lowe, for she cannot paciently suffre: but god made woman of the ribbe of Adam, for woman should be felow vnto man.

Man should beare him to his wife in faith, in trouth, and in loue (as saith sainte Poule) that a man should loue his wife, as Christ loueth holy church, that loued it so wel that he died

died for it: So should a man for his wife, if it were nede.

Now how that a woman should bee subiect to her husebande: that telleth S. Peter, first in obedience. And also as saieth the Decr: a woman that is a wife, as long as she is a wife, she hath none auctority to sweare ne beare witnesse, without leaue of her housebande, that is her Lorde, al waie he should be so by reason. She should also serue him in al honeste, and be attemperate of her arraie.

I will well that thei should set her entent to please her husbōdes, but nat by queintise of her arraie. Saincte Jerom saieth: wiues that be apparelled in silke & precious purple, ne mowe not cloth hem in Jesu Christe. S. Gregorie saieth also: þ no wight seketh precious array, but onely for vainglory to be honoured the more of the people. It is a greate folie, a womā to haue great arraie out ward, and in herself be foule in ward. A wife should also bee measurable in looking, in bearing, and in laughing, and discrete in all her wordes & her deedes, and aboue all worldly thinges, she should loue her husbande with al her hart, and to him be true of her body: so should an husbonde be to his wife: For sith that all the body is the husbondes, so should her hart be, or els ther is betwirt hem two, as in that no perfite mariage. Than shal menne vnderstonde, that for three thinges, a manne and his wife fleshely maie assemble. The firste is, for thentent of engendrure of children, to the seruice of God, for certes, that is the cause final of matrimonie. In other cause is, to yeld eche of hem to other, the debtes of her bodies for neither of hem hath power ouer her own bodies. The thirde is, for to eschue lecherie and vilanie. The forwerth is, for loth deadly sinne. As to the first is meritorie: the second also, for as saith the Decre, that she hath merite of chastite, that yeldeth to her husbonde the debte of her bodie, ye though it bee ayenst her liking, and the lust of her hart. The third maner is veniall sinne, and truely scarcely maie any of these be without veniall sinne, for the corrupcion and for the delite. The forwerth maner is for to vnderstonde, if thei assemble onely for amorous loue, and for none of the forsaied causes, but for to accomplishe the brenning delite, thei recke not how ofte, sothely it is deedly sinne, and that with sorowe, some folke woll pain hem more to doe, than to her appetite suffiseth.

The second maner of chastite, is for to be a cleane widowe, and eschue the embraslinges of a mā, & desire the embraling of Jesu Christ. These been those that haue been wiues, and haue forgot her husbondes, and also women that haue doen lecherie, and been receiued by penitēce. And certes, if that a wife could keke her all chaste, by licence of her husebande, so that she yeue neuer none occasion that he offende, it wer to her a great merite. This maner of women that obserueth chastite, in clothing and in countenaunce, abstinent in eating and drinking, in speaking, and in deede, she is the vessell of þ bore of the blessed Magdelain, that fulfilleth holy Churche of good odour. The thirde maner of chastite is virginite, and it behoueth that she be holy in hart, and cleane of bodie, than is she spouse of Jesu Christ, and she is the life of Aungels: she is the praising of this world, and she is as these martyrs in regalty: she hath in her, that tong maie not tel, ne harte thinke. Virginite bare our lorde Jesu Christ, & virgin was himself.

In other remedie against lecherie, is specially to withdrawe foche thinges, as yeue occasion to that vilanie: as ease, eating, & drinking: for certes, whan the pot boileth strongly, the best remedie is to withdrawe the fire. Sleping long in greate quiet, is also a great nourice to Lecherie.

In other remedie ayenst lecherie is that a manne or a woman eschue the companie of hem, by whiche he doubteth to bee tempted: For all be it so that the deede is withstonde, yet is there great tēptacion. Sothly, a white wall, although it ne brenne not fully, by sticking of the Candell, yet is the wall blacke of the flame. Full oft time I rede, that no man trust in his owne perfection, but he be stronger than Sampson, or holier than Daniell, or wiser than Salomon.

Now after that I haue declared you as I can, the seuen deadly sinnes, and some of her braunches, with her remedies. Sothly if I could, I would tell you the ten commaundementes, but so hie doctrine I put to diuines. Nathelesse I hope to God, thei been touched in this treatise eche of hem.

Sequitur secunda pars penitentie.

NOw for almoche as the second part of penitence, stonte in confession of mouth, as I began in the first cap. I sale saint Augustine saieth: Sin is euery worde and euery deede, and all that men coniect ayenſt the lawe of Jeſu Chriſte, and this is for to ſinne in harte, in mouthe, and in deede, by the fiue wittes, whiche been ſight, hearing, ſmelling, taſting or ſauoure, and feling. Now is it good to vnderſtande, that that agregeth moch euery ſinne. Thou ſhalte conſider what thou art that dooeſt the ſinne, wheder thou be male or female, young or old, gentill or thrall, free or ſeruaunt, hole or ſicke, wedded or ſingle, ordred or vnordred, wiſe or foole, clerke or ſeculer, if ſhe be of thy kinrede bodily or ghoſtly, or no, if any of thy kinrede haue ſinned with her or no, and many mo thinges.

An other circumſtaunce is this, wheder it be doen in fornicacion or in aduoutrie or no, in maner of homicide or no, horrible greate ſinnes or ſmalle, and howe longe thou haſt continued in ſinne. The thirde circumſtaunce is, the place there thou haſt doen ſin, wheder in other mennes houſes, or in thine own, in field, in church or in churchyarde, in churche dedicate or no. For if the churche be halowed, and man or woman ſpill his kinde within that place, by waie of ſinne or wicked temptacō, the churche is enterdited, and the preeſt that did ſoche a vilanie, the tearme of all his life, he ſhould no more ſing Maſſe, and if he did, he ſhould doe dedly ſinne, at euery time that he ſo ſong Maſſe. The fowerth circumſtaunce is, by whiche mediatours or by whiche meſſangers, or for enticemente, or for conſentment, to beare companie with fellowſhippe. For many a wretche for to beare companie, woll go to the deuill of hell. wherfore, thei that egge or conſente to the ſinne, been parteners of the ſinne, and of the temptacō of the ſinner. The fifth circumſtaunce is, how many times that he hath ſinned, if it be in his minde, and how oft he hath fallen. For he that oft falleth in ſinne, he diſpiſeth the mercie of God, and encreaſeth his ſinne, and is vnkinde to Chriſte, and he wereth the more feble to withſtande ſinne, and ſinneth the more lightly, and the later riſeth, and is more ſlowe to ſhriue him, and namely to him that is his confeſſour. For whiche that folke whan thei fall ayen to her olde folies, either thei leaue their old confeſſour, or els thei depart her ſhrifte in diuers partes. But ſothly ſoche departed ſhrifte, deſerueth no mercie of God for her ſinnes. The ſixte circumſtaunce is, why that a man ſinneth as by temptacō: and of him ſelf procure that temptacion, or by the exciting of other folke, or if he lin with a woman by force or by her aſſente, or if the woman maugre her hed, haue bee a forced by none. This ſhall ſhe tell, wheder it were for couetiſe of pouerte, or if it were by her procurements or no, and ſoche other thinges. The ſeuenth circumſtaunce is, in what maner he hath doe his ſinne, or how that ſhe hath ſuffred that folke haue doe to her. And theſame ſhall the manne tell plainly, with all the circumſtaunces, & wheder he hath ſinned with common bordell women or none, or doen his ſinne in holy times or none, in faſting time or none, or before his ſhrift, or after his laſte ſhrifte, and hath parauenture broke therby his penaunce enioyned, by whoſe helpe or whoſe counſaile, by ſorcery or craft, all muſt be tolde, and al theſe thinges after as their great or ſmale and grudge the conſcience of manne or woman. And eke the preeſt that is thy iudge, maye the better be auiſed of his iudgement in yeuing of penaunce, and that is after thy contricion. For vnderſtonde well that after time that a man hath defoiled his baptime by ſinne, if he wol come to ſaluacion there is none other waie but by penaunce, ſhrifte, and ſatiſfaction, and namely by the two, if there be a cōfeſſour to whom he may ſhriue him, and the thirde if he haue liſt to perfourme it. Than ſhall a man loke and conſider, that if he woll make a trew and a profitable confeſſion, there muſt be foure condicions. Firſt it muſt be in ſorowfulneſſe of hert, as ſaith the king Ezechiell to God, I wol remembre me all the yeres of my life in bitternelle of my herte. This condicion of bitternelle hath fiue ſignes. The firſt is, that confeſſion muſt be ſhamefaſt, not for to couer ne hide her ſinne, for he hath offended his lorde God and defoiled his ſoule. And herof ſaith S. Auguſtin: The hert traueileth for ſhame of his ſinne, and for he hath great ſhamefaſtnelle he is worthy to haue gret mercy of god, whiche was the confeſſion of the Publican, that would nat heaue vp his eyen to heauen for he had offended God of heauen: for which ſhamefaſtneſſe he had anon the mercy of god. And therof ſaith ſaint Auguſten: that ſuche ſhamful folke be nirte foryeuenelle & mercy.

An other ſigne is humilite in confeſſion, whiche ſaith ſaint Peter: Humbleth you vnder the might of GOD: the honde of God is ſtrong in confeſſion, for therby god forgeueth thee thy ſinnes, for he alone hath the power. And this humilite ſhal be in hert, and in outwarde ſignes: For right as he hath humilite to God in his hert, right so should he humble his body outwarde to the preest, that sitteth in goddes stede. For which in no maner, sith that Christ is soueraine, and the preest mean and mediatour betwixt Christ & the sinner, & the sinner is losse by waie of reason. Than should not the sinner sitte as hie as his confessour, but knele before him or at his fete, but if sickenesse cause it: For he shall not take hede who sitteth there, but in whose place he sitteth. A manne that hath trespassed to a Lorde, and cometh to aske mercie and make his accorde, and sitteth him doune by him, men would holde him outragious and not worthie so soone for to haue remission of his trespace.

The thirde signe is, howe thy shrift should be full of teares if thou maie, and if thou maie not wepe with thy bodily eyen, than wepe in thine herte, whiche was the confession of saint Peter. For after that he had forsake Jesu Christ, he went out and wepte ful bitterly.

The fourth signe is, that thou ne lette not for shame to shewe thy confession: Such was the confession of Magdalein, that ne spared for no shame of hem that were at the feest, to go to our lord Jesu christ and beknow to him her sinnes. The fifthe signe is, that a manne or a woman be obeisaunte to receiue the penaunce that hem is enioyned. For certes Jesu Christ, for the offences of man was obedient to death. The seconde condicion of very confession is, that it be hastely done. For certes, if a man had a deedly wounde, euer the lenger that he tarieth to heale him self, the more would it corrupt and haste him to his death, and also the wounde would be the worse for to hele. And right so fareth sinne, that longe time is in a manne vnshewed. Certes a man oughte hastely shewe his sinnes for manie causes, as for drede of death, that cometh oft sodainly, and no certaine what time it shall be, ne in what place, and also the drenching of o sinne draweth in an other: and also the lenger that he tarieth the farther he is fro Christ. And if he abide to his last daie, scarcely maie he shriue him or remembre him of his sinnes, or repente for the greuous malady of his death And for as muche as he ne hath in his life herkened Jesu Christ whan he hath spoken, he shall crie to Jesu Christ at his last daie, and scarcely woll he herken him. And vnderstonde that this condicion muste haue four thinges.

Thy shrifte must be prouided before and auised, for wicked haste doth no profite, if a mā shriue him of his sinnes: be it of Pride, or enuy, and so forth with the speces and circumstaunces of sinne. And that he haue comprehended in his minde the nombre and greatnesse of his sinnes, and howe longe he hath lien in sinne. And also that he hath be cōtrite for his sinnes, and in stedfast purpose (by the grace of God) neuer ayen to fal to sinne. And also that he drede and counterfaite himselfe that he flie the occasion of sinne, to whiche he is enclined. Also thou shalt shriue thee of all thy sinnes to o manne, and nat parte to o manne and parte to another. That is to vnderstonde, in entent to departe thy confession for shame or drede, for it is but strangling of thy soule. For certes Jesu Christ is entierly all good in him is none imperfection, and therfore ether he forgeueth al perfitely, or els neuer a deale. I saie nat that if thou be assigned to thy penitencer for certaine sin that thou arte bounde to shewe him all the remenant of thy sinnes, of whiche thou haste be shriuē of thy curate, but if it like to the of thy humilite, this is no parte of thy shrift. Ne I say not there as I speake of diuision of confession, that if thou haue licence to shriue the liketh, and by licence of thy curate, that thou ne maieste well shriue thee to him of all thy sinnes. Lette no sinne be vntolde as ferre as thou haste remembraunce. And whan thou shalt be shriuen to thy curat, tell him all thy sinnes that thou hast do sithe thou were last shriuen. This is no wicked entent of diuision of shrifte.

Also the very shrift asketh certaine condicions. Firste that thou shriue the by thy free will, nat constrained for shame of folke, sickenesse, ne such other thinges. For it is reason, that he that trespaceth by his free will, that by his free will he confesse his trespace, and that none other man tel his sin but himself, ne he shal nat nay ne deny his sin, ne wrathe him ayenst the preest for amonesshing him to leaue his sin. The seconde condition is that thy shrift be laufull, that is to saie, that thou shriuest the. And also the preest that hereth thy confession be verely in the faithe of holy churche, and that a man ne be not dispeired of the mercy of Jesu Christe, as Caim or Judas. And also a man must accuse him selfe of his owne trespace & not an other, but he shal blame and wite him selfe and his owne malice of his sinne: and none other: But nathe-

les, if þ an other man be occasion or enticer of his sinne, or the estate of a person be soche by whiche his sinne is agredged, or els that he may not plainly shriue him, but he tel the persone with whiche he hath sinned, than may he tell, so that his entente ne bee not to backbite the persone, but onely to declare his confession.

Thou ne shalt not also make no leasinges in thy confession for humilite, parauenture, to saie that thou hast commised & doen soche sinnes, as of which þ thou ne wer neuer guilty, for sainct Augustin saith, if that thou bi cause of thine humilite, makest lesinges on thy self, though thou wer not in sinne before yet arte thou than in sinne through thy leasing. Thou must also shewe thy sinne, by thin owne proper mouth, but thou be dombe, and not by no letter: for that thou haste doen the sinne, shalt haue the shame therefore. Thou shalt not eke paint thy confession, with faire subtell wordes, to couer the more thy sinne: for than begilest thou thy self, & nat the priest thou must tell it plain, be it neuer so foule ne horrible. Thou shalt also shriue the to a priest that is discrete to counsaile thee, and also thou shalte not shriue thee for vainglorie, ne for ipocrisie, ne for no cause, but onely for the loue and fear of Jesu Christ, and heale of thy soule. Thou shalt nat also renne to the priest sodainly, to tell him lightly thy sinne, as who saith, to tell a iape or a tale, but auisedly and with good deuocio: and generally shriue thee ofte, if thou ofte fall, ofte arise by confession. And though thou shriue thee ofter than ones of the sinne, whiche thou haste be shriuen of, it is the more merite. And as saith sainct Augustine, thou shall haue the more lightly forgeuenesse and grace of GOD, bothe of sinne and pain. And certes ones a yere at least, it is lawfull to be houseled, for surely ones a yere all thinges renouellen.

Now haue I tolde you of verie confession, that is the second part of penitence.

Explicit secunda pars penitentie:
Et sequitur tertia pars.

THe thirde part of penitence is Satisfaction, and that stonte most generally in almose dede and bodily paine. Now been there three maner of almose. Contricion of harte, where a man offreth himself to God. An other is, to haue pite of defaute of his neighbourr. An the third is, in giuing of good counsaile, ghostly and bodily, where as men haue nede, and namely in sustenaunce of mannes sode. An take hede that a man hath nede of these things generally, he hath neede of foode of clothing, and of herborowe: he hath nede of spiritable counsaile, visiting in prison: in sickenesse, and sepulture of his bodie. And if thou maiest not visite the nedefull in prison in thy person, visite hem with thy message & yeftes. These ben generally the almose & workes of charitie, of hem that haue temporel richesse, or discrecio in counsailing. Of these workes shalt thou heare at the the date of dome.

These almose shalt thou doe of thine owne proper thinges, and hastely & priuely if thou maiest: but natheless, if thou maiest nat do it priuely, thou shalt not forbeare to doen almose though men see it, so that it be not for thanke of the worlde, but only for thanke of Jesu Christ. For as witnesseth sainct Mathewe. Capi. v. A citee may not bee hid that is set on a mountaine, ne men light nat a laterne, to put it vnder a bushell, but set it on a candilsticke, to yeue light to menne in the hous. Right so shull your light, light before menne, that thei may se your good workes, and glorifie our father that is in heauen.

Now as to speake of bodily paine, it stondith in praiers, waking, fasting, vertuous teaching of orisons. And ye shall vnderstonde, that orisons, or praiers, is to saie, a pitous will of hart, that setteth it in God, and expresseth by worde out ward to remeue harmes, and han thinges spirituell and perdurable, and sometime temporell thinges. Of whiche orisons certes in the orison of the Pater noster: hath Jesu Christ enclosed moste thinges. Certes it is priuileged of three thinges in his dignite. for whiche it is more digne than any other praier. for that Jesu Christe himself maked it, and it is short, for it should be learned þ may lightly, and to hold it the more easie in hart, and helpe himself the ofter with that orison. And for a man should be the lesse wery to say it, and nat excuse him to lerne it, it is so shorte and easie, and for it comprehendeth in it self all good praiers. The exposicion of this holy praier, that is so excellente and digne, I refer to the maisters of theologie, saue thus much wol I saie, that whan thou praiest, that God should forgeue thee thine offences, as thou forgeuest hem that haue offended thee: bee wel ware that thou bee nat out of charite. This holy patie oꝛiſon aminiſheth alſo veniall ſin, and therfoꝛe it apperteineth ſpecially to penitẽce

This pꝛaier muſte bee truely ſaied, and in parfite faith, and that men pꝛaie to god oꝛdinarily, diſcretely, and deuoutly, and alwaie a manne ſhall put his will, to be ſubiect to the will of God. This oꝛiſon muſt alſo bee ſaied with greate humblelle, and full pure and honeſtly, and not to the anoiaunce of any man ne woman. It muſt alſo bee continued with the woꝛkes of charite. It auaileth alſo ayenſt the vices of the ſoule: foꝛ as ſaieth S. Jeroni by faſting been ſaued the vices of the fleaſhe, and by pꝛaier the vices of the ſoule.

After this thou ſhalt vnderſtonde, that bodily pꝛaier ſtont in waking. Foꝛ Jeſu Chꝛiſte ſaieth: wake ye and pꝛaie, that ye ne entre into wicked temptacion. Ye ſhull vnderſtonde alſo, that faſting ſtont in thꝛe thinges: in foꝛbearing of bodily meate and dꝛinke, in foꝛbering of woꝛldely iolite, and in foꝛbearing of deadly ſinne: this is to ſaie, that a man ſhall kepe him fro dedly ſinne with all his might.

And thou ſhalt vnderſtonde alſo, that God ordained faſting, and to faſting partaineth lower thinges. Largeneſſe to pooꝛe folke, gladneſſe of harte ſpirituell: nat to be angrie ne anoied, ne grutche foꝛ he faſteth, and alſo reſonable houre to eate by meaſure, that is to ſaie, a man ſhall not eate in vntime, ne ſit the lenger at the table foꝛ he faſteth.

Than ſhalt thou vnderſtonde, that bodily pain ſtont in diſcipline, oꝛ teaching by woꝛde oꝛ writing, oꝛ by enſample. Alſo in wearing of heer oꝛ ſtamin, oꝛ of habergeons on her naked fleſhe foꝛ Chꝛiſtes ſake, and that ſoch maner penaunces, ne make nat thine harte bitter oꝛ angrie, ne anoied of thy ſelf, foꝛ better is to caſt awaie thin heer, than to caſt awaie the ſweteneſſe of Jeſu Chꝛiſte. And therefoꝛe ſaieth ſaincte Poule: clothe you, as thei that been choſen of God in hart, of miſericoꝛde, debonairte, ſuffraunce, and ſoche maner of clothing, of whiche Jeſu Chꝛiſt is moꝛe pleaſed than with the heeres oꝛ herbergeons.

Than is diſcipline alſo in knocking of thy breaſt, in ſcourging with roddes, in kneling, in tribulacion, in ſuffring paciẽtly woꝛdes that been doen to thee, and alſo in pacẽt ſuffring of ſickeneſſe, oꝛ leſing of woꝛldly goodes oꝛ catteil, oꝛ wife, child, oꝛ other frendes.

Than ſhalt thou vnderſtond, whiche thinges diſtourbe penaunce, and that is in foꝛwer maners, dꝛeade, ſhame, hope, and wanhope, that is diſperacion. And foꝛ to ſpeake firſt of dꝛede, foꝛ whiche he weneth that he maie ſuffre no penaunce. There ayenſt is remedy, foꝛ to thinke that bodily penaunce, is but ſhoꝛte and littie, at regard of the pain of hell, that is ſo cruell and ſo longe, that it laſteth without ende.

Now ayenſt the ſhame that a man hath to ſhꝛiue him, and namely theſe Jpocrites, that would bee holde ſo parfite, that thei haue no nede to ſhꝛiue hem. Ayenſt that ſhame ſhould a man thinke, that by waie of reaſon, that he that hath nat bee aſhamed to doẽ foule thinges, certes him ought not bee aſhamed, foꝛ to doe faire thinges, and that is confeſſions. A manne ſhould alſo think, that God ſeeth and knoweth all his thoughtes, and all his werkes: to him maie nothing be hid ne couered. Men ſhould alſo remember hem of the ſhame that is to come at the daie of dome, to hem that be nat penitent, and ſhꝛiuen in this pꝛeſent life: foꝛ al the creatures in yearth and in hell ſhall ſee apertly, all that thei hid in this woꝛlde.

Now foꝛ to ſpeake of the hope of hem, that been ſo negligente and ſlowe to ſhꝛiue hem: that ſtondeth in twoo maners. That one is, that he hopeth foꝛ to liue lõg, and foꝛ to purchaſe moche richeſſe foꝛ his delite, and than he woll ſhꝛiue him: And as he ſaieth, him ſemeth than timely inough to come to ſhꝛifte. An other is, of ſurquidꝛie that he hath in Chꝛiſtes mercie. Ayenſt the firſt vice, he ſhall thinke that our life is in no ſikerneſſe, and alſo that all the riches in this woꝛlde been in aduẽture, and paſſe as a ſhadowe on the wal. And as ſaieth ſainct Gregoꝛie, that it appꝛteineth to the greate right wiſeneſſe of God, that neuer ſhall the paine ſtinte of hem, that neuer would withdꝛawe hem fro ſinne her thankes, but euer cõtinued in ſinne: foꝛ that perpetuall will to doꝛe ſinne, ſhall thei haue perpetuall paine. Wanhope is in twoo maners. The firſt wanhope is, in the mercie of God. That other is, that thei think that thei ne might not long perſeuer in goodnes.

The firſte wanhope cometh of that, he demeth that he hath ſinned ſo greatly and ſo oft, and ſo long lien in ſinne, that he ſhal not be ſaued. Certes ayenſt that curſed wanhope ſhould he thinke, that the Paſſion of Jeſu Chꝛiſte, is moꝛe ſtrong foꝛ to vnbinde, than ſinne is ſtrong foꝛ to binde. Ayenſt the ſecond wanhope he ſhall thinke, that as often as he falleth, he maie riſe again by penitence: and though he neuer ſo long hath lien in ſinne,

th:

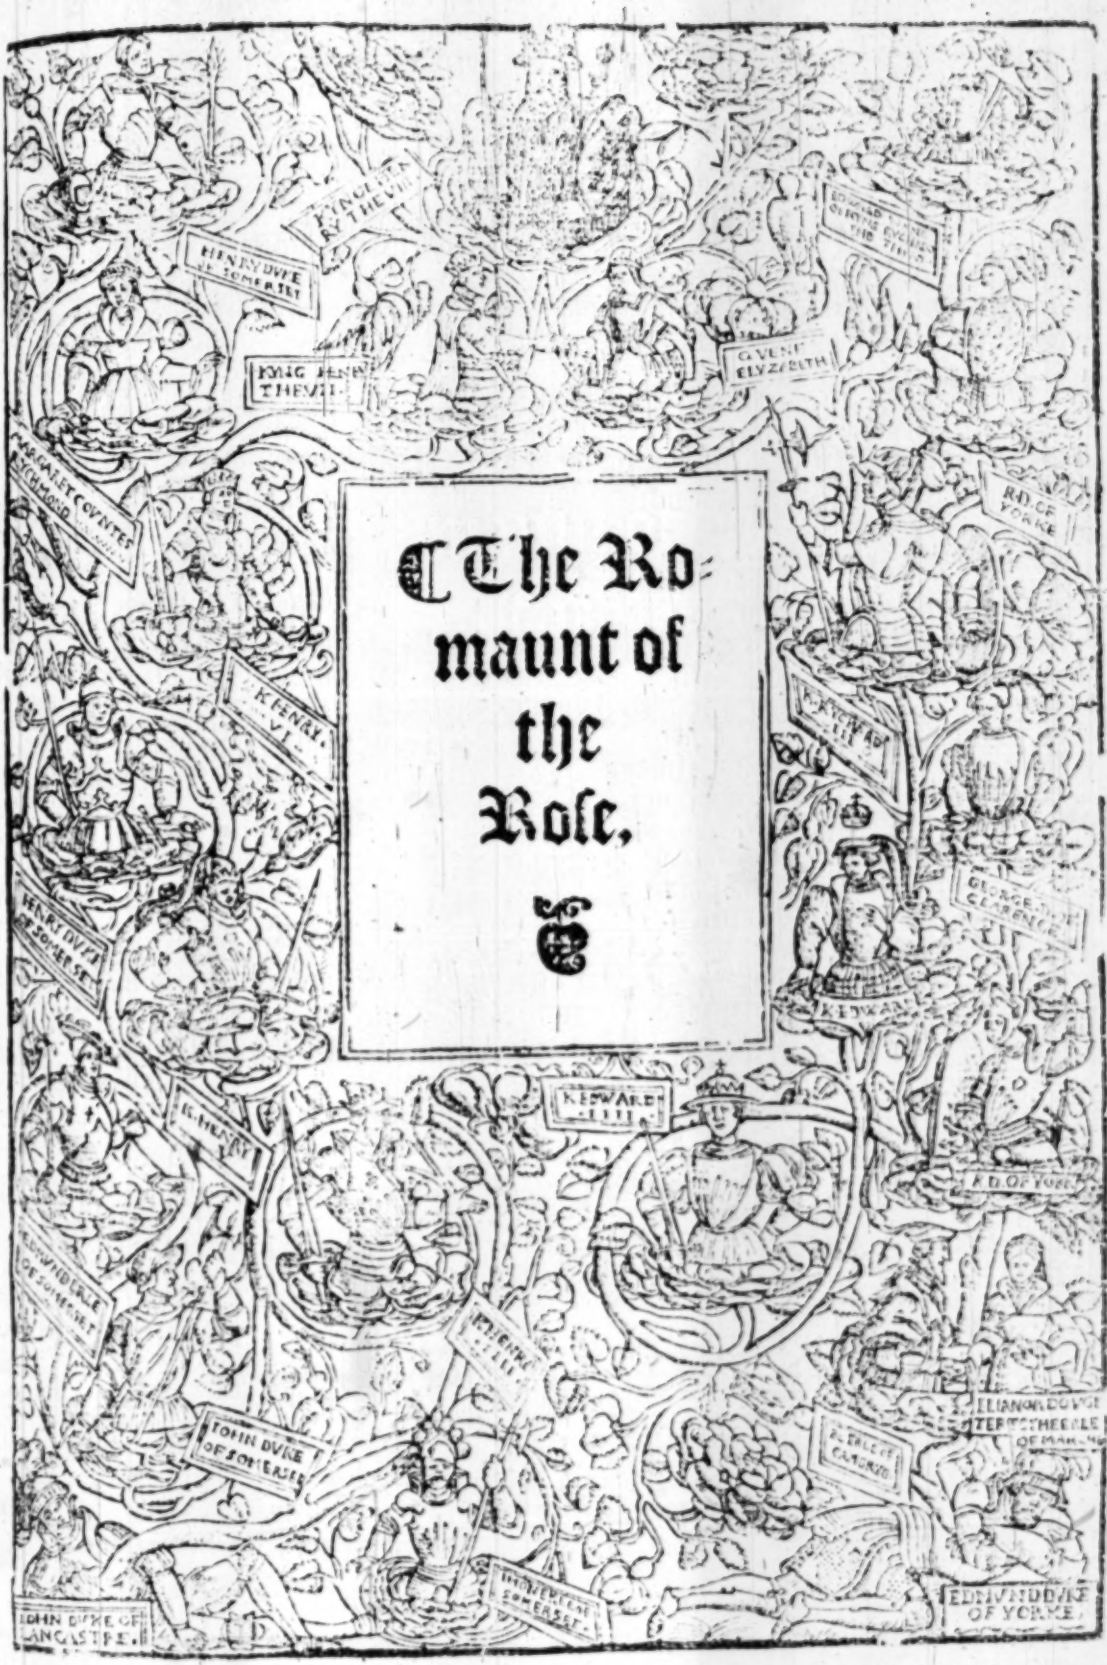

the mercie of Christ is alwaie redy to receiue him to mercie. Yeuth the wanhope that he demeth he should not long perseuer in goodnesse, he shall thinke that the feblenesse of the deuill, maie nothing doe, but if men wol suffre him, and also he shall haue strength of the helpe of Jesu Christ, and of all holy churche, and the protection of angels, if him list.

Than shall men vnderstonde, what is the fruict of penaunce, and after the woordes of Jesu Christ, it is an endlesse blisse of heauen. There ioie hath neuer ende, no contrarie of wo ne greuaunce: there all harmes been passed of this presente life, there as is the sikernesse fro the paine of hell, there as is the blisfull companie, that reioice hem euer mo, euerriche of others ioye: there as the body of man that sometime was foule and derke, is more clere than the Sunne: there as the body that somtime was sicke, freile, and feble, and mortall, is immortall, and so strōg and hole, that there ne maie nothing appeire it: there as neither hunger, thurste, ne colde, but euer soule replenished with the sight of the parfit knowing of God. This blisfull reigne may men purchace by pouerte espirituell, and the glorie by lownesse, the plente of ioie by wo gre and thrust, and the reste by trauell, and the life by death, and mortifi-cacion of sinne: to whiche life he bs bring, that bought bs with his preci-ous bloodde.

Amen.

Right as this dreme wol tell us al.
Now this dreme wol I rime a right
To make your hertes gay and light
For loue it praieth, and also Commaundeth me that it be so
And if there any aske me
Whether that it be, he or she Yow this booke, whiche is here
Shal hate, that I rede you here
It is the Romaunt of the Rose
In whiche all the arte of loue I close.
The mater faire is of to make God graunt me in gree that she it take
For whom that it begonnen is
And that is she, that hath i wis
So mokell prise, and therto she
So worthy is beloued to be
That she wel ought of prise and right
Be cleped Rose of euery wight
That it was May me thought tho
It is fiue yere or more ago
That it was May, thus dremed me
In time of loue and iolite
That al thing ginneth waren gay
For there is neither buske nor hay
In May, that it nill shrouded bene
And it with newe leues wrene
These woddes che recoueren grene
That drie in winter ben to sene
And the erth-wereth proude withall
For swote dewes that on it fall
And the pore estate forgette
In whiche that winter had it sette
And than become the grounde so proude
That it wol haue a newe shroude
And maketh so queint his robe and fayre
That it had hewes an hundred payre
Of grasse and floures, inde and Pers
And many hewes full diuers
That is the robe I mene i wis
Through whiche the ground to praisen is
The birdes that han lekt her songe
While thei han suffred colde ful stronge
In wethers grille, and derke to sight
Ben in May, for the sunne bright
So glad, that they shewe in singing
That in her hert is suche liking
That thei mote singen and ben light
Than dothe the nightingale her might
To maken noise, and singen blithe
Than is blisfull many a sithe
The chelaundre, and the popingay
Than yonge folke entenden aye
For to ben gaie and amorous
The time is than so sauourous
Harde is his herte that loueth nought
In May, whan al this mirth is wrought
Whan he may on these braunches here
The small birdes singen clere
Her blisfull swete songe pitous
And in this seson delitous
Whan loue affirmeth all thing
Me thought one night, in my sleping
Right in my bed, ful redily
That it was by the morowe erly
And up I rose, and gan me clothe
Anon I wisshe mine hondes bothe
A siluer nedil forth I drowe
Out of an aguiler queint inowe
And gan this nedill threde anone
For out of toune me list to gone
The soune of briddes for to here
That on the buskes singen clere
That in the swete season that lese is
With a threde basting my sleuis
Alone I went in my playyng
The smale foules songe herkening

That pained hem ful many a paire
To ling on bowes blossomed faire
Jolife and gaie, full of gladnesse
Towarde a Riuer gan I me dresse
That I herde renne fast by
For fairer plaien none saugh I
Than plaien me by that riuere
For from an hill that stode there nere
Come doune the streme full stifle and dold
Clere was the water, and as cold
Is any welle is, sothe to saine
And somdele lasse it was than Saine
But it was straiter, wele a way
And neuer saugh I er that daie
The water that so wele liked me
And wonder glad was I to se
That lusty place, and that riuere
And with that water that ran so clere
My face I wisshe, tho sawe I wele
The botome ipaued eueridele
With grauell, ful of stones shene
The medowes softe, sote, and grene
Beet right on the water side
Ful clere was than the morowe tide
And ful attempre out of drede
Tho gan I walken thorowe the Mede
Doun warde aye in my playing
The riuers side coosting.
And whan I had a while igone
I sawe a Garden right anone
Full long and brode, and eueridele
Enclosed was, and walled wele
With hie wales enbatailed
Portrayed without, and wel entailed
With many riche portreitures
And both yet images and peintures
Gan I beholde besely
And I wol tel you redely
Of thilke images the semblaunce
As ferre as I haue remembraunce.
I midde sawe I Hate stonde
That for her wrathe and ire, and onde
Semed to be a minoresse
An angry wight a chideresse
And ful of gile, and fell corage
By semblaunt was that ilke image
And she was nothing wele araide
But like a wode woman afraide
Ycrounced foule was her visage
And grinning for dispitous rage
Her nose snorted by for tene
Ful hidous was she for to sene
Ful foule and rusty was she this
Her heed iwrithen was i wis
Ful grimly with a great towaile,
In image of an other entaile
I like halse was her fast by Her name aboue her heed sawe I
And she was called Felony
Another image that villany
Ycleped was, sawe I and stonde
Upon the wall on her right honde
Villany was like somdele
That other image, and trusteth wele
She semed a wicked creature
By countenaunce in portreiture
She semed be full dispitous
And eke ful proude, and outragious
Wel coude he paint I vndertake
That such an image coude make Ful foule and chorlich semed she
And eke villeinous for to be
And litel coulde of norture
To worshippe any creature.
And nexte was painted Couetise
That eggeth folke in many a gise
To take and yeue right nought againe
And great treasours vp to laine
And that is she, that for vsure
Leneth to many a creature
The lasse for the more winning
So couetous is her brenning
And that is she for pennes feele
That techeth for to robbe and steele
These theues, and these smale harlotes
And that is routhe, for by her throtes
Full many one hongeth at the last
She maketh folke compasse and cast
To taken other folkes thing
Through robbery, or miscoueiting
And that is she that maketh trechours
And she maketh false pledours
That with her termes and her domes
Do maidens, children, and eke gromes
Her heritage forgo
Ful croked were her hondes two
For couetise is euer woode
To gripen other folkes goode
Couetise, for her winning
Ful lese hath other mennes thing
Another image set saugh I Nexte Couetise fast by
And she was cleped Auarice
Ful foule in painting was that vice Ful sad and caitife was she eke
And also grene as any leke
So iuel hewed was her coloure
Her semed to haue liued in langoure
She was like thing for hunger deed
That lad her life onely by breed

Vnder

Eneden with eisel strong and egre
And therto she was lene and megre
And she was clad ful poorely
Ilin an olde torne courtpy
As she were all with dogges torne
And bothe behinde and ehe beforne
Clouted was she beggerly
A mantel honge her faste by Upon a benche weyke and smal
A burnette cote honge there withal
Furred with no menuere
But with a furre rough of heere
Of lambe skinnes heuy and blacke
It was full olde I vnder take
For Iuarice to clothe her wele
Yt hasteth her neuer adele
For certainly it were her lothe
To wearen of that ilke clothe
And if it were forweared, she Would haue full great nicete
Of clothing, er she bought her newe
Al were it bad of wol and hewe
This Iuarice helde in her hande
A purse that honge by a bande
And that she hid and bonde so stronge
Men must abide wonder longe
Out of the purse er there come ought
For that ne cometh in her thought
It was not certaine her entent
That fro that purse a peny went
And by that image nigh inough
Was painted Enuy that euer lough
For neuer wel in her hert ferde
But if she either sawe or herde
Some great mischaunce, or great disese
Nothing may so much her plese
As mischiefe and misaventure
Or whan she seeth discomfiture
Upon any worthy man fall
Than liketh her well withall
She is full glad in her corage
If she se any great linage
Be brought to naught, in shamful wise
And if a man in honour rise
Or by his wit, or by his prowesse
Of that she hath great heuinesse
For trusteth well she goeth nie wood
Whan any chaunce hapeth good
Enuy is of suche cruelte
That faith ne trouth holdeth she
To frende ne felowe, badde or good
Yf she hath hinne none of her blood
That she nis ful her enemy
She nolde, I dare saine hardely
Her owne father fared wele
And sore abieth she euery deie
Her malice, and her male-talent
For she is in so great turment
And hate suche, whan folke doth good
That nigh she melteth for pure wood
Her hert hereueth and so breketh
That God the people wel awreketh
Enuy iwis shall neuer let Some blame vpon the folke to set
I trowe that if Enuy iwis Knew the best man that is
On this side or beyonde the see Yet somwhat lachen him would she
And if he were so hende and wise
That she ne might alabate his prise
Yet would she blame his worthinesse
Or by her wordes make it lesse
I sawe Enuy in that painting
Had a wonderful loking
For she ne loked but awrie
Or ouert wharte, all baggingly
And she had a foule visage
She might loke in no visage
Of man ne woman, forth right plaine
But shette her one eye for disdaine
So for Enuie brenned she Whan she might any man se
That faire, or worthy were, or wise
Or els stode in folkes prise
Sorowe was painted next Enuie
Upon that wal of masonrie
But wel was sene in her colour
That she had liued in langour
Her semed to haue the iaundice
Not halfe so pale was Iuarice
Ne nothing like of leanesse
For sorowe, thought, and great distresse
That she had suffred day and night
Made her yelowe, and nothing bright
Ful sade, pale, and megre also
Was neuer weight yet halfe so wo
As that her semed for to be Nor so fulfilled with yre, as she
I trow that no wight might her plese
Nor do that thing that might her ese
Nor she ne would her sorowe slake
Nor comforte none vnto her take
So depe was her wo begonne
And eke her hert in angre ronne
A sorowful thing well semed she Nor she had nothing slowe be
For to cratchen all her face
And for to rent in many place
Her clothes, and for to teare her swire
As she that was fulfilled of ire

And all to torne laie eke her heere
About her shulders, here and there
As she that had it all to rent
For angre and for male talent
And eke I tell you certainly
How that she wept full tenderly
In worlde nis wight so hard of harte
That had seen her sorowes smarte
That nolde haue had of her pite
So wo begon a thing was she
She all to dasht her self for wo
And smote togider her hondes two
To sorowe was she full ententife
That wofull recheleſſe caitife
Her rought little of playyng
Or of clipping or kissing
For who so sorowfull is in harte
Him lust not to plaie ne starte
Nor for to dauncen, ne to sing
Ne maie his harte in temper bring
To make ioie on euen or morowe,
For ioie is contrary vnto sorowe.
Elde was painted after this
That shorter was a foote i wis
Than she was wont in her yonghede
Cunneth her self she might fede,
So feble and eke so old was she
That faded was all her beaute
Full falowe was waxen her colour
Her hedde for hore was white as flour
I wis greate qualme ne were it none
Ne sinne, although her life were gone
All worken was her body vnwelde
And drie and dwined all for elde
A foule forwelked thing was she
That whilom round and soft had be
Her heeres shoken fast withall
As from her hedde thei would fall
Her face frounced and forpined
And bothe her hondes lorne forwined
So old she was, that she ne went
A foote, but it were by potent
The time that passeth night and daie
And restleſſe trauaileth aie
And stealeth from vs so priuely
That to vs semeth siker ly
That it in one poinct dwelleth euer
And certes it ne resteth neuer
But goeth so fast, and passeth aie
That there nis man that thinke maie
What time that now present is Ilheth at these clerkes this
For men thinke it redily
Thre times been passed by
The time that maie not soiourne
But goth, and maie neuer retourne
As water that doune runneth aie
But neuer droppe retourne maie
There maie nothing as time endure
Metall, nor yearthly creature
For all thing is frette and shall
The time eke that chaungeth all
And all doeth waxe, and forfret be
And all thing distroieth he
The time that eldeth our auncestours
And eldeth kinges and Emperours
And that vs all shall ouercomen
Er that death vs shall haue nommen
The time that hath all in welde
To elden folke had made her elde
So inly, that to my weting
She might helpe her self nothing
But tourned ayen vnto childhede
She had nothing her self to lede
Ne witte ne pithe in her hold
More than a child of two yere old
But natheleſſe I trowe that she Was faire somtime, and freshe to se
Whan she was in her rightfull age
But she was past all that passage
And was a doted thing becomen
A furred cappe on had she nommen
Well had she clad her self and warme
For cold might els doen her harme
These old folke haue alwaie cold
Her kinde is soche, whan thei been old.
An other thing was doen there write
That semed like an Ipocrite
And is was cleped Pope Holie
That like is she, that priuelie
Ne spareth neuer a wicked deede
Whan men of her taken none heede
And maketh her outward precious
With pale visage and pitous
And semeth a simple creature
But there nis no misauenture
That she ne thinketh in her corage
Full like to her was thilke Image
That maked was like her semblaunce
She was full simple of countenaunce
And she was clothed and eke shod
As she were for the loue of God
Yolden to Religion
Soche semed her deuocion
A Psalter helde she fast in honde
And busily she gan to fonde
To make many a faint praiere
To God, and to his sainctes dere
Ne she was gate, freshe, ne iolife
But semed to be full ententife

To good werkes, and to faire
And therto she had on an haire
Ne certes she was fatte nothing
But semed werie for fasting
Of colour pale and deade was she
From her the gates aie warned be
Of paradise, that blisfull place
For soothe folke maken leane her grace
As Christ saieth in his Euangile
To get hem prise in toune a while
And for a little glory veigne
Thei lesen God and eke his reigne.
And alderlast of euerichone
Was painted Pouert all alone
That not a peny had in hold
Although she her clothes sold
And though she should an honged be
For naked as a worme was she
And if the weather stormie were
For cold she should haue died there
She ne had on but a straite old sacke
And many a cloute on it there stacke
This was her cote, and her mantele
No more was there neuer a dele
To clothe her with, I undertake
Greate leaser had she to quake
And she was put, that I of talke
Fern fro these other, vp in an halke
There lurked, and there coured she
For poore thing where so it be
Is shamefast, and dispised aie
Accursed maie well be that daie
That poore man conceiued is For God wote all to selde iwis
Is any poore man well ised
Or well araied or icled
Or well beloued, in soothe wise
In honour, that he maie arise.
All these thinges well auised
As I haue you er this deuised
With gold and asure ouer all
Depainted were vpon the wall
Square was the wall, and high somdeale
Enclosed, and barred weale
In stede of hegge, was that gardin
Come neuer shepherde therein
Into that gardin, well wrought
Who so that me could haue brought By ladders, or els by degre
It would well haue liked me
For soothe solace, soothe ioie, and plete
I trowe that neuer man ne sete
As was in that place delicious
The gardin was not daungerous
To herbrowe birdes many one
So riche a yere was neuer none
Of birdes song, and braunches grene
Therein were birdes mo I wene
Than been in all the realme of Fraunce
Full blisfull was the accordaunce
Of swete notes that thei made
For all this worlde it ought glade
And I my self so mery ferde
When I her blisfull songes herde
That for an hundred pounde would I
If that the passage openly
Had be vnto me free
That I nolde entren for to see
Thassemble, God kepe it fro care
Of birdes, whiche therein ware
That songen through her mery throtes
Daunces of loue, and mery notes.

When I thus heard foules sing
I fell fast in a waimenting
By whiche art, or by what engin
I might come into that gardin
But waie I couthe finde none
Into that gardin for to gone
Ne nought wist I if that there were Either hole or place where
By whiche I might haue entre
Ne there was none to teache me
For I was all alone iwis
For wo and anguishe of this Till at laste bethought I me
That by no waie ne might it be
That there nas ladder ne waie to pace
Or hole, into so faire a place
Tho gan I go a full greate paas
Enuiron, euen in compas
The closing of the square wall
Till that I founde a wicket small
So shette, that I ne might in gone
And other entre was there none.

Upon this doore I gan to smite
That was fetis, and so lite
For other waie could I not seke
Full long I shoke, and knocked eke
And stode full long all herkening
If that I heard any wight coming
Till that the doore of thilke entre
A maiden curteis opened me
Her heere was as yelowe of hewe
As any bacen scoured newe
Her flesche tender as is a chike
With bent browes, smothe and slike
And by measure large were
The opening of her yen clere

Her nose of good proporcion
Her yen graie, as is a faucon
With swete breath, and well sauoured
Her face white, and well coloured
With little mouthe and round to se
A cloue chinne eke had she Her neche was of good fassion
In length and greatnesse by reason
Without bleine, scabbe, or roine
Fro Hierusalem vnto Burgoine
There nis a fairer neche iwis
To sele how smothe and soft it is Her throte also white of hewe
As Snowe on braunche snowed newe
Of body full well wrought was she Men neden not in no countre
A fairer bodie for to seke
And of fine Orfrais had she eke
A chapelet, so semely on Ne neuer wered maide vpon
And faire aboue that chapelet
A rose garlande had she set
She had a gaie mirrour
And with a riche golde treasour
Her hedde was tressed queintly
Her sleues sewed ketoutly
And for to kepe her hondes faire
Of gloues white she had a paire
And she had on a cote of Grene
Of cloth of Gaunt, withouten wene
Well semed by her aparaile
She was not wont to greate trauaile
For whan she kempt was ketoutly
And well araied and richely
Than had she doen all her iourne
For merry and well begon was she
She lad a luftie life in Maie
She had no thought, by night ne daie
Of nothing, but if it were onely
To graieth her well and vncouthly.

Whan that this doore had opened me
This Maie, semely for to se
I thonked her as I best might
And asked her how that she hight
And what she was, I asked eke
And to me was nought vnmeke
Ne of her answere daungerous
But faire answerde, and saied thus Lo sir, my name is Idelnesse
So clepe men me, more and lesse
Full mightie and full riche am I
And that of one thing namely
For I entende to nothing
But to my ioie, and my playing
And for to kembe and tresse me
I quainted am I and priue
With Mirthe, Lorde of this gardin
That fro the londe of Alexandrin
Made the trees hither be fet
That in this gardin been iset
And whan the trees were woren an high
This wall, that stant here in thy sight
Did Mirthe enclosen all about
And these Images all without
He did hem bothe entaile and paint
That neither been iolike ne quaint
But thei been full of sorowe and wo
As thou hast seen a while ago.

And oft time him to solace
Sir Mirthe cometh into this place
And eke with him cometh his meine
That liuen in lust and iolite
And now is Mirthe therein, to here
The birdes how thei singen clere
The Mauis and the Nightingale
And other ioly birdes smale
And thus he walketh to solace
Him and his folke, for swetter place
To plaien in, he maie not finde
Although he sought one in till Inde
The alther fairest folke to se
That in this worlde maie founde be Hath Mirthe with him in his rout
That folowen him alwaies about Whan Idelnesse had tolde all this
And I had harkened well iwis
Than saied I to dame Idelnesse
Now also wisely God me blesse
Sith Mirthe, that is so faire and fre
As in this yerde, with his menie
Fro thilke assemble, if I maie
Shall no man werne me to daie
That I this night ne mote it se
For well wene I there with him be A faire and ioly companie
Fulfilled of all curtesie
And forth without wordes mo
In at the wicket went I tho
That Idelnesse had opened me
Into that gardin faire to se.

And whan I was in iwis
Mine harte was full glad of this
For well wende I full likerly
Haue been in Paradise yearthly
So faire it was, that trusteth well
It semed a place espirituell
For certes at my deuise

Than

There is no place in Paradise
So good in for to dwell or be
Is in that gardin thought me
For there was many a birde singing
Throughout the yerde all thringing
In many places were Nightingales
Ilpes, Finches, and Wodwales
That in her swete song deliten
In thilke places as thei habiten
There might men se many flockes
Of Turtels and Lauerockes
Chalaundres sele sawe I there
That wery nigh forsongen were
And Thrustels, Terins, and Mauise
That songen for to winne hem prise
And eke to surmount in her song
That other birdes hem emong
By note made faire seruise
These birdes, that I you deuise
Thei song her song, as faire and wele
Is angels doen espirituell
And trusteth me, whan I hem heard
Full lustie and well I feard
For neuer yet soche melodie
Was heard, of man that might die
Soche swete song was hem emong
That me thought it no birdes song
But it was wonder like to be Song of Meremaidens of the see
That for her singing is so clere
Though we Meremaidens clepe hem here
In Englishe, as is our blaunce
Men clepe hem Sereins in Fraunce.

Ententife weren for to sing
These birdes, that not vnkonning
Were of her craft, and a prentise
But of song subtill and wise
And certes, whan I heard her song
And sawe the grene place emong
In harte I wext so wonder gaie
That I was neuer erst, er that daie
So iolise, nor so well bigo
Ne mery in harte, as I was tho
And than wist I, and sawe full well
That idelnesse me serued well
That me put in soche iolite
Her frende well ought I for to be Sithe she the dooze of that gardin
Had opened, and me let in.

From hens forthe, how that I wrought
I shall you tell, as me thought
First whereof Mirthe serued there
And eke what folke there with him were Without fable I woll discriue
And that gardin eke as bliue
I woll you tellen after this
The faire fassion all iwis
That well wrought was for the nones
I maie not tell you all atones
But as I maie and can, I shall
By order tellen you it all.
Full faire seruice, and eke full swete
These birdes maden as thei sete
Laies of loue, full well founing
Thei songen in her iargoning
Some hie, and some eke lowe song
Upon the braunches grene isprong
The swetenesse of her melodie
Made all mine harte in reuelrie
And whan that I heard I trowe
These birdes singing on a rowe
Than might I not withholde me
That I ne went in for to se
Sir Mirthe, for my desiring
Was him to seen ouer all thing
His countenaunce and his manere
That sight was to me full dere.

Tho went I forthe on my right honde
Doune by a little pathe I londe
Of Mintes full, and Fenell grene
Is fast by without wene
Sir Mirthe I founde, and right anon
Unto sir Mirthe gan I gon
There as he was him to solace
And with him, in that lustie place
So faire folke and so freshe had he
That whan I sawe, I wondred me
Fro whens soche folke might come
So faire thei weren all and some
For thei weren like, as to my sight
To angels, that been fethered bright.
These folke, of whiche I tell you so
Upon a harole wenten tho
A Ladie haroled hem, that hight
Gladnesse, blisfull and light
Well could she sing and lustely
None halse so well and semely
And cot she make in song soche refraining
It sate her wonder well to sing
Her voice full clere was and full swete
She was not rude ne vnmete
But couthe inough for soche doing
Is longeth vnto harolling
For she was wont in euery place
To singen first, folke to solace
For singing moste she gaue her to No crafte had she so lefe to doe.

Tho

The Romaunt

THo mightest thou harolles seen
And folke daunce and merie been
And made many a faire tourning
Upon the grene gralle springing
There mightest thou se these Flutours
Minstrals and eke ioglours
That well to sing did her paine
Some long songes of Lorraine
For in Lorraine her notes be Full sweter than in this countre
There was many a Timbestere
And sailours, that I dare well swere
Cothe her craft full parfitly
The Timbres vp full subtelly
Thei cast, and hent full oft
Upon a finger faire and soft
That thei failed neuer mo
Full fetis damosels two Right yong, and full of semelyhede
In kirtels, and none other wede
And faire tressed euery tresse
Had Mirthe doen for his noblesse
Amidde the carole for to daunce
But hereof lieth no remembraunce
How that thei daunsed queintly
That one would come all priuely
Ayen that other, and whan thei were Togither almoste, thei threwe ifere
Her mouthes so, that through her plaie
It semed as thei kist alwaie
To dauncen well couthe thei the gise
What should I more to you deuise
Ne bode I neuer thens go
Whiles that I sawe hem daunce so
Upon the harolt wonder fast
I gan beholde, till at last
A Ladie gan me for to espie
And she was cleped Curtesie
The worshipfull, the debonaire
I praie to God euer fall her faire
Full Curtesly she called me
What doe ye there Beau sire (q she)
Come, and if it like you
To dauncen, daunseth with vs now
And I without taryng
Went into the haroling
I was abashed neuer a deale
But it to me liked right weale
That Curtesie me cleped so
And bade me on the daunce go
For if I had durst certain
I would haue harolled right fain
As man that was to daunce right blithe
Than gan I loken oft sithe
The shap, the bodies, and the cheres
The countenaunce and the maneres
Of all the folke that daunced there
And I shall tell what thei were.

Full faire was Mirthe, full long and big
I fairer man I neuer sigh
As rounde as aple was his face
Full roddie and white in euery place
Fetis he was and well beseie
With metely mouthe, and yen greie
His nose by measure wrought full right
Crispe was her heere, and eke full bright
His shulders of large brede
And smalithe in the girdelstede
He semed like a purtreiture
So noble he was of his stature
So faire, so iolie, and so fetise
With limmes wrought at poinct deuise Deliuer, smerte, and of greate might Ne sawe thou neuer man so light
Of berde vnneth had he nothing
For it was in the first spring
Full yong he was, and merie of thought
And in samette, with birdes wrought
And with golde beaten full fetously
His bodie was clad full richely
Wrought was his robe in straunge gise
And all to slittered for queintise
In many a place, lowe and hie
And shode he was with greate maistrie
With shone decoped, and with lace
By diurie, and by solace
His leefe a rosen chapelet
Had made, and on his hedde it set
And wete ye who was his leefe
Dame gladdesse there was him so leefe
That singeth so well with glad corage
That from she was twelue yere of age
She of her loue graunt him made
Sir Mirthe her by the finger hade Daunsing, and she him also Greate loue was atwirt hem two Bothe were thei faire and bright of hewe
She semed like a rose newe
Of colours, and her flesshe so tender
That with a brere smale and tender
Men might it cleue, I dare well saie
Her forhedde frounceles all plaie
Bent were her browes two
Her yen graie, and glad also
That laughden aie in her semblaunt
First or the mouthe by couenaunt
I wot not what of her nose I shall deuise
So faire hath no woman alliue
Her heere was yelowe, and clere shining

I wot no lady so lithing.
Of Ozkates freshe, was her garlande
I whiche seen haue a thousande
Sawe neuer i wis no garlande yet
So well wrought of silke as it
Ind in an ouer gilt samite
Clad de she was, by greate delite
Of whiche her leefe a robe werde
The merier she in her harte ferde
Ind nert her went, on her other side
The God of loue, that can deuide Loue, and as him likethit be
But he can cherles daunten, he:
Ind many folkes pride fallen
Ind he can well these lordes thrallen
Ind ladies put at lowe degree
When he maie hem to proude see.

This God of loue of his fascion
Was like no knaue, ne quistron
His beautie greatly was to prise
But of his robe to deuise
I dede encombred for to be
For not iclad de in silke was he
But all in floures and flourettes
Paimted all with amorettes
Ind with losenges and scochons
With birdes, Liberdes, and Lions
Ind other beastes wrought full weale
His garment was euery deale
Purtraied and i wrought with floures
Dy diuers medeling of coloures
Floures there were of many gise
Iet by compace in a sise
There lacked no floure to my dome
Se not so moche as floure of Brome
Se violet, ne eke peruinke
Se floure none, that men can on thinke
Ind many a rose lefe full long
Was entermedled there emong
Ind also on his hedde was set
Of roses redde a chapelet
But Nightingales a full greate rout
That flien ouer his hedde about
The leaues felden as thei flien
Ind he was all with birdes wrien
With Popingaie, with Nightingale
With Chalaundre, and with wode wale
With finche, with larke, and with archangel
He semed as he were an angell
That doen were comen fro heauen clere
Loue had with him a bachelere
That he made alwaies with him be Swete loking, cleped was he
This bacheler stode beholding
The daunce, and in his honde holding Turke bowes two, full well deuised had he
That one of hem was of a tree
That beareth a fruict of sauour wiche
Full croked was that foule stiche
Ind knottie here and there also Ind blacke as berie, or any slo.
That other bowe was of a plant
Without wemme, I dare warant
Full euen and by proporcion
Trectes and long, of full good facion
Ind it was painted well and twhitten
Ind ouer all diapred and written
With ladies and with bacheleres
Full lightsome and glad of cheres
These bowes twoo held Swete loking
That semed like no gadling
Ind ten brode arowes helde he there
Of whiche fiue in his honde were But thei were shauen well and dight
Nocked and fethered a right
Ind all thei were with golde begon
Ind strong poincted euerichon
Ind sharpe for to kerue wele
But Iron was there none ne stele
For all was golde, men might see
Out take the fethers and the tree.

The swiftest of these arowes fiue
Out of a bowe for to driue
Ind best fethered for to flie
Ind fairest eke was cleped Beautie
That other arowe that hurteth lesse
Was cleped as I trowe Simplesse
The thirde cleped was Fraunchise
That fethered was in noble wise
With valour and with curtesie
The fowerth was cleped Companie
That heauie for to shoten is
But who so shoteth right i wis
Maie therwith doen greate harme and wo
The fift of these, and lasse also Faire Semblaunt men that arowe call
The least grenous of hem all
Yet can it make a full greate wounde
But he maie hope his sores sounde
That hurte is with that arowes i wis
His wo the bette bestowed is
For he maie soner haue gladnesse
His langour ought be the lesse.

Fiue arowes were of other gise
That been full foule to deuise
For shaft and ende sothe for to tell
Were also blacke as fende in hell

The

The first of hem is called Pride
That other arowe nert him beside
It was cleped Elanie
That arrowe was, as with felonie
Enuenimed, and with spitous blame
The third of hem was cleped Shame
The fowerth Wanhope cleped is
The fift the Newe thought iwis.

These arowes that I speake of here
Were all fiue on one manere
And all were thei resemblable
To hem was well sitting and able
The foule croked bowe hidous
That knottie was, and all roinous
That bowe semed well to shete
The arrowes fiue, that been vnmete
And contrary to that other fiue
But though I tell not as bliue
Of her power, ne of her might Herafter shall I tellen right
The sothe, and eke signifiaunce
As ferre as I haue remembraunce
All shall be saied I vndertake
Er of this booke an ende I make.

Now come I to my tale againe
But alderfirst, I will you saine
The fashion and the countenaunces
Of all the folke that on the daunce is
The God of Loue yolife and light
Ladde on his honde a Ladie bright
Of high prise, and of greate degre
This Ladie called was Beaute
And an arowe, of which I tolde
Full well the wed was she holde
Ne she was derke ne broune, but bright
And cleare as the Moone light Again whom all the Sterres semen
But small candels, as we demen
Her flesshe was tender as dewe of floure
Her cheare was simple as birde in boure
As white as Lilie or Rose in rise
Her face gentill and treatise
Fetis she was, and smale to se
No wintred browes had she Ne popped her, for it neded nought
To winder her, or to paint her ought Her tresses yelowe, and long straughten
Vnto her heles doune they raughten
Her nose, her mouthe, and ye and cheke
Well wrought, and all the remnaunte eke
I full greate sauour and a swote
Me thought in mine harte rote
As helpe me God, whan I remember
Of the fassion of euery member
In worlde is none so faire a wight
For yong she was, and hewed bright
Sore pleasaunt, and fetis withall
Gent, and in her middle small
Beside Beaute yede richesse
And right Ladie of greate noblesse
And greate of price in euery place
But who so durst to her trespace
Or till her folke, in werke or dede
He were ful hardie out of drede
For bothe she helpe and hinder maie
And that is not of yesterdaie
That riche folke haue full greate might
To helpe, and eke to greue a wight
The best and greatest of halous
Didden Richesse full greate honour
And busie weren her to serue
For that thei would her loue deserue
Thei cleped her Ladie greate and small
This wide worlde her dredeth all
This worlde is all in her daungere
Her courte hath many a losengere
And many a traitour enuious
That been full busie and curious
For to dispreise, and to blame
That best deseruen loue and name
To some the folke hem to begilen
These losengeours hem preise and smilen
And thus the worlde with worde anoie
But afterward thei prill and poincten
The folke, right to the bare bone
Behinde her backe whan thei been gone
And soule abaten folkes prise
Full many a worthie man and wise
Han hindred, and idoen to die
These losengeours with her flatterie
And maketh folke full straunge be
There as hem ought been priue
Well euill mote thei thriue and thee
And euill arriued mote thei bee
These losengeours full of enuie
No good man loueth her companie.

Richesse a robe of purple on had Ne trowe not that I lie or mad
For in this worlde is none it liche
Ne by a thousande deale so riche
Ne none so faire, for it full weale
With Orfreis laied was euerydeale
And purtraide in the ribaninges
Of Dukes stories, and of Kinges
And with a bende of golde tasseled
And knoppes fine of golde amiled
About her necke of gentill entaile

Was set the riche Cheuesaile
In whiche there was full greate plente
Of stones clere, and faire to se.
Richesse a girdle had vpon
The bokell of it was of ston
Of vertue greate, and mokell of might
For who so bare the stone so bright
Of venim durst him nothing doubt
While he the stone had him about
That stone was greatly for to loue
And till a riche mannes behoue
Worth all the golde in Rome, and Frise
The Mourdant wrought in noble gise
Was of a stone full precious
That was so fine and vertuous
That whole a man it couth make
Of pallie, and of tothe ake
And yet the stone had soche a grace
That he was seker in euery place
Ill thilke daie not blinde to been
That lasting might that stone seen
The barres were of gold full fine
Upon a tissue of Satin
Full heuie, greate, and nothing light
In eueriche was a besaunt wight
Upon the trelles of richesses
Was set a cercle of noblesse
Of vyende golde, that full light shone
Sofaire trowe I was neuer none
But he were honning for the nones
That could deuise all the stones
That in that cercle shewen clere
It is a wonder thing to here
For no man could preise or gesse
Of hem the value or richesse
Rubies there were, Saphirs, Ragounces
And Emeraudes, more than two vnces
But all before full subtilly
I sine Carboncle set sawe I
The stone so clere was and so bright
That all so sone as it was night
Men might seen to go for nede
A mile or two, in length and brede
Soche light sprang out of the stone
That richesse wonder bright shone
Bothe her hedde, and all her face
And eke about her all the place.
Dame Richesse on her honde gan lede
A yong man full of semelyhede
That she best loued of any thing
His lust was moche in housholding
In clothing was he full fetise
And loued well to haue hors of prise
He wende to haue reproued be
Of theft or murder, if that he Had in his stable an hackenaie
And therfore he desired daie
To been aqueinted with Richesse
For all his purpose, as I gesse
Was for to make greate dispence
Withouten warning or defence
And Richesse might it well sustain
And her dispences wele maintain
And him alwaie soche plentie sende
Of golde and siluer for to spende
Without lacking or daungere
As it were pourde in a garnere.

And after on the daunce went Largesse, that set all her entent
For to been honourable and free
Of Aleranders kinne was she
Her moste ioie was i wis
Whan that she yaf, and saied: haue this
Not Iuarice the foule caitise
Was halfe to gripe so ententise
As Largesse is, to yeue and spende
And God alwaie inowe her sende
So that the more she yaue awaie
The more i wis she had alwaie
Greate loos hath Largesse, and greate prise
For bothe wise folke and vnwise
Were wholy to her bandon brought
So well with yeftes hath she wrought
And if she had an enemie
I trowe that she couth craftely
Make him full sone her frende to be So large of yeftes, and wise was she Therfore she stode in loue and grace
Of riche and poore in euery place
A full greate foole is he i wis
That bothe riche and poore, and nigard is A Lorde maie haue no maner vice
That greueth more than Iuarice
For Nigarde neuer with strength of hande
Maie winne him greate lordship or lande
For frendes all to sewe hath he
To doen his will performed be
And who so woll haue frendes here
He maie not holde his treasour dere
For by ensample tell I this Right as an Idamant i wis
Can drawen to him subtelly
The Iron, that is laied therby
So draweth folkes hartes i wis
Siluer and golde that yeuen is Largesse had on a robe freshe
Of riche purpure Sarlinisshe
Well formed was her face and clere
And opened had she her colere

For the right there had in present
Unto a Lady made present
Of a Gold broche, ful wel wrought
And certes it misſate her nought
For through her smocke wrought with silke
The flesshe was sene as white as milke
Largesse, that worthy was and wise Held by the honde a knight of prise was sibbe to Arthour of Bretaigne
And that was he that bare the enseigne
Of worship, and the Goulfaucoun
And yet he is of suche renoun
That menne of him say faire thinges
Before Barons, Erles, and Kinges
This knight was comen al newly Fro tourneying fast by
There had he done great chiualrie
Through his vertue and his maistrie
And for the loue of his lemman
He cast doune many a doughty man
And nert him daunced dame Fraunchise
Araied in ful noble gise
She nas not broune ne dunne of hewe
But white as snowe ifallen newe
Her nose was wrought at point deuise
For it was gentill and tretise
With eien glad, and browes bent
Her heere doune to her heles went
And she was simple as douue on tree
Ful debonaire of hert was she
She durst neither say ne do
But that, that him longeth to
And if a manne were in distresse
And for her loue in heuinesse
Her hert would haue ful great pite
She was so amiable and free
For were a manne for her beſtadde
She would ben right fore a dradde
That she did ouer great outrage
But she him holpe his harme taswage
Her thought it all a vilanie
And she had on a kercheny
That not of hempe herdes was So faire was none in all Arras
Lorde it was riddeled fetisly
There nas not a point truely
That it nas in his right assise
Ful wel iclothed was Fraunchise
For there nis no clothe sitteth bette
On damoſell, than doth rokette
A woman wel more fetise is
In rokette, than in cote iwis
The white rokette riddeled faire
Betokeneth that full debonaire
And swete was she that it bere

By her daunced a Bachelere
I can not tellen you what he hight
But faire he was and of good hight
Al had he ben, I saie no more
The lordes sonne of Windesore.
And nert that daunced Curtesy
That preised was of lowe and hie
For nether proude ne fole was she
She for to daunce called me
I praie God giue her good grace
For whan I come first into the place
She nas not nice, ne outrageous
But wise and ware, and vertuous
Of faire speche, and faire answere was neuer wight misſaide of here
She bare no rancour to no wight
Clere broune she was, and therto bright
Of face and body auenaunt
I wotte no lady so plesaunt
She were worthy for to bene
In Empriſe for crouned Quene.
And by her went a knight dauncing
That worthy was and wel speking
And ful wel coude he don honour
The knight was faire and stiffe in stour
And in armure a semely man
And wel beloued of his lemman.
Faire Idelnesse than laugh I
That alway was me fast by
Of her haue I without faile
Tolde you the shape and apparaile
For (as I said) Lo, that was she
That did to me so great bounte
She the gate of that gardin Undid, and let me passen in
And after daunced as I gesse
And she fulfilled of lustinesse
That nas not yet. xii. yere of age
With hert wilde, and thought bolage
Nice she was, but she ne mente
None harme ne sleight in her entente
But onely luſte and solite
For yonge folke, wel weten ye
Haue litell thought, but on her play
Her lemman was beside alway
In suche a gise that he her kiſte
At al times that him liſte
That al the daunce might it se
They make no force of preuite
For who so spake of hem iuel or wele
Thei were ashamed neuer a dele
But men might sene hem kiſſe there
As it two yonge doues were
For yonge was thilke Bachelere
Of beaute wot I non his pere

And he was right of suche an age
As youth his lese, and suche corage
The lusty folke that daunced there
And also other that with hem were
That weren all of her meine
Ful hende folke, wise, and free
And folke of faire porte truely
There were al comenly
Whan I had sene the countenaunces
Of hem that ladden thus these daunces
Than had I will to go and se
The gardin that so liked me
And loken on these faire Laurelles
On Pine trees, Cedres, and Olmeres
The daunces than ended were
For many of hem that daunced there
Were with her loues went away
Under the trees to haue her play.

ALorde thei liued lystely
A I great foole were he sikerly
That nolde his thankes suche life lede
For this dare I saine out of drede
That who so might so well fare
For better life durst him not care
For there nis so good paradise
As to haue a loue at his deuise
Out of that place went I tho
And in that gardin gan I go Playing a long ful merely
The God of Loue full haskely
Unto him Swete Lokyng clept
No lenger would he that she kept
His bowe of Gold, that shone so bright
He had him dent anon right
And he full soone set an ende
And at a braide he gan it bende
And toke him of his arowes fiue
Ful sharpe and redy for to driue.
Now God that sitteth in maieste
So deedly woundes he hepe me
If so be that he had me shete
For ik I with his arowe mete
It had me greued lore i wis
But I that nothing will of this Went vp and doune, ful many a waie
And he me folowed fast al waie
But no where would I rest me
Til I had in all the gardin be.

The Gardin was by mesurying
Right euen and square in compassing
As longe was as it was large
Of fruite had euery tree his charge
But it were any vidous tree
Of whiche there were two or thre
There were, and that wote I full wele
Of Pomgarnettes a full great dele
That is a frute ful welle to like Namely to folke whan thei ben sike
And trees there were, great foison
That baren nuttes in her season
Suche as menne nutemigges call
That swote of sauour ben withall
And Almandres great plente
Figges, and many a Date tre
There weren, if menne had nede
Throug the Gardin, in length and brede
There was eke wexing many a spice
As Clowe, Gilofre, and Licorice
Gingere, and Grein de Paris
Canell, and Sete wale of pris
And many a spice delitable
To eeten whan menne rise fro table
And many homely trees there were
That Peches, Coines, and Apples bere
Medlers, Plommes, Peeres, Chesteinis
Cherise, of whiche many one faine is Notes, Aleis, and Bolas
That for to sene it was solas
With many high Laurer, and Pine
Was renged clene all that gardine
With Cipres, and with Oliueris
Of whiche that nigh no plenty here is
There were Elmes great and strong Maples, Asshe, Oke, Aspes, Planes long
Fine Ewe, Popler, and Lindes faire
And other trees full many a paire
What should I tel you more of it?
There were so many trees yet
That I should al encombred be Er I had rekened euery tree
These trees were set that I deuise
One from an other in assise
Fiue fadome or fire, I trowe so
But they were hie and great also
And for to kepe out wel the Sunne
The croppes were so thicke ironne
And euery braunce in other knitte
And ful of grene leues sitte
That Sunne might there none discende
Lest the tender grasses shende
There might men Does and Roes se
And of squirels ful great plente
From bowe to bowe al waie leping
Connis there were also playing
That comen out of her clapers
Of sondry colours and mauers
And maden many a tourneying
Upon the fresshe grasse springing

In places fawe I welles there
In whiche there no frogges were
And faire in shadowe was euery wel
But I ne can the nombre tel
Of stremis smal that by deuise
Wirth had done come through condise
Of whiche the water in renning
Gan make a noise ful liking
About the brinkes of these welles
And by the stremes ouer al elles
Sprange vp the grasse, as thicke iset
And soft as any veluet
On which men might his lemman ley
As on a fetherbed to pley
For the earth was full softe and swete
Through moisture of the wel wete
Sprong vp the sote grene gras
As faire, as thicke, as mister was
But mochе amended it the place
That therth was of suche a grace
That it of floures hath plente
That both in somer and winter be
There sprange the violet al newe
And freshe perwinke riche of hewe
And floures yelowe, white, and rede
Suche plente grewe there neuer in mede
Ful gaie was al the grounde and queint
And poudred, as men had it pent
With many a freshe and sondry floure
That caften vp ful good sauour
I wol not longe holde you in fable
Of al this gardin dilectable
I mote my tonge stinten nede
For I ne maie withouten drede
Naught tellen you the beaute all
Ne halfe the bountie there withall
I went on right honde and on lefte
About the place, it was not lefte
Till I had al the garden bene
In the efters that men might sene
And thus while I went in my playe
The God of loue me folowed aye
Right as an hunter can abide
The beest, till he seeth his tide
To shoten at goodnesse to the deere Whan that him needeth go no nere
And so befil, I reked me
Besides a wel vnder a tree
Whiche tree in Fraunce men cal a Pine
But sithe the time of king Pepine
Ne grewe there tree in mannes sight
So faire, ne so wel wore in hight
In al that yarde so high was none
And springing in a marble stone
Had nature set, the sothe to tell
Under that Pine tree a well
And on the border al without Was written in the stone about Letters smal, that saiden thus Here starte the faire Narcisus.
Narcisus was a bachelere
That loue had caught in his daungere
And in his nette gan him so straine
And did him so to wepe and plaine
That nede him must his life forgo
For a faire lady that hight Echo
Him loued ouer any creature
And gan for him suche paine endure
That on a time she him tolde
That if he her louen nolde
That her behoued nedes die
There laie none other remedie
But natheless for his beaute
So feirs and daungerous was he
That he nolde graunten her asking
For weping, ne for faire praying
And whan she herde him werne her so
She had in hert so great wo
And toke it in so great dispite
That she without more respite
Was deed anon: but ere she deide
Ful pitously to God she preide
That proude herted Narcisus
That was in loue so daungerous
Might on a day ben hampered so
For loue, and ben so hote for wo
That neuer he might to ioie attaine
Than should he fele in euery paine
What sorowe trewe louers maken
That ben so vilainously forsaken.

This praier was but resonable
Therfore God helde it ferme and stable
For Narcisus shortly to tell
By auenture came to that well
To rest him in the shadowing
A day, whan he come from hunting
This Narcisus had suffred paines
For renning al daie in the plaines
And was for thurst in great distresse
Of herte, and of his werinesse
That had his brethe almost benomen
Whan he was to that wel icomen
That shadowed was with braunches grene
He thought of thilke water shene
To drinke, and freshe him wele withall
And doune on knees he gan to fall
And forth his necke and heed outstraught
To drinke of that well a draught
And in the water anon was sene

His nose, his mouthe, his eyen shene
And he therof was all abashed
His owne shadowe had him betrashed
For wel wende he the soyme se
Of a childe of great beaute
Well couth loue him wreke tho
Of daunger and of pride also
That Narcisus somtime him bere
He quite him well his guerdon there
For he mused so in the well
That shortely the sothe to tell
He loued his owne shadowe so
That at last he starke for wo
For whan he sawe that he his will Might in no maner way fulfill
And that he was so faste caught
That he him couthe comfort naught
He lost his witte, right in that place
And deide within a litell space
And thus his warison he tolke
For the lady that he forsoke
Ladies I praie ensample taketh
Ye that aienst your loue mistaketh
For if her death be you to wite
God can ful wel your while quite.

Whan that this letter, of whiche I tell
Had taught me that it was the well
Of Narcisus in his beaute
I gan anon withdrawe me
Whan it fel in my remembraunce
That him betide suche mischaunce
But at the laste than thought I
That scathelesse, ful sikerly
I might vnto the welle go
Wherof shull I abashen so
Unto the welle than went I me
And doune I louted for to se
The clere water in the stone
And eke the grauel, whiche that shone
Doune in the botome, as siluer fine
For of the welle, this is the fine
In world is none so clere of hewe
The water is euer fresh and newe
That welmeth vp, with wawes bright
The mountenaunce of two finger hight
About it is gralle springing
For moiste so thicke and well lthing
That it ne may in winter die
No more than may the see be drie.

Doune at the botome set sawe I
Two cristall stones craftely
In thilke fresshe and faire well
But o thinge sothly dare I tell
That ye wol holde a great merualle
Whan it is tolde, without n faile
For whan the sunne clere in sight
Cast in that welle his bemes bright
And that the heete discended is Than taketh the Cristall stone i wis
Againe the sunne an hundred hewes Blewe, yelow, and reed that fresh and newe is Yet hath the meruailous Cristall
Suche strength, that the place ouer all
Both foule and tree, and leues grene
And all the yerde in it is sene
And for to don you to vnderstande
To make ensample wol I fonde
Right as a mirrour openly
Sheweth al thing that stondeth thereby
As well the colour, as the figure
Withouten any couerture
Right so the Cristall stone shining
Withouten any disceiuing
The entrees of the yerde acculeth
To him that in the water museth
For euer in whiche halfe that ye be Ye may wel halfe the Gardine se
And if he turne, he may right wele
Sene the remenaunt euery dele
For there is none so litel thing
So hid ne closed with shitting
That it ne is sene, as though it were Painted in the Cristall there
This is the mirrour perillus
In whiche the proude Narcisus
Sey al his faire face bright
That made him sith to lie vpright
For who so loke in that mirrour
There may nothing ben his socour
That he ne shal there se something
That shal him lede into laughing
Ful many a worthy man hath it
Yblent, for folke of greatest wit
Ben soone caught here and waited
Withouten respite ben thei baited
Here cometh to folke of newe rage
Here chaungeth many wight corage
Here lithe no rede ne witte therto
For Uenus sonne, dan Cupido
Hath sowen there of loue the sede
That helpe ne lithe there none, ne rede
So cercleth it the welle about His ginnes hath he set without Right for to catche in his panters
These Damosels and Bachelers
Loue wil none other birde catche
Though he set either nette or latche
And for the sede that here was sowen

This welle is cleped, as well is knowen
The welle of Loue, of very right
Of whiche there hath ful many wight
Spoken in bokes diuersely
But thei shul neuer so verily
Discripcion of the welle here
Ne eke the sothe of this matere
As ye shul, whan I haue vndo
The crafte that her belongeth to.

ALway me liked for to dwell
To sene the christall in the well
That shewed me ful openly Ithoulande thinges fast by
But I may saie in sory houre
Stode I to loken or to powre
For sithen I sore sighed
That Mirrour hath me now entriked
But had I first knowen in my wit
The vertue and strengthes of it
I nolde not haue mused there
Me had bette ben els where
For in the snare I fell anone
That had bitrested many one
In thilke Mirrour sawe I tho
Among a thoulande thinges mo
A roser charged ful of rosis
That with an hedge aboute enclosis
Tho had I suche lust and enuie
That for Paris ne for Paule
Nolde I haue left to gone and se
There greatest heape of roses be Whan I was with this rage hente
That caught hath many a man and shente
Towarde the Roser gan I go
And whan I was not ferre there fro
The sauour of the roses swote
Me smote right to the hert rote
As I had all enbaumed me
And if I ne had endouted me
To haue ben hated or assailed
My thankes wol I not haue failed
To pull a rose of al that route
To bere in mine honde aboute
And smellen to it where I went
But euer I dredde me to repent
And lette it greued or forthought
The lorde that thilke gardin wrought
Of roses there were great wone
So faire ware neuer in Rone
Of knoppes close, some sawe I there
And some wel better woren were
And some there ben of other moison
That drowe nigh to her season
And spedde hem faste for to spredde
I loue wel suche roses redde
For brode roses, and open also Ben passed in a daie or two
But knoppes will freshe be
Two daies at leest, or els three
The knoppes greatly liked me
For fairer maie there no man se
Who so might haue one of all
It ought him ben ful lefe withall
Might I garlonde of hem getten
For no richesse I wolde it letten
Amonges the knoppes I chese one
So faire, that of the remenaunt none
Ne preise I halfe so wel as it
Whan I avise in my wit
For it so well was enlumined
With colour reed, as well fined
As nature couth it make faire
And it hath leaues wel foure paire
That kind hath set through his knowing
Aboute the redde roses springing
The stalke was as riche right
And theron stode the knoppe vpright
That it ne bowed vpon no side
The swote smell sprong so wide
That it died al the place aboute
Whan I had smelled the sauour swote
No will had I fro thence yet go
But somdele nere it went I tho
To take it, but mine honde for drede
Ne durst I to the Rose bede
For thikke leues sharpe of many maners
Netles, thornes, and hoked briers
For muche they disfourbled me
For sore I dradde to harmed be.

THe God of Loue, with bowe bent
That al daie set had his talent
To pursue and to spien me
Was stonding by a figge tree
And whan he sawe how that I Had chosen so ententifely
The bothum more vnto my pay
Than any other that I say
He toke an arowe, ful sharpely whette
And in his bowe when it was sette
He streight vp to his eere drough
The strong bowe, that was so tough
And shotte at me so wonder smerte
That through mine eye vnto mine herte
The takel smote, and depe it wente
And therwith al suche colde me hente
That vnder clothes warme and softe
Sithen that day I haue chiuered ofte
Whan I was hurte thus in stounde

I fell doune plat vnto the grounde
Mine harte failed, and fainted aie
And long time in swoune I laie
But whan I came out of swouning
And had witte, and my feling
I was all mate, and wende full weale
Of blood, haue lorne a full greate
But certes the arowe that in me stoode
Of me ne drewe no droppe of blood
For why, I founde my woundes all drie
Than toke I with mine hondes twete
The arowe, and full fast it out plight
And in the pulling sore I sight
So at the last the shaft of tre
I drough out, with the fethers thre
But yet the hoked hedde I wis
The whiche beaute called is Gan so depe in mine harte pace
That I it might not arace
But in mine harte still it stood
Ill bledde I not a droppe of blood
I was bothe anguishous and trouble
For the perill that I sawe double
I mist what to saie or doe
Yet get a leache my woundes to
For neither through grasse ne rote
Ne had I helpe of hope ne bote
But to the bothum euer mo
Mine harte drewe, for all my wo
My thought was in none other thing
For had it been in my keping
It would haue brought my life again
For certes euenly, I dare well sain
The sight onely, and the sauour
Alegged moche of my langour
Than gan I for to drawe me
Toward the bothum faire to se
And Loue had gette him in his throwe
Another arowe into his bowe
And for to shote gan him dresse
The arowes name was Simplesse
And whan that Loue gan nigh me nere
He drowe it vp withouten were
And shote at me withall his might
So that this arowe anone right
Throughout eigh as it was founde
Into mine harte hath made a wounde
Than I anone did all my craft
For to drawen out the shaft
And therewithall I sighed eft
But in mine hart the hedde was left
Whiche aie encreased my desire Unto the bothum drowe I nere
And euermo that me was wo
The more desire had I to go
Unto the Roser, where that grewe
The freshe bothum, so bright of hewe
Better me were to haue letten be
But it behoued nede me
To doen right as mine harte badde
For euer the body must be ladde
After the harte, in whele and wo
Of force togither thei must go
But neuer this archer would fine
To shote at me with all his pine
And for to make me to him mete
The thirde arowe he gan to shete
Whan best his time he might espie
The whiche was named curtesie
Into mine harte he did auale
I sowoune I fell, bothe dedde and pale
Long time I laie, and stired nought
Till I abraied out of my thought
And faste than I auised me
To drawe out the shaft of tre
But euer the hedde was left behinde
For ought I couthe pull or winde
So sore it sticked whan I was hit
That by no crafte I might it flit
But anguishous and full of thought
I felt soche wo, my wounde aie wrought
That somoned me alwaie to go
Toward the Rose, that pleased me so
But I ne durst in no manere
Bicause the archer was so nere
For euermore gladly as I rede
Brent child of fire hath moche drede
And certes yet for all my pein
Though that I sigh, yet arowes rein
And ground quareles, sharpe of stele
Ne for no pain that I might fele
Yet might I not my self with hold
The faire Roser to behold
For Loue me yaue soche hardiment
For to fulfill his commaundement
Upon my feete I rose vp than Feble, as a forwounded man
And forthe to gon might I set
And for the Archer nolde I let Toward the Roser fast I drowe
But thornes sharpe, mo than inow
There were, and also thistels thicke
And dreres brimme for to prieke
That I ne might get grace
The rough thornes for to pace
To seen the Roses freshe of hewe
I must abide, though it me rewe
The hedge about so thicke was
That closed the Roses in compas
But o thing liked me right wele

I was so nigh, I might fele
Of the bothum the swote odour
And also se the freshe coloure
And that right greatly liked me
That I so nere might it se
Soche ioie anon thereof had I
That I forgate my malady
To seen I had soche delite
Of sorowe and anger I was all quite
And of my woundes that I had thore
For nothing liuen me might more Than dwellen by the Roser aie
And thens neuer to passe awaie
But whan a while I had be thare
The God of loue, whiche all to share
Mine harte with his arowes kene
Casteth him to yeue me woundes grene
He shote at me full hastely
In arowe named Compayne
The whiche tshell is full able To make these Ladies merciable
Than I anon gan chaungen hewe
For greuaunce of my wounde newe
That I again fell in swouning
And sighed sore in complaining
Sore I complained that my sore
On me gan greuen more and more
I had none hope of Allegiaunce
So nigh I drowe to disperaunce
I rought of death, ne of life
Whether that loue would me drife
If me a martir would he make
I might his power not forsake
And while for anger thus I woke
The God of Loue an arowe toke
Full sharpe it was and pugnaunt
And it was called Faire semblaunt
The whiche in wise would consent
That any louer him repent
To serue his loue, with harte and all
For any perill that maie befall
But though this arowe was kene grounde
As any rasour that is founde
To cutte and kerue at the poinct
The God of Loue it had anoint
With a precious ointment
Some dele to yeue alegement
Upon the woundes that he hade
Through the body in my harte made
To helpe her sores, and to cure
And that thei maie the bette indure
But yet this arowe, without more
Made in mine harte a large sore
That in full greate pain I abode
But aie the ointment went abrode
Throughout my woundes large and wide
It spredde about in euery side
Through whose vertue, and whose might Mine harte ioifull was and light
I had been dedde and all to shent
But for the precious ointment
The shaft I drowe out of the arowe
Roking for wo right wonder narowe
But the hedde, whiche made me smarte
Left behinde in mine harte
With other sower, I dare well saie
That neuer woll be take awaie
But the ointment halpe me wele
And yet soche sorowe did I fele
That all daie I chaunged hewe
Of my woundes freshe and newe
As men might se in my visage
The arowes were so full of rage
So variaunt of diuersite
That men in eueriche might se
But greate anoie, and eke swetnelle
And ioie meint with bitternelle
Now were thei ealie, now were thei wood
In hem I felt bothe harme and good
Now sore without alleggement
Now softing with ointment
It softened here, and pricked there
Thus ease and anger togither were.

The God of Loue deliuerly
Come lepande to me hastely
And saied to me in greate iape yelde thee, for thou maie not escape
Maie no defence auaile thee here
Therefore I rede make no daungere
If thou wolt yelde thee hastely
Thou shalt rather haue mercie
He is a foole in sikernelle
That with daunger or stoutnelle
Rebelleth, there that he should please
In soche folie is little ease
Be meke, where thou must nedes bowe
To striue ayen is not thy prowe
Come at ones, and haue idoe
For I woll that it be so
Than yelde thee here debonairly
And I answered full humbly
Gladly sir, at your bidding
I woll me yelde in all thing
To your seruice I woll me take For God defende that I should make Ayen your bidding resistence
I woll not doen so greate offence
For if I did, it were no skill
Ye maie doe with me what ye will

Sam

Saue or spill, and also slo fro you in no wise may I go
My life, my death, is in your honde
I maie not lasse out of your bonde
Plaine at your liste I yelde me
Hoping in hert, that somtime ye
Comforte and ese shul me sende
Or els shortly, this is the ende
Withouten health, I mote aie dure
But if ye take me to your cure
Comforte or helth, how should I haue
Sithe ye me hurte, but ye me saue
The helth of Loue mote be founde
Where as thei token first her wounde
And if ye liste of me to make Your prisoner, I woll it take
Of herte and will fully at gre
Holy and plaine I yelde me
Without feining or feintise
To be gouerned by your empryse
Of you I here so muche prise
I wol ben hole at your deuise
For to fulfill your liking
And repent for nothing
Hoping to haue yet in some tide
Mercy, of that I abide
And with that couenaunt yelde I me
Anon doune kneling vpon my kne
Prolering for to kisse his fete
But for nothing he would me lete.

And said, I loue the both and preise
Sens that thine answere doth me ese
For thou answered so curtesly
For now we I wote well vtterly
That thou art gentle by thy speche
For though a man ferre would seche
He should not finden in certaine
So suche answere of no vilaine
For suche a worde ne might nought
Issue out of a vilaines thought
Thou shalt not lesen of thy speche
For thy helping woll I eche
And eke encresen that I maie
But first I woll that thou obaie
Fully for thine auauntage
Anone to do me here homage
And sithe hisse thou shalt my mouthe
Whiche to no vilaine was neuer couthe
For to aproche it, ne for to touche
For saufe of cheries I ne vouche
That thei shal neuer neigh it nere
For curteis, and of faire manere
Wel taught, and ful of gentelnesse
He must ben, that shall me kisse
And also of ful highe fraunchise
That shal atteine to that empryse
And first of o thing warne I thee
That paine and great aduersite
He mote endure, and ese trauaile
That shal me serue, without faile
But there against thee to comforte
And with thy seruice to disporte
Thou maist ful glad and ioyfull be
So good a maister to haue as me
And lord of so high renoun
I beare of loue the Gonfenoun
Of Curtesie the banere
For I am of selfe the manere
Gentill, curteis, meke, and fre
That who euer ententife be Me to honour, doute, and serue
And also that he him observe
For trespace and fro villanie
And him gouerne in curtesie
With will and entencion
For when he first in my prison
Is caught, than must he vtterly
Fro thence forth ful besily
Call him gentill for to be
If he desire helpe of me
Anone without more delaie
Withouten daunger or affraie
I become his man anone
And gaue him thankes many a one
And kneled doune with hondes ioint
And made it in my porte full queint
The ioye went to my herte rote
Whan I had kissed his mouth so swote
I had suche mirth and such liking
It cured me of languishing
He asked of me than hostages
I haue he saide taken fele homages
Of one and other, where I haue dene
Disteined ofte, withouten wene
These felons ful of falsite
Haue many sithes begiled me
And through her falsheed her lust achiued
Wherof I repent, and am agreued
And I hem gette in my daungere
Her falsheed shul thei bie full dere
But for I loue thee, I saie the plaine
I woll of thee be more certaine
For the fore I woll now binde
That thou away ne shalt not winde
For to denien thy couenaunt
Or done that is not auenaunt
That thou were false, it were great ruth Sithe thou semest so ful of truth
Sir, if thee liste to vnderstaunde

I merueile thee asking this demaunde
For why or wherefore should ye Hostages or borowes aske of me
Or any other siuernesse
Sithe ye wote in sothfastnesse
That ye me haue suspriſed so
And hole mine harte taken me fro
That it woll doe for me nothing
But if it be at your bidding
Mine hart is yours, and mine right nought
As it behoueth, in deede and thought Redy in all to worche your will Whether so tourne to good or ill
So fore it lusteth you to pleaſe
No man therof maie you diſeaſe
Ye haue theron set sothe iuſtice
That it is werried in many wiſe
And if ye doubt it nolde obaie
Ye maie therof doe make a kaie
And hold it with you for hostage
Now certes this none outrage
(Q Loue) and fully accorde
For of the body he is full Lorde
That hath the harte in his treasore
Outrage it were to aſken more.

THan of his aumener he drough
A little keie fetile inough
Whiche was of gold poliſhed clere
And saied to me, with this keie here
Thine harte to me now woll I shet
For all my iotfull lobe and knet
I binde vnder this little keie
That no wight maie cary awaie
This keie is full of greate poſte
With whiche anone he touched me
Under the side full ſoftely
That he mine harte ſodainly
Without any bad ſpeered
That yet right nought it hath me deered
Whan he had doen his will all out
And I had put him out of dout
Sir I saied: I haue right greate will Your luſt and pleaſure to fulfill Lobe ye my ſeruice take at gree
By thilke faith ye owe to me
I saie nought for recreaundiſe
For I nought doubt or your ſeruice
But the ſeruaunt trauaileth in vain
That for to ſeruen doeth his pain
Unto that lorde, whiche in no wiſe
Conne him no thanke for his ſeruice.

LOue saied, diſmaie thee nought
Sithe thou for ſuccour hall me ſought
In thanke thy ſeruice woll take
And high of degree I woll thee make
If wickednesse ne hinder thee
But (as I hope) it shall nought be
To worſhip no wight by auenture
Maie come, but be pain endure
Abide and ſuffre thy diſtreſſe
That hurteth now, it ſhall be leſſe
I wote my ſelf what maie thee saue
What medicine thou wouldeſt haue
And if thy truth to me thou kepe
I ſhall vnto thine helping eke
To cure thy woundes and make hem clene
Where so thei be old or grene
Thou ſhalt be holpen at worde ſes lewe
For certainly thou ſhalt well ſhewe
Where that thou ſeruest with good will
For to accompliſhen and fulfill
My commaundementes daie and nigh
Whiche I to louers yeue of right.

AH ſir, for Goddes loue (saied I)
Er ye paſſe hens ententifely
Your commaundementes to me ye ſaie
And I ſhall kepe hem if I maie
For hem to kepen is all my thought
And if ſo be I wote hem nought
Than maie I vnwittingly
Wherfore I praie you entierly
With all mine harte, me to lere
That I treſpace in no manere
The God of loue than charged me
Anon, as ye ſhall here and ſe
Worde by worde, by right empriſe
So as the Romaunt ſhall deuiſe
The maiſter leſeth his time to lere
Whan the diſciple woll not here
It is but vain on him to ſwinke
That on his learning woll not thinke
Who ſo luſt loue, let him entende
For now the Romance beginneth to amende
Now is good to heare in faie
If any be that can it faie
And poinct it as the reaſon is Set for other gate I wis
It ſhall nat well in all thing
Be brought to good vnderſtanding
For a reader that poincteth ill
A good ſentence maie oft ſpill
The boke is good at the ending
Made of newe and luſtie thing
For who ſo woll the ending here
The craft of loue he ſhall now lere
If that he woll ſo long abide Till I this Romance maie vnhide

In

And vndoe the signifiaunce
Of this dreame into Romaunce
The sothfastnesse that now is hid Without couerture shall be kid
Whan I vndoen haue this dreaming
Wherein no worde is of leasing.

VIllanie at the beginning
I woll saie loue ouer all thing
Thou leaue, if thou wolt be False, and trespace ayenst me
I curse and blame generally
All hem that louen villanie
For villanie maketh villaine
And by his deedes a chorle is seine
These villains arne without pite
Frendship, loue, and all bounte
I nill receiue vnto my seruice
Hem that been vilains of empryse
But vnderstonde in thine entente
That this is not mine entendiment
To clepe no wight in no ages
Onely gentell for his linages
But who so is vertuous
And in his port not outrageous
Whan soche one thou seest thee beforne
Though he be not gentill borne
Thou maiest well seine this is in soth
That he is gentill, bicause he doth
As longeth to a gentil man
Of hem none other deme I can
For certainly without en dreede
A chorle is demed by his deede
Of hie or lowe, as ye maie se
Or of what kinred that he be Se saie nought for none euill will Thing that is to holden still
It is no worship to missetie
Thou maiest ensample take of hetie
That was somtime for missaiyng
Hated bothe of old and yong
As ferre as Gawein the worthie
Was praised for his curtesie
Kaie was hated, for he was fell
Of worde dispitous and cruell
Wherefore be wise and aqueintable
Goodlie of worde, and reasonable
Bothe to lesse and eke to mare
And whan thou comest there men are Loke that thou haue in custome aie
First to saine hem if thou maie
And if it fall that of hem somme
Salue the first, be not domme
But quite him curtesly anon
Without abiding, er thei gon
For nothing eke thy tong applie
To speake wordes of ribaudie
To dilaine speche, in no degre
Late neuer thy lippe vnbounden be
For I nought holde him in good faith
Curteis that foule wordes saith
And al women serue and preise
And to thy power her honour reise
And if that any misslayere
Dispise women, that thou maist here
Blame him, and bidde him holde him still And sette thy might, and al thy will Women and ladies for to plese
And to do thing that may hem ese
That thei euer speke good of thee
For so thou maist best praised be Loke fro pride thou kepe thee wele
For thou maist both perceiue and fele
That pride is both foly and sinne
And he that pride hath him within Ne may his hert in no wise
Meken ne souplen to seruice
For pride is founde in euery parte
Contrarie vnto Loues arte
And he that loueth truely
Should him conteine iolily
Without pride in sondry wise
And him disguisen in queintice
For queinte aray, without dreede
Is nothing proude, who taketh hede
For freshe aray, as men may se
Without pride may ofte be Maintaine thy selfe after thy rent
Of robe and eke of garment
For many sithe faire clothing
A man amendeth in muche thing
And loke alway that thei be shape
What garment that thou shalt make
Of him that can best do
With al that parteineth therto
Pointes and sleues be wel sittande
Right and streight on the hande
Of shone and bootes, newe and faire
Loke at the lest thou haue a paire
And that thei sitte so fetously
That these rude may vtterly
Merualle, sith that thei sitte so plaine
How thei come an or of againe
Weare streight gloues with aumere
Of silke, and alway with good chere
Thou yeue, if thou haue richelle
And if thou haue nought spende the lesse
Alway be mery, if thou maie
But waste not thy good alwaie
Haue hatte of floures freshe as May

Chapelet

Chapelet of Roses of whitsondaie
For such araie ne costneth but lite
Thine hondes washe, thy tethe make white
And let no filthe vpon thee be Thy nailes blacke, if thou maiest se
Voide it a waie deliuerly
And kembe thine heade right iolily
Farce not thy visage in no wise
For that of loue is nat thempryse
For loue doeth haten, as I finde
A beautie that cometh nat of kinde
Alwaie in harte I rede thee
Glad and mery for to be
And be as iolifull as thou can Loue hath no ioie of sorowfull man
That euill is full of curtesie
That knoweth in his maladie
For euer of loue the sickenesse
Is meint with swete and bitternesse
The sore of loue is meruailous
For now the louer is ioious
Now can he plain, now can he grone
Now can he singen, now maken mone
To daie he plaineth for heuinesse
To morowe he plaineth for iolinesse
The life of loue is full contrarie
Whiche stoundemeale can oft varie
But if thou canst mirthes make That men in gre woll gladly take Doe it goodly, I commaunde thee
For men should where so euer thei be Doe thing that hem sitting is
For therof cometh good loos and pris
Wherof that thou be vertuous
Ne be nat straunge ne daungerous
For if that thou good rider be Pryche gladly that men maie se
In armes also if thou conne
Pursue till thou a name hast wonne
And if thy voice be faire and clere
Thou shalt maken no greate daunger
Whan to sing thei goodly praie
It is thy worship for to obaie
Also to you it longeth aie
To Harpe and Giterne, daunce and plaie
For if he can well foote and dgunce
It maie him greatly doe auaunce
Emong eke for thy Ladie sake
Songes and complaintes that thou make
For that woll meuen in her harte
Whan thei reden of thy smarte
Looke that no man for scarce thee holde
For that maie greue thee manifolde Reason woll that a louer be
In his yeftes more large and fre
Than chorles that been not of louing
For who therof can any thing
He shall be lefe aie for to yeue
In londes lore who so would leue
For he that through a sodain sight
Or for a killing anon right
Yaue hole his harte, in will and thought
And to himself kepeth right nought
After this swilt, it is good reason
He yeue his good in abandon.

Now woll I shortly here reherce
Of that I haue saied in verce
All the sentence by and by
In wordes fewe compendiously
That thou the better maiest on hem think whether so it be thou wake or winke
For the wordes little greue
A man to kepe, whan it is breue who so with Loue woll gon or ride
He mote be curteies, and voide of pride
Merie, and full of iolite
And of Largesse a loued be.

First I ioigne thee here in penaunce
That euer without repentaunce
Thou set thy thought in thy louing
To last without repenting
And thinke vpon thy mirthes swete
That shall folowe after whan ye mete.

And for thou true to Loue shalt be
I will, and commaunde thee
That in one place thou set all hole
Thine harte, without halfen dole
For trecherie and sikernesse
For I loued neuer doublenesse
To many his harte that woll depart
Eueriche shall haue but little part
But of hem drede I me right nought
That in one place setteth his thought
Therefore in o place it set
And let it neuer thens flet
For if thou yeuest it in lening
I holde it but wretched thing
Therfore yeue it whole and quite
And thou shalt haue the more merite
If it be lent, than after soen
The bounte and the thankes is doen
But in Loue, free yeuen thing
Requireth a greate guerdoning yeue it in yeft all quite fully
And make thy gift debonairly
For men that yeft holde more dere
That yeuen is with gladsome chere.

The

That gilte nought to praisen is
That man yeueth maugre his Whan thou hast veuen thine hert (as I Haue said) me here openly
Than auentures shull the fall
Whiche harde and heuy den with all
For ofte whan thou bethinkest thee
Of thy louing, where so thou be Fro folke thou must depart in hie
That none perceiue thy maladie
But hide thine harme thou must alone
And go forth sole, and make thy mone
Thou shalt no while be in o state
But whilom colde and whilom hate
Now red as Rose, now yelowe and sade
Such sorow I trow thou neuer hade
Cotidien, ne quarteine
It is not so full of peine
For olten times it shal fal
In loue, among thy paines al
That thou thy selfe al holly
Forgetten shalt so vterly
That many times thou shalt be Still as an image of tree
Domme as a stone, without stering
Of sote or honde, without speking
Than sone after al thy paine
Co memorie shalt thou come againe
I man abashed wonder sore
And after sighen more and more
For wit thou wele withouten wene
In suche astate ful ofte haue bene
That haue the iuel of loue assaide
Where through thou art so dismaide.

After a thought shal take the so
That thy loue is to ferre the fro
Thou shalt say (God) what may this be
That I ne may my Lady se?
Mine hert alone is to her go
And I abide al sole in wo
Departed fro mine owne thought
And with mine eyen se right nought
Alas mine eien sene I ne may
My carefull herte to conuay
Mine hertes guide, but thei be
I praise nothing what euer thei se
Shul thei abide than, nay
But gone and visiten without delay
That mine hert desireth so
For certainly, but if thei go
I foole my selfe I may well holde
Whan I ne se what mine hert wolde
Wherfore I wol gone her to sene
Or eased shall I neuer bene
But I haue some tokening
Than gost thou forth without dwelling
But ofte thou failest of thy desire
Er thou maist come her any nere
And wakest in vaine thy passage
Than falest thou in a newe rage
For want of sight, thou ginnest murne
And homwarde pensife thou dost returne
In great mischefe than shalt thou be
For than againe shal come to thee
Sighes and plaintes with newe wo
That no itching pricketh so
Who wote it nought, he maie go lere
Of hem that bien loue so dere
No thing thine hert appesen maie
That oft thou wolt gone and assaie
If thou maist sene by auenture
Thy liues foye, thine hertes cure
So that by grace, if thou might Attaine of her to haue a sight
Than shalt thou done none other dede
But with that sight thine eyen fede
That faire freshe whan thou maist se
Thine hert shal so rauished be
That neuer thou woldest thy thankes lete
Ne remoue, for to se that swete
The more thou seest in sothfastnesse
The more thou conitest of that swetnesse
The more thine herte brenneth in fire
The more thine herte is in desire
For who considereth euery dele
It may be likened wonder wele
The paine of loue vnto a fere
For euermore thou neighest nere
Thought, or who so that it be
For very sothe I tel it thee
The hotter euer shal thou brenne
Iserperience shall the kenne
Where so comest in any coste
Who is nert fire he brenneth moste
And yet forsothe for al thine hete
Though thou for loue swelte and swete
Ne for no thing thou felen may Thou shalt not willen to passe away
And though thou go, yet must the nede
Thinke al day on her faire hede Whom thou beheldest with so good will
And holde thy selfe begiled ill
That thou ne haddest none hardiment
To shewe her aught of thine entent
Thine hert ful sore thou wolt dispise
And eke repreue of cowardise
That thou so dull in euery thing
Were domme for drede, without speking
Thou shalt eke thinke thou diddest selfe

That thou were her so fast bie
And durst not auenture the to say
Some thing, er thou came away
For thou haddest no more wonne
To speke of her whan thou begonne
But yet she would for thy sake
In armes goodly the haue take It should haue be more worthe to the Than of tresour great plente
Thus shalt thou morne and eke complaine
And get enchelon to gon againe
Into thy walke, or to thy place
Where thou beheldе her fleshly face
And neuer for false suspection
Thou woldest finde occasion
For to gone vnto her house
So art thou than desirouse
A sight of her for to haue
If thou thine honour mightest saue
Or any crande mightest make Thider, for thy loues sake
Ful faine thou woldest, but for drede
Thou goest not, leest that men take hede
Wherfore I rede in thy going
And also in thine againe comming
Thou be wel ware that men ne wit
Feine the other cause than it
To go that waie, or fast bie
To beale wel is no folie
And if so be it happe the
That thou thy loue there maiste se
In liker wise thou her salewe
Wher with thy coloure woll transme we
And eke thy bloud shal al to quake
Thy lipwe eke chaungen for her sake
But worde and wit, with chere full pale
Shul want for to tell thy tale
And if thou maist so ferforth winne
That thou reason durst beginne
And woldest saine thre thinges or mo
Thou shalt ful scarfly saine the two Though thou bethinke the neuer so wele
Thou shalt forgete yet somdele.

But if thou deale with trechery
For false louers mowe all foly
Sain what hem lust withouten dred
Thei be so double in her falshed
For the, in hert can thinke o thing
And saine an other in her speking
And whan thy speche is ended all Right thus to the it shal befall
If any worde than come to minde
That thou to say hast left behinde
Than thou shalt brenne in great martire
For thou shalt brenne as any fire
This is the strife and eke the affraie
And the batell that lasteth aie
This bargaine ende may neuer take
But if that she thy peace wil make
And whan the night is comen anon
A thousande angres shal come vpon
To bed as fast thou wolte the dight
Where thou shalt haue but smal delight
For whan thou wenest for to slepe
So ful of paine shalt thou crepe
Sterte in thy bed about ful wide
And turne ful ofte on euery side
Now doun ward grosse, and now vpright
And walow in wo the long night
Thine armes shalt thou spreде a brede
As man in warre were forwerede
Than shal the come a remembraunce
Of her shape and her semblaunce
Wherto none other may be pere
And wete thou wel without were
That the shal se somtime that night
That thou hast her, that is so bright
Naked bitwene thine armes there
Al sothfastnesse as though it were Thou shalt make castels than in Spaine
And dreme of ioy, al but in vaine
And the deliten of right nought
While thou so slombrest in that thought
That is so swete and delitable
The whiche in sothe nis but a fable
For it ne shall no while last
Than shalt thou sighe and wepe fast
And say dere God, what thing is this My dreme is turned al amis
Whiche was ful swete and apparent
But now I wake it is al shent
Now yede this mery thought away
Twenty times vpon a day
I would this thought would come againe
For it alegeth wel my paine
It maketh me ful of ioyfull thought
It sleeth me that it lasteth nought
Ah lorde, why nil ye me socoure?
The ioye I trowe that I langoure
The deth I would me should slo
While I lie in her armes two Mine harme is harde withouten wene
My great vneasе ful ofte I mene.

But would Loue do so I might Haue fully ioye of her so bright
My paine were quitte me richely
Alas to great a thing aske I
It is but foly, and wrong wening

To aske so outragious a thing
And who so asketh folily
He mote be warned hastely
And I ne wote what I may say
I am so terre out of the way
For I would haue ful great liking
And ful great ioy of lasse thing
For would she of her gentilnesse
Withouten more, me ones kesse
It were to me a great guerdon
Relese of all my passion
But it is harde to come therto
Al is but foly that I do
So highe I haue mine herte sette
Where I may no comfort gette
I wote not where I say wel or nought
But this I wote well in my thought
That it were bette of her alone
For to stinte my wo and mone
I loke on her I cast goodly
That for to haue al vtterly
Of an other al hole the play
Thlord where I shal bide the day
That euer she shal my lady be
He is ful cured, that may her se
I God, whan shal the dauning springe
Coleggen thus is an angry thing
I haue no ioy thus here to lie
Whan that my loue is not me bie
I man to lien hath great disese
Which maie not slepe, ne rest in ese
I would it dawed, and were now day
And that the night were went away
For were it daye, I would vp rise
Thy flowe sonne, shewe thine enprise
Spede the to sprede thy beemes bright
And chace the derknesse of the night
Coput away the stoundes strong
Whiche in me lasten al to long
The night shalt thou continue so Without rest, in paine and wo
Neuer thou knew of loue distresse
Thou shal nowe lerne in that sickenesse
And thus enduring shalt thou lie
And rise on morow vp erly
Out of thy bed, and harneis the Er euer dawning thou maist se
Al priuely than shalt thou gone
What whider it be thy selfe alone
For reine, or haile, for snowe, for slete
Thider she dwelleth, that is so swete
The whiche maie fal a slepe be
And thinketh but litel vpon the Than shalt thou go, ful soule aferde
Loke if the gate be vnsperde
And waite without in who and paine
Ful iuel a colde in winde and raine
Than shalt thou go the dore before
If thou maiste finde any shore
Or hole, or reste, what euer it were Than shalt thou stoupe, and lay to eere
If thei within a slepe be
I mene al saue thy lady free
Whom waking if thou maist aspie
Go put thy selfe in iupardie
To aske grace, and the bimene
That she maie wete without wene
That thou night no rest hast had So sore for her thou were bestad
Women wel ought pite to take
Of hem that sorowen for her sake
And lohe for loue of that relike
That thou thinke none other like
For whan thou hast so great anney
Shall kisse the er thou go awey
And hold that in ful great deinte
And for that no man shall the se
Before the house, ne in the way
Loke thou begon againe er day
Suche comming, and suche going Suche heuinesse, and suche walking
Maketh louers withouten any wene
Under her clothes pale and lene
For Loue leueth colour ne cleernesse
Who loueth trewe hath no fatnesse
Thou shalt wel by thy selfe se
That thou must nedes assaied be
For men that shape hem other way
Falsely her ladies for to betray
It is no wonder though thei be fatte
With false othes her loues thei gatte
For vtte I se suche losengeours Fatter than Abbottes or Priours.
yet with o thing I the charge
That is to say, that thou be large
Vnto the maide, that her doth serue
So best her thanke thou shalte deserue
Yeue her giftes, and get her grace
For so thou may thanke purchace
That she the worthy holde and fre
Thy lady, and al that may the se
Also her seruauntes worship aie
And please as muche as thou maie
Great good through hem may come to the Bicause with her thei ben priue
Thei shal her tel how thei the fande
Curteis and wise, and wel doande
And she shal preise wel the more
Loke out of londe thou be not fore
And if suche cause thou haue, that the Behoueth to gone out of countre

Leaue hole thine hert in hostage
Til thou againe make thy passage
Thinke long to se the swete thing
That hath thine hert in her keping
Now haue I tolde thee, in what wise
A louer shal do me seruice
Do it than, if thou wolt haue
The mede, that thou after craue.

When Loue al this had boden me
I said him, sir how may it be
That louers may in suche manere
Endure the paine ye haue said here
I maruaile me wonder sadde
How any man may liue or sadde
In suche paine, and suche brenning
In sorow and thought, and suche sighing
Ie vnreleced wo to make Whether so it be thei slepe or wake
In suche anoy continuelly
As helpe me God this meruaile I
How man, but he were made of stele
Might liue a monthe, such paines to fele.

The God of Loue than said me
Frende, by the faith I owe to the May no man haue good, but he it die
A man loueth more tenderlie
The thing, that he hath bought most dere
For wete thou well without were
In thanke that thing is taken more
For which a man hath suffred sore
Certes no wo ne may attaine
Vnto the sore of loues paine
None euil therto ne may amounte
No more than a man counte
The droppes that of the water be
For drie as wel the great see
Thou mightest, as the harmes tell
Of hem that with Loue dwell
In seruice, for peine hem sleeth
And that eche would fle the deeth
And trowe thei should neuer escape
Nere that hope couth hem make Glad as man in prison sete
And maie not getten for to ete
But Barlie bread, and water pure
And lieth in vermin and in ordure
With al this yet canne he liue
Good hope suche comfort hath him yeue Whiche maketh wene that he shal be Deliuered and come to liberte
In fortune is full trust
Though he lie in strawe or dust
In hope is al his sustaining
And so for louers in her wening
Whiche Loue hath shitte in his prisoun
Good hope, is her saluacioun
Good hope (how sore that thei smerte)
Yeueth hem bothe will and herte
To prolet her body to martire
For Hope so sore doth hem desire
To suffre eche harme that men deuise
For ioye that afterwarde shall arise.

Hope in desire catche victory
In hope of Loue is al the glory
For hope is all that Loue maie yeue
Nere hope, there should no lenger liue
Blessed be hope, whiche with desire
Auaunceth louers in suche manire
Good hope is curteise for to please
To kepe Louers from all disease
Hope kepeth his londe, and woll abide
For any peril that maie betide
For hope to louers, as most chiefe
Doth hem endure all mischefe Hope is her helpe whan mister is
And I shal yeue thee eke iwis
Three other thinges, that great solace
Doth to hem that be in my lace
The first good that maie be founde
To hem that in my lace be bounde
Is Swete thought, for to recorde
Thing wherwith thou canst accorde
Best in thine herte, where he be Thinking in absence is good to the Whan any louer doth complaine
And liueth in distresse, and in paine
Than Swete thought shal come as blithe
Awaie his angre for to driue
It maketh louers to haue remembraunce
Of comforte, and of highe pleasaunce
That Hope hath hight him for to winne
For thought anone than shal beginne
As feere God wot, as he can finde
To make a mirrour of his minde
For to beholde he wol not let Her person he shal afore him set
Her laughing eyen persaunt and clere
Her shape, her forme, her goodly chere
Her mouthe, that is so gracious
So swete, and eke so sauerous
Of al her feiters he shal take hede
His eyen with al her limmes fede.
Thus Swete thinking shall aswage
The paine of louers, and her rage
Thy ioye shal double without gesse
Whan thou thinkest on her semelinesse

Or of her laughing, or of her chere
That to the made thy lady dere
This comforte wol I that thou take
And if the nerte thou wolte forsake
Which is not lesse sauerous
Thou shouldest not ben to daungerous

The second shal be swete speche
That hath to many one be leche
To bring hem out of wo and were
And helpe many a bachelere
And many a lady sent socour
That haue loued paramour
Through speking, whan thei might here
Of her louers to hem so dere
To me it voideth al her smerte
The whiche is closed in her herte
In hert it maketh hem glad and light
Speche whan thei mowe haue sight
And therfore nowe it cometh to minde
In olde dawes as I finde
That Clerkes written that her knewe
There was a lady freshe of hewe
Whiche of her loue made a song
On him for to remembre among
In which she said, whan that I here
Speken of him that is so dere
To me it voideth al smerte
I wis he sitteth so nere mine herte
To speke of him at eue or morowe
It cureth me of al my sorowe
To me is none so highe plesaunce
As of his person daliaunce
She wist ful wel that swete speking
Comforteth in ful moche thing
Her loue she had full well assaide
Of him she was ful wel apaide
To speke of him her ioye was set
Therefore I rede the that thou get
A felowe that can wel councele
And kepe thy counsaile, and welhele
To whom go shewe holly thine herte
Both wel and wo, ioye and smerte
To get comforte to him thou go
And priuely bitwene you two Ye shal speke of that goodly thing
That hath thine hert in her keping
Of her beaute and her semblaunce
And of her goodly countenaunce
Of al thy state, thou shalt him saie
And alke him counsaile howe thou maie
Do any thing that maie her plese
For it to the shal do great ese
That he maie wete thou trust him so
Both of thy wele and of thy wo
And if his hert to loue be sette
His companie is moche the bette
For reson wol he shewe to the Al vtterly his priuite
And what she is he loueth so
To the plainly he shal vndo
Without drede of any shame
Both tel her renome and her name
Than shall he forther ferre and nere
And namely to thy lady dere
In liker wise, ye euery other
Shal helpen as his owne brother
In trouthe without doublenesse
And kepen close in sikernesse
For it is noble thing in fay
To haue a man thou darste say
Thy preuy counsaile euery dele
For that woll comforte the right wele
And thou shalt holde the wel apaied
Whan suche a frende thou hast assaied.

The third good of greas comfort
That peueth to louers most disport
Cometh of sight and beholding
That cleped is Swete loking
The whiche may none ese do
Whan thou art ferre thy lady fro Wherfore thou prese alway to be
In place, where thou maist her se
For it is thing moste amerous
Moste delitable and sauerous
For to asswage a mannes sorow
To sene his lady by the morow
For it is a ful noble thing
Whan thine eyen haue meting
With that relike precious
Whereof thei be so delirous
But al date after sothe it is Thei haue no drede to saren a mis
Thei dreden neither winde ne raine
Ne non other maner paine
For whan thine eyen were thus in blisse
Yet of her curtesie i wisse
Alone thei can not haue her ioye
But to the herte thei conuoye
Parte of her blisse to him thou sende
Of al this harme to make an ende
The eye is a good messangere
Which can to the hert in suche maners
Tidinges sende, that hath sene
To voide him of his paines clene
Wherof the hert reioyseth so
That a great partie of his wo
Is voided, and put away to slight
Right as the derkenesse of the night

Is chased with clerenesse of the moone
Right so is al his wo ful soone
Deuoided clene, whan that the sight
Beholden may that freshe wight
That the hert desireth so
That al his derkenesse is ago
For than the herte is all at ese
When thei sene that maie hem plese
Now haue I declared the al out
Of that thou were in drede and doute
For I haue tolde the faithfully
What the may curen vtterly
And al Louers that wol be Faithful, and ful of stabilite
Good hope alway kepe by thy side
And swete thought make ehe abide Swete Loking and swete Speche
Of al thine harmes thei shalbe leche
Of euery thou shalt haue great plesaunce
Yf thou canst bide in sufferaunce
And serue well without fantise
Thou shalt be quite of thine empryse
With more guerdoun, if that thou liue
But al this time this I the yeue.

The God of Loue whan al the day
Had taught me, as ye haue herd say
And enformed compendously
He vanished away al sodainly
And I alone lefte al soole
So full of complaint and of doole
For I sawe no man there me by My woundes me greued wonderly
Me for to curen nothing I knewe
Saue the bothum bright of hewe
Wheron was sette holly my thought
Of other comforte knewe I nought
But it were through the God of Loue
I knew nat ele to my behoue
That might me ease or comfort gette
But if he would him enterniette
The Roser was withouten dout Closed with an hedge without
As ye to forne haue herde me saine
And fast I beried and would faine
Haue passed the hay, if I might Haue getten in by any sleight
Unto the bothum so faire to se
But euer I dradde blamed to be Yf men would haue suspection
That I would of entencion
Haue stole the Roses that there were Therfore to enter I was in fere
But at the laste, as I bethought
Whether I should passe or nought

I sawe come with a gladde chere
To me, a lusty Bachelere
Of good stature and of good height
And Bialacoil forsoth he height
Sonne he was to Curtesie
And he me graunted ful gladlie
The passage of the vtter hay
And said, sir: how that ye may Passe, if your will be
The freshe Roser for to se
And ye the swete sauour sele
Your warrans may right wele
So thou the kepe fro folie
Shal no man do the vilanie
Yf I maie helpe you in ought
I shall not faine, dredeth nought
For I am bounde to your seruice
Fully deuoide of feintise
Than vnto Bialacoil saide I
I thanke you sir ful hertely
And your behest take at gre
That ye so goodly profer me
To you it cometh of great fraunchise
That ye me profer your seruise
Than after ful deliuerly
Through the breres anone went I
Wherof encombred was the haie
I was well plesed, the sothe to saie
To se the bothum, faire and swote
So freshe spring out of the rote.

And Bialacoil me serued wele
Whan I so nigh me might sele
Of the bothum the swete odoure
And so lusty hewed of coloure
But than a chorle foule him betide
Beside the Roses gan him hide
To kepe the Roses of that Rosere
Of whom the name was Daungere
This chorle was hid there in the greues
Couered with gralle and with leues
To spie and take whom that he fonde
Unto that Roser put an honde
He was not soole, for there was mo
For with him were other two
Of wicked maners, and euil fame
That one was cleped by his name
Wicked tonge, God yeue him sorowe
For neither at eue ne at morowe
He can of no man good speke
On many a iuste man doth he wreke
There was a woman that ehe hight
Shame, that who can reken right
Trespace was her fathers name
Her mother Reson, and thus was shame

Brought

Brought of these ille two
And yet had trespace neuer adoe
With Reason, ne neuer lete her by
He was hidous and so vgly
I meane this, that Trespace night
But Reason conceiueth of a sight
Shame of that I speake afore
And whan that Shame was thus borne
It was ordained, that Chastite
Should of the Roser Lady be Whiche of the bothums more and las With sondrie folke assailed was
That she ne wiste what to doe
For Uenus her assaileth so
That night and daie fro her she stall
Bothoms and Roses our all
To Reason than praieth Chastite
Whom Uenus hath semed ouer the see
That she her doughter would her lene
To kepe the Roser freshe and grene
Anon Reason to Chastite
Is fully assented, that it be
And graunted her, at her requeste
That Shame, because she is honeste Shall keper of the Roser be
And thus to kepe it, there were thre
That none should hardie be ne bolde
(Were he yong or were he olde)
Again her will awaie to bere Bothoms ne Roses, that there were
I had well sped, had I nat been Awaited with these thre and seen
For Bialacoil, that was so faire
So gracious and debonaire
Quitte him to me full curtesly
And me to please badde that I Should drawe to the bothom nere
Prese in to touche the Rosere
Whiche bare the Roses, he yafe me leue
This graunt ne might but littell greue
And for he sawe it liked me Right nigh the bothom pulled he Leafe all grene, and yaue me that
The whiche full nigh the bothom sat
I made of that leafe full queint
And whan I felt I was aqueinte
With Bialacoil and so priue
I wende all my will had be
That wert I hardie for to tell
To Bialacoil how me befell
Of Loue, that toke and wounded me
And saied, sir so mote I thee
I maie no ioie haue in nowise
Upon no side, but it arise
For sithe (if I shall not faine)
In harte I haue had so greate paine
So greate anoie and soche affraie
That I ne wotte what I shall saie
I drede your wrothe to deserue
Leuer me were, that kniues kerue
My bodie should in peces small
Than in any wise it should fall
That ye wrothed should been with me
Saie boldely thy will (q he)
I nill be wrothe if that I maie
For nought that thou shalt to me saie.

Than saied I sir, not you displease
To knowen of my greate vnease
In whiche onely Loue hath me brought
For paines greate, disease and thought
Fro daie to daie it doeth me drie
Supposeth not sir, that I lie
In me fiue woundes did he make
The sore of whiche shall neuer slake
But ye the bothom graunt me
Whiche is moste pasaunt of beaute
My life, my death, and my martyre
And treasour that I moste desire Than Bialacoil affraied all
Saied sir, it maie not fall
That ye desire it maie not arise
What would ye shende me in this wise?
A mokell foole than I were
If I suffred you awaie to bere
The freshe bothom, so faire of sight
For it were neither skill ne right
Of the Roser ye broke the rinde
Or take the Rose afore his kinde
Ye are not curteis to aske it
Let it still on the Roser sit
And let it growe till it amended be
And perfectly come to beaute
I nolde not that it pulled were Fro the Roser that it bere
To me it is so lefe and dere
With that anon sterte out Daungere
Out of the place where he was hidde
His malice in his chere was kidde
Full greate he was and Blacke of hewe
Sturdie and hidous, who so him knewe
Like sharpe brehons his heere was growe
His yes red sparcling as the fire glowe
His nose frounced full kirked stoode
He come criande as he were woode
And saied, Bialacoil tell me why
Thou bringest hider so boldely
Him that so nigh the Rosere
Thou worchest in a wrong manere
He thinketh to dishonour thee

Thou art well worthy to haue maugre
To let him of the Rosere witte
Who serueth a Fellone is euill quitte
Thou wouldest haue doen greate bounte
And he with shame would quite thee
Flie hens selowe, I rede thee go
It wanteth little he woll thee slo
For Bialacoil ne knewe thee nought
Whan thee to serue he set his thought
For thou wolt shame him if thou might Bothe again reason and right
I woll no more in thee affie
That comest so slightly for tespie
For it proueth wonder wele
Thy sleight and treason euery dele
I durst no more make there abode
For the chorle, he was so wode
So gan he thrette and manace
And through the haie he did me chace
For feare of him I trembled and quoke
So chorliche his hedde he shoke
And saied, if eft he might me take
I should nat from his hondes scape
Than Bialacoil is fled and mate
And I all soole and disconsolate was left alone in pain and thought Fro shame to death I was nigh brought Than thought on my high folie
How that my bodie vtterlie was yeue to pain and to martire
And thereto had I so greate ire
That I ne durst the haies passe
There was no hope, there was no grace
I trowe neuer man wiste of pain
But he were laced in Loues chain
Ne no man, and soth it is
But if he loue, what anger is Loue holdeth his heste to me right wele
Whan pain (he saied) I should fele.
No harte maie thinke, no tong sain
A quarter of my wo and pain
I might not with the anger last Mine harte in poinct was for to brast Whan I thought on the Rose, that so was through Daunger cast me fro
A long while stode I in that state
Till that me sawe so madde and mate
The Ladie of the high ward
Whiche from her toure loked thiderward.

Reason men clepe that Lady
Whiche from her toure deliuerly
Come doune to me without more
But she was neither yong ne hore
Ne high ne lowe, ne fatte ne lene
But bell, as it were in a meane
Her iyen two were clere and light
As any candell, that brenneth bright
And on her hedde she had a croune
Her semed well an high persone
For rounde enuiron her crounet was full of riche stones fret
Her goodlie semblaunt by deuise
I trowe was made in Paradise
For nature had neuer soche a grace
To forge a werke of soche compace
For certain, but if the letter lie
God himself, that is so hie
Made her after his image
And yafe her sithe soche auauntage
That she hath might and seignorie
To kepe men from all folie
Who so woll trowe her lore
Ne maie offenden neuermore.

And whyle I stode this derke and pale
Reason began to me her tale
She saied, alhaile my swete frende
Folie and childhod woll thee shende
Whiche thee haue put in greate affraie
Thou hast bought dere time of Maie
That made thine harte merie to be In euill time thou wentest to se
The gardin, whereof Idelnesse
Bare the keie and was maistresse
Whan thou yedest in the daunce
With her and had acquaintaunce
Her acquaintaunce is perillous
First soft, and after noious
She hath trashed without wene
The God of Loue had thee nat sene
Ne had Idelnesse thee conueide
In the verge, where Mirthe him pleide
If Folie haue supprised thee.
Doe so that it recouered be
And be well ware to take no more
Counsaile, that greueth after sore
He is wise, that woll himself chastise
And though a yong man in any wise
Trespasse emong, and doe Folie
Let him nat tary, but hastelie
Let him amende what so be mis
And ete I counsaile thee iwis
The God of Loue holly forgete
That hath thee in soche pain sete
And thee in harte tourmented so
I can not seen how thou maiest go
Other waies to garisoun
For daunger, that is so seloun
Fellie purposeth thee to werreie

Whiche is full cruell the sothe to seie.
And yet of Daunger cometh no blame
In reward of my doughter shame
Whiche hath the Roses in her warde
Is she that maie be no musarde
And wicked tong is with these two
That suffreth no man thider go
For er a thing be doe he shall Where that he cometh ouer all
In fourtie places, if it be sought
Saie thing that neuer was don ne wrought
So moche traison is in his male
Of falsenesse for to faine a tale
Thou dealest with angrie folke i wis
Wherefore to the better is
From these folke awaie to fare
For thei woll make thee litle in care
This is the euill that loue thei call Wherein there is but folie all
For loue is folie euery dell
Who loueth, in no wise maie doe well
He set his thought on no good werke
His schole he leseth, if he be a clerke
Or other craft ele, if that he be He shall not thriue therein, for he
In loue shall haue more passioun
Than Monke, Hermite, or Chanoun
This paine is heard out of measure
The iole maie eke no while endure
And in the possession
Is moche tribulacion
The iole it is so short lasting
And but in hape is the getting
For I se there many in trauaile
That at last foule faile
I was nothing thy counsailer
When thou were made the homager
Of God of Loue to hastely
Where was no wisedome but Folie
Thine harte was iolie, but not sage
When thou were brought in soche a rage
To yelde thee so redely
And to Loue of his greate maistrie

I Rede thee Loue awaie to driue
That maketh that reche not of thy liue
The folie more fro daie to daie
Shall growe, but thou it put awaie
Take with thy tethe the bridell faste
To daunt thy harte, and eke the caste
If that thou maiest to get the defence
For to redresse thy first offence
Who so his harte alwaie woll leue
Shall finde emong that shall him greue
When I her heard thus me chastice
I answerde in full angrie wise
I praied her cesse of her speache
Either to chastice me or teache
To bidde me my thought refrein
Whiche Loue hath caught in his demein
What wene ye Loue woll consent
(That me assaieth with bowe bent)
To drawe mine harte out of his honde
Whiche is so quickly in his bonde
That ye counsaile maie neuer be
For when he first arested me
He toke mine harte so sore him till
That it is nothing at my will
He thought it so him for to obeie
That he it sparred with a keie
I praie you let me be all still For ye maie well, if that ye will Your wordes waste in idelnesse
For verely, withouten gesse
All that ye saine is but in vain
Me were leuer die in the pain
Than Loue to me ward should arette
Falshede or treason on me sette
I woll me get pris or blame
And Loue true to saue my name
Who that me chastiseth, I him hate
With that worde Reason went her gate
When she sawe for no sermoning
She might me fro my folie bring Than dismaied I left all soole
For were, for wandred as a foole
For I ne knewe no cherisaunce
Than fell into my remembraunce
How Loue badde me to purueie
A felowe, to whom I might seie
My counsaile and my priuite
For that should moche auaile me
With that bethought I me, that I Had a felowe fast by True and siker, curteis, and hende
And he called was by name a frende
A truer felowe was no where none
In hast to him I went anone
And to him all my wo I told Fro him right nought I would withold
I tolde him all without were
And made my compleint on Daungere
How for to seie he was hidous
And to me ward contrarious
The whiche through his cruelte
Was in poinct to haue meimed me
With Bialacoil when he me seie
Within the gardin walke and pleie
Fro me he made him for to go
And I be left alone in wo

I durſt no lenger with him ſpeake
For Daunger ſaied he would be wreake Whan that he ſawe how I went
The freſhe bothom for to hent
If I were hardie to come nere
Bitwene the haie and the Roſere.

This frende whan he wiſt of my thought
He diſcomforted me right nought
But ſaied felowe, be nat ſo madde
Ne ſo abaſhed nor beſtadde
My ſelf I knowe full well Daungere
And how he is fiers of chere
At prime temps, Loue to manace
Full oft I haue been in his caſe
A felon firſt though that he be After thou ſhalt him couple ſe
Of long paſſed I knewe him wele
Ungoodlie firſt though men him fele
He woll meke after in his bearing Been, for ſeruice and obeiſſing
I ſhall thee tell what thou ſhalt doe Mekely I rede thou go him to
Of harte praie him ſpecially
Of thy treſpace to haue mercie
And hote him well here to pleaſe
That thou ſhalt neuer more him diſpleaſe
Who can beſt ſerue of flatery
Shall pleaſe Daunder moſte vtterly.

My frende hath ſaied to me ſo weale
That he me eaſed hath ſomedeale
And eke allegged of my tourment
For through him had I hardement
Again to daunger for to go
To priue if I might meke him ſo.

TO Daunger came I all aſhamed
The whiche afore me had blamed
Deſiring for to peaſe my wo
But ouer hedge durſt I nat go
For he forbode me the paſſage
I founde him cruell in his rage
And in his honde a greate bourdoun
To him I kneled lowe adoun
Full meke of port, and ſimple of chere
And ſaied ſir, I am comen here
Onely to aſke of you mercie
That greueth me full greatly
That euer my life I wrathed you
But for to amende I am come now
With all my might, bothe loude and ſtill
To doen right at your owne will
For Loue made me for to do
That I haue treſpaſſed hiderto
Fro whom I ne maie withdrawe mine han
Yet ſhall I neuer for ioie ne ſmart
(what ſo befall good or ill) Offende more again your will Leuer I haue endure diſeaſe
Than doe that ſhould you diſpleaſe.

IF you require, and praie that ye
Of me haue mercie and pite,
To ſtint your ire that greueth ſo
That I woll ſweare for euermo
To be redreſſed at your liking
If I treſpace in any thing
Saue that (I praie thee) graunt me
A thing, that maie nat warned be
That I maie loue all onely
None other thing of you aſke I
I ſhall doen all i wis
If of your grace ye graunt me this
And ye maie nat letten me
For well wote ye that loue is fre
And I ſhall louen ſoche that I will Who euer like it well or ill
And yet ne would I for all Fraunce
Doe thing to doe you diſpleaſaunce.

Than Daunger fill in his entent
For to forbeue his male talent
But all his wrathe yet at laſt
He hath releaſed, I praied ſo faſt
Shortly (he ſaied) thy requeſt
Is nat to mokell diſhoneſt
Ne I woll nat werne it thee
For yet nothing engreueth me
For though thou loue thus euer mo
To me is neither ſolte ne ſore
Loue where that thee liſt, what retcheth
So ferre fro my Roſes be Truſt not on me for none aſſaie
In any time to paſſe the haie.
Thus hath he graunted my praier
Than went I forthe withouten were Unto my frende, and told him all
Whiche was right ioifull of my tale
(He ſaied) now goeth well thine affaire
He ſhall to thee be debonaire
Though he afore was diſpitous
He ſhall hereafter be gracious
If he were touched on ſome good vein
He ſhould yet rewen on thy pein
Suffer I rede, and no boſte make Till thou at good mes maieſt him take
By ſuffraunce, and wordes ſoft
A man maie ouercome oft
Him, that afore he had in drede

In dokes sothly as I rede
Thus hath my frende with greate comfort
Inaunced me with high disport
Whiche would me good as moche as I
And than anon full sodainly
I toke my leaue, and streight I went Into the haie for greate talent
I had to seen the freshe bothom
Wherein laie my saluacion
And Daunger toke kepe, if that I
Kepe him couenaunt truely
So sore I drede his manacing
I durst not breake his bidding
For leaft that I were of him shent
I brake not his commaundement
For to purchase his good will
It was for to come there till
His mercie was to ferre behinde
I kept, for I ne might it kinde
I complained and sighed sore
And languished euermore
For I durst nat ouergo
Into the Rose I loued so
Throughout my deming vtterly
That he had knowlege certainly Than Loue me ladde in soche wise
That in me there was no feintise
Falshedde, ne no trecherie
And yet he full of villanie
Of disdaine, and cruelte
On me ne would haue pite
His cruell will for to refrain
Tho I wept alwaie, and me complain.
And while I was in this turment
Were come of grace, by God sent Fraunchise, and with her Pite
Fulfilde the bothom of bounte
Thei go to Daunger anon right
To lerther me with all her might
And helpe in worde and in deede
For well thei saw we that it was nede
First of her grace dame Fraunchise
Hath taken of this empryse
She saied, Daunger greate wrong ye doe
To worche this man so moche woe
Or pinen him so angerlie
It is to you greate villanie
I can not se, why ne how
That he hath trespassed again you Saue that he loueth, wherefore ye should
The more in charite of him hold
The force of loue maketh him doe this
Who would him blame he did amis
He leueth more than he maie doe
His pain is harde, ye maie se so
And Loue in no wise would consent
That ye haue power to repent
For though that quiche ye would him slo
Fro Loue his harte maie nat go
Now swete sir, it is your ease
Him for to anger or displease
Alas, what maie it you auaunce
To doen to him so greate greuaunce Ne what worship is it again him take Or on your man a werre make Sithe he so lowlie euery wise
Is redy, as ye lufte deuise
If Loue haue caught him in his lace
You for to beie in euery caas
And been your subiect at your will Should ye therfore willen him ill
Ye should him spare more all out
Than him that is both proude and stout
Curtelie would that ye succoure
Hem, that been mekе vnder your cure
His harte is hard that will not meke
When men of mekenelle him beseke

This is certain, saied Pite
We se oft that Humilite
Bothe ire, and also felonie
Disquieth, and also melancolie
To stonde for the in soche durelle
This cruelte and wickednelle
Wherefore I praie you sir Daungere
For to maintein no lenger here
Soche cruell werre again your man
Is holly yours as euer he can Nor that ye worchen no more wo
Vpon this caitife, that languisheth so
Whiche will no more to you trespace
But put him holly in your grace
His offence ne was but lite
The God of loue it was to wite
That he your thrall so greatly is
And if ye harme him ye doen amis
For he hath had full hard penaunce
Sith that ye rekt him thaquaintaunce
Of Bialacoil, his mocke ioie
Whiche all his paines might acoie
He was before anoied sore
But than ye doubled him well more
For he of blisse hath been full bare Sith Bialacoil was fro him fare
Loue hath to him greate distresse
He hath no nede of more duresse
Voided from him your ire I rede
Ye maie not winnen in this dede
Maketh Bialacoil repaire again
And haueth pite vpon his pain

For

For Fraunchise woll, and I pite
That mercifull to him ye be
And sithe that she and I accorde
Haue vpon him misericorde
For I you praie, and eke monelle
Nought to refusen our requelle
For he is hard, and lell of thought
That for vs two woll doe right nought
Daunger ne might no more endure
He meked him vnto measure.

I woll in no wise, saieth Daungere
Denie, that ye haue asked here
It were to greate vncurtesie
I woll ye haue the companie
Of Bialacoil, as ye deuise
I woll him let in no wise
To Bialacoil than went in hie
Fraunchise, and saied full curteslie
Ye haue to long be deignous vnto this louer, and daungerous
For him to withdraw we your presence
Whiche hath doe to him greate offence
That ye not would vpon him se
Wherfore a sorowfull man is he Shape ye to paie him, and to please
Of my loue if ye woll haue ease
Fulfill his will, sith that ye knowe
Daunger is daunted and brought lowe
Through helpe of me and of Pite
You dare no more aferde be
I shall doe right as ye will Saieth Bialacoil, for it is skill
Sith daunger woll that it so be Than Fraunchise hath him sent to me

Bialacoil at the beginning
Saluted me in his comming
No straungenesse was in him seen
No more than he ne had wrathed been
As faire semblaunt than shewed he me
And goodly, as arome did he
And by the honde without doube within the haie right all about
He lad me with right good chere
All enuiron the vergere
That daungere had me chased fro
Now haue I leaue ouer all to go
Now am I raised at my deuise
Fro hell vnto Paradise
Thus Bialacoil of gentilnesse
With all his pain and businesse
Hath shewed me onely of grace
The esters of the swote place
I sawe the Rose whan I was nigh
Was greater woxen, and more high
Freshe, roddy, and faire of hewe
Of colour euer iliche newe
And whan I had it long seen
I sawe that through the leues grene
The Rose spred to spannishing
To seen it was a goodly thing
But it ne was so spredde on brede
That men within might knowe the sede
For it couert was and close
Bothe with the leaues and with the Rose
The stalke was euen and grene vpright
It was theron a goodly sight
And well the better without wene
For the seede was not seen
Full faire it spradd the God of blesse
For soche an other, as I gesse
Arome ne was ne more vermaile
I was abawed for marueile
For euer the fairer that it was
The more I am bounden in loues laas
Long I abode there sothe to saie
Till Bialacoil I gan to praie
Whan that I sawe him in no wise
To me warnen his seruice
That he me would graunt a thing
Whiche to remember is well sitting
This is to saine, that of his grace
He would me yeue leisar and space
To me that was so desirous
To haue a killing precious
Of the goodly freshe Rose
That so swetely smelleth in my nose
For if it you displeased nought
I woll gladly, as I haue sought
Haue a kisse thereof frely
Of your fete, for certainly
I woll none haue, but by your leue
So lothe me were you for to greue.

He saied, frende so God me spede
Of Chastite I haue soche drede
Thou shouldest not warned be for me
But I dare not for Chastite
Ageinst her dare I not misdoe
For alwaie biddeth she me so
To yeue no louer leaue to kisse
For who thereto maie winnen i wisse
He of the surplus of the praie
Wy life in hope to get some daie
For who so kissing maie attain
Of Loues pain hath (soth to sain)
The best and moste auenaunt
And earnest of the remenaunt.

Of his answere I sighed sore
I durst assaie him tho no more
I had suche drede to greue him aie
I man should not to muche assaie
To chase his frende out of measure
Or put his life in auenture
For no man at the first stroke
He may not fel doune an oke
Nor of the rellins haue the wine
Till grapes be ripe and wel a fine
Before empressed, I you ensure
And drawen out of the pressure
But I forpeined wonder strong
Though that I abode right long
And after the kisse, in paine and wo
With I to kisse desired so
Till that renning on my distresse
There come Venus the goddesse
(whiche aie werrieth Chastite)
Came of her grace to socour me
Whose might is know ferre and wide
For she is mother of Cupide.

The God of Loue, blinde as stone
That helpeth louers many one
This lady brought in her right honde
Of brenning fire a blasing brond
Wherof the flame and hote fire
Hath many a Lady in desire
Of Loue brought, and sore hette
And in her seruice her hert is sette
This Lady was of good entaile
Right wonderful of apparaile
By her atire so bright and shene
Men might perceiue well and sene
She was not of Religioun
For I nil make mencioun
Nor of robe, nor of tresour
Of broche, neither of her riche attour
Ne of her girdel about her side
For that I nil not long abide But knoweth well, that certainly
She was arraied richely
Deuoide of pride certaine she was
To Bialacoil she went a paas
And to him shortely in a clause
She said, sir: what is the cause
Ye ben of porte so daungerous
Unto this louer, and dainous
To graunt him nothing but a kisse
To warne it him ye done amisse Sithe well ye wot, how that he Is Loues seruaunt, as ye may se
And hath beauee, wher through is Worthy of Loue to haue the blis
How he is semely beholde and se
How he is faire, how he is free
How he is swote, and debonaire
Of age yonge, lusty, and faire
There is no Lady so hautaine
Duchesse, Countesse, ne Chastelaine
That I nolde holde her vngoodly
For to refuse him vtterly
His brethe is also good and swete
And eke his lippes roddy and mete
Onely to plaine, and to kisse
Graunt him a kisse of gentilnisse
His teth arne also white and clene
Me thinketh wrong withouten wene
If ye now warne him, trusteth me
To graunt that a kisse haue he
The lasse ye helpe him that ye haste
And the more time shul ye waste
Whan the flame of the very brond
That Venus brought in her right honde
Had Bialacoil with his hete smete
Anone he bad me withouten lete
Graunt to me the Rose kisse
Than of my paine I ganne to lisse
And to the Rose anon went I
And kissed it ful faithfully
There nede no man aske, if I was blith
Whan the sauour softe and lith
Stroke to mine hert without more
And me allegged of my sore
So was I ful of ioye and blisse
It is faire suche a floure to kisse
It was so swote and sauerous
I might not be so anguishous
That I mote glad and ioly be Whan that I remembre me
Yet euer among sothly to saine
I suffre note and muche paine.

The see may neuer be so still
That with a litell winde at will Ouer whelme and tourne also
As it were woode in wawes go
After the caime the trouble soone
Mote folow, and chaunge as the moone
Right so fareth Loue, that selde in one
Holdeth his ancre, for right anone
Whan thei in ease wene best to liue
They ben with tempest all forriue
Who serueth Loue, can tel of wo
The stoundmele ioye mote ouergo
How he hurteth, and now he cureth
For selde in o point Loue endureth.

Now is it right me to procede.

How Shame gan medle and take hede
Through whom fel angers I haue hade
And how the strong wall was made
And the Castell of brede and length
That God of Loue wan with his strength Al this in Romance will I set
And for no thing ne will I let
So that it liking to her be
That is the floure of beaute
For she may best my labour quite
That I for her Loue shal endite
Wicked tonge that the coutne
Of euery Louer can deuine
Worste, and addeth more somdele
(For wicked tonge saith neuer wele)
To me warde bare he right great hate
Espying me erly and late
Til he hath sene the great chere
Of Bialacoil and me ifere
He might not his tonge withstonde
Worse to reporte than he fonde
He was so ful of cursed rage
It sat him wele of his linage
For him an Irisshe woman bare
His tonge was filed sharpe and square
Poignaunt and right beruing
And wonder bitter in speking
For whan that he me gan espie
He swore (affirming sikerly)
Betwene Bialacoil and me
Was euill aquaintaunce and priue
He spake therof so folilie
That he awaked Jelousie
Whiche all afraied in his rising
Whan that he herde iangling
He ran anon as he were wode
To Bialacoil there that he stode
Whiche had leuer in this caas
Haue ben at Reines or Amias
For lote hott in his felonie
To him thus said Jelousie
Why hast thou ben so negligent
To kepen, whan I was absent
This berger here lefte in thy warde
To me thou haddest no regarde
To trust (to thy confusion)
Him thus, to whom suspection
I haue right great, for it is nede
It is well shewed by the dede
Great faute in the nowe haue I founde
By God anon thou shalt be bounde
And faste locken in a Toure
Without refuite or socoure.

For shame to long hath be the fro
Ouer soone she was ago
Whan thou hast lost bothe drede & fere
It semed well she was not here
She was besy in no wise
To kepe the and chastice
And for to helpen Chastite
To kepe the Roser, as thinketh me
For than this boie knaue so boldly
Ne should nat haue be hardy
In this verge had suche game
Whiche now me tourneth to great shame

Bialacoil nist what to saie
Ful faine he would haue fled awaie
For feare haue hid, nere that he
All sodainly toke him with me
And whan I sawe he had so
This Jelousie take vs two
I was astoned, and knewe no rede
But fledde away for very drede.

Than Shame came forth ful simply
She wende haue trespaced ful greatly
Humble of her porte, and made it simple Wearing a vaile in stede of wimple
As Nonnes done in her Abbey
Bicause her hert was in affray
She gan to speke within a throwe
To Jelousie, right wonder lowe
First of his grace she besought
And said sir, ne leueth nought
Wicked tonge, that false espie
Which is so glad to faine and lie
He hath you made, through flatering
On Bialacoil a false leasing
His falsnesse is not now a newe
It is to longe that he him knewe
This is not the first daie
For wicked tonge hath custome aie
Yonge folkes to bewrie
And false lesinges on hem lie.

yet neuertheles I se among
That the loigne it is so long
Of Bialacoil, hertes to lure
In Loues seruice for to endure
Drawing suche folke him to
That he hath nothing with to do
But in sothnesse I trowe nought
That Bialacoil had euer in thought
To do trespace or vilanie
But for his mother Curtesie Hath thaught him euer to be Good of aquetntaunce and priue fe

For he loueth none heuinesse
But mirth and play, and all gladnesse
He hateth al trechours
Soleine folke and enuious
For ye weten how that he Wol euer glad and toyful be Honestly with folke to play
I haue be negligent in good fey
To chastise him, therfore now I
Of hert I crie you here mercy
That I haue ben so recheles
To tamen him withouten lees
Of my foly I me repente
Now wol I hole set mine entent
To kepe both low and stil Bialacoil to do your will Shame Shame (said Jelousy)
To be bitrashed great drede haue I
Lecherie hath clombe so hie
That almost blered is mine eie
No wonder is, if that drede haue I
Ouer al reigneth Lechery
Whose might groweth night and dey
Both in Cloistre and in Abbey
Chastite is werried ouer all
Therfore I woll with siker wall
Close bothe Roses and Rosere
I haue to longe in this manere
Lete hem vncloseb wilfully
Wherfore I am right inwardly
Sorowfull, and repent me
But now thei shall no lenger be Vncloseb, and yet I drede sore
I shal repent ferthermore
For the game goeth all amis
Counsaile I must nowe iwis
I haue ty long trusted the
But now it shal no lenger be
For he may best in euery cote
Disceiue, that men trusten moste
I se well that I am nigh shent
But if I set my full entent
Remedy to puruey
Wherfore close I shall the wey
From hem that wolt the Rose espie
And come to waite me vilonie
For in good faith and in trouth
I wol not let for no slouth
To liue the more in siherneste
To make anon a fortreste
Than close the Roses of good sauour
In middes shal I make a tour
To put Bialacoil in prison
For euer I drede me of treson
I trow I shal him kepe so
That he shal haue no might to go
About to make companie
To hem that thinke of vilanie
Ne to no suche as hath been here
Afore, and founde in him good chere
Whiche han assailed him to shende
And with her trowandise to blende
A foole is rith to begile
But may I liue a litel while
He shal forthinke his faire semblaunt
And with that worde came Drede auaunt
Whiche was abashed, and in great fere
When he wist Jelousie was there
He was for drede in suche affray
That not a worde durste he say
But quaking stode ful stil alone
(Til Jelousie his way was gone)
Saue Shame, that him not forsoke
Both Drede and he ful sore quoke
That at last Drede abraide
And to his Cosin Shame saide.

Shame (he said) in sothfastnesse
To me it is great heuinesse
That the noise so ferre is go
And the sclaunder of vs two
But sithe that it is befall
We maie it not againe call
When ones sprong is a fame
For many a yere withouten blame
We haue ben, and many a day
For many an Aprill, and many a May We han passed, not shamed
Til Jelousie hath vs blamed
Of mistrust and suspection
Causeleste, without enchelon
Go we to Daunger hastely
And let vs shewe him openly
That he hath not a right wrought
When that he set not his thought
To kepe better the purprise
In his doing he is not wise
He hath to vs do great wrong
That hath suffred now so long Bialacoil to haue his will Al his lustes to fulfill
He must amende it vtterly
Or els shal he vilainously
Exiled be out of this londe
For he the warre make not withstonde
Of Jelousie, nor the grete
Sithe Bialacoil is at mischefe.

TO Daunger Shame and Drede anon
The right way ben gon

The chorle thei founde hem aforne
Ligging vnder an hawethorne
Under his heed no pilowe was
But in the stede a trusse of gras
He slombred, and a nappe he tone
Til Shame pitously him shoke
And great manace on him gan make
Why slepest thou, whan thou should wake (Od Shame) thou dost vs vilanie
Who trusteth the, he dothe folie
To kepe roses or bothoms
Whan they ben faire in her sesons
Thou art wone to familiere
Where thou should be straunge of chere
Stoute of thy porte, redy to greue
Thou doest great folie for to leue
Bialacoil here inne to call
The yonger man, to shenden vs all
Though that thou slepe, we may here
Of Jelousie great noise here
Art thou now late, rise vp an hie
And stoppe sone and deliuerly
All the gappes of the hay
Do no fauour, I the pray
It falleth nothing to thy name (blame.
To make fayre semblant, were thou mayste

If Bialacoil be swete and free
Dogged and fel thou shouldest be Froward and outragious iwis
A chorle chaungeth that curteis is This haue I herde oft in saiyng
That man may for no daunting
Make a sperhauke of a bosarde
Al men wol holde the for musarde
That debonaire haue founden the
It sitteth the nought curteis to be
To do men plesaunce or seruise
In the it is recreaundise
Let thy werkes ferre and nere
Be like thy name, whiche is Daungere
Than al abashed in the wing
Anon spake Drede, right thus saiyng
And said, Daunger I drede me
That thou ne wolte bely be
To kepe that thou hast to kepe
Whan thou shouldest wake, thou art a slepe
Thou shalt be greued certainly
If the aspie Jelousy
Or if he finde the in blame
He hath to do assailed Shame
And chased away, with great manace
Bialacoil out of this place
And sweareth shortly that he shall Enclose him in a sturdy wall
And al is for thy wickednesse
For that the faileth straungenesse
Thine hert I trowe be failed all
Thou shalt repent in speciall
If Jelousie the sothe knewe
Thou shalt forthinke, and sore rewe.

With that the chorle his clubbe gan take Frowning his eien gan to make
And hidous chere, as man in rage
For yre he brent in his visage
Whan that he herde him blamed so
He said, out of my witte I go
To be discomfite I haue great wrong
Certes I haue now liued to long
Sithe I may not this closer kepe
Al quicke I would be doluen depe
Yf any man shal more repayre
In to this garden for foule of fayre
Mine hert for ire gothe a fere
That I let any entre here
I haue do folly now I se
But now it shal amended be
Who setteth fote here any more
Truly he shall repent it sore
For no man more into this place
Of me to entre shall haue grace
Leuer I had with swerdes twaine
Throughout mine hert, in euery vaine
Perced to be, with many a wounde
Than slouthe should in me be founde
From henforth by night or day
I shall defende it if I may Withouten any excepcion
Of eche maner condicion
And if I it any man graunte
Holdeth me for recreaunte.

Than Daunger on his fete gan stonde
And hent a burdon in his honde
Wrothe in his ire ne left he nought
But through the verger he hath sought
If he might finde hole or trace
Where through that me mote forth by pace
Or any gappe, he did it close
That no man might touche a rose
Of the Roser al about
He shitteth euery man without Thus day by day Daunger is wers
More wonderfull and more diuers
And feller ehe, than euer he was
For him ful oft I singe alas
For I ne may nought, through his ire
Recouer that I most desire
Mine hert alas, wol brest a two

For

For Bialacoil I wrathed so
For certainly in euery membre
I quake, whan I me remembre
Of the bothom, whiche I wolde
Ful oft a day sene and beholde
And whan I thinke vpon the kisse
And how moche ioye and blisse
I had through the sauour swete
For want of it I grone and grete
Me thinketh I sele yet in my nose
The swete sauour of the Rose
And now I wote that I mote go
So serre the freshe floures fro
Come ful welcome were the dethe
Idlence therof (alas) me slethe
For whilom with this Rose, alas
I touched nose, mouthe, and face
But now the death I must abide
But Loue consent an other tide
That ones I touche maie and kisse
I trow my paine shal neuer lisse
Theron is all my couetise
Whiche brent my hert in many wise
How shal repaire againe sighing
Long watche on nightes, and no sleping
Thought in wilshing, turment, and wo
With many a turning to and fro
That halfe my paine I can not tell
For I am fallen into hell
From paradise and welthe, the more
My turment greueth more, and more
Inoleth now the bitternesse
That I to forne haue felte swetnesse
And wicked tonge, through his falshede
Causeth all my wo and drede
On me he lieth a pitous charge
Because his tonge was to large.

Now it is time shortly that I
Tel you somthing of Jelousy
That was in great suspeccion
About him lefte he no maison
That stone coulde laie, ne querrour
He hired hem to make a tour
And first the Roses for to kepe
About hem made he a diche depe
Right wonder large, and also brode
Upon the whiche also stode
Of squared stone, a sturdy wall
Whiche on a cragge was founded all
And right great thichnesse ehe it bare
About it was founded square
In hundred fadome on euery side
It was al liche long and wide
Lest any time it were assailed
Ful wel about it was batailed
And rounde enuiron ehe were set
Ful many a riche and faire tournet
At euery corner of this wall
Was set a tour ful principall
And eueriche had without fable
A portcolise defensable
To kepe of enemies, and to greue,
That there her force would preue
And ehe amidde this purprise
Was made a tour of great maistrise
A fairer saugh no man with sight
Large and wide, and of great might Thei dradde none assaut
Of ginne, gonne, nor shaffaut
The temprure of the morter
Was made of licour wonder dere
Of quiche lime persaunt and egre
The whiche was tempred with vinegre
The stone was harde of Idamant
Wherof thei made the foundemaunt
The tour was rounde made in compas
In al this world no richer was Ne better ordained there withall
About the tour was made a wall
So that betwixt that and the toure
Roses were set of swete sauoure
With many Roses that thei bere
And ehe within the castel were Springoldes, Gonnes, Bowes, and Archers
And ehe about at corners
Men seine ouer the wall stonde
Great engins, who were nerehonde
And in the hernels here and there
Of arblasters great plentie were None armour might her stroke withstonde
It were folye to preace to honde
Without the diche were lilles made
With wal batailed large and brade
For men and horse should not attaine
To nigh the diche ouer the plaine
Thus Jelosie hath enuiron
Sette about his garnison
With walles rounde, and diche depe
Onely the Roser for to kepe
And Daunger erly and late
The keyes kept of the vtter gate
The whiche opened towarde the eest
And he had with him at leest
Thurty seruauntes echone by name
That other gate kept Shame
Whiche opened, as it was couthe
Towarde the parte of the Southe Sergeauntes assigned were her to Full many, her will for to do

Than drede had in her baillie
The keping of the constablerie
Towarde the North I vnderstonde
That opened vpon the lefte honde
The whiche for nothing may be sure
But if she do besy cure
Erly on morowe, and also late
Strongly to shette and barre the gate
Of euery thing that she may se
Drede is aferde, where so she be
For with a puffe of litell winde
Drede is astonied in her minde
Therfore for stealing of the Rose
I rede her nat the yate vnclose
For foules flight would make her fle
And eke a shadowe if she it se

THan wicked tonge full of Enuy
With soudiers of Normandy
Is he that causeth all debate
Was keper of the fourthe gate
And also to the tother three
He went ful ofte for to se
Whan his lotte was to walke a night
His instrumentes would he dight
For to blowe and make soune
Ofter than he hath enchesoune
And walken oft vpon the wall
Corners and wicketes ouer all
Ful narowe serchen and espie
Though he nought fonde, yet would he lie
Discordaunt euer fro armonie
And distoned from melodie
Controue he would, and foule faile
With hornpipes of Cornwaile
In floites made he discordaunce
And in his musike with mischaunce
He would feine with notes newe
That he fonde no woman trewe
Ne that he sawe neuer in his life
Vnto her husbonde a trewe wife
Ne none so ful of honestie
That she nil laugh and mery be Whan that she hereth or may espie
A man spoken of Lecherie
Eueriche of hem hath some vice
One is dishonest, an other is nice
Yf one be ful of vilanie
An other hath a licorous eie
If one be ful of wantonesse
An other is a chideresse.

Thus wicked tonge, God yeue him shame
Can put hem euerichone in blame
Without desert and causelesse
He lieth, though thei ben giltelesse
I haue pety to seine the sorowe
That waketh bothe euen and morowe
To innocences doth suche greuaunce
I pray God yeue him euil chaunce
That he euer so besy is
Of any woman to seine amis
Eke Jelousie God confounde
That hath made a toure so rounde
And made about a garison
To sette Bialacoil in prison
The whiche is shette there in the tour Ful long to holde there soiour
There for liue in penaunce
And for to do him more greuaunce
Whiche hath ordained Jelousie
In olde beche for to espie
The maner of his gouernaunce
The whiche Deuil in her enfaunce
Had lerned of loues arte
And of his pleis toke her parte
She was except in his seruise
She knewe eche wrenche and euery gise
Of Loue, and euery while
It was harde her to begile
Of Bialacoil she toke aie hede
That euer he liueth in wo and drede
He kepte him coye and eke priue
Leest in him she had hadde se
Any foly countenaunce
For she knew all the olde daunce
And after this whan Jelousie
Had Bialacoil in his Baillie
And shette him vp that was so fre
For sure of him he would be
He trusteth fore in his castell
The strong werke him liketh well
He dradde nat that no glotons
Should steale his Roses or bothoms
The Roses weren assured all
Defenced with the strong wall
Now Jelousie full well may be
Of drede deuoide in liberte
Whether that he slepe or wake
For of his Roses may none be take.

BVt I (alas) now morne shall Bicause I was without the wall
Ful muche dole and mone I made
Who had wist what wo I had
I trowe he would haue had pite
Loue to dere had solde me
The good that of his loue had I
I went about it al queintly
But nowe through dubling of my paine

Ysse he woll it sell again
And me a newe bargain lere
The whiche all out the more is dere
For the solace that I haue lorne
Than I had it neuer aforne
Certain I am full like in deede
To him that caste in yearth his seede
And hath ioie of the newe springing
When it greneth in the ginning
And is also faire and freshe of floure
Lushe to seen, swote of odoure
But er he it in his sheues shere
Maie fall a wether that shall it dere
And make it to fade and fall
The stalke, the greine, and floures all
That to the tillers is forboen
The hope that he had to sone
I drede certain that so fare I
For hope and trauaile sikerly
Been me biraft all with a storme,
The floure nill seden of my corne
For Loue hath so auaunced me
When I began my priuite
To Bialacoil all for to tell
Whom I ne founde froward ne fell
But toke agree all hole my plaie
But Loue is of so harde assaie
That all at ones he reued me
When I went best abouen to haue be
It is of Loue, as of fortune
That chaungeth oft, and nill contune
Whiche whilom woll of folke smile
And glombe on hem an other while Now frende, now foe, chalt her fele
For a twincling tourneth her whele
She can writhe her hedde awaie
This is the concourse of her plaie
She can areise that doeth mourne
And whirle adoune and ouertourne
Who sitteth hiest, but as her lust
Foole is he that woll her trust
For it is I that am come doune
Through charge and reuolucion
Sithe Bialacoil mote fro me twin Shette in her prison yonde within His absence at mine harte I sele
For all my ioie and all mine hele
Was in him, and in the Rose
That but you woll, whiche him doeth close
Open, that I maie him se
Loue woll not that I cured be
Of the paines that I endure
Nor of my cruell auenture.

Ah, Bialacoil mine owne dere
Though thou be now a prisonere
Kepe at least thine harte to me
And suffer not that it daunted be Ne let not iealousie in his rage
Putten thine harte in no seruage
Although he chastice thee without
And make thy bodie vnto him lout
Haue harte as harde as Diamaunt
Stedfast, and naught pliaunt
In prison though thy bodie be
At large kepe thine harte fre
A true harte will not plie
For no manace that it maie drie
If Ielousie doeth thee pain
Quite him his while thus again
To benge thee at least in thought
If other waie thou maiest nought
And in this wise subtellie
Worche, and winne the maistrie
But yet I am in greate affraie
Least thou doe nat as I saie
I drede thou canst me greate maugre
That thou enprisoned art for me
But that nat for my trespace
For through me neuer discouered was Yet thing, that ought be secre
Well more annoie is in me
Than is in thee of this mischaunce
For I endure more harde penaunce
Than any can saine or thinke
That for the sorowe almoste I sinke
When I remember me of my wo
Full nigh out of my witte I go.
Inward mine harte I sele blede
For comfortlesse the death I drede
Owe I nat well to haue distresse
When false, through her wickednesse
And traitours, that arne enuious
To noien me, be so corragious
Ah, Bialacoil full well I see
That thei hem shape to deceiue thee
To make thee burum to her lawe
And with her corde thee to drawe
Where so hem lust, right at her will I drede thei haue thee brought there till Without comfort, thought me slaeth
This game would bring me to my death
For if your good will I lese
I mote be dedde I maie not chese
And if that thou forgete me
Mine harte shall neuer in liking be Nor elswhere finde solace
If I be put out of your grace
Ysse shall neuer been I hope

Than should I fall in wanhope
Alas, in wanhope: nay verde
For I will neuer dispeired be If hope me faile, than am I
Ungracious and vnworthy
In hope I will comforted be
For Loue, whan he betaught her me
Saied, that Hope where so I go
Should aie be relees to my wo
But what and she my bales bete
And be to me curteis and swete
She is in nothing full certain Louers she put in full greate pain
And maketh hem with wo to dele
Her faire beheste deceiueth sele
For she will behote liberly
And failen after vtterly
Ih, that is a full notous thing
For many a louer in louing
Hangeth vpon her, and trusteth fast
Whiche lese her trauaile at the last
Of thing to commen she wote right nought
Therefore if it be wisely sought
Her counsaile folie is to take
For many times, whan she will make
A full good silogisme, I drede
That afterward there shall in dede
Folowe an euill conclusion
This put me in confusion
For many times I haue it seen
That many haue begiled been
For trust that thei haue set in hope
Whiche fell hem afterward a slope.

But natheelle yet gladly she would
That he that will him with her hold
Had all times her purpose clere Without deceipt any where That she desireth liberly
Whan I her blamed I did foly
But what auaileth her good will Whan she ne maie staunche my stound ill
That helpeth little that she maie doe
Out take beheste vnto my wo
And heste certain in no wise
Without ifete is not to prise.

Whan heste and deede a sonder vary
Thei doen a greate contrary
Thus am I posed vp and doune
With dole, thought, and confusioune
Of my disease there is no nomber
Daunger and Shame me encomber
Drede also, and Jelosie
And wicked Tong full of enuie
Of whiche the sharpe and cruell Ire
Full oft me put in greate martire
Thei haue my ioie fully let Sith Bialacoil thei haue beshet
Fro me in prison wickedly
Whom I loue so entierly
That it will my bane be
But I the soner maie him se
And yet more ouer worst of all
There is set to kepe, foule her befall
A Rimpled becke ferre ronne in rage
Frouning and yelowe in her vilage
Whiche in awaite lieth daie and night
That none of hem maie haue a sight.

Now mote my sorowe enforced de
Full sothe it is that Loue vaie me
Three wonder vertes of his grace
Whiche I haue lorne now in this place
Sithe thei ne maie without drede
Helpen but little who taketh hede
For here auaileth no Swete thought
And swete Speache helpeth right nought
The third was called Swete Loking
That now is lorne without leting.

vertes were faire, but nat for thy Thei helpe me but simply But Bialacoil loosed be
To gone at large and to be fre
For him my life lieth all in dout
But if he come the rather out
Alas I trowe it will nat been
For how should I euermore him seen?
He maie nat out and that is wrong
Bicause the toure is so strong
How should he out, or by whose prowesse
Of so strong a forteresse?
By me certain it nill be doe
God wotte I haue no witte thereto
But well I wote I was in rage
Whan I to Loue did homage
Who was the cause (in sothfastnesse)
But her self dame Idelnesse
Whiche me conueide through faire praiere
To enter into that faire vergere
She was to blame me to leue
The whiche now doeth me sore greue
A fooles worde is nought to trowe
Ne worthe an apple for to lowe
Men should hem snibbe bitterlie
At prime temps of his folie
I was a foole, and she me leued
Through whom I am right nought releued
She accomplished all my will

The

That now me greueth wonder ill.

REason me laied what should fall
I foole my self I maie well call
That loue a side I had not laied
And trowed that dame Reason saied
Reason had bothe skill and right Whan she me blamed, with all her might
To medle of Loue, that hath me shent
But certain now I woll repent.

And should I repent? Nay parde
I saie traitour, than should I be
The deuils engins would me take
If I loue would forsake
Or Bialacoil falsly betraie
Should I at mischief hate him? nay
Sithe he now for his curtesie
Is in prison of Jelousie
Curtesie certain did he me
So moche, that it maie not yolden be What he the haie passen me lete
To kisse the Rose, faire and swete
Should I therefore conne him maugre
Nay certainly, it shall nat be
For Loue shall neuer yeue good will Here of me, through worde or will Offence or complaint more or lesse
Neither of Hope nor Jdelnesse
For certes it were wrong that I Hated hem for her curtesie
There is not els, but suffre and thinke
And waken whan I should winke
Abide in hope, till loue through chaunce
Sende me soccour or allegeaunce
Expectaunt aie till I maie mete
To getten mercie of that swete.

Whilom I thinke how Loue to me
Saied he would take at gre
My seruice, if vnpacience
Caused me to doen offence
He saied, in thanke I shall it take
And high maister eke thee make
If wickednesse ne reue it thee
But sone I trowe that shall nat be These were his wordes by and by
It semed he loued me truely.
Now is there not but serue him wele
If that I thinke his thanke to fele
My good mine harme, lithe hole in me
In Loue maie no defaute be
For true Loue ne failed neuer man Soothly the faute mote nedes than
As God forbide, be founde in me
And how it cometh, I can not se
Now let it gone as it maie go
Whether Loue woll succour me or slo
He maie doe hole on me his will I am so sore bounde him till
From his seruice I maie not flene
For life and death without ern wene
Is in his hande, I maie nat chese
He maie me doe bothe wimme and lese
And sithe so sore he doeth me greue
Yet if my lust he would acheue
To Bialacoil goodlie to be
I yeue no force what fell on me
For though I die, as I mote nede
I praie Loue of his goodlihede
To Bialacoil doe gentilnesse
For whom I liue in soche distresse
That I mote dien for penaunce
But first, without repentaunce
I woll me confesse in good entent
And make in haste my Testament
As louers doen that felen smarte
To Bialacoil leaue I mine harte
All hole, without departing
Or doublenesse of repenting.

Coment Raison vient a Lamant.

THus as I made my passage
In compleint, and in cruell rage
And I not where to finde a leche
That couthe vnto mine helping eche
Sodainly again comen doun
Out of her toure I sawe Reasoun
Discrete and wise, and full pleasaunt
And of her porte full auenaunt
The right waie she toke to me
Whiche stode in greate perplexite
That was pushed in euery side
That I nist where I might abide Till she demurely sadde of chere
Saied to me as she came nere.
Mine owne frende, art thou greued
How is this quarell yet atcheued
Of loues side? Anone tell me
Hast thou not yet of Loue thy fill?
Art thou nat werie of thy seruice?
That thee hath in soche wise.
What loue haste thou in thy louinge
Is it swete or bitter thing
Canst thou yet chese, let me se
What best thy succour might be.

Thou seruest a full noble Lorde
That maketh thee thrall for thy reworde
Whiche

Whiche aie reneweth thy tourment
With folie so he hath thee blent
Thou fell in mischiefe thilke daie
Whan thou diddest the sothe to saie
Obeisaunce and the homage
Thou wroughtest nothing as the sage Whan thou became his liege man
Thou diddest a greate folie than Thou wistest nat what fell therto
With what Lorde thou haddest to doe
If thou haddest him well knowe
Thou haddest nought be brought so lowe
For if thou wiste what it were Thou noldest serue him halfe a yere
Nat a weke, nor halfe a daie
Ne yet an houre without delaie
Ne neuer I loued paramours
His Lordship is so full of shours
Knowest hinrought?
Lamaunt. Ye dame parde
Raison. Naie naie. Lamaunt, yes I
Raison. Wherefore let se
Lamaunt Of that he saied I should be Glad to haue soche Lorde as (he)
And maister of soche seignorie Raison. Knowest him no more?
Lamaunt. Naie certes I
Saie that he yafe me rules there
And went his waie, I nist where
And I abode bounde in balaunce
Lo, there a noble cognisaunce.

Raison.

But I woll that thou knowe him now
Ginning and ende, sithe that thou Art so anguishous and mate
Disfigured out of astate
There maie no wreche haue more of wo
Ne caitife none enduren so
It were to euery man sitting
Of his Lorde haue knowleging
For if thou knewe him out of dout
Lightly thou shouldest scapen out
Of thy prison that marreth thee.

Lamaunt.

Yedame sithe my Lorde is he
And I his man made with mine honde
I would right faine vnderstonde
To knowe of what kinde he be
If any would enforme me.

Raison.

I would (saied Reason) thee lere
Sithe thou to learne hast soche desire
And shewe thee without fable
A thing that is not demonstrable
Thou shalt without science
And knowe without experience
The thing that maie not knowen be Ne wist ne shewed in no degre
Thou maiest the sothe of it not witten
Though in thee it were written Thou shalt not knowe thereof more
While thou art ruled by his lore
But vnto him that loue well list
The knotte maie vnclosed be Whiche hath to thee, as it is founde
So long to knitte and not vnbounde
Now set well thine entencion
To heare of Loue the discripcion.

Loue it is an hate full pees
A free acquitaunce without res
And through the fret full of falshede
A sikernesse all set in drede
In harte is a dispeiring hope
And full of hope it is wanhope
Wise woodnesse, and boide Reason
A swete peril in to droun
An heauie burthen light to beare
A wicked wa we a wale to weare
It is Caribdis perilous
Dilagreable and gracious
It is discordaunce that can acorde
And accordaunce to discorde
It is conning without science
Wisedome without sapience
Witte without discrecion
Hauoire without possession
It is like heale and hole sickenesse
A trust droured and dronkenesse
And health full of maladie
And Charite full of enuie
And angre full of aboundaunce
And a gredie sufficiaunce
Delite right full of heuinesse
And drerie full of gladnesse
Bitter swetenesse and swete errour
Right euill fauoured good fauour
Sen that pardone hath within
And pardone spotted without sinne
A paine also it is ioious
And felonie right pitous
Also plaie that selde is stable
And stedfast right meuable
A strength weyhed to stonde vpright
And feblenesse full of might

Witte vnauised, sage folie
And ioie full of tourmentrie
Laughter it is weping aie
Rest that trauaileth night and daie
Also swete hell it is
And sorow full Paradis
Pleasaunt gaile and easie prisoun
And full of froste Somer season
Prime temps full of frostes white
And Maie deuoide of all delite
With seer braunches blossoms vngrene
And newe fruict filled with winter tene
Itis a flowe maie nat forbeare
Ragges ribaned with gold to weare
For also well woll loue be sette
Under ragges as riche rotchette
And eke as well by amorettes
In mourning blacke, as bright burnettes
For none is of so mokell prise
As no man founden so wise
As none so high of parage
As no man founde of witte so sage
So man so hardie ne so wight
As no man of so mokell might
Some so fulfilled of bounte
That he with Loue maie daunted be
All the worlde holdeth this waie
Loue maketh all to gone miswaie
But it be thei of euill life
Whom Genius curseth man and wife
That wrongly werke again nature
Some seche I loue, ne haue no cure
Of seche as loues seruauntes been
And woll nat by my counsaile seen
For I ne preise that louing
Where through man at the last ending
Shall call hem wretches full of wo
Loue greueth hem and shendeth so
But if thou wolte well loue eschewe
For to escape out of his mewe
And make all hole the sorowe to slake
So better counsaile maiest thou take Than thinke to seen well iwis
Maie nought helpe els, for witt thou this
If thou flie it, it shall flie thee
Folowe it, and folowen shall it thee.

Clauaunt.

When I had heard Reason sain
Whiche had spilt her speache in vain
Dame (saied I) I dare well saie
Of this auaunt me weil I maie
That from your schole so deuiaunt
I am, that neuer the more auaunt
Right nought am I through your doctrine
I dulle vnder your discipline
I wot no more than wiste euer
To me so contrarie and so fer
Is euery thing that ye me lere
And yet I can it all by partuere
Mine harte forweteth thereof right nought
It is so written in my thought
And depe graue it is so tender
That all mine harte I can it render
And rede it ouer communely
But to my self lewdest am I.

But sithe ye Loue discriuen so
And lache and preise it bothe two Defineth it into this letter
That I maie thinke on it the better
For I heard neuer diffined here
And wilfully I would it lere
If loue be searched well and sought
It is a sickenesse of the thought
Innered and knedde betwixt tweine
With male and female with o cheine
So frele that bindeth, that thei nill twinne
Whyder so thereof thei lese or winne
The roote springeth through hote brenning
In to disordinate desiring
For to killen and embrace
And at her lust them to solace
Of other thing loue retcheth nought
But setteth her harte and all her thought
More for delectacioun
Than any procreacioun
Of other fruict by engendrure
Whiche loue to God is nat pleasure
For of her bodie fruicte to get Thei yeue no force, thei are so set
Upon delite to plaie in fere
And some haue also this manere
To fainen hem for Loue seke
Soche loue I preise not at a leke
For paramours thei doe but faine
To loue truely thei disdaine
Thei fallen ladies traitourslly
And swerne hem othes vtterly
With many a leasing, and many a fable
And all thei finden disceiuable
And whan thei han her lust getten
The hote ernes thei all forgetten
Women the harme bien full sore
But men this thinken euermore
The lasse harme is, so mote I thee Disceiue them, than disceiued be
And namely where thei ne maie
Finde none other meane waie
For I wote well in sothfastnesse

That

That what doeth now his businesse
With any woman for to dele
For any lust that he maie sele
But if it be for engendrure
He doeth trespasse I you ensure For he should setten all his will
To getten a likely thing him till
And to sustain, if he might
And kepe forth by kindes right
His owne likenesse and semblable
For bicause all is corrumpable
And faile should succession
Ne were their generacioun
Our sectes sterne for to saue
Whan father or mother arne in graue
Her children should, whan thei been bede
Full diligent been in her stede
To vse that warke on soche a wise
That one maie through an other rise
Therefore set kinde therein delite
For men therein should hem delite
And of that deede be not erke
But oft sithes haunt that werke
For none would drawe thereof a draught
Ne were delite, whiche hath him caught
This had subtill dame Nature
For none goeth right I thee ensure Ne hath entent hoole ne parfite
For her desire is for delite
The whiche forfened creasse, and eke
The plaie of Loue, for oft seke
And thrall hem self thei be so nice Unto the Prince of euery vice
For of eche sinne it is the roote
Unlefull lust, though it be soote
And of all euill the racine
As Tullius can determine
Whiche in his time was full sage
In a booke he made of age
Where that more he praiseth elde
Though he be croked and vnwelde
And more of commendacioun
Than youth in his discripcioun
For youth set bothe man and wife
In all parell of soule and life
And parell is, but men haue grace
The parell of youth for to pace
Without any death or distresse
It is so full of wildnesse
So oft it doeth shame and domage
To him or to his linage
It leadeth man, now vp now doun
In mokell dissoluciouns
And maketh him loue euill companie
And lede his life disrulilie
And halte him paied with none estate
Within himself is soche debate
He chaunged purpose and entent
And yalte in to some couent
To liuen after her empryse
And leseth fredome and fraunchise
That nature in him had set
The whiche again he maie not get
If he there make his mansion
For to abide profession
Though for a time his harte ablent
It maie not faile, he shall repent
And che abide thilke daie
To leaue his abite, and gon his waie
And leaseth his worship and his name
And dare not come again for shame
But all his life he doeth so mourne
Bicause he dare not home retourne Fredome of minde so lost hath he
That neuer maie recured be
But that if God him graunt grace
That he maie, er he hence pace
Contein vnder obedience
Through the vertue of pacience
For youth set man in all folie
In vnthrift and in ribaudrie
In lecherie, and in outrage
So oft it chaungeth of corage
Youth ginneth oft soche bargain
That maie not ende without pain
In greate parell is set youth hede
Delite so doeth his bridell lede
Delite this hangeth, drede thee nought
Bothe mannes bodie and his thought
Onely through youthes chambers
That to doen euill is customers
And of naught els taketh hede
But onely folkes for to lede
Into disport and wildenesse
So is froward from sadnesse
But elde draweth hem therfro
Who wote it not, he maie well go
And mo of hem, that now arne old
That whilom youth had in hold
Whiche yet remembreth of tender age
How it him brought in many a rage
And many a folie therin wrought
But now that elde hath him through sought
Thei repent hem of her folie
That youth hem put in ieopardie
In parell and in moche wo
And made hem oft amisse to doe
And sewen euill companie
Riot and aduoutrie.

But elde gan againe restraine
From suche folye, and restraine
And set men by her ordinaunce
In good rule and gouernaunce
But euil she spendeth her seruise
For no man wol her loue, nether preise
She is hated, this wote I wele
Her acqueintaunce would no man fele
Se han of elde companie
Men hate to be of her alie
For no man wold becomen olde
Se die, whan he is yonge and bolde
And elde meruaileth right greatly
Whan thei remembre hem inwardly
Of many a perillous empryse
Whiche that thei wrought in sondry wise
Howeuer thei might without blame Escape awaie without shame
In youth without domage
Or repriefe of her linage
Losse of membre, sheding of blood
Perel of death, or losse of good
Wost thou nat where youthe abit
That men so preisen in her wit?
With Delite she halte soiour
For both thei dwellen in o tour
As long as youthe is in season
Thei dwellen in one mansion
Delite of youth woll haue seruice
To do what so he woll deuise
And youth is redy euermore
For to obey for smerte of sore
Unto Delite, and him to yeue
Her seruice, while that she maie liue.

Where elde abitte, I wol the tell
Shortly, and no while dwell
For thider behoueth the to go
Ne death in youth the not slo
Of this iourney thou maiste not faile
With her labour and trauaile
Lodged ben with sorow and wo
That neuer out of her court go
Paine and distresse, sickenesse, and ire
And melancoly that angry sire
Ben of her paleis senatours
Groning and grutching, her herbegeours
The day and night her to tourment
With cruell death thei her present
And tellen her erliche and late
That death stondeth armed at her gate
Than bring thei to her remembraunce
The foly dedes of her enfaunce
Whiche causen her to mourne in wo
That youth hath her begiled so
Whiche sodainly awaie is hasted
She weped the time that she hath wasted
Complaining of the preteritte
And the present, that nat abitte
And of her olde vanite
That but afore me her she maie se
In the future some socoure
To leggen her of her doloure
To graunt her time of repentaunce
For her sinnes to do penaunce
And at the last so her gouerne
To winne the ioye that is eterne
Fro whiche go bachwarde youth he made
In vanite to drowne and wade
For present time abideth nought
It is more swifte than any thought
So litell while it doth endure
That there nis compte ne measure
But how that euer the game go
Who list to loue ioye and mirth also
Of loue, be it he or she Hie or lowe who it be
In trute thei should hem delite
Her parte thei maie not els quite
To saue hem selfe in honeste
And yet full many one I se
Of women, sothly for to saine
That desire, and would faine
The plaie of Loue, thei be so wilde
And not coueite to go with childe
And if with childe thei be perchaunce
Thei wol it holde a great mischaunce
But what so euer wo thei fele
Thei wol not plaine, but councele
But if it be any foole or nice
In whome that shame hath no iustice
For to Delite echone thei drawe
That haunt this worlde both hie and lawe
Saue suche that arne worthy right nought
That for money wol be bought
Suche loue I preise in no wise
Whan it is giuen for couetise
I preise no woman, though so be woode
That yeueth her selfe for any goode
For litell should a man telle
Of her, that wil her body selle
Be she maide, be she wife
That quicke wol selle her by her life
How faire chere that euer she make
He is a wretche I vndertake
That loued suche one, for swete or soure
Though she him called her paramoure
And laugheth on him, and maketh him feest
For certainly no suche beest
To be loued is nat worthy

Or beare the name of Drury
None should her please, but he wer woode
That wol dispoile him of his goode
Yet natheless I wol not saie
That she for solace and for plaie
Maie a Jewel or other thing
Take of her loues free yeuing
But that she aske it in no wise
For drede of shame, or couetise
And she of hers maie him certaine
Without sclaunder yeuen againe
And ioyne her hertes togider so
In loue, and take and yeue also Trowe nat that I wol hem t winne
Whan in her loue there is no sinne
I wol that thei togider go
And done al that thei han ado
As curtes should and debonaire
And in her loue beren hem faire
Without vice, both he and she
So that al waie in honeste
Fro folly loue to kepe hem clere
That brenneth hertes with his fere
And that her loue in any wise
Be deuoide of couetise
Good loue should engendred be
Of trewe hert, iuste, and secree
And not of suche as set her thought
To haue her lust, and elsnought
So are thei caught in loues lace
Trewly for bodily solace
Fleshely delite is so present
With the, that set al thine entent
Without more, what should I glose
For to get and haue the Rose
Whiche maketh the so mate and wood
That thou desirest none other good
But thou art not an inche the nerre
But euer abidest in sorow and warre
As in thy face it is sene
It maketh the bothe pale and lene
Thy might, thy vertue gothe awaie
And sorry gest in good faie
Thou herborest in thine inne
The God of Loue whan thou let inne
Wherfore I rede thou shette him oute
Or he shal greue the out of doute
For to thy profite it wol turne
If he no more with the soiourne
In great mischefe and sorow sonken
Ben hertes, that of Loue arne dronken
As thou peraventure knowen shall Whan thou hast lost the time all
And spent by thought in idelnesse
In waste, and wofull lustinesse
Yf thou maist liue the time to se
Of loue for to deliuered be Thy time thou shalt bewepe sore
The whiche neuer thou maist restore
For time lost, as men may se
For nothing may recouered be
And if thou scape, yet at laste
Fro loue that hath the so faste
Knitte and bounden in his lace
Certaine I holde it but a grace
For many one as it is seine
Haue loste, and spent allo in deine
In his seruice without socour
Body and soule, good, and treasour
Witte, and strength, and eke richesse
Of whiche thei had neuer redresse.

¶ Lamant.

Thus taught and preched hath Reson
But Loue spilte her sermon
That was so imped in my thought
That her doctrine I set at nought
And yet ne saide she neuer a dele
That I ne vnderstode it wele
Worde by worde the mater all
But vnto Loue I was so thrall
Whiche calleth ouer all his praie
He chaseth so my thought aie
And holdeth mine herte vnder his kei
As trusty and trewe as any stele
So that no deuocion
Ne had I in the Sermon
Of dame Reson, ne of her rede
I tohe no soiour in mine hede
For all yede out at one ere
That in that other she did lere
Fully on me she lost her lore
Her speche me greued wonder sore.

That vnto her for ire I saide
For anger, as I did abraide
Dame and is it your will algate
That I not Loue, but that I hate
All men, as ye me teche
For if I do after your speche
Sith that you seine Loue is not good
Than must I nedes say with mode
Yf I it leue, in hatred aie
Liuen, and voide Loue awaie
From me a sinful wretche
Hated of al that tetche
I may not go none other gate
For either must I loue or hate
And if I hate men of newe

Yes

More than Loue, it wol me rewe
As by your preching semeth me
For Loue nothing ne praiseth the Ye yeue good counsaile sikerly
That precheth me al day, that I
Should not loues lore alowe
Ye were a foole woulde you not trowe
In speche also ye han me taught
Another loue that knowen is naught
Whiche I haue herde you not repreue
To loue eche other by your leue
If ye would diffine it me
I would gladly here to se
It the leest if I may lere
Of sondry loues the manere.

¶ Raison.

Certes frende, a foole art thou
Whan that thou nothing wolt alow
That I for thy profite saie yet wol I saie the more in saie
For I am redy at the leest
To accomplithe thy request
But I not where it wol aueile
In vaine parauenture I shall traueile
Loue there is in sondrie wise
As I shall the here deuise
For some loue lefful is and goode
I meane not that whiche maketh the woode
And bringeth the in many a litte
And rauisheth fro the al thy witte
It is so marueilous and queint
With suche loue be no more aqueint.

¶ Cõment Raison diffinist Amiete.

Loue of frendshippe also there is Whiche maketh no man don a mis
Of wil knitte bet wirt two
That wol not breke for wele ne wo
Whiche long is likely to continue
Whan wil and goodes ben in commune
Grounded by goddes ordinaunce
Hoole without discordaunce
With hem holding commaunce
Of al her good in charite
That there be none exceptioun
Through chaunging of entencioun
That eche helpe other at her nede
And wisely hele bothe worde and dede
Trewe of meaning, deuoide of slouthe
For wit is nought without trouthe
So that the tone dare all his thought
Saine to his frende, and spare nought
As to him selfe without dredding
To be discouered by weiyng
For glad is that coniunctioun
Whan there is none suspectioun
Whome thei would proue
That trewe and perfite weten in Loue
For no man may be amiable
But if he be so ferme and stable
That fortune chaunge him not ne blinde
But that his frende alway him finde
Bothe pore and riche in o state
For if his frende through any gate
Wol complaine of his pouerte
He should not bide so long, til he
Of his helping him require
For good dede done throughe praiere
Is solde and bought to dere twis
To hart that of great valure is
For hart fulfilled of gentilnesse
Can euill demeane his distresse
And man that worthy is of name
To asken often hath great shame
A good man drenneth in his thought
For shame whan he asketh ought
He hath great thought, and dredeth aie
For his disease whan he shal praie
His frende, lest that he warned be Till that he preue his stabilite
But whan that he hath founden one
That trusty is and trewe as stone
And assaied him at all
And founde him stedfast as a wall
And of his frendshippe be certaine
He shal him shewe, bothe ioie and paine
And all that dare thinke or saie
Without shame, as he well maie
For how should he ashamed be
Of suche one as I tolde the
For whan he wot his secret thought
The third shall know therof right nought
For twey in nombre it bet than thre
In euery counsaile and secree
Repreue he dredeth neuer a dele
Who that beset his wordes wele
For euery wise man out of drede
Can kepe his tong till he se nede
And fooles can not holde her tonge
A fooles belle is soone ronge
Yet shall a trewe frende do more
To helpe his felowe of his sore
And socour him whan he hath nede
In all that he may done in dede
And gladder that he him pleaseth
Than his felowe that he easeth

And if he do nat his requeſt
He ſhal as muche him moleſt
As his ſelowe, for that he Maie not fulfill his volunte
Fully, as he hath required
If bothe the hertes loue hath fired
Joye and wo thei ſhal departe
And take euenly eche his parte
Halfe his anoye he ſhal haue aie
And comforte what that he maie
And of this bliſſe parte ſhal he If Loue woll departed be.

AND whilom of this vnite
Spake Tullius in a dite
And ſhould maken his requeſt vnto his frende, that is honeſt
And he goodly ſhould it fulfill
But if the more were out of ſkill
And otherwiſe not graunt therto
Except only in cauſes two
If men his frende to dethe would driue
Let him be bely to ſaue his liue
Alſo if men wollen hem aſſaile
Of his worſhip to make him faile
And hinderen him of his renoun
Let him wit ful entencioun
His deuer done in eche degre
That his frende ne ſhamed be
In this two caſe with his might Taking no hepe to ſkill nor right
As ferre as Loue may him excuſe
This ought no man to refuſe
This Loue that I haue tolde to the
Is nothing contrarie to me
This wol I that thou folowe wele
And leue the tother euery dele
This Loue to vertue al entendeth
The tother fooles blent and ſhendeth.

In other Loue alſo there is That is contrary vnto this Whiche deſire is ſo conſtrained
That is but wil fained
Away fro trouthe it doth ſo varie
That to good Loue it is contrarie
For it maymeth in many wiſe
Sithe hertes with couetiſe
All in winning and in profite
Suche loue letteth his delite
This loue ſo hangeth in balaunce
That if it leſe his hope parchaunce
Of lucre, that he is ſet vpon
It wol faile, and quenche anon
For no man maie be amorous
Ne in his liuing vertuous
But he loue more in moode
Men for hem ſelfe, than for her goode
For loue that profite doth abide Is falſe, and bideth not in no tide
Loue cometh of dame Fortune
That litel while woll contune
For it ſhal chaungen wonders ſoone
And take Eclips as the Moone whan he is from vs let Through earth, that betwirt is ſet
The ſonne and her, as it may fall
Be it in partie, or in all
The ſhadowe maketh her bemes merke
And her hornes to ſhewe derke
That part, where ſhe hath loſt her light
Of Phebus fully, and the ſight
Till whan the ſhadowe is ouerpaſte
She is enlumined agein as faſte
Through the brightnes of the ſonne bemes
That yeueth to her againe her lemes
That Loue is right of ſuche nature
Now is faire, and now obſcure
Now bright, now Cliply of manere
And whilom dimme, and whilom clere
As ſoone as pouerte ginneth take
With mantel and weedes blake
Hideth of Loue the light away
That into night it tourneth day
It may not ſe richeſſe ſhine
Till the blacke ſhadowes fine
For whan richeſſe ſhineth bright
Loue recouereth ayen his light
And whan it faileth, he wol flit
And as ſhe greueth, ſo greueth it
Of this Loue here what I ſaie
The riche men are loued aie
And namely tho that ſparande bene
That wol not waſhe her hertes clene
Of the filth, nor of the vice
Of gredy brenning Iuarice
The riche man ful fonde is twis
That weneth that he loued is
If that his hert it vnderſtode
It is not he, it is his goode
He may wel weten in his thought
His good is loued, and he right nought
For if he be a nigarde eke
Men wol not ſet by him a leke
But haten him, this is the ſothe
Lo what profite his catel dothe
Of euery man that may him ſe
It getteth him nought but enmite
But he amende him ſelfe of that vice
And know him ſelfe, he is not wiſe

Certis

Certes he should ale frendly be
To get him loue also ben fre
Or els he is not wise ne sage
No more than is a gote ramage
That he not loueth his dede proueth
Whan he his richesse so well loueth
That he wol hide it aie and spare
His pore frendes sene forfare
To kepen aie his purpose
Till forthrede his eien close
And til a wicked death him take Him had leuer a sondre shake
And let al his limmes a sondre riue
Than leaue his richesse in his liue
Bethinketh to part it with no man
Certain no loue is in him than How should loue within him be Whan in his hert is no pite
That he trespaseth well I wate
For eche man knoweth his estate
For wel him ought to be reproued
That loueth nought, ne is not loued
But sithe we arne to fortune comen
And hath our sermon of her nomen
I wonder will I tell thee now
Thou herdest neuer suche one I trew
I not where thou me leuen shall Though sothfastnesse it be all
Is it is written, and is sothe
That vnto men more profite dothe
The frowarde fortune and contrarie
Than the swote and debonaire
And if the thinke it is doutable
It is through argument prouable
For the debonaire and softe
Falleth and begileth ofte
For liche a mother she can cherishe
And milken as dothe a norice
And of her good to him deles
And yeueth him parte of her ioweles
With great riches and dignite
And hem she hoteth stabilite
In state that is not stable
But chaunging aie and variable
And fedeth him with glory veine
And worldely blisse none certeine
Whan she him setteth on her whele
Than wene thei to be right wele
And in so stable state withall
That neuer thei wene for to fall
And whan thei sette so high to be Thei wene to haue in certainte
Of hertly frendes to great nombre
That nothing might her state encombre
Thei trust hem so on euery side
Wening with him thei would abide
In euery peril and mischaunce
Without chaunce or variaunce
Bothe of catel and of good
And also for to spende her blood
And al her membres for to spill
Onely to fulfill her will Thei maken it hole in many wise
And hoten hem her ful seruice
How sore that it do hem smerte
Into her very naked herte
Herte and also hole thei yeue
For the time that thei may liue
So that with her flaterie
Thei maken fooles glorifie
Of her wordes speking
And han chere of a reioysing
And trow hem as the Euangile
And it is al falshede and gile
As thei shal afterwarde se
Whan thei arne fal in pouerte
And ben of good and catel bare
Than should thei sene who frendes ware
For of an hundred certainly
Nor of a thousande ful scarsly
Ne shall thei finde vnnethes one
Whan pouerte is comen vpon
For thus Fortune that I of tell
With men whan her lust to dwell
Maketh hem to lese her conisaunce
And norisheth hem in ignoraunce.

But frowarde Fortune and peruerse
Whan high estates she doth reuerse
And maketh hem to toumble doune
Of her whele with sodaine tourne
And from her richesse dothe hem flie
And plongeth hem in pouerte
Is a stepmother enuious
And laieth a plaister dolorous
Unto her hertes wounded egre
Whiche is not tempered with vinegre
But with pouerte and indigence
For to shewe by experience
That she is Fortune verelie
In whom no man should affie
Nor in her yeftes haue fiaunce
She is so ful of variaunce
Thus can she maken hie and lowe
Whan thei from richesse arne throwe
Fully to knowen without were Frende of affecte, and frende of chere
And whiche in loue weren trew and stable
And whiche also weren variable
After Fortune her goddesse

In pouerte, either in richelle
For all that yeueth here out of drede
Unhappe beareth it in dede
For in fortune lette not one
Of frendes, whan fortune is gone
I meane tho frendes that woll flie
I none as entreth pouerte
And yet thei wol not leaue hem so
But in eche place where thei go
Thei call hem wretche, scorne, and blame
And of her mishappe hem diffame
And namely suche as in richelle
Pretendeth moste of stablenelle
Whan that they sawe him set on lofte
And weren of hem sucoured ofte
And moste iholpe in all her nede
But now thei take no maner hede
But seine in voice of flaterie
That now appereth her folie
Ouer al wher so thei fare
And singe, go farewel felde fare
Al suche frendes I beschrewe
For of trewe there be to fewe
But sothfast frendes, what so betide
In euery fortune wollen abide Thei han her hertes in suche noblesse
That thei nil loue for no richelle
Nor for that fortune may hem sende
Thei wollen hem socour and defende
And chaunge for selte ne for sore
For who his frende loueth euermore
Though men drawe swerde his to slo
He may not bewe her loue a two
But in case that I shall say
For pride and ire lese it he may
And for reproue by nicete
And discouering of priuite
With tonge wounding, as felon
Through venemous detraccion
Frende in this case wol gon his way
For nothing greue him more ne may
And for nought els wol he flie
Al that he loue in stabilite
And certaine he is well begone
Among a thousande that findeth one
For there may be no richelle
Ayenst frendship of worthinesse
For it ne may so high attaine
Is may the valoure, sothe to saine
Of him that loueth trewe and well
Frendship is more than is catell
For frende in courte aie better is Than peny in purse certis
And fortune mishaping
Whan vpon men she is fabling
Through misturning of her chaunce
And cast hem out of balaunce
She maketh through her aduerlite
Men ful clerely for to se
Him that is frende in erisstence
From him that is by apparence
For in fortune maketh anone
To know thy frendes fro thy fone
By erperience right as it is
The whiche is more to praise iwis
Than in muche richelle and trefour
For more depe profite and valour
Pouertie, and suche aduerlite
Before, than doeth prosperite
For that one yeueth conisaunce
And the tother ignoraunce.
And thus in pouerte is in dede
Trouthe declared fro falschede
For saint frendes it wol declare
And trewe also, what way thei fare
For whan he was in his richelle
These frendes ful of doublenelle
Offred him in many wise
Herte and body, and seruice
What would he thē haue you to haue bought
To knowen openly her thought
That he now hath so clerely sene
The lasse begiled he should haue bene
And he had than perceiued it
But Richelle nolde not let him wit
Wel more auauntage doeth him than Sithe that it maketh him a wise man
The great mischefe that he perceiueth
Than doeth Richelle that him deceiueth
Richesse riche ne maketh nought
Him that on treasour sette his thought
For richelle stonte in sufficiaunce
And nothing in haboundaunce
For sufficiaunce all onely
Maketh menne to liue richely.

For he that hath mitches tweine
Ne value in his demeine
Liueth more at ease, and more is riche
Than doeth he that is chiche
And in his barne hath soth to saine
In hundred mauis of whete graine
Though he be chapman or marchaunt
And haue of Golde many besaunt
For in the getting he hath suche wo
And in the keping drede also
And lette euer more his besinelle
For to encreasle, and nat to lesse
For to augment and multiply
And though on heapes that lie him by yet

yet neuer shall make his richesse
Ylleth vnto his gredinesse
But the poore that retcheth nought
Saue of his liuelode in his thought
Whiche that he getteth with his trauaile
He dredeth nought that it shall faile
Though he haue little worldes good
Meate and drinke, and easie food
Upon his trauaile and liuing
And also sufficiaunt clothing
Or if in sickenesse that he fall
And lothe meate and drinke withall
Though he haue not his meate to buie
He shall bethinke him hastely
To put him out of all daungere
That he of meate hath no mistere
Or that he maie with little eke
Be founden, while that he is seke
Or that men shull him berne in haste
Colue till his sickenesse be paste
To some Marsonde we beside
Be caste nought what shall him betide Bethinketh nought that euer he shall Into any sickenesse fall.

And though it fall, as it maie be
That all be time spare shall he Is mokell as shall to him suffice
While he is sicke in any wise
He doeth for that he woll be Content with his pouerte
Without nede of any man.
So moche in little haue he can
He is a paide with his fortune
And for he will be importune
Unto no wight, ne onerous
For of her goodesse couetous
Therefore he spareth, it maie well been
His poore estate for to sustеen.

Or if him lacke not for to spare
But suffreth for the, as nat ye ware
It lacke it happeneth, as it maie
Right vnto his laste daie
And take the worlde as it would be
For euer in harte thinketh he
The soner that death him slo
To Paradise the soner go
He shall, there for to liue in blisse
Where that he shall no good misse
Thider he hopeth God shall him sende
After this wretched liues ende
Pythagoras himself reherses
In a booke that the gold verses
Is cleped, for the nobilite
Of the honorable dite.
Than whan thou goest thy body fro
Free in the heire thou shalt vp go
And leauen all humanite
And purely liue in diete
He is a foole withouten were
That troweth haue his countrey here
In yearth is not our countre
That maie these clerkes seine and se
In Boece of consolacion
Where it is maked mencion
Of our contre plaine at the ye
By teaching of Philosophie
Where leude men might lere wit
Who so that would translaten it
If he be suche that can well liue
After his rent, maie him yeue
And not desireth more to haue
Than maie fro pouerte him saue
A wiseman saied, as we maie seen
Is no man wretched, but he it ween
Be he king, knight, or ribaude
And many a ribaude is merie and baude
That swinketh, and bereth both daie & night
Many a burthen of greate might
The whiche doeth him lasse offence
For he suffreth in pacience
Thei laugh and daunce, trippe and sing
And late nought vp for her liuing
But in the Tauerne all dispendeth
The winning that God hem sendeth
Than goeth he lardels for to beere
With as good chere as he did care
To swinke and trauaile he not faineth
For to robben he disdaineth
But right anon, after his swinke
He goeth to Tauerne for to drinke
All these are riche in haboundaunce
That can thus haue sufficiaunce
Well more than can an vsurere
As God well knoweth, without were
For an vsurere, so God me se
Shall neuer for richesse riche be
But euer more poore and indigent
Scarce and gredy in his entent.

For sothe it is, whom it displease
There maie no marchaunt liue at ease
His harte in suche a where is set
That it quicke brenneth to get
Ne neuer shall, though he hath getten
Though he haue golde in garners yeten
For to be nedy he dredeth sore
Wherefore to getten more and more
He set his harte and his desire

So hote he brenneth in the fire
Of couetise that maketh him wood
To purchace other mennes good
He vnderfongeth a greate pain
That vndertaketh to drinke vp Seine
For the more he drinketh aie
The more he leaueth, the sothe to saie
Thus is thrust of false getting That laste euer in coueting
And the anguishe and distresse
With the fire of gredinesse
She fighteth with him aie, and striueth
That his harte a sonder riueth
Soche gredinesse him assaileth
That whan he moste hath, moste he faileth
Phisiciens, and Aduocates
Gone right by the same gates
Thei sell her science for winning
And haunte her craste for greate getting Her winning is of soche swetenesse
That if a man fall in sickenesse
Thei are full glad, for her encrease
For by her will, without lease
Eucriche man should be seke
And though thei die, thei set nat a leke
After whan thei the golde haue take Full little care for hem thei make Thei would that fourtie were sicke at ones
Ye twoo hundred, in flesche and bones
And yet twoo thousande, as I gesse
For to encreasen her richesse
Thei woll not worchen in no wise
But for lucre and couetise
For Phisicke ginneth first by (Phi)
The Phisicien also sothly
And sithen it goeth fro tie to tie
To trust on hem it is folie
For thei nill in no maner gre
Doe right nought for charite
Eke in the same secte are set
All tho that preachen for to get Worships, honour, and richesse
Her hartes arne in greate distresse
That folke liue not holily
But abouen all specially
Soche as preachen veinglorie
And toward God haue no memorie
But forthe as Ipocrites trace
And to her soules death purchace
And outward shewing holinesse
Though thei be full of cursednesse
Nat liche to the Apostles twelue
Thei deceiue other and hem selue
Begiled is the giler than
For preaching of a cursed man
Though to other maie profite
Himself it auaileth not a mite
For oft good predicacioun
Cometh of euill entencioun
To him nat daileth his preaching
All helpe he other with his teaching
For where thei good example take
There is he with veinglorie shake
But let vs leuen these preachours
And speake of hem that in her tours
Heape vp her golde, and fast shet
And sore thereon their harte set
Thei neither loue God ne drede
Thei kepe more than it is nede
And in her bagges sore it binde
Out of the Sunne, and of the winde
Thei put vp more than nede ware
Whan thei seen poore folke forfare
For hungre die, and for colde quake
God can well vengeaunce thereof take
The greate mischiues hem assaileth
And thus in gadring aie trauaileth
With muche pain thei winne richesse
And drede hem holdeth in distresse
To kepe that thei gather fast
With sorowe thei leaue it at the last
With sorowe thei bothe die and liue
That vnto richesse her hartes yeue
And in defaute of loue it is
As it sheweth full well i wis
For if these gredy, the sothe to saine
Loueden, and were loued againe
And good loue reigned ouer all
Soche wickednesse ne should fall
But he should yeue, that moste good had To hem that weren in nede bestad
And liue without false vsure
For charite, full cleane and pure
If thei hem yeue to goodnesse
Defending hem from idelnesse
In all this worlde than poore none
We should finde I trowe not one
But chaunged is this worlde vnstable
For loue is ouer all vendable
We se that no man loueth now
But for winning and for prowe
And loue is thralled in seruage
Whan it is solde for auauntage
Yet women woll her bodies sell
Soche soules goeth to the deuill of hell.

Whan Loue had tolde hem his entent
The baronage to counsaile went
In many sentences thei fill
And diuersly thei saied her will

But after discorde thei accorded
And her accorde to Loue recorded
Sir saiden thei, we ben at one
By euen accorde of euerichone
Out take richesse all onely
That swore hath full hauteinly
That she the castell will not assaile
Ne smite a stroke in this battaile
With darte ne mace, speare, ne knife
For man that speaketh, or beareth the life
And blameth your empryse iwis
And from our hoste departed is
At least waie, as in this plite
So hath she this man in dispite
For she saieth he ne loued her neuer
And therefore she woll hate him euer
For he woll gather no treasore
He hath her wrathe for euermore
He agilte her neuer in other caas
Lo here all holly his trespas
She saieth well, that this other daie
He asked her leaue to gone the waie
That is cleped to moche peuing
And spake full faire in his prayeng
But whan he prayed her, poore was he Therefore she warned him the entre
Yet yet is he not thriuen so
That he hath getten a penie or two
That quietly is his owne in holde
Thus hath Richesse vs all tolde
And whan Richesse vs this recorded Withouten her we been accorded

And we finde in our accordaunce
That false Semblant and Abstinaunce
With all the folke of her battaile
Shull at the hinder gate assaile
That wicked tong hath in keping
With his Normans full of iangling
And with hem Curtesie and Largesse
That shull shewe her hardinesse
To the old wife that kept so hard
Faire welcoming within her ward
Than shall Delite and well Heling
Fonde, Shame adoune to bring
With all her hoste early and late
Thei shull assailen that ilke gate
Against Drede shall Hardinesse
Assaile, and also Sikernesse
With all the folke of her leading
That neuer wiste what was slaying.

Fraunchise shall fight and eke Pite
With Daunger full of cruelte
This is your hoste ordained weale
Doune shall the Castell euery deale
If eueriche doe his entent
So that Venus be present
Your mother full of vesselage
That can inough of sothe vsage
Withouten her aide no wight spede
This werke, neither for worde ne dede
Therefore is good ye for her sende
For through her aide this worke amende.

I Ordinges my mother the Goddes
That is my Ladie, and my maistres Nis nat all at my willing:
Ne doeth nat all my desiring.
Yet can she sometime doen labour
Whan that her lust in my socour
As my nede is for to atcheue
But now I thinke her nat to greue
My mother is she, and of childhede
I bothe worship her, and eke drede
For who that dredeth sire ne dame
Shall it abie in bodie or name
And natheless, yet conne we Sende after her if nede be
And were she nigh she commen would I trowe that nothing might her hold.

My mother is of greate prowesse
She hath tane many a forteresse
That cost hath many a pound er this
There I nas not present iwis
And yet men saied it was my deede
But I come neuer in that stede
Neme ne liketh so mote I thee
That soche tours been take with me
For why: Me thinketh that in no wise
It aught be cleped but marchaundise.

Go buie a courser blacke or white
And paie therefore, than art thou quite
The Marchaunt oweth thee right nought
Ne thou him whan thou it bought
I woll not selling clepe peuing
For selling asketh no guerdoning
Here lithe no thanke, ne no merite
That one goth from that other all quite
But this selling is not semblable
For whan his horse is in the stable
He maie it sell again parde
And winnen on it, soche happe maie be
All maie the manne nat lese iwis
For at the least the shinne is his Or els, if it so betide
That he woll kepe his horse to ride
Yet is he Lorde aie of his horse

But

But thilke chaffare is well worse
There Venus entremeteth ought
For who so seche chaffare hath bought
He shall not worchen so wisely
That he ne shall lese all vtterly
Bothe his money, and his chaffare
But the seller of the ware
The prise and profite haue shall Certaine the buier shall lese all
For he ne can so deare it buie
To haue Lordship, and full maistrie
Ne haue power to make letting Neither for yelle ne for preaching
That of his chaffare maugre his
In other shall haue as moche i wis
If he woll yeue as moche as he
Of what countrey so that he be
Or for right nought so happe maie
If he can flatter her to her paie
Been than soche marchauntes wise?
No, but fooles in euery wise
Whan thei buie soche thing wilfully
There as thei lese her good folily
But natheless, this dare I saie
My mother is not wont to paie
For she is neither so foole ne nice
To entremete her of soche vice
But trust well, he shall paie all That repent of his bargaine shall Whan pouerte put him in distresse
Ill were he scholer to Richesse
That is for me in greate yerning
Whan she assenteth to my willing.

But my mother sainct Venus
And by her father Saturnus
That her engendred by his life
But nat vpon his wedded wife
Yet woll I more vnto you swere
To make this thing the surere.
Now by that faithe, and that beaute
That I owe to all my brethren free
Of whiche there nis wight vnder heuin
That can her fathers names neuin
So diuers and so many there be
That with my mother haue be priue
Yet woll I sweare for likernesse
The Pole of helle to my witnesse
Now drinke I not this yere clarre
If that I lie, or forswore be
For of the Goddes the vlage is That who so him forswereth amis
Shall that yere drinke no clarre
Now haue I swore inough parde
If I forsweare me than am I lorne
But I woll neuer be forsworne
Sithe Richesse hath me sailed here
She shall abie that trespas full dere
At least waie but her harme
With swearde, or sparth, or gisarme
For certes sithe she loueth not me
Fro thilke time that she maie se
The castell and the toure to shake
In sorie time she shall awake
If I maie gripe a riche man
I shall so pulle him, if I can
That he shall in a fewe stoundes
Lese all his markes, and his poundes
I shall him make his pens out fling
But thei in his garner spring
Our maidens shall eke plucke him so
That him shall neden fethers mo
And make him sell his londe to spende
But he the bet conne him defende.

Poore men han made her Lorde of me
Although thei nat so mightie be
That thei maie fede me in delite
I woll not haue hem in dispite
No good man hateth hem, as I gesse
For chinche and leoun is Richesse
That so can chase hem and dispise
And hem defoule in sondrie wise
Thei louen full bette, so God me spede
Than doeth the riche chinchy grede
And been (in good faithe) more stable
And truer, and more seruiable
And therefore it suffiseth me
Her good harte, and her beaute
Thei han on me set all her thought
And therefore I forzete hem nought
I woll hem bring in greate nobleie
If that I were God of Richesse
As I am God of Loue sothely
Soche ruthe vpon her plaint haue I Therefore I must his succour be
That paineth him to seruen me
For if he deied for loue of this Than semeth in me no loue there is.

Sir saied thei, sothe is euery dele
That ye reherce, and we wote wele
Thilke othe to holde is reasonable
For it is good and couenable
That ye on riche men han sworne
For sir, this wote we well before
If riche men doen you homage
That is as fooles doen outrage
But ye shull not forswore be Ne let therefore to drinke clarrie

Oyniment maried freshe and newe
Ladies shull hem sothe pepir brewe
If that thei fall into her laas
That thei for wo mowe saine alas
Ladies shullen euer so curteis be
That thei shall quite your othe all fre
Ne leketh neuer other vicaire
For thei shall speake with him so faire
That ye shall holde you paied full wele
Though ye you medle neuer a deale
Let Ladies worche with her thinges
Thei shall hem tell so fele tidinges
And moue hem eke so many requestes
By flatterie, that not honest is
And thereto yeue hem sothe thankinges
What with kissing, and with talkinges
That certes if thei trowed be Shall neuer leaue hem londe ne see
That it mill as the moeble fare
Of whiche thei first deliuered are Now maie you tell vs all your will
And we your hestes shall fulfill.

What false Semblant dare not for drede
Of you sir, medle him of this deede
For he saieth, that ye been his so
Be not, if ye woll worche him wo
Wherefore we praie you all beau sire
That ye forgeue him nowe your ire
And that he maie dwell as your man
With Abstinence his deare lemman
This our accorde and our will now
Parfei saied Loue, I graunt it you
I woll well holde him for my man
Now let him come, and he forthe ran False Semblant (q Loue) in this wise
I take thee here to my seruice
That thou our frendes helpe alwaie
And hindereth hem neither night ne daie
But doe thy might hem to releue
And eke our enemies that thou greue
Thine be this might, I graunt it thee
Thy hing of harlotes shalt thou bee
We woll that thou haue sothe honour
Certain thou art a false traitour
And eke a thief, sithe thou were borne
A thoulande times thou art forsworne
But natheless in our hearing
To put our folke out of doubting
I bidde thee teache hem, wost thou how
By some generall signe now
In what place thou shalt founden be
If that men had mister of thee
And how men shall thee best espie
For thee to knowe is greate maistrie
Tell in what place is thine haunting
Sir I haue full diuers wonning
That I hope not rehearsed be
So that ye would respiten me
For if that I tell you the sothe
I maie haue harme and shame bothe
If that my felowes wisten it
My tales shoulden me be quit
For certaine thei would hate me
If euer I knewe her cruelte
For thei would ouer all holde hem still
Of trothe, that is again her will Sothe tales kepen thei not here
I might eftsone buie it full dere
If I saied of hem any thing
That ought displeaseth to her hearing
For what worde that hem pricketh or biteth
In that worde none of hem deliteth
All were it Gospell the Euangile
That would reproue hem of her gile
For thei are cruell and hautain
And this thing wote I well certain
If I speake ought to paire or loos
Your courte shall not so well be cloos
That thei ne shall wite it at last
Of good men am I nought agast
For thei woll taken on hem nothing
Whan that thei knowe all my meaning
But he that woll it on him take
He woll himself suspecious make
That he is like let couertly
In gile and in Ypocrisie
That me engendred and yaue forth ring
Thei made a full good engendring
(q Loue) for who so sothly tell
Thei engendred the diuell of hell.

But nedely, how so euer it be (q Loue) I will and charge thee
To tell anon thy wonning places Hearing eche wight that in this place is
And what life thou liuest also Hide it no lenger now, whereto?
Thou must discouer all thy worching
How thou seruest, and of what thing
Though that thou shouldest for thy soth saw
Been alto beaten and to drawe
And yet art thou not wont parde
But natheless, though thou beaten be Thou shalt not be the first that so
Hath for sothsawe suffred wo.

Sir, sithe that it maie liken you
Though that I should be slain right now
I shall doen your commaundement

For

For thereto haue I greate talent.

Withouten wordes mo, right than False Semblant his sermon began
And saied hem thus in audience
Barons, take hede of my sentence
That wight that list to haue knowing
Of false Semblant, full of flattering
He must in worldly folke him sette
And certes in the Cloisters ete
I won no where, but in hem twaie
But not like euen, sothe to saie
Shortly I woll herberowe me
There I hope best to hullred be
And certainly, liherest hiding
Is vnderneth humblest clothing
Religious folke been full coyert
Seculer folke been more appert
But natheless, I woll not blame
Religious folke, ne hem diffame
In what habite that euer thei go
Religion humble, and true also Woll I not blame, ne dispise
But I nill loue it in no wise
I meane of false religious
That stout been, and malicious
That wollen in an habite go
And setten not her harte therto.

Religious folke been all pitous
Thou shalt not seen one dispitous
Thei louen no pride, ne no strife
But humbly thei woll lede her life
With whiche folke woll I neuer be
And if I dwell, I faine me
I maie well in her habite go
But me were leuer my necke a two Than let a purpose that I take What couenaunt that euer I make
I dwell with hem that proude be
And full of wiles and subtelte
That worship of this worlde coueiten
And greate nede connen erpleiten
And gon and gadren greate pitaunces
And purchase hem the acqueintaunces
Of men that mightie life maie leden
And faine hem poore, and hem self feden
With good morcels delicious
And drinken good wine precious
And preache vs pouert and distresse
And filthen hem self greate richesse
With wily nettes, that thei cast
It woll come foule out at the last Thei been fro cleane religion went Thei make the worlde an argument
That hath a foule conclusion
I haue a robe of religion
Than am I all religious
This argument is all roignous
It is not worthe a croked Bere
Habite ne maketh neither Monke ne frere
But cleane life and deuocion
Maketh good men of religion
Natheless, there can none answere
How high that euer his hedde he bere
With ralour whetted neuer so kene
That gile in braunches cutte thurtene
There can no wight distinct it so
That he dare saie a worde therto.
But what herberowe that euer I take Or what semblaunt that euer I make I meane but gile, and folowe that
For right no more than Gibbe our cat (That awaiteth Mice and Rattes to killen
Ne entende I but to begilen
Ne no wight maie, by my clothing
Wete with what folke is my dwelling
Ne by my wordes yet parde
So soft and so pleasaunt thei be Beholde the deedes that I doe
But thou be blinde thou oughtest so
For varie her wordes fro her deede
Thei thinke on gile without drede
What maner clothing that thei were Or what estate that euer thei bere
Lered or lewde, Lorde or Ladie
Knight, Squier, Burgeis, or Bailie.

Right thus while faire Sēblāt sermoned
Eft sones Loue him aresoneth
And brake his tale in his speaking
As though he had him tolde leasing
And saied: what deuill is that I heare
What folke hast thou vs nempned here
Maie men finde religioun
In worldly habitacioun
Ye sir, it foloweth nat that thei
Should leade a wicked life parfei
Ne not therefore her soules lese
That hem to worldly clothes chese
For certes it were greate pite
Men maie in seculer clothes se
Florishen holy religioun
Full many a sainct in selde and toun
With many a virgine glorious Deuoute, and full religious Han died, that commen clothe aie beren
Yet sainctes neuertheselle thei weren
I could recken you many a ten
Ye welnigh all these holy women

That men in churches herry and seke
Vothe maidens, and these wiues eke
That baren ful many a faire childe here
Beared alway clothes seculere
And in the same diden they
That saintes weren, and ben alway.
The. ir. thoulande maidens dere
That beren in heuen her cierges clere
Of whiche men rede in churche and sing
Were take in seculer clothing
Whan thei receiued martirdome
And wonnen heuen vnto her home
Good hert maketh the good thought
The clothing yeueth ne reueth nought
The good thought and the worching
That maketh the religion flouring
There lieth the good religioun
After the righte entencioun.

Who so toke a wethers skinne
And wrapped a gredy woulfe therinne
For he should go with lambes white
Weneth thou not he would hem bite?
Yes: Neuertheleſſe, as he were wood
He would hem wirry, and drinke the blood
And wel the rather hem disceiue
For sithe thei coude nat perceiue
His tregette, and his cruelte
Thei would him folow al tho he flie.

If there be wolues of suche hewe
Amonges these Apostles newe
Thou holy churche ꝑ maiste be wailed
Seeing that thy cite is assailed
Through knightes of thine owne table
God wot thy lordship is doutable
If thei enforce it to win
That should defende it fro within Who might defence ayenst hem make Without stroke it mote be take
Of trepeget or mangonell
Without displayng of penoell
And if God nil done it socour
But let renne in this colour
Thou must thy heeſles letten be Than is there nought, but yelde the
Or yeue him tribute doutles
And holde it of hem to haue pees
But greater harme betide the
That thei all maister of it be Wel con thei scorne the withall
By day stuffen thei the wall
And al the night thei minen there
Nay, thou planten muſte els where Thine impes, if thou wolt frute haue
Abide not there thy selfe to saue.

But now peace, here I turne againe
I wol no more of this thing saine
Yet I may passen me hereby
I might maken you wery
But I wol heten you alway
To helpe your frendes what I may
So thei wollen my company
For thei be shent al vtterly
But if so fal, that I be Ofte with hem, and thei with me
And eke my lemman mote thei serue
Or thei shul not my loue deserue
Forsoth I am a false traitour
God iudged me for a these trechour
Forsworne I am, but wel nigh none
Wote of my gile, til it be done.

Through me hath many one deth receiued
That my treget neuer aperceiued
And yet receiueth, and shal receiue
That my falsnesse shal neuer aperceiue
But who so doth, if he wise be Him is right good beware of me
But so slighe is tye aperceiuing
That al to late cometh knowing
For Protheus that coude him chaunge
In euery shappe, homely and straunge
Coude neuer suche gile ne treasoune
As I, for I come neuer in toune
There as I might knowen be Though men me both might here
Ful wel I can my clothes chaunge
Take one, and make an other straunge
Now am I knight, now Chastelaine
Now Prelate, and now Chaplaine
Now Priest, now Clerke, now Fostere
Now am I maister, now Scholere
Now Monke, now Chanon, now Bailly
What euer mister manne am I
Now am I Prince, now am I Page
And can by hart euery langage
Somtime am I hoore and olde
Now am I yong, stoute, and bolde
Now am I Robert, now Robin
Now Frere Minor, now Jacobin
And with me soloweth my loteby
To done me solace and company
That hight dame Abstinence, and raigned
In many a queint arraie fained
Right as it commeth to her liking
I fulfill all her desiring Somtime a womans cloth take I
Now am I a Maide, now Lady

Somtime I am religious
Now like an Anker in an hous
Somtime am I priorelle
And now a Nonne, and now Abbelle
And go through al religiouns
Seking all religiouns
But to what order that I am swore
I take the strawe and beate the corne
To idle folke I enhabite
I aske no more but her habite
What wol ye more in euery wise
Right as me list I me disguise.
Wel can I beare me vnder wede
Unlike is my worde to my dede
Thus make I into my trappes fall
The people, through my priuileges all
That ben in christendome a liue
I may assoile, and I make shriue
That no Prelate may let me
All folke, where euer thei founde be
I not no Prelate make done so
But it the Pope be, and no mo
That made thilke establishing
Now is not this a proper thing?
But were my sleightes aperceiued
As I was wont, and wost thou why?
For I did hem a tregetry
But therof peue I a litel tale
I haue the siluer and the male
So haue I preched and eke shriuen
So haue I take, so haue I peuen
Through her folly, husbonde and wife
That I lede right a holy life
Through simplesse of the Prelacie
Thei knowe not all my tregettrie.

But for as moche as man and wife
Shuld shew her parish Priest her life
Ones a yere, as saith the Boke
Er any wight his housel toke
Than haue I priuileges large
That make of muche thing discharge
For he may say right thus parde
Sir priest, in shrifte I tel it the
That he to whom that I am shriuen Hath me assoiled, and me peuen
Penaunce lothly for my sin
Whiche that I founde me giltie in Ne I ne haue neuer entencion
To make double confession.
Ne reherce efte my shrift to the O shrifte is right inough to me
This ought the suffise wele
Ne be not rebell neuer a dele
For certes, though thou haddest it swore
I wote no Priest ne Prelate borne
That maie to shrift eft me constraine
And if thei done I wol me plaine
For I wote where to plaine wele
Thou shalt not streine me a dele
Ne enforce me, ne not me trouble
To make my confession double Ne I haue none affection
To haue double absolucion
The first is right inough to me
This latter assoiling quite I the
I am vnbounde, what maist thou finde
More of my sinnes me to vnbinde
For he that might hath in his honde
Of all my sinnes me vnbonde
And if thou wolt me thus constraine
That me mote nedes on the plaine
There shall no iuge imperiall
Ne bishop, ne officiall
Done iugement on me, for I Shal gone and plaine me openly vnto my shriftfather newe
That hight Frere wolfe vntrewe
And he shal chuse him for me
For I trowe he can hamper the
But lord he would be wrothe withall
Yf men would him Frere wolfe call
For he would haue no pacience
But done all cruell vengience
He would his might done at the leest
Nothing spare for goddes heest
And God so wise be my socour
But thou peue me my sauiour
Ut Sester, whan it liketh me
Without prealing more on the
I wol forth, and to him gone
And he shal housel me anone
For I am out of thy grutching
I kepe not deale with the nothing
Thus may he shriue him, that forsaketh
His parish priest, and to me taketh
And if the priest wol him refuse
I am full redy him to accuse
And him punish and hamper so
That he his churche shal for go

But who so hath in his seling
The consequence of suche shriuing Shal sene, that priest may neuer haue might
To know the conscience a right
Of him, that is vnder his cure
And this is ayenst holy scripture
That biddeth euery herde honest
Haue bery knowing of his beest
But pore folke that gon by strete

That haue no golde, ne summes grete
Hem would I let to her Prelates
Or let her Prestes know her estates
For to me right nought yeue thei
And why it is, for thei ne may Thei ben so bare, I take no kepe
But I woll haue the fat shepe
Let parish Prestes haue the lene
I yeue not of her harme a bene
And if that Prelates grutche it
That oughten woth be in her wit
To lese her fat beestes so
I shall yeue hem a strote or two
That thei shal lesen with force
Ye, both her Mitre and her Croce
Thus iape I hem, and haue do longe
By priuileges ben so stronge.

False Semblant would haue stinted here
But Loue ne made him no suche chere
That he was wery of his sawe
But for to make him glad and fawe
He said, tel on more specially
How that thou seruest vntruly
Tel forth, and shame the neuer a dele
For as thine habit sheweth wele
Thou seruest an holy Heremite
Sothe is, but I am but an ipocrite
Thou goest and precheste pouerte:
Ye sir, but richesse hath poste
Thou precheste abstinence also:
Sir, I wol fillen so mote I go
My paunche, of good meate and wine
Is should a maister of diuine
For how that I me poore faine
Yet al poore folke I disdaine.

I Loue better the acqueintaunce
Ten times of the king of Fraunce
Than of a poore man of milde mode
Though that his soule be also good
For whan I se beggers quaking
Naked on mixins all stinking
For hungre crie, and eke for care
I entremet not of her fare
Thei ben so poore, and ful of pine Thei might not ones yeue me a dine
For thei haue nothing but her life
What should he yeue that licheth his knife?
It is but folye to entremete
To seke in houndes nest fat mete
Let beare him to the spittle anone
But for me, comfort get thei none
But a riche sicke vsurere
Would I visite and drawe nere
Him would I comforte and rehete
For I hope of his golde to gete
And if that wicked death him haue
I woll go with him in his graue
And if there any reproue me
Why that I let the poore be Wost thou how I not escape
I say and swere him full rape
That riche men han more tetches
Of sinne, than han poore wretches
And han of counsaile more mister
And therfore I would drawe hem ner
But as great hurt, it maie so be Hath a soule in right great pouerte
As soule in great richesse forsothe
Al be it that thei hurten bothe
For richesse and mendicitees
Bene cleped two extremitees
The meane is cleped Sufficiaunce
The there lieth of vertue the aboundance
For Salomon full wel I wote
In his Parables vs wrote
As it is knowen of many a wight
In his thirtene chapiter right
God thou me kepe for thy poste
Fro richesse and mendicite
For if a riche man him dresse
To thinke to moche on richesse
His hert on that so ferre is sette
That he his creatour doth forgette
And him that beggeth wol aie greue
How should I by his worde him leue
Unneth that he nis a micher
For sworne, or els goddes lier
Thus saith Salomon sawes
Ne we finde written in no sawes
And namely in our christen laie
Who saith ye, I dare say naie
That Christ, ne his Apostels dete
While that thei walked in earth here
Were neuer seen herbred begging
For they nolden beggen for nothing
And right thus were men wont to teche
And in this wise would it preche
The maisters of diuinite
Somtime in Paris the cite.

And if men would there gaine appose
The naked texte and let the glose
It might soone assoiled be
For men may wel the sothe se
That pardie thei might aske a thing
Plainly forth without begging
For they weren goddes heerdes dere
And cure of soules hadden here

Thei nolde nothing begge her foode
For after Christ was done on roode
With their proper hondes thei wrought
And with traueile, and els nought
Thei wonnen al her sustenaunce
And liueden forth in her penaunce
And the remenaunt yaf awaie
To other poore folkes alwaie
Thei neither bilden toure ne halle
But thei in houses smal with alle
A mighty man that can and maie
Should with his honde and body alwaie
Winne him his foode in labouring
Yf he ne haue rent or suche a thing,
Although he be religious
And God to seruen curious
Thus mote he done, or do trespas
But if it be in certaine caas
That I can reherce, if mister be Right wel, whan the time I se.

Seke the boke of sainte Augustine
Be it in paper or perchemene
There as he writte of these worchinges
Thou shalt sene that none excusinges
A perfite man ne should seke
By wordes, ne by dedes eke
Although he be religious
And God to seruen curious
That he ne shal, so mote I go
With proper hondes, and body also Get his foode in laboring
Yf he ne haue proprete of thing
Yet should he sel all his substaunce
And with his swinke haue sustenaunce
If he be parfite in bounte
Thus han the bokes tolde me
For he that wol gone idelly
And bleth it aie beslly
To haunten other mennes table
He is a trechour ful of fable
Ne he ne maie by good reason
Excuse him by his orison
For men behoueth in some gise
Ben somtime in goddes seruise
To gone and purchasen her nede
Then mote eaten, that is no drede
And slepe, and eke do other thing
So long may thei leaue praying
So may they eke her praier blinne
While that thei werke her meate to winne
Seint Austin wol therto accorde
In thilke boke that I recorde
Austintan eke, that made lawes
Hath thus forboden by olde sawes.

No man, by paine to be deed
Mighty of body, to begge his breed
Yf he may swinke it for to gete
Men should him rather maime or bete
Or done of him aperte iustice
Than sustren him in suche malice
Thei done not wel so mote I go
That taken suche almesse so
But if thei haue some priuilege
That of the paine hem woll alege
But how that is, can I not se
But if the prince disceiued be Ne I ne wene not sikerly
That thei maie haue it rightfully
But I wol not determine
Of princes power, ne define
Ne by my worde comprehende iwis
Yf it so ferre may stretche in this
I wol not entremete a dele
But I trowe that the boke saith wele
Who that taketh almesses, that be Newe to folke that men may se
Lame, feble, wery, and bare
Poore, or in suche maner care
That con winne hem neuer mo
For thei haue no power therto
He eateth his owne dampning
But if he lie, that made al thing
And if ye suche a truaunt finde
Chastise him wel, if ye be hinde
But thei would hate you parcaas
If ye fillen in her laas
Thei would eftsones do you scathe
If that thei might, late or rathe
For thei be not ful pacient
That han the world thus foule blent
And weteth wel, that God bad
The good man sell al that he had
And folowe him, and to poore it yeue
He would not therfore that he liue
To seruen him in mendience
For it was neuer his sentence
But he bad werken, when that nede is
And folowe him in good dedes
Saint Poule that loued al holy church
He bade the Apostels for to wurch
And winnen her liuelode in that wise
And hem defended truandise
And said, werketh with your honden
Thus should the thing be vnderstonden
He nolde iwis haue bid hem begging
Fre sellen godspell, ne preching
Lest thei berafte, with her asking
Folke of her catel or of her thing
For in this world is many a man

That

That yeueth his good for he ne can Werne it for shame, or els he Would of the asker deliuered be
And for he him encombreth so
He yeueth him good to let him go
But it can him nothing profite
Thei lese the yefte and the merite
The good folke that Poule to preched
Profred him ofte, whan he hem teched
Some of her good in charite
But therof right nothing toke he
But of his honde would he gette
Clothes to winne him and his mete.

Tell me than how a man may liuen
That al his good to pore hath yeuen
And wol but onely bidde his bedes
And neuer with hondes labour his nedes
May he do so: Ye sir: And how wel
Sir: I woll gladly tel you
Saint Austen saith, a man may be
In houses that han properte
Is templers, and hospitelers
And as these Chanons regulers
Or white Monkes, or these blacke
I wol no mo exsamples make
And take the thereof his sufficeining
For therin lithe no begging
But otherwaies not I wis
Yet Austen gabbeth not of this
And yet ful many a Monke laboureth
That God in holy Churche honoureth
For whan her swinking is agon
Thei rede and sing in Church anone

And for there hath ben great discorde
Is many a wight may beare recorde
Upon the estate of mendicience
I wol shortely in your presence
Tell how a man mate begge at nede
That hath not wherwith him to fede
Maugre his felowes ianglinges
For slothfastnes wol none hidinges
And yet perase I may obey
That I to you sothly thus sey.

Where the case especiall
If a man be so bestiall
That he of no crafte hath science
And nought desireth ignorence
Than may he go a begging yerne
Till he some other crafte can lerne
Through whiche without truanding
He may in trouthe haue his liuing
Or if he may done no labour
For elde, or sickenesse, or langour
Or for his tender age also Than may he yet a begging go
Or if he haue peraventure
Through vsage of his norriture
Liued ouer deliciously
Than oughten good folke comenly
Han of his mischefe some pite
And suffren him also, that he May gon about and begge his bred
That he be not for honger ded
Or if he haue of crafte conning
And strength also, and desiring
To worchen, as he had what
But he finde neither this ne that Than may he begge till that he
Haue getten his necessite
Or if his winning be so lite
That his labour wol not a quite Sufficiauntly al his liuing
Yet may he go his bred begging
Fro dore to dore, he may go trace
Till he the remnaunt may purchase
Or if a man would vndertake
Any emprise for to make
In the rescous of our lay
And it defenden as he may Be it with armes, or lettrure
Or other conuenable cure
If it be so he poore be
Than may he begge, till that he
Maie finde in trouth for to swinke
And get him clothe, meate, and drinke
Swinke he with his hondes corporel
And not with hondes espirituel.

In all this case, and in semblables
If that there ben mo reasonables
He maie begge, as I tell you here
And els not, in no manere
As William saint Amour would preche
And ofte would dispute and teche
Of this mater all openly
At Paris full solemply
And also God my soule blesse
As he had in this stedfastnesse
The acorde of the vniuersite
And of the people, as semeth me.

No good man ought it to refuse
Ne ought him thereof to excuse
Be wrothe or blithe, who so be
For I wol speke, and tell it the Al should I die, and be put doun
As was saint Poule in derke prisoun

Or be exiled in this caas
With wrong, as maister William was That my mother Hipocrisie
Banished for her great enuie.

My mother semed him saint Amour
This noble did suche labour
To sustene euer the loialte
That he to muche agilte me
He made a boke, and let it write
Wherin his life he did all write
And would eche renied begging
And liue by my trauciling
If I ne had rent ne other good
What weneth he that I were wood?
For labour might me neuer please
I haue more will to ben at ease
And haue well leuer, sothe to saie
Before the people patter and praie
And wrie me in my forrere
Under a cope of papelardie.
(Q Loue) what diuel is this that I here
What wordes tellest thou me here
What sir Falsenesse that apert is Than dredest thou not God? No certis
For selde in great thing shal he spede
In this world, that God wol drede
For solke that hem to vertue peuen
And truely on her owne liuen
And hem in goodnesse aie contente
On hem is litel thrifte isente
Suche folke drinken great miseie
That life may me neuer plese
But se what golde han vserers
And siluer eke in garners
Tailagiers, and these moniours
Bailiffes, Bedels, Prouost, Countours
These liuen well nigh by rauine
The smale people hem mote encline
And thei as wolues wol hem eten
Upon the poore folke thei geten
Ful muche of that thei spende or kepe
Nis none of hem that he nil strepe
And wrine hem selfe well at full Without scalding, thei hem pull
The strong the feble ouergothe
But I that weare my simple clothe
Robbe bothe robbing and robbours
And gile giling, and gilours
By my treget, I gather and threlle
The great treasour into my chelle
That lieth with me so fast bounde
Myn high paleis do I founde
And my delites I fulfill
With wine at feestes, at my will
And tables ful of entremees
I wol no life, but ease and pres
And winne golde to spende also
For whan the great bagge is go
It cometh right with my iapes
Make I not wel tomble mine apes
To winnen is alwaie mine entent
My purchace is better than my rent
For though I should beten be Ouer al I entremet me
Without me maie no wight dure
I walke soules for to cure
Of all the world cure haue I
In brede and length boldly
I wol bothe preche, and eke counsaillen
With hondes wol I not trauaillen
For of the Pope I haue the bull
I ne holde not my wittes dull
I wol not stinten in my liue
These Emperours for to thriue
Of Kinges, Dukes, and Lordes grete
But poore folke al quite I lette
I loue no suche thriuing parde
But it for other cause be
I reche not of poore men
Her estate is not worthe an hen
Wher findest thou a swinker of labour
Haue me to his confessour
But Empresses, and Duchesses
These Quenes, and eke Countesses
These Abbesses, and eke Bigins
These great Ladies palasins
These holy Knightes, and Bailiues
These Nonnes, and these Burgeis wines
That Riche ben, and eke pleding
And these Maidens welfaring
Where so thei clad or naked be Uncounsailed goeth there none fro me
And for her soules saucte
At Lorde and Lady, and her meine
I aske, whan thei hem to me thriue
The properte of al her liue
And make hem trowe, both mosse and lees
Her parish Priest is but a beest
Ayens me and my company
That shrewes ben as great (as I)
For whiche I wol not hide in holde
No priuete that me is tolde
That I by worde or signe iwis
Ne wol make hem know what it is
And thei wollen also tellen me
Thei hele fro me no priuite
And for to make you hem perceiuen
That vsen folke thus to deceiuen
I wol you saine withouten drede what men maie in the Gospell rede

Of saincte Mathewe the Gospellere
That saieth, as I shall you saie here.

Upon the chaire of Moses
Thus it is glosed doubtles (That is the olde Testament for thereby is the chaire ment)
Sitte Scribes and Pharisen
That is to saine, the cursed men
Whiche that we Ypocrites call
Doeth that thei preache I rede you all
But doeth not as thei doen a deale
That been not wearie to saie weale
But to doe well, no will haue thei
And thei would binde no folke alwaie
That been to begiled able Burdons that been importable
On folkes shoulders thinges thei couchen
That thei nill with their fingers touchen
And why woll thei not touche it why?
For hem ne liste nat sikerly
For sadde burdons that men taken
Bake folkes shoulders aken
And if thei doe ought that good be
That is for folke it should se
Her burdons larger maken thei
And maken her hemmes wide alwaie
And louen seates at the table
The first, and moste honourable
And for to han the first chairis
In Synagogges, to hem full dere is
And willen that folke hem loute and grete
Whan that thei passen through the strete
And wollen be cleped maister also
But thei ne should not willen so
The Gospell is there ayenst I gesse
That sheweth well her wickednesse.

No other custome vse we
Of hem that woll ayenst vs be
We hate him dedly euery chone
And we woll werrey him, as one
Him that one hateth, hate we all
And coniecte, how to doen him fall
And if we seen him winne honour
Richesse or preise, through his valour
Prouende, rent, or dignite
Full fast iwis compassen we
By what ladder he is clomben so
And for to maken him doune to go
With traison we woll him defame
And doen him lese his good name
Thus from his ladder we him take
And thus his frendes foes we make
But worde ne wete shall he none
Till all his frendes been his fone
For if we did it openly
We might haue blame redily
For had he wiste of our malice
He had him kept, but he were nice.

In other is this, that if so fall
That there be one emong vs all
That doeth a good tourne, out of drede
We saine it is our alder deede
Ye sikerly, though he it fained
Or that him liste, or that him dained
I man through him auaunced be Thereof all parceners be we
And tellen folke, where so we go
That man through vs is sprongen so
And for to haue of men praising
We purchace through our flattering
Of riche men of greate posse
Letters, to witnesse our bounte
So that man wenneth that maie vs se
That all vertue in vs be
And alwaie poore we vs fain
But how so that we begge or plain
We been the folke without leasing
That all thing haue without hauing
Thus be dradde of the people twis
And gladly my purpose is this.
I deale with no wight, but he Haue golde and treasour greate plente
Her acquaintaunce well loue I
This moche my desire shortly
I entremete me of brocages
I make peace, and mariages
I am gladly executour
And many times a procuratour
I am sometime messagere
That falleth not to my mistere
And many times I make enquest
For me that office is nat honest
To deale with other mennes thing
That is to me a greate liking
And if that ye haue ought to doe
In place that I repaire to
I shall it speden through my witte
As sone as ye haue told me it
So that ye serue me to paie
My seruice shall be yours alwaie
But who so woll chastice me
Anone my loue loste hath he
For I loue no man in no gise
That woll me reproue or chastise
But I woll all folke vndertake
And of no wight no teaching take

For I that other folke chastie
Woll not be taught fro my folie.

I Loue none hermitage more
Il desertes, and holtes hoore
And great woodes euerichone
I let hem to the Baptist Jhon
I queth him quite and him relelle
Of Egipt all the wildernelle
To ferre were all my mansions
Fro all citees and good touns
My paleis and mine houle make I
There men maie renne in openly
And saie that I the worlde forsake
But all amidde I builde, and make My house, and swimme and plaie therein
Bette than a fithe doeth with his sinne.

Of Antechristes men am I
Of whiche that Christ saieth openly
Thei haue habite of holinelle
And liuen in soche wickednelle
To the eopie, if him talent tooke
Of the Euangelistes booke
There might he se by greate traisoun
Full many a false comparisoun
As moche as through his greate might Be it of heate or of light
The Sunne surmounteth the Mone
That troubler is, and chaungeth sone
And the nutte kirneil the sheil
I shorne nat that I you tell
Right so withouten any gile
Surmounteth this noble Euangile
The worde of any Euangelist
And to her title thei token Christ
And many soche comparisoun
Of whiche I make no mencioun
Might men in that booke finde
Who so could of hem haue minde.

The vniuersite that tho was a slepe
Gan for to braied, and taken kepe
And at the noise, the hedde vp cast
Ne neuer sithen slept it fast
But vp it stert, and armes tooke
Ayenst this false horrible booke
Il redy battaile for to make
And to the Judge the booke thei take
But thei that broughten the booke there
Hent it anone awaie for feare
Thei nolde shewe it no more a deale
But than it kept, and kepen weale
Till soche a time that thei maie se
That thei so strong woren be
That no wight maie hem well withstonde
For by that booke thei durst not stonde
I waie thei gonne it for to bere
For thei ne durst not answere
By exposicion no gloose
To that that clerkes woll appose
Ayenst the curlednelle i wis
That in that booke written is Now wotte I nat, ne I can nat se
What maner ende that there shall be
Of all this that thei hide
But yet algate thei shall abide Till that thei maie it bette defende
This trowe I best woll be here ende.

Thus Antechrist abiden we
For we been all of his meine
And what man that woll not de so Right sone he shall his life forgo Outward Lamben semen we Full of goodnelle and of pite
And inwarde we withouten fable
Been gredy wolues rauisable
We enuiroun bothe londe and see
With all the worlde werrien we
We woll ordain of all thing
Of folkes good, and her liuing.

If there be castell or citee
Within that any bougerons be Although that thei of Millaine were
For thereof been thei blamed there
Or of a wight out of measure
Would leane her gold, and take vsure
For that he is so coueitous
Or if he be to Lecherous
Or these that haunten Simonie
Or prouost full of trecherie
Or Prelate liuing iolilie
Or Priest that hait his quein him by Or olde hoores hostilers
Or other baudes or bordellers
Or els blamed of any vice
Of whiche men shoulden doen iustice
By all the sainctes that we preie
But thei defende them with lamprete
With luce, with elis, with samons
With tender gees, and with capons
With tartes, or with chekes fat
With deinte flaunes, brode and flat
With caleweis, or with pullaile
With coninges, or with fine vitaile
That we vnder our clothes wide
Maken through our golet glide
Or but he woll doe come in haste

That benison bake in paste
Whether so that loure or groine
He shall haue of a corde a loigne
With whiche men shall him binde and lede
To brenne him for his sinfull deede
That men shull here him crie and rore
I mile waie about and more
Or els he shall in prison die
But if he woll his frendship buie
Of smerten that, that he hath doe
More than his gilt amounteth to But and he couthe, through his sleight
Doe maken vp a toure of height
Sought rought I, wheder of stone or tre
Or yearth, or turues though it be Though it were of no bounde stone
Wrought with squier and scantilone
So that the toure were stuffed well
With all riches temporell
And than that he would vp dresse
Engins, bothe more and lesse
To caste at vs by euery side
To beare his good name wide
Suche sleightes I shall you yeuen
Barelles of wine, by sire or seuen
Of golde in sackes greate plente
He should sone deliuered be
And if he haue no suche pitences
Let him studie in equipolences
And let lies and sallaces
If that he would deserue our graces
Or we shall beare him suche witnesse
Of sinne, and of his wretchednesse
And doen his lose so wide renne
That all quicke we should him brenne
Or els yeue him suche penaunce
That is well worse than the pitaunce.

For thou shalt neuer for nothing
Conknowen a right by her clothing
The traitours full of trecherie
But thou her werkes can espie
And ne had the good keping be Whilom of the vniuersite
That kepeth the heie of christendome
He had been tourmented all and some Suche been the stinking Prophetis
Is none of hem, that good Prophete is For thei through wicked entencion
The yere of the incarnacion
Thousande, and two hundred yere
Fine and fifte ferther ne nere
Broughten a booke with sorie grace
To yeuen ensample in common place
That saied thus, though it were fable
This is the Gospell pardurable
That fro the holie ghost is sent Well were it wrothe to bee brent
Entitled was in suche manere
This booke, of whiche I tell here
There nas no wight in all Paris
Before our Ladie at paruis
That thei ne might the booke by
The sentence pleased hem well truely
But I woll stint of this matere
For it is wonder long to here
But had that ilke booke endured
Of better estate I were ensured
And frendes haue I yet parde
That han me set in greate degre.

Of all this worlde is Emperour
Gile my father, the trechour
And Empresse my mother is Maugre the holie ghoste iwis
Our mightie linage, and our rout
Reigneth in euery reigne about
And well is we[illegible]hy we ministers be
For all this worlde gouerne we
And can the folke so well deceiue
That none our gile can perceiue
And though thei doen, thei dare not saie
The sothe dare no wight bewraie
But he in Christes wrathe him ledeth
That more than Christ my brethren dredeth
He nis no full good champion
That dredeth suche simulacion
Nor that for pain woll refusen
Vs to correcte and accusen.
He woll not entremete by right
Ne haue God in his eye sight
And therefore God shall him punice
But me ne recheth of no vice Sithen men vs louen comunablie
And holden vs for so worthie
That we maie folke repreue echone
And we nill haue repreue of none
Whom shoulden folke worshipen so
But vs that stinten neuer mo
To patren, while that folke maie vs se
Though it not so behinde hem be.

And where is more woode folie
Than to enhaunce chiualrie
And loue noble men and gaie
That iolie clothes weren alwaie
If thei be suche folke as thei semen
So cleane, as men her clothes demen
And that her wordes folowe her deede
It is greate pite out of drede

For

For thei woll be none Hypocritis
Of hem me thinketh greate spite is
I can not loue hem on no side
But beggers with these hoodes wide
With sleigh and pale faces leane
And graie clothes nat full cleane
But fretted full of tatar wagges
And high shoes knopped with dagges
That frouncen like a quale pipe
Or bootes riueling as a gipe
To soche folke, as I you deuise
Should princes and these lordes wise
Take all her landes and her thinges
Bothe warre and peace in gouerninges
To soche folke should a prince him yeue
That would his life in honour liue.

And if thei be nat as thei seme
That seruen thus the worlde to queme
There would I dwell to deceiue
The folke, for thei shall nat perceiue
But I ne speake in no soche wise
That men should humble habite dispise
So that no pride there vnder be
No man should hate, as thinketh me
The poore man in soche clothing
But God ne preiseth him nothing
That saieth he hath the worlde forsake
And hath to worldly glory him take
And woll of soche delices vse
Who maie that begger well excuse:
That papelarde, that him yeldeth so
And woll to worldly ease go
And saieth that he the worlde hath left
And gredily it gripeth eft
He is the honde, shame is to sain
That to his calling goeth again

But vnto you dare I not lie
But might I selen or espie
That ye perceiued it nothing
Ye should haue a starke leasing
Right in your honde thus to beginne
I nolde it let for no sinne
The God lough at the wonder tho
And euery wight gan laugh also
And saied: lo here a man right
For to be trustie to euery wight.

Faire Semblant (q. Loue) saie to me
Sith I thus haue auaunced thee
That in my court is thy dwelling
And of ribaudes shalt be my king
Wolt thou well holden my forwardes?
Ye sir, from hens forwardes
We woll a people vpon him areise
And through our gile, doen him deise
And him on sharpe speares riue
Or other waies bring him fro liue
But if that he woll folowe i wis
That in our booke written is.

Thus moche woll our booke signifie
That while Peter had maistrie Maie neuer Iho̅ shewe well his might Now haue I you declared right
The meaning of the barke and rinde
That maketh the entencions blinde
But now at erst I woll begin
To expoune you the pithe within
And the seculers comprehende
That Christes lawe woll defende
And should it kepen and maintenen
Ayenst hem that all sustenen
And falsly to the people teachen
That Iho̅n betokeneth hem to preachen
That there nis lawe couenable
But thilke Gospell pardurable
That fro the holy ghost was sent To tourne folke that been misswent.

The strength of Iho̅n thei vnderstonde
The grace in whiche thei saie thei stonde
That doeth the sinfull folke conuert
And hem to Jesu Christ reuert
Full many an other horrible te Maie men in that booke se
That been commaunded doubtlesse
Ayenst the lawe of Rome expresse
And all with Antichrist thei holden
As men maie in the booke beholden
And than commaunden thei to fleen
All tho that with Peter been But thei shall neuer haue that might
And God to borne, for strief to fight
That thei ne shall inough finde
That Peters lawe shall haue in minde
And euer holde, and so mainteen
That at the last it shall be seen
That thei shall all come thereto
For aught that thei can speake or do
And thilke lawe shall not stonde
That thei by Iho̅n haue vnderstonde
But maugre hem, it shall adoun
And been brought to confusion
Had neuer your father here before
Seruaunt so true, sithe he was borne
That is ayenst all nature
Sir, put you in that auenture
For though ye borowes take of me

The sikerer shall ye neuer be
For hostages, ne sikernesse
Or chartres, for to beare witnesse
I take your self to recorde here
That men ne maie, in no manere
Tearen the wolfe out of his hide
Till he be slain, bache and side
Though men him beate and all defile
What wene ye that I woll begile?
For I am clothed meekely
Here vnder is all my trechery
Mine harte chaungeth neuer the mo
For none habite, in whiche I go
Though I haue chere of simplenesse
I am not werie of shrewednesse
By lemman, strained Abstenaunce path mister of my purueiaunce
She had full long ago be dedde
Here my counsaile and my reddc
Let her alone, and you and me
And Loue answerde, I trust thee
Without borowe, for I woll none
And false Semblant the theefe anone
Right in that ilke same place
That had of treason all his face
Right blache within, and white without Thanking him, gan on his knees lout.

Than was there nought, but euery man
How to assaute, that sailen can (Loue) and that full hardely
Than armed thei hem comenly
Of sloche armour, as to hem fell
When thei were armed, fiers and fell
Thei went hem forthe all in a rout
And set the castell all about
Thei will not awaite for no drede
Till it so be that thei been dedde
Or till thei haue the castell take
And foure battels thei gan make
And parted hem in foure anone
And tolke her waie, and forthe thei gone
The foure gates for to assaile
Of whiche the kepers woll not faile
For thei been neither sicke ne dede
But hardie folke, and strong in dede.

Now woll I faine the countenaunce
Of false Semblant, and Abstinaunce
That been to wicked long went
But first thei helde her parliment
Whether it to doen were
To maken hem be knowen there
Or els walken forthe disguised
But at the laste thei deuised
That thei would gone in tapinage
As it were in a pilgrimage
Like good and holie folke vnfeined
And daine Abstinence streined
Tolke on a robe of Cameline
And gan her gratche as a bigine
A large couerchief of threde
She wrapped all about her hede
But she forgate not her Psaltere
A paire of beedes eke she bere
Upon a lace, all of white threde
On whiche that she her beedes bede
But she ne bought hem neuer a deale
For thei were giuen her, I wote weale
God wote of a full holie Frere
That laied he was her father dere
To whom she had after went Than any Frere of his couent
And he visited her also
And many a sermone laied her to
He nolde let for man on liue
That he ne would her oft shriue
And with so greate deuocion
Thei made her confession
That thei had oft for the nones
Two heddes in one hode at ones
Of faire shappe, I deuised her thee
But pale of face sometime was she
That false traitouresse vntrewe
Was like that salowe horse of hewe
That in the Apocalips is shewed
That signifieth tho folke beshrewed
That been all full of trecherie
And pale, through hypocrisie
For on that horse no colour is But onely dedde and pale iwis
Of sloche a colour enlangoured
Was Abstinence iwis coloured
Of her estate she her repented
As her visage represented.
She had a burdoune all of theft
That Gile had yeue her of his yeft
And a shrippe of faint distresse
That full was of elengenesse
And forthe she walked soberlie
And false Semblant faint, ie vous die
And as it were for sloche miestere
Doen on the cope of a Frere
With chere simple, and full pitous
His loking was not disdeinous
Ne proude, but meke and full pesible
About his necke he bare a Bible
And Squierly, forthe gan he gon
And for to rest his limmes vpon
He had of treason a potent

As he were feble, his waie he went
But in his sleue he gan to thring
A rasour sharpe, and well biting
That was forged in a forge
Whiche that men clepen Coupe gorge
So long forth her waie thei nomen
Till thei to Wicked Tong comen
That at his gate was sitting
And sawe folke in the waie passing
The pilgrimes sawe he fast by
That bearen hem full mekely
And humbly thei with him mette
Dame Abstinence first him grette
And sithe him False Semblant salued
And he hem, but he not remeued
For he ne dredde him not a deale
For whan he sawe her faces weale
Al waie in harte, him thought so
He should knowe hem bothe two
For well he knewe dame Abstinaunce
But he ne knewe not Constreinaunce
He knewe nat that she was constrained
Ne of her theues life fained
But wende she come of will all free
But she come in an other degree
And if of good will she began
That will was failed her than.

AND False Semblant had he faine alle
But he knewe nat that he was falle
Yet falle was he, but his falsnesse
Ne could he nat espie, nor gesse
For Semblant was so slie wrought
That falsenesse he ne espied nought
But haddest thou knowen him before
Thou wouldest on a booke haue sworne
Whan thou him sawe in thilke araie
That he, that whilom was so gaie
And of the daunce Jolie Robin
Was tho become a Jacobin
But sothly what so men him call
Frere Preachours been good men all
Her order wickedly thei bearen
Soche minstrelles, if thei wearen
So been Augustins, and Cordileers
And Carmes, and the sacked Freres
And all Freers shode and bare
Though some of hem been greate and square
Full holy men, as I hem deme
Eueriche of hem would good man seme
But shalt thou neuer of apparence
Seen conclude good consequence
In none argument i wis
If erilkens all failed is
For men maie finde alwaie sopheme
The consequence to enueneme
Who so that hath had the subtelte
The double sentence for to se.

Whan the pilgrimes commen were
To wicked Tong that dwelled there
Her harneis nigh hem was algate
By wicked Tong adoune thei sate
That badde hem nere him for to come
And of tidinges tell him some
And saied hem: what cause maketh you
To come into this place now?

SIr saied Strained Abstinaunce
We for to drie our penaunce
With hartes pitous and deuout
Are commen, as pilgrimes gon about
Well nigh on foote alwaie we go
Full doughtie been our heeles two
And thus bothe we been sent Throughout the worlde that is mis went To yeue ensample, and preache also
To fischen sinfull men we go
For other fisching, ne fische we
And sir, for that charite
As we be wont, herbrowe we craue
Your life to amenne Christ it saue
And so it should you not displease
We woulden, if it were your ease
A short sermon vnto you sain
And wicked Tong answered again
The houle (q he) soche (as ye se)
Shall nat be warned you for me
Saie what you list, and I woll here
Graunt mercie swete sir dere.

(q alderfirst) dame Abstinence
And thus began she her sentence.
Sir, the first vertue certaine
The greatest, and moste soueraine
That maie be founde in any man
For hauing, or for wit he can
That is his tong to refrain
Therto ought euery wight him pain
For it is better still be Than for to speaken harme parde
And he that harkeneth it gladly
He is no good man sikerly
And sir, abouen all other sinne
In that art thou moste giltie inne
Thou speake a iape, not long a go
And sir, that was right euill doe
Of a yong man, that here repaired
And neuer yet this place apaired
Thou saidest he awaited nothing

But to dissetue Faire welcoming Ye said nothing sothe of that
But sir, ye lie, I tel you plat
He ne cometh no more, ne goeth parde
I trowe ye shal him neuer se
Faire welcoming in prison is That ofte hath plaied with youer this
The fairest games that he coude
Without filth stil or loude
How dare she not her selfe solace
Ye han also the man do chace
That he dare neither come ne go
What meueth you to hate him so?
But properly your wicked thought
That many a false lealing hath thought
That meueth your foule eloquence
That iangleth euer in audience
And on the folke ariseth blame
And doeth hem dishonour and shame
For thing that maie haue no preuing
But likelinesse, and contriuing.

For I dare saine, that Reason demeth
It is not al soth thing that semeth
And it is sinne to controue
Thing that is to reproue
This wote ye wele, and sir: therfore
Ye arme to blame the more
And natheless, he recketh lite
He reueth not now therof a mite
For if he thought harme parfaie
He would come and gone all daie
He coude him selfe not abstene
How cometh he not, and that is sene
For he ne taketh of it no cure
But if it be through auenture
And lasse than other folke algate
And thou her watchest at the gate
With speare in thine arest alwaie
There muse musarde all the daie
Thou wakest night and daie for thought
Iwis thy trauelle is for nought
And Ielousie withouten faile
Shall neuer quite thee thy traueile
And sothe is, that Faire Welcoming Without any trespalling
Shal wrongfully in prison be There wepeth and languisheth he
And though thou neuer yet i wis
Igilest man no more but this Take not a grete it were worthy
To put the out of this Baily
And afterwarde in Prison lie
And fettred the till that thou die
For thou shalt for this sinne dwelle
Right in the Deuils arse of Helle
But if that thou repente the Waifaie, thou liest falsely (q he)
What, welcome with mischaunce now
Haue I therfore herbered you
To saie me shame, and eke reproue
With sorie happe to your behoue
Am I to day your herbegere
Go herber you els where, than here
That han a lier called me
Two tregetours arte thou and he
That in mine house, do me this shame
And for my sothe sawe ye me blame
Is this the sermon that ye make?
To all the diuels I me take
Or els God thou me confounde
But er men bidden this castell kounde
It passeth not ten daies or twelue
But it was tolde right to my selue
And as thei saide, right so tolde I
He kisse the Rose priuily
Thus saide I now, and haue said yore
I not where he did any more
Why should men saie me suche a thing
If it had ben gabbing
Right so saide I, and woll saie yet
I trowe I lied not of it
And with my bemes I woll blowe
To all neighbours arowe
How he hath bothe comen and gone
Tho spake false Semblant right anone
All is nat gospell out of doute
That men saine in the toune aboute
Lay no deefe eere to my spekking Ne swere you sir, it is gabbing trowe ye wote well certainly
That no man loueth him tenderly
That saith him harme, if he wote it
All be he neuer so poore of wit
And sothe is also sikerly
This know ye sir, as wel as I
That louers gladdly wol visiten
The places there her loues habiten
This man you loueth, and eke honourcth
This man to serue you laboureth
And clepeth you his frende so dere
And this man maketh you good chere
And euery where that you meteth
He you saleweth, and he you greteth
He preseth nat so ofte, that ye Oughte of his coming encombred be
There presen other folke on you
Ful ofter than he doeth now
And if his hert him strained so
Unto the Rose for to go

Ye ſhould him ſene ſo ofte nede
That ye ſhould take him with the dede
He coude his comming not forbeare
Though he him thrilled with a ſpeare
It nere not than, as it is now
But truſteth well, I ſweare it you
That it is clene out of his thought
Sir, certes he ne thinketh it nought
No more ne doth Faire Welcoming
That ſore abieth all this thing
And if thei were of one aſſent
Full ſoone were the Roſe hent
The maugre yours would be
And ſir, of o thing herkeneth me
Sithe ye this man, that loueth you
Han laide ſuche harme, and ſhame now
Witteth well, if he gelled it
Ye maie well demen in your wit
He nolde nothing loue you ſo
Ne callen you his frende alſo
But night and daie he woll wake
The caſtell to diſtroie and take Yf it were ſothe, as ye deuiſe
Or ſome man in ſome maner wiſe
Might it warne him euerydele
Or by himſelfe parceiue wele
For lithe he might not come and gone
As he was whilom wonte to done
He might it ſoone wite and ſe
But now all otherwiſe wote he Than haue we ſir all vtterly
Deſerued Hell, and folily
The death of Hell doutleſſe
That thrallen folke ſo giltleſſe.

Falſe Semblant ſo proueth this thing
That he can none anſwering
And ſeeth alwaie, ſuche apparaunce
That nigh he fel in repentaunce
And ſaid him, ſir: it maie well be Semblant, a good man ſemen ye
And Abſtinence, ful wiſe ye ſeme
Of o talent you bothe I deme
What counſaile wol ye to me yeuen:
Right here anon thou ſhalt be ſhriuen
And ſay thy ſinne, without more
Of this ſhalt thou repent ſore
For I am Prieſt, and haue poſte
To ſhriue folke of moſt dignite
That ben as wide as world maie dure
Of al this world I haue the cure
And that had neuer yet perſoun
Ne vicarie of no maner toun
And God wot I haue of the Thouſande times more pite
Than hath thy Prieſt parochiall
Though he thy frende be ſpeciall
I haue auantage in o wiſe
That your Prelates den not ſo wiſe
Ne halfe ſo lettred (as am I)
I am licenſed boldely
In diuinite for to rede
And to confeſſen out of drede yf ye wol you now confeſſe
And leaue your ſinnes more and leſſe
Without abode, knele doune anon
And you ſhal haue abſolucion.

¶ Here endeth the Romaunt of the Roſe.

¶ Here after foloweth the Booke of Troilus and Creſeide.

THe double ſorow of Troilus to tellen
That was king Priams ſonne of Troy
In louing, how his auentures fellen
From wo to wele, and ter out of ioy
My purpoſe is, er that I parte froy
Thou Thelyphone, thou helpe me for tendite
Theſe woful verſes, that wepen as I wryte

To the I clepe, thou goddeſſe of torment
Thou cruel furie, ſorowing euer in paine
Helpe me that am the ſorowfull inſtrument
That helpeth louers, as I can complaine
For wel ſit it, the ſoth for to ſaine
A woful wight to haue a drery fere
And to a ſorowfull tale a ſory chere

For I that God of Loues ſeruauntes ſerue
Ne dare to loue, for mine vnlikelineſſe
Prayen for ſpede, al ſhould I therfore ſterue
So farre am I fro his helpe in derkeneſſe
But nathelefſe, if this may done gladneſſe
To any louer, and his cauſe aueile
Haue he my thanke, and mine be the trauaile

But ye louers that bathen in gladneſſe yf any drope of pite in you be Remembreth you of paſſed heuineſſe
That ye haue felte, and on the aduerſite
Of other folke, and thinketh how we that ye
Han ſelde, that loue durſte you diſpleaſe
Or ye han won him with to great eaſe

In

And praieth for hem that ben in the cace
Of Troilus, as ye may after here
That he hem bring in heuen to solace
And eke for me praieth to God so dere
That I haue might to shew in some manere
Suche paine and wo, as loues folke endure
In Troilus vnsely auenture

And biddeth eke for hem that ben dispeired
In loue, that neuer will recouerd be
And eke for hem that falsely ben apeired
Through wicked tonges, be it he or she Thus biddeth God for his benignite
So graunt hē soone out of this world to pace
That ben dispaired out of loues grace

And biddeth eke for hem that ben at ease
That god hem graūt aie good perseueraunce
And sende hem grace her loues for to please
That it to loue be worship and pleasaunce
For so hope I my selfe best to auaunce
To pray for hem, that loues seruauntes be
And write her wo, and liue in charite

And for to haue of hem compassioun
As though I were her owne brother dere
Now herkeneth with a good entencioun
For now wol I go streight to my matere
In whiche ye may the double sorowes here
Of Troilus, in louing of Creseide
And how she forsoke him er that she deide.

It is wel wist, how that the grekes strōg
With armes xb a thousand shippes went
To Troie wardes, and the cite long
Besiegeden nigh ten yeres ere thei stent
And in diuers wise, and one entent
The rauishing to wreke of quene Heleine
By Paris don, thei wroughten all her peine

Now fell it so, that in the toune there was Dwelling a Lord of great authorite
A great diuine, that cleped was Calcas
That in that science so experte was, that he Knew wel, that Troie should distroied be
By answere of his God, that hight thus Dan Phebus, or Apollo Delphicus

So whan this Calcas knew by calculing
And eke by the answere of this God Apollo
That grekes should suche a people bring Through whiche that Troy must be forgo
He caste anone out of the toune to go
For wel he wist by sorte, that Troie sholde
Distroied be, ye would who so nolde

Wherfore to departen softely
Tok purpose ful this forknowing wise
And to the Grekes host ful priuely
He stale anone, and thei in curteis wise
Did him both worship and seruice
In trust that he hath conning hem to rede
In euery peril, which that was to drede

Great rumour rose, whan it was first espied
In al the toune, and openly was spoken
That Calcas traitour fled was and alied
To hem of Grece, and caste was to be wroken
On him, that falsly hath his faith broken
And said: he and al his kinne atones
Were worthy to be brent both fell and bones

Now had Calcas lefte in this mischaunce
Unwist of this false and wicked dede
A doughter, whiche was in great penaunce
And of her life she was ful sore in drede
And wist neuer what best was to rede
And as a widowe was she, and all alone
And nist to whome she might make her mone

Creseide was this ladies name aright
As to my dome, in al Troies cite
Most fairest lady, fer passing euery wight
So angelike shone her natife beaute
That no mortall thing semed she
And therwith was she so parfite a creature
As she had be made in scorning of nature

This lady, that al day herde at eare
Her fathers shame falsed, and traisoun (Ful nigh out of her wit for sorow and feare
In widowes habite large of samite broun)
Before Hector on knees she fill adoun
His mercy bad, her selfe excusing
With pitous voice, and tenderly weping

Now was this Hector pitous of nature
And saw, that she was sorowful begone
And that she was so faire a creature
Of his goodnesse he gladed her anone
And said: let your fathers traison gone
Forth with mischance, and ye your selfe in ioye
Dwelleth with vs, while you list in Troye

And al the honour, þ men may do you haue
As ferforth as though your father dwelt here
Ye shul haue, and your body shul men saue
As fer as I may ought enquire and here
And she him thanked with ful humble chere
And ofterwolde and it had ben his will Tok her leaue, went home and helde her still

And in her houſe ſhe abode with ſuch meine
As til her honour nede was to holde
And while ſhe was dwelling in that cite
She kepte her eſtate, and of yong and olde
Ful wel beloued, and wel men of her tolde
But whether that ſhe children had or none
I rede it nat, therfore I let it gone

The thinges fellen as thei don of werre
Betwiren hem of Troie and Grekes ofte
For ſome day boughten thei of Troie it derre
And eſte the grekes founden nothing ſoft
The folke of Troie: and thus fortune aloft
And vnder eſte gan hem to whelmen bothe
After her courſe, ate while þ thei wer wrothe

But how this toune came to diſtruccion
Ne falleth not to purpoſe me to tel
For it were a longe digreſſion
Fro my mater, and you to long to dwel
But the Troyan geſtes, as thei fel
In Omer, or in Dares, or in Dite
Who ſo þ can, may reden hem as thei write.

But though the grekes hem of Troie ſhetten
And her cite beſieged all aboute
Her olde vſages nolde thei not letten
As to honouren her goddes ful deuoute
But aldermoſt in honour out of doute
Thei had a relike hight Palladion
That was her truſt abouen euerichon

And ſo befel whan comen was the time
Of April, whan clothed is the mede
With newe grene, of luſty veer the prime
And ſwete ſmelling floures white and rede
In ſondrie wiſe ſhewed as I rede
The folke of Troie, their obſeruaunces olde
Palladions feeſt went for to holde

Vnto the temple in all their beſt wiſe
Generally there went many a wight
To herken of Palladions ſeruice
And namely many a luſty knight
And many a lady freſh, and maiden bright
Ful wel araide bothe moſt and leeſt
Bothe for the ſeaſon and the hie feeſt

Among theſe other folke was Creſeida
In widdowes habite blacke: but natheles
Right as our firſt letter is now an a
In beaute firſt, ſo ſtode ſhe makeles
Her goodly loking gladded al the prees
Nas neuer ſene thing to be praiſed ſo derre
Nor vnder cloude blake ſo bright a ſterre

As was Creſeide, thei ſaiden euerichone
That her behelde in her blake wede
And yet ſhe ſtode ful lowe and ſtil alone
Behinde other folke in litel brede
And nie the dore vnder ſhames drede
Simple of atire, and debonaire of chere
With full aſſured loking and manere

This Troilus as he was wont to gide
His yonge knightes ladde hem vp and doune
In thilke large temple on euery ſide
Beholding ate the ladies of the toune
Now here now there, for no deuocioune
Had he to none, to reuen him his reſt
But gan to praiſe and lacke whom he leſt

And in his walke ful faſte he gan to waite
If knight or ſquier of his company
Gan for to ſike, or let his eyen baite
On any woman, that he coude eſpie
He would ſmile, and holde it a folie
And ſay hem thus: O lorde ſhe ſlepeth ſoft
For loue of the, whan thou turneſt ful oft

I haue herde tel pardieux of your liuing
Ye louers, and eke your leude obſeruaunces
And whiche a labour folke haue in winning
Of loue, and in keping ſuche doutaunces
And whan your pray is loſt, wo þ penaunces
O, very fooles, blinde and nice be ye
There is not one can ware by an other de

And with þ worde he gan caſt vp the brow
Aſcaunces lo, is this not wel iſpoken
At whiche the God of Loue gan loken rowe
Right for diſpite, and hope him to be wroken
He hidde anon his bowe was not broken
For ſodainly he hitte him at the full
And yet as proude a pecocke gan he pul

O blinde worlde, o blinde entencion
How often falleth al theffecte contraire
Of ſurquedrie and foule preſumpcioun
For caught is proude, & caught is debonaire
This Troilus is clomben on the ſtaire
And litel weneth that he mote deſcenden
But al day faileth that fooles wenden

As proude bayard begynneth for to ſkip
Out of the way, ſo pricketh him his corne
Till he a laſſhe haue of the longe whippe
Than thinketh he, though I praiſe al beforne
Firſt in the traiſe, full faſte and newe ithorne
Yet am I but an horſe, and horſes lawe
I muſt endure, and with my feeres drawe

So lared it by this fiers and proude knight
Though he a worthy kinges sonne were
And wende nothing had had suche might Ayenst his wil, that should his herte stere
Yet with a loke his hert wore on fire
That he that now was most in pride aboue
Wore sodainly mooste subiect vnto loue

For thy ensample taketh of this man
Ye wise, proude, and worthy folkes all
To shonnen loue, whiche that so sone can
The fredome of your hertes to him thral
For euer it was, and euer it be shall
That loue is he that al thing may binde
For no man maie fordo the law of kinde

That this be sothe, hath proued and doth yet
For this (trowe I) ye know al and some Men reden nat that folke han greater wit
Than thei, þ han ben most with loue inome
And strengest folke ben therwith ouercome
The worthiest and greatest of degre
This was and is, and yet man shal it se

And trueliche that litte welt to be so
For alderwisest han therwith ben plesed
And thei that han ben aldermoste in wo
With loue, han ben comforted most and esed
And ofte it hath the cruell herte apesed
And worthy folke made worthier of name
And causeth most to dreden vice and shame

Now sith it may nat goodly be withstonde
And is a thing so vertuous in kinde
Refuseth nought to loue, for to ben bonde
Sithe as him selfen list he may you binde
The yerde is bette that bowen wol þ winde
Than that that brest. and therfore I you rede
Now followeth him, that so well can you lede

But for to tellen forthe in speciall
Of this kinges sonne, of whiche I tolde
And leuen other thing collaterall
Of him thinke I, my tale forth to holde
Bothe of his ioye, and of his cares colde
And his werke, as touching this matere
For I it gan, I wol therto refere

Within the tẽple he wente him forth playing
This Troilus, of euery wight about
On this lady, and now on that loking
Where so she were of toune, or of without
And vpon cas befil, that through a rout
His eye perced, and so depe it went Til on Creseide it smote, and there it stent

And sodainly for wonder wert agoned
And gan her bet beholde in thrifty wise
O dere God thought he, where hast þ wonned
That art so fatre, and goodly to deuise
Therwith his hart gan to sprede and rise
And softe sighed, lest men might him here
And caught ayen his first playing chere

She nas nat with the moste of her stature
But al her limmes so wel answering Weren to womanhode, that creature
Was neuer lasse mannishe in seming
And eke the pure wise of her meaning
Shewed wel, that men might in her gesse
Honour, estate, and womanly noblesse

Tho Troilus, right wonder wel withall
Gan for to like her meaning and her chere
Which somdele deignous was, for she let fal
Her loke a litel aside, in suche manere
Ascaunces, what may I nat stonden here
And after that her loking gan she light
That neuer thought him sene so good a sight

And of her loke in him there gan to quiken
So great desire, and suche affection
That in his hartes bottom gan to sticken
Of her his fire, and depe impression
And though he erst had pored vp and doun
Than was he glad his hornes into shrinke
Unnethes wist he how to loke or winke

Lo, he that lete him selfen so conning
And scorned hem that loues paines drien
Was ful vnware that loue had his dwelling
Within the subtel stremes of her eyen
That sodainly him thought he felte dien
Right with her loke, the spirite in his herte
Blessed be loue, that thus can folke conuerte

She this in blacke, liking to Troilus
Ouer al thing he stode for to beholde
But his desire, ne wherfore he stode thus
He neither chere made, ne worde tolde
But from a ferre, his maner for to holde
On other thing somtime his loke he cast
And ofte on her, while that the seruice last

And after this, nat fullishe al a whaped
Out of the temple eseliche he wente
Repenting him that he euer had yaped
Of loues folke, lest fully the descente
Of scorne fil on him selfe, but what he mente
Lest it were wiste on any maner side
His wo he gan dissimulen and hide

Whan he was fro this temple thus departed
He streight anone vnto his palais turneth
Right with her loke, thrugh thotte̅ darted
Al faineth he in lufte that he soiourneth
And al his chere and speche also he burneth
And aie of loues seruauntes euery while Him selfe to wrie, at hem he gan to smile

And said lord, so thei liue al in lufte
Ye louers, for the conninge ft of you
That seruen moste ententifelliche and beft
Him tite as often harme therof as prowe
Your hire is quite ayen, ye God wote howe
Not wel for wel, but shrine for good seruise
In faithe your order is reuled in good wise

In no certaine ben your obseruaunces
But it a sely fewe pointes be Ne nothing asketh so great attendaunces
As doeth your laie, and that know al ye
But that is not the worft, as mote I the
But tolde I you the worfte point, I leue
Al saide I sothe, ye wolden at me greue

But take this, that ye louers ofte eschewe
Or els done of good entencion
Ful ofte thy lady wol it misse construe we
And deme it harme in her opinion
And yet if she for other encheson
Be wroth, thē shalt thou haue a groin anone
Lorde, wel is him that may bene of you one

But for al this, whan that he seeth his time
He held his pees, non other bote him gained
For loue began his fethers so to lime
That wel vneth vnto his folke he fained
That other bely nedes him distrained
So wo was him, that what to done he nift
But bad his folke to gone where as hem lift

And whan that he in chambre was alone
He doune on his beddes fete him sette
And first he gan to sike, and efte to grone
And thought aie on her so withouten lette
That as he satte and woke, his spirite mette
That he her saugh, and temple, & all the wise
Right of her loke, and gan it newe auise

Thus gan he make a mirrour of his minde
In whiche he saugh al holly her figure
And that he wel coude in his hert finde
It was to him a right good auenture
To loue suche one, and if he did his cure
To serue n̄ her, yet might he fal in grace
Or els, for one of her seruauntes pace

Imagining, that trauerle nor grame
Ne might, for so goodly one be lorne
As she, ne him for his desire no shame
Al were it wifte, but in prise and vp borne
Of al louers, wel more than beforne
This argumented he, in his ginning
Ful vnauised of his wo comming

Thus toke he purpose loues crafte to lere
And thought he would worken priuely
First to hide his desire in mewe
From euery wight ibornе, al ouerly
But he might ought recouered ben therby
Remembring him, that loue to wide iblowe
Yelt bitter frute, though swete sede be sowe

And ouer al this, ful mokel more he thought
What for to speke, and what to holden inne
And what to arten, her to loue he sought
And on a longe anone right to beginne
And gan loude on his sorowe for to winne
For with good hope, he gan fully assente
Creseide for to loue, and nought repente

And of his longe not onely his sentence
As write mine auctour called Lolius
But plainely saue our tonges difference
I dare wel say, in al that Troilus Saied in his longe, lo euery worde right thus
As I shal saine, and who so list it here
Lo next this verse, he may it finde here

¶ The longe of Troilus.

If no loue is, o God what fele I so
And if loue is, what thing and whiche is he
If loue be good, from whence cometh my wo
If it be wiche, a wonder thinketh me
Whan euery turment and aduersite
That cometh of him, may to me sauery thinke
For aie thrift I the more that iche it drinke

And if that at mine owne luste I brenne
Frō whēce cometh my wailing & my plainte
If harme agree me, wherto plaine I thenne
I not, ne why, bn wery that I feinte
O quiche death, o swete harme so queinte
How may of the in me, he suche quantite
But if that I consente that it so be

And if that I consente, I wrongfully
Complaine I wis, thus posed to and fro
Al stereleffe within a bote am I
Amidde the see, atwixen windes two
That in contrarie stonden euer mo
Alas, what is this wonder maladie?
For heate of colde, for colde of heate I die

And

And to the God of loue thus saide he
With pitous voice, O lorde now yours is My spirite, whiche that ought yours be
You thonke I lord, ỹ han me brought to this But whether goddesse or woman iwis
Shе be, I not whiche, that ye do me serue
But as her man I woi aie liue and sterue

Ye stonden in her eien mightely
As in a place to your vertue digne
Wherfore lorde, if my seruice or I
May liken you, so bethe to me benigne
For mine estate royal here I resigne
Into her honde, and with ful humble chere
Become her man, as to my lady dere

In him ne deigned sparen blode royall
The fire of loue, wherefro God me bielle
Ne him forbare in no degre for all
His vertue, or his excellent prowesse
But held him as his thrall lowe in distresse
And brende him so in sondrie wise aie newe
That fifty times a day he loste his hewe.

So muchell daie fro daie his owne thought
Fewell to her, gan quicken and encrease
That eueriche other charge he sette at nought
For thy ful ofte, his hotte fire to cease
To lene her goodly loke he gan to preasе
For therby to den eased wel he wende
And aie the nere he was, the more he brende

For aie the nere the fire the hotter is
This (trowe I) knoweth al this company
But were he ferre or nere, I dare saie this
By night or daie, for wisedome or folie
His harte, whiche that is his brestes eye
Was aie on her, that fairer was to seen
Than euer was Helein, or Polixene.

Ne of the daie there passed nat an houre
That to himself a thousande time he saide
God goolie, to whom I serue and laboure
As I best can, now would God Creseide
Ye woulden on me rue, er that I deide
Of dere harte alas, mine heele and hewe
And life is loste, but ye woll on me rewe

All other dredes weren from him fledde
Both of thalliege, and his saluacion
Ne in delire none other loumes bredde
But argumentes to his conclusion
That he on him would han compassion
And be to been her man, while he maie dure
Lo here his life, and from his death his cure.

The sharpe shoures kell, of armes preue
That Hector or his other brethren bidden
Ne made him onely therefore ones meue
And yet was he, wher so men went or ridden
Found one the best, and lengest time abiden
There peril was, and eke did suche trauaile
In armes, that to thinke it was meruaile

But for none hate he to the grekes had Ne also for the rescous of the toun
Ne made him thus in armes for to mad
But onely lo, for this conclusioun
To liken her the bet for his renoun
Fro daie to daie in armes so he spedde
That the Grekes as the death him dredde

And fro this forth tho reft him loue his slepe
And made his meate his foe, and eke his sorow
Gan multiplie, that who so tooke kepe
It shewed in his hewe both euē and morow
Therfore a title he gan him for to borowe
Of other sickenesse, lest men of him wende
That the hotte fire of loue him brende

And saied he had a feuer, and fared amis
But were it certain I can nat saie
If that his Ladie vnderstode nat this Or fained her she nist, one of the twoie
But well rede I, that by no maner weie
Ne semed it that she on him rought
Or of his paine, what so euer he thought.

But thanked this Troilus sothe wo
That he was welnigh wood, for aie his drede
Was this, that she some wight loued so
That neuer of him she would han taken hede
For whiche him thought he felte herte blede
Ne of his wo ne durst he nought begin
To tellen her, for all this worlde to win.

But whan he had a space from his care
Thus to himself full ofte he gan to plain
He saied, o foole now art thou in the snare
That wilom lapedest at ioues pain
Now art ỹ hent, now gnaw thin owen chain
Thou were aie woned eche louer reprehende
Of thing fro which thou canst nat ỹ defende.

What woll now euery louer saine of thee
If this be wist? But euer in thine absence Laugheth in scorne, and sain lo there goth he
That is the man of greate sapience
That helde vs louers lefte in reuerence
Now thanked be god, he maie gon on ỹ daunce
Of hem that loue liste lefly auaunce.

But o thou wokull Troilus, God would Sithe thou must louen, through thy destine
That thou beset wer of soche one, that should Knowe all thy wo, all lacked her pite
But also could in loue towardes thee
Thy ladie is, as frost in winter Mone
And thou sordo, as Snowe in fire is sone.

God would I were arriued in the port
Of death, to whiche my sorowe woll me lede
Ah Lorde, to me it were a greate comfort
Than were I quite of languishing in drede
For by my hidde sorowe I blowe in bredc
I shall beiaped been a thousande time
More than that foole, of whose foly mē rime

But now helpe God, and ye swete, for whō
I plaine, i cought ye neuer wight so fast
O mercie dere harte, and helpe me from
The death, for I, while that my life maie last
More than my self woll loue you to my last
And with some frendly lobe gladeth me swete
Though neuer more thing ye me behete.

These wordes, and full many an other mo
He spake, and called euer in his compleinte
Her name, for to tellen her his wo
Till nigh that he in salte teeres dreinte
All was for nought, she heard nat his pleinte
And whan that he bethought on that folie
A thousande folde his wo gan multiplie.

Bewailing in his chamber thus alone
A frende of his, that called was Pandare
Came ones in vnware, and heard him grone
And saw he his frend in soche distresse and care
Alas (q he) who causeth all this fare?
O mercie God, what vnhap maie this mene?
Han now thus sone Grekes made you lene?

Or hast thou some remorse of conscience?
And art now fall in some deuocion
And wailest for thy sinne and thine offence
And hast for ferde cought contricion
God saue hem, that besieged han our toun
That so can laie our iolite on prese
And bring our lustie folke to holinesse.

These wordes saied he for the nones all
That wh soche thing he mizt him angry make
And with his angre doen his sorowe fall
As for a time, and his corage awaken
But well wist he, as ferre as tonges speaken
There nas a man of greater hardinesse
Than he, ne more desired worthinesse.

What cas (q Troilus) or what auentur
Hath gided thee to seen me languishing
That am refuse of euery creature?
But for the loue of God, at my praiyng
Go hence awaie, for certes my diyng
Woll thee displease, and I mote nedes deie
Therfore go waie, there nis no more to seie.

But if thou wene I be thus sicke for drede
It is nat so, and therefore scorne nought
There is an other thing I take of hede
Wel more thā ought ꝑ Grekes hā yet wrought
Which cause is of my deth for sorow & thought
But though that I now tell it thee ne lest
Be thou nat wrothe, I hide it for the beste.

This Pādare, that nigh malt for wo & routh Full often saied alas, what maie this be Now frende (q he) if euer loue or trouth
Hath been er this betwiren thee and me
Ne doe thou neuer soche a cruelte
That hiden fro thy frende so greate a care
Wost thou not well that I am Pandare?

I woll parten with thee all thy paine
If it so be I doe thee no comfort
Is it is frendes right, sothe for to saine
To enterparten wo, as glad disport
I haue and shall, for true or false report
In wrong and right i loued thee all my liue
Hide not thy wo fro me, but tell it bliue.

Than gan this sorowfull Troilus to sike
And saied him thus, God leue it be my best
To tellen thee, for sithe it maie thee like Yet woll I tell it, though my harte brest
And well wote I, thou maiest doe me no rest
But lest thou deme I trust nat to thee
Now herke frende, for thus it stant with me.

Loue, ayenst the whiche who so defendeth
Him selfen moste, him alderlest auaileth
With displeire so sorowfully me offendeth
That streight vnto the deth min hart saileth
Thereto desire, so brennyngly me assaileth
That to been slain it were a greater ioie
To me, than king of Grece be and of Troie.

Suffiseth this, my full frende Pandar
That I haue saied, for now wotest ꝑ my wo
And for the loue of God my colde care
So hide it well, I tolde it neuer to mo
For harmes mighten folowen mo than two
If it were wist, but be thou in gladnesse
And let me sterue vnknowe of my distresse.

How

How hast thou thus vnkindly and long
Hid this fro me, thou foole? (q Pandarus)
Paraunture thou maiest after soche one long
That mine auise anone maie helpen vs
This were a wonder thing (q Troilus)
Thou couldest neuer in loue thy selfen wisse
How deuill maiest thou bringen me to blisse.

Ye Troilus, now herken (q Pandare)
Though I be nice, it happeth often so
That one that ares doeth full euill fare
By good counsaile can kepe his frend therfro
I haue my self seine a blinde man go
There as he fell, that could loken wide
A foole maie eke a wise man oft gide.

A whetstone is no keruing instrument
Vet yet it maketh sharpe keruing tolis
And after I wot that I haue aught mis went Eschue thou that, for soche thing to schole is Thus often wise men been waren by foolis
Sithen thou so doe, thy wit is well bewared
By his contrary is euery thing declared.

For how might euer swetnesse haue be know
To him, that neuer tasted bitternesse
No man wot what gladnesse is I trowe
That neuer was in sorowe, or some distresse
Eke white by black, by shame eke worthines
Eche set by other, more for other semeth
As men maie seen, and so the wise it demeth.

Sithe thus of two contraries is o lore
I that haue in loue so oft assaied
Greuaunces, ought connen well the more
Counsailen thee, of that thou art dismaied
And eke thee ne ought not been euill apaied
Though I desire with thee for to bere
Thine heuie charge, it shall thee lasse dere.

I wote well that it fared thus by me
As to thy brother Paris, an hierdesse
Whiche that cleped was Oenone
Wrote in a complaint of her heuinesse
Resawe the letter that she wrote, I gesse
Saie neuer yet I wis (q Troilus)
Now (q Pandare) herkeneth it was thus.

Phebus, that first founde art of medicine
(q he) and could in euery wightes care
Remedy and rede, by herbes he knewe fine
Yet to himself his conning was full bare
For loue had him so bounden in a snare
All for the doughter of king Admete
That all his craft ne coud his sorowe bete.

Right so fare I, vnhappie for me
I loue one best, and that me smerteth sore
And yet paraventure I can reden thee
And nat my self, repreue me no more
I haue no cause I wote well for to sore
As doeth an hauke, that listeth for to plaie
But to thine helpe, yet somwhat can I saie.

And of o thing, right liber maiest thou be
That certain, for to dien in the paine
That I shall neuer mo discouer thee
Ne by my trouth, I kepe nat restrain
Thee fro thy loue, although it were Helein
That is thy brothers wife, if iche it wist
Be what she be, and loue her as thee list.

Therefore, as frendfulliche in me assure
And tell me platte, what is thine enchelon
And finall cause of wo, that ye endure
For doubteth nothing, mine entencion
Nas nat to you of reprehension
To speake as now, for no wight maie bireue
A man to loue, till that him list to leue.

And weteth wel, that both two been vices
Mistrusten all, or els all leue
But well I wote, the meane of it no vice is
As for to trusten some wight is a preue
Of trouth, and for thy would I fain remeue
Thy wrong conceipt, and do thee some wist trust
Thy wo to tell, and tell me if thee lust.

The wise eke saieth, wo him that is alone
For and he fall, he hath none helpe to rise
And sithe thou hast a felowe, tell thy mone
For this nis nought certain the next wise
To winnen loue, as teachen vs the wise
To wallowe and wepe, as Niobe the quene
Whose teeres yet in marble been iseen.

Let be thy weping, and thy derinesse
And let vs lissen wo, with other speche
So maie thy wofull time semen lesse
Delite nought in wo, thy wo to seche
As doen these fooles, that her sorowes eche
With sorowe, whan thei han misauentures
And lusten nought to sechen other cure.

Men saine to wretche is consolacion
To haue an other felowe in his paine
That ought well been our opinion
For bothe thou and I of loue plain
So full of sorowe am I, sothe to saine
That certainly, no more hard grace
Maie sit on me, for why there is no space.

yf God wol, thou art nought agast of me
Lest I would of thy lady the begile
Thou wost thy self, whom that I loue parde
As I best can, gon sithen long while
And sithen thou wost, I do it for no wile
And sithe I am he, that thou trusteth most Tel me somwhat, sens al my wo thou woste

Yet Troilus, for al this no worde saide
But long he laie still, as he deed were
And after this, with siking he abraide
And to Pandarus voice he lent his eere
And vp his eien cast he, and than in feere was Pandarus, lest that in frenseye
He should fal or eis sone deye

And said awake full wonderliche sharpe what sloumbrest thou, as in a litargie?
Or art thou like an Asse to the harpe
That hereth soun, whan men ỳ stringes ply?
But in his minde, of that no melodie
May sinke him to gladen, for that he
So dull is, in his bestialite

And with this, Pandare of his wordes stent
But Troilus to him no thing answerde
For why, to tel was nought his entent
Neuer to no man, for whom that he so serde
For it is said, men maken ofte a yerde with which the maker is him self ibeten
In sondrie maner, as these wise treten

And nameliche in his counsaile telling
That toucheth loue, that ought ben secre
For of him self it woll inough out spring
But if that it the bet gouerned be Eke somtime it is craefte to seme slee
For thing, which in effecte men hunten faste
Al this gan Troilus in his harte caste

But natheles, whan he had herde him crie
Awake he gan, and like wonder sore
And said frende, though that I still lie
I nam not deefe, now peace and crie no more
For I haue herde thy wordes, and thy lore
But suffer me my fortune to bewailen
For thy prouerbes may nought me auailen

Nor other cure canst thou none for me
Eke I nill not ben cured, I woll die what know I of the quene Niobe?
Let be thine olde ensampies, I the prey
No frende (q Pandarus) therfore I sey
Suche is delite of fooles to bewepe
Her wo, but seken boote thei ne kepe

Now know I that reson in the faileth
But tell me, if I wiste what she were
For whome that the al misauenture aileth
Durste thou that I tolde it in her eere
Thy wo, sith thou darst not thy selfe for feere
And her besought, on the to han some routhe why nay (q he) by God and by my trouthe what, not as bestily (q Pandarus)

As though mine owne life lay in this nede why no parde sir (q this Troilus)
And why? for that thou shouldest neuer spede
Wost thou that wel: ye that is out of drede
(q Troilus) for al that euer ye conne
She wol to no suche wretche as I be wonne

(q Pandarus) alas what may this be That thou dispaired art, thus causeles what, liueth nat thy lady, benedicite
How wost thou so, that thou art graceles Suche euil is not alwaie botelesse why put not impossible thus thy cure
Sithe thing to come is ofte in auenture

I graunt wel that thou endurest wo
As sharpe as doth he Tesiphus in hell whose stomake foules tiren euer mo
That highten vultures, as bokes tell
But I may not endure that thou dwell
In so vnskilful an opinion
That of thy wo nis no curacion

But ones nil, thou, for thy cowarde herte
And for thine ire, and folish wilfulnesse
For wantrust tellen of thy sorowes smerte
Ne to thine owne helpe, do bisinesse
As moche as speke a worde, ye more or lesse
But liest as he that of life nothing retche what woman coude loue suche a wretche what may she demen other of thy dethe yf thou thus die, and she not why it is

But that for feare, is polden vp thy brethe
For Grekes han besieged vs i wis
Lord which a thanke shalt ỹ haue thā of this Thus wol she saine, and al the toune atones
The wretch is deed, the diuel haue his bones

Thou maiste alone here wepe, crie, & knele
But loue a woman that she wote it nought
And she wol quite it that thou shalt not fele Unknow vnkist, and lost that is vnsought what many a man hath loue ful dere abought
Twenty winter that his lady ne wiste
That neuer yet his ladies mouthe he kiste

what

what, should he therfore fallen in dispaire?
Or be recreaunte for his owne tene
Or slain himself, all be his ladie faire
Haie naie: but euer in one be fresh and grene
To serue and loue, his dere hartes quene
And thinke it is a guerdone her to serue
A thousande parte more, than he can deserue

And of that worde tooke hede Troilus
And thought anone, what folie he was in
And how that sothe him saied Pandarus
That for to slaen himself, might he not win
But bothe doen vnmanhode and a sinne
And of his death his ladie nought to wite
For of his wo, God wot the kine we full lite.

And with that thought, he gã ful sore sike
And saied, alas: what is me best to doe
To whom Pandare saied, if thee like
The best is, that thou tell me thy wo
And haue my trouth, but if thou finde it so
Be thy bote, or it been full long
To peces doe me drawe, and sithen hong.

Ye, so saiest thou (q Troilus) alas:
But God wot it is naught the rather so Full harde it were to helpen in this cas
For well finde I, that fortune is my fo
Be all the men that ride con or go
Naie of her cruell whele the harme with stõd
For as her list, she plaieth with fre and bond.

(q Pandarus) than blamest thou Fortune
For thou art wroth, ye now at erst I se
Wost thou not wel that fortune is commune
To euery maner wight, in some degre
And yet thou hast this comfort, lo parde
That as her loues moten ouergone
So mote her sorowes passen euerichone.

For if her whele stint, any thing to tourne
Than ceaseth she fortune anone to be
Now sith her whele by no waie maie soiourn
What wost thou of her mutabilite
Right as thy seluen lust woll doen by thee
Or that she be nought ferre fro thine helping Parauenture thou hast cause for to sing.

And therfore wost thou what, I thee beseche
Let be thy wo, and tourning to the grounde
For who so list haue healing of his leche
To him bihoueth first vnwrie his wounde
To Cerberus in hell aie be I bound
Were it for my suster all thy sorowe
By my will she should be thine to morowe.

Loke vp I saie, and tell me what she is Anone, that I maie gone about thy nede
Know eche her aught, for my loue tel me this Than would I hope rather for to spede
Tho gan the veine of Troilus to blede
For he was hit, and wore all redde for shame
Aha (q Pandara) here beginneth game.

And with that worde, he gan him for to shake
And saied thefe, thou shalt her name tell
But tho gan sely Troilous for to quake
As though men should han had him into hel
And saied alas, of all my wo the well
Than is my swete foe called Creseide
And well nigh w that word for feare he deide

And whan ẏ Pãdare heard her name neuen
Lorde he was glad, and saied, frend so dere
Now fare a right, for Joues name in heuen
Loue hath beset thee well, be of good chere
For of good name, and wisedom, and manere
She hath inough, and eke of gentillesse
If she be faire, thou wost thy self I gesse

Ne neuer sete a more bounteous
Of her estate, ne a gladder: ne of speache
A frendlier, ne more gracious
For to doe well, ne lasse had nede to seache
What for to doen, and all this bet to eche
In honour, to as ferre as she maie stretche
A kinges harte semeth by hers a wretche.

And for thy loke of good comforte thou be
For certainly the first pointe is this
Of noble corage, and wele ordaine the
A man to haue peace with him self twis
So oughtest thou, for nought but good it is To louen wel, and in a worthy place
The ought not clepe it happe, but grace

And also thinke, and therwith glad the
That sith thy lady vertuous is all
So foloweth it, that there is some pite
Amonges all these other in generall
And for thi self that thou in special
Require nought, that is ayen her name
For vertue stretcheth not him self to shame

But wel is me, that euer I was borne
That thou beset art in so good a place
For by my trouth i loue I durst haue sworne
The should neuer haue tidde so faire a grace
And wost ẏ why: for thou were wont to chace
At loue in scorne, and for dispite him call
Saint Idiote, lorde of these fooles all

How

How often haſt thou made thy nice iapes
And ſaied, that loues ſeruauntes euerichone
Of nicete, been very Goddes Apes
And ſome would monche her meate alone
Ligging a bedde, and make hem for to grone
And ſome thou ſaideſt had a blaunche feuere
And prayedeſt God, thei ſhould neuer keuere.

And ſome of hem, toke on hem for the cold
More than inough, ſo ſaideſt thou full oft
And ſome han fained oft time and tolde
How that thei waken, whan thei ſlepe ſoft
And thus thei would haue ſet hem ſelf a loft
And natheleſſe were vnder at the laſte
Thus ſaideſt thou, and iapedeſt full faſte.

Yet ſaideſt thou, that for the more pare
Theſe louers would ſpeake in generall
And thoughten it was a liker art
For ſailing for to aſſaien ouer all
Now mais I iape of thee, if that I ſhall
But natheleſſe, though that I ſhould deie
Thou art none of tho, I dare well ſeie.

Now bete thy breſt, and ſaie to God of loue
Thy grace Lorde, for now I me repent
If I miſſpake, for now my ſelf I loue
Thus ſaie with all thine her, in good entent
(q Troilus) ah Lorde, I me conſent
And praie to thee, my iapes thou forgeue
And I ſhall neuer more while I liue.

Thou ſaieſt well (q Pãdare) and now I hope
That thou the Goddes wrath haſt alapeaſed
And ſithe thou haſt wepten many a drope
And ſaid ſoch thing, wherw thy god is pleſed
Now would neuer God, but thou were eaſed
And thinke well the, of whom reſt all thy wo
Here after maie thy comfort been alſo.

For thilke ground, ỹ beareth ỹ wedes wicke
Beareth eke theſe holſome herbes, as full oft Nerte the foule nettle, rough and thicke
The Roſe wereth, ſoote, ſmothe, and ſoft
And nert the valey is the hill a loft
And nert the derke night the glad morowe
And alſo ioie is nert the fine of ſorowe.

Now looke that attempre be thy bridell
And for the beſt aie ſuffre to the tide
Or els all our labour is on idell
He haſteth well, that wiſely can abide
Be diligent and true, and aie well hide
Be luſtie, free, perſeuer in thy ſeruiſe
And all is well, if thou werke in this wiſe.

But he that departed is in euery place
Is no where hole, as writen clerkes wiſe
What wonder is, if ſoche one haue no grace
Eke woſt thou how it fareth of ſome ſeruice
As plant a tree or herbe, in ſondrie wiſe
And on the morowe pull it vp as bliue
No wonder is, though it maie neuer thriue.

And ſith ỹ God of loue hath thee beſtowed
In place digne vnto thy worthineſſe
Stonde faſt, for to good port haſt thou rowed
And of thy ſelf, for any heuineſſe
Hope alwaie well, for but if drerineſſe
Or ouer haſt our bothe labour ſhende
I hope of this to maken a good ende.

And woſt thou why, I am the laſſe afered
Of this matter, with my nece trete
For this haue I heard ſaie of wiſe lered
Was neuer man or woman yet beyete
That was vnapt to ſuffre loues hete
Celeſtiall, or els loue of kinde
For thy ſome grace I hope in her to finde.

And for to ſpeke of her in ſpeciall
Her beaute to bethinken, and her youthe
It ſit her nought, to been Celeſtiall
As yet, though that her liſt bothe and houthe
And truely it ſit her well right nouthe
A worthie knight to louen and cherice
And but ſhe doe, I holde it for a vice.

Wherfore I am, and woll be aie redy
To pain me to doe you this ſeruice
For bothe you to pleaſe, this hope I
Here after, for ye been bothe wiſe
And con it counſaile kepe in ſoche a wiſe
That no man ſhall the wiſer of it be
And ſo we maie been gladded all thre.

And by my trouth I haue right now of the good conceit, in my wit as I geſſe
And what it is, I woll now that thou ſe
I thinke that ſithe Loue of his goodneſſe
Hath thee conuerted out of wickednеſſe.
That thou ſhalt been the beſt poſt I leue
Of all his laie, and moſte his forgreue.

Enſample why, ſe now theſe great clerkes
That erren aldermoſte ayen a la we
And been conuerted from her wicked werkes
Through grace of God, ỹ left hem to withdrawe
Thã arne thei folk that han moſt god in awe
And ſtrengeſt faithed been I vnderſtonde
And con an errour alderbeſt withſtonde.

Whan Troilus had herde Pandare assented
To ben his helpe, in louing of Creseide
Wert of his wo, as who saith vnturmented
But better wert his loue, and than he saide
With sobre chere, as though his hart plaide
Now blissfull Venus helpe, er that I sterue
Of ther Pandare, I mow some thanke deserue

But dere frende, how shal my wo be lesse
Til this be done, and good ene tell me this Now wilt thou saine of me and my distresse
Lest she be wroth, this drede I most i wis
Or wol not heren al, how it is Al this drede I, and ene for the manere
Of the her Eme, she nil no suche thing here

(q Pandarus) thou hast a full great care
Lest the chorle may fal out of the moone
Why lorde? I hate of the the nice fare
Why, entremete of that thou hast doone
For goddes loue, I bid the a boone
So let me alone, and it shal be thy best
Why frende (q he) than done right as thee lest

But herke Pandare o worde, for I nolde
That thou in me wendest so great folie
That to my lady I desiren shoulde
That toucheth harme, or any vilanie
For drede lesse me were leuer die
Than she of me aught els vnderstood
But that, that might sownen in to good

Tho lough this Pandarus, & anon answerde
Ful I thy borow, fie no wight doth but so
I raught not though she stoode and herde
Now that thou saiest, but farwel I wol go
Adieu, be glad, God spede vs both two Pese me this labour, and this businesse
And of my spede, be thine al the swetnes

Tho Troilus gan doune on knees to fall
And Pandare in his armes hente fast
And saide, now lie on the Grekes all
Per parde, God shal helpen at last
And drede lesse, if that my life may last
And God to borne, lo some of hem shal smerte
And yet me athinketh ꝑ this auaut masterte

Now Pandare, I can no more say
Thou wise, thou wost, thou maist, thou art al
My life, my death, hole in thine honde I lay
Helpe me now (q he) Yes by my trouth I shal
God yelde the frende, and this in special
(q Troilus) that thou me recommaunde
To her that may me to the death cõmaunde

This Pandarus tho, desirous to serue
His ful frende, he saide in this manere
Farwel, and thinke I wol the thanke deserue
Haue here my trouth, & that thou shalt here
And went his way, thinking on this matere
And how he best might beseechen her of grace
And finde a time therto, and a place

For euery wight that hath a house to founde
He renneth nat the werke for to beginne
With rakel honde, but he wol bide a stounde
And sende his hertes line out fro within Alderfirst his purpose for to winne
Al thus Pandare in his hart thought
And cast his werke, full wisely er he wrought

But Troilus lay tho no lenger doun
But anon vpon his stede baie
And in the felde he plaied the lioun
Wo was that greke, that with him met that daie
And in the toun, his maner tho forthe aie
So goodly was, and gat him so in grace
That eche him loued, that loked in his face

For he became the frendliest wight
The gentileste, and ene the most fre
The thriftiest, and one the best knight
That in his time was, or might be Deed were his iapes and his cruelte
His high porte, and his maner straunge
And eche of hem, gan for a vertue chaunge

Now let vs stint of Troilus a stounde
That fareth like a man, that hurt is sore
And is somdele of a king of his wounde
Ylessed wel, but heled no dele more
And as an easy pacient the lore
Abite: of him that goth about his cure
And thus he driueth forth his auenture.

Explicit liber primus.

Out of these blacke wawes for to saile
O winde, the weder ginneth clere
For in ꝑ see, the bote hath such trauaile
Of my conning, that vnneth I it stere
This see clepe I the tempestous matere
Of disparre, that Troilus was in
But now of hope the kalendes begin

O lady mine that called art Cleo
Thou be my spede fro this forthe, & my muse

To rime wel this boke til I haue do
Me nedeth here none other art to vse
For why, to euery louer I me excuse
That of no sentement I this endite
But out of latin, in my tonge it write

Wherfore I nil haue neither thãke ne blame
Of al this worke, but prate you inchelp
Dis blameth me if any worde be lame
For as mine auctour said, so say I
Eke though I speake of loue vnfelingly
No wonder is, for it nothinge of newe is
I blinde man can not iudgen wel in hewis

I know that in forme of speche is chaunge
Within a thousande yere, and wordes tho
That haddẽ prise, now wõder nice & straunge
Thinketh hem, and yet thei spake hem so
And spedde as wel in loue, as men now do
Eke for to winnen loue, in sondry ages
In sondry londes, sondry ben vsages

And for thy, if it happe in any wise
That here be any louer in this place
That herkeneth, as the story wol deuise
Howe Troilus came to his ladies grace
And thinketh, so nolde I not loue purchace
Or wondreth on his speche or his doyng
I not, but it is to me no wondring

For euery wight, whiche that to Rome went Halt nat o pathe, ne alway o maner Eke in some londe were al the gamen shent yf that men fared in loue, as men don here
As thus, in open doyng or in chere
In visiting, in forme, or said our sawes
For thy mẽ saine, eche coũtre hath his sawes

Eke scarcely ben there in this place thre
That haue in loue said like, and done in al
For to this purpose this male liken the
And the right nought, yet al is done or shal
Eke some men graue in tre, some in stone wal
As it betide, but sith I haue begonne
Mine authour shall I folow, as I konne.

Explicit Prohemium.

IN May that mother is of monethes glade
That freth flours, blew, white, and rede
Ben quiche ayen, that winter deed made
And full of baume is fleting euery mede whan Phebus doth her bright beames spred
Right in the white Bole, it so betide
As I shal singe, on Maies day the thridde

That Pandarus for all his wise speche
Felte eke his parte of loues shottes kene
That coude he neuer so well of louing preche
It made his hewe a daie ful ofte grene
So hope it, that him fill that daie a tene
In loue, for whiche in wo to bedde he went
And made er it were day full many a went

The swalow Proigne, with a sorowfull lay
Whã morow come, gã make her waimenting
Why she forshapen was, and euery lay
Pandare a bed, halfe in a slombering
Til she so nighe him made her waimenting
How Tereus gan forth her suster take
That with the noise of her he gan awake

And to call, and dresse him vp to rise
Remembring him, his arande was to done
From Troilus, and eke his great empryse
And eak, & knew in good plite was the mone
To done voiage, and take his way full soone Vnto his neces paleis, there beside Now Janus God of entre, thou him gide whan he was come vnto his neces place Where is my lady, to her folke (q he)

And thei him tolde, and in forthe in gan pace
And founde two other ladies sit and she Within a paued parlour, and they thre
Herden a maiden hem reden the geste
Of the siege of Thebes, while hem leste

(q Pandarus) madame God you se
With your boke, and al the companie Eighe vncle mine, welcome i wis (q she)
And vp she rose, and by the honde in hie
She toke him fast, and said, this night thrie
To good mote it turne, of you I mette
And with ỹ word, she doun on benche him sette

Ye nece, ye shul faren wel the bet
If God wol al this yere (q Pandarus)
But I am sory that I haue you let To herken of your boke ye praisen thus
For goddes loue what saithe it, tel it vs
Is it of loue, or some good ye me lere
Eincle (q she) your maistresse is nat here

With that thei gonnen laugh, & tho she rede
This romaunce is of Thebes, that we rede
And we haue herd how ỹ king Laius dede

Thrown

Through Edippus his sonne, and al the dede
And here we stinten, at these letters rede
How the bishop, as the boke can tell
Amphiorar, full through the grounde to hell

(q Pandarus) al this know I my selue
And al thassiege of Thebes, and the care
For herof ben there maked bokes twelue
But let be this, and tell me how ye fare
Do way your barbe, and shew your face bare
Do way your boke, rise vp and let vs daunce
And let vs done to May some obseruaunce

Eighe, God forbid (q she) be ye mad
Is that a widowes life, so God you saue
By God ye maken me right sore adrad
Ye bene so wilde, it semeth as ye raue
Yelat me wel bet aie in a caue
To bide, and rede on holy saintes liues
Let maidens gon to daunce, & yonge wiues.

Is euer thriue I (q this Pandarus)
Yet coulde I tel a thing, to don you play
Now vncle dere (q she) tell it vs
For goddes loue, is than thassiege away
I am of Grekes ferde, so that I deie
Say nay (q he) as euer mote I thriue
It is a thing wel bet than suche striue

Ye holy God (q she) what thing is that What bet than suche striue: eighe nay i wis
For al this world, ne can I reden what It should ben, some iape I trowe it is
And but your seluen tel vs what it is My wit is for to arede it al to leene
As helpe me God, I not what that ye meene

And I your borow, ne neuer shal (q he)
This thing be tolde to you, as mote I thriue
And why vncle mine, why so (q she)
By God (q he) that wol I tel as bliue
For prouder woman is there none on liue
And ye it wiste, in al the toune of Troie
Iape nat, so euer haue I ioie

Tho gan she wondren more than before
Thousande folde, and doune her eien cast
For neuer sithe the time that she was bore
To knowen thing, desired she so fast
And with a sike, she said him at the last
Now vncle mine, I nil you not displese
Nor asken more, that may do you disese

So after this, with many wordes glade
And frendly tales, and with mery chere
Of this & that they spake, and gonnen wade
In many an vnkouth glad and depe matere
As frendes done, whan they bethe ifere
Til she gan asken him how Hector ferde
That was the tounes wall, and Grekes yerde

Ful wel I thanke it God, saide Pandarus
Saue in his arme he hath a litle wounde
And ese his freshe brother Troilus
The wise worthy Hector the secounde
In whom that euery vertue list habounde
As al trouthe, and al gentillesse
Wisedome, honour, fredome, and worthinesse

In good faith eme (q she) that liketh me
They faren wel, God saue hem bothe two
For trewliche, I holde it great deinte
A kinges sonne in armes wel to do
And be of good condicions therto
For great power, and moral vertue here
As selde isene in one persone ifere

In good faith that is sothe (q Pandarus)
But by my trouth, the king hath sones twey
That is to meane, Hector and Troilus
That certainly though that I should dey
They ben as voide of vices, dare I sey
As any men that liuen vnder sonne
Her might is wide iknow, & what they conne

Of Hector nedeth it no more for to tel
In all this worlde, there nis a better knight
Than he that is of worthinesse the wel
And he wel more vertue hath than might
This knoweth many a wise & worthy knight
The same prise of Troilus I sey
God helpe me so, I know not suche twey

By God (q she) of Hector that is sothe
Of Troilus the same thing trowe I
For dere deleste, men telleth that he dothe
In armes day by day, so worthely
And beareth him here at home so gently
To euery wight, that al prise hath he
Of hem that me were leuest praised be

Ye say right sothe i wis (q Pandarus)
For yesterday, who so had with him ben
Might haue wondred vpon Troilus
For neuer yet so thicke a swarme of been Ne flewe, as Grekes from him ganne fleen
And through the felde in euery wightes eere
There was no crie, but Troilus is there

Now here, now there, he hunted hem so fast

There nas but Grekes blode, and Troilus
Nowe him he hurt, and him al doun he cast
Alle were he went it was arated thus
He was her death, and helde and life for vs
That as ỳ day ther durst him non withstõde
While ỳ he helde his blody swerde in honde

Therto he is the frendelist man
Of great estate, that euer I sawe my liue
And where him liste, best felowship can
To suche as him thinketh able for to thriue
And with that word, tho Pandarus as blyue
He toke his leaue, and said I wol gon hen
Nay, blame haue I vncle (q̃ she then)

What eileth you to be thus wery soone
And nameliche of women, wol ye so:
Naie sitteth doune, by God I haue to done
With you, to speke of wisdome er ye go
And euery wight that was about hem tho
That herde that, gan ferre awaie to stonde
While thei two had al that him liste in honde

Whan ỳ her tale al brought was to an ende
Of her estate, and of her gouernaunce
(q̃ Pandarus) now time is that I wende
But yet I say, ariseth let vs daunce
And caste your widowes habite to mischaūce
What liste you thus your selfe to disfigure
Sithe you is tidde so glad an auenture

But wel bethought, for loue of God (q̃ she) Shal I nat weten what ye meane of this No, this thing alketh leaser tho (q̃ he)
And eke me would muche greue i wis
If I it tolde, and ye it toke amis
Yet were it bette my tonge to holde stil
Than say a sothe, that were aienst your wil

For nece by the goddesse Minerue
And Jupiter, that maketh the thonder ring
And eke blisful Venus, that I serue
Ye ben the woman in this world liuing
Withouten paramours, to my weting
That I best loue, and lothest am to greue
And that ye weten wel your selfe I leue

I wis mine vncle (q̃ she) graunt mercy
Your frendship haue I founden euer yet
I am to no man holden trewly
So muche as you, and haue so litel quit
And with the grace of God, emforth my wit
As in my gilte, I shal you neuer offende
And if I haue er this I wol amende

But for the loue of God, I you beseche
As ye be he, that I loue most and triste
Let be to me you fremed maner speche
And taie to me your nece, what you liste
And with that worde, her vncle anon her kiste
And said, gladly my leue nece dere
Take it for good, that I shal say you here

With that, she gan her eien doune to caste
And Pandarus to coughe gan alite
And saide: Nece alway lo, to the laste
How so it be, that some men hem delite
With subtel art her tales for tendite
Yet for al that in her entencion
Her tale is all for some conclusion

And sithe thende is euery tales strength
And this mater is so behouely
What should I paint or drawen it on length
To you that ben my frende so faithfully
And with that worde he gan right inwardly
Beholden her, and loken in her face
And saide, on suche a mirrour good grace

Than thought he thus, if I my tale ende
Aught harde, or make a processe any while She shal no sauour haue therin but litle
And trowe I would her in my wil begile
For tender wittes wenen al be while Wher as thei con nat plainliche vnderstond
For thy her wit to seruen wol I fonde

And loked on her in a besy wise
And she was ware that he beheld her so
Ah lorde (q̃ she) so faste ye me auise
Sawe ye me neuer er now, what say ye no
Yes yes (q̃ he) and bet wol er I go
But by my trouth I thought nowe, if ye
Be fortunate, for now men shal it se

For euery wight, some goodly auentur
Somtime is shape, if he it can receiuen
But if he nil take of it no cure
When that it cometh, but wilfully it weiue
Lo, neither case, nor fortune him deceiue
But right his own slouth and wretchednes
And suche a wight is for to blame I gesse

Good auenture, O belle nece haue ye Full lightly founden, and ye conne it take
And for the loue of God, and eke of me
Catche it anone, lest auenture slake
What should I lenger processe of it make Yeue me your hond for in this world is non
If that you list a wight so wel begon

And

And sithe I spekе of good entencioun
As I to you haue tolde wel here before
And loue as wel your honour and renoun
As any creature in al the world ibore
By al the othes that I haue you swore
And ye be wrothe therfore or wene I lie
Se shal I neuer sene you ekte with eie

Beth nat agaste, ne quaketh nat, wherto
Se chaunge nat for fere so your hewe
For hardely the worste of this is do
And though my tale as now be to you newe
Yet trust al waie, ye shal me finde trewe
And were it thing that me thought vnsitting
To you would I no suche tales bring

Now my good eme, for goddes loue I pray (q she) come of and tel me what it is For bothe I am agaste what ye wol say
And eke me longeth it to wit iwis
For whether it be wel, or be amis
Say on, let me not in this feare dwel
So wol I done, now herkeneth I shal tel

Now nece mine, the kinges dere sonne
The good wise worthy, freshe and fre
Whiche alway for to done wel is his wonne
The noble Troilus so loueth the
That but ye helpe it wol his bane be Lo here is al, what should I more sey
Doth what you list, to make him liue or die

But if ye let him dye, I wol sterue
Haue here my trouth, nece I nil not lie
If should I with this knife my throte kerue
With that the teeres burst out of his eyen
And saide, if that ye done vs both dien
Thus giltelesse, than haue ye fished faire
What mende ye, though q we both apaire

Alas, he whiche that is my lorde so dere
That trewe man, that noble gentle knight
That naught desireth, but your frendly chere
Se him dien, there he goth vpright
And hasteth him, with al his ful might
For to ben slaine, if his fortune assente
Alas that God you suche a beaute sente

If it be so that ye so cruel be
That of his deth you lisseth nought to retch
That is so trewe and worthy, as we se
No more than of a taper or a wretch
If ye be suche, your beaute may nat stretch
To make amendes of so cruell a dede
Iustement is good before the nede

Wo worthe the faire Gemme vertueliesse
Wo worth that herbe also that doth no bote
Wo worth the beaute that is routhlesse
Wo worth that wight trede eche vnder fote
And ye that ben of beaute croppe and rote
If therwithal in you ne be no routhe
Than is harme ye leuen by my trouthe

And also thinke wel, that this is no gaude
For me were leuer, thou, I and he Were honged, than I should ben his baude
As high as men might on vs alle se
I am thine Eme, the shame were to me
As wel as the, if that I should assent
Through mine abet, q he thine honour shent

Now vnderstonde, for I you nought requere
To binde you to him, through no benefet
Saue onely that ye make him better cheere
Than ye han don er this, and more felle
So that his life be saued at the felle
This al and some, and plainly our entente
God helpe me so, I neuer other mente

Lo, this requeft is nought but skil iwis
Ne doute of reason parde is there none
I set the worste, that ye dreden this Men would wonder to sene him come & gone
Ther ayenst answere I thus anone
That euery wight, but he be foole of kinde
Wol deme it loue of frendship in his minde

What, who wol demen though he se a man
To temple gon, that he the images ceteth
Thinke eke, howe wel and wisely that he can Gouerne himselfe, that he nothing forfeteth
That wher he cometh, he pris & thonk hi geteth
And eke therto he shal come here so selde
What force were it, though al the toun beheld

Suche loue of frendes reigneth al this toun
And wote you in that mantel euermo
And God so wis be my saluacioun
As I haue saide, your best is to do so
But good nece, alway to stint his wo
So let your daunger, sugred ben alite
That of his death, ye be not al to wite

Creseide, which that herde him in this wise
Thought, I shal felen what he meaneth iwis
Now Eme (q she) what would ye deuise?
What is your rede, I should done of this?
That is wel said q he, certaine best is That ye him loue aien for his louing
As loue for loue, is skilful guerdoning

Thinke eke how elde waſteth euery hour
In eche of you, a part of beaute
And therfore, er that age the deuour
Go loue, for olde there will no wight of the Let this prouerbe, a lore vnto you be
To late t'ware, ỳ beaute, whan it paſte
And elde daunceth daunger, at the laſte

The kinges foole is wont to crie loude whã ỳ he thinketh a woman bereth her hie
So longe mote ye liue, and all proude
Til Crowes fete growe vnder your eie
And lende you than a mirrour in to prie
In which that ye may ſe your face a morowe
Nece, I bid wiſhe you no more ſorowe

With this he ſtinte, and caſt doune the heed
And ſhe began to breſt and wepe anone
And ſaide, alas for wo, why nere I deed
For of this world, the faith is al agone
Alas, what ſhulden ſtraunge vnto me done
When he that for my beſt frende I wende
Hate me to loue, and ſhould it me defende

Alas, I would haue truſted doutles
That if that I, through my diſauenture
Had loued either him, or Achiles
Hector, or any other creature
Ye nolde haue had mercy ne meſure
On me, but alwaie had me in repreue
This falſe worlde alas, who may it leue

What: is this al the ioy and al the feeſt:
Is this your redreſs this my bliſful caas
Is this the very mede of your beheeſt:
Is al this painted proceſſe ſaid (alas)
Right for this ſine, O lady mine Pallas
Thou in this dredeful caſe for me puruey
For ſo aſtonied am I, that I dey

With that ſhe gan ful ſorowfully to ſike
Ne may it be no bet (ỳ Pandarus)
By God I ſhall no more come here this weke
And God to ſorne, that am miſtruſted thus
I ſe wel now, ye ſetten light of vs
Or of our death alas, I woful wreche
Might he yet liue, of me were nought to reche

O cruel God, o diſpitous Marte
O furies thre of hel, on you I crie
So let me neuer out of this houſe departe yf that I ment harme or vilanie
But ſithe I ſe my Lorde mote nedes die
And I with him, here I me thriue and ley
That wickedly ye done vs bothe dey

But ſithe it liketh you, that I be deed
By Neptunus that God is of the ſee
Fro this forthe ſhal I neuer eeten breed
Til I mine owne herte bloode maie ſee
For certaine I wol die, as ſoone as he
And vp he ſterte, and on his waie he raught
Til ſhe againe him by the lappe caught

Creſcide, which that wel nigh ſtarke for ſorrow
So as ſhe was the ſorfulleſt wight
That might be, and herde eke with her eere
And ſawe the ſorowful erneſt of the knight
And in his praier ſawe eke non vnright
And for the harme eke that might fal more
She gan to rewe, & dredde her wonder ſore

And thought thus, vnhappes fallen thicke
Alday for Loue, and in ſuche maner caas
As men ben cruell in hem ſelfe and wicke
And if this man ſlee here him ſelfe, alas
In my preſence, it nil be no ſolas
What men would of it deme, I can nat ſay
It nedeth me full ſlighly for to play

And with a ſorowful ſigh, ſhe ſaide thus
Ah lorde, what me is tidde a ſory chaunce
For mine eſtate lieth in a leopardie
And eke mine emes life lieth in balaunce
But natheleſſe, with goddes gouernaunce
I ſhal ſo done, mine honour ſhal I kepe
And eke his life, and ſtint for to wepe

Of harmes two, the leſſe is for to chefe yet had I leuer maken him good chere
In honour, than mine emes life to leſe
Ye ſaine ye nothing els me requere:
No wis (ỳ he) mine owne nece dere:
Now wel (ỳ ſhe, and I wol don my paine
I ſhal mine herte ayen my luſt conſtraine

But that I nil nat holden him in honde
Ne loue a man, that can I naught ne may Ayenſt my wil, but eis wol I fonde
Mine honour ſaue, pleſen him fro day to day
Therto nolde I not ones haue ſaide nay
But that I dredde, as in my fantaſie
But ceſſe cauſe, aie ceſſeth maladie

But here I make a proteſtacion
That in this proceſſe if ye deper go
That certainly, for no ſaluacion
Of you, though that ye ſterue both the two Though al the worlde on o day be my fo
Ne ſhal I neuer on him haue other routhe
I graunt wel (ỳ Pandare by my trouthe

But

But maie I truſt well to you (q̄ he)
That of this thing that ye han hight me here
Ye woll it holde truely vnto me
Ye doubtleſſe (q̄ ſhe) mine vncle dere
Se that I ſhall haue cauſe in this matere
(q̄ he) to plain, or elles you to preache
Why no parde, what nedeth more ſpeache.

Tho fill thei in other tales glade
Till at the laſt, o good eme (q̄ ſhe tho)
For loue of God whiche that vs bothe made
Tell me how firſt ye wiſten of his wo
Wot non of it but ye, he ſaied no
Can he well ſpeake of loue (q̄ ſhe) I preie
Tell me, for I the bet ſhall me purueie.

Tho Pandarus alite gan to ſmile
And ſaied: By my trouth I ſhall now tell
This other daie, nat gon full long while Within the paleis gardin by a well
Gan he and I, well halfe a daie to dwell
Right for to ſpeaken of an ordinaunce
How we the Grekes mighten diſauaunce.

Sone after that we gone for to lepe
And caſten with our dartes to and fro
Till at the laſt, he ſaied, he would ſlepe
And on the graſſe adoune, he laied him tho
And I after gan to romen, to and fro
Till that I heard, as I walked alone
How he began, full wofully to grone.

Tho gan I ſtalke him ſoftly behinde
And ſikerly the ſothe for to ſaine
As I can clepe ayen now to my minde
Right thus to loue, he gan him for to plain
He ſaied: lorde, haue routh vpon my pain
Alhaue I been rebell in mine entent
Now (Mea culpa) Lorde I me repent.

O God, that at thy diſpoſicion
Ledeſt the kinde, by iuſt purueiaunce
Of euery wight, my lowe confeſſion
Accept in gree, and ſende me ſoche penaunce
As liketh thee, but from me diſeſperaunce
That maie my ghoſt departe alwaie fro the Thou be my ſhilde, for thy benignite.

For certes lorde, ſo ſore hath ſhe me wounded
That ſtode in blacke, with loking of her iyen
That to mine hartes botome it is ſtounded
Through which I wot, ſ̄ I muſt nedes dien
This is the worſt, I dare me nought bewrien
And well the hoter been the gledes rede
That men hem wrien with aſhen pale a dede.

With that he ſmote his hedde adoune anone
And gan to muttre, I nat what truely
And I with that gan ſtill awaie to gone
And lete thereof, as nothing wiſt had I
And come again anon and ſtode him by
And ſaied awake, ye ſlepen all to long
It ſemeth nought that loue doth you wrong

That ſlepen ſo, that no man maie you wake
Who ſeie euer er this ſo dull a man
Ye frende (q̄ he) doe ye your heddes ake
For loue, and let me liuen as I can
But lorde that he for wo was pale and wan
Yet made he tho as freſhe a countenaunce
As though he ſhould haue led ſ̄ newe daunce

This paſſed forth, till now this other daie
It fell that I come romīng all alone
Into his chambre, and founde how that he laie
Upon his bedde: but man ſo ſore grone
Ne heard I neuer, and what was his mone
Ne wiſt I nought, for as I was comming
All ſodainly, he left his complaining.

Of whiche I toke ſomwhat ſuſpection
And nere I come, and founde him wepe ſore
And God ſo wiſe be my ſaluacion
As neuer of thing had I no routh more
For neither with engine, ne with no lore
Unnethes might I fro the death him kepe
That yet fele I mine harte for him wepe.

And God wot neuer ſith that I was borne
Was I ſo buſie no man for to preache
Ne neuer was to wight, ſo depe ſworne
Er he me told, who might been his leache
But not to you rehearſen all his ſpeache
Or all his wofull wordes for to ſowne
Ne bid me nought, but ye woll ſe me ſwone.

But for to ſaue his life, and elſ nought
And to non harme of you, thus am I driuen
And for the loue of God that vs hath wrought
Soche chere him doth, ſ̄ he and I maie liuen
Now haue I plat to you mine harte ſhriuen
And ſith ye wote that mine entent is cleane
Take hede thereof, for none euill I meane.

And right good thrift, I pray to God haue ye
That han ſoche one caught withouten net
And be ye wiſe, as ye be faire to ſe
Well in the ring, than is the Rubie ſet
There were neuer two ſo well imet Whan ye been his all hole, as he is your
There mightie god ſet graunt vs to ſe ſ̄ hour

Naie thereof spake I nat: A ha (q she)
As helpe me God, ye shenden euery dele
A mercie dere nece, anon (q he)
What so I spake, I ment nought but wele
By Mars the God, that helmed is of stele
Now beth not wroth, my blood, my nece dere
Now well (q she) forgeuen be it here.

With this he toke his leaue, and home he wēt
Ye Lorde how he was glad, and well bigon
Creseide arose, no lenger she ne stent
But streight into her closet went anon
And set her doune, as still as any stone
And euery worde gan vp and doune to winde
That he had saied, as it came her to minde.

And wore somedele astonied in her thought Right for the newe case, but whan that she Was full auised, tho found she right nought
Of perill, why that she ought aferde be
For man maie loue of possibilite
A woman so, his harte maie to brest
And she nat loue ayen, but if her lest.

But as she sat alone, and thought thus Thassemblee arose at sharmoche all without
And men cried in the strete, se Troilus
Hath right now put to flight ỳ Grekes rout
With that gonne all her meine for to shout
A, go we se, cast vp the gates wide
For through this strete he mote to paleis ride.

For other waie is fro the yates none
Of Dardanus there open is the cheine
With that come he, and all his folke anone
In easie pace riding, in routes tweine
Right his happie daie was sothe to seine
For whiche men saith maie not disflourbed be
That shall betide of necessite.

This Troilus sat on his baie stede
All armed saue his hedde, full richely
And wounded was his horse, & gan to blede
On whiche he rode a pace full softly
But sothe a knightly sight truely
As was on him, was nat withouten faile
To loke on Mars, that God is of battaile.

So like a man of armes, and a knight
He was to seen, fulfilled of high prowesse
For bothe he had a bodie, and might
To doen that thing, as well as hardinesse
And eke to seen him in his geare dresse
So fresshe, so yong, so weldy semed he
It was an heauen vpon him for to se.

His helme to heuen was in twentie places
That by a tissue hong, his backe behinde
His shelde to dashed w̄ swerdes & with maces
In whiche men might many an arowe finde
That thirled had horne, nerfe, and rinde
And aie the people cried, here cometh our lorde
And next his brother, holder vp of Troie.

For which he wert a little redde for shame
When he so heard the people vpon him crien
That to beholde, it was noble game
How soberliche he cast a doune his yen
Creseide anone gan all his chere espien
And let it so sokt in her harte sinke
That to her self she said, who yaue me drinke

For all her own thought, she wore alredie Remembring her right thus, lo this is he Whiche ỳ mine vncle sweareth he mote dede
But I on him haue mercie and pite
And with that thought, for pure ashamed be Gan in her hedde to pull, and that as fast
While he and all the people forth by past.

And gan to cast, and rollen vp and doun
Within her thought his excellent prowesse
And his estate, and also his renoun
His witte, his shape, and eke his gentilesse
But moste her fauour was, for his distresse
Was all for her, and thought it were a routh
To slaen soche one, if that he ment trouth.

Now might some enuious iangle thus
This was a sodain loue, how might it be
That she so lightly loued Troilus
Right for the first sight: ye parde
Now who so saied so, mote he neuer thee
For euery thing, a ginning hath it nede
Er all be wrought, withouten any drede.

For I saie nat that she so sodainly
Yaf him her loue, but that she gan enclin
To liken him tho, and I haue told you why
And after that, his manhode and his pin
Made that loue within her gan to min
For whiche by proces, and by good servise
He wanne her loue, and in no sodain wise.

And all so blisful Venus wele arayed
Satte in her seuenth house of heuen tho
Disposed wele, and with aspectes payed
To helpe sely Troylus of hys wo
And sothe to sayne, she nas nat all a foe
To Troylus, in hys natyuyte God wote, that wele the sooner sped he

Now

Now let vs stente of Troilus a throwe
That rideth forth, and let vs tourne fast vnto Creseide, that heng her hedde full lowe
There as she satte alone, and gan to cast
Whereon she would apoinct her at the last
If it so were, her Eme ne would cesse
Of Troilus, vpon her for to presse.

And lorde so she gan in her thought argue
In this matter, of whiche I haue you told
And what to doen best where, & what eschue
That plited she full oft in many fold
Now was her hart warme, now was it cold
And what she thought, somwhat shal I write
As mine aucthour listeth for to endite.

She thought first, that Troilus person
She knewe by sight, and eke his gentelnesse
And thus she said, all were it nought to doen
To graunt him loue, yet for his worthinesse
Yt were honor with plaie, and with gladnesse
In honeste, with suche a Lorde to deale
For mine estate, and also for his heale.

She well wote I, my kinges sonne is he
And sith he hath to se me suche delite
If I would vtterliche his sight flie
Peraventure he might haue me in dispite
Through which I might stond in worse plite
Now were I wise, me hate to purchase Without nede, there I maie stande in grace.

In euery thing, I wot there lieth measure
For though a man forbid drunkenesse
He nought forbiddeth that euery creature
Be drinkeles for alwaie as I gesse
Eke sithe I wot for me is his distresse
I ne ought not for that thing him dispise
Sith it is so, he meaneth in good wise.

And eke I knowe, of long time agone
His thewes good, and that he nis not nice
No dauntour saine men, certain he is none
To wise is he, to doen so greate a vice Me als I nill him neuer so cherice
That he shall make auaunt by iust cause
He shall me neuer binde in suche a clause.

Now set I case, the hardest is I wis
Yen might demen that he loueth me
What dishonour were it vnto me this?
Maie iche him let of that, why naie parde
I knowe also, and alwaie here and se
Yen louen women all this toune about
Be thei the wers? why naie without doubt?

I thinke eke how, he worthie is to haue
Of all this noble toune the thriftiest
That women is, if she her honour saue
For out and out he is the worthiest
Saue onely Hector, whiche that is the best
And yet his life lieth all now in my cure
But suche is loue, and eke mine auenture.

Ne me to loue, a wonder is it nought
For well wote I my self, so God me spede
All woll I that none wit of this thought
I am one the fairest out of drede
And goodliest, who so that taketh hede
And so men saine in all the toune of Troie
What wonder is: though he of me haue ioie.

I am mine owne woman well at ease
I thanke it God, as after mine estate
Right yong, and stond vntied in lustie lease
Without en iealousie, and suche debate
Shall no husbonde saine to me checke mate
For either thei been full of iealousie
Or maisterfull, or louen nouelrie.

What shall I doen to what fine liue I thus?
Shall I not loue, in case if that me lest?
What pardieur I am not religious
And though that I mine harte set at rest
Upon this knight, that is the worthiest
And kepe alwaie mine honor, and my name
By all right it maie doe me no shame.

But right as whan the sunne shineth bright
In March, that chaungeth oft time his face
And that a cloud is put with winde to flight
Whiche ouerspradde the Sunne, as for a space
A cloudy thought gan through her soul pace
That ouerspradde her bright thoughtes all
So that for feare almoste she gan to fall.

That thought was this: alas sith I am free
Should I now loue, and put in ieopardie
My libernesse, and thrallen libertie
Alas, how durst I thinken that folie?
Maie I not well in other folke aspie
Her dredfull ioie, her constreint, and her paine
Ther loueth non, ȳ she ne hath waie to plaine

For loue is yet the moste stormie life
Right of himself, that euer was begonne
For euer some mistrust, or nice strife
There is in loue, some cloud ouer the Sunne
Thereto we wretched women nothing conne
When vs is wo, but wepe and sit and thinke
Our wretche is this, our owne wo to drinke.

Also wicked tongues been so prest
To speake vs harme, eke men been so vntrue
That right anon as cesseth his lest
So cesseth loue, and loth to loue a newe
But harme idoe is doen, who so it rue
For thous these men for loue hem first to rede
Full sharpe beginning breaketh oft at ende.

How oft time maie men rede and seen
The treason, that to women hath be doe
To what line is soche loue, I can not seen
Or where becometh it, whan it is go
There is no wight that wote, I trowe so
Wher it becometh, lo, no wight on it spurneth
That erst was nothing, into naught turneth

How busie (if I loue) eke must I be
To pleasen hem, that iangle of loue, & demen
And coyen hem, that thei saie no harm of me
For though there be no cause, yet hem semen
Al be for harme, that folke her frēdes quemen
And who maie stoppen euery wicked tong:
Or soune of belles, while that thei been rōg:

And after that her thought gan for to clere
And saied, he whiche ȳ nothing vndertaketh
Nothing acheueth, be him lothe or dere
And with an other thought her hart quaketh
Than slepeth hope, and after drede awaketh
Now hote now cold, but thus bitwixen twey
She rist her vp, and went her for to pley.

Adoune the staire, anon right tho she went Into her gardine, with her neces three
And vp and doun, thei maiden many a went Flerippe and she, Tarbe, and Antigone
To plaien, that it ioie was to see
And other of her women a greate rout
Her folowed in the gardine all about.

This yerde was large, and railed al the alies
And shadowed wel, w blosomy bowes grene
And benched newe, and sonded all the waies
In which she walketh arme in arme betwen
Till at the last Antigone the shene
Gan on an Troian song to singen clere
That it an heuen was, her voice to here.

She saied: O loue, to whom I haue, & shal
Been humble subiect, true in mine entent
As I best can, to you Lorde yeue iche all
For euermore mine hartes lust to rent
For neuer yet thy grace no wight lent
So blisfull cause as me, my life to lede
In all ioie and suretie, out of drede.

The blisfull God, hath me so well beset
In loue i wis, that all that beareth life
Imaginen ne could how to be bet
For Lorde without en iealousie or strife
I loue one, whiche that moste is entemid
To seruen well, vnverily or vnfained
That euer was, & lest with harme distained.

As he that is the well of worthinesse
Of trouth grouñd, mirrour of goodlihede
Of wit Apollo, stone of sikernesse
Of vertue roote, of luste kinder and hede
Through whiche is all sorowe fro my bede
I wis I loue him best, so doeth he me
Now good thrift haue he, where so euer he be

Whom should I thanken but you God of loue
Of all this blisse, in whiche to bathe I gine
And thanked be ye Lorde, for that I loue
This is the right life that I am inne
To flemen all maner vice and sinne
This doeth me so to vertue for to entende
That daie by daie I in my will amende.

And who that saieth that for to loue is vice
Or thraldome, though he fele in it distresse
He either is enuious, or right nice
Or is vnmightie for his shrewednesse
To louen, for soche maner folke I gesse
Dispraisen loue, as nothing of him knowe
Thei speaken, but thei bent neuer his bowe.

What is the Sunne worse of kinde right
Though that a man, for feblenesse of his yen
Maie not endure on it to see for bright
Or loue the worse, that wretches on it crien
No wele is worth, that maie no sorowe drien
And for thy, who that hath an hedde of wex
Fro call of stones ware him in the werre.

But I with all mine harte, & al my might
As I haue saied, woll loue vnto my last
My dere harte, and all mine owne knight
In whiche mine harte growen is so fast
And is in me, that it shall euer last
All dredde I first loue him to begin Now wote I well there is no perill in.

And of her song right with ȳ worde she stent
And therewithall, now nece (q Creseide)
Who made this song, now w to good entent
Antigone answerde anon, and saide
Madame i wis the goodliest maide
Of greate estate in all toune of Troie
And led her life in moste honour and ioie.

For sothe

forsothe so semeth it by her song
Of two Creseide, and gan ther with to sike
And saied: Lorde, is there soche blisse emong
These louers, as thei can faire endite
Ye wisse quod fresche Intigone the white
For all the folke that haue or been on liue
Se con well the blisse of loue discriue.

But wene ye that euery wretche wote
The parfite blisse of loue, why naie I wis
Thei wenen all be loue, if one be hote
Wowaie dowaie, thei wote nothing of this Men mote ashen of sainctes, if it is Ought faire in heuen, & why? for thei can tell
And aske tendes, if it be foule in hell.

Creseide vnto ỹ purpose naught answerde
But saied, iwis it woll be night as faste
But euery worde, which that she of her herde
She gan to printen in her harte faste
And aie gan loue her lasse for to agaste
Than it did erst, and sinken in her harte
That she ware somwhat able to conuarte.

The daies honour, and the heauens eye
The nightes foe, all this clepe I thee sonne
Gan westren fast, and doun ward for to wrie
Ye that had his daies course ironne
And white thinges worē dimme and donne
For lacke of light, and sterres for to apere
That she and all her folke in went ifere.

So whan it liked her to gon to reste
And voided weren thei that voiden ought
She saied, that to slepen well her leste
Her women sone till her bedde her brought Whan al was hust, than laie she stil & thought
Of all this thing the maner and the wise
Rehearce it nedeth not, for ye been wise.

A Nightingale vpon a Cedre grene
Under the chamber wall, there as she laie
Full loude song ayen the Mone shene
Paraventure in his birdes wise a laie
Of loue, that made her harte fresche and gaie
That herkened she so long in good entent
Till at the last the dedde slepe her hent.

And as she slept, anon right tho her met
How that an Egle fethered white as bone
Under her brest his long clawes set
And out her harte he rent, and that anon
And did his harte into her brest to gon
Of which she nought agrose, ne nothing smart
And forthe he flieth, with harte left for hart.

Now let her slepe, and we our tales holde
Of Troilus, that is to Paleis ridden
Fro the scarmishe of whiche I tolde
And in his chamber sate, and hath abidden
Till two or three of his messangers yeden
For Pandarus, and soughten him full fast
Til thei him found, & brought him at the last

This Pandarus came leaping in at ones
And saied thus, who hath been well ibete
To daie with swerdes, and long stones
But Troilus, that herd him au hete
And gan to iape, and saied, Lorde ye swete
But rise and let vs soupe, and go to reste
And he answerde him, doe we as thee leste.

With all the haste goodlie as thei might Thei sped hem fro the souper, and to bedde
And euery wight out at the doore him dight
And whider him list, vpon his waie him sped
But Troilus thought that his harte bledde
For wo, till that he heard some tiding
And saied frende, shall I now wepe or sing.

(quod Pandarus) be still and let me slepe
And doe on thy hoode, thine nedes spedde be
And chese if thou wolt sing, daunce, or lepe
At short wordes thou shalt trowe me
Sir, my nece woll doen well by thee
And loue thee best, by God and by trothe
But lacke of pursute make it in thy slothe.

For thus forforth I haue thy werke begon
Fro daie to daie, till this daie by the morowe
Her loue of frendship haue I to thee won
And therfore hath she laid her faith to borowe
Algate a foote is hameled of thy sorowe
What should I lenger sermon of it holde
As ye haue heard before, all he him tolde.

But right as floures throuz the cold of night
Iclosed, stoupen in her stalkes lowe
Redressen hem ayen the Sunne bright
And spreden in her kinde course by rowe
Right so gan tho his eyen vp to throwe
This Troilus, and saied: O Venus dere
Thy might, thy grace, iheried be it here.

And to Pandarus he held vp both his hōdes
And saied, Lorde all thine be that I haue
For I am hole, and broken been my bondes
A thousande Troies, who so that me yaue
Eche after other, God so wis me saue
Ne might me so gladen, so mine harte
It spredeth so for ioie it woll to starte.

But lorde how shall I doen how shall I liue
When shall I nere my dere harte se?
How shall this long time awaie be driuen
Till that thou be ayen at her fro me
Thou maiest answere, abide abide: but he
That hangeth by the necke, sothe to saine
In greate disease abideth for the paine.

All easely now, for the loue of Marte
(q Pandarus) for euery thing hath time
So long abide, till that the night departe
For also sikker as thou liest here by me
And God to forme, I woll be there at prime
And for thy werke som what, as I shall saie
Or on some other wight this charge laie.

For parde God wot, I haue euer yet
Been redy thee to serue, and this night
Haue I not fained, but emfor the my wit Doen all thy lust, and shal with al my might Doe now as I shall saine, and fare aright
And if thou nilte, wite all thy self the care
On me is nought along thine euill fare.

I wote well that thou wiser art than I
A thousande folde: but if I were as thou
God helpe me so, as I would otterly
Right of mine owne honde write her now
A letter, in whiche I would her tellen how I farde a misse, and her beseche of routh
Now helpe thy self, and leaue it for no slouth

And I my self shall therwith to her gon
And whā thou wost that I am with her there
Worthe thou vp on a courser right anon
Ye hardely, right in thy best gere
And ride forth by ꝑ place, as naught ne were
And thou shalt finde vs (if I maie sitting
At some windowe, into the strete loking.

And if thee list, than maiest thou vs salue
And vpon me make thou thy countenaunce
But by thy life beware, and fast eschue
To tarien ought, god child vs fro mischaunce
Ride forth thy waie, & hold thy gouernaunce
And we shall speake of thee som what I trow
When thou art gon, to doe thine eares glow.

Touching thy letter thou are wise inough
I wot thou nilte it deigneliche endite
As make it with these argumentes tough
Ne scriueinliche or craftely thou it write
Beblotte it with thy teares eke alite
And if thou write a goodly worde all soft
Though it be good, rehearce it now to oft.

For though the best Harpour vpon liue
Would on the best souned ioily Harpe
That euer was, with all his fingers liue
Touche aie o string, or aie o warble Harpe
Where his nailes poincted neuer so sharpe
It should make euery wight to dull
To heare his glee, and of his strokes full.

Ne iombre eke no discordaunt thing iliche
Is thus, to vsen termes of Philisike
In loues termes holde of thy matere
The forme alwaie, and doe that it be like
For if a peinter would painte a pike
With Asses feete, and hedded as an Ape
It cordeth not, so were it but a iape.

This counsaile liked well vnto Troilus
But as a dredfull louer, he saied this Alas my dere brother Pandarus
I am ashamed for to write iwis
Lest of mine innocence I saied amis
Or that she nolde it for dispite receiue
Thā wer I ded, there mist it nothing weue.

To that Pandare answerde, if thee lest
Doe that I saie, and let me there with gon
For by that Lorde that formed East and West
I hope of it to bring answere anon
Right of her hond, and if that thou milte non Let be, and sorie mote he been his liue
I rende thy lust, that helpeth thee to thriue.

(q Troilus) depardieux iche assent
Sithe that thee list, I woll arise and write
And blisful God praie iche with good entent
The viage and the letter I shall endite
So spede it, and thou Minerua the white
Yeue thou me witte, my letter to deuise
And set him doun, & wrote right in this wise.

First he gan her his right Ladie call
His hartes life, his lust, his lorde wes leche
His blisse, and eche these other termes all
That in soche case ye louers all seche
And in full humble wise, as in his speche
He gan him recommaunde vnto her grace
To tell all how, it asketh mokell space.

And after this full lowly he her praied
To be nought wrothe, though he of his folie
So hardie was to her to write, and saied
That loue it made, or els must he die
And pitously gan mercie for to crie
And after that he saied, and lied full loude Himself was little worthe, and lasse he could.

And

And that she would hatte his cõming excused
That litel was, and ek he dradde her so
And his vnworthinesse aie he acused
And after that than gan he tel his wo
But that was endelesse withouten ho
And said, he wold in trouth alway him holde
And redde it ouer, and gan the lettre folde

And with his salte teeres gan he bathe
The ruby in his signet, and it sette
Upon the were deliuerliche and rathe
Therwith a thousande times, er he lette
Hi. tho the lettre that he shette
And saide, lettre a blisful destine
The hapen is, my lady shal the se

This Pandare tok the lettre, & that betime
Imoro we, and to his neces paleis sterte
And fast he swore, that it was passed prime
And gan to iape, and said I wis mine harte
Hotreshe it is, although it sore smerte
I saie nat sepe neuer a Maies moro we Shall a holy wo, a lusty soro we Cresside, whan that she her vncle herde

With dredeful harte, and desirous to here
The cause of his comming, thus answerde
How by your faith mine vncle (q she) dere
What maner windes gideth you now here
Tell vs your holy wo, and your penaunce
How ferforth be ye put in loues daunce

By God (q he) I hope alwaie behinde
And to laugh, it thought her hart brest
(q Pandarus (loke alwaie that ye minde
Come in mine hood, but herkeneth if you lest
Ther is right now come into the toune a gest
A Grekish espie, and telleth new thinges
For whiche I come to tell you newe tidinges

Into the gardin go we, and ye shal here
Al priuely of this a long sermoun
With that thei wenten arme in arme ifere
Into the gardin fro the chambre doun
And whan he was so farre, that the soun
Of that he spake, no man heren might
He said her thus, and out the letter plight

To the that is al holly yours free
Him recommaundeth lowly to your grace
And sent you this letter here by me
Desireth you on it, whan ye han space
And of some goodly answere you purchase
Or helpe me God so, plainely for to saine
He maie not longe liuen for his paine

Ful dredefully tho gan she fonde fril
And toke it not, but all her humble chere
Gan for to chaunge, and said scripe nor bil
For loue of God, that toucheth such matere
Ne bring me none, and also vncle dere
To mine estate haue more regarde I pray
Than to his lust, what should I more say

And loketh now if this be resonable
And letteth not for fauour ne for slouthe
To saine a sothe, now is it couenable
To mine estate, by God and by my trouthe
To take it, or to haue of him routhe
In harming of my selfe, or in repreue
Beare it aien, for him that ye on leue

This Pandarus gan her for to stare
And said, now is this the greatest wonder
That euer I sawe, let be this nice fare
So deth mote I smitten be with thonder
Yt for the citie, whiche that stondeth yonder
Would I a letter vnto you bring or take
To harme of you: what list you thus it make

But thus ye faren well nighe all and some
That he that most desireth you to serue
Of him ye retche lest, where he become
And whether that he liue, or els sterue
But for al that, that euer I maie deserue
Refuse it not (q he) and hente her fast
And in her bosome the letter doune he thrast

And said her, now cast it awaie anon
That folke maie sene, and gauren on vs twey
(q she) I can abide till thei be gon
And gan to smile, and said him, eme I pray
Suche answere as you list your selfe puruey
For truely I wol no letter write
No, than wol I (q he) so ye endite

Therwith she lough, and said go we dine
And he gan at him selfe iape faste
And said nece, I haue so great a pine
For loue, that eueriche other daie I faste
And gan his best iapes forth to caste
And made her so to laugh at his folie
That she for laughter wente for to die

And whan that she was comen into the hall
Now eme (q she) we wol go dine anon
And gan some of her women to her call
And streight into her chambre gan she gone
But of her besinesse this was one
Amonges other thinges, out of drede
Ful priuely this letter for to rede

Iuised word by word in euery line
And koude no lache, she thought he coude his
And vp it put and went her into dine (goode
And Pandarus, that in a studie stoode
Er he was ware, she toke him by the hoode
And said, ye were caught er that ye wiste
I vouchesafe (q he) do what you liste

Tho wishen thei, and set hem doune ɜ ete
And after noone ful slighly Pandarus
Gan draw him to the windowe nie the strete
And said nece, who hath araied thus
The yonder house, that stante afore ȝene vs
Which house (q she) and gan for to beholde
And knewe it wel, ɜ whose it was him tolde

And tellen forth in speche of thinges smale
And saten in the windowe both twey
Whan Pandarus sawe time vnto his tale
And sawe well that her folke were al awey
Now nece mine tel on (q he) I prey
How liketh you the lettre that ye wot
Can he theron, for by my trouth I not

Therwith al rosy hewed tho wore she
And gan to hum, and said, so I trowe
I quite him wel for goddes loue (q he)
My selfe to medes wol the lettre sowe
And helde his hondes vp, and sat on knowe
Nowe good nece, be it neuer so lite
Yeue me the labour, it to sowe and plite ye, for I can so writen (q she) tho

And ese I not what I should to him say
Naie nece (q Pandare) saie not so
Yet at the lest, thonketh him I pray
Of his good will: O, doth him not to dey
Now for the loue of me my nece dere
Refuseth not at this time my praiere

Depardieux (q she) God leue al be wele
God helpe me so, this is the first lettre
That euer I wrote, ye al or any dele
And into a closet for to auise her bettre
She went alone, and gan her harte vnlettre
Out of disdaines prison, but a lite
And set her doun, and gan a lettre write

Of whiche to tel in shorte is mine entent
The effecte, as ferre as I can vnderstonde
She thonked him, of al that he wel ment
Towardes her, but holden him in honde
She nolde not ne make her selfen bonde
In loue, but as his suster him to plese
She would aie faine, to done his hart an ese

She shette it, and to Pandare into gon
There as he sat, and loked into strete
And doune she set her by him on a stone
Of iaspre, vpon a quisshen of golde iwete
And said, as wisely helpe me God the grete
I neuer did a thing with more paine
Than write this, to which ye me constraine

And toke it him: He thonked her, and sayde
God wot of thing ful often lothe begonne
Cometh ende good: and nece mine Creseide
That ye to him of harde now ben iwonne
Ought he be glad, by God and yonder sonne
For why, men saithe impressions light
Ful lightly ben aie redy to the flight

But ye han plaied the tiraunt al to long
And harde was it your hart for to graue
Now stinte, that ye no lenger on it hong
Al wolden ye the forme of daunger saue
But hasteth you to done him ioye haue
For trusteth wel, to longe idone hardnesse
Causeth dispite ful often for distresse

And right as thei declared this matere
Lo Troilus, right at the stretes ende
Came riding with his tenthe somme ifere
Al soltely, and thiderwarde gan bende
There as thy sate, as was his waie to wende
To paleis warde, and Pandare him aspide
And said, nece isee who cometh here ride

O flie not in, he see the vs I suppose
Lest he may thinken that ye him eschue
Nay nay (q she) and wore as redde as rose
With that he gan her humbly salue
With dredful chere, and ofte his hewes mue
And vp his loke debonairly he cast
And becked on Pandare, and forth by past

God wot if he sat on his horse aright
For goodly was besene that ilke day
God wot where he were like a manly knight
What should I dretche, or tel of his aray
Creseide, which that al these thinges sey
To tell in shorte, her liked al ifere
His person, his aray, his loke, his chere

His goodly maner, and his gentillesse
So well, that neuer sithe that she was borne
Ne had she suche routhe of his distresse
And howe so, she hath hard den here beforne
To God hope I, she hath now cauȝt a thorne
She shal nat pul it out this next while God sende mo suche thornes on to pike

Pandar

Pandare, whiche that stode her faste by felte iron hotte, and he began to smite
And saide, nece I praie you hertely
Telme that I shal asken you alite
I woman that were of his death to wite
Withouten his gilt, but for her lacke of routh
Were it wel done (q̄ she) naie by my trouth

God helpe me so (q̄ he) ye say me sothe
Peleen wel your selfe that I nought lie
Lo, pounde he rideth (q̄ she) yc so he dothe
Wel q̄ Pandare, as I haue tolde you thrie
Let be your nice shame, and your folie
And speke with him, in easing of his herte
Let nicete nat do you dothe smerte

But theron was to heauen and to done
Considering al thing, it maie nat be
And why? for shame, and it were ele to sone
Cograunten him so great a liberte
Fu plainly her entent, as (saide she)
Was for to loue him vn wist, if she might
And guerdon him with nothing but vvight

But Pandare thought, it shal nat be so
If that I maie, this nice opinion
Shal nat ben holden fully yeres two
What should I make of this a longe sermon?
He must assent on that conclusion
Is for the time, and whan that it was eue
And al was wel, he rose and toke his leue

And on his way fast homewarde he spedde
And right for ioy he felte his hert daunce
And Troilus he founde alone abedde
That late, as done these louers in a traunce
Bewiten hope and derke dilesperaunce
But Pandare, right at his in comming
He song, as who saith, lo, somwhat I bring

And saide, who is in his bedde so sone Vburied thus? it am I frende (q̄ he)
Who Troilus maie, helpe me so the moone
(q̄ Pandarus) thou shalt vp rise and se
I charme that was sent right nowe to the
The whiche can healen the of thine arelle
If thou do forth with al thy befinelle

Ye through the might of God (q̄ Troilus)
And Pandarus gan him the letter take
And saide, parde God hath holpen vs
Haue here a light, and loke on all these blake
But oft gan the hart glad and quake
Of Troilus, while he it gan to rede
So as the wordes yaue him hope or drede

But finally he tolde al for the beste
That she him wrote, for somwhat he beheldc
On which he thought he might his hert rest
Al couered she the wordes vnder sheldc
Thus to the more worthy part he helde
That what for hope, and Pandarus behestr
His great wo forzede he at the leste

But as we maie al daie out seluen se
Through wood or cole the more fire
Right so encrease of hoope, of what it be Therwith ful ofte encreaseth eke desire
Or as an oke cometh of a litel spire
So through this letter, which ỹ she him sent Encreasen gan desire of whiche he brent

Wherfore I say alway, that daie and night
This Troilus gan to desiren, more
Thē he did erst through hope, ỹ did his might
To pursen on, as by Pandarus lore
And writen to her of his sorowes sore
Fro day to day, he let it nought refreide
That by Pandare he somwhat wrot or seide

And did also his other obseruaunces
That till a louer longeth in this caas
And after that his dice turned on chaunces
So was he either glad, or saide alas
And held after his gestes aie his paas
And after suche answers, as he hadde
So were his daies sory either gladde

But to Pandare alway was his recours
And pitously gan aie on him to plaine
And him besought of rede, and some socours
And Pandarus, that sawe his wode paine
Wert wel nigh deed for routh sothe to saine
And besely with al his hert caste
Some of his wo to sleen, and that as faste

And said, Lorde and frende, and brother dere
God wot that thy disease dothe me wo
But wolt thou stinten al this woful chere
And by my trouth, er it be daies two
And God to lorne, yet shal I shape it so
That thou shalt come into a certaine place
There as ỹ maist thy selfe praien her of grace

And certainly I not if thou it wotte
But thei that ben experte in loue, it say
It is one of these thinges forthereth most
A man to haue a leiser for to praie
And siker place, his wo for to bewraie
For in good hart it mote some routh impresse
To here and se the giltelesse in distresse

Parauenture thinkeſt thou, though it be ſo
That kinde would her done for to beginne
To haue a maner routh vpon my wo
Saith daũger nay, thou ſhalt me neuer win
So ruleth her hartes goſte within That though ſhe bende, yet ſhe ſtont on rote
What in effect is this vnto my bote

Thinke here ayen, whan that the ſturdy oke
On whiche men hacheth oft for the nones
Receiued hath the happy falling ſtroke
The great ſweight doth it come al at ones
As done theſe rockes, or theſe milne ſtones
For ſwifter courſe cometh thig ẏ is of wight
When it diſcendeth, than done thinges light

But rede that boweth doune for euery blaſt
Ful lightly ceſſe winde, it wol ariſe
But ſo nil not an oke, whan it is caſt
Jt nedeth me nought longe the forbiſe
Men ſhal reioyſen of a great empriſe
Jf cheued wel, and ſtant withouten dout
Al haue men ben the lenger there about

But Troilus, now tel me if the leſt
A thing, whiche that Jſhal aſken the Whiche is thy brother, that thou loueſt beſt
Is in thy very hartes priuite Jwis my brother Deiphebus tho (q he)
Now (q Pandare) er houres twiſe twelue
He ſhal the caſe, vnwiſt of it himſelue

Now let me alone, and worken as Jmay
(q he) and to Deiphebus went he tho
Which had his lord, and great frende ben aie
Saue Troilus no man he loued ſo
To tel in ſhorte without wordes mo (q Pandarus) Jpray you that ye be Frende to a cauſe, whiche that toucheth me

Yes parde (q Deiphebus) wel thou woteſt
Al that euer Jmay, and God to fore
Al nere it but for the man Jloue moſt
Thy brother Troilus, but ſay wherfore
Jt is, for ſithe the day that Jwas bore
Jnas, ne neuer mo to ben Jthinke
Ayenſt a thing that might the forthinke

Pandare gan him thanke, and to him ſeide
Lo ſir, Jhaue a lady in this toune
That is my nece, and called is Creſeide
Whiche ſome men would done oppreſſioun
And wrongfully haue her poſſeſſioun
Wherfore Jof your lordſhip you beſeche
To ben our frende, withouten more ſpeche

Deiphebus him anſwerde: O, is nat this
That thou ſpekeſt of to me thus ſtraungely
Creſeide my frende? He ſaide him yes
Than nedeth (q Deiphebus) hardely
No more of this to ſpeke, for trufleth wel Jſ
Wol be her Champion with ſpore and yerde
Jne rought nat, though all her foes it herde

But tel me how, for thou woſt this mater
Jmight beſt auailen, now lette ſe
(q Pandarus (if ye my lorde ſo dere
Wolden as now do this honour to me
To praien her to morowe, lo that ſhe
Came vnto you, her plaintes to deuiſe
Her aduerſaries would of it agriſe

And if Jmore durſt praie as now
And chargen you to haue ſo great trauaile
To haue ſome of your brethrẽ here with you
That mighten to her cauſe bet auaile
Than wote Jwel ſhe might neuer faile
For to ben holpen, what at your inſtaunce
What with her other frendes gouernaunce

Deiphebus, whiche that comen was of kinde
To al honour and bounte to conſente
Anſwerde, it ſhal be done: and Jcan finde
Yet greater helpe to this mine entente
What woldeſt ẏ ſaine, if for Heleine Jſent
To ſpeke of this, Jtrowe it be the beſt
For ſhe may leden Paris as her leſt

Of Hector, which ẏ is my Lord my brother
Jt nedeth nat to praien him frende to be
For Jhaue herde him, o time and eke other Speken of Creſeide ſuche honour, that he Wate ſaine no bet, ſuch hap to him hath ſhe
Jt nedeth nat his helpes more craue
He ſhal be ſuche, right as we wol him haue

Speke thou thy ſelfe alſo to Troilus
On my behalfe, and praie him with vs dine
Sir, al this ſhalbe done (q Pandarus)
And tooke his leaue, and neuer gan to fine
But to his neces houſe as ſtreight as line
He came, and founde her fro the meate ariſe
And ſet him doun, & ſpake right in this wiſe

He ſaide, O very God, ſo haue Jronne
Lo nece mine, ſe ye nat how Jſwete
Jnot where ye the more thanke me conne
Be ye not ware how falſe Poliphete
Js now about eſtſones for to plete
And bring on you aduocacies newe?
Jno (q ſhe) and chaunged al her hewe

What is he more about me to dretche
And done me wrong, what shal I don, alas
Yet of him selfe nothing would I retche
Were it for Antenor and Eneas
That ben his frendes in suche maner caas
But for the loue of God, mine vncle dere
For force of that, let him haue al ifere

Withouten that, I haue inough for vs
Say (q Pandare) it shal nothing be so
For I haue ben right now at Deiphebus
At Hector, and mine other lordes mo
And shortly maked eche of hem his so
That by my thrifte, he shal it neuer winne
For aught he can, whan so that he beginne

And as thei casten what was best to done
Deiphebus, of his owne curtesie
Came her to prie, in his proper persone
To holde him on the morowe companie
At diner, whiche she nolde not denie
But goodly gan to his preier obey
He thonked her, and went vpon his wey

Whan this was don, this Pandare anone
To tel in shorte, and forth he gan to wende
To Troilus, as stil as any stone
And al this thing he tolde him worde & ende
And howe that he Deiphebus gan to blende
And saide him, now is time of that ye conne
To bere the well to morow, and all is wonne

Now speke, now pray, now pitously cõplaine
Let nat for nice shame, drede or slouth
Sometime a man mote tel his owne paine
Bleme it, and she wol haue on the routh
Thou shalt ben saued by thy faith in trouth
But wel wot, I thou now art in a drede
And what it is, I lay that I can rede

Thou thinkest now, how shoulde I dõ al this
For by my cheres mosten folke espie
That for her loue is, that I fare amis
Yet had I leuer vnwist for sorow die
Howe thinke nat so, for thou dost gret folie
For I right now haue founden a maniere
Alleight, for to houeren al thy chere

Thou shalt gon ouernight, and that blithe
Vnto Deiphebus house, as the to plaie
Thy malady awaie the bet to drive
For whiche thou semeth sicke soth to saie
Sone after that, in thy bedde the laie
And saie thou maist no lenger vp endure
And lie right there, and bide thine auenture

Saie that thy feuer is wonte the for to take
The same time, and last til a morowe
And let se now how well thou canst it make
For parde sicke is he that is in sorowe
Go now farwel, and Venus here to borowe
I hope and thou this purpose holde ferme
Thy grace she shal fully there conforme

(q Troilus) iwis thou nedelesse
Counsailest me, that sickeliche I me faine
For I am sicke in ernest doutlesse
So that wel nigh I sterue for the paine
(q Pandarus) thou shalt the better plaine
And hast the lesse nede to counterfete
For him demeth men hote, ỹ seeth him swete

Lo, holde the at thy triste close, and I
Shal wel the deere vnto the bowe driue
Therwith he toke his leaue al softly
And Troilus to paleis went blithe
So glad ne was he neuer in al his liue
And to Pandarus rede gan al assent
And to Deiphebus house at night he went

What nedeth it you to tellen al the chere
That Deiphebus vnto his brother made
Of his aris, or his sickeliche manere
How men gon him with clothes for to lade
Whẽ he was laid, & how mẽ would him glade
But all for nought, he helde forth aie the wise
That ye han herde Pandare er this deuise

But certaine is, er Troilus him leide
Deiphebus had praied him ouernight
To ben a frende, and helping to Creseide
God wot that he graunted anon right
To ben her ful frend with al his might
But such a nede was it to praien him thenne
As for to bidde a woode man to renne

The morow came, and nighen gan the time
Of mealtide, that the faire quene Heleine
Shope her to ben an houre after the prime
With Deiphebus, to whom she nolde faine
But as his suster, homely soothe to saine
She came to diner, in her plaine entent
But God & Pandare wist al what this ment

Came eke Creseide all innocent of this Antigone her nece, and Tarbe also But tho we now prolixite best is
For loue of God, and let vs fast go
Right to the effecte, withouten tales mo
Why al this folke assembled in this place
And let vs of her salutinges pace

Great honour did hem Deiphebus certaine
And fedde hem wel, with al that might like
But euermo alas, was his refraine
My good brother Troilus the like Lithe yet, and therwithal he gan to like
And after that he pained him to glade
Hem as he might, and chere good he made

Complained eke Heleine of his sickenesse
So faithfully that it pety was to here
And euery wight gan weren for ares
I leche anon, and saide in this manere
Wen curen folke, this charme I wol the lere
But there sate one, al list her nat to teche
That thought, yet best could I ben his leche

After complaint him gonnen thei to preise
As folke don yet whā some wight hath begon
To preise a man, and with preise him reise
A thousande folde yet higher than the son
He is, he can, that fewe Lordes hon
And Pandarus of that thei would afferme
He nought forgate her praising to conferme

Herde al this thing Creseide wel inough
And euerie worde gan for to notifie
For whiche with sobre chere her herte lough
For who is that ne would her glorifie
To mowen suche a knight done liue or die
But al passe I, lest ye to longe dwell
But for o line is al that euer I tell

The time came fro diner for to rise
And as hem ought, arisen euerichone
And gone a while of this and that deuise
But Pandarus brake al this speche anon
And said to Deiphebus, wol ye gon
If your wil be, as I you praide
To speken of the nedes of Creseide

Heleine, which that by the honde her helde
Toke first the tale and saide, go we blithe
In goodly on Creseide she beheld
And said, Joues let him neuer thriue
That doth you harm, a reue him sone of liue
And yeue me sorowe, but he shal it rue
If that I may, and al folke be true

Tel thou thy nices case (q Deiphebus)
To Pandarus, for thou canst best it tell
My Lordes and my Ladies, it stant thus
What should I lenger (q he) do you dwell
He ronge hem out a proces like a bell
Upon her foe, that hight Poliphete
So heinous, that men might on it spete

Answerde of this eche worse of hē than other
And Poliphete thei gonnen thus to warien
In honged be suche one, were he my brother
And so he shal, for it ne maie nought barien
What should I lenger in this tale tarien
Plaineliche al at ones thei her highten
To ben her frēde, in all that euer thei might

Spake than Heleine, and said Pandarus
Wot aught my lord my brother of this maie
I meane Hector, or wote it Troilus
He said ye, but wol ye me now here
Me thinketh thus, sith that Troilus is hen
It were good, if that ye would assent
She tolde him her selfe al this er she went

For he wol haue the more her grese at hame Bicause lo, that she a Lady is
And by your wil, I wol but in right game
And do you wete, and that anon i wis
If that he slepe, or wol aught here of this
And in he lept, and said him in his eere
God haue thy soule, brought haue I thy hen

To smilen of this gan tho Troilus
And Pandarus without refening
Out went anon to Heleine and Deiphebus
And said hem, so there be no tariyng
Ne more prease, he wol well that ye bring Creseide my Lady, that is here
And as he maie enduren, he wol her hen

But wel ye wote, the chambre is but lite
And fewe folke may lightly make it warme
Now loketh ye, for I wol haue no wite
To bring in prease, ỹ might don him harme
Or him diseasen, for my better arme yet were it bet she bidde till ofte soonis
Now loke ye that knowen what to don is

I say for me best is, as I can knowe
That no wight in ne wende, but ye twey
But it were I, for I can not in a throwe
Reherse her case, vnlike that she can sey
And after this she may ones him prey
To ben good Lorde in short, and take her in This may not mokell of his ese him reue

Indeke for she is straunge, he woll forbere
His ease, whiche that him dare nat for you
Eke other thing that toucheth nat to her
He wol it tel, I wote it wel right now
That secrete is, and for the townes prow
And thei that knew nothing of his entente
Without more, to Troilus in thei wente

Heleine

Heleine in all her goodly soft wise
Gan him salue, and womanly to plaie
And saied twis, ye mote algate arise
Now faire brother be all hole I praie
And gan her arme right ouer his shulder laie
And him with all her wit to recomfort
As she best could, she gan him to disport.

So after this (quod she) we you beseke My dere brother Deiphebus and I
For loue of God, and so doeth Pandare eke
To been good Lorde and frende right hartely Unto Creseide, whiche that certainly Received wrong, as wot well here Pandare,
That can her case well bet than I declare.

This Pandarus gan newe his tong assile
And all her case rehearce, and that anone
When it was saied, sone after in a while (quod Troilus) as sone as I maie gone
I will right fain, with all my might ben one
Haue God my trouth, her cause to susteine
Now good thrift haue ye (quod Helen ỳ quene).

(quod Pandarus) and it your will be
That she maie take her leaue, or that she go Nels God forbid it (tho quod he)
If that she vouchsafe for to doe so
And with that worde (quod Troilus) ye two Deiphebus, and my suster lefe and dere
To you haue I to speake of a mattere.

To been auised by your rede the better
And found (as hap was) at his beddes hedde
The copie of a treatise, and a letter
That Hector had him sent, to assien redde
Whiche a man was worthy to been deedde
Wote I naught who, but in a grisly wise
He praied hem anone on it auise.

Deiphebus gan this letter for to vnfolde
In earnest greate, so did Heleine the Quene
And roming outward, fast it gonne beholde
Downward a steire, into an herber greene
This ilke thing redden hem bet wene
And largely the mountenaunce of an houre
Thei gonne on it to reden and to poure.

Now let hem rede, and tourne we anone
To Pandarus, that gan full soft prie
That all was well, and out he gan to gone
Into the greate chamber, and that in hie
And saied, God saue all this companie
Come nece mine, my ladie Quene Heleine
Abideth you, and eke my Lordes tweine.

Rise, take with you your nece Antigone
Or whom you list, or no force hardely
The lasse preasse the bet, come forth with me
And loke that ye thonken humbly
Hem all thre, and whan ye maie goodly
Your time isee, taketh of hem your leaue
Lest we to long his restes him bireaue.

All innocent of Pandarus entent
(quod tho Creseide) go we vncle dere
And arme in arme, inward with him the wet
Auising well her wordes and her chere
And Pandarus, in earnestfull manere
Saied, all folke for Goddes loue I praie
Stinteth right here, and softly you plaie.

Auiseth you what folke been here within
And in what plite one is, God him amende
And inward thus full softely begin
Nece I conjure, and highly you defende
On his halfe, whiche that soule vs all sende
And in the vertue of corounes twaine
Slea nat this man, ỳ hath for you this paine

Fie on the deuill, thinke whiche one he is
And in what plite he lieth, come of anone
Thinke all soche taried tide but lost it nis
That will ye bothe saine, whan ye been one
Secondly, there yet deuineth none
Upon you two, come of now if ye conne
While folke is blent, lo, all the time is wonne

In tittering and pursute, and delaies
The folke deuine, at wegging of a stree
And though ye would han after merie daies
Than dare ye nat, and why? For she and she Spake soche a worde, thus loked he and he Lest time be lost, I dare nat with you deale
Come of therfore, and bringeth him to heale.

But now to you, ye louers that been here
Was Troilus nat in a cankedore
That laie, ỳ might the wispring of hem here
And thought o lorde, rizt now reneth my sore
Fully to die, or haue anone comfort
And was the first time he shonld her praie
Of loue, O mightie God, what shall he saie.

Explicit liber secundus.

Blisfull light, of whiche the bemes clere
Adorneth all the third heauen faire
O sonnes lefe, o Ioues dought-ter dere

Pleasaunce of loue, O goodly debonaire
In gentle hartes aie redy to repaire
O very cause of heale and of gladnesse
Iheried be thy might and thy goodnesse.

In heauen and hell, in yearth, and salt see
Is felt thy might, if that I well discerne
As man, beast, fishe, herbe, and grene tree
Thei fele in times with vapour eterne
God loueth, and to loue woll naught werne
And in this worlde no liues creature
Withouten loue is worth, or maie endure.

Ye Ioues first, to thilke affectes glade
Through whiche that thinges liuen all, & be Comenden, and amorous hem made
On mortall thing, and as you list aie ye
Peue hem in loue, ease, or aduersite
And in a thoulande formes doune hem sent
For loue in yearth, and whō you list he hent.

Ye fiers Mars apesen of his ire
And as you list, ye maken hartes digne
Algates hem that ye woll set a fire
Thei dreden shame, and vices thei resigne
Ye doen hem curteis be, freshe, and benigne
And hie or lowe, after a wight entendeth
The ioies that he hath, your might it sendeth

Ye holden reigne and house in vnite
Ye sothfast cause of frendship been also Ye knowen all thilke couered qualite
Of thinges, whiche that folke wondren so
Whan thei can nat construe how it maie go
Why loueth him, or why he loueth here
Is why this fishe, & nat that cometh to were

Ye folke a lawe haue set in vniuerse
And this knowe I by hem that louers be
That who so serueth with you hath ỹ werse
Now Ladie bright, for thy benignite
At reuerence of hem that seruen thee
Whose clerke I am, so teacheth me deuise
Some ioie of that is felt in thy seruice.

Ye, in my naked harte sentement
Inhilde, and doe me shewe of thy swetnesse
Caliope, thy voice be now present
For now is neede, seest thou nat my distresse
How I mote tell anon right the gladnesse
Of Troilus, to Venus heriyng
To whiche who nede hath, God him bring.

Incipit liber tertius.

Lie all this meane while Troilus
Recording his lesson in this manere Alsete thought he, thus woll I saie and thus Thus woll I plain vnto my Ladie dere
That worde is good, & this shall be my chere
This nill I nat foryeten in no wise
God leue him werken as he can deuise.

And lorde so that his harte gan to quappe
Hearing her come, and shorte for to sike
And Pandarus that ledde her by the lappe
Came nere, and gan in at the curtein pike
And saied, God doe bote on all sike
Se who is here, you comen to visite
Lo, here is she that is your death to wite

Therwith it semed as he wept almoste
A, a (q Troilus) so routhfully
Where me by wo, O mightie God thou woste
Who is all there, I see nat truely
Sir (q Creseide) it is Pandare and I
Ye swete harte alas, I maie nat rise
To knele, and doe you honour in some wise.

And dressed him vpward, and she right tho
Gan bothe her hondes soft vpon him leie
O for the loue of God, doe ye not so
To me (q she) ey what is this to seie
Sir, comen am I to you for causes tweie
First you to thonke, and of your Lordshipe Continuaunce I would you beseche.

This Troilus that heard his Ladie praie
Of lordship, him wore neither quick ne dede
Ne might o worde for shame to it saie
Although men shoulden smiten of his hede
But Lorde so he wore sodainliche redde
And sir, his lesson that he wende conne
To praien her, is through his wit ironne.

Creseide all this aspied well inough
For she was wise, & loued him neuer the lasse
All nere he in all aperte, or made it tough
Or was to bolde, to sing a foole a Masse
But whan his shame gan somwhat to passe
His reasons, as I maie my rimes holde
I woll you tell, as teachen bookes olde.

In chaunged voice, right for his very drede
Whiche voice eke quoke, & therto his manere
Goodlie abasht, and now his hewes rede
Now

Hew pale, vnto Creseide his ladie dere
With loke doune cast, & humble ipolden chere
Lo the alderfirst worde that him astarte
Was wise, mercie, mercie swete harte.

And stint a while, & whā he might out bring
The nert worde was, God wote for I haue
As faithfully as I haue had konning
Been yours all, God so my soule saue
And shall, till that I wofull wight be graue
And though I dare ne can vnto you plain
Iwis I suffer not the lasse pain.

Thus moche as now, ah, womanliche wise
I maie out bring, and if this you displease
That shall I wreke vpon mine owne like Right sone I trowe, & doe your harte an ease
Iwith my death, your hart maie apease
But sens that ye han heard me somwhat sey
How rethe I neuer how sone that I deie.

Therwith his manly sorowe to beholde
It might haue made an harte of stone to rew
And Pandare wept as he to water would
And poked euer his nece newe and newe
And saied, wo begon been hartes true
For loue of God, make of this thing an ende
Or slea vs bothe at ones, er that ye wende.

I, what (q she) by God and by my trouth
I not nat what ye wilne that I seie
Eie, what (q he) that ye haue on him routh
For Goddes loue, and doeth him nat deie
How than thus (q she) I woll him preie
Coteil me the line of his entente
Yet wist I neuer well what that he mente.

What that I meane, O swete harte dere
(q Troilus) O goodly freshly free
That with the streames of your iyen clere
Ye woulden somtime frendly on me see
And than agreen that I maie been he Withouten braunche of vice, on any wise
Introuthe alwaie, to doe you my seruice.

Is to my ladie right, and chief resort
With all my witte and all my diligence
And to haue right as you list comfort
Under your yerde egall to mine offence
Is death, if that I breake your defence
And that ye digne me so moche honour
Me to commaunden aught in any hour.

And I to been your very humble true
Secrete, and in my paines pacient
And euer to desiren freshly newe
To seruen, and to been aie like diligent
And with good harte, all holly your talent
Receiuen well, how sore that me smarte
Lo, this meane I, mine owne swete harte.

(q Pandarus) lo here an hard request
And reasonable, a Ladie for to werne
Now nece mine, by Natall Ioues fest
Were I a God, ye should serue as yerne
That heren well this mā wol nothing yerne
But your honor, and seen him almoste sterue
And been so lothe to suffre him you to serue.

With that she gan her iyen on him cast
Full easely, and full debonairly
Iusting her, and hied not to fast
With neuer a worde, but saied him softely
Mine honour safe, I woll well truely
And in soche forme, as I can now deuise
Receiuen him fully to my seruice.

Beseching him for Goddes loue, that he Would in honour of trouth and gentilesse
As I well meane, ete meanen well to me
And mine honour, with wit and busines
Ie hope, and if I maie doen him gladnesse
From hence forthe, iwis I nill not faine
Now bethe all hole, no lenger ye ne plain.

But natheless, this warne I you (q she)
I hinges sonne although ye be iwis
Ye shall no more haue souerainte
Of me in loue, than right in that case is Ne nill forbeare if that ye doen amis
To wrath you, and while that ye me serue
Cherisshen you, right after that ye deserue.

And shortly dere harte, and all my knight
Beth glad, and draweth you to lustinesse
And I shall truely, with all my full might Your bitter tournen all to swetenesse
If I be she, that maie doe you gladnesse
For euery wo ye shall recouer a blisse
And him in armes toke, and gan him kisse.

Fill Pandarus on knees, and vp his iyen
To heauen threwe, and helde his hondes hie
Immortall God (q he) that maiest not dien
Cupide I meane, of this maiest glorifie
And Uenus, thou maiest maken melodie
Withouten honde, me semeth that in toune
For this miracle iche here eche bell soune.

But ho, no more now of this mattere

For

For why? This kolhe woll comen by anone
That haue the letter redde, lo I hem here
But I coniure thee Creseide, and one
And two, thou Troilus whā thou maist gone
That at mine house, ye been at my warning
For I full well shall shapen your comming.

And easeth there your hartes right inough
And let se whiche of you shall beare the bell
To speke of loue aright, & therwith he lough
For there haue I a letter for to tell
(q Troilus) how long shall I dwell
Er this be doen (q he, whan thou maiest rise
This thing shall be right as you list deuise.

With that Heleine, and also Deiphebus
Tho comen vpward, right at the staires ende
And Lorde so tho gan gronen Troilus
His brother and his suster for to blende
(q Pandarus) it time is that we wende
Take nece mine your leaue at all thre
And let hem speake, & cometh forth with me.

She toke her leaue at hem full thriftely
As she well could, and thei her reuerence
Unto the full didden hardely
And wonder well speaken in her absence
Of her, in praising of her excellence
Her gouernaunce, her wit, and her manere
Commendeden, that it ioie was to here.

Now let her wende vnto her owne place
And tourne we to Troilus againe
That gan full lightly of the letter pace
That Deiphebus had in the gardine saine
And of Heleine and him he would feine
Deliuered been, and saied that him lest
To slepe, and after tales haue a rest.

Heleine him list, and toke her leue bliue
Deiphebus eke, and home went euery wight
And Pandarus, as faste as he maie driue
To Troilus tho came, as line right
And on a paillet, all that glad night
By Troilus he lai, with merie chere
To tale, and well was hem thei were ifere.

Whan euery wight was voided, but thei two
And all the doores weren fast ishet
To tell in short, withouten wordes mo
This Pandarus, without any let Up rose, and on his beddes side him set
And gan to speaken in a sober wise
To Troilus, as I shall you deuise.

Mine alderleuest Lorde, and brother dere
God wot and thou, that it sate me so sore
Whan I thee sawe so languishing to here
For loue of which thy wo wore alwaie more
That I with all my might, and all my lore
Haue euer sithen doen my businesse
To bring thee to ioie out of distresse.

And haue it brought to suche plite as ȝ wot
So ȝ through me thou stondest now in wai
To saren well, I saie it for no bost
And wost thou why, but shame it is to saie
For thee haue I begon a gamen plaie Whiche that I neuer doen shall eft for other
All tho he wer a thousande fold my brother

That is to saie, for thee am I becomen
Betwixen game and earnest, suche a meane
As maken women vnto men to comen
All saie I nat, thou wost well what I meane
For thee haue I my nece, of vices cleane
So fully made thy gentillesse trist
That all shall been, right as thy self list.

But God, that all wotteth take I to witnes
That neuer I this for couetise wrought
But onely for to abredge that distresse
For whiche well nie ȝ didest, as me thought
But good brother, doe now as thee ought For Goddes loue, and kepe her out of blame
Sins thou art wise, & saue alwaie her name

For wel thou woste, the name as yet of her
Emōges ȝ people, as (who saieth) haloweth
For that man is vnbore I dare well swere
That euer wist that she did amis
But wo is me, that I that cause all this Maie thinken that she is my nece dere
And I her eme, and traitour eke ifere.

And wer it wist, that I through mine engin
Had in mine nece iput this fantasie
To doen thy lust, and holly to be thin
Why, all the worlde would vpon it crie
And saie, that I the worste trecherie
Did in this case, that euer was begon
And she forlon, and thou right nought ikon

Wherefore er I woll ferther gone or pas
Yet elte I thee beseche, and fully saie
That priuete go with vs in this caas
That is to saine, that thou vs neuer wraie
And be not wrothe, though I thee ofte praie
To holden secre suche an high matter
For skilfull is (thou woste well) my praier.

And

And thinke, what wo there hath betider this
For making of auauntes, as men rede
And what mischaunce in this worlde yet is Fro daie to daie, right for that wicked dede
For whiche these wise clerkes that been dede
Haue euer this prouerbed to vs young
That the first vertue is to kepe the toung.

And nere it that I wilne as now abredge
Diffusion of speache, I could almoste
A thousande olde stories thee aledge
Of women loste, through false & fooles boste
Prouerbes canst thy self inow, and woste
Iwrit that vice for to been a blabbe
Ill saied men sothe, as often as thei gabbe.

O tongue alas, so often here before
Hast thou made many a ladie bright of hewe
Saied wela waie the daie that I was borne
And many a maidens sorowe for to newe
And for the more part all is untrue
That men of yelpe, & it wer brought to prene
Of kinde, none auauntour is to leue.

Auauntour and a lier, all is one
As thus. I pose a woman graunt me
Her loue, and saieth that other woll she none
And I am swore to holden it secre
And after I tell it two or three Wis I am a bauntour at the least
And lier eke, for I breake my beheste

Now loke than, if thei be not to blame
Soche maner folk, what shal I clepe hē what
That hem auauant of women, and by name
That yet behight hem neuer this ne that Se know hem more than mine old hat
No wonder is, so God me sende hele
Though women dreden with vs men to dele

I saie not this for no mistrust of you
Yet for no wise men, but for fooles nice
And for the harme that in the worlde is now
As well for folie oft, as for malice
For well wote I, in wise folke that vice
No woman dredeth, if she be well auised
For wise been by fooles harme chastised.

But now to purpose, leue brother dere
Haue all this thing ȳ I haue saied in minde
And kepe thee close, and be now of good chere
For all thy dates thou shalt me true finde
I shall thy procesle set in soche a kinde
And God toforne, that it shall thee suffise
For it shall be, right as thou wolt deuise.

For well I wote, thou mēest well parde
Therefore I dare this fully undertake
Thou wost ene, what thy ladie graunted thee
And date is set the charters to make Haue now good night, I maie no lēger wake
And bid for me, sith thou art now in blisse
That God thee sende death, or sone lisse.

Who might tellen halfe the ioie or feste
Which that the soule of Troilus tho felte
Hearing the effect of Pandarus beheste
His old wo, that made his harte swelt
Gan tho for ioie waslen, and to melt
And all the richesse of his sighes sore
At ones fled, he felt of hem no more.

But right so as these holtes, & these haie is That han in winter dedde been and drie Reuesten hem in grene, whan that Maie is Whan euery lustie listeth to plete
Right in that self wise, sothe to seie
Wore sodainly his harte full of ioie
That gladder was there neuer man in Troie

And gan his loke on Pandarus up cast
Full soberly, and frendly on to se
And saied, frende, in Iprill the last
As well thou wost, if it remember thee
How nigh the death for wo thou found me
And how thou diddest all thy businesse
To know of me the cause of my distresse.

Thou wost how long I it forbare to saie
To thee, that art the man that I best trist
And perill none was it to thee to bewraie
That wist I well: but tell me if thee list
Sith I so lothe was, that thy self it wist
How durst I mo tellen of this matere?
That quake now, and no wight maie vs here

But natheless, by that God I thee swere
That as him list maie all this worlde gouerne
And if I lie, Achilles with his spere
Mine harte cleaue, all were my life eterne
As I am mortall, if I late or yerne
Would it bewraie, or durst, or should conne
For all the good that God made vnder sunne

That rather die I would, and determine
As thinketh me now, stocked in prison
In wretchednesse, in filthe, and in vermine
Captife to cruell king Agamenon
And this in all the temples of this toun
Upon the Goddes all, I woll thee swere
To morowe daie, if that thee liketh here.

And

And that thou hast so moche idoen for me
That I ne maie it neuer more deserue
This knowe I well, all might I now for thee
A thousande times on a morowe sterue
I can no more, but that I woll thee serue
Right as thy slaue, whither so thou wende
For euer more, vnto my liues ende.

But here with al mine hart I thee beseche
That neuer in me thou deme soche folie
As I shall saine, me thought by thy speche
That this whiche thou me doest for cõpanie
I should wene it were a baudrie
I am not woode, all if I leude be
It is not so, that wote I well parde.

But he that goeth for gold, or for richesse
On soche messages, call him what ye list
And this that thou doest, call it gentilnesse
Compassion, and felowship, and trist
Depart it so, for wide where is wist
How that there is diuersite required
Betwixen thinges like, as I haue lered.

And that thou knowe I thinke not ne wene
That this seruice a shame be or iape
I haue my faire sucked Polexene
Cassandre, Helein, or any of the frape
Be she neuer so faire, or well ishape
Tell me, whiche thou wilt of euerichone
To haue for thine, and let me than alone.

But sith that thou hast doen me this seruice
My life to saue, and for non hope of mede
So for the loue of God, this greate empzise
Performe it out, now is the moste nede
For high and lowe, withouten any drede
I woll alwaie thine hestes al kepe
Haue now good night, and let vs bothe slepe

Thus helde hem eche of other well apaied
That all the worlde ne might it bet amende
And on the morowed whan thei were araied
Eche to his owne nedes gan entende
But Troilus, though as the fire he brende
For sharpe desire of hope, and of pleasaunce
He not forgate his good gouernaunce.

But in himselfe, with manhode gan restrain
Eche rakell deede, and eche vnbridled chere
That all that liuen sothe to saine
He should haue wiste, by worde or by manere
What that he ment, as touching this matere
From euery wight, as ferre as is the cloud
He was so wise, and well dissimulen could.

And all the while whiche that I now deuise
This was his life, with all his full might
By daie he was in Martes high seruice
That is to sain, in armes as a knight
And forth the more part the long night
He lay and thought how that he might serue
His ladie beste, her thanke for to deserue.

Nill I not sweare, although he laie soft
That in his thought nas somwhat disesed
Ne that he tourned on his pilowes oft
And would of that him misled haue dẽ esed
But in soche case, men be nat alwaie pleased
For naught I wote, no more than was he
That can I deme of possibilite.

But certain is, to purpose for to go
That in this while, as written is in geste
He sawe his ladie somtime, and also
She with him spake, whan ẏ she durst fo reste
And by her bothe auise, as was the beste
Appointcteden full warely in this nede
So as thei durst, how thei would procede

But it was spoken in so short a wise
In soche awaite alwaie, and in soche fere
Lest any wight deuinen or deuise
Would of hem two, or to it laie an eare
That all this worlde so lefe to hem ne were
As that Cupede would hem grace sende
To maken of her speache right an ende.

But thilke little that thei spake or wrought
His wise ghoste toke aie, of all soche hede
It semed her he wiste what she thought
Withouten worde, so that it was no nede
To bid him aught to doen, or aught forbede
For which she thought ẏ loue, al come it late
Of all ioie, had opened her the yate.

And shortly of this processe for to pace
So well his werke and wordes he beset
That he so full stode in his ladies grace Twentie thousande times er she let
She thonked God she euer with him met
So could he him gouerne in soche seruice
That all the worlde ne might it bet deuise.

For she founde him so discrete in all
So secrete, and of soche obeisaunce
That well she felt he was to her a wall
Of steele, and sheld of euery displeasaunce
That to been in his good gouernaunce
So wise he was, she was no more afered
I meane as ferre as aught been required.

And

And Pandarus to quiche alwaie the fire
Was euer ilike prest and diligent
To ease his frende was set al his desire
He hone aie on, he to and fro was sent
He letters bare whan Troilus was absent
That neuer man, as in his frendes nede
Ne bare him bet than he, withouten drede

But now parauenture some mã wante wold
That euery worde or sonde, loke or chere
Of Troilus, that I rehercen shold
In al this while, vnto his lady dere
I trowe it were a long thing for to here
Or of what wight ỳ ſtante in ſuche diſtointe
His wordes al, or euery loke to pointe

For lothe I haue not herde it done er this
In storie none, ne no man here I wene
And though I would, I could not i wis
For there was some epistel hem betwene
That would (as saith min auctor) wel cõtene
Six halfe this boke, of which hi list not write
How should I than a line of it endite

But to the great effecte, than saie I thus
That stonding in concorde and in quiete
This ilke two, Creseide and Troilus
As I haue tolde, and in this time swete
Saue onely often might thei not mete
Ne leiser haue, her speches to fulfell
That it befil, right as I shal you tell

That Pandarus, that euer did his might Right for the line that I shal speke of here
Is for to bringen to his house some night
His faire nece, and Troilus ifere
Where as at leiser al this highe matere
Touching her loue, were at the ful vp boũde
Had out of doute a time to it founde

For he with great deliberacion
Had euery thing that therto might auaile
Some cast, and put in execution
And neither lefte for coste ne for trauaile
Come if hem liste, hem should nothing faile
And for to ben in aught aspied there
That wiste he wel an impossible were

Dredelesse it clere was in the winde
Of euery pie, and euery let game
How al is wel, for al the world is blinde
In this mater, bothe fremed and tame
This timber is al redy vp to frame
Ne lacketh naught, but that we weten wold
A certaine houre, in whiche she comen shold

And Troilus, that al this purueiaunce
Knew at the ful, and waited on it aie
And here vpon che made great ordinaunce
And sounde his cause, and therwith his aray
Ỳ that he were misled night or day
There while he was aboute this seruice
That he was gone to done his sacrifice

And must at suche a temple alone wake Answered of Apollo for to be
And first to sene the holy laurer quake
Er that Apollo spake out of the tree
To tel him next whan grekes should flie
And for thy let him no man, God forbide
But praie Apollo helpe in this nede

Now is there litell more for to done
But Pandare vp, and shortly for to saine
Right sone vpon the chaũginge of the Mone
Whan lightlesse is ỳ world a night or twaine
And that the welken shope him for to raine
He streight a morowe vnto his nece went Ye haue wel herde the fine of his entente

Whan he was comen, he gan anon to plaie
As he was wont, and of him selfe to iape
And finally he swore, and gan her saie
By this and that, she should him not escape
No longer done him after her to cape
But certainly, she must vp her leue
Come soupen in his house with him at eue

At which she lough, and gan her first excuse
And said: it rained hie, how should I gone
Let be, (ỳ he) ne stonde not thus to muse
This mote be don, ye shal come there anone
So at the last, herof thei fel at one
Or els sat he swore her in her eere
He nolde neuer comen there she were

Sone after this, she to him gan rowne
And asked him if Troilus were there
He swore her nay, for he was out of towne
And said, nece: I pose that he were there
You durst neuer haue the more leere
For rather than men might him there aspie
We were leuer a thousande folde to die

Naught list mine auctour fully to declare
What that she thought, whan he said so
That Troilus was out of tounesfare
And if he said therof soth or no
But that withouten awaite with him to go
She graunted him, sithe he her that besought
And as his nece obeyed as her ought

But natheleſſe, yet gan ſhe him beſeche
(Although with him to gone it was no ſcere)
For to beware of gokilche peoples ſpeche
That dreme thinges, which that neuer were
And wel auiſe him whom he brought there
And ſaid him eme, ſens I muſt on you triſt
Loke al be wel, and do now as you liſt

He ſwore her this, by ſtockes and by ſtones
And by the goddes that in heuen dwell
Or elſ were him leauer ſoule and bones with Pluto king, as depe ben in hell
As Tantalus, what ſhould I more tell whan al was wel, he roſe and toke his leue
And ſhe to ſouper came whan it was eue with a certaine of her owne men

And with her faire nece Antigone
And other of her women nine or ten
But who was glad nowe, who as trowe ye?
But Troilus, that ſtode and might it ſe
Throughout a litel window in a ſtewe
Ther he beſheth, ſith midnight was in mewe

Un wiſt of euery wight, but of Pandare
But to the point, now whan ſhe was come with al ioie, and al frendes fare
Her eme anon in armes hath her nome
And than to the ſouper al and ſome whan time was, ful ſofte thei hem ſet
God wot there was no deinte ferre to fet

And after ſouper gonnen thei to riſe
At eaſe wel, with hart freſh and glade
And wel was him that coude beſt deuiſe
To liken her, or that her laughen made
He ſonge, ſhe plaide, he tolde a tale of wade
But at the laſt, as euery thing hath ende
She toke her leaue, and nedes would wende

But o fortune, executrice of wierdes
O influentes of theſe heuens hie
Soth is, that vnder God ye ben our hierdes
Though to vs beeſtes, ben the cauſes wite
This mene I now, for ſhe gan homward hie
But execute was al beſide her leue
At the goddes wil, for whiche ſhe muſt bleue

The bente Mone with her hornes pale Saturnus and Ioue, in Cancro ioyned were
That ſuche a raine from heuen gan auaile
That euery maner woman that was there
Had of that ſmoky raine a very feere
At which Pandare tho lough, & ſaid thenne
Now were it time a Lady to gone henne

But good nece, if I might euer pleaſe you any thing, than pray I you (quod he)
To don mine hart as now ſo great an eaſe
As for to dwell here al this night with me
For why? this is your owne houſe parde
For by my trouthe, I ſay it nat in game
To wende as nowe, it were to me a ſhame

Creſeide, which that could as muche good
As halfe a world, toke hede of his praire
And ſens it rained, and al was in a flode
She thought, as good chepe may I dwel here
And graunt it gladly with a frendes chere
And haue a thonke, as grutche and than abide
For home to gon it may nat well betide

I wol (quod ſhe) mine vncle liefe and dere
Sens that you liſt, it ſhal is to be ſo
I am right glad with you to dwellen here
I ſaid but agame I would go
I wis graunt mercy nece (quod he) tho were it agame or no, ſothe to tell
Now am I glad, ſens that you liſt to dwell

Thus al is wel, but tho began aright
The newe ioy, and al the feſt againe
But Pandarus, if goodly had he might
He would haue hied her to bedde faine
And ſaid, lorde this is an huge raine
This were a wether for to ſleepen in
And that I rede vs ſoone to begin

And nece, wote ye were I wol you lain
For that we ſhul nat liggen ferre a ſonder
And for ye neither ſhullen, dare I ſain
Here noiſe of raine, ne of thonder
By God right in my cloſet yonder
And I wol in that vtter houſe alone
Ben wardain of your women eutrichone

And in this middle chambre that ye ſe
Shal your women ſlepen, wel and ſofte
And there I ſaid, ſhal your ſelven be
And if ye liggen wel to night, come ofte
And careth not what wether is a lofte
The wine anone, and whan ſo you leſt
Go we to ſlepe, I trowe it be the beſt

There nis no more, but here after ſone
Thei boide, dronke, & trauers dra we anone
Gan euery wight that hath nought to done
More in the place, out of the chambre gone
And euer more ſo ſtereliche it rone
And blewe therwith ſo wonderliche loude
That wel nigh no man heren other coude

The

Tho Pandarus her eme, right as him ought
With women, ſuche as were her moſt aboute
Ful glad vnto her beddes ſide her brought
And toke his leaue, and gan ful lowe loute
And ſaid, here at this cloſet doore without Right ouerthwart your women liggen all
That whom ye liſt of hem, ye maie ſone call

So whan that ſhe was in the cloſet laide
And al her women forth by ordinaunce
Ibedde weren, there as I haue ſaide
There nas no more to ſkippen nor to praunce
But boden go to bedde with miſchaunce
Many wight ſkering were any where
And let hem ſlepen, that a bedde were

But Pandarus, that wel couthe eche adele
The olde daunce, and euery point therin
What that he ſaw that al thing was wele
Bethought he wolde vpon his werke begin
And gan the ſtewe doore al ſoft vnpin
As ſtil as a ſtone, without lenger lette
By Troilus adoun right he him ſette

And ſhortly to the pointe right for to gone
Of al this werke he told him worde and ende
And ſaid, make the redy right anone
For thou ſhalt into heuen bliſſe wende
Now bliſſful Venus, thou me grace ſende
(q Troilus) for neuer yet no dede
Had I er now, ne halfendele the drede

(q Pandarus) ne drede the neuer a dele
For it ſhal be right as thou wolt deſire
So thriue I, this night ſhal I make it wele
Or caſten al the gruel in the fire
Yet bliſful Venus this night thou me enſpire
(q Troilus) as wis as I the ſerue
And euer bet and bet ſhal til I ſterue

And if I had, O Venus ful of mirthe
Ayenſtes badde of Mars, or of Saturne
Or thou combuſte, or let were in my birthe
Thy father pray, al thilke harme diſturne
Of grace, and that I glad aien maie turne
For loue of him thou louedeſt in the ſhawe
I meane Adon, that with the boore was ſlawe

Ioue eke, for the loue of faire Europe
The which in forme of a bulle awaie thou let Now helpe, o Mars, thou vp thy blody cope
For loue of Cipria, thou me naught ne let O Phebus, thilke whē Daphne her ſeluen fhet
Vnder the barke, and Laurer wore for drede
Yet for her loue, o helpe now at this nede

Mercurie, for the loue of her eke
For which Pallas was vp Iglauros wrothe
Now helpe, and eke Diane I the beſeke
That this viage be nat to the lothe
O fatall ſuſtren, whiche or any clothe
Me ſhapen was, my deſtine me ſponne
So helpeth to this werke that is begonne

(q Pandarus) thou wretched mouces hert
Art thou agaſt ſo that ſhe wol the bite
Why, do on this furred cloke vpon thy ſherte
And folowe me, for I wol haue the wite
But bide, and let me gon before alite
And with that he gan vndone a trappe
And Troilus he brought in by the lappe

The ſterne winde ſo loude gan to route
That no wight other noiſe might here
And thei that laien at the doore without Ful ſikerly thei ſlepten all ifere
And Pandarus, with ful ſobre chere
Goth to the doore anon, withouten lette
There as thei lay, and ſoftly it shette

And as he came ayen warde priuely
His nece awoke, and aſketh, who goeth there?
(q he) it am I
Ne wondreth not, ne haue of it no fere
And nere he came, and ſaid her in her eere
No worde for loue of God I you beſeche
Let no wight ariſe, and heren of our ſpeche

What, whiche waie be ye comen? benedicite, (q ſhe) and how vnwitte of hem all Here at this ſecret trappe doore (q he) (q tho Creſeide) let me ſome wight call
Eigh, God forbid that it ſhould ſo fall
(q Pandarus) that ye ſuche folye wrought
That might demen thing that neuer er thought

It is nat good a ſleping honde to wake
Ne yeue a wight a cauſe for to deuine
Your women ſlepen al, I vndertake
So that for hem the houſe men might mine
And ſlepen wollen till the ſunne ſhine
And when my tale is brought to an ende
Ich wil right as I came, ſo wol I wende

Now nece mine, ye ſhul well vnderſtonde
(q he) ſo as ye women demen all
That for to holde in loue a man in honde
And him her leſe and dere hart call
And maken him an howue aboue a call
I mene, as loue an other in this mene while Shee doth her ſelfe a ſhame, and him a gile

Now wherby that I tel you al this Ye wote your selfe, as wel as any wight
How that your loue al fully graunted is To Troilus, the worthiest wight
One of the world, and therto trouth ipligh
That but it were on him alonge, ye wolde Him neuer fallen, while ye liuen should

Now stonte it thus, that sith I fro you went
This Troilus, right platly for to seine
Is through a gutter by a priuy went Into my chambre come in al this reine
Unwist of euery maner wight certaine
Saue of my selfe, as wisely haue I ioie
And by the faith I owe to Priam of Troie

And he is come in suche paine and distresse
That but he be al fully woode by this
He sodainly mote fal into woodnesse
But if God helpe: and cause why is this He saith him tolde is of a frende of his
How ỳ ye should louen one, that hight Horaste
For sorow of which this night shalbe his laste

Creseide, whiche that al this wonder herde
Gan sodainly aboute her hart colde
And with a sighe she sorowfully answerd
Alas, I wende who so tales tolde
My dere hart would me nat holde
So lightly faulse, alas conceites wrong
What harme thei don: for now liue I to long

Horaste alas, and fallen Troilus
I knowe him not, God helpe me so (q she)
Alas, what wicked spirite tolde him thus
Now certes eme, to morow and I him se
I shal therof as full excusen me
As euer did woman, if him like
And with that worde she gan ful sore sike

O God (q she) so worldly selinesse
Which clerkes callen false felicite
Ymedled is with many a bitternesse
Ful anguishous, than is God wote (q she)
Condicion of veine prosperite
For either ioyes comen nat ifere
Or els no wight hath hem alwaie here

O brotil wele of mannes ioie vnstable
With what wight so thou be, or ỳ who plaie
Either he wote, that thou ioie art muable
Or wote it nat, it mote ben one of twaie
Now if he wote it nat, how maie he saie
That he hath very ioie and silentesse
That is of ignoraunce aie in derkenesse

Now if he wote that ioy is translitory
As euery ioie of worldly thing mote flite
Than euery time, he that hath in memory
The drede of lesing, maketh him, that he May in no parfite siherneste be
And if to lese his ioie, he set a mite
Than semeth it, that ioy is worth full lite

Wherfore I wol diffine in this matere
That truely for aught I can espie
There is no bery wele in this worlde here
But o thou wicked serpent Ialousie
Thou misbeleued, and enuious folie
Why hast thou Troilus made to me vntrue
That neuer yet agilte, that I wiste

(q Pandarus) thus fallen is this caas
Why vncle mine (q she) who tolde him this Why doth my dere herte thus, alas:
Ye wote, ye nece min (q he) what is
I hope al shal be wel, that is amis
For ye maie quenche al this, if that you lest
And doeth right so, I holde it for the best

So shal I do to morow, i wis (q she)
And God toforne, so that it shal suffice
To morow alas, that were faire (q he)
Nay nay, it maie nat stonden in this wise
For nece mine, this writen clerkes wise
That peril is with dretching in drawe
Nay, suche abodes ben nat worthe an hawe

Nece, al thing hath time I dare auowe
For whan a chambre a fire is, or an hall
Wel more nede is, it sodainly rescowe
Than to disputen and aske amonges all
How the candle in the strawe is fall
Ah benedicite, for al among that fare
The harme is done, and farwel feldefare

And nece mine, ne take it nat a greie
If that ye suffre him al night in this wo
God helpe me so, ye had him neuer lefe
That dare I sain, now there is but we two
But wel I wote that ye wol nat so do
Ye ben to wise to done so great folie
To put his life al night in ieopardie

Had I him neuer lefe: By God I wene
Ye had neuer thing so lefe, (q she)
Now by my thrifte (q he) that shall be seene
For sithe ye make this ensample of me
Al eche al night would him in sorowe se
For al the treasour in the toune of Troie
I bidde God, I neuer mote haue ioie

Now

Now lolie than, if ye that ben his loue
Should put his life al night in ieopardy
For thing of nought, now de that god aboue
Dat onely this delaie cometh of folie
But of malice, if that I should nat lie
What, platly and ye suffre him in distresse
Ye neither bounte done ne gentilnesse

(q tho Creseide) wol ye done o thing
And ye therwith shal stinte al his disease
Saue here and here him this blewe ring
For there is nothing might him better plese
Saue I my selfe, ne more his hart apese
And saue my dere harte, that his sorowe
Is causelesse, that shal he sene to morowe

Iringe (q he) ye haselwodes shaken
Ye nece mine, that ring must haue a stone
That might deed men a liue maken
And suche a ring trowe I that ye haue none Discrecion out of your heed is gone
That sele I now (q he) and that is routhe
O time ilost, wel maist thou curse slouthe

Wote ye not wel that noble and hie corage
Forgoweth nat, ne stinteth eke for lite
But if a foole were in a ialous rage
I nolde setten at his sorowe a mite
Bet lesse him with a fewe wordes white
In other date, whan that I might him finde
But this thing stant al in another kinde

This is so gentle and so tender of harte
That w his death he wol his sorowes wreke
For trust wel, how sore that him smerte
He wol to you no ialous wordes speke
And for thy nece, er that his hart breke
So speke your selfe to him of this matere
For with a worde ye maie his hart stere

Now haue I tolde what peril he is in
And his coming vnwist is to euery wight
Ne parde harme maie there be none, ne sin
I wol my self be with you al this night
Ye know eke how it is your owne knight
And that by right, ye must vpon him trust
And I al prest to fetche him when you list

This accident so pitous was to here
And eke so like a sothe, at prime face
And Troilus her knight, to her so dere
His priue comming, and the liker place
That though she did him as than a grace
Considred all thinges as thei stode
No wonder is, sens he did al for goode

Creseide answerde, as wisely God at rest
My lolie dring, as me is for him wo
And eme I wis, faine would I don the best
If that I a grace had for to do so
But whether that ye dwel, or for him go
I am, til God me better minde sende
At Dulcarnon, right at my wittes ende

(q Pandarus) ye nece wol ye here
Dulcarnon is called fleming of wretches
It semeth herd, for wretches wol nought lere
For bery slouthe, or other wilfull tetches
This is said by hem, ỹ be not worth two fetches
But ye ben wise, & that ye han on hode
Nis neither harde, ne shilful to withstonde

Than eme (q she) doeth here as you list
But er he come, I wol vp first arise
And for the loue of God, sens al my trist
Is on you two, and ye beth bothe wise
So werketh now, in so discrete a wise
That I honour maie haue, and he plesaunce
For I am here, al in your gouernaunce

That is wel said (q he) my nece dere
There good thrifte on that wise gentil harte
But liggeth still, and taketh him right here
It needeth nat no ferther for him sterte
And eche of you caseth other sorowes smerte
For loue of God, and Venus I the herie
For sone hope I, that we shall ben merie

This Troilus full sone on knees him sette
Ful sobrely, right by her beddes heed
And in his beste wise his Ladygrette
But lord so she wore sodainliche reed
Ne though men should smiten of her heed
She couldе nat o worde a right out bringe
So sodainly for his sodaine comminge

But Pandarus, that so wel coulde sele
In euery thing, to plaie anon began
And said, nece, se how this Lord gan knele
Now for your trouth, se this gentil man
And with that worde, he for a quishen ran
And said kneleth now while that thou lesse
There God your hartes bring sone at resse

Can I naught fain, for she bad him natrise
If sorowe it put out of her remembraunce
Or els that she toke it in the wise
Of duetie, as for his obseruaunce
But well finde I, she did him this plesaunce
That she him kist, al though she siked sore
And bad him sit adoun without en more

(ꝙ Pandarus) now wol ye well begin
Now doth him sitte, good nece dere Upen your beddes side, al there within That eche of you the bet maie other here
And with that worde he drew him to the fiere
And toke a light, & founde his countenaunce
As for to loke vpon an olde romaunce

Creseide that was Troilus lady right
And clere flode in a grounde of sikernesse
Al thought she her seruaunt and her knight
Ne should none vntrouthe in her gesse
That natheless, considred his distresse
And that loue is in cause of suche folie
Thus to him spake she of his ialousie

Lo hert mine, as would the excellence
Of loue, auenst the whiche that no man maie
Ne ought eke goodly maken resistence
And eke bicause I leite wel and saie
Your great trouth, and seruice euery daie
And that your hart al min was, soth to saine
This droue me for to rewe vpon your paine

And your goodnes haue I founden alway yet
Of whiche my dere hert, and al my knight
I thanke it you, as ferre as I haue wit
Al can I nat as much as it were right
And I emforth my conning and my might Haue, and aie shal, how sore that me smert
Ben to you trew and hole with all mine hert

And dredelesse that shal be founden at preue
But hert mine, what al this is to saine
Shal well be told, so that ye nought you greue
Though I to you right on your self cõplaine
For there with meane I finally paine
That halte your hart and mine in heuinesse
Fully to slaine, and euery wrong redresse

My good mine, not I, for why ne how
That ielously alas, that wicked wiuere
Thus causeles is cropen into you
The harme of whiche I would faine deliuere
Als, that he all hole or of him fliuere
Should haue his refute in so digne a place
That Ioue, him sone out of your hart race

But o thou, o auctour of nature
Is this an honour to thy dignite
That folke vngilty suffren here iniure
And who that gilty is, al quite goeth he O were it ieluil for to plaine of the
That vndeserued suffrest ialousie
O, that I would vpon the plaine and crie

Eke al my wo is this, that folke now dien
So saine right thus: ye, ialousie is loue
And would a bushel of venim al ercusen
For that a grane of loue is on it shoue
But that wote high Ioue that sit aboue
If it be liker loue, hate, or grame
And after that it ought beare his name

But certaine is, some maner ialousie
Is excusable, more than some i wis
As whan cause is, and some suche fantasie
With pite so wel expressed is That it vnneth doeth or saith amis
But goodly drinketh vp al his distresse
And that excuse I for the gentilnesse

And some so ful of fury is, and despit
That it surmounteth his repression
But hart mine, ye be nat in that plite
That thonke I God, for whiche your passion
I wol nat cal it but illusion
Of haboundance of loue, and besy cure
That doth your hart this disese endure

Of whiche I am sory, but nat wrothe
But for my deuoir and your hartes reste
Where so you list, by ordal or by othe
By sorte, or in what wise so you leste
For loue of God, let preue it for the beste
And if that I be gilty, do me die
Alas, what might I more done or seie

With that a fewe bright teeres newe
Out of her eien fel, and thus she seide
Now God ꝑ wost, in thought ne dede vntrewe
To Troilus was neuer yet Creseide
With that her heed doun in the bed she leide
And with the shete it wrigh, and sighed sore
And held her pece, nat a word spake she more

But now helpe God, to quench al this sorow
So hope I that he shal, for he beste may
For I haue sene of a ful misty morow
Folowen ful oft a mery somers day
And after winter foloweth grene May Men sene alday, and reden eke in stories
That after sharpe shoures ben victories

This Troilus, when he her wordes herde
Haue ye no care, him list nat to slepe
For it thought him no strokes of a perde
To here or se Creseide his lady wepe
But wel he felte about his harte crepe
For euery teare whiche that Creseide asterte
The crampe of deth, to straine him by ꝑ herte

And

In this his minde he gan the time acurse
That he came there, and that he was borne
For now is wicke tourned into worse
And all that labour he hath doen beforne
He wende it lost, he thought he nas but lorne
O Pandarus thought he, alas thy wile Serueth of nought, so wela waie the while.

And therwithall he hing adoun his hedde
And fell on knees, and sorowfully he sight
What might he sain? he felt he nas but dedde
For wroth was she y should his sorowes light
But natheless, whan that he speaken might Than said he thus, God wote y of this game
Whan all is wist, than am I nat to blame.

Therwith the sorowe of his harte shet
That from his ipen fell there nat a tere
And euery spirite his vigour in knet
So thei astonied or oppressed were
The feling of sorowe, or of his fere
Or of aught els, fledde were out of toune
Doune he fell all sodainly in swoune.

This was no little sorowe for to se
But all was husht, and Pandare vp as fast Onece pesce, or we be lost (q he)
Bethe nat agast, but certain at last
For this or that, he into bedde him cast
And said, O theefe, is this a mannes herte
And of he rent all to his bare sherte.

And said nece, but ye helpe vs now
Alas, your owne Troilus is lorne Iwis so would I, and I wist how full fain (q she) alas that I was borne Ye nece, woll ye pullen out the thorne
That sticketh in his harte (q Pandare)
Saie all forgeue, and stint is all this fare.

Ye that to me (q she) full leuer were Than all the good the Sunne about goeth
And therwithall she swore him in his eare
Iwis my dere harte I am not wrothe
Haue here my trouth, & many an other othe
Now speake to me, for it am I Creseide
But all for naught, yet might he nat abreide

Ther vp his pouice, & paumes of his hondes
Thei gan to frote, & wete his temples twain
And to deliuer him fro bitter bondes
She oft him kist, and shortly for to sain
Him to rewaken she did all her pain
And at the last he gan his breath to drawe
And of his swough sone after that adawe.

And gan bet minde, and reason to him take
But wonder sore he was abashed iwis
And with a sigh whan he gan bet awake
He said, O mercie God, what thing is this?
Why doe ye with your seluen thus amis?
(q tho Creseide) is this a mannes game
What Troilus, woll ye doe thus for shame?

And therwithall her arme ouer him she laied
And all forgaue, and oft time him kest
He thonked her, and to her spake and laied
As till to purpose, for his hartes rest
And she to that answerde him as her lest
And with her goodlie wordes him dispost
She gan, and oft his sorowes to comfort.

(q Pandarus) for aught I can aspied
This light nor I ne seruen here of naught
Light is nat good for sike folkes yes
But for the loue of god, sens ye been brought In this good plite, let now non heup thought
Been hanged in the hartes of you twey
And bare the candle to the chimney.

Sone after this, though it no nede were Whan she soche othes as her list deuise
Had of hem take, her thought tho no fere
Ne cause eke none, to bid him thens rise
Yet selle thing than othes maie suffice
In many a case, for euery wight I gesse
That loueth well, meaneth but gentilnesse.

But in effect she would wete anon
Of what man, and eke where, and why
He ialous was, sens there was cause non
And eke the signe that he toke it by
She bade him that to tell her bustly
Or els certain she bare him on honde
That this was doen of malice her to fonde.

Withouten more, shortly for to sain
He must obeie vnto his ladies hest
And for the lasse harme he must fain
He said her, whan she was at soche a fest
She might on him haue loked at the lest
Not I nat what, all dere inough a rishe
As he that nedes must a cause fishe.

And she answerde, swete, all were it so
What harme was y, sens I non euill meane
For by that God that bought vs bothe two
In all thing is mine entent cleane
Soche argumentes ne be nat worth a beane
Woll ye the childishe ialous counterfete
Now were it worthy that ye were ibete.

Tho Troilus gan sorowfully to sike
Lest she be wrothe, him thought his hart deide,
And saied, alas, vpon my sorowes sike
Haue mercie swete harte mine Creseide
And if that in tho wordes that I seide
Be any wrong, I will no more trespace
Doeth what you list, I am all in your grace.

And she answerde, of gilt misericorde
That is to saine, that I forgeue all this
And euermore on this night you recorde
And bethe well ware ye doe no more amis
Nay dere harte mine (quod she) iwis
And now (quod she) that I haue you doe smarte
Forgeue it me, mine owne swete harte.

This Troilus with blisse of that surprised
Put all in Goddes hande, as he that ment
Nothing but well, and sodainly auised
He her in armes fast to him hent
And Pandarus, with a full good entent
Laied him to slepe, and saied, if ye be wise
Sweueneth not now, lest more folke arise.

What might or maie the sely Larke saie
Whā that the sparhauke hath him in his fote
I can no more, but of these like twaie
To whom this tale sugre be or sote
Though I tary a yere, somtime I mote
After mine aucthour tellen her gladnesse
As well as I haue tolde her heuinesse.

Creseide, whiche that felte her thus itake
(As writen clerkes in her bokes old)
Right as an aspen lefe she gan to quake
Whan she him felt her in his armes fold
But Troilus all hole of cares cold
Gan thanken tho the blisfull Goddes seuen
Through sondry paines to bring folk to heuē

This Troilus in armes gan her straine
And saied swete, as euer mote I gone
Now be ye caught, here is but we twaine
Now yeldeth you, for other boote is none
To that Creseide answerde thus anone
Ne had I er now, my swete harte dere
Been yolde iwis, I were now not here.

O soth is saied, that healed for to be
As of a feuer, or other greate sickenesse
Men must drinken, as we oft se
Full bitter drinke, and for to haue gladnesse
Men drinken oft paine, and greate distresse,
I meane it here by, as for this auenture
That through a paine hath founde al his cure

And now swetnesse semeth more swete
That bitternesse assaied was biforne
For out of wo in blisse now thei flete
Non sothe thei felten sens thei were borne
Now is this bet, than bothe two be lorne
For loue of God, take euery woman hede
To werken thus, if it come to the nede.

Creseide all quite from euery drede and tene
As she that wist cause had him to triste
Made him sothe least, it ioie was to sene
Whan she is trouth and cleane entent wiste
And as about a tree with many a twiste
Bitrent and writhe the swete Wodbinde
Can eche of hem in armes other winde,

And as the newe abashed Nightingale
That stinteth first, whan she beginneth sing
Whan that she heareth any heerdes tale
Or in the hedges any wight stearing
And after siker doeth her voice out ring
Right so Creseide, whan her drede stent
Opened her hart, and told him her entent.

And right as he that seeth his death itapen
And dien mote, in aught that he maie gesse
And sodainly rescous doeth him escapen
And from his death his brought in sikernesse
For al this worlde, in soche present gladnesse
Was Troilus, and hath his lady swete
With worse hap God let vs neuer mete.

Her armes small, her streight backe and soft
Her sides long, flesshly, smothe, and white
He gan to stroke, and good thrift bad full oft
Her snowisse throte, her brestes rounde and lite
Thus in this heauen he gan him to delite
And therwithall a thousande times her kist
That what to doen for ioie vnneth he wist.

Than saied he thus, O Loue, O Charite
Thy mother eke, Citheria the swete
That after thy self, next heried be she Venus I meane, the well willy planete
And next that, Imeneus I thee grete
For neuer man was to you Goddes hold
As I, whiche ye haue brought fro cares cold.

Benigne Loue, thou holy bonde of thinges
Who so wolde grace, and list thee not honouren
Lo, his desire wolde flie without tenwinges
For nedelesse thou of bounte hem socourest
That seruen de, and most al waie labourest
Yet were all lost, that dare I well saine certes
But if thy grace passed our desertes.

And

And for thou me that lest thōne could deserue
Of hem that nombred been vnto thy grace
Hast holpen, there I likely was to sterue
And me bestowed in so high a place
That thilke boundes mate no blisse pace
I can no more, but laude and reuerence
Be to thy bounte and thine excellence.

And therwithall Creseide anon he kist
Of whiche certain she felt no disease
And thus saied he, now would God I wist
Mine harte swete, how I you might please
What man (q he) was euer thus at ease
As I, On whiche the fairest, and the best
That euer I seie, deineth her to rest.

Heremaie mē seen that merrie passeth right
Ther perience of that is felt in me
That am vnworthy to so swete a wight
But harte mine, of your benignite
So thinke, that though I vnworthy be Yet mote I nede amenden in some wise
Right through the vertue of your hie seruice

And for the loue of God my lady dere
With he hath wrought me for I shal you serue
As thus I meane: woll ye be my fere
To doe me liue, if that you list or sterue
Betracheth me, how that I maie deserue
Your thonke, so ȳ I through min ignoraunce
Ne doe nothing that you be displeasaunce.

For certes freshe womanliche wife
This dare I saie, that trouth and diligence
That shall ye finden in me all my life
Ne I woll not certain breaken your defence
And if I doe, present or in absence
For loue of God, let slea me with the dede
That it like vnto your womanhede.

I wis (q she) mine owne hartes lust
My ground of ease, and al mine harte dere
Graunt mercie, for on that is all my trust
But let vs stall awaie fro this mattere
For it sufficeth, this that said is here
And at o worde, without repentaunce
Welcome my knight, my peace, my suffisaunce

Of her delite or ioies, one of the least
Were impossible to my wit to saie
But iudgeth ye, that haue been at the feast
Of soche gladnesse, if that him list playe
I can no more, but thus these ilke twaie
That night, betwixen drede and sikernesse
Felden in loue the greate worthinesse.

O blisfull night, of hem so long isought
How blithe vnto hem both two thou were?
Why ne had I soche feast w my soule ibought
Ye, or the least ioie that was there
Awaie thou foule daunger and thou fere
And let hem in this heauen blisse dwell
That is so high, that all ne can I tell.

But soothe is, though I can not tellen all
As can mine auctbour of his excellence
Yet haue I saied, and God toforne shall In euery thing all holly his sentence
And if that I, at loues reuerence
Haue any worde in eched for the best
Doeth therwithall right as your seluen lest.

For my wordes here, and euery part
I speake hem all vnder correction
Of you that feling haue in loues art
And put it all in your discrecion
To entreate or make diminicion
Of my langage, and that I you beseche
But now to purpose of my rather speche.

These ilke two that been in armes laft
So lothe to hem a sonder gon it were
That eche from other wenden been biraft
Or els so, this was her moste fere
That all this thing but nice dreames were
For which full oft eche of hem said, o swete
Clippe I you thus, or els doe I it mete.

And Lorde so he gan goodlie on her se
That neuer his loke ne blent from her face
And saied, O dere harte maie it be
That it be soothe, that ye been in this place
Ye harte mine, God thanke I of his grace
(q tho Creseide) and therwithall him kist
That where here spirite was, for ioie she nist

This Troilus full oft her yen two Gan for to kisse, and saied: O yen clere
It weren ye that wrought me soche wo
Ye humble nettes of my ladie dere
Though there be mercie writtē in your chere
God wote the text full harde is for to finde
How could ye, withouten bonde me binde.

Therwith he gan her fast in armes take
And well an hundred times gan he sike
Not soche sorowfull sighes as men make
For wo, or els whan that folke be sike
But esie sighes, soche as been to like That shewed his affection within
Of soche sighes could he not blin.

Done

Sone after this, thei spake of sondrie thinges
As fill to purpose of this auenture
And playyng, enterchaungeden her ringes
Of whiche I can not tellen no scripture
But well I wot, a broche of gold and assure
In whiche a Rubbie set was like an herte
Creseide him yaue, and stacke it on his sherte

Lorde trowe ye that a coueitous wretche
That blameth loue, and halte of it dispite
That of tho pens that he can muckre & ketche
Was euer yet yeue to him soche delite
As is in loue, in o poinct in some plite
Naie doubtlesse, for also God me saue
So parfite ioie maie no nigard haue.

Thei woll saie yes, but Lorde so thei lie
Tho bustie wretches full of wo and drede
That callen loue a woodnesse of folie
But it shall fall hem, as I shall you rede
Thei shall forgon the white and eke the rede
And liue in wo, there God yeue hē mischaūce
And euery louer in his trouthe auaunce

As would God tho wretches, that dispise
Seruice of loue, had eares also long
As had Mida, full of couetise
And therto dronken had as hotte and strong
As Cresus did, for his affectes wrong
To teachen hem, that thei been in the vice
And louers not, although thei hold hem nice

These ilke two, of whom that I you saie Whan that her hartes well assured were Tho gonnen thei to speake and to plaie
And eke rehearcen how, whan, and where Thei knewe first, and euery wo or fere
That passed was, but all soche heuinesse
I thonke it God, was tourned to gladnesse.

And euermore, whan that hem fell to speake
Of any thing of soche a time agone
With killing all that tale should breake
And fallen into a newe ioie anone
And didden all her might, sens thei were one
For to recouren blisse, and been at ease
And paised wo with ioie counterpaise.

Reason woll not that I speake of slepe
For it accordeth not to my mattere
God wote thei toke of it full little kepe
But lest this night that was to hem so dere
Ne should in vaine escape in no manere
It was biset in ioie and businesse
Of all that louneth into gentilnesse.

But whan the cocke, commune Astrologer
Gan on his brest to beate, and after crowe
And Lucifer, the daies messanger
Gan for to rise, and out her beames throwe
And Estward rose, to him that could it knowe
Fortuna maior, that anone Creseide
With harte sore, to Troilus thus seide.

Mine hartes life, my trust, al my pleasaunce
That I was borne alas, that me is wo
That daie of vs mote make disseueraunce
For time it is to rise, and hence go
Or els I am lost for euer mo
O night alas, why nilt thou ouer vs houe
As long as whan Alcmena laie by Ioue.

O blacke night, as folke in bokes rede
That shapen art by God, this world to hide
At certain times, with thy derke wede
That vnder that men might in rest abide Wel oughten beastes to plain, & folke to chide
That there as daie with labor would vs hast
That thou thus fliest, and deinest vs not rest.

Thou doest alas, to shortly thine office
Tho rakle night, there God maker of kinde Thee for thine hast, and thine vnkinde vice
So fast aie to our him isperie binde
That neuermore vnder ȳ ground thou winde
For now for thou so highest out of Troie
Haue I forgone thus hastely my ioie.

This Troilus, that with tho wordes felt
Is thought him tho, for pitous distresse
The bloodie teares from his harte melt
As he that yet neuer soche heuinesse
Assaied had, out of so greate gladnesse
Gan therwithall Creseide his lady dere
In armes strain, and hold in louely manere.

O cruell daie, accuser of the ioie
That night and loue haue stole, & false fro
Accursed be thy comming into Troie
For euery bone hath one of thy bright yen
Enuious daie, what list thee so to spien
What hast thou lost, why seekest ȳ this place
There God thy light so quench for his grace.

Alas, what haue these louers thee agilt
Dispitous daie, thine be the paine of hell
For many a louer hast thou slain, and wilt
Thy soring in woll no where let hem dwell
What profrest thou thy light heare for to sell
Go sell it hem that smale seales graue
We woll thee not, vs nedeth no daie haue.

Ind

Ind eke the ſoonne Titan gan be chide
Ind ſaid, O foole, well maie men thee diſpiſe
That haſt all night the dauning by thy ſide
Ind ſuffreſt her ſo ſone vp fro thee riſe ſay to diſeaſe vs louers in this wiſe
What hold your bed, there thou & thy morow
Ind God ſo yeue you bothe ſorowe.

Therwith full ſore he ſighed, & thus he ſeide
My lady right, and of my weale or wo
For well and roote, O goodly mine Creſeide
Ind ſhall I riſe alas, and ſhall I ſo
Now fele I that mine harte mote a two Ind how ſhould I my life an houre ſaue
Sens that with you is all the life I haue.

What ſhall I doen? for certes I not how Ye whan alas, I ſhall the time ſe
That in this plite I maie been eſt with you Ind of my life God wote how ſhall that be Sens that deſire right now ſo biteth me
That I am dedde anon, but I retourne
How ſhould I long alas, fro you ſojourne?

But natheleſſe, mine owne ladie bright
Were it ſo that I wiſt vtterly
That your hũble ſeruaunt, and your knight
Were in your harte iſet ſo fermely
As ye in mine, the whiche truely
Me leuer were than theſe worldes twain
Yt ſhould I bet endure all my pain.

To that Creſeide anſwerde right anon
Ind with a ſigh ſhe ſaied, O harte dere
The game iwis ſo ferforth now is gon
That firſt ſhall Phebus fallẽ from the ſphere
Ind eueriche Egle been the Douues fere
Ind euery roche out of this place ſterte
Er Troilus go out of Creſeides herte.

Ye been ſo depe within mine harte graue
That tho I would it turne out of my thought
As wiſely very God my ſoule ſaue
To dien in the pain, I could nought
Ind for the loue of God, yͭ vs hath wrought
Let in your brain none other fantaſie
So crepe, that it cauſe me to die.

Ind that ye me would haue as faſt in minde
As haue you that would I you beſeche
Ind if I wiſt ſothly that to finde
God might not apoinct my ioies eche
But harte mine, withouten more ſpeche
Bethe to me true, or elſ were it routhe
For I am thine, by God and by my trouthe.

Bethe glad for thy, and liue in ſikernes
Thus ſaied I neuer er this, ne ſhall to mo
Ind if to you it were a greate gladneſſe
To tourne ayen ſone after that ye go
As faine would I as ye, it were ſo
As wiſely God mine harte bring to reſte
Ind him in armes toke, and oft keſte.

Ayenſt his will, ſithe it mote nedes be
This Troilus vp roſe and faſt him cled
Ind in his armes toke his ladie free
An hundred times, and on his waie him ſped
Ind with ſoche wordes, as his harte bled
He ſaied: fare well my dere harte ſwete
That God vs graunt ſound and ſone to mete

To whiche no worde for ſorowe ſhe anſwerd
So ſore gan his parting her diſtrain
Ind Troilus vnto his paleis ferd
As wo bigon as ſhe was, ſothe to ſaine
So harde him wrõg of ſharpe deſire the pain
For to been eſte there he was in pleaſaunce
That it may neuer out of his remembraunce

Retourned to his roiall paleis ſone
He ſoft vnto his bedde gan for to ſinke
To ſlepe long, as he was wont to doen
But all for nauȝt, he maie wel ligge & winke
But ſlepe maie there none in his harte finke
Thinking how ſhe, for whõ deſire him brende
Ai M. folde was worth more than he wende.

Ind in his thought, gan vp & doun to wende
Her wordes all, and euery countenaunce
Ind fermely imprẽten in his minde
The leſt poincte, that to him was pleaſaunce
Ind verely of thilke remembraunce
Deſire al newe him brende, and luſt to brede
Gan more than erſt, and yet toke he non hede.

Creſeide alſo, right in theſame wiſe
Of Troilus gan in her harte fet
His worthineſſe, his luſt, his deedes wiſe
His gentilneſſe, and how ſhe with him met
Thonking loue, he ſo weil her beſet
Deſiring oft to haue her harte dere
In ſoche a place as ſhe durſt make him chere

Pandare a morowe, which that cõmen was Vnto his nece, and gan her faire grete
Ind ſaied, all this night ſo rained it alas
That all my drede is, that ye nece ſwete
Haue little leiſer had to ſlepe and mete
All this night (yͭ be) hath rain ſo do me wake
That ſome of vs I trowe her heddes ake.

Ind

And nere he came and said, how stant it now
This merie morowe, nece how can ye fare
Creseide answerde, neuer the bet for you
Fore that ye been, God yeue your harte care
God helpe me so, ye cauled all this fare
Trowe I (q she) for all your wordes white
O who so seeth you, knoweth you full lite.

With that she gan her face for to wrie
With the shete and wore for shame all redde
And Pandarus gan vnder for to prie
And said nece, if that I shall been dedde
Haue here a swerde, and smiteth of my hedde
With that his arme, all sodainly he threste
Vnder her necke, and at the last her kiste.

I passe al that, which chargeth naught to say
What, God forgaue his death, and she also Forgaue: and with her vncle gan to playe
For other cause was there none than so
But of this thing right to the effect to go
Whan time was, home to her house she went
And Pandarus hath fully his entent.

Now tourne we ayen to Troilus
That restlesse full long a bedde laie
And priuely sent after Pandarus
To him to come in all the hast he maie
He come anon, not ones saied he naie
And Troilus full soberly he grete
And doune vpon the beddes sides him sete.

This Troilus with all thaffectioun
Of frendly loue, that harte maie deuise
To Pandarus on knees fill adoune
And er that he would of the place arise
He gan him thanken on his best wise
An hundred time he gan the time bielle
That he was borne, to bring him to distresse.

He said, O frende of frendes, the alderbest
That euer was, the sothe for to tell
Thou hast in heauē ibrought my soule at rest
Fro Phlegeton the firie flood of hell
That though I might a thousande times sel
Vpon a daie my life in thy seruice
It might not a mote in that suffice.

The sonne, whiche that al the worlde mate se
Sawe neuer yet my life, that dare I leie
So toily, faire, and goodly, as is she Whose I am all, and shall till that I deie
And that I thus am hers, dare I seie
That thanked be the high worthinesse
Of loue, and eke thy kinde businesse.

Thus hast thou me no little thing ireme
For why to thee obliged be for aie
My life, & why, for through thine help I liue
Or els dedde had I been ago many a daie
And with that worde doun in his bed he laie
And Pandarus full soberly him herde
Till all was said, and than he him answerde

My dere frende, if I haue doen for thee
In any case, God wote it is me leie
And am as glad as man maie of it be God helpe me so, but take now not agrie
That I shall saine, beware of this mischief
That there as now brought art to thy bliss
That thou thy self, ne cause it not to miss.

For of fortunes sharpe aduersite
The worste kinde of infortune is this
A man to haue been in prosperite
And it remember, whan it passed is Thou art wise inough, for thy doe nat amis
Be not to rakell, though thou sit warme
For if thou be, certain it woll thee harme.

Thou art at ease, and hold thee well therin
For also sure as redde is euery fire
Is greate a crafte is to kepe well as winne
Bridle alwaie well thy speach and thy desire
For worldly ioie holdeth not but by a wire
That proueth well, it brest aldate so ofte
For thy neede is to werken with it softe.

(q Troilus) I hope, and God to forme
My dere frende, that I shall so me bere
That in my gilt ther shal nothing been lorne
Ne I nill not rakle, as for to greuen here
It nedeth not this matter ofte tere
For wistest thou mine harte wel Pandare
God wote of this thou wouldest lite care.

Tho gan he tell him of his glad night
And whereof first his hart dradde, and how
And said frende, as I am true knight
And by that faithe I owe to God and you
I had it neuer halfe so hote as now
And aie the more that desire me biteth
To loue her best, the more it me deliteth.

I not my self not wisely, what it is
But now I feele a newe qualite
Ye all an other than I did er this Pandare answered and said thus, that he
That ones maie in heauen blisse be
He feeleth other waies dare I laie
Than thilke time he first heard of it saie.

This

This is a worde for al, that Troilus
Was never ful to speke of this matere
And for to praisen vnto Pandarus
The bounte of his right lady dere
And Pandarus to thanke, and maken chere
This tale was aie span newe to beginne
Til that the night departed hem atwinne

Soone after this, for that fortune it would Ioinen was the blisful time I wete
That Troilus was warned, that he should There he was erst, Creseide his lady mete
For whiche he felte his herte in ioie flete
And faithfully gan al the goddes hery
And lette now, if that he can be mery

And holden was the forme, and al the gise
Of her comming, and of his also Ielt was erst, whiche nedeth nought deuise
But plainly to theffecte right for to go
Ioie and surete Pandarus hem two Hedde brought, whan hem bothe lest
And thus thei ben in quiete and in rest

Aught nedeth it to you, sithe thei ben met Aske at me, if that thei blithe were
For if it erst was well, tho was it bet
A thousande folde, this nedeth not enquere
I go was euery sorow and euery fere
And bothe I wis thei had, and so thei wende
As moche ioie as harte maie comprehende

This nis no litel thing of for to sey
This passeth euery wit for to deuise
For eche of hem gan others lust obey
Felicite, whiche that these clerkes wise
Commenden so, ne may not here suffise
This ioye ne maie not I written be with inke
This passeth al that hart maie bethinke

But cruel day, so wela way the stounde
Gan for to approche, as thei by signes knewe
For whiche hem thought felle dethes wounde
So wo was hem, that changen gan her hewe
And day thei gonnen to dispise al newe
Calling it traitour, enuious and worse
And bitterly the daies light thei corse

(Troilus) alas, now am I ware
That Pirous, and tho swifte stedes thre
Whiche that drawen forth the sunnes chare
Han gon some by pathe in dispite of me
And maketh it so sone day to be
And for the sunne him hasteth thus to rise
Se hal I neuer don him sacrifise

But nedes daie departe hem must sone
And whan her speche don was, and her chere
Thei twin anon, as thei were wont to done
And setten time of meting eftesone
And many a nigt thei wroust in this manere
And thus fortune a time ladde in ioie
Creseide, and eke this kinges son of Troie

In suffisaunce, in blisse, and in singinges
This Troilus gan al his life to lede
He spendeth, iusteth, and maketh festinges
He geueth freely ofte, and chaungeth wede
He helde about him alwaie out of drede
A world of folke, as come him well of kinde
The freshest, and the best he couldе finde

That suche a voice was of him, and a steuen
Throughout ỹ world, of honour and largesse
That it vp ronge vnto the yate of Heuen
And as in loue he was in suche gladnesse
That in his hart he demed, as I gesse
That there nis louer in this world at ease
So wel as he, and thus gan loue him please

The goodlihede or beaute, whiche ỹ kinde
In any other lady had islette
Can not the mountenaunce of a gnat vnbinde
About his hert, of al Creiseides nette
He was so narowe imasked, and shnette
That is vndon in any maner side
That nil nat ben, for aught that maie betide

And by the honde ful ofte he would take
This Pandarus, and into gardin lede
And suche a feest, and suche a proceste make Him of Creseide, and of her womanhede
And of her beaute, that withouten drede
It was an heuen his wordes for to here
And than he wouldе sing in this manere

Loue, that of erthe and sea hath gouernaunce
Loue, that his heestes hath in heuen hie
Loue, that with an holsome aliaunce
Halte people ioyned, as him like hem gie
Loue, that knitteth law and companie
And couples doth in vertue for to dwel
Binde this accorde, that I haue told and tel

That, ỹ the world wt faith, whiche ỹ is stable Diuerseth so his stoundes according
That elementes that bethe discordable
Holden a bonde, perpetually during That Phebus mote his rosy day forth bring
And ỹ the mone hath lordshp ouer ỹ nightes
Al this doeth loue, aie heried be his mightes

That, that the sea, that gredy is to flowen
Constraineth to a certaine ende so
His floodes, that so fiercly thei ne growen
To drenchen earthe and al forever mo
And if that Ioue aught let his bridel go
Al that now loueth a sonder should lepe
And lost were al, that loue hath nowe to hepe

So would to god, that authour is of kinde
That with his bonde, loue of his vertue list
To serchen hertes al, and fast binde
That frō his bōde no wight the wey out wist
And hertes colde hem, wold I that hem twist
To maken hem loue, and that list hem aie rewe
On hartes sore, and hepe hem that ben trewe

In al nedes for the tounes warre
He was, and aie the first in armes dighe
And certainly, but if that bokes erre
Saue Hector, most idradde of any wight
And this encrease of hardinesse and might Came him of loue, his ladies thanke to win
That altered his spirite so within

In time of truce on hawking would he ride
Or els hunt Bore, Beare, or Lioun
The smal deeres let he gon beside
And whan that he come riding into the toun
Ful oft his lady from her window doun
As fresh as faucon, comen out of mue
Ful redely was him goodly to salue

And most of loue and vertue was his speche
And in dispite had al wrecchednesse
And doutelesse no nede was him beseche
To honouren hem, that had worthinesse
And easen hem, that weren in distresse
And glad was he, if any wight wel ferde
That louer was, whan he it wist or herde

For sothe to sayne, he lost helde euery wight
But if he were in loues high seruice
I meane soothe that aught it ben of right
And ouer al this, so wel couthe he deuise
Of sentement, and in so vncouthe wise
Al his array, that euery louer thought
That al was well, what so he said or wrought

And though that he be come of blode royal Him list of pride, at no wight for to chace
Benigne he was to eche in general
For which he gate him thanke in euery place
Thus would Ioue, theried by his grace
That pride and Ire, Enuie, and Auarice
He gan to flie, and euery other vice

Thou lady bright, the doughter of Dian
Thy blinde & winged sonne eke dan Cupide
Ye sustren nine eke, that by Helicone
In hil Pernaso, listen for to abide
That ye thus ferre han deined me to gide
I can more, but lens that ye wol wende
Ye heried ben for aie without ende

Through you haue I said fully in my song
The effecte and loie of Troilus seruice
Al be that there was some disease among
As mine auctour listeth to deuise
My thirde boke now ende I in this wise
And Troilus in luste and in quiete
Is with Creseide, his owne hertes swete

Explicit liber tertius.

But all to litell, weia way the while Lasteth swiche ioye, ithonked be fortune
That semeth trewest, whan she wol begile
And can to fooles her songe entune
That she hem hent, & blent traitour cōmune
And whan a wight is frō her whele ithrowen
Than laugheth she, & maketh him the mowe

From Troilus she gan her bright face
Away to writhe, and toke of him non hede
And caste him clene out of his ladies grace
And on her whele she set vp Diomede
For which min hert right now gynneth blede
And now my pen alas, with which I write
Quaketh for drede, of that I must endite

For how Creseide Troilous forsoke
Or at the lest, how that she was vnkinde
Mote hence forthe, ben mater of my boke
As writē folke, through which it is in minde
Alias that thei should euer cause finde
To speke her harme, and if thei on her lie
I wis hem selfe should haue the vilanie

O ye Herines nightes doughters three
That endelesse complaine euer in paine
Megera, Allecto, and eke Tesiphonee
Thou cruel Mars eke, father of Quirine
This ilke fourth boke helpe me to fine
So that the loos, and loue, and life ilere
Of Troilus be fully shewed here

Incipit liber quartus.

Lyggyng in hoſt, as I haue ſaide er this
The Grekes ſtrong, about
Troie toune
Bifell, that whan that Phebus ſhining is Upon the bꝛeſte of Hercules Lion
That Hectoꝛ, with many a bolde Baron
Cam on a daie with Grekes foꝛ to fight
Is he was wont, to greue hem what he miꝛt

But I how long oꝛ ſhoꝛt it was bitwene
This purpoſe, and that day thei fighte mente
Upon a daie wel armed bꝛight and ſhene
Hectoꝛ and many a woꝛthy knight out wente
With ſpeare in honde, & bigge bowes bente
And in the beꝛde withouten lenger lette
Perſomen in the feide anon hem mette

The long day with ſpeares ſharpe ſgrounde
With aꝛowes, dartes, ſwerdes, and maces fel
Thei fight, & bꝛingē hoꝛſe, & man to grounde
And with her aꝛes out the bꝛaines quel
But in the laſt houre, ſoth be to tel
The folke of Troie hem ſelfen ſo miſleden
That with ꝑ woꝛſe at night home thei fleden

In whiche day was taken Inthenoꝛ
Haugre Polimidas, oꝛ Monelaco
Anttippe Sarpedon, Paleſtinoꝛ
Polite, oꝛ ek the Troyan dan Euphco
And other laſſe folke, as Phebuſco
So that foꝛ harme ꝑ daie the folke of Troie
Byden to leſe a great parte of her ioie

Of Priamus was yeue, at grekes requeſt
A time of truce, and tho thei gonnen trete
Her priſoners to chaungen moſt and leſt
And foꝛ the ſurplus yeuen ſommes grete
This thing anon was couthe in euery ſtrete Borne in thaſſege, in toun, and euery where
And with the firſt it came to Calcas eere

Whē Calcas knew this tretiſe ſhould helde
In conſiſtoꝛie amonge the Grekes ſone
Began in thꝛinge, foꝛ he with loꝛdes olde
And let him there as he was wont to done
And with a chaunged face, hem bade abone
Foꝛ loue of God, to done that reuerence
To tinten noiſe, and yeue him audience

Than ſaid he thus, lo loꝛdes mine I was Troyan, as it is knowen out of dꝛede
And if that you remembꝛe, I am Calcas
That alderfirſt yaue comfoꝛt to your nede
And tolde wel how we that you ſhould ſpede
Foꝛ dredeleſſe thꝛough you ſhal in a ſtounde
Ben Troie ibꝛent, and beaten doun to gꝛounde

And in what foꝛme, oꝛ in what maner wiſe
This toun to ſhende, and al your luſt atheue
Ye haue eꝛ this wel herde me deuiſe
Thus know ye my loꝛdes, as I leue
And foꝛ the Grekes weren me ſo leue
I came my ſelfe in my ꝓpeꝛ perſone
To teche in this, how you was beſt to done

Hauing vnto my treaſour, ne my rent
Right no regarde in reſpecte of your eaſe
Thus al my good I lefte, and to you went Wening in this you loꝛdes foꝛ to pleaſe
But al that tolle ne doth me no diſeaſe
I vouchſafe, as wiſely haue I ioie
Foꝛ you to leie, al that I haue in Troie

Saue of a doughter that I lefte, alaſs
Sleping at home, when out of Troie I ſtert
O ſterne, O cruel father that I was How might I haue in that ſo hard an hert
Alas that I ne had bꝛought her in my ſhert
Foꝛ loꝛow of which I wol nat liue to moꝛow
But if ye loꝛdes ꝛewe vpon my ſoꝛow

Foꝛ bicauſe that I ſaw me no time eꝛ now
Her to deliuer, ſche holden haue my pees
But now oꝛ neuer, if that it like you
I may her haue right now we doutlees
O helpe and grace, among al this pꝛees
Ne we on this olde caitife in diſtreſſe
Sith ꝑ thꝛough you haue all this heuineſſe

Ye haue now caught, and fettred in priſon Troyans inowe, and if your willes be Wyth hem we will make redemption
Now foꝛ the loue of God, and of bounte
One of ſo ſele alas, ſo yeſe him me
What nede were it this ꝓaier foꝛ to werne
With ye ſhul haue, both folke & toune as yern

On peril of my life I ſhal nat lie Apollo hath me tolde full faithfully
I haue eꝛ founde by aſtronomy
By ſoꝛt, and by augury trewely
And dare wel ſaie the time is falle by
That fiꝛe & flambe on all the toun ſhal ſpꝛede
And thus ſhal Troie turne to aſhen dede

Foꝛ certaine Phebus, and Neptunus bothe
That maiden the walles of the toun

Ben with the folke of Troie alwaie so wroth
That thei wol bring it to confusioun
Right in dispite of king Lamedoun
Bicause he nolde paien hem her hire
The toune of Troie shal ben set on fire

Telling his tale alway this olde grey
Humble in his speche and loking eke
The salt teres from his eien tweye
Ful fast ronnen doune by either cheke
So longe he gan of socour hem beseke
That for to heale him of his sorowes sore
Thei gaue him Antenor, withouten more

But who was glad inough but Calcas tho
And of this thing ful sone his nedes leide
On hem that shoulden for the tretise go
And hem for Antenor ful ofte preide
To bringen home king Thoas, and Creseide
And whan Priam his safegarde sent Themballadours to Troie streight thei went

The cause I tolde of her comming, the olde
Priam the king, ful sone in generall
Let here upon his parliment holde
Of whiche the effecte rehercen you I shall Themballadours ben answerde for finall
The eschaunge of prisoners, and al this nede
Hem liketh wel, and forth in thei procede

This Troilus was present in the place whan alked was for Antenor Creseide
For whiche ful sone chaungen gan his face
As he that with tho wordes wel nigh deide
But natheless he no worde to it seide
Lest men should his affection espie
With mannes hert, he gan his sorowes drie

And ful of anguishe and of grisly drede
Abode, what other lordes would to it sey
And if thei would graunt, as God forbede
The eschaunge of her, the thought he thigs twey
First, how to saue her honor, and what wey
He might best the eschaunce of her withstonde
Ful fast he cast how al this might stonde

Loue him made al prest to done her bide
And rather dien, than she should go
But Reason laid him on that other side
Withouten assent of her, do nat so
Lest for thy werke she would be thy foe
And sain, ȳ through thy medling is ibiowe
Your bother loue, ther it was erst knowe

For whiche he gan deliberen for the beste
And though the lordes would that he went Ye would let hem graunt what hem leste
And tel his lady first what that thei ment
And when that she had said him her entent
Therafter would he worken also blithe
Tho al the world ayen it would strithe

Hector which that wel the Grekes herde
For Antenor, how thei would haue Creseide
Gan it withstonde, and soberly answerde
Sirs, she nis no prisoner (he seide)
I not on you who that this charge leide
But on my parte, ye maie ektlones hemself
We bien here, no women for to sell

The noise of people up sterte them atones
As brimme as blase of strawe iset on fire
For infortune it would for the nones
Thei shoulden her confusion desire
Hector (q thei) what gost may you enspire
This woman thus to childe, and done vs lese
Dan Antenore, a wrong waie now ye chese

That is so wise, and eke so bolde baroun
And we haue nede to folke, as men may se
He is one the greatest of this toun
O Hector, lette thy fantasies be O king Priam (q thei) thus segge we
That all our voice is to forgone Creseide
And to deliuer Antenor thei preide

O Juuenal lord, trewe is thy sentence
That litel wenen folke what is to yerne
That thei ne finden in her desire offence
For cloude of errour lette hem discerne
What best is, and lo, here ensample as yerne
These folke desiren now deliueraunce
Of Antenor that brought hem to mischaunce

For he was after traitour to the toun
Of Troy alas, thei quitte him out to rathe
O nice world, lo thy discrecion
Creseide, which that neuer did hem scathe
Shal nowe no lenger in her blisse bathe
But Antenor, he shal come home to toune
And she shal out, thus said herre and houne

For which delibered was by parliment
For Antenor to yelden out Creseide
And it pronounced by the president
Though that Hector nay ful ofte praide
And finally, what wight that it withstande
It was for naught, it must ben, and so
For substaunce of the parliment it would

Depart

Departed out of the parliment echone
This Troilus, without wordes mo
Into his chambre spedde him fast alone
But if it were a man of his or two
The whiche he bad out fast for to go
Because he would slepen, as he saide
And hastely vpon his bedde him laide

And as in winter leaues ben biraste
Eche after other til trees be bare
So ỳ there nis but barke and braunche ilafte
Lithe Troilus, biraft of eche wel fare
Ibounden in the blacke barke of care
Difpoled wode out of his witte to breide
So fore him fate the chaunging of Creseide

Herift him vp, and euery dore he shette
And windowe eke, and tho this forowful man
Vpon his beddes side doune him sette
Ful like a deed image, pale and wan
And in his brest the heaped wo began
Out brust, and he to worken in this wise
In his woodnesse, as I shal you deuise

Right as the wilde Bulle beginneth springe
Now here now there, idarted to the harte
And of his death roreth, in complaining
Right so gan he about the chambre sterte
Smiting his brest, aie with his fistes smerte
His heed to the wall, his body to the grounde
Ful ofte he swapte him selue en to consounde

His eyen two for pite of his herte
Out stremeden as swifte as welles two
The highe sobbes of his sorowes smerte
His speche him refte, vnnethes might he sey
O death alas, why nilt thou do me dey?
Icurfed by that day whiche that nature
Shope me to ben a liues creature

But after whan the fury and al the rage
Whiche that his hart twitte, and fast threst
By length of time some what gan alwage
Vpon his bedde he laide him doun to rest
But tho begon his teares more out to brest
That wonder is the body maie fuffise
To halfe this wo, whiche that I you deuise

Than saide he thus: Fortune alas the while
What haue I done? what haue I the agilt?
How mightest thou for routhe me begile?
Is there no grace? and shal I thus be spilt?
Shal thus Creseide away for that thou wilt
Alas: how mightest thou in thine hart finde
To ben to me thus cruel and vnkinde?

Haue I the nat honoured al my liue?
As thou well wotest, aboue the goddes all
Why wilt thou me fro ioie thus depriue
O Troilus, what may men now the cal
But wretche of wretches, out of honour fal
Into misery, in whiche I wol bewaile
Creseide alas, til that the breth me faile

Alas Fortune, if that my life in ioie
Displeased had vnto thy foule enuie
Why ne haddest thou my father king of Troy
Biraste the life, or done my brethren die
Or slaine my selfe, ỳ thus complaine I crie
I combre world, that maie of nothing serue
But euer die, and neuer fully sterue

If that Creseide alone were me lafte
Naught raught I whider ỳ woldest me stere
And ber alas, than hast thou me biraste
But euermore, lo this is thy manere
To reue a wight that moste is to him dere
To preue in that thy gierfull violence
Thus am I lost, there helpeth no defence

O very lorde, O loue, O God alas
That knowest best min bert, and al my thought
What shal my forowfull life done in this caas
If I forgo that I so dere haue bought Sens ye Creseide and me haue fully brought Into your grace, and both our hertes sealed
How maie ye suffer alas it be repealed

What I may done I shal, while I may dure
On liue, in turment and in cruell paine
This infortune, or this disaventure
Alone as I was borne I wol complaine
Ne neuer wol I sene it shine or raine
But ende I wol as Edippe in derkenesse
My sorowful life, and dien in distresse

O wery gost, that errest to and fro
Why nilt thou flien out of the wofullest
Body, that euer might on grounde go
O soule, lurking in this wofui neste
Flie forthout mine hart, and let it breste
And folowe alwaie Creseide thy lady dere
Thy right place is now no lenger here

O wofui eien two, sens your disporte
Was al to sene Creseides eien bright
What shal ye done, but for my discomforte
Stoden for naught, a wepen out your light
Sens she is queint, ỳ wont was you to light
I deme from this forth haue I eien two Formed, sens your vertue is awey

O my Creseide, O lady soueraine
Of this wofull soule that thus crieth who shal now yeuen comfort to thy paine
Alas no wight, but whan mine hert dieth
My spirite, whiche that so vnto you hieth
Receiue in gree, for that shall aie you serue
For thy no force is, though the body sterue

O ye louers, that high vpon the whele
Ben sette of Fortune, in good auenture
God lene that ye finden aie loue of stele
And longe mote your life in ioy endure
But when ye comen by my sepulture
Remembreth that your felowe resteth there
For I loued eke, though I vnworthy were

O olde vnholsome and mislyued man
Calcas I meane, alas what eiled the
To ben a grekelens thou art borne Troian
O Calcas, whiche that wolt my bane be
In cursed time was thou borne for me
As would blisful Ioue for his ioye
That I the had where I would in Troie

A thousande sighes hotter than the glede
Out of his brest, eche after other went Medled with plaint newe, his wo to fede
For whiche his wofull teres neuer stente
And shortly so his sorowes him to rente
And wore so mate, that ioy or penaunce
He feleth none, but lieth in a traunce

Pandare, whiche that in the parliment
Had herde what euery Lord and burgeis seid
And how ful graunted was by one assent
For Antenor, to yelden out Creseide
Gan well nigh wode out of his wit to breide
So that for wo he nist what he mente
But in a race to Troilus he wente

I certaine knight, that for the time kepte
The chambre doore, vndid it him anone
And Pandare that ful tenderly wepte
In to the derke chambre as stil as stone Towarde the bedde gan softly to gone
So confuse, that he nist what to say
For very wo, his witte was nigh away

And with ghere and loking al to torne
For sorow of this, and with his armes folden
He stode this wofull Troilus beforne
And on his pitous face he gan beholden
But so ofte gan his hart colden
Seyng his frende in wo, whose heuinesse
His hart slough, as thought him for distresse

This wofull wight, this Troilus that seie
His frende Pandare icomen him to se
Gan as the snow ayenst the sunne melte
For whiche this wofull Pandare, of pite
Gan for to wepe, as tenderly as he
And specheles thus ben these ilke twey
That neither might for sorow o worde sey

But at the last, this wofull Troilus
High deed for smert, gan breken out to rore
And with a sorowful noise he said thus Amonges his sobbes, and his sighes sore
Lo Pandare I am deed, withouten more
Hast thou nat herde at parliment be seide
For Antenor how loste is my Creseide

This Pandare ful deed and pale of hewe
Ful pitously answerde, and saide yes
As wisely were it false as it is trewe
That I haue herde, and wote al how it is O mercy God, who would haue trowed this who would haue wende ỹ in so litell a thrau
Fortune our ioye would haue ouerthrow

For in this world there is no creature
As to my dome, that euer sawe ruine
Straunger thē this, through cas or auisem
But who may al eschue or al deuine
Suche is this world, for thy I thus define
Ne trust no wight to finde in Fortune
Ne propertie, her yeftes ben commune

But tel me this, why thou art now so mat
To sorowen thus, why lisse thou in this wi
Sens thy desire al holly hast thou had
So that by right, it ought inough suffice
But I that neuer felte in my seruice
A frendly chere or loking of an eye
Let me thus wepe and wailen til I dye

And ouer al this, as thou wel wost thy self
This toune is ful of ladies al about
And to my dome, fairer than suche twelue
As euer she was, shall I finden in some rout ye one or twey, withouten any doute
For thy be glade mine owne dere brother
If she be lost, we shal recouer an other

What God forbid alway that eche pleasaū
In o thing were, and in non other wight
If one can singe, another can wel daunce
If this be goodly, she is glad and light
And this is faire, and that can good aright
Eche for his vertue holden is for dere
Bothe heroner and faucon for riuere

In

And eke as wit zanlis, that was full wise
The newe loue out chaseth oft the old
And vpon newe case lieth newe auise
Thinke eke thy self to sauen art thou hold Soche fire by processe, shall of kind cold
For sens it is but casuell pleasaunce
Some case shal put it out of remembraunce.

For also sure as daie cometh after night
The newe loue, labour, or other wo
Or els selde seing of a wight
Doen old affections all ouer go
And for thy part, thou shalt haue one of tho
To abredge with thy bitter paines smarte
Absence of her, shall driue her out of harte.

These wordes saied he for the nones all
To helpe his frende, lest he for sorowe deide
For doubtelesse to doen his wo to fall
Beraught nat what vnthrift that he seide
But Troilus that nigh for sorowe deide
Tolde little hede, of all that euer he ment
One eare it heard, at the other out it went.

But at the last he answerde, and said frend
This lechcraft, or healed thus to be
Were well sitting, if that I were a fend
To traien a wight, that true is vnto me
I praie God let this counsaile neuer ithee
But doe me rather sterue anon right here
Er I thus doen, as thou me wouldest lere.

Se that I serue I wis, what so thou seie
To whom mine harte enhabite is by right
Shall haue me holly hers till that I deie
For Pandarus, sens I haue trouth her hight
I woll nat been vntrue for no wight
But as her man I woll ate liue and sterue
And neuer non other creature serue.

And there thou saiest thou shalt as faire find
As she, let be, make no comparison
To creature ifourmed here by kinde
Of eue Pandare, in conclusion
I woll nat been of thine opinion
Touching all this, for whiche I thee beseche
So holde thy peace, & staest me with thy speche.

Thou biddest me I should loue an other
All freshly newe, and let Creseide go
It lithe nat in my power leue brother
And though I might, yet would I nat doe so
But canst thou plaien raket to and fro Nettle in doche out, now this now that Now foule fall her for thy wo that care.

Thou farest eke by me Pandarus
As he, that whan a wight is wo bigon
He cometh to him a pace, and saith right thus Thinke not on smart, and thou shalt fele none
Thou maiest me first transme wen in a stone
And reue me my passions all
Or thou so lightly doe my wo to fall.

The death maie well out of my brest depart
The life so long maie this sorowe mine
But fro my soule shall Creseides dart
Out neuermore, but doune with Proserpine
Whan I am dedde, I woll won in pine
And there I woll eternally complain
My wo, and how that I winned be we twain

Thou hast here made an argument for sine
How that it should lasse pain be Creseide to forgon, for she was mine
And liued in ease and in felicite
Why gabbest thou, that saidest vnto me
That him is worse that is fro wele ithrowe
Than he had erst none of that wele knowe.

But tel me now, sens ye that thinketh so light
To chaungen so in loue ate to and fro
Why hast thou nat doen busily thy might
To chaungen her, that doeth thee al thy wo?
Why nilt thou let her fro thine harte go?
Why nilt thou loue an other lady I were
That maie thine harte letten in quiete?

If thou hast had in loue ate yet mischaunce
And canst it not out of thine harte driue
I that loued in lust and in pleasaunce
With her, as moche as creature on liue
How should I that forget, and that so blriue
O where hast thou been hid so long in me we Thou canst so well and formelyche argewe.

Naie God wot, naught worth is all thy rede
For whiche, for what that euer maie befall
Withouten wordes mo I woll been dede
O death, that ender art of sorowes all Come now, sens I so oft after thee call
For sely is that death, soth for to sain
That oft icleped, cometh and endeth pain.

Well wote I, while my life was in quiete
Er thou me slue, I would haue feuen hire
But now thy comming is to me so swete
That in this worlde, I nothing so desire
O death, sens with this sorowe I am a fire
Thou either doe me anon in teares drenche
Or with thy cold stroke mine harte quenche.

Sens that thou slaest so sele in sondry wise
Ayenst her will, vnpraied daie and night
Doe me at my request this seruice
Deliuer now the worlde, so doest thou right
Of me that am the wofullest wight
That euer was, for time is that I sterue
Sens in this world of right nauzt do I serue

This Troilus in teares gan distill
As licour out of Allambike full fast
And Pandarus gan hold his tong still
And to the ground his yen doune he cast
But nathelesse, thus thought he at last
What parde, rather than my selowe deie
Yet shall I somwhat more vnto him seie.

And said frēd, sens thou hast soche distresse
And sens thee list mine argumentes blame
Why nilt thy seluen helpe doen redresse
And with thy manhode letten all this game
Go rauishe her, ne canst thou not for shame?
And either let her out of toune fare
Or hold her still, and leaue thy nice face.

Art thou in Troie, and hast non hardiment
To take a wight, whiche that loueth thee
And would her seluen been of thine assent
Now is nat this a nice vanite
Rise vp anon, and let this weping be
And sith thou art a man, for in this hour
I woll been dedde, or she shall been our.

To this answerde him Troilus full soft
And saied, iwis my leue brother dere
All this haue I my self yet thought full oft
And more thing than thou deuisest here
But why this thing is last, ye shalt well here
And whan thou hast me yeuen audience
Thereafter maiest thou tell all thy sentence.

First sin ye wost this toun hath al this werre
For rauishing of women so by might
It should not been suffred me to erre
As ysstont now, ne doen so greate vnright
I should haue also blame of euery wight
My fathers graunt if that I so withstood
Sens she is chaunged for the tounes good.

I haue eke thought, so it were her assent
To aske her of my father of his grace
Than thinke I, this were her accusement
Sens well I wot I maie her nat purchace
For sens my father in so high place
As parliment, hath her eschaunge enseled
He will for me his letter be repealed.

Yet drede I most her harte to perturbe
With violence, if I doe soche a game
For if I would it openly disturbe
It must be disclaundre to her name
And me were leauer die than her diffame
As nolde God, but I should haue
Her honour, leauer than my life to saue.

Thus am I lost, for aught that I can se
For certain is that I am her knight
I must her honour leauer haue than me
In euery case, as louer ought of right
Thus am I with desire and reason twight
Desire for to distourben her me redeth
And reason will not, so mine harte dredeth.

Thus weping, that he could neuer cease
He saied alas, how shall I wretche fare
For well sele I alwaie my loue encrease
And hope is lasse and lasse Pandare
Encreasen eke the causes of my care
So wela waie, why will mine harte brest
For as in loue there is but little rest.

Pandare answerde, frend thou maiest for me
Doen as thee list, but had I it so hote
And thine estate, she should go with me
Tho all this toun cried on this thing by note
I nolde set at all that noise a grote
For whā men haue cried than woll their roun
Eke wonder last but. ix. daies neuer in toun.

Deuine not in reason aie so depe
Ne curtesly, but helpe thy self anon
Bet is that other than thy seluen wepe
And namely sens ye two been all one
Rise vp, for by mine hedde she shall not gone
And rather been in blame a little ifound
Than sterue here as a gnat wouten wound.

Yt is no shame vnto you ne no vice
Her to withholden, that ye loueth moste
Parauenture she might holde thee for nice
To letten her go thus vnto the Grekes hoste
Thinke eke fortune, as well thy seluen woste
Helpeth hardie man vnto his empryse
And weiueth wretches, for her cowardise.

And though thy lady would aiste her grete
Thou shalt thy self thy peace hereafter make
But as to me certain I can not leue
That she would it as now for euill take
Why should than for feare thine harte quake
Thinke how Paris hath, that is thy brother
I loue, and why shal thou not haue an other

And

And Troilus, o thing I dare thee swere
That if Creseide, whiche that is thy lefe
How loueth thee, as well as thou doest here
God helpe me so, she nill not take a grefe
Though thou do bote anon in this mischefe
And if she wilneth fro thee for to passe
Than is she false, so loue her well the lasse.

For thy take hart, & thinke right as a knight
Though loue is broken aldaie euery lawe Nith now somwhat thy corage & thy might Saue mercie on thy self for any awe
Let not this wretched wo thine hart gnawe
But manly set the worlde on fire and seuen
And if thou die a martir go to heauen.

I woll my self been with thee at this dede
Though I and all my kin vpon a stound
Should in a strete, as dogges liggen dede
Though girt with many a bloodie wound
In euery case I woll a frend be found
And if thee liketh here steruen as a wretche
Nun, the deuill spede him that retche.

This Troilus gan with tho wordes quicken
And saied frend, graunt mercie, I assent
But certainly thou maiest nat so me prichen
For pain none ne maie me so tourment
That for no case, it is not mine entent Nhort wordes, though I dien should Forraithen her, but if her self it would.

Why, so meane I (q Pandarus) al this day
But tell me than, hast thou her well assaied
That sorowest thus: & he answerde him naie
Wherof art thou (q Pandare) than dismaied
That noste not that she wol been euil apaied
To raithen her, sens thou hast not ben there
But if that Ioue telde it in thine eare.

For thy rise vp as naught ne were anon
And washe thy face, & to the king thou wend
Or he maie wonderen whider thou art gon
Thou must wt wisedome, him and other blend
And vpon case he maie after thee send Or thou be ware, and shortly brother dere
Be glad, and let me werke in this mattere.

For I shall shape it so, that tiderly
Thou shalt this nizt somtime i some manere
Come speaken with thy Ladie priuely
And by her wordes eke, as by her chere
Thou shalt full sone aperceiue and well here
Of her entent, and in this case the best
And fare now well, for in this poinct I rest.

The swift fame, whiche that tels thinges
Equall reporteth like the thinges true
Was throughout Troie flied, wt prest winges
Fro man to man, and made his tale all newe
How Calcas doughter with her bright hewe
At Parliment without wordes more
Ygraunted was, in chaunge of Antenore.

The whiche tale anonright as Creseide
Had heard, the whiche y of her father rought
(As in this case) right nazt, ne whe he deide
Full bulily to Iupiter besought
Yeue him mischaunce, y this treatis brought But shortly lest these tales sothe were
She durst at no wight aske it for fere.

As she that had her hart and all her minde
On Troilus iset so wonder fast
That all this world ne mizt her loue vnbind
Ne Troilus out of her harte cast
Sthe would ben his, while y her life maie last
And she thus brenneth bothe in loue & drede
So that she nist what was best to rede.

But as men seen in toune, and all about
That women vsen her frendes to visite
So to Creseide of women came a rout
For pitous tote, and wenden her delite
And with her tales dere inough a mite
These women, whiche that in the cite dwell
Thei set hem doune, and saied as I shall tell.

(q first that one) I am glad truely
Bicause of you, that shall your father se
An other saied, iwis so am not I
For all to little hath she with vs be (q tho the thirde) I hope iwis that she Shall dringen vs the peacoon euery side
That whan she goth, almighty God her gide.

Tho wordes and tho womannisshe thinges
She herd hem rizt as though she thens were For God it wote, her harte on other thing is Nithough the body sat emong hem there
Her aduertence is al waie eis where
For Troilus full fast her soule sought
Withouten worde, on him alwaie she thought

These women that thus wenden her to plese
Nbout nought gon all her tales spende
Sothe vanite ne can doen her none ease
As she that all this meane while wende
Of other passion than thei wende
So that she felt almoste her harte die
For wo, and were of that companie.

For

For whiche might she no lenger restrain
Her teares, thei gan so vp to well
That gaue signes of her bitter pain
In whiche her spirite was, and mist dwell
Remembring her frō heauen vnto which hel
She fallen was, sens she forgo the sight
Of Troilus, and sorowfully she sight.

And thilke fooles, sitting her about
Wende that she wept and sighed sore
Bicause that she should out of the rout
Departen, and neuer plaie with hem more
And thei that had knowen her of yore
Se her so wepe, and thought it was kindnesse
And eche of hem wept eke for her distresse.

And busilie thei gonnen her to comforten
One thig God wot, on which she little thought
And with her tales wenden her disporten
And to be glad thei otte her besought
But sothe an ease therwith thei her wrought
Right as a man is eased for to leie
For ache of hedde, to clawen him on his hele.

But after all this nice vanite
Thei toke her leue, and home thei wenten all
Creseide full of sorowfull pite
Into her chambre vp went out of the hall
And on her bedde she gan for dedde to fall
In purpose neuer thens for to rise
And thus she wrought, as I shall you deuise.

Her ownded heer, that sonnishe was of hewe
She rent, and eke her fingers long and smal
She wrong full oft, and bade god on her rue
And with the death to doe bote on her bale
Her hewe whilom bright, that tho was pale Bare witnesse of her wo, and her constreint
And thus she spake, sobbing in her complaint

Alas (q she) out of this regioun
I wofull wretche and infortuned wight
And borne in cursed constellacioun
Mote go, and thus departen fro my knight
Wo worthe alas, that ilke daies light
On which I sawe him first with yen twain
That cauleth me, and I him all this pain.

Ther with the teares from her yen two Doune fell, as shoure in Aprill swithe
Her white brest she bet, and for the wo
After the death she cried a thousande sithe
Sens she that wont her wo was for to lithe
She mote forgon, for whiche disaventure
She helde her self a forlost creature.

She saied, how shall he doen and I also How should I liue, if that I from him twin O dere harte eke that I loue so
Who shall that sorowe slaen, that ye been in O Calkas father, thine be all this sin
O mother mine, that cleaped wer Argive
Wo worth that daie, þ thou me bare on liue.

To what fine should I liue and sorowē thus How should a fishe withouten water dure
What is Creseide worthe from Troilus
How should a plant or lities creature
Liue withouten his kinde norriture
For whiche full oft, a by worde here I leie
That rootelesse mote grene sone deie.

I shall doen thus, sens neither I word ne dare
Dare I none handle, for the cruelte
That ilke daie that I fro you depart
If sorowe of that nill nat my bane be Than shall no meate ne drinke come in me
Till I my soule out of my brest bedeath
And thus my seluen woll I doen to death.

And Troilus, my clothes euerichone
Shull blacke been, in tokening harte trew
That I am as out of this worlde agone
That wont was you to set in quiete
And of mine order aie, till death me mete
The obseruaunce euer in your absence
Shall sorowe been, complaint, & abstinence.

Mine harte, & eke the wofull ghost therin
Biqueth I with your spirite to complain
Eternally, for ther shall neuer twin
For though in yearth twinned be we twain
Yet in the felde of pite, out of pain
That hight Elisos, shall been ifere
As Orpheus and Erudice his fere.

Thus harte mine, for Interrogatorie
I sone shall be chaunged, as I wene
But how shull ye doen in this sorowful cas
How shall your tender harte this susteine
But harte mine, for yet this sorowe and mine
And me also, for sothly for to seie
So ye well fare, I recche not to deie.

How might it euer redde been or iscrie
The plaint that she made in her distresse
I not, but as for me my litle conning
If I discriuen would her heuinesse
It should make her sorowe lesse or lesse
Than that it was, and chil dish, ly dere
Her hie complaint, and ck, &c. I it pace.

Pandar

Pandare, whiche that kept from Troilus was vnto Creseide, as ye haue heard deuise that for the best it was accorded thus And he full glad to doen him that seruice vnto Creseide in a full secrete wise
There as she late, in tourment and in rage came her to tell all holly his message.

And fonde that she her seluen gan to trete full pitously, for with her salt teares her brest and face ibathed was full wete her mightie tresses of her sonnishe heares vnbroiden, hangen all about her eares whiche gaue him very signe of mattire of death, whiche that her harte gan desire.

When she him sawe, she gan for sorowe anon Pertearg face, atwirt her armes hide for whiche this Pandare is so wo bigon
That in the hous he might vnneth abide
And she that felt sorowe on euery side for if Creseide had erst complained sore
Tho gan she plain a thousande times more.

And in her ayre plaint, thus she seide
Pandare, first of ioies mo than two
Was cause, causing vnto me Creseide
That now transmued been in cruell wo
Whether shall I take to you welcome or no
That alderfirst me brought vnto seruise
Alone alas, that endeth in sorowe wise.

Endeth than loue in wo? Ye or men lieth
In all worldly blisse, as thinketh me
Therende of blisse aie sorowe it occupieth
And who troweth not that it so be Let him vpon me wofull wretche se
That my self hate, and aie my birthe curse felling alwaie, fro wiche I go to worse.

Who so me seeth, he seeth sorowe al atonis
Pain, tourment, plaint, wo, and distresse
Out of my wofull bodie harme there none is
Is langour, anguishe, cruell bitternesse
Inuie, smarte, drede, furie, and eke sickenesse
I trowe I wis from heauen teares rain for pitie of my ayre and cruell pain.

And thou my suster, full of discomfort
(Pandarus) what thinkest thou doe?
Why ne hast thou to thy seluen some respect
Why while thou thus thy self alas fordoe?
Leaue all this werke, and take now hede to
That I shall sain, and herken of good entent
This message, that by me Troilus you sent.

Tourned her tho Creseide, a wo making
So greate, that it a death was for to se
Alas (quod she) what wordes maie ye bring
What woll my dere harte sain to me
Nouche that I drede neuer more to se
Woll he haue plaint or teares ser I wende
I haue inough, if he thereafter sende.

She was right soche to seen in her visage
As is that wight that men on beare binde
Her face like of Paradis the Image
Was all ichaunged in an other kinde
The plaie, the laughter, men wer wont to find
On her, and eke her ioies euerichone
Been fledde, and thus lieth Creseide alone.

About her yen two, a purple ring
Bitrent, in sothfast tokening of her pain
That to beholde it was a dedly thing
For whiche Pandare might nat refrain
The teares from his yen for to rain
But nathelelle as he best might he seide
From Troilus there wordes to Creseide.

Lo nece, I trowe ye han heard all how
The king with other Lordes for the best
Hath made eschaunge of Antenor and you
That cause is of this sorowe and this vnrest
But how this case doeth Troilus molest
This maie none yearthly mannes tong saie
For very wo, his wit is all awaie.

For whiche we haue so sorowed, he and I
That into little, it had vs bothe slawe
But through my counsaile this daie finally Be somwhat is fro weping withdrawe
And semeth me that he desireth fawe
With you to been all night for to deuise
Remedie of this, if there were any wise.

This short and plain, the effect of my message
As ferforthe as my wit can comprehende
For ye that been of tourment in soche rage
Maie to no long prologue as now entende
And herevpon ye maie anl were him sende
And for the loue of God my nece dere
So leaue this wo or Troilus be here.

Greate is my wo (quod she) and sighed sore
As she that felelth deadly sharpe distresse
But yet to me his sorowe is mokell more
That loue him bet than he himself I gesse
Alas, for me hath he soche heuinesse
Can he for me so pitously complain
I wis this sorowe doubleth all my pain.

Greuous

Greuous to me God wot it is for to twin (q she) but yet it harder is to me
To seen that sorowe which that he is in
For well wot I, it woll my bane be
And die I woll in certain tho (q she)
But bid him cumm, er deth ỳ thus me threteth
Driue out ỳ ghost, which in min hart beteth

These wordes saied, she on her armes two Fill grufle, and gan to wepen pitously
(q Pandarus) alas why doe ye so Sens ye well wote the time is fast by
That he shall come, arise vp hastely
That he you nat biwopen thus ne finde
But ye wol haue him wood out of his minde

For wist he that ye farde in this manere
He would himself flea: and if I wende
To haue this fare, he should not come here
For all the good that Priam maie dispende
For to what fine he would anon pretende
That know we I well, and for thy yet I seie
So leaue this sorowe, or plainly he woll deie

And shapeth you his sorowe for to abredge
And nat encrease, lefe nece swete
Bethe rather to him cause of plat than edge
And with some wisedom, ye his sorowes bete
What helpeth it to wepen full a strete
Or though ye bothe in salt teares dreint
Bet is a time of cure aie than of pleint.

I meane thus, whan I him hither bring Sens ye be wise, and bothe of one assent
So shapeth how to distrourbe your going
Or come ayen sone after ye be went Women been wise, in short auisement
And let seen how your wit shall auaile
And what that I maie help, it shall nat faile

Go (q Creseide) and uncle truely
I shall doen all my might me to restrain
From weping in his sight, and busily
Him for to glad, I shall doen all my pain
And in my harte seken euery bain
If to this sore there maie been founden salue
It shall nat lache certain on mine halfe.

Goth Pandarus, and Troilus he sought
Till in a temple he found him all alone
As he that of his life no lenger rought
But to the pitous Goddes euerichone
Full tenderly he praied, and made his mone
To doen him sone out of this worlde to pace
For wel he thought there was non other grace

And shortly all the sothe for to seie
He was so fallen in dispaire that daie
That vtterly he shope him for to deie
For right thus was his argument alwaie
He saied he nas but lorne wela waie
For all that cometh, cometh by necessite
Thus to been lorne it is my destine.

For certainly this wote I well he saide
That forelight of diuine purueiaunce
Had seen alwaie me to forgon Creseide
Sens God seeth euery thing out of doutaūce
And hem disposeth through his ordinaunce
In his merites sothly for to be
As thei shull comen by predestine.

But natheless alas, whom shall I leue
For there been greate clerkes many one
That destinie, through argumentes preue
And some sain that nedely there is none
But that free choice is yeuen vs euerichone
O wela waie, so sligh arne clerkes old
That I nat whose opinion I maie hold.

For some men sain, that God seeth al biforne
Ne God maie nat deceiued been parde
Thā mote it fallen, though mē had it sworne
That purueiaunce hath seen beforne to be Wherfore I saie, that from eterne if he Hath will beforn our thought ete as our dede
We haue no free choice, as these clerkes rede.

For other thought, nor other deede allo
Might neuer been, but soche as purueiaunce
Which maie nat been disceiued neuer mo
Hath seled biforne, withouten ignorāunce
For if there might been a variaunce
To writhen out fro Goddes purueiyng
There were no prescience of thing comming.

But it were rather an opinion
Uncertain, and no stedfast foreseing
And certes that were an abusion
That God should haue no perfite clere weting
More than we men, ỳ haue doutous wening
But soche an errour vpon God to gesse
Were false and foule, and wicked cursednesse.

Ete this is an opinion of some
That haue her top ful high and smothe shore
Thei sain right thus, ỳ thing is nat to come
For that the prescience hath seen before
That it shal come, but thei sain that therfore
That it shall come, therfore the purueiaunce
Wote it beforne withouten ignorāunce.

And

And in this maner this necessite
Sitourneth in his parte contrary againe
For nedefully behoueth it nat to be
That thilke thinges fallen in certaine
That dē purueyed, but nedefully as thei saine
Behoueth it that thinges which that fall
That thei in certaine ben puruayed all

I meane as though I laboured me in this
To enquire which thig cause of which thig be Is whether that the prescience of God is
The certaine cause of the necessite
Of thinges that to comen be parde
Or if necessite of thing coming
Be cause certaine of the purueiyng

But nowe ne enforce I me not in shewing
How ỳ order of the causes stāt, but wel wot I
That it behoueth that the befalling
Of thinges wiste before certainly
Be necessarie, al seme it not therby
That prescience put falling necessayre
To thing to come, al fal it foule or faire

For if there sit a man ponde on a see
That by necessite behoueth it
That certes thine opinion sothe be
That wenest or coniectest that he sit
And further ouer, now ayen warde yet
Ful right so is it on the parte contrarie
Is thus, now herken for I wol nat tarie

I say that if the opinion of the
Be sothe for that he sit, than say I this
That he mote sitten by necessite
And thus necessite in either is
For in him nede of sitting is i wis
And in the nede of sothe, and thus forsothe
There mote necessite ben in you bothe

But thou maist same the mā sit nat therfore
That thine opinion of his sitting soth is
But rather for the man sate there before
Therfore is thine opinion sothe i wis
And I say, though the cause of sothe of this Cometh of his sitting, yet necessite
Is enterchaunged, bothe in him and in the

Thus in the same wise out of doutaunce
I maie wel maken, as it semeth me
By reasoning of goddes purueyaunce
And of the thinges that comen be
By whiche reason men maie wel ise
That thilke thinges that in erthe fall
That by necessite thei comen all

For all though that forthing shall come i wis
Therfore is it purueyed certainly Nat that it cometh for it purueyed is Yet nathelesse behoueth it nedefully
That thing to come be purueyed trewly
Or els thinges that purueyed be
That thei betiden by necessite

And this sufficeth right inough certaine
For to distroie our free choise euerydell
But nowe is this abusion to saine
That falling of the thinges temporell
Is cause of the goddes prescience eternell
Now trewly that is a false sentence
That thing to come shuld cause his prescience

What might I wene a I had suche a thought
But that God purueieth thing ỳ is to come
For that it is to come, and els nought
So might I wene that thinges all and some
That whilom ben bifall and ouercome
Ben cause of thilke soueraine purueyaunce
That forwote al, withouten ignoraunce

And ouer al this, yet say I more therto
That right as whan I wote there is a thing
I wis that thing mote nedefully be so Eke right so, whan I wote a thing coming
So mote it come, and thus thei befalling
Of thinges that ben wiste before the tide
Thei mowe not ben eschewed on no side

Than said he thus, almighty Ioue in trone
That wottest of all this thing ỳ sothfastnesse
Rewe on my sorowe, and do me dien sone
Or bring Creseide and me fro this distresse
And while he was in all this heuinesse
Disputing with him selfe in this matere
Came Pandare in, and saide as ye may here

O mighty God (q Pandarus) in trone
Eigh, who saw euer a wise man fare so?
Why Troilus, what thinkest thou to done?
Hast thou such lust to ben thin owne foe?
What parde, yet is nat Creseide ago
Why list thee so thy selfe fordon for drede
That in thine heed, thine eyen semen dede.

Hast thou nat liued many a yere before
Withouten her: and farde ful wel at ease
Art thou for her and for none other borne
Hath kinde the wrought al only her to please Let be and thinke right thus in thy disease
That in ỳ dice, right as therefallen chaunces
Right so in loue there come & gon plesaunces

And yet this is a wonder most of al
Why ꝑ thus sorowest seth thou wost nat yet
Touching her goyng, how that it shal fal
Ne if she can her selfe disdourben it
Thou hast nat yet assayed al her wit
I man make al betime his nedes bede
Whan it shal ol, and sorowen at the nede

For thy take hede of al that I shal say
I haue with her ispoke and longe be
So as accorded was betwixe vs twey
And euermore me thinketh thus, that she Hath somwhat in her hartes priuite
Wher with she can, if I shal aright rede
Disturbe al this, of whyche thou art in drede

For which my counsel is, whan it is night
Thou to her go, and make of this an ende
And blisful Juno, through her great might Shal as (I hope) her grace vnto vs sende
Myne hart seith certaine she shal nat wende
And for thy pur, thine hert a while in rest
And holde thy purpose, for it is the best

This Troilus answerde, and sighed sore
Thou saist right wel, and I wil do right so
And what him list, he said vnto him more
And whan that it was time for to go
Ful prively him selfe withouten mo
Into her came, as he was wont to done
And how thei wrought, I shal you tel sone

Soth is, that when thei gonne first to mete
So gan the paine her hertes for to twille
That neither of hem other might grete
But hem in armes toke, and after kisse
The lasse wofull of hem bothe misse
Wher ꝑ he was, ne might o worde out bring
As I saide erst, for wo and for sobbing

The wofull teres that thei leten fal
As bitter weren out of teres kinde
For paine, as is ligne aloes, or gal
So bitter teres wept nat as I finde
The wofull Mirra, through the barke rinde
That in this world ther nis so herde an hart
That nold haue rewed on her paines smart

But whan her wofull wery gostes twaine
Returned ben, there as hem ought to dwell
And that somwhat to weken gan the paine
By length of plainte, and ebben gan the wel
Of her teres, and the hart vnwel
Ꝑ broken voice, all horse for shright Creseide
To Troilus these like wordes seide

O Joue I die, and mercy the beseche
Helpe Troilus: and therwithal her face
Upon his brest she said, and lost speche
Her wofull spirite from his proper place
Right with the worde, a way in point to pace
And thus she lith, with hewes pale and grene
That whilom fresh and fairest was to sene

This Troilus that on her gan beholde
Cleping her name, and she lay as for dede
Withouten answere, & felte her limmes colde
Her eien throwen vpwarde to her heed
This sorouful man, can now non other rede
But oft time her colde mouthe he kisse
Where him was wo, God and himself it wisse

He riseth him vp, and long straite he her leide
For signe of life, for aught he can or may
Can he none finde, in nothing of Creseide
For whiche his longe ful oft is welaway
But whan he sawe that speche lesse she lay
With sorouful voice, and hart of blisse al dern
He said, how she was fro this world ifarn

So after that he long had her complaine
His hondes wronge, and said that was tolye
And with his teeres salt her brest bestraine
He gan tho teeres wipen of full drey
And pitously gan for the soule prey
And said, lorde that set art in thy trone
Rewe eke on me, for I shal folow her sone

She colde was, and without sentement
For aught he wote, for brethe felte he none
And this was him a prignant argument
That she was forth out of this worlde agone
And when he saw there was non other wone
He gan her limmes dresse, in suche manere
As men don hem that shall ben laide on bere

And after this, with sterne and cruel hart
His swerde anon out of his sheth he twight
Him selfe to sleen, how sore that him smart
So that his soule, her soule folowen might
There as the dome of Minos would it dight Sith loue and cruel fortune it ne would
That in this world he lenger liuen should

Than said he thus, fulfilde of high disdaine
O cruel Joue, and thou fortune aduerse
This al and some, that falsely haue ye slaine
Creseide, and sith ye may do me no werse
Fie on your might and werkes so diuerse
Thus cowardely ye shul me neuer winne
There shal no deth me fro my lady twinne for this world, sith ye haue slain her thus Nol let, and folowe her spirit lowe or hie

Shal neuer louer saine that Troilus
Dare nat for feare with his lady die
For certaine I wol beare her companie
But liche ye wol nat suffre vs liuen here
Yet suffreth that our soules ben ifere

And thou Cite, in whiche I liue in wo
And thou Priam, and brethren al ifere
And thou my mother, farwel for I go
And Ittropose make redy thou my bere
And thou Creseide, o swete hart dere
Receiue now my spirite, would he ley
With swerde at hart, al redy for to dey

But as God would of swough she abraide
And gan to sighe, and Troilus she cride
And he answerde, lady mine Creseide
Line ye yet? and let his swerde doun glide
Ye hart mine, that thanked be Cupide
(q he) and ther with al she sore sight
And he began to glade her as he might

Coke her in armes two and kisse her ofte
And her to glad, he did al his entent
For whiche her gost, that flikered aie a lofte
Into her wofull hart aien it went
But at the laste, as that her eye glent
Aside, anon she gan his swerde aspie
Is it lay bare, and gan for feare crie

And asked him, why he had it out drawe
And Troilus anon the cause her tolde
And how himselfe ther with he wolde haue slawe
For whiche Creseide vpon him gan beholde
And gan him in her armes fast folde
And saide, o mercy God, lo whiche a dede
Alas, how nighe we weren bothe dede

Than if I nadde spoken, as grace was Ye would haue slain your selfe anon (q she)
Ye doutelesse: and she answerde alas
For by that ilke lorde that made me
I nolde a forlong waie on liue haue be After your deth, to haue ben crouned Quene
Of al the londe the sunne on shineth shene

But with this selue swerde, whiche ye here is My selfe I would haue slaine (q she) tho
But ho, for we haue right inough of this
And let vs rise and straite to bedde go
And there let vs speken of our wo
For by that morter, whiche that I se brenne
Know I ful well, that day is nat ferre henne

Whan thei wer in her bedde in armes folde
Naught was it like tho nightes here beforne
For petously eche other gan beholde
As thei that hadden al her blisse lorne
Bewailing aie the daie that thei were borne
Til at the last, this forowfull wight Creseide
To Troilus these ilke wordes seide

Lo hart mine, wel wote ye this (q she)
That if a wight alwaie his wo complaine
And seketh nat how holpen for to be
It nis but folie, and encreace of paine
And sens that here assembled be we twaine
To finde bote of wo that we ben in
It were time al soone to begin

I am a woman, as ful wel ye wotte
And as I am auised sodainly
So wol I tel you, while it is hotte
Me thinketh thus, that neither ye nor I
Ought halfe this wo to maken sinfully
For there is art inough for to redresse
That yet is misse, and sleen this heuinesse

Soth is, the wo the whiche we ben inne
For aught I wote, for nothing els is
But for the cause that we should twinne
Considred al, there nis no more amis
And what is than a remedy vnto this?
But that we shape vs sone for to mete
This al and some, my dere hart swete

Now that I shal wel bringen it aboute
To comen ayen, sone after that I go
Therof am I no maner thing in doute
For dredelesse, within a weke or two
I shal ben here, and that it may be so
By al right, and in wordes fewe
I shal you wel an heape of waies shewe

For whiche I woll nat maken longe sermon
For time ilofte may nat recouered be
But I wol go to my conclusion
And to the beste, in aught that I can se
And for the loue of god forgeue it me
If I speke aught aienst your hertes reste
For trewly I speke it for the beste

Making alway a protestacion
That nowe these wordes which I shal say
Nis but to shewe you my mocion
To find vnto our helpe the beste way
And take it none otherwise I pray
For in effecte, what so ye me commaunde
That wol I done, for that is no demaunde

Now herkeneth this, ye haue well vnderstōd
Wy going graunted is by parliment
So ferforth that it may not ben withstond
For al this world, as by my iugement
And sithe there helpeth none auisement
To letten it, lette it passe out of minde
And let vs shape a better waie to finde

The sothe is, the r winning of vs twaine
Wol vs displese, and cruelly anoie
But him behoueth somtime haue a paine
That serueth loue, if that he wol haue ioie
And sith I shal no farther out of Troie
Than I may ride aien on halfe a morowe
It ought lasse cauſen vs for to sorowe

So as I shal nat so den did in mewe
That day by day, min owen herte dere
Sens wel ye wote that it is nowe a trewe ye shal ful wel al mine estate here
And er that truce is done, I shal ben here
Than haue ye bothe Antenor i wonne
And me also, bethe glad now if ye conne

And thinke right thus, Creseide is now agon
But what, she shal come hastely ayen
And whan alas: by God, so right anon
Er daies ten, this dare I safely saine
And than at erste, shal we be so saine
So as we shall togithers euer dwell
That al this worlde ne might our blisse tell

I se that oft time, there as we ben nowe
That for the beſt, our counsaile for to hide
Ye speke nat with me, nor I with you
In fourtenight, ne se you go ne ride
May ye nat ten daies than abide
For mine honour, in suche auenture
I wis ye mowe or els lite endure:

Ye knowe eke howe that all my kin is here
But if that onely it my father be
And eke mine other thinges al ifere
And namely my dere herte ye
Whom that I nolde leauen for to se
For al this worlde, as wide as it hath space
Or els se I neuer Joues face

Why trowe ye my father in this wise
Coueiteth so to se me, but for drede
Leste in this toune that folkes me dispise
Bicause of him, for his vnhappy dede
What wote my father what life that I lede
For if he wist in Troie how wel I fare
His neded for my wending nat to care

Ye, that euery day eke more and more Men treate of peace, and it supposed is That men the quene Heleine shal restore
And Grekes vs restore that is mis
Though there nere comfort none but this That men purposen peate on euery side ye may the better at ease of harte abide

For if that it be peace, mine hart dere
The nature of the peace mote nedes driue
That men must entrecomune ifere
And to and fro eke ride and gone as blithe
Al day as thicke as Been flien from an hiue
And euery wight haue liberty to bleue
Where as him list, the bet wit houten leue

And though so de ỹ peace ther maie den none yet hither, though ther neuer peace ne were
I must come, for whider should I gone
Or how mischaunce should I dwel there
Among tho men of armes euer in fere
For whiche, as wisely God my soule rede
I can nat sene wher of ye should drede

Haue here another way, if it so be
That al this thing ne may you not suffice
My father as ye knowen wel parde
Is olde, and eke ful of couetise
And I right nowe haue founden al the gise
Withouten nette, wherwith I shal him hent
And herkeneth now, if that ye wol assent

Lo Troilus, men saine that full herde it is The wolfe ful, and the wedder hole to haue
This is to saine, that men full oft i wis
Mote spenden parte, the remnant for to saue
For aie with Golde, men maie the hart graue
Of him that set is vpon couetise
And how I meane, I shal it you deuise

The mouable, whiche ỹ I haue in this toun
Vnto my father shal I take, and saie
That right for trust, and for saluacioun
It sent is, from a frende of his or t waie
The which frendes feruently him praie
To sende after more, and that in hie
While that this toun stant thus in ieopardie

And that shalbe of golde an huge quantite
Thus shal I saine, but lest folke it aspide
This maie be sent by no wighe but by me
I shal eke shewen him, if peace betide
What frendes that I haue on euery side
Towarde the courte, to don the wrath pace
Of Priamus, and do him stonde in grace

So

So what for o thing and for other swete
I shal him so enchaunten with my sawes
That right in heuen his soule is, shal he mete
For al Ypollo, or his clerkes lawes
Or calculing, auaileth nat thre hawes
Desire of Golde shal so his soule blende
That as me liste, I shall wel make an ende

And if he would aught by his sort it preue
Ye that I lie, in certaine I shal fonde
To furdren him, and pluche by the sleue
Making his sorte, and bearen him on honde
He hath nat wel the goddes vnderstonde
The goddes speke in amphibologies
And for o sothe, thei telien twenty lies

The drede fonde first goddes, I suppose
Thus shall I saine, & that his cowarde harte
Bade him amis the goddes text to glose
Whan he for ferde out of Delphos sterte
And but I make him sone to conuerte
And done my rede, within a day or twey
I wol to you oblige me to dey

And trewly, as written wel I finde
That al this thing was said of good entent
And that her hart trewe was and kinde
Towardes him, and spake right as she ment
And that she starke for wo nigh whē she went
And was in purpose euer to be trewe
Thus writen thei, that of her werkes knewe

This Troilus, with hart and eeres spradde
Herde al this thing deuised to and fro
And verily it semed that he had
The selue witte, but yet to let her go
His hart misyaue him euermo
But finally he gan his hart wrest
To trusten her, and take it for the best

For whiche the great fury of his penaunce
Was queint w̄ hope, & therwith hē bitwene
Began for ioy the amorous daunce
And as the birdes, when the sunne shene
Deliten in her songe, in leues grene
Right so the wordes that thei spake ifere
Deliten hem, and made her hartes clere

But natheles, the wending of Creseide
For al this world may nat out of his minde
For whiche ful oft he petously her preide
That of her heste he might her trewe finde
And saide her, certes if ye be kinde
And but ye come at date set in Troie
Sir dal I neuer haue heale, honor, ne ioie

For also sothe as sunne vprist to morow
And God so wisely thou me wofull wretche
To rest bring, out of this cruel sorow
I wol my selue slee, if that ye dretche
But of my death though litel be to retche
Yet er that ye me causen so to smarte
Dwel rather here my owne swete harte

For trewly mine owne lady dere
The sleightes yet, that I haue herd you lere
Ful shapely ben to fallen al ifere
For thus men saith, that one thinketh the bere
But al another thinketh the ledere
Your sire is wise, and said is out of drede
Men may the wise out renne, & nat out rede

It is full harde to haiten vnespied
Before a crepil, for he can the crafte
Your father is in sleight as Argus eied
For al be it that his mouable is him biraft
His olde sleight is yet so with him laft
Ye shal nat blende him for your womanheds
Ne faine aright, and that is al my drede

I not if peace shal euermo betide
But peace or no, for ernest ne for game
I wote sith Calcas on the Grekes side
Hath ones ben, and lost so foule his name
He dare no more come here ayen for shame
For whiche that we, for ought I can espy
To trusten on, nis but a fantasie

Ye shal eke seen your father shall you glose
To ben a wife, and as he can wel preche
He shal some greke so preise and wel alose
That rauishen he shal you with his speche
Or do you done by force, as ye shal reche
And Troilus on whom ye nil haue routh
Shal cause elles so sterue in his trouth

And ouer al this your father shal dispise
Us al, and saine this cite is but lorne
And that thassege neuer shal arise
For why the Grekes haueit al sworne
Til we ben slaine, and doun our walles borne
And thus he shal you with his wordes lere
That ate drede I, that ye wol bleuen there

Ye shall eke sene so many a lusty knight
Among the Grekes ful of worthinesse
And eche of hem, with harte, wit, and might
To pleasen you done al his busines
That ye shull dullen of the rudenesse
Of sely Troians, but if routhe
Remorde you, or vertue of your trouthe

And this to me so greuouse is to thinke
That fro my brest it wol my soule rende
Ne dredelesse, in me there may nat sinke
O good opinion, if that ye wende
For why, your fathers sleight wol vs shende
And if ye gone, as I haue tolde you yore
So thinke I nam but deed, withouten more

For which with humble, true & pitous hart
A thousande times mercie I you praie
So reweth on mine aspre paines smart
And doth somwhat, as that I shal you saie
And let vs stealе away betwixt vs twaie
And thinke ȳ soly is, whan a man maie chese
For accident, his substaunce for to lese

I meane thus, that sens we mowe or daie
Well stealе awaie, and ben togither so
What wit were it to putten in assaie
(In case ye shoulden to your father go)
If that ye mighten come ayen or no
Thus meane I, that were a great folie
To put that sikernesse in ieopardie

And vulgarly to speken of substaunce
Of treasour may we bothe with vs lede ynough to liue in honour and pleasaunce
Til vnto time that we shall ben dede
And thus we may eschewen al this drede
For euery other waie ye can recorde
Mine hart i wis maie therwith nat acorde

And hardely ne dredeth no pouerte
For I haue kin and frendes eis where
That though we comen in our bare shерte
Vs should neuer lacke Golde ne geere
But ben honoured while we dwelten there
And go we anone, for as in mine entent
This is the best, if that ye wol assent

Creseide with a sighe, right in this wise
Answerde, i wis my dere hart trewe
We maie well stealе away, as ye deuise
And finden suche vnthrifty waies newe
But afterwarde ful sore it wol vs rewe
And helpe me God so at my most nede
As cause lesse ye suffren al this drede

For thilke day that I for cherishing
Or drede of father, or for any other wight
Or for estate, delite, or for wedding
Be false to you, my Troilus my knight
Saturnus douzter Juno, through her mizt
As woode as Achamante do me dwell
Eternally with Stix in the pit of Hell

And this, on euery God celestiall
I swere it you, and eke on eche goddesse
On euery nimphe, and deite infernall
On Satiry and faunу more and lesse
That halue goddes ben of wildernesse
And Attropos my threde of life to brest
If I be false, now trowe me if you lest

And thou Sinois, that as an arowe clere
Throuz Troy rēnest, aie doun ward to the se
Be witnesse of this worde, that saide is here
That thilke day that I vnkrew be
To Troilus, mine owne hartes fre
That thou returne backe warde to thy well
And I with body and soule sinke to hell

But that ye speke awaie thus for to go
And letten al your frendes, God forbede
For any woman that ye shoulden so
And namely sens Troy hath now such nede
Of helpe, and eke of o thing taketh hede
If this were wiste, my life laie in balaunce
And your honor, God shilde vs fro mischaūce

And if so be that peace hereafter be take
As al daie happeth after angre game
Why lorde the sorow & wo ye wolden make
That ye ne durst come ayen for shame
And er that ye ieoparden so your name
Beth nat to hasty in this hotte fare
For hasty man ne wanteth neuer care

What trowe ye the people eke al about
Would of it say? it is ful light to arede
Thei wolden say, and swere it out of doute
That loue ne drawe you nat to don this dede
But luste voluptuous, and cowarde drede
Thus were al loste i wis mine hart dere
Your honour, whiche that now shineth clere

And also thinketh on mine honeste
That floureth yet, how foule I should it shende
And with what filth it spotted should be
If in this forme I should with you wende
Ne though I liued vnto the worldes ende
My name should I neuer ayen warde winne
Thus were I lost, and ȳ were routhe sinne

And for thy, flee with reason al this hete
Wen saine the suffraunt ouercometh parde
Eke who so wol haue lese, he lese mote lete
Thus maketh vertue of necessite
By pacience, and thinke that forde is he
Of fortune aie, that naught woll of her recche
And she ne daunteth no wight but a wrecche

And

And trusteth this, that certes harte swete
Of Phebus suster, Lucina the shene
The Lion passe, out of this Arite
I woll been here, withouten any weene
I meane, as helpe me Juno heauens Quene
The tenth daie, but if that death me assaile
I woll you seen, withouten any faile.

And now to this be sothe (q Troilus)
I shall well suffre vnto the tenth daie
Sens that I se that nede it mote been thus
But for the loue of God, if it be maie
So let vs stealen priuely awaie
For euer in one, as for to liue in rest
Mine harte saieth that it woll be the best.

O mercie God, what life is this (q she)
Alas, ye slea me thus for very tene
I se well now that ye mistrusten me
For by your wordes it is well iseen
Now for the loue of Scithia the shene
Mistrust me nat thus causelesse for routh
Sens to be true, I haue you plizt my trouth.

And thinketh well, that somtime it is wit
To spende a time, a time for to win
Ne parde lorne am I nat fro you yet
Though that we been a daie or two a twin Driue out tho fantasies you within
And trusteth me, and leaueth eke your sorow
Or here my trouth, I wol nat liue til morow

For if ye wist how sore it doeth me smarte
Ye would cesse of this, for God thou wost
The pure spirite wepeth in mine harte
To seen you wepen, whiche that I loue most
And that I mote gone vnto the Grekes hoste
Ye, nere it that I wist a remedie
To come ayen, right here I would die.

But certes I am not so nice a wight
That I ne can imaginen a waie
To come ayen that daie that I haue hight
For who maie holde a thing that wol a waie
My father naught, for all his queint plaie
And by my thrift, my wending out of Troie
In other daie shall tourne vs all to toie.

For thy with all mine harte I you beseke
If that you list doen aught for my praiere
And for the loue whiche that I loue you eke
That er that I depart fro you here
That of so good a comfort and a chere
I maie you seen, that ye maie bring at rest
Mine harte, whiche is at poinct to brest.

And ouer all this I praie you (q she) tho
Mine owne hartes sothfast fulfilsaunce
Sith I am thine all hole withouten mo
That while that I am absent, no pleasaunce
Of other, doe me to your remembraunce
For I am euer agast, for why men rede
That loue is thing all full of bulte drede.

For in this worlde there liueth ladie none
If that ye were vntrue, as God defende
That so betraied were, or wo begon
As I, that all trouthe in you entende
And doubtelesse, if that ich other wende
I were but dedde, and er ye cause finde
For Goddes loue, so deth me naught vnkinde

To this answered Troilus, and seide
Now God, to whom there nis no cause iwrie
Be glad, as wis I neuer vnto Creseide
Sithe thilke daie I sawe her first with ye
Was false, ne neuer shall till that I die
Al thogh wordes, well ye maie me leue
I can no more, it shall be founde at preue

Graunt mercy good hart mine (q she)
And blisfull Venus let me neuer sterue
Er I maie stonde of pleasaunce in degre
To quite him well, that so well can deserue
And while that God my wit will me conserue
I shall so doen, so true I haue you found
That aie honour to me ward shall redounde.

For trusteth well, that your estate roiall
Ne veine delite, nor onely worthinesse
Of you in werre or turnaie marciall
Ne pompe, arraie, nobley, or eke richesse
Ne made me to rue on your distresse
But moral vertue, grounded vpon trouth
That was the cause I first had on you routh.

Eke gentle hart, and manhede that ye had
And that ye had (as me thought) in dispite
Euery thing that sowned in to bad
As rudenesse, and peoplishe appetite
And that your reason bridled your delite
This made abouen euery creature
That I was yours, & shall while I maie dure

And this my lengthe of yeres nat for doe
Ne remuable fortune deface
But Jupiter, that of his might maie doe
The sorowfull to be glad, so yeue vs grace
Er nightes tenne, to meten in this place
So that it maie your harte and mine sufflise
And fareth now well, for time is that ye rise

And after that their long ỹplained had
And oft thrist, and fraite in armes folde
The date gan rise, and Troilus him clad
And rufully his Ladie gan beholde
As he that felt deathes cares cold
And to her grace he gan him recommaunde
Where he was wo, this hold I no demaunde

For mannes hedde imaginen ne can Ne entendement consider, ne tongue tell
The cruell paines of this sorowfull man
That passen euery tourment doune in hell
For whan he sawe that she ne might dwell
Whiche that his soule out of his harte rent
Withouten more, out of the chamber he wēt.

Explicit liber quartus.

Incipit liber quintus.

Prochen gan the fatall destine
That Ioues hath in disposicion
And to you angrie Parcas sustren thre
Committeth to doen execucioun
For whiche Creseide must out of the toun
And Troilus shall dwell forth in pine
Till Lachesis his threde no lenger twine.

The golden tressed Phebus high on lofte
Thrise had all with his beames clere
The Snowes molte, and zephirus as oft
Ybrought ayen the tender leaues grene
Sens that the sonne of Eccuba the Quene
Began to loue her first, for whom his sorowe
Was all, that she depart should a morowe.

Full redy was at prime Diomede
Creseide vnto the Grekes hoste to lede
For sorowe of whiche, she felt her harte blede
As she that nist what was best to rede
And truely, as men in bokes rede
Men wist neuer woman haue the care
Ne was so lothe out of a toune to fare.

This Troilus withouten rede or lore
As man that hath his ioies eke forlore
Was waiting on his ladie euermore
As she that was sothfast croppe and more
Of all his lust or ioies here tofore
But Troilus now farwell all thy ioie
For shalt thou neuer seen her eft in Troie.

Soth is, that while he bode in this manere
He gan his wo full manly for to hide
That well vnneth it seen was in his chere
But at the yate there she should out ride
With certain folke he houed her to abide
So wo bigon, all would he not him plain
That on his hors vnneth he sate for pain.

For ire he quoke, so gan his harte gnawe
Whan Diomede on hors gan him digh
And saied vnto himself this ilke sawe
Alas (q he) thus foule a wretchednesse
Why suffre I it? why nill I it redresse?
Were it nat bet at ones for to die
Than euermore in langour thus to crie?

Why nill I make at ones riche and poore
To haue inough to doen er that she go?
Why nill I bring all Troie vpon a roore?
Why nill I slaen this Diomede also?
Why nill I rather with a man or two Steale her awaie? why woll I this endure?
Why nill I helpen to mine owne cure?

But why he nolde doen so fell a deede
That shall I sain, and why him list it spare
He had in harte alwaie a maner drede
Lest that Creseide, in rumour of this fare
Should haue ben slain, so this was al his care
And elscertain, as I saied yore
He had it doen, withouten wordes more.

Creseide whan she redy was to ride
Full sorowfully she sighed, and saied alas
But for the she mote, for aught ỹ maie betide
And for the she rideth full sorowfully a pas
There is none other remedy in this cas
What wonder is, though that her sore smart
Whan she forgoeth her owne swete harte.

This Troilus in gise of curtesie
With hauke on hond, and with an huge rout
Of knightes, rode and did her companie
Passing all the valey, ferre without
And ferther would haue ridden out of doubt
Full faine, and wo was him to gon so sone
But tourne he must, and it was eke to doen.

And right with that was Antenor icome
Out of the Grekes hoste, and euery wight
Was of him glad, and saied he was welcome
And Troilus, all nere his harte light
He pained him, with all his full might Him to with holde of weping at least
And Antenor he kist, and made feast.

And

And ther withall he muſt his leaue take
And caſt his ye vpon her pitouſly
And nere he rode, his cauſe for to make
To take her by the honde all ſoberlie
And Lorde ſo ſhe gan wepen tenderlie
And he full ſoft and ſlighly gan her ſeie
Now holde your daie, and doe me not to deie.

With that his courſer tourned he about
With face pale, and vnto Diomede
No worde he ſpake, ne none of all his rout
Of whiche the ſonne of Tideus toke hede
Ishe that kouthe more than the crede
In ſoche a craft, and by the rain her hent
And Troilus to Troie, homwardes went.

This Diomede, that lad her by the bridell
Whan that he ſawe the folke of Troie awaie
Thought, all my labor ſhall not been on idell
If that I maie, for ſom what ſhall I ſaie
For at the worſt, it ſhort maie our waie
I haue heard ſaie eke, times twiſe twelue
He is a foole that woll forfete him ſelue.

But natheleſſe, this thought he well inough
That certainly I am about naught
If that I ſpeake of loue, or make it to tought
For doubteleſſe, if ſhe haue in her thought
Som that I geſſe, he maie not been ibrought
So lone awaie, but I ſhall finde a meane
That ſhe nat yet were ſhall what I meane.

This Diomede, as he that could his good
Whā this was doen, gā fallen forth in ſpeche
Of this and that, and aſke why ſhe ſtood
In ſoche diſeaſe, and gan her eke beſeche
That if that he encreaſen might or eche
With any thing her eaſe, that ſhe ſhould Commaunde it him, & ſaid he doen it would.

For truely he ſwore her as a knight
That ther nas thig, ẅ which he might her plefe
That he nolde doen his pain, and al his might
To doen it, for to doen her harte an eaſe
And praied her ſhe would her ſorowe apeaſe
And ſaied, iwis we Greſes can haue ioie
To honouren you, as well as folke of Troie.

He ſaid eke thus, I wot you thinketh ſtraūge
No wonder is, for it is to you newe
That acqueintaunce of theſe Troiās to chaūge
For folke of Grece, that ye neuer knewe
But would neuer God, but if as true
I Greke ye ſhould emong vs all finde
As any Troian is, and eke as kinde.

And becauſe I ſwore you right now
To been your frende, and helply to my might
And for that more acqueintaunce eke of you
Haue I had, than an other ſtraunger wight
So fro this forth, I praie you daie and night
Commaundeth me, how ſore that me smerte
To doen, all that maie like vnto your herte.

And that ye me wold, as your brother treate
And taketh not my frendſhip in diſpite
And thouz your ſorowes been for thiges grete
Not I nat why, but out of more reſpite
Mine hart hath for to amende it great delite
And if I maie your harmes nat redreſſe
I am right ſorie for your heauineſſe.

For though ye Troiās, ẅ vs Grekes wroth
Haue many a daie been: alwaie yet parde
O God of loue, in ſothe we ſeruen bothe
And for the loue of God my Ladie free
Whom ſo ye hate, as beth not wroth with me
For truely there can no wight you ſerue
That halfe ſo loth your wrath would deſerue

And nere it that we been ſo nere the tent
Of Calcas, whiche that ſeen vs bothe maie
I would of this you tell all mine entent
But this enſealed till an other daie
Yeue me your honde, I am and ſhall be aie
God help me ſo, while that my life maie dure
Your owne, aboue n euery creature.

Thus ſaid I neuer er now to woman borne
For God mine harte as wiſely glad ſo
I loued neuer woman here beforne
As paramours, ne neuer ſhall no mo
And for the loue of God be not my fo
Ill can I not to you my Ladie dere
Complain a right, for I am yet to lere.

And wōdreth nought mine own lady bright
Though ẏ I ſpeake of loue to you this blue
For I haue heard or this of many a wight
Hath loued thing he neuer ſawe his liue
Eke I am not of power for to ſtriue
Ayenſt the God of Loue, but him obaie
I woll alwaie, and mercie I you praie.

There beth ſo worthy knightes in this place
And ye ſo faire, that euerich of hem all
Woll pain him to ſtonden in your grace
But might me ſo faire a grace fall
That ye me for your ſeruaunt would call
So lowly, ne ſo truely you ſerue
Will none of hem, as I ſhall till I ſterue.

Creſeide

Creseide vnto that purpose lite answerde
As she that was with sorowe oppressed so
That in effect she naught his tales herde
But here and there, now here a worde or two
Her thought her sorowfull harte brast a two
For whan she gan her father ferre espie
Well nigh doune of her hors she gan to sie.

But natheles she thonketh Diomede
Of all his trauaile and his good chere
And that him list his frendship to her bede
And she accepteth it in good manere
And woll doe fain that is him lefe and dere
And trusten him she would, & well she might
As saied she, and from her hors she alight.

Her father hath her in his armes nome
And twetie times he kist his doughter swete
And saied: o dere doughter mine welcome
She said eke, she was fain with him to mete
And stode forth muet, milde, and mansuete
But here I leaue her with her father dwell
And forthe I woll of Troilus you tell.

To Troie is come this wofull Troilus
In sorowe abouen all sorowes smert
With felon loke, and face dispitous
Tho sodainly doune from his hors he sterte
And through his paleis with swolne hert
To chamber he went, of nothing toke he hede
Ne none to him dare speke a worde for drede.

And there his sorowes that he sparred had
He yaue an issue large, and death he cride
And in his throwes, frenetike and mad
He curseth Juno, Apollo, and eke Cupide
He curseth Bachus, Ceres, and Cipride
His birthe, himself, his fate, and eke nature
And saue his Ladie, euery creature.

To bed he goth, and weileth there & turneth
In furie, as doeth he Jrion in hell
And in this wise he nigh till daie sojourneth
But tho began his harte alite vnswell
Through teares, which that gonne vp to wel
And pitiously he cried vpon Creseide
And to him self right thus he spake and seide

Where is mine owne ladie lefe and dere:
Where is her white brest, where is it where:
Where been her armes, and her yen clere
That yesterdaie this time with me were Now maie I wepe alone many a teare
And graspe about I maie, but in this place
Saue a pilowe, I finde naught to embrace.

How shall I doen whá shall she come again:
I not alas, why let I her go:
As would God I had as tho be slain
O harte mine Creseide, O swete so
O Ladie mine, that I loue and no mo
To whom for euer more mine harte I dowe
So how I die, ye nill me not rescowe.

Who seeth you now, my right lode sterre:
Who sitteth right now in your presence:
Who can comforten now your hartes werre
Now I am gon, whom yeue ye audience:
Who speaketh for me rizt now in your absence
Alas no wight, and that is all my care
For well wote I, as euill as I ye fare.

How should I thus ten daies full endure
Whan I the first night haue all this tene
How shall she eke sorowfull creature
For tendernesse, how shall she this sustene
Soche wo for me, o pitous, pale, and grene
Shall been your freshe womanly face
For langour er ye tourne vnto this place.

And whan he till in any slombringes
Anon begin he should for to grone
And dreamen of the dreadfullest thinges
That might been, as mete he were alone
In place horrible, making aie his mone
Or meten that he was emonges all
His enemies, and in her hondes fall.

And therewithall his bodie should starte
And with the starte all sodainly awake
And soche a tremour fele about his harte
That of the feare his bodie should quake
And therwithall he should a noise make
And seme as though he should fall depe
From high alofte, and than he would wepe.

And rewen on himself so pitously
That wonder was to here his fantasie
In other time he should mightely
Comfort himself, and sain it was folie
So causelesse, soche drede for to drie
And eft begin his aspre sorowes newe
That euery man might on his paines rewe.

Who could tell all, or fully discriue
His wo, his plaint, his langour, and his pine
Nat all the men that han or been on liue
Thou reader maiest thy self full well deuine
That soche a wo my wit can not define
On idell for to write it should I swinke
Whan that my wit is werie it to thinke.

Ou

On heauen yet the sterres weren seen
Although full pale yworen was the Mone
And whiten gan the orisont sherne
Al eastward, as it is wont to dorne
And Phebus with his rosie carte sone
Gan after that to dresse him vp to fare
Whan Troilus hath sent after Pandare.

This Pandare, that of all the daie before
He might him comen this Troilus to se
Although he on his bedde it had sworne
For with the king Priam al daie was he
So that it laie nat in his liberte
To where to gon, but on the morowe he wēt
To Troilus, whan that he for him sent.

For in his harte he could well deuine
That Troilus all night for sorowe woke
And that he would tell him of his pine
This knewe he well inough without boke
For which to chāber ful right the way he toke
And Troilus ther soberly he grette
And on the bedde full sone he gan him sette.

My Pandarus (q Troilus) the sorowe
Whiche that I drie, I maie not long endure
I trowe I shall not liuen till to morowe
For whiche I would alwaies on auenture
Do the deuisen of my sepoulture
The sorme, and of my mouable thou dispone
Right as thee semeth best is for to doen.

But of the fire and flambe funerall
In whiche my body brennen shall to glede
And of the feast and plaies palestrall
At my vigile, I praie thee take good hede
That that be well, and offer Mars my stede
My sworde, mine helme, a leue brother dere
My shelde to Pallas yeue, that shineth clere.

The poudre, in which min hart ibrēd shal turn
That praie I thee thou take, and it conserue
In a vessell that men clepeth an vrne
Of golde, and to my lady that I serue
For loue of whom thus pitously I sterue
So yeue it her, and doe me this pleasaunce
To praien her to kepe it for a remembraunce

For well I fele by my maladie
And by my dreames, now and yore ago
I certainly, that I mote nedes die
The oule che, whiche that night Ascaphilo
Hath after me thright all these nightes two
And God Mercurie, now of me woful wretch
The soule guide, and whan thee list it fetche.

Pandare answerde, and saied Troilus
My dere frende, as I haue told thee yore
That it is folie for to sorowen thus
And causeleste, for whiche I can no more
But who so will not trowen rede ne lore
I can not seen in him no remedie
But let him worthen with his fantasie.

But Troilus I praie thee tell me now
If that thou trowe er this that any wight
Hath loued paramours as well as thou
Ye God wot, and fro many a worthie knight
Hath his Ladie gon a fourtenight
And he nat yet made halfendele the fare
What nede is thee to maken all this care?

Sens daie by daie thou maiest thy selfen se
That from his loue, or els from his wife
A man mote twinnen of necessite
Ye, though he loue her as his owe life
Yet will he with himself thus maken strife
For well thou wost my leue brother dere
That alwaie frendes maie not been ifere.

How doen this folke, ysseen her loues wedded
By frendes might as it betideth full oft
And seen hem in her spouses bedde ibedded
God wote that take it wisely faire and soft
For why, good hope halt vp her harte a loft
And for that can a time of sorowe endure
As time hem hurteth, a time doeth hem cure

So shouldest thou endure, and letten slide
The time, and londe to been glad and light
Tenne daies nis not so long to abide
And sens we to comen thee hath behight
She will her hed breaken for no wight
For drede thee nat, that she nil finde waie
To come ayen, my life that durst I laie.

Thy sweuenes eke, and all soche fantasie
Driue out, and let hem faren to mischaunce
For thei procede of thy melancolie
That doth thee sele in sleepe all this penaūce
I straw we for all sweuenelle significaunce
God helpe me so, I counpt hem not a Beane
There wot no mā arizt what dremes meane

For priestes of the temple tellen this
That dreames been the reuelacions
Of Goddes, and als well thei tellen wis
That thei been infernalles illusions
And Leches saine, that of complections
Proceden thei of fast, or glotonie
Who wot in sothe thus what thei signifie.

The other sain, that through impressions
As it a wight hath fast a thing in minde
That thereof cometh soche auisions
And other sain, as thei in bokes finde
That after times of the yere by kinde
Men dreme, & that theffect goth by the mone
But leaue no dreame, for it is nat to doen.

Well worth of dreames aie these old wiues
And truly ek, augurie of these foules
For feare of which, men wenen lese her liues
As rauēs qualm, or schriching of these oules
To trowen on it, bothe false and foule is Alas alas, that so noble a creature
As is a man, should drede soche ordure.

For whiche with all mine hart I thee beseech
Unto thy self, that all this thou forfeue
And rise now vp, withouten more speche
And let vs cast how forth maie best be driuen
The time, and ek how frelily we maie liuē
Whan she cometh, ỹ which shall be right sone
God helpe me so, the best is thus to doen.

Rise, let vs speake of lustie life in Troie
That we haue lad, and forth the time driue
And ek of time coming vs reioie
And dringen shall our blisse now so blriue
And langour of these twise daies fiue
We shall therwith so forfet or oppresse
That well vneth it doen shall vs duresse.

This toune is full of lordes all about
And truce lasten all this meane while Go we plaien vs in some lustie rout
To Sarpedon, not hens but a mile
And thus thou shalt the time well begile
And drive it forth, vnto that blisfull morowe
That thou her se, that cause is of thy sorowe

Now rise my dere brother Troilus
For certes it non honour is to thee
To wepe, and in thy bedde to rouken thus
For truely of o thing trust to me
If thou thus ligge, a daie, two or three
The folke wol wene, that thou for cowardise
Thee fainest sick, and that thou darst not rise

This Troilus answerde: o brother dere
This folke knowe that haue isuffred pain
That thouz he wepe, & make sorowfull chere
That feleth harme and smart in euery vain
No wonder is, and though I euer plain
Or alwaie wepe, I am nothing to blame
Sens that I haue lost, ỹ cause of al my game

But sens of line force I mote arise
I shall arise, as sone as euer I maie
And God, to whom mine harte I sacrifice
So sende vs hastely the tenth daie
For was there neuer foule so faine of Maie
As I shall ben, whā that she cometh in Troie
That cause is of my tourment and my ioie

But whider is thy rede (q Troilus)
That we maie plaie vs best in all this toun
By God my counsaile is (q Pandarus)
To ride and plaie vs with king Sarpedoun
So long of this thei speaken vp and doun
Till Troilus gan at the last assent
To rise, and forth to Sarpedon thei went.

This Sarpedon, as he that honourable
Was euer his liue, and full of hie prowesse
With all that might iserued been on table
That deintie was, all coste it greate richesse
He fedde hem daie by daie, that soche noblesse
As saiden bothe the moste and ek the leaste
Was neuer er that daie wiste at any feaste.

Nor in this worlde there is none instrument
Delicious, thrugh winde or touche on coorde
As ferre as any wight hath euery went
That tong tell, or harte maie recorde
But at that feaste, it nas well heard recorde
Ne of Ladies ek so faire a companie
On daunce er tho, was neuer iseen with ye.

But what auaileth this to Troilus
That for his sorowe, nothing of it rought
But euer in one, as harte pitous
Full busily Creseide his Ladie sought
On her was euer all that his harte thought
Now this now that, so fast imagining
That glad iwis can him no feasting.

These Ladies ek, that at this feast been Sens that he sawe his Ladie was awai
It was his sorowe vpon hem for to seen
Or for to heare on instrumentes plaie
For she that of his harte hath the kaie
Was absent, lo this was his fantasie
That no wight should maken melodie.

Nor there nas hour in all the daie or night
Whan he was there as no man mizt him hem
That he ne saied, o louesome Ladie bright
How haue ye faren sins that ye were there
Welcome iwis mine owne ladie dere
But wela waie, all this nas but a mase
Fortune his houe, entended bet to glase.

The

The letters eke, that she of olde time
Had him sent, he would alone rede
An hundred sithe, at wirt noone and prime Religuring her shappe, and her womanhede
Within his hart, and euery worde and dede
That passed was, & thus he droue to an ende
The fourth day, and said he wol wende

And said leue brother Pandarus
Intendest thou that we shal here bleue
Til Sarpedon wol forth conueyen vs
Yet were it fairer that we toke our leue
For goddes loue, let vs now sone at eue
Our leaue take, and homwarde let vs turne
For trewly I nil nat thus sotourne

Pandare answerde, be we comen hither
To letchen fire, and rennen home againe
God helpe me so, I can nat tellen whither
We might gone, if I shal sothly saine
Here any wight is of vs more faine
Than Sarpedon, and if we hence hie
Thus sodainly, I holde it vilanie

Whan that we saiden we would bleue
With him a weke, and now thus sodainly
The fourth day to take of him our leue
He would wondren on it trewly
Let vs holden forth our purpose fermely
And sens that ye behighten him to abide Holde forwarde now, and after let vs ride

This Pandarus, with al pine and wo
Made him to dwel, and at the wekes ende
Of Sarpedon thei tolke her leaue tho
And on her way the speden hem to wende
(Troilus) now lorde me grace sende
That I maie finde at mine home comming
Creseide comen, and therwith gan he sing

Ye hasel wode thought this Pandare
And to him selfe ful softly he seide
God wotte refroiden may this hotte fare
Er Calcas sende Troilus Creseide
But natheless he iaped thus and seide
And swore i wis, his hart him wel behight
She would come, as sone as euer she might

Whan thei vnto the paleis were icomen
Of Troilus, thei doun of horse alight
And to ꝑ chambre her waie haue thei nomen
And vnto time that it gan to night
Thei speken of Creseide the lady bright
And after this, when hem bothe lesse
Thei spede hem fro the supper vnto rest

On morow as sone as day began to clere
This Troilus gan of his slepe to abreide
And to Pandarus, his owne brother dere
For loue of God, ful pitously he seide
As go we sene the paleis of Creseide
For sens we yet maie haue no more feest
So let vs seine her paleis at the leest

And therwithall his meine for to blende
A cause he fonde in toun for to go
And to Creseides house thei gon wende
But lorde this sely Troilus was wo
Him thought his sorouful hart brast a two
For when he saw her doores sperred all
Wel nigh for sorow adoun he gan to fall

Therwith when he was ware, & gan behold
How shet was euery window of the place
As frost him thought his hart gan to cold
For whiche with chaunged deedly pale face
Withouten worde, he forth by gan to pace
And as God would, he gan so fast ride
That no wight of his countenaunce aspide

Than saide he thus: O paleis desolate
O house of houses, whilom best ywight
O paleis empty and disconsolate
O thou lanterne, of which queint is the light
O paleis, whilom day that now art night
Wel ought best thou to fal, and I to die
Sens she is went, that wont was vs to gie

O paleis whilom croune of houses al
Enlumined with sunne of al blisse
O ring, of whiche the rubie is out fall
O cause of wo, that cause hast ben of blisse
Yet sens I may no bet, faine would I kisse
Thy colde doores, durst I for this route
And farwel shrine, of whiche the saint is out

Therwith he cast on Pandarus his eie
With chaunged face, and pitous to beholde
And whan he might his time aright aspie
Ne as he rode, to Pandarus he tolde
His newe sorow, and eke his sores olde
So pitously, and with so deed an hewe
That euery wight, might on his sorow rewe

Fro thence forth he rideth vp and doune
And euery thing came him to remembraunce
As he rode forthe by the places of the toune
In whiche he whilom had all his pleasaunce
Lo, yonder saw I mine owne lady daunce
And in that temple with her eyen clere
Me caught first my right lady dere

And yonder haue I herde ful lustely
My dere hart laugh, and yonder playe
Sawe I her ones eke ful blisfully
And yonder ones to me gan she saie
Now good swete, loue me wel I praie
And yonde so goodly gan she me beholde
That to the death mine hart is to her holde

And at the corner in the yonder house
Herde I mine alderleuest lady dere
So womanly, with voice melodiouse
Singen so wel, so goodly and so clere
That in my soule yet me thinketh I here
The blisful sowne, and in that yonder place
My lady first me tolde vnto her grace

Than thought he thus, o blisfull lorde Cupide
Whan I the processe haue in memorie
How thou me hast wered on euery side
Men might a boke make of it like a storie
What nede is the to seke on me victorie
Sens I am thine, and holly at thy will What ioy hast thou thine owne folke to spill

Wel hast thou lorde i wroke on me thine ire
Thou mighty God, and dredful for to greue
Now mercy lorde, thou wost wel I desire
Thy grace moste, of al lustes leue
And liue and die I wol in thy beleue
For whiche I ne aske in guerdon but a bone
That thou Creseide aien me sende sone

Distraine her hart as fast to returne
As thou doest mine to longen her to se
Than wote I wel that she nil nat sojourne
Now blisful lorde, so cruel thou ne be Unto the blode of Troie, I praie the
As Juno was vnto the blode Thebane
For whiche ỳ folke of Thebes cauzt her bane

And after this he to the yates wente
Ther as Creseide out rode, a full good paas
And vp & doun there made he many a wente
And to him selfe ful oft he said alas
Fro hence rode my blisse and my solas
As would blisful God now for his ioie
I might her sene ayen come to Troie

And to the yonder hil I gan her gide
Alas, and there I toke of her my leue
And yonde I sawe her to her father ride
For sorow of whiche mine hart shal to cleue
And hither home I come whan it was eue
And here I dwel, out cast from al ioie
And shal, til I maie sene her eke in Troie

And of him selfe imagined he ofte
To ben defaited, pale, and woren lesse
Than he was wonte, & that men saiden softe
What may it be: who can the sothe gesse
Why Troilus hath al this heuinesse
And al this nas but his melancolie
That he had of him selfe suche fantasie

Another time imaginen he would
That euery wight that went by the wey
Had of him routhe, & that thei saine should I am right sory, Troilus wol dey
And thus he droue a daie yet forth or twey
As ye haue herde, suche life gan he lede
As he that stode bet wiren hope and drede

For which him liked in his songes shewe Thenchelon of his wo, as he best might
And made a songe, of wordes but a fewe
Somwhat his wofull hart for to light
And when he was from euery mannes sight
With softe voice, he of his lady dere
That absent was, gan sing as ye maie here

O sterre, of whiche I lost haue all the light
With hart sore, wel ought I to bewaile
That euer derke in turment, night by night
Towarde my deth, wh winde I stere and saile
For whiche the tenth night, if that I faile
The giding of thy bemes bright an houre
My ship and me Caribdes woll deuoure

This songe when he thus songen had sone
He fil aien into his sighes olde
And euery night, as was his wont to doone
He stode the bright moone to beholde
And al his sorowe he to the moone tolde
And said, i wis whan thou art horned newe
I shal be glad, if al the world be trewe

I sawe thine hornes olde eke by that morow
Whan hence rode my right lady dere
That cause is of my turment and my sorow
For whiche, o bright Lucina the clere
For loue of God ren fast about thy spere
For whan thine hornes newe ginnen spring
Than shal she come that maie my blisse bring

The daie is more, and lenger euery night
Than thei ben wont to be, him thought tho
And that the sunne went his course vnright
By lenger waie than it was wonte to go
And said, i wis I drede me euer mo
The sunnes sonne Pheton be on liue
And that his fathers carte amisse he driue

Upon the walles fall ehe would he walke
And on the Grekes hoſt he would ſe
And to him ſelfe right thus he would talke
Lo, yonder is mine owne lady fre
Or els yonder, there the tentes be
And thence cometh this ayre that is ſo ſoote
That in my ſoule I fele it doth me boote

And hardily this winde that more and more
Thus ſtoundmele encreaſeth in my face
Is of my ladies depe ſighes ſore
I preue it thus, for in none other ſpace
Of al this toun, ſaue onely in this place
Fele I no winde, that ſouneth ſo like paine
It ſaith alas, why twined be we twaine

This longe time he driueth forth right thus Til fully paſſed was the ninthe night
And ay beſide him was this Pandarus
That buſily did all his full might Him to comfort, and make his hart light
Pruing him hope al way the tenthe morow
That ſhe ſhal comen, & ſtinten al his ſorow

Upon that other ſide ehe was Creſeide
With women fewe, among the grekes ſtrong
In whiche ful oft a day, alas ſhe ſeide
That I was borne, wel maie mine hart long
After my death, for now liue I to long
Alas, and I ne may it not amende
For now is worſe than euer yet I wende

My father nil for nothing do me grace
To gone ayen, for aught I can him queme
And ſo be, that I my terme pace
My Troilus ſhal in his hart deme
That I am falſe, and ſo it maie wel ſeme
Thus ſhal I haue vnthonke on euery ſide
That I was borne ſo welaway the tide

And if that I me put in ieopardie
To ſteale awaie by night, and it befal
That I be caught, I ſhal be holde a ſpie
Or els lo, this drede I moſt of al
Alin the hondes of ſome wretche I fal
And am but loſt, al be mine hart trewe
Now mighty God, thou on my ſorow rewe

Ful pale iworen was her bright face
Her limmes leane, as ſhe that al the daie
Stode whan ſhe durſt, and loked on the place
There ſhe was borne, and dwelt had aie
And al the night weping alas ſhe laie
And thus diſpeired out of al cure
Ye lad her life, this woful creature

Ful oft a daie ſhe ſighed ehe for diſtreſſe
And in her ſelfe ſhe went aie purtraying
Of Troilus the great worthineſſe
And al his goodly wordes recording
Sens firſt that daie her loue began to ſpring
And thus ſhe ſette her woful hart a fire
Through remembraunce of þ ſhe gan deſire

In all this world there nis ſo cruel hart
That her had herd complainen in her ſorow
That nold haue wept for her paines ſmart
So tenderly ſhe wept, both eue and morow
Her neded no teeres for to borow.
And this was yet the worſt of all her paine
That was no wight, to whom ſhe durſt plaine

Ful rewfully ſhe loked vpon Troie
Beheld the Toures high, and ehe the hallis
Alas (q ſhe) the pleaſaunce and the ioie
The whiche that now al turned into gal is Haue I had ofte, within yonder wallis
O Troilus, what doeſt thou now ſhe ſeide
Lord whether thou yet thinke vpon Creſeide

Alas, that I ne had itrowed on your loue
And went with you, as ye me redde er this Than had I now not ſighed halfe ſo ſore
Who might haue ſaid, that I had don amis
To ſteale awaie with ſuche one as he is
But al to late cometh the lectuarie
When men the corſe vnto the graue carie

To late is now to ſpeke of that matere
Prudence alas, one of thine eien thre
Wel lacked alway, er that I came here
For on time paſſed wel remembred me
And preſent time ehe coulde I wel ſe
But future time, er I was in the ſnare
Could I not ſene, that cauſeth now my care

But natheleſſe, betide what betide
I ſhal to morow at night, by eeſt or weſt
Out of this hoſte ſteale, on ſome ſide
And gon with Troilus, where as him leſt
This purpoſe wol I holde, and this is þ beſt
No force of wicked tonges iangleric
For euer on loue, haue wretches had enuie

For who ſo wol of euery worde take hede
Or rule hem by euery wightes wit
Ne ſhal he neuer thriuen out of drede
For that that ſome men blamen euer yet
Lo, other maner folke commenden it
And as for me, for al ſuche variaunce
Felicite clepe I my ſuffiſaunce

For whiche, without any wordes mo
To Troie I wol, as for conclusioun
But God it wote, er fully monthes two
She was ful ferre fro that entencioun
For bothe Troilus and Troie toun
Shal knotlesse throughout her hart slide
For she wol take a purpose for to abide

This Diomede, of whom I you tel gan Goth now within himselfe aie arguing with al the sleight and al that euer he can How he maie best with shortest tariyng
Into his nette Creseides hart bring
To this entent he couthe neuer fine
To fischen her, he laide out bothe and line

But natheless, wel in his hart he thought
That she nas nat without a loue in Troie
For neuer sithen he her thence brought Ne couthe he sene her laugh, or maken ioie
He nist how best her hart for taeoie
But for talley, he said nought it ne greueth
For he ȝ naught assaieth naught atcheueth

Yet said he to him selfe vpon a night
Now am I nat a fole, that wote wel howe
Her wo is, for loue of another wight
And hervpon to gon assaie her nowe
I maie well wete, it nil nat ben my prowe
For wise folke in bokes it erpresse
Men shal nat wowe a wight in heuinesse

But who so might winnen suche a floure
Fro him, for whō she mourneth night ȝ daie
He might saine he were a conqueroure
And right anone, as he that bolde was aie
Thought in his hart, hap how hap maie
Al should I die, I wol her hart seche
I shal no more lesen but my speche

This Diomede, as bokes vs declare
Was in his nedes prest and corragious
With sterne voice, and mighty limmes square
Hardy, testif, strong, and cheualrous
Of dedes like his father Tidius
And some men saine, he was of tonge large
And heire he was, of Calcidony and Arge

Creseide meane was of her stature
Therto of shappe, of face, and eke of chere
There might ben no fairer creature
Indokte time this was her maner
To gone itressed with her herres clere
Doune by her colere, at her backe behinde
Which with a threde of gold she would binde

And saue her browes ioyneden ifere
There nas no lacke, in aught I can espien
But for to speken of her eien clere
Lo, truely thei written that her seien
That paradis stode formed in her eien
And with her riche beaute euer more
Stroue loue in her, aie which of hē was more

She lobre was eke, simple, and wise withall
The best inorished eke that might be
And goodly of her speche in generall
Charitable, estately, lusty, and fre
Ne neuer more ne lacked her pite
Tendre harted, sliding of corage
But truely I can nat tel her age

And Troilus wel worthen was in hight
And complete formed by proporcioun
So wel, that kinde it naught amendē might Yong, fresh, strong, and hardy as Lioun
Trewe as stele, in eche condicioun
One of the best entetched creature
That is or shal, while ȳ the world maie dure

And certainly, in sothe as I it is fonde
That Troilus was neuer vnto no wight
As in his time, in no degre seconde
In daring do, that longeth to a knight
Al might a Giaunt passen him of might His hart aie with the first and with the best
Stode peregall to dare done what him lest

But for to tellen forthe of Diomede
It fil, that after on the tenthe daie
Sens that Creseide out of the cite yede
This Diomede, as fresh as braūche in Maie
Came to the tente there as Calcas laie
And fained him with Calcas haue to done
But what he mente, I shal you tellen sone

Creseide at shorte wordes for to tel
Welcomed him, and doun him by her sette
And he was ethe inough to maken dwel
And after this, withouten longe lette
The spices and the wine men forth hem fette
And forthe thei speke of this and that iliere
As frendes done, of whiche some shall ye here

He gan first fallen of the warre in speche
Betwixen hem and the folke of Troie toun
And of thassiege he gan eke her beseche
To tellen him what was her opinioun
Fro that demaunde he so discendeth doun
To asken her, if that her straunge thought
The grekes gise, ȝ werkes that thei wrought

And

And why her father tarieth so long
To wedden her vnto some worthy wight
Creseide that was in her paines strong
For Loue of Troilus her owne knight
So ferforth as she conning had or might Answerde him tho, but as of his entente
Semed nat she wiste what he mente

But natheles this ilke Diomede
Gan on him selfe assure, and thus he seide
If I aright haue taken on you hede
Me thinketh thus, o lady mine Creseide
That sens I first hond on your bridel leide
When I out came of Troie by the morow
Me might I neuer sene you but in sorow

I can nat saine what maie the cause be
But if for loue of some Troian it were
The whiche right sore would a thinken me
That ye for any wight that dwelleth there
Shulden spil a quarter of a teere
Or pitously your seluen so begile
For dredeles it is nat worthe the while

The folke of Troie, as who saith al and some
In prison ben, as ye your seluen se
Fro thence shal nat one on liue come
For al the Golde atwiren sunne and see Me seeth wel, and vnderstondeth me
Ther shal nat one to mercy gone on liue
Al were he lord of worldes twise liue

Such wreche on hem for fetching of Heleine
There shal be take, er that we hence wende
That Gaunes, whiche ye goddes ben of peine
Shal ben agast that Grekes wol hem shende
And men shal drede vnto the worldes ende
From hence forthe, to ravishen any Quene
So cruel shal our wreche on hem be sene

And but if Calkas lede vs with ambages
That is to saine, with double wordes slie
Suche as men clepen a word with two visages
Ye shal wel knowen that I nat ne lie
And al this thing right sene it with your eie
And that anon, ye nil nat trowe how soone
Now taketh hede, for it is for to donne

What wene ye your wise father would Haven yeuen Antenor for you anon
If he ne wiste that the cite should Distroied ben? why nay so mote I gone
He knew ful wel there shal nat scapen one
That Troian is, and for the great fere
He durst nat that ye dwelt lenger there

What wol ye more, o louesom lady dere
Let Troie and Troians fro your hart passe
Driue out the bitter hope, and make good chere
And clepe ayen the beaute of your face
That ye with salte teeres so deface
For Troie is brought in suche a ieopardie
That it to saue is now no remedie

And thinketh wel, ye shal in Grekes finde
A more parfite loue, er it be night
Than any Troian is, and more kinde
And bet to seruen you wol don his might
And if ye vouchsafe my lady bright
I wol ben he, to seruen you my selue
Ye leauer than be lorde of Greces twelue

And with that worde he gan to waxen reed
And in his speche a litel while he quoke
And cast aside a litel with his heed
And stinte a while, and after warde he woke
And lokyng on her he threwe his loke
And said I am, al be it to you no ioie
As gentil a man, as any wight in Troie

For if my father Tideus, he seide
Aliued had, I had ben er this Of Calcidony and Argo a king Creseide
And so hope I that I shal be I wis
But he was slaine alas, the more harme is Vnhappely at Thebes al to rathe
Polimite, and many a man to scathe

But hart mine, sithe that I am your man
And ben the first, of whom I seche grace
To serue you as hertely as I can
And euer shal while I to liue haue space
So that, er I departe out of this place
Ye wol me graunt that I maie to morow
At better laiser tel you of my sorow

What should I tell his wordes that he seide?
He spake inough for o daie at the mest
It preueth wel he spake so, that Creseide
Graunted on the morow at his request
For to speke with him at the lest
So that he nolde speke of suche matere
And thus she to him said, as ye mowe here

As she that had her hart on Troilus
So fast, that there maie it none arace
And straungely she spake, and said thus O Diomede, I loue that ilke place
There I was borne, and I oues of thy grace
Deliuer it sone of al that doth it care
God for thy might so leue it wel to fare

That grekes wold her wrath on Troy wreke
If that thei might I know it wel iwis
But it shal naught befallen as ye speke
And God to forme, and farther ouer this I wote my father wise and redy is
And that he me hath bought, as ye me tolde
So dere am I to more vnto him holde

That Grekes ben of high condicioun
I wote eke well, but certaine men shall finde
As worthy folke within Troie toun
As conning, as parfite, and as kinde
As ben betwixt Orcades and Inde
And that ye coulde wel your lady serue
I trowe eke wel, her thonke for to deserue

But as to speke of loue, thus she seide
I had a lorde, to whom I wedded was
The whose mine hart was al til he deide
And other loue, as helpe me now Pallas
There in mine hart nis, ne neuer was
And that ye ben of noble and high kinrede
I haue wel herde it tellen out of drede

And that doth me to haue so great a wonder
That ye wol scornen any woman so
Eke God wote, loue and I ben fer a sonder
I am disposed bet so mote I go
Vnto my death plaine and make wo
What I shal after done, I can nat saie
But truely as yet me liste nat playe

Mine hart is now in tribulacioun
And ye in armes bely daie by daie
Hereafter when ye wonnen haue the toun
Parauenture than, so it happen maie
That whan I se that I neuer ere saie
Than wol I werke that I neuer ere wrought
This worde to you inough sufficen ought

To morow eke wol I speken with you faine
So that ye touchen naught of this matere
And whan you list, ye maie come here againe
And er ye gon, thus muche I saie you here
As helpe me Pallas, with her heeres clere
Yf that I should of any Grekе haue routhe
It should be your seluen by my trouthe

I saie nat therfore that I wol you loue
Ne saie nat naie, but in conclusioun
I meane wel by God that sit aboue
And therwithal she cast her eien doun
And gan to sigh a said, Troilus a Troie toun
Yet bidde I God, in quiet and in rest
I maie you lene or do mine hart brest

But in effecte, and shortely for to saie
This Diomede al freshly newe againe
Gan pursuen on, and fast her mercy praie
And after this the sothe for to saine
Her gloue he toke, of which he was ful faine
And finally, whan it was woren eue
And al was wel, he rose and toke his leue

The bright Venus folowed and aie taught
The waie there brode Phebus doune alight
And Cithera her chare horse ouer raught
To whirle out of the Lion, if she might
And Signifer his candels sheweth bright
Whan that Creseide vnto her bed wente
Within her fathers faire bright tente

Retourning in her soule aie vp and doun
The wordes of this sodaine Diomede
His great estate, and peril of the toun
And that she was alone, and had nede
Of frendes helpe, and thus began to brede
The cause why, the sothe for to tell
She toke fully purpose for to dwell

The morow came, and goodly for to speke
This Diomede is come vnto Creseide
And shortly, lest that ye my tale breke
So wel he for him selfe spake and seide
That al her sighes sore, doun he leide
And finally, the sothe for to saine
He felte her the great of al her paine

And after this, the story telleth vs
That she him yaue the faire baie stede
The whiche she ones wan of Troilus
And eke a broche (and that was litel nede)
That Troilus was, she yaue this Diomede
And eke the bet from sorowe him to releue
See made him weare a pencell of her sleue

I finde eke in stories elswhere
Whan through the body hurt was Diomede
Of Troilus, tho wepte she many a teere
Whan that she saw his wide woundes bleede
And that she toke to kepen him good hede
And for to healen him of his smarte
Wen saine, I not, ỳ she yaue him her harte

But truely the story telleth vs
There made neuer woman more wo
Than she, whan that she falsed Troilus
She saide alas, for now is clene ago
My name in trouthe of loue for euermo
For I haue falsed one the gentilleft
That euer was, and one the worthieft

Alas

Alas, of me vnto the worldes ende
Shall neither been i writtē or isong
No good worde, for these bokes woll me shēde
Trolled shall I been on many a tong
Throughout the world, my bell shall be rong
And women moste woll hate me of all
Alas, that loche a caas me should fall.

Thei woll sain, in as moche as in me is
I haue hem doen dishonour wela waie
Ill be I not the first that did amis
What helpeth that, to doen my blame awaie
But sens I se there is no better waie
And that to late is now for me to rue
To Diomede I woll algate be true.

But Troilus, sens I no better maie
And sens that thus departen ye and I
Yet praie I God so yeue you right good daie
As for the gentillest knight truely
That euer I sawe, to seruen faithfully
And best can aie his ladies honour hepe
And with that worde she brast anon to wepe

And certes you ne haten shall I neuer
And frendes loue, that shall ye haue of me
And my good worde, all should I liuen euer
And truely I would right sorie be
For to seen you in aduersite
And giltelesse I wot well I you leaue
And all shall passe, and thus take I my leaue

But truely how long it was bitwene
That she forsoke him for this Diomede
There is none auctbour telleth it I wene
Take euery man now to his bookes hede
He shall no terme finden, out of drede
For though that he began to wowe her sone
Ere he her wan, yet was there more to doen.

Ne me ne list this selie woman chide
Further than the storie woll deuise
Her name alas, is published so wide
That for her gilt it ought inough suffice
And if I might excuse her in any wise
For she so sorie was for her vntrouthe
Iwis I would excuse her yet for routhe.

This Troilus, as I before haue told Thus driueth forth, as wel as he hath might
But oft was his harte hote and cold
And namely that ilke ninthe night
Whiche on the morowe she had him behight
To come ayen, God wote full little rest
Had he that night, nothing to slepe him lest.

The laurer crouned Phebus, with his heate
Gan in his course aie vpward as he went To warmen of the East sea the waues weate
And Circes doughter song, with freshe entet Whan Troilus his Pandare after sent
And on the walles of the toune thei pleide
To loke, if thei can seen aught of Creseide.

Till it was noone, thei stoden for to se
Who that there came, and euery maner wight
That came fro ferre, thei saiden it was she Till that thei coulden knowen him aright
Now was his harte dull, now was it light
And thus betaped stoden for to stare
About naught, this Troilus and Pandare.

To Pandarus, this Troilus tho seide
For aught I wot, before noone sikerly
Into this toune ne cometh not here Creseide
She hath inough to doen hardely
To winnen from her father, so trowe I
Her old father woll yet make her dine
Er that she go, God yeue his harte pine.

Pãdarus answerd, it maie well been certain
And for thy let vs dine, I thee beseche
And after noone than maist thou come again
And home thei go, without more speache
And comen ayen, but long maie thei seache
Er that thei finde that thei after gape
Fortune hem bothe thinketh for to iape.

(q Troilus) I se well now that she Is taried with her old father so
That er she come it woll nigh euen be Come forthe, I woll vnto the yate go
These porters been vnbonning euermo
And I woll doen hem holden vp the yate
As naught ne were, although she come late.

The daie goth fast, and after that cam eue
And yet came nat to Troilus Creseide
He loketh forth by hedge, by tree, by greue
And ferre his hedde ouer the wall he leide
And at the last he tourned him, and seide
By God I wote her meaning now Pandare
Almoste iwis all newe was my care.

Now doubtlesse this Ladie can her good
I wote she cometh riding priuely
I commende her wisedome by mine hood
She woll nat maken people nicely
Gaure on her whan ꝑ she cometh, but softely
By night into the toune she thinketh ride
And dere brother, thinke nat long to abide.

We haue naught els for to doen twis
And Pandarus, now wilt thou trowen me
Haue here my trouth I se her, yond she is Heaue vp thine yen man, maiest thou nat se
Pandare answerde, nat se mote I thee
All wrong by God, what saist ꝑ mā wher art
That I se yonde, nis but a farre cart.

Alas thou saiest right sothe (ꝙ Troilus)
But hardely it is not all for nought
That in mine harte I now reioice thus
It is ayenst some good, I haue a thought
Not I nat how, but sens ꝑ I was wrought
Ne felt I sothe a comfort dare I saie
She cometh to night, my life that durst I lay

Pandarus answerde, it maie be well inough
And helde with him, of all that euer he saied
But in his harte he thought, and soft lough
And to himself full soberly he saied
From hasel wodde, there ioly Robin plaied
Shall come all that thou abidest here
Ye, farwell all the snowe of ferne yere.

The wardein of the yates gan to call
The folke, which that without the yates wer
And badde hem driuen in her beastes all
For all the night thei must bleuen there
And ferre within the night, wt many a teare
This Troilus gan homward for to ride
For well he seeth it helpeth nat to abide.

But nathelesse he gladded him in this
He thought he misacompted had his daie
And saied, I vnderstande haue all amis
For thilke night I last Creseide saie
She saied I shall been here, if that I maie
Er that the Mone, O dere harte swete
The Lion passe, out of this Iriete.

For whiche he maie yet hold all her behest
And on the morowe, vnto the yate he went
And vp and doune, by West and eke by East
Upon the walles made he many a went
But al for naught, his hope alway him blēt
For which at night, in sorow and sighes sore
He went him home, withouten any more.

This hope all cleane out of his hart fledde
He ne hath wheron now lenger for to hong
But for the pain him thought his hart bledd
So wer his throwes sharp, & wonder strong
For whan he sawe that she abode so long
He nist what he iudgen of it might Sens she hath broken that she him behight.

The thirde, fourth, fifte, and sixt daie
After tho daies tenne, of whiche I told Betwixen hope and drede his harte laie
Yet somwhat trusting on her hestes old
But whan he sawe she nolde her terme hold
He can now seen none other remedie
But for to shape him sone for to die.

Therwith the wicked spirit, God vs blesse
Whiche that men clepen woode ialousie
Gan in him crepe, in all this heuinesse
For whiche bicause he would sone die
He ne eate ne dronke for his melancolie
And eke from euery companie he fledde
This was the life that all this time he ledde.

He so defaite was, that no maner man
Unneth he might knowen there he went
So was he leane, and therto pale and wan
And feble, that he walketh by potent
And with his ire he thus himself shent
But who so asked him wherof him smarte
He saied, his harme was all about his harte

Priam full oft, and eke his mother dere
His brethern and his sustren gan him frain
Why he so sorowfull was in all his chere
And what thing was the cause of al his pain
But all for naught, he nolde his cause plain
But sated, he felt a greuous maladie
About his harte, and fain he would die.

So on a daie he laie him doune to slepe
And so bifell that in slepe him thought
That in a forest fast he walked to wepe
For loue of her, ꝙ him these paines wrought
And vp and doune, as he that forest sought
He met he sawe a Bore, with tushes greate
That slept ayenst the bright Sunnes heate.

And by this Bore, fast in her armes fold
Laie kissing aie his ladie bright Creseide
For sorowe of whiche, whan he it gan behold
And for dispite, out of his slepe he breide
And loude he cried on Pandarus, and seide
O Pandarus, now knowe I crop and roote
I nam but dedde, there nis none other boote

My lady bright Creseide hath me betraid
In whom I trusted moste of any wight
She els where hath now her harte apaid
The blisfull Goddes, through her great might Haue in my dreame ishewed it full right
Thus in my dreame, Creseide haue I beholde
And all this thing to Pandarus he tolde.

O my Creseide alas, what subtilte:
What newe lust: what beaute, what science
What wrathe of iuste cause haue ye to me
What gilt of me: what fell experience
Hath me raft alas: thine aduertence
O trust, O faithe, O depe assurance
Who hath me raft Creseide, all my plesaunce

Alas, why let I you from hens go:
For whiche well nigh out of my wit I breide
Who shall now trowe on any othes mo:
God wote I wende, O Ladie bright Creseide
That euery worde was Gospell that ye seide
But who maie bet begile, if him list
Than he on whom men wenen best to trist.

What shall I doen, my Pandarus alas
Liele now so sharpe a newe pain
Sens that there is no remedy in this caas
That bet were it, I with mine hõdes twain
My seluen slowe, than alwaie thus to plain
For thouz þ death my wo should haue an ende
Here euery daie with life my self I shende.

Pandare answerde and said, alas the while
That I was borne, haue I nat saied er this
That dreames many a maner man begile
And why: for folke erpounden hem amis
How darst thou sain that false thy ladie is
For any dreame, right for thine owne drede
Let be this thought, þ canst no dreames rede

Parauenture there thou dremest of this boze
It maie so be that it maie signifie
Her father, whiche that old is and eke hoze
Iyen the sonne lieth on poinct to die
And she for sorowe ginneth wepe and crie
And killeth him, there he lieth on the ground
Thus shuldest thou thy dreme arizt erpound

How might I than doen (q Troilus)
To knowe of this, yea were neuer so lite
How saiest thou wisely (q this Pandarus)
Myrede is this, sens thou canst well endite
That hastely a letter thou her write
Through which thou shalt wel bringē about
To knowe a soth, of that thou art in doubt

And se now why: for this I dare well sain
That if so is, that she vntrue be
I can not trowen that she woll write again
And if she write, thou shalt full sone isee
Iswhether she hath any liberte
To come ayen, or els in some clause
If she be let, she woll assigne a cause.

Thou hast not written to her sens þ she went Nor she to thee, and this I durst late
There maie soche cause been in her entent
That hardely thou wolt thy seluen sate
That her abode the best is for you twaie
Now write her than, and thou shalt sele sone
I sothe of all, there is no more to doen.

Acorded been to this conclusioun
And that anon, these ilke lorde two
And hastely sate Troilus adoun
And rolleth in his harte to and fro
How he maie best discriuen her his wo
And to Creseide his owne ladie dere
And wrote right thus, q said as ye maie here

¶ The copie of the letter.

Right fresh flour, whose I haue been & shall Withouten part of els where seruice
With harte, bodie, life, lust, thought, and all
I wofull wight, in euery humble wise
That tong can tell, or harte maie deuise
As oft as matter occupieth place
Me recommaunde vnto your noble grace

Lileth it you to weten swete harte
As ye well knowe, how long time agon
That ye me left in aspre paines smarte Whan that ye went, of whiche yet bote non Haue I non had, but euer worse bigon
Fro daie to daie am I, and so mote I well
While it you list, of wele and wo my well.

For whiche to you, with dredefull harte true
I write, as he that sorowe driueth to write
My wo, that euery houre encreaseth newe
Complaining as I dare, or can endite
And that defaced is, that maie ye wite
The teares, which that from mine iyen rain
That wulden speke, if that they durst a plain

You first beseche I, that your iyen clere
To loke on this defouled ye nat hold
And ouer all this, that ye my ladie dere
Woll vouchsafe this letter to behold
And by the cause eke of my cares cold
That slaeth my wit, if aught amis me starte
Forgeue it me, mine owne swete harte.

If any seruaunt durst or ought of right
Vpon his ladie pitously complain
Than wene I that I ought be that wight
Considred this, that ye these monthes twain
Haue taried, there ye saiden sothe to sain
But tenne daies ye nolde in soste sojourne
But in two monethes, yet ye not retourne.

But

But for as moche, as me mote nedes like
All that you list, I dare nat plain more
But humbly, with forowfull sighes sike
You write I mine vnrestie sorowes sore
Fro daie to daie, desiring euer more
To knowen fully, if your will it were How ye haue fared and don while ye be there whose welfare and heale eke God encrease

In honour soche, that vpward in degree
Ft growe alwaie, so that it neuer cease
Right as your harte aie can my ladie free Deuise, I praie to God so mote it be
And graunt it that ye sone vpon me rewe
As wisely as in all I am to you true.

And if you liketh knowen of the fare
Of me, whose wo there may no wight discriue
I can no more, but chest of euery care
At writing of this letter I was on liue
All redy out my wofull ghost to driue
Whiche I delaie, and holde him yet in honde
Upon the sight of matter of your sonde.

Mine yen two in vain, with whiche I se
Of sorowfull teares salt arn woren welis
My song in plaint of mine aduersite
My good in harme, mine ease eke worē hel is My ioie in wo, I can sey now nought ellis
But tourned is, for whiche my life I warie Euery ioie, or ease in his contrarie.

which with your coming home ayen to Troy
Ye maie redresse, and more a thousande sithe
Than euer I had encreassen in me ioie
For was there neuer harte yet so blithe
To haue his life, as I shall been as swithe
As I you se, and though no maner routhe
Cā meuen you, yet thinketh on your trouthe

And if so be my gilt hath death deserued
Or if you list no more vpon me se
In guerdon yet of that I haue you serued
Beseche I you, mine owne ladie fre
That hereupon ye woulden write me
For loue of God, my right lode sterre
That death maie make an ende of al my wer.

If other cause aught doeth you for to dwel
That with your letter ye maie me recomfort
For though to me your absence is an hell
With pacience I woll my wo comfort
And with your letter of hope I woll disport
Now writeth swete, & let me thus nat plain
With hope or death, deliuereth me fro pain.

I wis mine owne dere harte true
I wote that whan ye nert vpon me se
So lost haue I mine heale, & eke mine hewe
Creseide shall not conne knowen me
I wis mine hartes daie, my ladie fre
So thursteth aie mine harte to behold
Your beaute, that vnneth my life I hold.

I saie no more, all haue I for to sey
To you well more than I tell maie
But whether that ye doe me liue or dey
Yet praie I God, so yeue you right good daie
And fareth well goodly faire freshe Maie
As ye that life or death me maie commaunde
And to your trouth aie I me recommaunde.

with heale soche, that but ye yeuen me
The same heale, I shall non heale haue
In you lieth, whan you list that it so be
The daie in whiche me clothē shall my graue
And in you my life, in you might for to saue
Me fro disease of all paines smarte
And fare now well mine owne swete harte.

Le vostre T.

This letter forthe was sent vnto Creseide
Of whiche her answere in effect was this Full pitously she wrote ayen, and seide
That also sone as she might i wis
She would come, & amēde all that was amis
And finally she wrote and saied then
She would come, ye, but she nist when.

But in her letter made she soche festes
That wonder was, & swore she loued him best
Of whiche he founde but botomles bihestes
But Troilus thou maiest now fast and wel Pipe in an Iuie leafe if that thee lest thus goth ỳ world, god shild vs fro mischaūce
And euery wight ỳ meaneth trouth auaunce

Encreasen gan the wo fro daie to night
Of Troilus, for tariyng of Creseide
And lessen gan his hope and eke his might
For whiche al doun he in his bedde him leide
He ne eate, dronke, ne slept, ne worde seide
Imagining aie that she was vnkinde
For which well nigh he wext out of his mind

This dreme, of which I told haue eke before
Maie neuer come out of his remembraunce
He thought aie well, he had his ladie lore
And that Ioues, of his purueiaunce
Him shewed had in slepe the significaunce
Of her vntrouth, and his disauenture
And that the boze was shewed him in figure

for

For whiche he for Sibille his fuſter ſent
That called was Calliandre eke all about
And all his dreame he told her er he ſtent
And her beſought alſoilen him the doubt
Of the ſtrong Boze, with tuſkes ſtout
And finally, within a little ſtounde
Calliandre him gan thus his dreme expound.

She gā firſt ſmile, and ſaid O brother dere
If thou a ſothe of this deſireſt to knowe
Thou muſt a lewe of old ſtories heare
To purpoſe how that fortune ouerthrowe
Hath lordes old, through which within a throw
Thou ſhalt this Boze know, & of what kinde Becomen is, as men in bokes finde.

Diane, whiche that wroth was and in ire
For Grekes nolde doen her Sacrifice
Ne encens vpon her Altar ſet on fire
She for that Grekes gon her ſo diſpiſe
Wrake her in a wonder cruell wiſe
For with a Boze as greate as ore in ſtall
She made vp frete her corne and vines all.

To ſlea ꝑ Boze was all the countrie reiſed Emong whiche there came this Boze to Maied, one of this worlde the beſt ipraiſed
And Meleager, lorde of that countre
Beloued ſo this freſche maiden fre
That with his manhode, er he would ſtent
This Boze he ſlough, and her the hed he ſent

Of whiche, as old bokes tellen vs
There roſe a contehe and a greate enuie
And of this Lorde diſcended Tideus
By ligne, or els old bokes lie
But how this Meleager gan to die
Through his mother, woll I you not tell
For all to long it were for to dwell.

She tolde eke how Tideus, er ſhe ſtent
Into the ſtrong cite of Thebes
To claimen kingdome of the cite) went
For his felawe dan Polimites
Of whiche the brother dan Ethiocles
Full wrongfully of Thebes held the ſtrength
This tolde ſhe by proceſſe all by length.

She tolde eke how Hemonides aſtarte
Whan Tideus ſlough fiftie knightes ſtoute
She tolde eke all the Propheſies by harte
And how that ſeuen kinges with her rout
Beſiegeden the cite all aboute
And of the holie Serpent, and the well
And of the furies all ſhe gan him tell.

Adiocat profugum, Tideus primo Polimi ſem
Tidea legatum docet inſidiaſq; ſecundis
Tertius Hermodien canit & vates latitantes
Morſfurie Leuine quinto narrantur & angues
Quartus habet reges meuntes prelia ſeptem
Arcſynon buſtum, ſexto ludiq; leguntur
Dat Grajos Thebes vatem ſeptimis vmbris.
Octuo cecidit Tideus ſpes vita pelagis
Ipomedon nono moritur, cum Parthonepeo
Fulmine percuſſo, decimo Canapus ſuperatur
Vndecimo ſeſe permunt per vulnera fratres
Arguam flentem, narrat duodenus & ignem.

Of Archinozies buriyng, and the plaies
And how Amphiozar fill through ꝑ grounde
How Tideus was ſlain, lorde of Argries
And how Hipomedon in a little ſtounde
Was dreint, and dedde Parthonepe of wound
And alſo how Campaneus the proude
With thōder dint was ſlain, that cried loude.

He gan eke tell him how that either brother
Ethiocles and Polimites alſo
At a ſcarmiſhe, eche of hem ſlough other
And of Argiues weping and her mo
And how the toun was brent ſhe told eke tho
And tho diſcended doune from teſtes old
To Diomede, and thus ſhe ſpake and told.

This ilke Boze betokeneth Diomede Tideus ſonne, that doune diſcended is Fro Meleager, that made the Boze to blede
And thy Ladie, where ſo ſhe be wis
This Diomede her harte hath, and ſhe is Wepe if thou wolt or leaue, for out of doubt
This Diomede is in, and thou art out.

Thou ſaieſt nat ſothe (ꝑ he) thou ſorcereſſe
With all thy falſe ghoſt of Prophecie
Thou weneſt been a greate deuinereſſe
Now ſeeſt thou nat this foole of fantaſie
Painen her on ladies for to lie
I waie (ꝑ he) there Joues peue thee ſorowe
Thou ſhalt be fals parauēture yet to morow

As well thou mighteſt lien on good Alceſte
That was of creatures (but men lie)
That euer weren, kindeſt and the beſte
For whan her huſbonde was in ieopardie
To die himſelf, but if ſhe would die
She cheſe for him to die, and gon to hell
And ſtarſe anon, as vs the bokes tell.

Calliandre goeth, and he with cruell harte
Forgate his wo, for angre of her ſpeche

And

And fro his bedde all sodainly he starte
As though all hole him had made a leche
And daie by daie he gan enquire and seche
A sothe of this, with all his full cure
And thus he driueth forthe his auenture.

Fortune, whiche that permutacion
Of all thinges hath, as it is her committed
Through purueiaunce and disposicion
Of high Joue, as reignes shall been flitted
Fro folk in folk, or whā thei shal ben smitted
Gan pull awaie the fethers bright of Troie
Fro daie to daie, till thei been bare of ioie.

Emong all this, the fine of the ieopardie
Of Hector gan approchen wonder bliue
The fate would his soule should vnbodie
And shapen had a meane it out to driue
Ayenst whiche fate him helpeth not to striue
But on a daie to fighten gan he wende
At whiche alas, he caught his liues ende.

For whiche me thinketh euery maner wight
That haunteth armes, ought to be waile
The death of him that was so noble a knight
For as he drough a king by thauentaile
Unware of this, Achilles through the maile
And through the bodie gan him for to riue
And thus the worthy knight was reft of liue

For whom as old bokes tellen vs
Was made soch wo, that tong it maie nat tel
And namely the sorowe of Troilus
That nert him was of worthinesse the well
And in this wo gan Troilus to dwell
That what for sorowe, loue, and for vnrest
Full oft a daie he bad his harte brest.

But natheless, thoughe he gon him dispaire
And drede aie that his ladie was vntrue
Yet aie on her his harte gan repaire
And as these louers doen, he sought aie newe
To get ayen Creseide bright of hewe
And in his harte he went her excusing
That Calcas caused all her tarying.

And oft time he was in purpose greate
Him selfen like a pilgrim to disguise
To seen her, but he maie not counterfeate
To been vnknowen of folke that weren wise
Ne finde excuse aright that maie suffice
If he emong the Grekes knowen were
For whiche he wept full oft many a teare.

To her he wrote yet oft time all newe
Full pitously, he left it nat for slouthe
Beseching her, sens that he was true
That she woll come ayen and hold her trouth
For whiche Creseide vpon a daie for routh
I take it so, touching all this mattere
Wrote him ayen, and saied as ye maie here.

Cupides sonne, ensample of goodlihede
O swerde of knighthode, sours of gentilnesse
How might a wight in turment and in drede
And healelesse you sende, as yet gladnesse
I hartelesse, I siche, I in distresse
Sens ye with me, nor I with you maie deale
You neither sende I harte maie nor heale.

your letters full the paper all iplainted
Conceiued hath mine hartes pite
I haue eke seen with teares all depainted
Your letter, and how that ye requiren me
To come ayen, whiche yet ne maie not be
But why, least that this letter founden wer
No mencion ne make I now for fere.

Greuous to me (God wote) is your vnrest
Your hast, and that the Goddes ordinaunce
It semeth nat ye take it for the best
Nor other thing nis in your remembraunce
As thinketh me, but onely your pleasaunce
But beth not wroth, and that I you beseche
For that I tarie is all for wicked speche.

For I haue heard well more than I wend
Touching vs two, how thinges haue stond
Whiche I shall with dissimuling amende
And beth nat wroth, I haue eke vnderstonde
How ye ne doe but holden me in honde
But now no force, I can nat in you gesse
But all trouthe and all gentilnesse.

Come I woll, but yet in soche disiointe
I stond as now, that what yere, or what daie
That this shall be, that can I nat apointe
But in effect I praie you as I maie
Of your good worde, & of your frendship aie
For truely while that my life maie dure
As for a frende ye maie in me assure.

Yet praie I you on euill ye ne take
That it is short, whiche that I to you write
I dare nat there I am well letters make Ne neuer yet ne could I well endite
Eke greate effect, men write in place lite
Thentent is all, and nat the letters space
And fareth well, God haue you in his grace.

This

This Troilus thouȝt this letter al straunge
Whan he it sawe, and sorowfully he sight
Him thought it like a kalendes of eschaunge
But finally he ful ne trowen might
That she ne would him holden that she hight
For with ful iuel wil liste him to leue
That loueth wel i such case thouȝ him greue

But natheles, men sain that at the last
For any thing, men shal the sothe se
And suche a case betide, and that as fast
That Troilus wel vnderstode that she Was nat so kinde, as that her ought be
And finally he wote now out of dout
That al is lost, that he hath ben about

Stode on a daie in his melancolie
This Troilus, and in suspection
Of her, for whom he wende to die
And so befil, that throughout Troie toun
As was the gise, iborne was vp and doun
Maner cote armoure, as saithe the storie
Sȝorn Deiphebe, in signe of his victorie

The whiche cote, as telleth Lollius
Deiphebe it had rente fro Diomede
The same daie, and when this Troilus
Is sawe, he gan to taken of it hede
Inting of the length and of the brede
And al the werke, but as he gan beholde
Suddainly his herte gan to colde

Is he that on the coler fonde within Broche, that he Creseide yaue at morow
That she from Troie must nedes twin
In remembraunce of him, and of his sorow
And she him laide ayen her faith to borow
To kepe it aie, but now ful wel he wist
His lady nas no longer on to trist

He goeth him home, and gan ful sone sende
For Pandarus, and al this newe chaunce
And of this broch he tolde him worde ende
Complaining of her hartes variaunce
His longe loue, his trouth, and his penaunce
And after death, without wordes more
Ful fast he cried, his rest him to restore

Than spake he thus, O lady mine Creseide
Where is your faith, and where is your behest?
Where is your loue, where is your trouth he Of Diomede haue ye now al this fest (seide
Alas, I would haue trowed at the lest
That sens ye nolde in trouthe to me stonde
That ye thus nolde haue holden me in honde

Who shal now trowen on any otheȝs mo?
Alas I neuer would haue wende er this
That ye Creseide couldc haue chaunged so
Ne but I had agilte, and done amis
So cruel wende I nat your harte i wis
To slee me thus, alas your name of trouthe
Is now forlone, and that is al my routhe

Was there none other broche you list lete
To feste with your newe loue (q he)
But thilke broche that I with teeres wete
You yaue, as for a remembraunce of me
None other cause alas, ne had ye
But for dispite, and eke for that ye mente
All vtterly to shewen your entente

Throuȝ which I se, ȝ clene out of your minde
Ye haue me cast, and I ne can nor maie
For al this world, within mine hart finde
To vnlouen you a quarter of a daie
Incursed time I borne was welawaie
That you that done me al this wo endure
Yet loue I best of any creature

Now God (q he) me sende yet the grace
That I maie meten with this Diomede
And truely, if I haue might and space
Yet shal I make I hope his sides blede
Now God (q he) that aughtest taken hede
To forthren trouthe, and wronges to punice
Why nilt thou don a pengeaunce of this vice

O Pandarus, that in dremes for to triste
Me blamed hast, and wontest art oft vpbreide
Now maist thou sene thy seife, if that the liste
How trewe is newe thy nece bright Creseide
In sondry formes (God it wote) he seide
The goddes shewen bothe ioie and tene
In slepe, and by my dreme it is now sene

And certainly, withouten more speche
From hence forthe, as ferforthe as I maie
Mine owne death in armes wol I leche
I retche nat how soone be the daie
But trewely Creseide, swete maie
Whom I haue with al my might iserued
That ye thus done, I haue it nat deserued

This Pandarus, that al these thinges herde
And wiste wel he said a sothe of this
Ne nat a worde ayen to him answerde
For sory of his frendes sorow he is
And shamed for his nece hath done amis
And stante astonied of these causes twaie
As stil as stone, o worde ne couldc he saie.

But at the last thus he spake, and seide
My brother dere, I may do the no more
What should I saine, I hate iwis Creseide
And God it wote I wol hate her euer more
And that thou me besoughtest don of yore
Hauing vnto mine honour ne my reste
Right no regarde, I did al that the leste

Yf I did aught, that might liken the
It is me leke, and of this treason now
God wote that it a sorow is to me
And dredelesse, for hartes ease of you Right faine I would amende it, wist I how
And fro this worlde, almighty God I praie
Deliuer her soone, I can no more saie

Great was the sorowe & plaint of Troilus
But forthe her course fortune aie gan holde
Creseide loueth the sonne of Tideus
And Troilus mote wepe in cares colde
Such is this worlde, who so it can beholde
In ech estate is litell hartes reste
God leue vs to take it for the beste

In many cruel batalle out of drede
Of Troilus, this like noble knight
(As men maie in these olde bokes rede)
Was sene his knighthod, & his great might
And dredelesse his ire daie and night
Ful cruelly the Grekes aie abought
(And alwaie most this Diomede) he sought

And oft time (I finde) that they mette
With blody strokes, and with wordes greate
Assaying how her speares were whette
And God it wote, with many a cruel heate
Gan Troilus vpon his helme to beate
But natheless, fortune naught ne would
Of out her honde that either dien should

And if I had taken for to write
The armes of this like worthy man
Than would I of his baitelles endite
And for that I to writen first began
Of his loue, I haue said as I can
His worthy dedes, who so liste hem here
Rede Dares, he can tel hem al ifere

Beseching euery lady bright of hewe
And euery gentil woman, what she be
All be it that Creseide was vntrewe
That for that gilte ye be nat wroth with me
Ye maie her gilte in other bokes se
And gladder I would write, if you leste
Penelopes trouth, and good Alceste

Ne saie I nat this al only for these men
But most for women that betraied be Through fals folke, god yeue hem sorow amen
That with her great witte and subtilte
Betraien you, and this meueth me
To speke, and in effecte you al I praie
Be the ware of men, & herkeneth what I saie

Go litel boke, go my litell tragedie
There God thy maker yet er that I die
So sende me might to make some comedie
But litell boke, make thou none enuie
But subiect ben vnto al poesie
And kisse the steppes, wher as thou seest pace
Of Virgil, Ouide, Homer, Lucan, & Stace

And for there is so greate diuersite
In English, and in writing of our tonge
So praie I to God, that none miswrite the Ne the misse metre, for defaute of tonge
And redde where so thou be, or els songe
That thou be vnderstonde, God I beseche
But yet to purpose of my rather speche

The wrathe, as I began you for to seie
Of Troilus, the Grekes boughten dere
For thousandes his hondes maden deye
As he that was withouten any pere
Saue in his time Hector as I can here
But welawaie, saue onely goddes wil
Dispitously him slough the fierse Achil

And when that he was slain in this manere
His light goste, ful blisfully is went Up to the holownesse of the seuenth spere
In his place leting euerich element
And there he sawe, with ful auisement
The erratike sterres, herkening armonie
With sownes ful of heuinesse melodie

And doun from thence, fast he gan auise
This litel spotte of earth, that with the see Enbraced is, and fully gan dispise
This wretched worlde, and helde al vanite
To respecte of the plaine felicite
That is in heauen aboue, and at the last
There he was slaine, his loking doun he cast

And in him selfe he lough, right at the wo
Of hem that wepten for his deathe so fast
And dampned all our werkes that folweth so
The blinde lust, whiche that may nat last
And shulden al our harte on heauen cast
And forthe he went, shortely for to tell
There as Mercury sorted him to dwel

Swiche

Suche fine hath Ector, this Troilus for loue
Suche fine hath all his great worthinesse
Suche fine hath his estate royal aboue
Such fine his trust, such fine hath his noblesse
Suche fine hath false worldes brotelnesse
And thus he gan his louing of Creseide
As I haue told, and in this wise he deide

O yonge freshe folkes, he or she
In whiche ye loue vp groweth with your age
Repaireth home from worldely vanite
And of your hartes, vp casteth the visage
To thilke God, that after his image
You made, and thinketh al nis but a faire
This world that passeth sone, as floures faire

And loueth him, the whiche right for loue
Upon a crosse our soules for to bey
First starte and rose, and sit in heuen aboue
For he nil falsen no wight dare I sey
That wol his hart al holly on him ley
And sens he best to loue is, and most meke
What nedeth fained loues for to seke

Lo here of painems, cursed olde rites
Lo here what al her goddes mate auaile
Lo here this wretched worldes appetites
Lo here the fine and guerdon for trauaile
Of Ioue, Apollo, of Mars, and such rascaile
Lo here the forme of olde clerkes speche
In poetrie, if ye her bokes seche

O mortal Gower, this boke I directe
To the, and to the Philosophicall Strode
To vouchsafe there nede is to correcte
Of your benignitees and zeles goode
And to the sothfast Christ that starte on roode
With al mine hart, of mercy euer I praie
And to the lorde aright, thus I speke and saie

Thou one, two, and thre, eterne on liue
That raignest aie in thre, two, and one
Uncircumscripte, and all maist circumscriue
As from visible and inuisible fone
Defende, and to thy mercy euerichone
So make vs Iesus to thy mercy digne
For loue of maide, and mother thin benigne.

Thus endeth the fifth booke, and lacke of Troilus: and here foloweth the pitefull and dolorous testament of faire Creseide.

(2)

The testament of Creseide.

Doly season till a careful dite
Should correspond and be equiuolent
Right so it was whan I began to write
This tragedy, the weder right feruent
Whan aries in middes of the lent
Showres of haile can fro the North discende
That scatly fro the cold I might me defende

Yet neuertheless within mine oratore
I stode, whan Titan had his beames bright
Withdrawen doun, and seyled vnder cure
And faire Uenus the beaute of the night
Upraise, and sette vnto the weste ful right
Her golden face in oppositioun
Of God Phebus directe discending doun

Throuzout the glasse her beames brast so faire
That I might se on euery side me by The northren winde had purified the aire
And shedde his milky cloudes fro the skie
The froste freseth, the blastes bitterly
Fro poole Artike come whistling loud and shill
And caused me remoue ayenst my will

For I trusted that Uenus loues Quene
To whom sometime I high obediente
My saded hart of loue she would make grene
And therupon with humble reuerence
I thought to praie her hie magnificence
But for great colde as than I letted was
And in my chambre to the fire can pas

Though loue be hote, yet in a man of age
It kindleth nat so soone as in youthed
Of whom the blode is flowing in a rage
And in the olde, the corage dul and ded
Of whiche the fire out warde is best remed
To helpe by phisike wher that nature failed
I am experte, for bothe I haue assailed

I made the fire and beated me aboute
Than toke I drinke my spirites to comforte
And armed me wel fro the colde theroute
To cutte the winter night and make it shorte
I toke a queare, and lefte al other sporte Writen by worthy Chaucer glorious
Of faire Creseide, and lusty Troilus

And there I founde after that Diomede
Receiued had that lady bright of hewe
How Troilus nere out of his witte abrede
And wept sore, with visage pale of hewe
For whiche wanhope his teares gan renewe
While Esperus reioysed him againe
Thus while in ioie he liued, & while in paine

Of her behest he had great comforting
Trusting to Troie that she wold make retour
Whiche he desired most, of al erthly thing
For why she was his onely paramour
But whan he sawe passed both day and hour
Of her gaincome, in sorowe can oppresse
His wofull harte, in care and heuinesse

Of his distresse me nedeth nat reherse
For worthy Chaucer in that same boke
In goodly termes, and in ioly verse
Compiled hath his cares who will loke
To breke my slepe another quearc I toke
In which I founde the fatal destenye
Of faire Creseide, which ended wretchedly

Who wote if all ỹ Chaucer wrate was trewe
Nor I wote nat if this narracion
Be authorised, or forged of the newe
Of some Poete by his inuencion
Made to reporte the lamentacion
And wofull ende of this lusty Creseide
And what distresse she was in or she deide

Whan Diomede had al his appetite
And more fulfilled of this faire lady
Upon another sette was al his delite
And sende to her a libel repudy
And her excluded fro his company
Than desolate she walked vp and doune
As some men saine, in ỹ courte as commune

O faire Creseide, the floure and a per se
Of Troie & Grece, how were thou fortunate
To chaunge in filthe al thy feminite
And be with fleshly lust so maculate
And go among the Grekes erly and late
So giglotlike, taking thy foule plesaunce
I haue pite the should fall suche mischaunce

Yet neuertheles, what euer men deme or say
In scornfull language of thy brutelnesse
I shall excuse, as ferforth as I may Thy womanhed, thy wisedome and fairnesse
The which fortune hath put to suche distresse
As her pleased, & nothing throughe the gilte
Of the, through wicked langage to be spilte

This faire lady on this wise destitute
Of al comforte and consolation
Right priuely without felowship or refute
Dispeuelde, passed out of the toun
A mile or two vnto a mansioun
Bilded ful gaie, wher her father Calcas
Which than amõg the grekes dwelling was

Whan her he sawe, the cause he can enquire
Of her comming, she said sighing ful sore
Fro Diomede had gotten his desire
He wore wery and would of me no more
O Calcas doughter wepe thou nat therfore
Parauenture al cometh for the best
Welcome to me thou art ful dere a gest

This olde Calcas, after the lawe was than
Was keper of the temple as a preest
In whiche Uenus and her sonne Cupido
Were honoured, and his chambre was nest
To which Creseide with bale enewed in hest
Used to passe, her praiers for to saie
While at the last vpon a solempne daie

As custome was, the people ferre and nere
Before the noone, vnto the temple went
With sacrifice deuout in their manere
But stil Creseide heuy in her entent
Into the Church would nat her selfe present
For giuing of the people any deming
Of her expulse fro Diomede the king

But passed into a secrete oratore
Where she might wepe her wofull destenye
Behinde her backe, she closed fast the dore
And on her knees bare fel doun in hie
Upon Uenus and Cupide angerly
She cried out, and said in this wise
Alas that euer I made you sacrifice

Ye gaue me ones a diuine responsaile
That I should be the floure of loue in Troie
Now am I made an vnworthy outwaile
And al in care translated is my ioie
Who shal me gide? who shal me now conuoie
Sithe I fro Diomede, and noble Troilus
Am clene excluded, as abiect odious

O false Cupide, none is to wite but thou
And the mother of loue, that blinde goddesse
Ye caused me vnderstande alwaie and trow
The seede of loue was sowen on my face
And aie grewe grene throuz your sople grace
But now alas, that seede with frost is slaine
And I fro louers left and all forlaine

Whan

Whan this was said, doun in an ertaly
Rauished in spirite, in a dreame she fel
And by apparaunce herde where she did lie
Cupide the king tinging a siluer bel
Which men might here fro heuen into hel
At whose sounde before Cupide aperes
The seuen planets discēding fro their speres

Whiche hath power of al thing generable
To rule and stere by their great influence
Weder and winde, and course variable
And first of al Saturne gaue his sentence
Whiche gaue to Cupide litel reuerence
But as a boistus chorle in his manere
Came crabbedly with austrine loke & chere

His face frounsed, his here was like the lede
His teethe chattred, and sheuered with ỳ chin
His eien drouped hole sonken in his heed
Out at his nose the mildrop fast gan rin
With lippes blo, and cheekes leane and thin
The Icicles that fro his beer doune honge
Was wonder great, and as a speare as longe

Attour his belte his liart lockes laie
Filtred vnfaire, ouer fret with frostes hoore
His garment and his gate ful gay of graie
His widdred wede fro him ỳ winde out woore
A boustous bowe within his honde he bore
Under his girdle a fasshe of felone flains
Fedred with ile, and headed with hollains

Than Jupiter right faire and amiable
God of the sterres in the firmament
And norice to al thing generable
Fro his father Saturne farre different
With burly face, and browes bright and brēt
Upon his heed a garlonde wonders gaie
Of floures faire, as it had ben in Maie

His voice was clere, as cristal was his eien
As golden wier so glittring was his heare
His garment and his gite ful gaie of grene
With golden listes gilte on euery geare
A burly brande about his middle he beare
And in his right hād he had a grounde speare
Of his father, the wrothe fro vs to bere

Nert after him came Mars the God of ire
Of strife, debate, and all discencioun
To chide and fight, as fierse as any fire
In harde harnesse hewmonde & habergioun
And on his haunch a roustly fel fauchoun
And in his hande he had a roustly swerde
Writhing his face, with many angry worde

Shaking his brande, before Cupide he come
With red visage, and grisly glowing eien.
And at his mouthe a blubber flode of fome
Like to a bore, whetting his tuskes kene
Right tulsure like, but temperaunce in tene
And in horne blewe with many boustous bragge
Whiche al this world with warre hath made to wagge.

Than faire Phebus, lanterne & lape of light
Of man and beest, both fruite and floryshing
Tender norice, and banisher of night
And of the worlde, causing by his moning
And influence, life in al erthly thing
Without comforte of whom of force to noust
Must go die, that all this world hath wroust

As king royall, he rode vpon a chare
The whiche Pluton somtime gided vnright
The brightnesse of his face whan it was bare
Non might beholde, for persing of his sight
This golden carte with firy beames bright
Foure yoked stedes ful different of hewe
But baite or tiring through the speres drewe

The first was forde, with mane as reed as rose Called Eoye into the orient
The seconde stede to name, hight Ethiose
Whitely and pale, and somdele ascendent
The thirde Perose, right hote & ebe feruent
The fourth was blacke, called Philologee
Which rolleth Phebus doun into the see

Venus was there present, that goddes gay
Her sonnes quarel to defende and mayntene
His owne complaint, cladde in a nice aray
The one halfe grene, tothere half sable blake
White heer as Gold, kembed and shede abake
But in her face semed great variaunce
While parfite truth, and whitles inconstaūce

Under smiling she was dissimulate
Prouocatiue with blinkes amorous
And sodainly chaunged and alterate
Angry, as any serpent venemous
Right pungitiue with wordes odious
Thus variaunt she was who list take kepe
With one eye laugh, and with the other wepe

In tokening that al fleshely paramour
Which Venus hath in rule and gouernaūce
Is somtime swete, somtime bitter and sour
Right vnstable and ful of variaunce
Minged with careful ioye & false pleasaunce
Now hotte now colde, now blith, now ful of wo
Now grene as lefe, now widred & ago.

With boke in hand, than come Mercurious
Right eloquent and ful of rethoryne
With polite termes and delicious
With penne and inke to repoꝛte al redie Setting soꝛges, and singing merely
His hode was reed hecled attour his croun
Like til a Poete of the olde facioun

Bores he bare with fine electuares
And sugred sropes foꝛ digestion
Spices belonging to the potiquares
With many holsome swete confection
Docter in phisike cledde in a scarlet goun
And furred wel as suche one ought to be Honest and good, and nat a woꝛde couth lie

Nert after him come lady Sinthia
The laste of al, and swiftest in her spere
Of colour blake, busked with hoꝛnes twa
And in the night she listeth best tapere
Hawe as the leed, of colour nothing clere
Foꝛ al the light she boꝛoweth at her bꝛother
Titan, foꝛ of her selfe she hath non other

Her gite was gray and ful of spottes blake
And on her bꝛest a choꝛle painted ful euen
Bearing a bushe of thoꝛnes on his bake
Whiche foꝛ his theft mizt clime no ner ꝑ heuē
Thus when thei gadꝛed were ꝑ goddes seuen
Mercurius thei chosed with one assent
To be foꝛe speker in the parliment

Who had ben there and lihing foꝛ to here
His faconde tonge, and termes exquisite
Of rethoꝛike the pꝛactike he might lere
In bꝛefe sermon, a pꝛeignant sentence wꝛite
Before Cupide valing his cappe a lite
Sper is the cause of that vacacioun
And he anon shewde his entencioun

Lo ꝙ Cupide, who wol blaspheme ꝑ name
Of his owne God, either in woꝛde oꝛ dede
To all goddes he doeth bothe losse and shame
And should haue bitter paines to his mede
I saie this by yonder wꝛetche Creseide
The whiche through me was cōtime flour of Me & my mother she stately can repꝛoue (loue

Saiyng of her great infelicite
I was the cause, and my mother Venus
She called a blinde goddes and might nat se
With sclaunder and defame iniurious
Thus her liuing vnclcane and lecherous
She would retoꝛte in me and my mother
To whom I shewde my grace aboue al other

And sithe ye are al seuen delicate
Perticipant of diuine sapience
This great iniury done to our hie estate
We thinke wt paine we should make recōpence
Was neuer to goddes done suche violence
As wel foꝛ you as foꝛ my selfe I saie
Therfoꝛe go helpe to reuenge I you pꝛaie

Mercurius to Cupide gaue answere
And said, sir king: my counsaile is that ye Referre you to the hiest planet here
And take to him the loweste of degree
The paine of Creseide foꝛ to modifie
As God Saturne with him take Sinthia
I am content (ꝙ he) to take thei twa

Than thus pꝛoceded Saturne and the Mone
Whan thei the mater ripely had degest
Foꝛ the dispite to Cupide that she had done
And to Venus open and manifest
In al her life with paine to be oppꝛest
And turment soꝛe, with sicheneste incurable
And to al louers be abhominable

This doleful sentence Saturne toke on hande
And passed doun where carefull Creseide laie
And on her heed he laide a frosty wande
Than laufully on this wise can he saie
Thy great faireneste, and al thy beauty gaie
Thy wanton blode, and eke thy golden heꝛe
Here I exclude fro the foꝛ euermeꝛe

I chaunge thy mirthe into melancoly
Whiche is the mother of al pensiueneste
Thy moiste and thy hete, into colde and dꝛy
Thine insolence, thy plaie, & thy wantōneste
To great disease, thy pompe and thy richeste
Into moꝛtal nede and great penurie
Thou suffre shalt, and as a begger die

O cruel Saturne, fro warde and angric
Harde is thy dome, and to malicious
Of faire Creseide, why hast thou no mercie
Whiche was so swete, gentill and amoꝛous
Withdꝛawe thy sentence and be gracious
As ꝑ were neuer, so sheweth thꝛouz thy dede
I wzelieful sentence giuen on Creseide

Than Sinthia, whā Saturne past awai
Out of her seate, discended doun blithe
And reed a bill on Creseide where she laie
Containing this sentence diffinitiue
Fro heale of body here I thee depꝛiue
And to thy sicheneste shalbe no recure
But in dolour thy daies to endure

Thy

Thy chrystal yen menged w blood I make Thy voice so clere vnpleasaunt heer and hace
Thy lustie lere ouerspred with spottes blake
And lumpes hawe appering in thy face
Where thou comest eche man shall flie ꝑ place
Thus walt ꝑ go begging fro hous to hous
With cuppe and clapper like a Lazarous.

This doolie dreame, this vgly visioun
Wrought till an ende, Creseide fro it awoke
And all that courte and conuocacioun
Vanished awaie, than rose she vp and toke
A polished glasse, and her shadowe couth loke
And whan she sawe her visage so deformate
Of he in harte were wo, I ne wite God wate

Weping full sore, lo what it is (q she)
With froward langage to moue and stere
Our crabbed Goddes, and so is seen on me
By blaspheming now haue I bought ful dere
All earthly ioie and mirthe I set arere
Alas this daie, alas this wofull tide
That I began with my Goddes to chide.

Ye this was saied, a child came fro the hal
To warne Creseide the supper was redie
First knocked at the doore, and eft couth call Madame, your father biddeth you cum in hie
He hath marueile so long on grose ye lie
And saith your beades bet be to long somdele
The Goddes wote all your entent full wele.

Q the faire childe, go to my father dere
And praie him come to speake with me anon
And so he did, and saied daughter what chere Alas (q she father, my mirthe is gon
How so (q he) and she can all ꝛpon
As I haue told, the vengeaunce, ꝛ the wrake
For her trespas, Cupide on her couth take.

He loked on her vgly Lepers face
The whiche before was white as Lely flour
Wringing his handes, oftimes saied alace
That he had liued to se that wofull hour
For he knewe well that there was no socour
To her sickenesse, and that doubled his pain
Thus was there care inow betwirt hē twain.

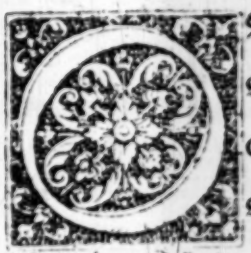

Whan thei togider mourned had full lang
Q Creseide, father I would nat be kende
Therfore in secrete wise ye let me gange.
To yon Hospitall at the tounes ende
And thider some meate for charite me sende
To liue vpon, for all mirthe in this yearth
Is fro me gone, sothe is my wicked werth.

Whan in a mantill, and a Beuer hat
With cuppe and clapper wonder priuely
He opened a secrete gate and out therat
Conueied her, that no man should espie
There to a village halfe a mile therbie
Deliuered her in at the Spittell hous
And daily sende her part of his almous.

Sum knew her well ꝛ sum had no knowlege
Of her, because she was so deformate
With biles blake ouerspred in her visage
And her faire colour faded and alterate
Yet thei presumed for her hie regrate
And stil mourning she was of noble kin
With bitter will there thei toke her Inne.

The daie passed, and Phebus went to rest
The cloudes blake ouerwheled all the Skie
God wote ful Creseide were a sorowfull gest
Seing that vncouth fare and herbrie
But meate or drinke she dresled her to lie.
In a darke corner of the hous alone
And on this wise weping she made her mone

¶ Here folowth the complaint of Creseide.

Soppe of sorowe sonken into care
O caitife Creseide now and euermare
Gon is thy ioie and al thy mirthe in yearth
Of all blichnesse now art thou blake and bare
There is no salue maie helpe thy sare
Fell is thy fortune, wicked is thy werthe
Thy blisse is banished and thy bale vnberde
Vnder the greate God if I grauen ware
Whom men of Greece ne yet of Troie mizt herd

Where is thy chamber wantonly be seen
With burly bedde and banners brouded bee
Spices and wine to thy colatioun
The cuppes all of gold and siluer shene
Thy swete meates serued in plates clene
With sauerie sauce of a good fashioun
Thy gaie garmētes with many goodly goun
Thy plesaunt laune pinned with goldē pene
All is arere thy greate estait renoun

Where is thy gardein with thy greces gaie
And freshe floures, whiche the quene Florate
Had painted plesauntly in euery pane
Where thou were wont full merily in Maie
To walke, and take the dewe be it was daie

And heare the Perle and Pauise manyone
With ladies faire in carrolling to gone
And se the roiall renkes in their raie.

This leper loge take for thy goodly boure
And for thy bed, take now a bounche of stro
For waled wine and meates thou had tho
Take mouled bread, pirate, and sider soure
But cuppe and clapper is all now ago

My clere voice and my courtly carolling
Is ranke as rote, full hidous heer and hace
Deformed is the figure of my face
To loke on it no people hath liking
So sped in sight, I saie with sore sighing
Lying emong the leper folke alas.

O ladies faire of Troie and Grece attende
My freile fortune, mine infelicite
My great mischief which no man can amend
And in your minde a mirrour make of me
As I am now parauenture that ye
For al your might may come to the same ende
Or els worse if any worse maie be Beware therefore approches nere your ende.

Nought is your fairnesse but a fading floure
Nought is your famous laude & hie honour
But winde inflate in other mennes eares
Your rosing redde to roting shall retoure
Exemple make of me in your memore
Which of loche thiges, wofull witnes beares
All welth in yearth, as wind awaie it weares
Beware therfore approcheth nere your hour

Thus chiding with her drerie destenie
Weping, she woke the night fro ende to ende
But all in vain her dole, her carefull crie might not remedy, ne yet her mourning mend
A leper ladie rose, and to her wende
And saied, why spurnes thou again the wall
To slea thy self, and mende nothing at all

Sith that thy weping but doubleth thy wo
I counsaile thee make vertue of a nede
Go learne to clappe thy clapper to and fro
And learne after the lawe of lepers lede
There was no bote but forthw̄ than she yede
Fro place to place, while cold and hūger sore Compelled her to be a ranke beggore.

That same time of Troie the garnisoun
Whiche had the chieftain worthy Troilus
Throuz ieoperdy of warre had striken doun
Knightes of Grece in nomber marueilous
With greate triumphe, and laude victorious
Again to Troie right roially thei rode
The waie wher Creseide with the leper stode

Seing that companie come all with o stevin
Thei gaue a crie, and shoke cupps good spede
Worthie lordes, for Goddes loue of heuin
To vs leper, part of your almose dede
Than to her crie noble Troilus toke hede
Hauing pite, nere by the place gan pas
Wher Creseide sat, nat weting what she was

Than vpon him she hefte vp bothe her yen
And with a blinke it come in till his thought
That he somtime her face before had seen
But she was in soche plite he knew her nowt yet than her loke into his minde he brought The swete visage, and amorous blenking
Of faire Creseide, somtime his own derling.

No wonder was, suppose in mind that he Toke her figure so sone, and so now why
The Idoll of a thing in case maie be
So depe enprinted in the fantasie
That it deludeth the wittes outwardly
And so appereth in forme and like estate
Within the minde, as it was figurate.

A sparke of loue thā til his hart couth spring
And kindeled his bodie in a fire
With hote feuer, in swette, and trembling
Him toke, while he was readie to erspire
To beare his shilde his brest begon to tire
Within a while he chaunged many a hewe
And neuertheles nat one an other knewe.

For knightly pite and memoriell
Of faire Creseide, a girdell gan he take
A purse of gold, and many a gate iewell
And in the shirte of Creseide doun can shake
Than rode awaie, and nat a worde he spake
Pensife in harte while he came to the toune
And for great care oft sith almoste fell doune

The lepre folke to Creseide than couth drawe
To se the equall distribucioun
Of the almose, but whan the gold they sawe
Eche one to other priuely can roun
And saied, yon lorde hath more affection
How euer it be, vnto you Lazarous
Than to vs all, we knewe by his almous.

What lorde is yon (q̄ she) haue ye no fele
That doeth to vs so greate humanite
Yes q̄ a lepre man, I knowe him wele

Sir

Sir Troilus it is, a knight gentle and free Whan Creſeide vnderſtode that it was he Stiller than ſtele there ſterte a bitter ſtound
Throughout her hart, & ſtill doune to ỹ groũd

Whan ſhe ouercome with ſighing ſore & ſad
With many a carefull crie and cold atone
Lowis my breſt with ſtormie ſtoundes ſtad
Wrapped in wo wretche ſtill will of one
Whan ſelf in ſwoun ful oft or ſhe would ſone
And euer in her ſwouning cried ſhe thus
O falſe Creſeide, and true knight Troilus

Thy loue, thy laude, and all thy gentineſſe
Iompted ſmall in my proſperite
Beſtated I was in wantonneſſe
And clambe vpon the tickell whele ſo hie
Vnfaithe and loue I promitted to thee
Was in thy ſelf rebell and furious
O falſe Creſeide, and true knight Troilus.

For loue of me thou kept countenaunce
Honeſt and chaſt in conuerſacion
Of all women protectour and defence
Thou were, and helped their opinion
My minde on fleſhly foule affection
Was enclined to luſtes lecherous
Fie falſe Creſeide, o true knight Troilus.

Louers beware, and take good hede about Whom that ye loue, for whan ye ſuffre pain
I let you wit there is right fewe throughout Whom ye maie truſt to haue true loue again
Proue whan ye woll your labour is in vain
Therefore I rede ye take them as ye finde
For thei are fad as Wedercoche in winde.

Becauſe I know the greate vnſtableneſſe
Both as glaſſe, vnto my ſelf I ſaie
Truſting in other as greate bruteleneſſe
Is inconſtaunt, and as vntrue of laie
Though ſome be true, I wot right fewe ar thei
Who findeth truthe, let him his lady ruſe
None but my ſelf as now I woll accuſe.

Whan this was ſaid, with paper ſhe ſat doun
And in this maner made her teſtament
Here I bequeth my corſe and cartoun
With wormes and with Coodes to be rent
My cuppe, my clapper, and mine ornament
And all my gold, theſe lepre folke ſhall haue
Whan I am dedde, to burie me in graue.

This roiall ring ſet with this Rubie redde
Whiche Troilus in dowrie to me ſende
To him again I leaue it whan I am dedde
To make my carefull death vnto him kende
Thus I conclude ſhortly and make an ende
My ſpirit I leue to Diane where ſhe dwelles
To walke with her in wall wodes & welles.

O Diomede thou haſt bothe broche & belte
Whiche Troilus gaue me in tokening
Of his true loue, & with that worde ſhe ſwelt
And ſone a leaper man toke of the ring
Than buried her withouten tarying
To Troilus forth with the ring he bare
And of Creſeide the death he can declare.

Whan he had heard her greate infirmite
Her legacie, and lamentacioun
And how ſhe ended in ſoche pouerte
He ſwelt for wo and fell doune in a ſwoun
For ſorowe his harte to braſt was boun
Sighing full ſadly ſaied I can no more
She was vntrue, and wo is me therfore.

Some ſaith he made a tõbe of marble graie
And wrote her name and ſuperſcripcioun
And laied it on her graue where as ſhe laie
In golden letters, conteining this reaſoun
Lo faire ladies, Creſeide of Troie the toun
Sometime compted the floure of womanhed
Vnder this ſtone, late leper lieth dedde.

Now worthy women in this balade short
Made for your worſhip and inſtruction
Of charite I monithe and exhorte
Minge nat your loue with falſe diſcepcion
Beare in your minde this fore concluſion
Of faire Creſeide, as I haue ſaied before
Sith ſhe is dedde, I ſpeake of her no more.

¶ Thus endeth the pitefull and dolorous Teſtamente of faire Creſeide: and here foloweth the Legende of good women.

¶ The Legende of good women.

THouſande times I haue heard men tell
That there is ioie in heauen and pain in hell
And I accord it wele that it is ſo
But natheleſſe yet wot I wele alſo

That

The Prologue.

That there nis non dwelling in this countre
That either hath in heauen or in hell ioe
Ne maie of it none other waies witten
But as he heard saied, or found it written
For by assaie there maie no man it preue
But God forbede, but men should leue
Well more thing than thei han seen with ye
Men shall nat weenen euery thing a lie
But if himself it seeth, or els it doeth
For God wote thing is never the lesse soth
Though euery wight ne maie it not isee
Bernarde the Monke ne saugh all parde
Than mote we to bookes that we finde (Through which ỹ old thinges ben in minde
And to the doctrine of these old wise)
Yeue credence, in euery skilfull wise
That tellen of these old approued stories
Of holines, of reignes, of victories
Of loue, of hate, and other sondrie thinges
Of whiche I maie not make rehearsinges
And if that old bookes were awaie
Alone were of all remembraunce the haie.
Well ought vs than honouren and beleue
These bookes, there we han none other preue
And as for me, though that I can but lite
On bookes for to rede I me delite
And to hem yeue I faithe and full credence
And in mine harte haue hem in reuerence
So hartely, that there is game none
That fro my bookes maketh me to gone
But it be seldome on the holie daie
Saue certainly, whan ỹ the month of Maie
Is comen, and that I heare the foules sing
And that the floures ginnen for to spring
Farwell my booke, and my deuotion.
Now haue I than eke this condicion
That of all the floures in the Mede
Than loue I moste these floures white & rede
Soche that men callen Daisies in our toun
To hem haue I so greate affection
As I saied erst, whan comen is the Maie
That in my bedde there daweth me no daie
That I nam vp, and walking in the Mede
To seen this floure ayenst the Sunne sprede
Whan it vp riseth early by the morowe
That blisfull sight softeneth all my sorowe
So glad am I, whan that I haue presence
Of it, to doen it all reuerence
As she that is of all floures floure
Fulfilled of all vertue and honoure
And euery like faire, and fresshe of hewe
And euer I loue it, and euer like newe
And euer shall, till that mine harte die
All sweare I not of this, I will not lie
There loued no wight hotter in his life
And whan that it is eue I renne blithe
As lone as euer the Sunne ginneth west
To seen this floure, how it will go to rest
For feare of night, so hateth she derkenesse
Her chere is plainly spred in the brightnesse
Of the Sunne, for there it will vnclose
Alas that I ne had Englishe, rime, or prose
Sufficiaunt, this floure to praise aright
But helpeth ye, that han cõning and might Ye louers that can make of sentement
In this case ought ye be diligent
To forthren me some what in my labour
Whether ye been with the lefe or with ỹ flour
For well I wote, that ye han here before
Of making, ropen, and lad awaie the corne
And I come after, glening here and there
And am full glad, if I maie finde an eare
Of any goodly worde that ye han left
And though it happen me to rehearsen eft
That ye han in your freshe songes saied
Forbeareth me, and beth not euill apaied
Sith that ye se, I doe it in the honour
Of loue: and eke in seruice of the flour
Whom that I serue, as I haue wit or might
She is the clerenesse and the very light
That in this derke world me wint and leden
The hart, with my sorowful brest you dreden
And loueth so sore, that ye been verily
The maistres of my wit, and nothing I
My word, my workes, is knit so in your bõde
That as an harpe obeieth to the honde
And maketh it soune after his fingering
Right so mowe ye out of mine harte bring Soch voice, right as you list, to laugh or plain
Be ye my guide, and Ladie souerain
As to mine yearthly God, to you I call
Bothe in this werke, and my sorowes all
But wherfore that I spake to yeue credence
To old stories, and doen hem reuerence
And that men musten more thing bileue
That men maie seen at ye, or els preue
That shall I sein, whan that I se my time
I maie nat all atones speake in rime
My bulie ghost, that thurseth alwaie newe
To seen this flour so yong, so freshe of hewe
Constrained me, with so gredie desire
That in mine harte I fele yet the fire
That made me to rise er it were daie
And this was now the first morowe of Maie
With dredfull harte, and glad deuocion
For to been at the resurrection
Of this floure, whan that it should vnclose
Again the Sunne, that rose as redde as rose
That in the brest was of the beast that daie
That Ingenores doughter ladde awaie

And

And doune on knees anon right I me sette
And as I could, this freshe floure I grette Kneling alwaie, till it vnclosed was Upon the smalle, soft, swete gras
That was with floures swete embrouded al
Of soche swetnesse, and soche odour ouer all
That for to speake of gomme, herbe, or tre Comparison maie none imaked be
For it surmounteth plainly all odoures
And of riche beaute of floures
Forgotten had the pearth his poore estate
Of winter, that him naked made and mate
And with his sworde of cloud so sore greued
Now hath the atempre sonne al that releued
That naked was, and clad it newe again
The smalle fowles, of the season fain
That of the panter and the net been scaped
Upon the fowler, that hem made awhaped
In winter, and destroied had her brood
In his dispite him thought it did him good
To sing of him, and in her song dispise
The foule chorle, that for his couetise
Had hem betraied, with his Sophistrie
This was her song: The fouler we defie
And all his crafte, and some songen clere
Laies of Loue, that ioie it was to here
In worshipping and praising of her make
And for the newe blisfull Somers sake
Upon the braunches full of blosmes soft
In her delite, thei tourned hem full oft
And songen, blissed be sainct Valentine
For on his daie I chese you to be mine
Withouten repenting, mine harte swete
And therwithall her beckes gonnen mete
Yelding honour, and humble obeisaunce
To loue, and diddon her other obseruaunce
That longeth vnto loue, and vnto nature
Constrewe that as you list, I doe no cure
And tho that had doen vnkindenesse
Is doeth the Tidise, for newe fangelnesse
Besought mercie of her trespasing
And humbly song her repenting
And sworen on the blosmes to be true
So that her makes would vpon hem rue
And at the last maden her accorde
Al found thei Daunger for the time a lorde
Yet Pite, through his strong gentill might Forgaue, and made mercie passen right
Through Innocence, and ruled Curtesie
But I ne cleape it nat Innocence folie
Ne false pite, for vertue is the meane
As Ethike saieth, in soche maner I meane
And thus these foule, voide of all malice
Accorded to Loue, and lafton vice
Of hate, and song all of one accorde
Welcome Sommer, our governour and lorde
And zephirus, and Flora gentelly
Praie to the floures soft and tenderly
Her swote breth, and made hem for to sprede
As God and Goddesse of the flourie Mede
In whiche me thought I might daie by daie
Dwellen alwaie, the holy monthe of Maie
Withouten slepe, withouten meate or drinke
I doune full softly I gan to sinke
And leaning on my elbowe and my side
The longe daie I shope me for to abide
For nothing els, and I shall nat lie
But for to loke vpon the Deisie
That well by reason men it call maie
The Deisie, or els the ye of the daie
The emprise, and floure of floures all
I praie to God that faire mote she fall
And all that louen floures, for her sake
But natheless, ne wene nat that I make
In praising of the floure again the lefe
No more than of the corne again the chefe
For as to me nis leuer none ne lother
I nam with holden yet with neuer nother
Ne I not who serueth lefe, ne who the floure
Well brouken thei her seruice or laboure
For this thing is all of an other tonne
Of old storie, er soche thing was begonne
Whan that the sunne out the South gan weste
And that this floure gan close, and gan to reste
For derkenes of the night, the which she drede
Home to mine house full swiftly I me spede
To gone to rest, and earely for to rise
To seen this floure to sprede, as I deuise
And in a little herber that I haue
That benched was on turues freshe igraue
I bad men should me my couche make
For deintie of the newe Sommers sake
I bad hem strawen floures on my bedde
Whan I was laied, and had mine eyen hedde
I fell a slepe, and slept an houre or two Me met how I laie in the Medowe tho
To seen this floure, that I loue so and drede
And from a ferre came walking in the Mede
The God of Loue, and in his hande a Quene
And she was clad in roiall habite grene
A fret of golde she had nert her heere
And vpon that a white croune she beare
With flourouns small, and I shall nat lie
For all the worlde right as a Deisie
Icrouned is, with white leaues lite
So were the florouns of her croune white
For of o perle fine orientall
Her white croune was imaked all
For which the white croune, aboue the grene
Made her like a Deisie for to seme

Considere

Considred eke her fret of gold aboue
Iclothed was this mightie God of Loue
In silke embroided, full of grene greues
In whiche a fret of redde rose leues
The freshest lens the worlde was first begon
His gilt heere was crouned with a son
In stede of gold, for heuinesse and weight
Therwith me thought his face shone so bright
That well vnnethes might I him behold
And in his hand, me thought I sawe him hold
Two firie dartes, as the gledes rede
And Angelike his winges sawe I spredе
And all be that men sain, that blinde is he Algate me thought that he might se
For sternely on me he gan behold
So that his loking doeth mine harte cold
And by the hande he held this noble Quene
Crouned with white, and clothed al in grene
So womanly, so benigne, and so mete
That in this worlde though þ men wold sete
Halfe her beaute should thei not finde
In creature that formed is by kinde
And therfore mate I sain as thinketh me
This song in praising of this Ladie fre

Hide Absolon thy gilt tresses clere
Hester lat thou thy meknesse all adoun
Hide Jonathas all thy frendly manere
Penelopee, and Marcia Catoun
Make of your wifehode no comparisoun
Hide your beauties, Isoude and Helein
My ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

Thy faire bodie let it not appere
Lauine, and thou Lucrece of Rome toun
And Polixene, that boughten loue so dere
And Cleopatras, with all thy passioun
Hide your trouthe of loue, and your renoun
And thou Tisbe, that hast of loue soche pain
My Ladie cometh, that all this maie distain

Hero, Dido, Laodomia, all ifere
And Phillis, hanging for Demophoun
And Canace, espied by thy chere
Hipsiphile betraied with Jasoun
Maketh of your trouth neither bokе ne soun
Nor Hipermistre, or Ariadne, ye twain
My ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

This balade maie full well ilongen be
As I haue saied erst, by my ladie fre
For certainly, all these mowe not suffice
To apperen with my Ladie in no wise
For as the Sunne will the fire distain
So passeth all my Ladie souerain
That is so good, so faire, so debonaire
I praie to God that euer fall her faire
For had comfort been of her presence
I had been dedde, withouten any defence
For drede of Loues wordes, and his chere
As whan time is, herafter ye shall here.

Behinde this God of Loue vpon the grene
I sawe coming of Ladies ninetene
In roiall habit, a full easie pace
And after hem came of women soche a trace
That sens that God Adam had made of yerth
The third part of mankinde, or the berth
Ne wende I nat by possibilite
Had euer in this wide worlde ibe
And true of loue, these women were echon
Now whether was þ a wonder thing or non
That right anon, as that thei gonne espie
This floure, whiche that I clepe the Daisie
Full sodainly thei stinten all at ones
And kneled doune, as it were for the nones
And songen with O voice, heale and honour
To trouth of womanhede, and to this flour
That beareth our alder prise in figuring
Her white croune beareth the witnessing
And with that worde, acompas enuiroun
Thei sitten hem full softly adoun
First sat the God of Loue, and sith his quene
With the white croune, clad all in grene
And sithen all the remnaunt by and by
As thei were of estate, full curtesly
Ne nat a worde was spoken in the place
The mountenance of a furlong waie of space.

I kneling by this floure, in good entent
Abode to knowen what this people ment
As still as any stone, till at the last
This God of Loue, on me his yen cast
And said, who kneleth there: and I answerd
Unto his asking, whan that I it herde
And saied, sir it am I, and come him nere
And salued him (q he) what doest thou here
So nigh mine owne floure, so boldely
It were better worthy truely
A worme to nighen nere my flour than thou
And why sir (q I) and it like you:
For thou (q he) art therto nothing able
It is my relike, digne and delitable
And thou my foe, and all my folke werriest
And of mine old seruauntes thou misdaiest
And hinderest hem, with thy translation
And letтest folke from her deuocion
To serue me, and holdest it folie
To serue Loue, thou maiest it nat denie
For in plain tert, withouten nede of glose
Thou hast translated the Romaunt of þ rose
That is an heresie ayenst my lawe

And

And makest wise folke fro me withdrawe
And of Creseide, thou hast saide as the liste
That maketh men to women lesse triste
That ben as trewe as euer was any stele
Of thine answere auise the right wele
For though thou rewed hast my laie
Ysother wretches haue done many a daie Ypleint Venus, that my mother is That thou liue, thou shalt repenten this Sorcruelly, that it shal wel be sene
Tho spake this lady, clothed all in grene
And said, God right of your curtesie
Ye mote herken if he can replie
Vnto al this, that ye haue to him meued
And God ne should nat be thus agreued
For al his deite he shal be stable
Vnto hertо gracious and merciable
And if ye were a God, that knowen all Than might it be, as I you tellen shall This man to you maie falsely ben accused
That as by right, him ought ben excused
For in your courte is many a losengeour
And many a queinte totoler accusour
That tabouren in your eares many a soun
Right after her imaginacioun
To haue your daliaunce, and for enuy
Chele ben the causes, and I shal nat lie
Enuie is lauender of the court alwaie
For he ne parteth neither night ne daie
Out of the house of Cesar, thus saith Dant
Who so that goeth algate she wol nat want
And eke peraunter for this man is nice
He might done it, gessing no malice
But for he vseth thinges for to make Him recketh nought of what mater he take
Or him was boden make thrike twey
Of some persone, and durst it nat withsey
Or him repenteth vtterly of this
For ne hath nat done so greuously amis
To translaten that olde clerkes writen
Al though that he of malice would enditen
Despite of loue, and had himselfe it wrought
This should a rightwise lord haue in his thought
And nat be like trauntes of Lombardie
That han no reward but at tirannie
For he that king or lorde is naturel
Him ought nat be traunt ne cruel
Vnto a sermour, to done the harme he can
He must thinke it is his liege man
And his his tresour, and his golde in cofer
This is the sentence of the Philosopher
A kinge to kepe his lieges in iustice
Withouten doute that is his office
And wol he kepe his lordes in her degre
Lo sir is right and skil, that thei be Enhaunsed and honoured, and most dere
For thei ben halfe goddes in this world here
Yet more he done both right to poore & riche
Al be that her estate be nat both liche
And haue of poore folke compassion
For lo, the gentil kinde of the lion
For whan a flie offendeth him or biteth
He with his taile awaie the flie smiteth
Al easely, for of his gentrie
Him deineth nat to wreke him on a flie
As doeth a curre, or els another beest
Vnto noble corage ought ben areest
And waien euery thing by equite
And euer haue regarde vnto his owne degre
For sir, it is no maistrie for a lorde
To dampne a man, without answere of word
And for a lorde, that is ful foule to vse
And if so be, he maie him nat excuse
But alwey mercy with a dredeful harte
And forethinketh him, right in his bare sherte
To ben right at your owne iugement
Than ought a God by short auisement
Consider his owne honour, and his trespas
For sith no cause of death lieth in this cas
You ought to ben the lightlier merciable
Letteth your ire, & bethe somwhat tretable
The man hath serued you of his conninges
And forthred well your law in his makinges
Al be it that he can nat wel endite
Yet hath he made leude folke delite
To serue you, in preising of your name
He made the boke, of the nightes dole of fame
And eke the death of Blaunche the Duchesse
And the Parliament of Foules, as I gesse
And al the loue of Palamon and Arcite
Of Thebes, though the storie is knowen lite
And many an himpne, for your holy daies
That highten balades, rondels, virelaies
And for to speke of other holinesse
He hath in prose translated Boece
And made the like also of saint Cecile
He made also, gone is a great while Origenes vpon the Maudelaine
Him ought now to haue the lesse paine
He hath made many a ley, and many a thing
Now as ye be a God, and eke a king
For your Alceste, whilom quene of Trace
I aske you this man right of your grace
That ye him neuer hurte in al his liue
And he shal swearen to you, and that blithe
He shal neuer more agilten in this wise
But shal maken as ye wol deuise
Of women trewe in louing al her life
Where so ye wol, of maiden or of wife
And forthren you, as muche as he misseide

Or in the Rose, or els in Creseide
The God of Loue answerde her thus anon
Madame (quod he) it is so longe agon
That I you knew, so charitable and trewe
That neuer yet, sens the worlde was newe
To me ne founde I better none than ye
Yf that I wol saue my degree
I may not wol nat werne your requeste
All lieth in you, doth with him as you leste
I al forgeue withouten lenger space
For who so geueth a yefte or doth a grace
Do it betime, his thanke shal be the more
And demeth ye what he shal do therfore Go thanke now my lady here (quod he)
I rose, and doun I set me on my knee
And said thus: Madame, the God aboue
For yelde you that the God of Loue
Haue maked me his wrathe to forgeue
And grace so longe for to liue
That I mote know sothely what ye be
That haue me holpen, and put in this degre
But trewly I wende, as in this caas
Nought haue a gilte, ne done to loue trespas
For why a trewe man withouten drede
Hath nat to parten with a theues dede
Ne a trewe louer ought me nat to blame
Though þ I spelle a false louer some shame
Thef ought rather with me for to holde
For that I of Creseide wrote or tolde
Or of the Rose, what so mine author ment
Algate God wote it was mine entent
To forthren trouth in loue, and it cherice
And to ben ware fro falsenesse and fro vice
By whiche ensample, this was my mening
And she answerde, let be thine arguing
For loue ne wol not counterpleted be
In right ne wrong, and lerne that of me
Thou hast thy grace, a holde the right therto
Now woll I saine what penaunce þ shalt do
For thy trespace, vnderstande it here
Thou shalt while þ thou liuest yere by yere
The moste partie of thy time spende
In making of a glorious legende
Of good women, maidens, and wiues
That weren trewe in louing all her liues
And tel of false men that hem betraien
That al her life ne do nat but assaien
How many women thef mote done a shame
For in your worlde that is now holde a game
And though the like nat a louer be Spelle wel of loue, this penaunce yeue I the
And to the God of loue I shal so praie
That he shal charge his seruãts by any waie
To forthren the, and wel thy labour quite Go now thy waie, this penaunce is but lite
And when this boke is made, yeue it þ quene
On my behalfe, at Eltham, or at Shene
The God of loue gan smile, and than he saide
Wost thou (quod he) wher this be wife or maide
Or quene, or countesse, or of what degre
That hath so litell penaunce yeuen the
That hast deserued sore for to smarte
But pite renneth sone in gentle harte
That maist þ sene, she kitheth what she is
And I answerde, naie sir so haue I blis
No more, but that I se wel she is good
That is a trewe tale by mine hood
(quod Loue) and thou knowest wel parde Yf it be so that thou auise the Hast thou nat in a boke in thy chefe
The great goodnesse of the quene Alceste
That turned was into a daisie
She that for her husbonde chese to die
And che to gone to hell, rather than he
And Hercules rescued her parde
And brought her out of hel againe to blis
And I answerde againe, and said yes
Now know I her, and is this good Alceste
The daisie, and mine owne hartes reste
Now sele I wel the goodnesse of this wife
That both after her deth, and in her life
Her great bounte doubleth her renoun
Wel hath she quit me mine affectioun
That I haue to her floure the daisie
No wonder is though Ioue her stellifie
As telleth Agaton, for her great goodnesse
Her white corowne beareth of it witnesse
For also many vertues had she
As smal florouns in her corowne be
In remembraunce of her, and in honour
Cibilla made the daisie and the flour
Icrowned al with white, as men maie se
And Mars paue to her a corown reed parde
In stede of Rubies set among the white
Therfor this quene wore reed for shame alite
When she was praised so in her presence
Than said Loue, a ful great negligence
Was it to the, that ilke time thou made (Hide Absolon thy tresses) in balade
That thou forgette in thy songe to sette
Sith that thou art so greatly in her dette
And wost wel that kalender is she
To any woman, that wol louer be
For she taught all the craft of trewe louing
And namely of wifehode the liuing
And all the bondes that she ought kepe
Thy litel witte was thilke time a slepe
But now I charge the vpon thy life
That in thy legende make of this wife
When thou hast other smale made before
And

And fare now wel I charge thee no more
But er I go, thus much de I wol the tel
Se shal no trewe louer come in hel
These other ladies sitting here a rowe
Ben in my balade, if thou const hem knowe
And in thy bokes, al thou shalte hem finde
Save hem now in thy legende al in minde
I meane of hem that ben in thy knowing
For here ben twenty thousande mo sitting
Than thou knowest, good women al
And trewe of loue, for ought that maie befal
Make the metres of hem as the leste
I mote gone home, the sunne draweth weste
To paradis, with al this companie
And serue alwaie the fresh daiesie
Of Cleopatras I wol that thou beginne
And so forthe, & my loue so shalt thou winne
For let se now what man that louer be Wol done so stronge a paine for loue as she
I wote wel that thou maist nat al it rime
That suche louers did in her time
It were to longe to reden and to here
Suffiseth me thou make in this manere
That thou reherce of al her life the great
After these olde authours listen for to treate
For who so shal so many a storie tel
Ech shortely for he shal to longe dwell
And with that worde my bokes gan I take
And right thus on my legende gan I make.

¶ Thus endeth the Prologue.

¶ Here beginneth the legende of Cleopatras Quene of Egipte.

After the dethe of Ptholome the king
That all Egipt had in his gouerning
Reigned his Quene Cleopatras
Til on a time befel there suche a caas
That out of Rome was sent a senatour
For to conqueren realmes and honour
Unto the toune of Rome, as was dlaunce
To haue the worlde at her obeisaunce
And forthe to saie, Antonius was his name
So fil it, as fortune him ought a shame
When he was fallen in prosperite Rebel unto the toune of Rome is he
And ouer al this, the suster of Cesare
He left her faisely, er that she was ware
And would algates han another wife
For whiche he tok with Rome, & Cesar strife
Natheleste, for sothe this ilke Senatour
Was a ful worthy gentil werriour
And of his deth it was ful great domage
But loue had brought this man in such a rage
And him so narow bounden in his laas
And al for the loue of Cleopatras
That al the world he set at no value
Him thought there was nothing to him so due
As Cleopatras, for to loue and serue
Him thought that in armes for to sterue
In the defence of her, and of her right
This noble quene, eke loued so this knight
Through his deserte, and for his cheualrie
As certainlie, but if that bokes lie
He was of person, and of gentilnesse
And of discretion and of hardinesse
Worthy to any wight that liuen maie
And she was faire, as is the rose in Maie
And for to maken shorte is the best
She wore his wife, and had him as her lest
The wedding and the feste to deuise
To me that haue itake suche empryse
And so many a storie for to make It were to longe, lest that I should take
Of thing that beareth more effecte & charge
For men maie ouer lade a shippe or barge
And for thy, to effecte than wol I shippe
And al the remnaunt, I wol let it slippe
Octauian, that woode was of this dede
Shope him an hoost on Antony to lede
Al vtterly, for his distruction
With stoute Romaines, cruel as Lion
To ship ther went, and thus I let hem saile
Antonius was ware, and wol nat faile
To meten with these Romaines, if he maie
Tok eke his rede, and both vpon a daie
His wife and he, and al his host forth went
To ship anone, no lenger ther ne stent
And in the see it happed hem to mete
Up goeth the trumpe, & for to shoute & shete
And painen hem to set on with the sunne
With grisly sowne out goth the great gonne
And hertely ther hurtlen in al at ones
And fro the top, doune cometh ȳ great stones
In goth the grapenel so ful of crokes
Among the ropes ran the shering-hokes
In with the polare preaseth he and he Behinde the masse, beginneth he to flie
And out againe, and driueth him ouer borde
He sticketh him vpon his speares orde
He rent the saile with hokes like a sithe
He bringeth the cuppe, & biddeth hem be blithe
He poureth peesen vpon the hatches slider
With pottes ful of lime, ther gone to gider

And thus the long daie in light thei spende
Til at the last, as euery thing hath ende
Antony is shent, and put him to the flight
And al his folke to go, that best go might Fleeth eke the quene, with al her purple saile
For strokes, whiche ỳ went as thicke as haile
No wonder was, he might it nat endure
And whan that Antony sawe that auenture
Alas (q he) the daie that I was borne
Thus my worship in this daie thus haue I lorne
And for dispaire, out of his witte he starte
And rose him selfe anon through out ỳ harte
Er that he further went out of the place
His wife, that coulde of Cesar haue ne grace
To Egipt is fled, for drede and for distresse
But herkeneth ye that spoken of kindenesse
Ye men that falsely swearen many an othe
That ye wol die, if that your loue be wrothe
Here maie ye sene of women such a trouth
This woful Cleopatre had made suche routh
That there nis tonge none that maie it tel
But on the morowe, she wol no lenger dwel
But made her subtel werkmen make a shrine
Of al the rubies and the stones fine
In al Egipt, that she coulde espie
And put ful the shrine of spicerie
And lette the corse enbaume, & forth she fette
This deed corse, and in the shrine it shette
And next the shrine a pit than doth she graue
And al the serpentes that she might haue
She put hem in that graue, & thus she seide
Now loue, to whō my sorowful hart obeide
So ferforthly, that fro that blisful hour
That I you swore, to ben al frely your
I meane you, Antonius my knight
That neuer waking in the daie or night
Ye nere out of mine hartes remembraunce
For wele or wo, for carole, or for daunce
And in my selfe, this couenaunt made I tho
That right suche as ye felten wele or wo
As ferforth as it in my power laie
Unreprouable vnto my wifehode aie
The same would I felen, life or deathe
And thilke couenaut, while me lasteth breathe
I wol fulfil, and that shal wel be sene
Was neuer vnto her loue a trewer quene
And with ỳ word, naked with ful good hart
Among the serpentes in the pitte she start
And there she chese to haue her buriyng
Anone the neders gonne her for to sting
And she her death receiueth with good chere
For loue of Antony that was her so dere
And this is storial, sothe it is no fable
Now er I finde a man thus trewe and stable
And wol for loue his death so frely take
I praie God let our heedes neuer ake.

¶ Here endeth the legende of Cleopatras, and here foloweth the legende of Tisbe of Babilone.

At Babiloine whilom fil it thus
The whiche toun the quene Semiramus
Let dichen al about, and walles make Full hie, of harde tiles wel ibake
There were dwelling in this noble toun
Two lordes, which ỳ were of great renoun
And woneden so nigh vpon a grene
That there nas but a stone wal hem bitwene
As oft in great touues is the wonne
And sothe to saine, that one man had a sonne
Of al that londe, one of the lustiest
That other had a doughter, the fairest
That estward in ỳ world was tho dwelling
The name of eueriche, gan to other spring
By women that were neighbours aboute
For in that countre yet withouten doute
Maidens ben ikepte for ielousie
Ful straite, lest thei didden some folie
This yonge man was cleped Piramus Tisbe hight the maide (Naso saith thus)
And thus by reporte, was her name ishoute
That as thei wore in age, so wore her loue
And certaine, as by reason of her age
Ther might haue ben betwirt hem marage
But that her fathers nolde it nat assent
And bothe in loue ilike sore thei brent
That none of al her frendes might it lette
But priuely somtime yet thei mette
By sleight, and spaken some of her desire
As wite the glede, and hotter is the fire
Forbid a loue, and it is ten times so wode
This wal, which ỳ bitwirt hem both stode
Was clouen a two, right fro the top adoun
Of olde time, of his foundacioun
But yet this clifte was so narow and lite
It was nat sene, dere inough a mitte
But what is that, that loue can not espie
Ye louers two, if that I shal nat lie
Ye founden first this litle narowe clifte
And with a sounde, as softe as any shrifte
Thei let her wordes through the cliffe pace
And tolden, while that thei stodē in the place
Al her complaint of loue, and al her wo
At euery time whan thei durst so
On that one side of the wal stode he

And

And on that other side stode Tilbe
The swete soune of other to receiue
And thus her wardeins would thei disceiue
And euery daie this wal thei would threte
And wishe to God, that it were doun ibete
Thus would thei saine, alas thou wicked wal
Through thine enuie, thou vs lettest al
Why nilt thou cleaue, or fallen al a two
Or at the lest, but thou wouldest so
Yet wouldest thou but ones let vs mete
Or ones that we might kissen swete
Than were we cured of our cares colde
But natheles, yet be we to the holde
In as muche as thou suffrest for to gone
Our wordes through thy lime & eke thy stone
Yet ought we with the ben wel apaide
And whan these idel wordes weren saide
The colde wal thei wolden fille of stone
And take her leaue, & forth thei wolden gone
And this was gladly in the euentide
Or wonder erly, lest men it espide
And long time thei wrought in this manere
Til on a daie, whan Phebus gan to clere
Aurora with the stremes of her hete
Had dried vp the dewe of herbes wete Unto this cliffe, as it was wonte to be Come Piramus, and after come Tilbe
And plighten trouth, fully in her faie
That ilke same night to steale awaie
And to begile her wardeins euerichone
And forth out of the Cite for to gone
And for the feldes ben so brode and wide
For to mete in o place at o tide
Thei set marbes, her metinges should be
There king Ninus was grauen, vnder a tre
For olde painems, that idolles heried
Seden tho in feldes to ben buried
And take by his graue was a wel
And shortely of this tale for to tel
This couenaunt was affirmed wonder fast
And longe hem thought that the sonne last
That it nere gone vnder the see aboun
This Tilbe hath so great affection
And so great liking Piramus to se
That whan she saw her time might be
It might she stale awaie ful priuely
With her face i wimpled subtelly
For al her frendes (for to saue her trouthe)
She hath forsake alas, and that is routhe
That euer woman would be so trewe
To trusten man, but she the bet him knewe
And to the tre she goeth a ful good pace
For loue made her so hardy in this case
And by the welle, aboun she gan her dresse
Alas, than cometh a wilde Lionesse
Out of the wode, withouten more arrest
With blody mouthe, of strangling of a best
To drinken of the wel there as she sat
And whan that Tilbe had espied that She rist her vp, with a ful drery harte
And in a caue, with dredful fote she starte
For by the moone she sawe it wel withall
And as she ran, her wimple let she fall
And tolde none hede, so sore she was a whaped
And ekе so glad that she was escaped
And thus she sat, and lurketh wonder stil
Whan that this Lionesse hath dronke her fil
About the well gan she for to winde
And right anon the wimple gan she finde
And with her blody mouth it al to rente
Whan this was done, no lenger she ne stente
But to the wodde her way thā hath she nome
And at the last this Piramus is come
But al to longe (alas) at home was he
The moone shone, men might wel ise
And in his waie, as that he come ful fast
His eyen to the grounde aboun he cast
And in the sonde, as he beheld aboun
He saw the steppes brode of a Lioun
And in his hart he sodainly agrose
And pale he werte, ther with his hart arose
And nere he came, & founde the wimple torne
Alas (q he) the daie that I was borne
This o night wol both vs louers slee
How should I asken mercy of Tilbee
Whan I am he that haue you slaine, alas
My bidding hath you slaine in this caas
Alas, to bidde a woman goне by night
In place there as perill fallen might
And I so slowe, alas I ne had be Here in this place, a furlonge waie er ye
Now what Lioun that is in this forest
My body mote he rente, or what best
That wilde is, gnawen mote he mine harte
And with that worde, he to the wimple starte
And kiste it ofte, and wepte on it ful sore
And said wimple alas, there nis no more
But thou shalt fele as wel the blode of me
As thou hast felte the bleding of Tilbe
And with that worde, he smote him to the harte
The blode out of the wounde as brode starte
As water, whan the conduite broken is Now Tilbe, whiche that wiste nat this But sitting in her drede, she thought thus Yf it so fall that my Piramus
Be comen hither, and may me nat ifinde
He maie me holden false, and eke vnkinde
And out she cometh, & after him gan espien
Bothe with her hart, and with her eien
And thought, I wol him tellen of my drede

Both of the lioncesse and of my dede
And at the last her loue than hath she founde
Beating with his heeles on the grounde
Al blody, and therwithal aback she starte
And like the wawes, quappe gan her harte
And pale as bore she wore, and in a throwe
Auised her, and gan hem wel to knowe
That it was Piramus her harte dere
Who could write whiche a deedly chere
Hath Tisbe now, and how her heere she rente
And how she gan her selfe to turment
And how she lieth & swouneth on the ground
And how she wept of teeres ful his wounde
How medleth she his blod, w her complaint
How with her blod, her seluen gan she paint
How clippeth she the reed corse, alas
How doth this wofull Tisbe in this cass
How killeth she his frosty mouth so colde
Who hath don this? who hath ben so bolde
To sleen my lefe, o speke Piramus
I am thy Tisbe, that the calleth thus
And therwithal she liftеth vp his heed
This wofull man that was nat fully deed
Whan that he herde the name of Tisbe crien
On her he cast his heuy deedly eyen
And doun againe, and yeldeth vp the gost
Tisbe rist vp, without noise or bost
And saw her wimple and his empty sheth
And eke his swerde, ꝑ him hath don to deth
Than spake she thus, thy wofull hande (quod she)
Is stronge inough in suche a werke to me
For loue shal yeue me strength and hardinesse
To make my wounde large inough I gesse
I wol the folowen deed, and I wol be Felawe, and cause eke of thy deth (quod she)
And though that nothing saue the deth only
Might the fro me departe trewly
Thou shalt no more departe now fro me Than fro the death, for I wol go with the
And now ye wretched ielouse fathers our We that weren whilom children your
We praien you, withouten more enuie
That in o graue we moten lie
Sens loue hath brought vs this pitous ende
And right wise God, to euer louer sende
That loueth trewly more prosperite
Than euer had Piramus and Tisbe
And let no gentil woman her assure
To putten her in suche an auenture
But God forbid but a woman can Ben as true and louing as a man
And for my parte, I shal anon it kith
And with ꝑ word, his swerd she toke swith
That warme was of her loues blood, & hote
And to the hart she her seluen smote

And thus are Tisbe and Piramus ago
Of trewe men I finde but fewe mo
In al my bokes, saue this Piramus
And therfore haue I spoken of him thus
For it is deintie to vs men to finde
A man that can in loue be trewe and kinde
Here maie ye sene, what louer so he be A woman dare, and can as wel as he.

¶ Here endeth the legende of Tisbe of Babilone, and here folowеth the legende of Dido quene of Cartage.

Lorie & honour virgile Mantuan
Be to thy name, and I shal as I can Folowe thy lanterne, as thou goest bifore me
How Eneas to Dido was forsworne
In thine Eneide, and Naso wol I take The tenour and the great effectes make Whan Troie brought was to distruction
By Grekes sleight, and namely by Sinon
Fainning the horse offred vnto Minerue
Through which ꝑ many a Troian must sterue
And Hector had after his death apered
And like so wode, it might nat ben stered
In al the noble tour of Ilion
That of the cite was the chefe dongeon
And al the countre was so lowe ibrought
And Priamus the king fordone and nought
And Eneas was charged by Uenus
To flien a waie, he toke Iscanius
That was his son, in his right hande & fledde
And on his backe he bare, and with him ledde
His olde father, cleped Anchises
And by the waie his wife Creusa he lees
And mokel sorow had he in his minde
Er that he could his fela wel trip finde
But at the last, whan he had hem founde
He made him redy, in a certaine stounde
And to the see ful fast he gan him hie
And saileth forth, with al his companie
Toward Italie, as wolde destenee
But of his auentures in the see
Nis nat to purpose for to speke of here
For it accordeth nat to my matere
But as I said, of him and of Dido
Shal be my tale, til that I haue do
So longe he sailed in the salte see Til in Libie vnneth arriued he
So was he with the tempest al to shake

And

And whan that he the hauen had itake
He had a knight was called Achates
And him of all his felowship he ches
To gone with him, the countrey for telpie
He toke with him nomore companie
But forthe thei gon, and left his shippes ride
His feere and he, withouten any guide
So long he walketh in this wilderneſſe
Till at the laſt he met an hunteresſe
I bowe in honde, and arowes ſhe
Her clothes cutted were vnto the knee
But ſhe was yet the faireſt creature
That euer was ifourmed by nature
And Eneas and Achates the grette
And thus ſhe to hem ſpake, whā ſhe hem met Sawe ye (q ſhe) as ye han walked wide
Any of my ſuſtren walke you beſide
With any wilde Boze, or other beaſt
That thei haue hunted to in this forest
Iucked vp, with arowes in her caas
Faire ſothly Ladie (q this Eneas)
But by thy beautie, as it thinketh me
Thou mightest neuer yearthly woman be
But Phebus ſuſter art thou, as I geſſe
And if ſo be that thou be a goddeſſe
Haue mercie on our labour and our wo
I nam no Goddeſſe ſothly (q ſhe) tho
For maidens walken in this countre here
With arowes and with bow, in this manere
This is the realme of Libie, there ye been
Of whiche that Dido ladie is and Quene
And ſhortly tolde all the occaſion
Why Dido came into that region
Of whiche as now me liſteth nat to rime
It needeth nat, it nere but loſſe of time
For this is all and ſome, it was Venus
His owne mother, that ſpake with him thus
And to Cartage ſhe bade he ſhould him dight
And vaniſhed anon out of his ſight
I could folowe worde for worde Vergile
But it would laſten all to long while
This noble Quene, that cleped was Dido
That whilom was the wife of Sitheo
That fairer was than the bright ſonne
This noble toune of Cartage hath begonne
In whiche ſhe reigneth in ſo greate honour
That ſhe was holde of all Quenes flour
Of gentilleſſe, of fredome, and of beaute
That well was him, that might ones ſe
Of kinges and Lordes ſo deſired
That all the worlde her beaute had ifired
She ſtode ſo well in euery wightes grace
Whan Eneas was come vnto the place
Vnto the maiſter temple of all the toun
There Dido was in her deuocioun
Full priuely his waie than hath he nome
Whan he was in the large temple come
I can not ſaine, if that it be poſſible
But Venus had him maked inuiſible
Thus ſaieth the booke, withouten any leeſ
And whan this Eneas and Achates
Hadden in this temple been ouer all
Than founde thei depainted on a wall
How Troie and all the lande diſtroied wes
Alas that I was borne (q Eneas)
Through the world our ſhame is kid ſo wide
Now it is painted vpon euery ſide
We that weren in proſperite
Been now diſclaundred, and in ſoche degre
No lenger for to liuen I ne kepe
And with that worde, he braſt out for to wepe
So tenderly, that routh it was to ſeen
This freſche ladie, of the citee Quene
Stode in the temple, in her eſtate roiall
So richely, and ſhe ſo faire withall
So yong, ſo luſtie, with her yen glade
That if that God, that heauen and yearth made
Would haue a loue, for beaute and goodneſſe
And womenhede, trouth, and ſemelineſſe
Whom ſhould he louen, but this ladie ſwete
There nis no woman to him haſfe ſo mete
Fortune, that hath the world in gouernaunce
Hath ſodainly brought in ſo newe a chaunce
That neuer was there yet ſo frened a caas
For all the companie of Eneas
Whiche that we wende haue lorne in the ſee
Ariued is nought ferre fro that citee
For whiche the greateſt of his lordes, ſome
By auenture been to the citee come
Vnto that ſame temple for to ſeke
The Quene, and of her ſocour her beſeke
Soch renome was ther ſprōg of her goodnes
And whan thei had tolde all her diſtreſſe
And all her tempeſt and all her hard caas
Vnto the Quene appered Eneas
And openly beknewe that it was he Who had lote than, but his meine
That hadden found her lorde, her gouernour
The quene ſawe thei did him ſoche honour
And had heard oft of Eneas, er tho
And in her harte had routhe and wo
That euer ſoche a noble man as he Shall been diſherited in ſoche degre
And ſawe the man, that he was like a knight
And ſuffiſaunt of perſone and of might
And like to been a very gentilman
And well his wordes he beſet can
And had a noble viſage for the nones
And formed well of brawne and of bones
And after Venus had ſoche faireneſſe

That no man might be halfe so faire I gesse
And well a lorde him semed for to be
And for he was a straunger, somwhat she Liked him the bet, as God doe bote
To some folke, often newe thing is sote
Anon her harte hath pite of his wo
And with pite, Loue came also
And thus for pite and for gentilnesse
Refreshed must he been of his distresse
She saied: certes, that she sorie was
That he hath had soche perill and soche caas
And in her frendly speache, in this manere
She to him spake, and saied as ye maie here.
Be ye nat Venus sonne and Anchises
In good faithe, all the worship and encrees
That I maie goodlie doen you, ye shall haue
Your shippes and your meine shall I saue
And many a gentill worde she spake him to
And commaunded her messangers to go
The same daie withouten any faile
His shippes for to seke, and hem vitaile
Full many a beast she to the shippes sent
And with the wine she gan hem to present
And to her roiall paleis she her spedde
And Eneas alwaie with her she ledde
What nedeth you the feastes to discrive
He neuer better at ease was in his liue
Full was the feast of deinties and richesse
Of instrumentes, of song, and of gladnesse
And many an amorous loking and deuise
This Eneas is come to Paradise
Out of the swolowe of hell, and thus in ioie
Remembreth him of his estate in Troie
To daunsing chambres full of paramentes
Of riche beddes, and of pauementes
This Eneas is ledde after the meate
And with the quene whan that he had seate
And spices parted, and the wine agon
Unto his chamber was he lad anon
To take his ease, and for to haue his rest
With all his folke, to doen what so hem lest
There nas courser well ibridled none
Ne stede for the Justing well to gone
Ne large paulfrey, easie for the nones
Ne to well fret full of riche stones
Ne sackes full of gold, of large wight
Ne Rubie none that shineth by night
Ne gentill hauten fauhon heronere
Ne hounde for Harte, wilde bore, or Dere
Ne cuppe of gold, with florens newe ibette
That in the londe of Libie maie been gette
That Dido ne hath Eneas it sent
And all is paied, what that he hath spent
Thus eã this honorable quene her gestes cal
As she that can in fredome passen all

Eneas sothely ehe, without lees
Hath sent to his shippe by Achates
After his sonne, and after riche tiunges
Both ceptre, clothes, broches, and eke ringes
Some for to weare, and some to present
To her, that all these noble thinges him sent
And bad his sonne how that he should make The presenting, and to the quene it take Repaired is this Achates again
And Eneas full blisfull is and fain
To seen his yong sonne Alcanius
For to him it was reported thus
That Cupido, that is the God of Loue
At praier of his mother hie aboue
Had the liknesse of the childe itake
This noble Quene enamoured for to make
On Eneas, but of that scripture
Be as be maie, I make of it no cure
But soth is this, ỹ quen hath made sochere
Unto this childe, that wonder was to here
And of the present that his father sent
She thanked him oft in good entent.
Thus is this quene in pleasaunce and ioie
With all these newe lustie folke of Troie
And of the deedes hath she more enquired
Of Eneas, and all the storie lered
Of Troie, and all the long daie thei twaie
Entendeden for to speake and for to plaie
Of whiche there gan to breden soche a fire
That selie Dido hath now soche desire
With Eneas her newe gest to deale
That she lost her hewe and eke her heale
Now to theffect, now to the fruite of all Why I haue told this storie, and tellen shall Thus I beginne, it fell vpon a night
Whan that the Mone vpreised had her light
This noble Quene vnto her rest went
She sighed sore, and gon her self tourment
She waiketh, waloweth, a made many braid
As doen these louers, as I haue heard saied
And at the laste, vnto her suster Anne
She made her mone, a rist thus spake she tho
Now dere suster mine, what maie it be That me agasteth in my dreame (quod she)
This ilke newe Troian is so in my thought
For that me thinketh he is so well iwrought
And eke so likely to been a man
And therwith so mikell good he can
That all my loue and life lieth in his cure
Haue ye nat heard him tell his auenture
Now certes Anne, if that ye rede me
I woll fain to him iwedded be
This is the effect, what should I more seine
In him lieth all, to doe me liue or deine
Her suster Anne, as she that could her good

Saied

And as her thought, a sondele it withstode
But hereof was so long a sermonting
It were to long to make rehearsing
But finally, it may not be withstonde
Love will love, for no wight will it wonde
The dawning up rist, out of the see
This amorous Quene chargeth her meine
The nettes dresse, and speres brode and kene
In hunting will this iustie freshe Quene
So pricketh her this newe iolie wo
So hote is all her iustie folke igo
Into the court the hounds been ibrought
And up on courser swift as any thought
Her yong knightes heuen all about
And of her women ehe an huge rout
Upon a thicke palfraie, paper white
With sadell redde, enbrouded with delite
Of golde the barres, up enbossed high
Sate Dido, all in golde and perrey wrigh
And she is faire, as is the bright morowe
That healeth sicke folkes of nightes sorowe
Upon a courser, startling as the fire
Ben might tourne him with a little wire
But Eneas, like Phebus to deuise
He was he freshe arated in his wise
His fomie bridell, with the bitte of gold Gouerneth he right as himself hath would
And forthe this noble Quene, this ladie ride
In hunting, with this Troian by her side
The herde of Hartes, founden is anon
With hey gobet, prieke thou, let gon, let gon
Why nill the Lion comen or the Beare
That I might him ones meten wh this speare
Thus sain this yong folke, and up thei hill
For wilde Hartes, and haue hem at her will Emong all this, to romblen gan the heuen
The Thonder rored with a grisly steuen
Downe come the rain, with haile and flet so fast
With heauens fire, that made so sore agast
This noble Quene, and also her meine
That eche of hem was glad a waie to flie
And hastily fro the tempest her to saue
She fled her self, into a little caue
And with her went this Eneas also
I not with hem if there went any mo
The auctour maketh of it no mencion
And here began the depe affection
Betwixt hem two this was the first morowe
Of her gladnesse, and ginning of her sorowe
For there hath Eneas shneled so
And told her all his hurte and all his wo
And wonne so depe to her to be true
For well or wo, and chaunge for no newe
And as a false louer, so well can plain
That selie Dido rewed on his pain
And toke him for husbond, and became his wife
For euermore, while that hem last life
And after this, what that the tempest stente
With mirth out as thei came, home thei wente
The wicked fame up rose, and that anon
How Eneas hath with the Quene ygon
Into the caue, and demed as hem list
And what thing that Farbas might it wist
As he that had her loued euer his life
And wowed her to haue to his wife
Soche sorow as he hath maked, and soche chere
It is a routhe and pite for to here
But as in loue, alday it happeth so
That one shall laughen at an others wo
Now laugheth Eneas, and is in ioie
And more richesse, than euer was in Troie
O selie woman, full of innocence
Full of pite, of truthe, and continence
What maked you to men to trusten so?
Haue ye soche routhe upon her fained wo
And haue soche old ensamples you before
Se ye not all how thei been forsworne
Where se ye one, that he me hath lafte his lefe
Or been unkinde, or doen her some mischefe
Or pilled her, or bosted of his dede
Ye make as well it seen, as ye make rede
Take hede now of this greate gentilman
This Troian, that so well her pleasen can
That faineth him so true and obeising
So gentill, and so priuie of his doing
And can so well doen all his obeisaunce
So her, at feastes and at daunce
And whan she goeth to temple, and home again
And fasten till he hath his ladie sein
And bearen in his deuises for her sake
Not I not what, and songes would he make Fullen, and doen of armes many thinges
Sende her letters, tokens, broches, and ringes
Now herkeneth how he shal his lady serue
There as he was in perill for to sterue
For hunger and for mischefe in the see
And desolate, and fledde fro his countree
And all his folke with tempest all to driuen
She hath her body and ehe her realme yeuen
Into his honde, there she might haue been
Of other lande than of Cartage a Quene
And liued ioy inough, what would ye more
This Eneas, that hath thus depe iswore
Is werie of his craft within a throwe
The hote earnest is all ouer blowe
And priuely he doeth his shippes dight
And shapeth him to stealen a waie by night
This Dido hath suspection of this
And thought well that it was all amis
For in his bedde he lieth a night and sheth

She asketh him anon, what him mistiketh
My dere harte, whiche that I loue moste
Certes (q he) this night my fathers ghoste
Hath in my slepe, me so sore tourmented
And eke Marcurie his message hath presented
That nedes to the conquest of Itaile
My destenie is sone for to saile
For which me thinketh, brosten is mine hart
Therwith his salse teares out thei start
And taketh her within his armes two.
Is that in earnest (q she) woll ye so Haue ye nat swore, to wife me to take Alas, what woman woll ye of me make:
I am a gentill woman, and a Quene
Ye woll not fro your wife thus foule flene
That I was borne alas, what shall I do:
To tellen in short, this noble Quene Dido
She seketh halowes, and doeth Sacrifice
She kneleth, crieth, that routh is to deuise Coniureth him, and prokereth him to be His thrall, his seruaunt, in the best degre
She calleth him to sote, and sowneth there
Discheuile with her bright gilt heere
And saieth, haue mercy, let me with you ride
These lordes, whiche that wonnen me beside Woll me distroien onely for your sake
And ye woll me now to wife take
As ye haue swore, thā woll I yeue you leue
To slaen me w your swerde, now sone at eue
For than yet shall I dien as your wife
I am with childe, and yeue my childe his life
Mercie lorde, haue pite in your thought
But al this thing auaileth her right nought
And as a traitour forthe gan to saile
Toward the large countre of Itaile
And thus hath he left Dido in wo and pine
And wedded there a ladie hight Rauine
I clothe he left, and eke his swerde standing
Whan he fro Dido stale in her sleping
Right at her beddes hedde, so gan he hie
Whan that he stale awaie to his navie
Which cloth, whan selie Dido gan awake
She hath it kiste full oft for his sake
And said, o swete cloth, while Jupiter it left Take my soule, vnbinde me of this vnrest
I haue fulfilled of fortune all the course
And thus alas, withouten his socourse Twentie time if wouned hath she than
And whan that she vnto her suster Anne Complained had, of which I maie not write
So greate routh I haue it for to endite
And bad her norice and her sustren gon
To fetchen fire, and other thinges anon
And saied that she would Sacrifie
And whan she might her time well aspie vpon the fire of Sacrifice she starte
And with his swerde she roke her to the harte
But as mine auctour saith, yet this the scride
Or she was hurte, before or she deide
She wrote a letter anon, and thus began
Right so (q she) as the white Swan
Ayenst his death beginneth for to sing
Right so to you I make my complaining
Not that I trowe to getten you again
For well I wote it is al in vain
Sens that the goddes been cōtrarious to me
But sin my name is lost through you (q she)
I maie well lete a worde on you or letter
All be it, I shall be neuer the better
For thilke wind that blewe your ship awaie
The same winde hath blowe awaie your laie
But who so wol al this letter haue in minde
Rede Ouide, and in him he shall it finde.

Here endeth the Legende of Dido quene of Cartage: And here folowe the legende of Hipsiphile and Medea.

Thou roote of false louers, Duke Jason
Thou sleer, deuourer, and confusion
Of gentill women, gentil creatures
Thou madest thy reclaiming and thy lures
To Ladies of thy scathliche apparaunce
And of thy wordes farsed with pleasaunce
And of thy fained trouth, and thy manere
With thine obeisaunce and humble chere
And with thine counterfeited pain and wo
There other fallen one, thou falsed two
O oft swore thou, that thou wouldest die
For loue, whan thou ne feltest maladie
Saue foule delite, whiche thou callest loue
If that I liue, thy name shall be shoue
In Englishe, that thy deceipt shall be knowe
Haue at thee Jason, now thin honor is blowe
But certes, it is bothe routh and wo
That Loue with false louers werketh so
For thei shal haue well better loue and cheer
Than he that hath bought loue full dere
Or had in armes many a bloodie bore
For euer as tender a capon eateth the fore
Though he be fals, e hath the foule betrayed
As shall the goodman that therefore payed
Although he haue to the capon shill s right
The false fore woll haue his part at night
On Jason this ensample is well seen

By

by Hipliphile, and Medea the Quene
In Thessalie, as Ouide telleth vs
There was a knight, that hight Pelleus
That had a brother, whiche that hight Eson
And whan for age he might vnnethes gon
He gaue to Pelleus the gouerning
Of all his reigne, and made him lorde & king
Of whiche Eson, this Jason getten was That in his time, in all that lande there nas
But loche a famous knight of gentillesse
Of fredome, of strength, and of lustinesse
After his fathers death he bare him so
That there nas none that liff been his foe
But did him all honour and companie
Of whiche this Pelleus hath greate enuie
Imagining, that Jason might be Enhaunsed so, and put in soche degre
With loue of lordes of his regioun
That from his reigne, he maie be put a doun
And in his wit a night compassed he How Jason might best destroied be Withouten sclaunder of his compasment
And at the last he toke auisement
That to sende him into some ferre countre
There as this Jason maie destroied be
This was his wit, all made he to Jason
Greate chere of loke, and of affection
For drede lest his lordes it espide
So till it, as fame renneth wide
There was soche tiding ouer all, & soche loos
That in an Jle, that called was Colcos Beyonde Troie Eastward in the see
That there was a Ram, that men might se
That had a Flees of golde, that shone so briȝt
That no where was there soche an other siȝt
But it was kept al waie with a Dragoun
And many other maruailes vp and doun
And with two Bulles, maked all of Brass
That spitten fire, and moche thing ther was
But this was eke the tale nathelees
That who so would winnen thilke Flees
He must bothe, or he it winnen might
With the Bulles and the Dragon fight
And king Otes, lorde was of that Jle
This Pelleus bethought vpon this while
That he his neue we Jason would enhoxt
To sailen to that londe, him to disport
And saied, neue we if it might be
That soche worship might fall thee
That thou this famous treasure might win
And bring it my region within
It were to me greate pleasaunce and honour
Than were I holde to quite thy labour
And all thy costes I woll my self make
And chose what folke thou wolt w thee take Let se now, darste thou take this voiage.
Jason was young, and lustie of corage
And vndertoke to doen this ilke empryse
Anon Argus his shippes gan deuise
With Jason went the strong Hercules
And many an other, that he with him ches
But who so asketh, who is with him gon
Let him rede Argonauticon
For he woll tell a tale long inough
Philoctetes anon thei saile vp drough
When the winde was good, and gan him hie
Out of his countre, called Thessalie
So long thei sailed ip the salt see Till in the Jle of Lemnon ariued he
All be this nat rehearsed of Guido
Yet saieth Ouide in his Epistles so
And of this Jle ladie was and Quene
The faire yong Hipliphile the shene
That whilō Thoas doughter was the king
Hipliphile was gon in her playing
And roming on the cleues by the see Vnder a banke anone espied she Where laie the shippe, that Jason gan ariue
Of her goodnesse adoune she sendeth blyue
To weten, if that any straunge wight
With tempest thider were iblowe anight
To doen him socour, as was her vsaunce
To furtheren euery wight, a don pleasaunce
Of very bountie, and of curtesie
This messanger adoune him gan to hie
And founde Jason and Hercules also
That in a cogge to londe were igo
Hem to refreshen, and to take the aire
The morning gan attempre was and faire
And in her waie this messanger hem mette
Full conningly these lordes two he grette
And did his message, asking hem anon
If that thei wer broken, or ought wo begon
Or had nede of lodesmen, or vitaile
For succour thei should nothing faile
For it was vtterly the Quenes will Jason answerde meekly and still
My ladie (q he) thanke I hartely
Of her goodnesse, vs nedeth truely
Nothing as now, but that we werie be
And come for to plaie out of the see
Till that the winde be better in our waie
This ladie rometh by the cliffe to plaie
With hermeine, endlong the strende
And findeth this Jason, & this other fonde
In speaking of this thing, as I you told
This Hercules and Jason gan behold
How that the quene it was, & faire her grete
And right as thei with this ladie mete
And she cole hede, and knewe by her manere

By her araie, by wordes, and by chere
That it were gentill men of greate degre
And to the castle with her leadeth she
These straūge folke, & doeth hem great honor
And asketh hem of trauaile and of labor
That thei haue suffred in the salt see
So that within a daie, two or three
She knewe by the folk that in his shippes be
That it was Jason full of renomee
And Hercules, that had the greate loos
That soughten the auentures of Colcos
And did hem honour, more than before
And with hem dealed euer longer the more
For thei been worthy folke withouten lees
And namely moste the spake with Hercules
To him her harte bare, he should be Sadde, wise, and true, of wordes auisee
Withouten any other affection
Of loue, or any other imaginacion

This Hercules hath this Jason praised
That to the Sunne he hath it vp reised
That halfe so true a man there nas of loue
Under the cope of heauen, that is aboue
And he was wise, hardie, secrete, and riche
Of these. iii. pointes, ther nas non him liche
Of fredome passed he, and lustie hedde
All tho that liuen, or been dedde Thereto so greate a gentill man was he
And of Thessalie likely king to be
There nas no lacke, but that he was agast
To loue, and for to speake shamefast
Him had leauer himself to murder and die
Than that men should a louer him espie
As would God that I had ipeue
My blood and flesche, so that I might liue
With the nones, y he had aught wher a wife
For his estate, for soche a lustie life
She shoulden lede, with this lustie knight
And all this was compassed on the night
Betwixe him Jason, and this Hercules
Of these two here was a shrewde lees
To come to house, vpon an innocent
For to be dote this Quene was her entent
And Jason is as coie as is a maide
He loketh pitously, but naught he saied
But frely yaue he to her counsailers
Yeftes greate, and to her officers
As would God that I leaser had and time
By processe, all his wrong for to rime
But in this house, if any faire louer be Right as himself now doeth, right so did he
With fayning, and with euery subtell dede
Ye get no more of me, but ye woll rede
Thoriginall, that telleth all the caas

The sothe is this, that Jason wedded was Vnto this quene, and toke of her substaunce
What so him list, vnto his puruetaunce
And vpon her begate children two
And drough his saile, and sawe her neuer mo
A letter sent she him certain
Whiche were to long to writen and to sain
And him reproueth of his greate vntrouth
And praieth him on her to haue some routh
And on his children two, she saied him this
That thei be like of all thing i wis
To Jason, saue thei couth nat begile
And praied God, or it were long while
That she that had his harte ireft her fro Must finden him vntrue also
And that she muste bothe her children spill
And all tho that suffreth him his will
And true to Jason was she all her life
And euer kept her chaste, as for his wife
Ne neuer had she ioie at her harte
But died for his loue of sorowes smarte.

To Colcos come is this duke Jason
That is of loue deuourer and dragon
As Matire appeteth forme alwaie
And from forme to forme it passen maie
Or as a welle that were botomles
Right so can Jason haue no pees
For to deliren through his appetite
To doen with gentill women his delite
This is his luste, and his felicite
Jason is romed forthe to the cite
That whilom cleped was Jaconicos
That was the maister toune of all Colcos
And hath itolde the cause of his coming
Vnto Otes, of that countrey king
Praiyng him that he must doen his affaie
To gette the Flese of golde, if that he maie
Of whiche the king assenteth to his booen
And doeth him honour, as it is to dooen
So forforth, that his doughter and his hem
Medea, whiche that was so wise and faire
That fairer sawe there neuer man with eire
He made her doen to Jason companie
At meate, and sitte by him in the hall

Now was Jason a semely man withall
And like a Lorde, and had a greate renoun
And of his loke as roiall as a Lioun
And Godlie of his speache, and familiere
And coud of loue al the craft and art plener
Withouten boke, with euericke observaunce
And as fortune her ought a foule mischaūce
She wore enamored vpon this man
Jason (q she) for ought I se or can
Is of this thing, the whiche ye been about Ye and your self ye put in moche doubt
For who so woll this auenture atchieue

Ye

Be maie nat wele asterten, as I leue Withouten death, but I his helpe be But natheles it is my will (q she)
To forthren you, so that ye shall nat die
But turnen sounde home to your Thessalie
My right lady (q this Jason) tho
That ye haue of my death or my wo
Iny regarde, and doen me this honour
I wot wel that my might, ne my labour
May nat deserue it my liues daie
God thanke you, there I ne can ne maie
Your man am I, and lowely you beseche
Goden my helpe, withouten more speche
But certes for my death shal I not spare
Tho gan this Medea to him declare
The peryl of this case, fro point to point
Of his batayle, and in what destoynt
Be mote stonde, of whiche no creature
Saue onely she, ne might his syde assure
And shortly, right to the poynt for to go
They ben accorded fully betwyne hem two
That Jason shal her wedde, as true knight
And terme yset to come soone at night
Unto her chambre, and make there his othe
Upon the goddes, that be for lefe or lothe
He shulde her neuer falsen nyght ne daye
Goden her husbonde whyle he lyue maye
Like that from his deth him saued here
And herupon at night they mette yfere
And doth his othe, & got he with her to bedde
And on the morow we vpwarde he him spedde
Sin he hath taught hi how he shal nat fayle
The fees to wynne, & stinten his batayle
And saued hym his life, and his honour
And gate him a name, as a conquerour
Right through the sleight of her enchantmēt
Now hath Jason the fleese, and home is went
With Medea, & treasours full great wonne
But vnwyste of her father she is gonne
To Thessalye, with duke Jason her lefe
That afterwarde hath brought her to mischefe
For as a traytour he is from her go
And with her lefte yonge children two
And falsely hath betrayed her, alas
And euer in loue a cheke traytour he was
And wedded yet the thirde wyfe anon
That was the doughter of kyng Creon
This is the meede of louyng and guerdon
That Medea receiued of duke Jason
Right for her trouth, and for her kyndnesse
That loued him better than her selfe I gesse
And lefte her father, and her herytage
And of Jason this is the vassalage
That in his dayes nas neuer non yfounde
So false a louer, goyng on the grounde
And therefore in her letter thus she sayd
First when she of his falsnesse him vnbrayd
Why lyked me thy yelowe heer to see
More than the boundes of myn honestee?
Why lyked me thy youth and thy fayrnesse
And of thy tonge, the infynite gracyousnesse
O haddest thou in thy conquest deed ybe
Ful mikel vntrouth had there dyed with the Wel can Ouide her letter in verse endyte
Whiche were as nowe to longe for to write.

Here endeth the Legende of Hypsiphile and Medea: And hereto loweth the legende of Lucrece of Rome.

Nowe mote I fain therfore lyng of kynges
Of Rome, for her horrible doynges
Of the laste kynge Tarquinius
As saith Ouid, and Titus Lyuius
But for that cause tel I nat this storye
But for to prayse, and drawen in memorye
The very wyfe, the very Lucresse
That for her wifehode, and her stedfastnesse
Nat onely that these panymes her cōmende
But that cleped is in our legende
The great Austyn, that hath compassioun
Of this Lucrece that starfe in Rome toun
And in what wise, I wol but shortly treat
And of this thing I touch but the great Whan Ardea besiege was aboute
With Romayns, that full sterne were & stoute
Ful longe lay the siege and litel wroughten
So ỳ they wer halfe ydel, as hem thoughten
And in his play Tarquinius the yonge
Gan for to iape, for he was lyght of tonge
And sayd, that it was an ydle syte
No man dyd there more than his wife
And let vs speke of wiues, that is best
Praise euerie man his own as him lest
And with our speach let vs ease our herte
I knight (that hyght Colatin) vp sterte
And sayd thus, nay sir it is no nede
To trowen on the worde, but on the dede
I haue a wife (q he) that as I trowe
Is holden good of al that euer her knowe
Go we to Rome to nyght, and we shul se
Tarquinius answerde, that lyketh me
To Rome they be comen, and fast hem dighte
To Colatyns house, and downe they light
Tarquinius, and ek this Colatine
The husbonde knewe the efters wel & fyne

And ful priuely into the house they gone
Nor at the gate, porter was there none
And at the chambre dore they abyde
This noble wife sate by her beddes syde
Discheueled, for no malyce she ne thought
And soft wol saith Liui that she wrought
To kepen her from slouthe and ydelnesse
And bad her seruauntes done her bisinesse
And asketh hem, what tidinges heren ye?
How saith men of the siege, how we shal it be?
God wolde the walles were fallen a downe
Myn husbond is to longe out of this towne
For whiche drede doth me sore to smerte
Right as a swerde, it stingeth to min hert
Whan I thinke on this or of that place
God saue my lorde, I pray him for his grace
And therwithal so tenderly she gan wepe
And of her werke she tok no more kepe
But meekely she let her eien fal
And thilke semblant sate her wel withal
And eke her teares ful of beuinesse
Embelished her wifely chastnesse
Her countenaunce is to herte digne
For thei accorden in dede and signe
And withthat worde her husbonde Colatin
Or she of him was ware, came stertling in
And said, drede the nat for I am here
And she anone vp rose, with blisful chere
And hylled him, as of wiues is the wonne
Tarquinius, this proude kinges sonne
Conceiued hath her beautie and her chere
Her yelowe heere, her bountie, & her manere
Her hewe, her wordes, ȳ she hath complained
And by no craft her beautie was nat fained
And caught to this lady soche desire
That in his hert he brent as any fire
So wodely, that his witte was all forgotten
For wel thought he she shulde nat be goten
And aye the more he was in dispaire
The more coueiteth, and thought her faire
His blinde luste was al his coueiting
On morowe, whan the birde be gan to syng
Vnto the siege he cometh ful priuely
And by him selfe he walketh soberly
The ymage of her recording al way newe
Th' lay her heere, & thus fresh was her hew
Thus faire, thus span, this was her chere
Thus faire she was, & this was her manere
In this conceite his herte hath newe ytake
And as the see, with tempest al to shake
That after whan the storme is al ago
Yet woll the water quappe a daie or two Right so, though that her forme were absent
The pleasaunce of her forme was present
But nat helenesse nat pleasaunce, but delite
Or an vnrightful talent with dispite
For maugre her, she shal my lemman be,
Hap helpeth hardy man al way (quod he)
What ende that I make, it shal be so
And gyrte him with his swerde, & gan to go
And he forthe right, tyl to Rome he come
And al alone his way that he hath nome
Vnto the house of Colatin ful right
Down was ȳ sonne, & day hath lost his lyght
And in he come, vnto a priuie halke
And in the night ful thefely gan he stalke Whan euery wight was to his rest brought Ne no wight had of treson soche a thought
Whether by windowe, or by other gin
With swerde ydrawe, shortly he cometh in There as she lay, this noble wife Lucrece
And as she woke, her bedde she felt presse
What best is that (quod she) that wayeth thus
I am the kinges sonne Tarquinius (quod he) but & thou crie, or any noise make Or if thou any creature awake
By thilke god, that formed man of lyue
This swerde throught thyn hert shal I ryue
And therwithal, vnto her throte he sterte
And set the swerde al sharpe on her herte
No word she speak, she hath no might therto
What shal she faine, her witte is al ago
Right as a wolfe that faineth alambe alon
To whom shal she complaine or make mone
What, shal she fight with an hardie knight Wel wotte men a woman hath no might What shal she crie, or how we shal she astert
That hath her by the throte with swerde at hert
She asketh grace, and said al that she can No wolt thou nat (quod this cruel man)
As wisely Jupiter my soule saue
I shal in thy stable slee thy knaue
And lay him in thy bedde and loude crie
That I the fynde in soche auoutrie
And thus thou shalt be deed and also lese
Thy name, for thou shalt nat chese
This Romains wiues louden so her name
At thilke tyme and dreden so the shame
That what for fere of slaunder, & dred of deth
She lose both at ones wit and breth
And in a swough she lay, & wore so deed
Men mighten smite of her arme or heed
She feleth nothing, neither soule ne faire
Tarquinius, that arte a kinges heyre
And shuldest, as by linage and by right
Done as a lorde, and a very knight
Why hast thou done dispite to chiualrye?
Why hast thou done thy lady vilanie?
Alas, of the this was a vilainous dede
But nowe to the purpose, in the storye I rede
Whan

when he was gonne, & this mischaūce is fal
This lady sent after her frendes al
Father, mother, and husbonde, al yfere
And discheueled with her heere clere
In habyt soche as women vsed tho
Vnto the buryeng of her frendes go
She sate in hal, with a sorowful syghe
Her frendes aschen what her aylen myghe
And who was deed, and she sate aye wepyng
Ne worde for shame ne may she forth out bring
For pon hem she durst nat be hold
But at the laste of Tarquiny she hem tolde
This rufful case, and al this thyng horrible
The wo to tell, were impossible
That she and al her frendes make at ones
Had folkes hertes ben of stones
It might haue maked hem vpon her rewe
Her hert was so wifely and so trewe
She said, that for her gilte ne for her blame
Her husbōde shulde nat haue the foule name
That wolde she nat suffren by no waye
And they answerde al vnto her faye
That they forgaue it her, for it was right
It was no gylte, it lay nat in her myght
And sayden her ensamples many one
But al for naught, for thus she said anone
Nas be may (q she) of forgiuyng
I will nat haue no forgifte for nothyng
Sodeynely she cought forth a knife
And therwithal she rafte her selfe her life
And as she fel adowne she caste her loke
And of her clothes, yet hede she toke
For in her fallyng, yet she had a care
Lest that her fete, or soche thinges lay bare
So wel she loued clennesse, and eke trouthe
Other had al the towne of Rome routhe
And Brutus hath by her chaste blode swore
That Tarquin shulde y banished be therfore
And al his kinne, and let the people cal
And openly the tale he tolde hem al
And openly let cary her on a bere
Through al ỹ towne, that men may se & here
The horrible dede of her oppressioun
For neuer was there kyng in Rome toun
Fro thylke day, and she was holden there
Saynt, and euer her day phalowed dere
In her lawe: and thus endeth Lucresse
Of noble wyfe. Tytus beareth witnesse
Liuy it for she was of loue so trewe
For in her wil she chaunged for no newe
And in her stable herte, sadde and kinde
That in these women men may al day finde
There as they cast her hert, there it dwelleth
For wel I wote, that Christ him selfe telleth
That in Israel, as wide as is the londe
That so great faith in al the londe he nē fōde
As in a woman, and this is no lie
And as for men, lobe ye soche tyrannie
Thei doen al daie, assay hem who so lifte
The trewest is ful brothel for to trifle.

Here endeth the Legende of Lucrece of Roome.

Here foloweth the Legende of Iriadne of Athenes.

IVdge infernal Minos, of Crete kyng
Now cometh thi lot, thou comest on the tyng
Nat for thy fame onely writen is this storye
But for to cleape ayen vnto memorie
Of Theseus the great vntrouthe of loue
For whiche the goddes of heuen aboue
Ben wroth, & wrath haue take for thy synne
Be reed for shame, nowe I thy lyfe beginne
Minos that was the mighty king of Crete
That had an hundred cities strong and grete
To schole hath sent his sonne Androgeus
To Athenes, of the whiche it happed thus
That he was slayne, lerning philosophie
Right in that eyte, nat but for enuie
The great Minos, of the whiche I speke
His sonnes deth is come for to wreke
Alcathoe he besieged harde and longe
But natheles the walles be so stronge
And Nisus, that was kyng of that cite
So chiualrous, that litel dredeth he
Of Minos or his hoste, toke he no cure
Tyl on a daie be fil an auenture
That Nisus doughter stode vpon the wal
And of the siege, sawe the maner al
So happed it, that at scarmishing
She caste her hert vpon Minos the king
For his beautie, and his chiualrye
So sore, that she wende for to die
And shortly of this processe for to pace
She made Minos winnen thilke place
So that the cite was al at his wyl
To sauen whom him liste, or els spill
But wickedly he quit her kyndnesse
And let her drenche in sorowe and distresse
Nere that the goddes had of her pite
But that tale were to longe as nowe for me Athenes was this king Minos also
As Alcathoe and other townes mo
And this ỹ effect, that Minos hath so driuen

Hem of Athenes, that thei mote him yeuen
Fro yere to yere, her owne childzen dere
Foz to be slaine, as ye shal after here
This Minos hath a monster, a wicked best
That was so cruel, that without areest
Whā ỹ a man was brought in to his presēce
He wolde him eate, there helpeth no defence
And euery thirde yere withoten doute
Thei casten lotte, as it came aboute
On rishe and pooze, he muste his sonne take
And of his childe he must presente make
To Minos, to saue him oz to spill Oz let his beest deuour him at his will
And this hath Minos don right in dispite
To wreke his sonne was set al his delyte
And make hem of Athenes hys thral
Fro yere to yere, while he liuen shal
And whom he sayleth whā this toun is won
This wicked custome is so longe yron
Tyl of Athenes king Egeus
Wote senden his owne sonne Theseus
Sens that the lotte is fallen him vpon
To ben deuoured, foz grace is there non
And forth is ladde this woful ponge knight Vnto ỹ countre of king Minos ful of might
And in a prison kettred faste is he Tyl the time he shulde yfreten be Wel maist thou wepe, o woful Theseus
That art a kinges sonne, and damned thus
He thinketh thus, that thou art depe yholde
To whom that saued the fro cares colde
And nowe yf any woman helpe the Wel oughtest thou her seruaunt foz to be
And ben her trewe louer yere by yere
But nowe to come aien to my matere
The toure, there this Teseus is throwe
Downe in the bottom derke, a wonder lowe
Was ioyning to the wal of a fozeine
Longing vnto the doughtren tweine
Of Minos, that in her chambzes grete
Dwelten aboue the maister strete
Of the towne, in ioy and in solas
Not I nat howe, it happed per caas
As Theseus complained him by night
The kinges doughter, that Ariadne hight
And ehe her suster Phedza, herden al
His complainte, as thei stode on the wall
And loked vpon the bright moone
Hem liste nat to go to bedde so soone
And of his wo thei had compassion
I kinges sonne to be in soche prison
And ben deuoured, thought hem great pite
Than Ariadne spake to her suster ire
And said: Phedza leue suster dere
This woful lozdes sonne maie ye nat here
Howe pitously he complaineth his hinne
And eke his pooze estate that he is inne
And giltlesse, certes nowe it is routhe
And yf ye wol assent by my trouthe
He shal ben holpen howe so that we do
Phedza answerde, ywis me is as wo
Foz him, as euer I was foz any man
And to his helpe the best rede I can
Is, that we done the gailer prieuely
To come and speke with vs hastely
And done this woful man with him to come
Foz if he maie this monster ouercome
Than were he quite, there is none other bote
Let vs wel taste him at his herte roote
That if so be, that he a weapon haue
Where that he his life dare kepe oz saue
Fighten with this fende, and him defende
Foz in the prison, there as he shal descende
Ye wote wel, that the beest is in a place
That is not derke, a hath roume eke space
To welde an axe, oz swerde, staffe, oz knife
So that me thinketh he shulde saue his life
If that he be a man, he shal do so
And we shal make him balles eke also
Of wexe and towe, that whā he gapeth wide
Into the beestes throte he shal hem caste
To sleke his honger, and encomber his teethe
And right anon, whan that Theseus seethe
The beest acheked, he shal on him leepe
To sleen him, oz they comen moze to heepe
This weapen shal the gailer, oz that tyde
Ful prieuely within the prison hyde
And foz the house is crencled to and fro
And hath so queint waies foz to go
Foz it is shapen as the maze is wrought
Therto haue I a remedy in my thought
That by a clewe of twyne, as he hath gon
The same way he may returne anon
Folowing alway the threde, as he hath come
And whan this beest is ouercome
Than may he flien away out of this stede
And eke the gailer may he with him lede
And him auaunce at home in his countre
Sens that so great a lozdes sonne is he
This is my rede, if that ye dare it take What shulde I lenger sermon of it make
The gailer cometh, and with him Theseus Whan these thinges ben accozded thus Downe sate Theseus vpon his knee
The right lady of my life (q he)
I sozowfull man, ydamned to the dethe
Fro you, whiles that me lasteth breethe
I wol nat twinne, after this auenture
But in your seruice, thus I wol endure
That as a wzetche vnknow, I wol you serue foz

for euermore, tyl that min herte sterue forsake I wol at home min heritage
And as I said, ben of your courte a page
If that ye vouchesafe that in this place
Ye graunte me to haue soche a grace
That I may haue nat but my meate & drinke
And for my sustinaunce yet wol I swinke
Right as you lyst, that Minos ne no wight
Sens that he saw me neuer with eyen sight
Ne no man elis shal me espye
Softly, and so wel I shal me gye
And me so wel disfigure, and so lowe (we
That in this world there shal no man me kno
Co haue my lyfe, and to haue presence
Of you, that done to me this excellence
And to my father shal I sende here
This worthy man, that is your gayler
And him so guerdon, that he shal wel be
One of the greatest men of my countre
And if I durst sayne, my lady bright
I am a kinges sonne and eke a knight
I wolde god, if that it might be Ye weren in my countrey al thre
And I with you, to beare you companye
Than shuld ye lene if that I therof lye
And if that I profer you in lowe manere
To den your page, and seruen you right here
But I you serue as lowly in that place
I pray to Mars to yeue me soche grace
That thames deth on my there mote fall
And deth and pouerte to md frendes all
And that my spirite by night mote go
After my death, and walke to and fro
That I mote of traitour haue a name
For whiche my spirit mote go, to do me shame
And if I clayme euer other degre
But ye vouchsafe to yeue it me
As I haue said, of shames deth I dey
And mercy lady, I can naught els sey
I semely knight was this Theseus to se
And yonge, but of twenty yere and thre
But who so had sene his countenaunce
He wold haue wept, for routh of his penūce
For which this Ariadne in this manere
Answerde to his profre and to his chere Kynges sonne, and eke a knight (q she)
To den my seruaunt in so lowe degree
God shilde it, for the shame of women al
And lene me neuer soche a case befal
And sende you grace, and sleight of hert also
You to defende, & knightly to sleen your foe
And lene here after I may you finde
To me, and to my suster here so hynde
That I ne repent nat to yeue you lyfe
Yet were it better I were your wife
Sithe ye ben as gentil borne as I
And haue a realme nat but fast by Than that I suffred your gētilesse to sterue
Or that I let you as a page serue
It is no profite, as vnto your kinrede
But what is that, ꝑ man wol nat do for dred
And to my suster syth that it is so
That she mote gone with me, if that I go
Or els suffre death as wel as I
That ye vnto your sonne as trewly
Done her be wedded, at youre home coming
This is the fynal ende of al this thing
Ye swere it here, vpon all ꝑ may be swore Ye lady myn (q he) or els to lore
Wote I be wt the Minotaure or to morowe
And haueth here of min hert blod to borowe
If that ye wol, if I had knife or speare
I wolde it letten out, and theron sweare
For than at erste, I wot ye woulde me leue
By Mars, that is chiefe of my beleue
So that I might lyuen, and nat faile
To morowe for to taken my batalle
I nolde neuer fro this place flye
Tyl that ye shulde the very profe se
For now, if that the soth I shall you say
I haue loued you ful many a daie
Though ye ne wist nat, in my countre
And aldermoste desyred you to se
Of any erthly liuing creature
Vpon my trouthe I sweare, and you assure
This seuen yere I haue your seruaunt be Nowe haue I you, and also haue ye me
My dere hert, of Athenes duchesse
This lady smileth at his stedfastnesse
And at his hertely wordes, and at his chere
And to her suster sayd in this manere
And sothely suster myn (q she)
Nowe be we duchesses both I and ye
And sikerde to the regals of Athenes
And bothe herafter likely to be quenes
And saued fro his death a kinges sonne
Is euer of gentil women is the wonne
To saue a gentil man, enforth her might
In honest cause, and namely in his right
Me thinketh no wight ought vs herof blame
Ne bearen vs therfore an euel name
And shortly of this mater for to make
This Theseus of her hath leaue ytake
And euery point was performed in dede
As ye haue in this couenaunt herde me rede
His wepen, his clewe, his thig ꝑ I haue said
Was by the gailer in the house ylaid
There as the Minotaure hath his dwellyng
Right fast by the dore, at his entring
And Theseus is lad vnto his dethe

And forth vnto this Minotaure he gethe
And by the teaching of this Adriane
He ouercame this beest, and was his bane
And out he cometh by the clewe againe
Ful priuely, whan he this beest hath slaine
And the gailer gotten hath a barge
And of his wiues treasure gan it charge
And toke his wife, and eke her suster fre
And by the gailer, and with hem al thre
Is stole away out of the londe by night
And to the countre of Enupie him dight
There as he had a frende of his knowing
There feesten thei, there daunsen thei & sing
And in his armes hath this Adriane
That of the beest hath kept him fro his bane
And get him there a noble barge anone
And of is countrey folke a ful great wone
And taketh his leaue, & homwarde saileth he
And in an yle, amidde the wilde see
There as there dwelte creature none
Saue wilde beestes, and that ful many one
He made his shippe a londe for to sette
And in that yle, halfe a daie he lette
And sayd, y on the londe he must him reste
His mariners haue done right as him leste
And for to tel shortly in this case Whan Ariadne his wife a slepe was
For that her suster sayzed was than she He taketh her in his honde, & forth goth he
To shyppe, and as a traitour stale away
Whil that this Ariadne a slepe lay
And to his countrey warde he saileth bliue
Atwenty dyuel way, the winde him driue
And found his father drenched in the see
We lysle no more to speke of him parde
These false louers, poison be her bane
But I wol turne againe to Adriane
That is with slepe for werinesse ytake
Ful sorowfully her herte may awake
Alas, for the myne herte hath pite
Right in the dawning awaketh she
And gropeth in the bed, & fond right nought
Alas (q she) that euer I was wrought
I am betrayed, and her heere to rente
And to the stronde barefote fast she wente
And cryed: Theseus myn hert swete
Where be ye, that I may nat with you mete:
And might thus with beestes ben yslaine
The halowe rockes answerde her againe
No man she sawe, and yet shone the moone
And hye vpon a rocke she went soone
And sawe his barge, sailingin the see Colde wore her hert, and right thus said she Weker than ye, kinde I the beestes wylde
Hath he nat synne, that he her thus begylde
She cried, o turne againe for routhe & sinne
Thy barge hath nat al his meine inne
Her kerchefe on a pole stycked she Ascaunce he shulde it wele yse
And him remembre that she was behinde
And turne againe, & on the stronde her finde
But all for naught, his way he is gone
And downe she fel a swowne on allone
And vp she riste, and kyssed in all her care
The steppes of his fete, there he hath fare
And to her bed right thus she speketh tho
Thou bed (q she) that hast receiued two Thou shalt answere of two, and not of one
Where is the greater parte, away gone
Alas, wher shal I wretched wight become For though so be that bote none here come Home to my countrey dare I nat for drede
I can my selfe in this case nat rede
What should I tel more here complaining
It is so long it were an heauy thing
In her epistle, Naso telleth all
But shortly to the ende tel I shall
The goddes haue her holpen for pyte
And in the tygne of Taurus men mayse
The stones of her crowne shyne clere
I will no more speke of this matere
But thus this false louer can begile
His trew loue, the diuel quit him his whyle.

There endeth the legende of Ariadne
And here foloweth the legende of Philomene.

THou peuer of the formes, that hast wrought
The fayre world, and dan it in thy thought Eternally, er thou thy werke began
Why madest thou vnto the flaunder of man
Or all be that it was not thy doyng
As for that lende, to make soche a thing
Why suffredest thou that Tereus was borne
That is in loue so false and so forsworne
That fro this worlde vp to the first heuen
Corrumpeth, what that folke his name nemen
And as to me, so grilly was his dede
That whan that I this foule storie rede
Myne yen weren foule, and sore also Yet lasteth the venyme of so longe ago
That enfecteth him, that wolde beholde
The storie of Tereus, of which I tolde
Of Trace was he lorde, and kyn to Marte
The cruel god that stante with blody darte

And

And wedded had he with blisfull chere
Kyng Pandionis faire doughter dere
That hight Progne, floure of her countre
Though Juno liste not at the feast be Ne Himeneus, that God of weddyng is
But at the feast ready been i wis
The furis three, with all her mortall bronde
The Oule all nyght aboue the halles wonde
That Prophete is of wo, and of mischaunce
This reuell, full of song and full of daunce
Laste a fourtenight, or little lasse
But shortly of this storie for to passe
(for I am wearie of hym for to tell)
Fine yere his wife and he togither dwell
Till on a daie she gan so sore long
To seen her suster, that she sawe not long
That for desire she nist what to saie
But to her housbonde gan she for to praie
For Goddes loue, that she mote ones gone
Her suster for to seen, and come ayen anone
Or els but she mote to her wende
She praied him ỹ he would after her sende
And this was daie by daie all her praiere
With al humblesse of wifehode, worde & chere
This Tereus let make his shippes yare
And into Grece hymself is forthe ifare
Unto his father in lawe gan he praie
To vouchesafe, that for a moneth or twaie
That Philomene his wiues suster might
On Progne his wife, but ones haue a sight
And she shall come to you again anon
Hyself with her, I will bothe come and gon
And as my hartes life I will her hepe
This olde Pandion, this kyng gan wepe
For tendernesse of harte, for to leue
His doughter gon, and for to yeue her leue
Of all this worlde he loued nothyng so
But at the laste leaue hath she to go
For Philomene with saite teares eke
Gan of her father grace to beseke
To seen her suster, that her longeth so
And hym enbraceth, with her armes two
And there also yong and faire was she
That when that Tereus sawe her beaute
And of arraie, that there was none her liche
And yet of beaute was she to so riche
He cast his fierie harte vpon her so
That he woll haue her, how so that it go
And with his wiles kneled, and so praied
Till at the last Pandion thus saied
Now sonne (quod he) that art to me so dere
I thee betake my yong doughter dere
That beareth the keie of all myne hartes life
And grete well my doughter, and thy wife
And yeue her leaue somtyme for to pleie
That she maie seen me ones or I deie
And sothly he hath made hym riche feast
And to his folke, the moste and eke the least
That with him came, & yaue him yeftes great
And him coueiteth through the maister streat
Of Athenes, and to the sea hym brought
And tourneth home, no malice he ne thought
The Ores pulleth forthe the vessell fast
And in to Trace arriueth at the last
And vp in to a Forest he her led
And to a caue priuely hym sped
And in this darke caue, if her lest
Or list nought, he bad her for to rest
Of whiche her harte agrose and saied thus
Where is my suster, brother Tereus?
And there withall she wept tenderlie
And quoke for feare, pale and pitouslie
Right as the lâbe, that of the wolfe is bitten
Or as the Culuer, that of the Egle is smitten
And is out of his clawes forthe escaped
Yet it is a ferde, and a waped
Lest it be hent eftsones: so fate she But vtterlie it maie none other be
By force hath this traitour doen a deede
That he hath reft her of her maidenhede Maugre her head, by strength & by his might Lo here a deede of men, and that a right
She crieth suster with full loude steuen
And father dere helpe me God in heauen
All helpeth not, and yet this false theefe
Hath doen his Ladie yet a more mischefe
For feare, lest she should his shame crie
And doen hym openlie a villanie
And with his sweard her tong of kerfe he
And in a Castell made her for to be Full priuely in prisone euermore
And kept her to his vsage and to his store
So that she ne might neuer more astarte
O selie Philomene, wo is in thine harte
Huge been thy sorowes, and wonder smarte
God wreke thee, and sende thee thy bone
Now is tyme I make an ende sone
This Tereus is to his wife icome
And in his armes hath his wife inome
And pitously he wept, and stroke his hedde
And swore her, that he found her suster dedde
For whiche this selie Progne hath sothe wo
That nigh her sorowfull harte brake a two
And thus in teares let I Progne dwell
And of her suster forthe I woll you tel
This wofull Ladie learned had in youth
So that she worken and enbrauden couth
And weauen in stole the rade boze
And it of women hath be woued yore
And sothly for to saine, she hath her till

Of meate and drinke, of clothing at her will
And couthe eke rede well inough and endite
But with a penne she could not write
But letters can she weaue, to and fro
So that by the yere was all a go
She had wouen in a stames large
How she was brought fro Athens in a barge
And in a caue how that she was brought
And all the thyng that Tereus wrought
She waue it wel, and wrote the storie aboue
How she was serued for her susters loue
And to a man a ring she yaue anon
And praied hym by signes for to gon
Unto the quene, and bearen her that clothe
And by signe swore many an othe
She should him yeue what she getten might
This man anon vnto the quene him dight
And tolde it her, and all the maner tolde
And whē the Progne hath this thing behold
No worde she spake, for sorowe & eke for rage
But fained her to gon on pilgrimage
To Baccus temple, and in a little stounde
Her dombe suster sittyng hath she founde
Weping in the castell her self alone
Alas the wo, constraint, and the mone
That Progne vpon her dombe suster maketh
In armes eueriche of hem other taketh
And thus I let hem in her sorowe dwell
The remenaunt is no charge to tell
For this is all and some, thus was she serued
That neuer agilt, ne deserued
Unto this cruell man, that she of wiste
Ye maie beware of men if that you liste
For all be that he woll not for shame
Doen as Tereus, to lese his name
Ne serue you as a murtherer or a knaue
Full little while shull ye trewe hym haue
That woll I sain, al wer he now my brother
But it so be that he maie haue an other.

There endeth the Legende of Philomene, and here followeth the Legende of Phillis.

By proue, as well as by authorite
That wicked fruicte commeth of a wicked tree
That maie ye find, if that it liketh you
But for this ende, I speke this as now
To tell you of false Demophon
In loue a falser heard I neuer non
But it were his father Theseus
God for his grace fro suche one kepe vs
Thus these women praien, that it here
Now to the effecte tourne I of my matere
Destroied is of Troie the Citee
This Demophon came sailyng in the see Toward Athenes, to his paleis large
With him came many a ship, & many a barge
Full of folke, of whiche full many one
Is wounded sore, and sicke, and wo begone
And thei haue at the siege long slaine
Behinde him came a winde, and eke a raine
That stoke so sore, his saile might not stonde
Hym were leuer then all the worlde a stonde
So hunteth hym the tempest to and fro
So darke it was, he could no where go
And with a waue brusten was his stere
His ship was rent so lowe, in suche manere
That Carpenter could it not amende
The see by night as any Torche brende
For woode, and posseth him vp and doun
Till Neptune hath of hym compassioun
And Thetis Chorus, Triton, and thei all
And maden him vp a londe to fall
Whereof that Phillis Lady was and Quene
Lycurgus doughter, fairer vnto sene
Then is the floure again the bright Sonne
Unneth is Demophon to londe i wonne
Weake and eke werie, and his folke sorpined
Of werinesse, and also enfamined
And to the death he was almoste idriuen
His wise folke counsaile haue him yeuen
To seken helpe and succour of the Quene
And loken what his grace might bene
And maken in that lande some cheuesaunce
And kepen him fro wo, and fro mischaunce
For sicke he was, and almoste at the death
Unneth might he speake, or drawe breath
And lieth in Rhodopeia hym for to reste
Whē he may walke, him thought it was best Unto the countrey to seken for succour
Men knewe him wele, and did hym honour
For at Athenes Duke and Lorde was he Is Theseus his father hath ibe
That in his tyme was greate of renoun
No man so greate in all his regioun
And like his father of face and of stature
And false of loue, it came hym of nature
As doeth the fore Renarde, the fores sonne
Of kinde he could his old fatheer wonne
Without lore, as can a Drake swimme
When it is caught, and caried to the brimme
This honorable quene Phillis doth hi chen
Her liketh well his sporte and his manere
But I am agroted here before
To write of hem that in loue been forsworne

And

And eke to haste me in my Legende
Whiche to perfourme, God me grace sende
Therefore I passe shortly in this wise
Ye haue well heard of Theseus the gise
In the betraiyng of faire Adriane
That of her pite kept him fro his bane
In short wordes, right so Demophon
The same waie, and the same pathe hath gon
That did his false father Theseus
For vnto Phillis hath he sworne thus
To wedden her, and her his trouth plight
And piked of her all the good he might
When he was hole & sounde, and had his reste
And doth with Phillis, what so that him lest
As well I could, if that me liste so
Tellen all his doyng to and fro
He saied to his countrey mote hym saile
For there he would her weddyng apparaile
As still to her honour, and his also
And openly he tooke his leaue tho
And to her swore ye would not soiourne
But in a moneth again he would retourne
And in that londe let make his ordinaunce
As very Lorde, and tooke the obeisaunce
Well and hombly, and his Shippes dight
And home he goeth the next waie he might
For vnto Phillis yet came he nought
And that hath she so harde and sore ibought
Alas, as the storie doeth vs recorde
She was her owne death with a corde
When that she saw that Demophō her traied
But first wrote she to him, and fast him praied
Ye would come, and deliuer her of pain
As I rehearse shall a worde or twain
He liste not vouchsafe on him to swinke
Dispenden on him a penne full of ynke
For false in loue was he, right as his sire
The Deuill set her soules bothe on a fire
But of the letter of Phillis woll I write
Iworde or twain, although it be but lite
Thine hostesse (q she) O Demophon
Thy Phillis, whiche that is so wo begon
Of Rhodopeie, vpon you mote complain
Ouer the terme set betwirt vs twain
That ye ne holden forwarde, as ye saied
Your ancre, whiche ye in our hauen laied
Right vs, that ye would comen out of doubt
Or that the Moone ones went about
But times fower, the Mone hath hid her face
Sens thilke daie ye went fro this place
And fower tymes light the worlde again
But for all that, yet shall I sothly sain Yet hath the streme of Scythō not brought From Athens the ship, yet came it nought
And if that ye the terme reken would
As I or other true louers doe should I plain not (God wot) before my daie
But all her letter written I ne maie
By order, for it were to me a charge
Her letter was right long, and thereto large
But here and there, in rime I haue it laied
There as me thought that she hath wel saied
She saied, the saries cometh not again
Ne to the worde, there nis no fey certain
But I wot why ye come not (q she)
For I was of my loue to you so fre
And of the Goddes that ye haue swore That her vengeaunce fall on you therefore Ye be not suffisaunt to beare the pain
To moche trusted I, well maie I sain
Vpon your linage, and your faire tong
And on your teares, falsly out wrong
How could ye wepe so by craft? (q she) Maie there soche teares fained be?
Now certes, if ye would haue in memorie
It ought be to you but little glorie
To haue a selie maide thus betraied
To God (q she) praie I, and oft haue praied
That it be now the greatest price of all
And moste honour, that euer you shall befall
And when thine old aunceters painted be
In whiche men maie her worthinesse se
Then praie I God, thou painted be also That folke maie reden, for the by as thei go
Lo this is he, that with his flattery
Betraied hath, and doen her villany
That was his true loue, in thought and dede
But sothly of o poinct yet maie thei rede
That ye been like your father, as in this
For he begiled Iriadne i wis
With soche an arte, and soche subtelte
As thou thy selues hast begiled me
As in that poinct, although it be not feire
Thou folowest certain, and art his heire
But sens thus sinfully ye me begile
My bodie mote ye sene, within a while Right in the hauen of Athenes fletyng
Withouten Sepulture and buriyng
Though ye been harder then is any stone
And whē this letter was forth sent anone
And like we how by tell and how fals he was
She for dispaire forbid her self, alas
Soche sorowe hath she, for she beset her so
Beware ye women of your subtill fo
Sens yet this daie, men maie ensample se
And trusteth now in loue no man but me.

Here endeth the Legende of Phillis.

Here

Of Hypermestre.

Here foloweth the legende of Hypermestre.

IN Grece whilom wer bretherne two
Of whiche that one was called Danao
That many a sonne hath of his bodie wonne
As soche false louers ofte conne
Emong his sonnes all there was one
That aldermoste be loued of euerychone
And when this child was borne, this Danao
Shope him a name, and called hym Lino
That other brother called was Egiste
That was of loue as false as euer him liste
And many a daughter gate he in his life
Of whiche he gate vpon his right wife
I doughter dere, and did her for to call Hypermestra, yongest of hem all
The whiche childe of her natiuite
To all good thewes borne was she
As liked to the Goddes or she was borne
That of the sheis she should be the corne
The werdes that we clepen destine Hath shapen her, that she must nedes be Pitous, sad, wise, true as stele
And to this woman it accordeth wele
For though that Uenus paue her great beute
With Iupiter compowned so was she
That conscience, trouthe, and drede of shame
And of her wifehode for to kepe her name
This thought her was felicite as here
And reed Mars, was that tyme of the yere
So feble, that his malice is him rafte
Repressed hath Uenus his cruell crafte
And what with Uenus, and other oppression
Of houses, Mars his Uenime is a don
That Hypermestre dare not handle a knife
In malice, though she should lese her life
But natheless, as heauen gan tho turne
Two bad aspectes, hath she of Saturne
That made her to die in prison
And I shall after make mencion
Of Danao and Egistes also
And though so be that thei were brethre two
For thilke tyme nas spared no linage
It liked hem to make mariage
Betwirt Hypermestre, and him Lino
And casten soche a daie it shall be so
And full accorded was it vtterly
The araie is wrought, the tyme is fast by
And thus Lino hath of his fathers brother
The doughter wedded, & ech of hē hath other
The torches brennen, and the lampes bright
The Sacrifice been full ready dight
Thensence out of the fire reketh soote
The floure, the leefe, is rent vp by the roote
To maken garlandes and crounes hie
Full is the place of sound of Minstralcie
Of songes amourous of mariage
Is thilke tyme was the plain vlage
And this was in the paleis of Egiste
That in his hous was lord, right as him liste
And thus that daie thei driuen to an ende
The frendes taken leue, and home thei wend
The night is come, the bride shall go to bed
Egiste to his chamber fast him sped
And priuely let his doughter call when that the hous voided was of hem all
He looketh on his doughter with glad chere
And to her spake, as ye shall after here.

My right doughter, tresour of mine herte
Sens first that daie, ꝑ shapen was my sherte
Or by the fatall suster had my dome
So nye myne harte neuer thing ne come
As thou Hypermestre, doughter dere
Take hede what thy father saieth thee here
And werke after thy wiser euer mo
For alderfirst doughter, I loue thee so
That all the worlde to me nis halfe so leef
Ne nolde rede thee to thy mischefe
For all the good vnder the colde Mone
And what I meane, it shal be said right soone with protestacion, as saine these wise
That but thou doe, as I shall thee deuise
Thou shalt be ded, by him ꝑ al hath wrought
At shorte wordes thou ne scapest nought
Out of my paleis, or that thou be deed
But thou consent, and werke after my reed
Take this to the fearfull conclusion
This Hypermestre cast her eyen doun
And quoke as doeth the leefe of ashe grene
Deed wert her hew, and like as ashen to sene
And saied: Lorde and father all your will After my might, God wote I shall fulfill
So it be to me no confusion.

I nill (ꝙ he) haue none excepcion
And out he caught a knife, as rasour kene
Hide this (ꝙ he) that it be nat isene
And when thine housbonde is to bed go while that he slepeth, cut his throte a two
For in my dreme it is warned me
How that my neue we shall my bane be
But whiche I not, wherefore I woll be siker
If thou saie naie, we two shall haue a biker
As I haue saied, by him that I haue sworne
This Hypermister hath nigh her wit forlorn
And for to passe harmelesse out of that place

She

She graũted him, there was non other grace
And with all a coltrell taketh he tho
And laied, hereof a draught or two Drinke him drinke, when he goeth to reste
As he shall slepe as long as euer thee leste
The narcotikes and apies been so strong
And go thy waie, lest that him thinke to long
Out cometh the bride, & with full sobre chere
As is of maidens oft the manere
To chamber brought, with reuel & with song
And shortlie, leste this tale be to long
This Lino and she beth brought to bed
And euery wight out at the doore him sped
The night is wasted, and he fell a slepe
Full tenderly beginneth she to wepe
She rist her vp, and dredefully she quaketh
As doeth the braunch, that zephirus shaketh
And vught were all in Aragone that cite
As colde as any froste now wereth she
For pite by the harte strained her so
And drede of death doeth her so mochè wo
That thrise doune she fill, in soche a were
She riste her vp, and staketh here and there
And on her handes sake looketh she Alas, shall myne handes bloodie be
I am a maide, and as by my nature
And by my semblaunt, and by my vesture
Myne handes been not shapen for a knife
As for to reue no man fro his life
What Deuill haue I with the knife to do
And shall I haue my throte corue a two Then shall I blede alas, and be shende
And nedes this thing mote haue anende
Or he or I mote nedes lese our life
Now certes (q she) sens I am his wife
And hath my faithe, yet is it bette for me
For to be dedde, in wikely honeste
Then be a traitour, liuyng in my shame
Be as be maie, for carnell or for game
He shall awake, and rise and go his waie
Out at this gutter, er that it be daie
And wept full tenderlie vpon his face
And in her armes gan him to embrace
And him she roggeth, and awaketh soft
And at the windowe lepe he fro the loft
When she hath warned him, & doen him bote
This Lino swift was, and light of foote
And from her ran, a full good paas
This selie woman is so weake, alas
And helpiesse, so that er she ferre went
Her cruell father did her for to hent
Alas Lino, why art thou so vnkinde
Why ne hast thou remembred in thy minde
And taken her, and led her forthe with thee
For when she sawe that gone awaie was he
And that she might not so fast go
Ne folowen him, she sate doune right tho
And til she was caught, and fettred in prison
This tale is saied for this conclusion.

¶ Thus endeth the Legendes of good women, and here followeth a balade of Chaucer.

¶ A goodlie balade of Chaucer.

MOther of norture, best beloued of all
And freshe floure, to whō good thrift God sende
Your childe, if it lustе you me so to call
All be I vnable my self so to pretende
To your discrecion I recommende
Mine harte and all, with euery circūstaunce
All holly to be vnder your gouernaunce.

Wolde desire I, and haue, and euer shall Thing, which might your hartes ease amēde
Haue me excused, my power is but small Natheles of right ye ought to commende
My good will, whiche faine would entende
To doe you seruice, for all my suffisaunce
Is holly to be vnder your gouernaunce.

Mauxvoir in harte: whiche neuer shall apall
Ne freshe and new, and right glad to dispēde
My time in your seruice, what so befall
Beseechyng your excellence to defende
My simplenesse, if ignoraunce offende
In any wise, sith that myne affiaunce
Is hollie to been vnder your gouernaunce.

Daisie of light, very ground of comfort
The Sunnes doughter (ye hight) as I rede
For when he westreth, farwell your disport
By your nature anone right for pure drede
Of the rude night, ꝑ with his boistous wede
Of darkenesse, shadoweth our emispere
Then closen ye, my liues Ladie dere.

Daunyng the daie, to his kinde resort
And Phebus your father, w his stremes rede
Adorneth the morowe, consuming the sort
Of mistie cloudes, that woulden ouerlede
True humble hartes, with her mistie hede
Here comfort a daies, when iyen clere
Disclose and spreade my liues Ladie dere.

And maketh caſuell by his prouidence
Suche thing, as mannes frele wit purpoſeth
All for the beſt, if that your conſcience
Not grutche it, but in humble paciense
Jt receiue, for God ſaieth without fable
A faithfull harte euer is acceptable.

To eſchewe ſuche it is right high prudence
What ye ſaied ones, mine harte oppoſeth
That my writyng Japes in your abſence

Yet can I more, ye be not excuſable
A faithfull harte euer is acceptable.

That in my writing ye find woll ſome offēce
Min hart welneth thus ſone, anon it riſeth
Now hotte, now colde, and eft in feruence
That mille is, is cauſed of negligence
And not of malice, therefore beth merciable
A faithfull harte euer is acceptable.

For complaint, forthe lachyng eloquence
For little letter of endityng lame
I haue beſought my ladies Sapience
Of thy behalfe, to accept in game
Thine inabilite, doe thou theſame
I bide, haue more yet: Je ſerue Jouelle
Now forth, I cloſe thee in holy Venus name
Thee ſhall vncloſe my hartes gouernerelle.

Thus endeth this Ballade: And here followeth the Booke of Boetius de conſolatione Philoſophie.

BOECIVS DE CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIE.

Carmina qui quondam ſtudio florenti peregi
Flebilis heu meſtos cogor inire modos.

ALas, I wepyng am conſtrained to begin verſe of ſorowefull matter, that whilom in florishyng ſtudie made delitable diters. For lo, rendyng mules of Poetes, enditē to me thinges to be writen, and drie teares. Jt laſte no dzede ne might ouercome tho muſes, that thei ne werren fellowes, and folowden my waie, that is to ſaie: when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youthe, whilom weelfull and grene, comfyten now ſorowfull wierdes, of me olde man: for elde is comen vnwarely vpon me, haſted by the harmes that I haue, and ſorowe hath commaunded his age to bee in me. Heeres hore aren ſhad ouertimeliche vpon my head: and the ſlacke ſkinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke death of men is weleſull, that ne commeth not in yeres that be ſwet, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas, with how dele an eare death cruelly neth awaie fro wretches, and naieth to the cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortune vnfaithfull, fauoured me with light goodes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the death, had almoſte dzente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie, hath chaunged her deceiuable chere to me warde, myne vnpitous life dyweth along vngreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or wherto auaunted ye me to been welfull? For he that hath fallen, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degree.

Hec dum mecum tacitus ipſe reputarem, querimoniamq; lacrimabilem ſtili officio deſignarem: aſtitiſſe mihi ſupra verticem viſa eſt mulier reuerendi admodum vultus, oculis ardentibus, & vltra communē hu-

IN the meane while, that I ſat recorded theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepplie complainte, with office of poinctell: I ſought ſtondyng abouen the hight of mine hed a woman of full greate reuerence, by ſemblaunt. Her iyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng ouer ouer the common might of menne, with a lively colour, & with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not been nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so greate age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her, was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and thronke her selven, like to the common measure of menne: And sometyme it semed, that she touched the heauen, with the hight of her hedde. And when she houe her hedde higher, she perced the self heauen, so that the sight of menne lookyng was in idell: her clothes wer maked of right delie threedes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes, she had wouen with her owne handes, as I mewe well after, by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkenesse of a forleten and dispised elde, had dusked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by smoked Images.

In the nethereste hemme or border of these clothes, menne redde i wouen therein, a Grese Π. that signifieth the life Actiue, and aboue that letter, in the hieste bordure, a Grese C. that signifieth the life contemplatife. And betwene these two letters, there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees, menne might climben from the nethereste letter, to the vppereste: natheleste handes of some men, had vnherue that clothe, by violēce or by strēgth and eueriche manne of hem, had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this forelaied woman, bare smale bookes in her right hande, and in her left hand, she bare a sceptre. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses, approchyng aboute my bed, and endityng wordes to my weppynges, she was a litle moued, and glowed with cruell iyen. who (ywis) hath suffered approchen to this sicke manne, these commen strompettes, of which is the place, that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswagen not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime: Forsothe, that been tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that been nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reason. for thei holden hartes of men in vlage, but thei ne deliuer no folke fro maladie. But if the muses had withdrawē fro me with your flatteries, any an vnconnyng and vnprofitable manne, as been wont to finde commenly emong the people, I would well suffre the lasse greuously. For why, in soche an vnprofitable man, myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that he hath been nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Achademicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that been swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and healed by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed, casten wrothly ȳ chere, doun ward to the yearth, and shewing by rednesse her shame, thei passeden sorowfully the threshold. And I of whom the sight plounged in teares was darked, so that I ne might not know, what that woman was, of so Imperiall auctoritie, I wore all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide, what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune vpon the vtterest corner of my bed, and she beholdyng my chere, that was cast to the yearth, heauie and greuous of wepyng, complained with these woordes (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

Heu quam precipiti mersa profundo, Mens habet, & propria luce relicta, Tendit ad externas ne tenebras. Terrenis quoties flatibus acta, Crescit in immensum noxia cura. Hic quondam cœlo liber aperto.

ALas, howe the thought of this man, dreinte in ouerthrowyng depenesse, dulleth and forleteth his proper clerenesse, myntyng to gone into forain darkenesse, as ofte as his anoious besines wereth without measure, that is driuē with worldlie Windes. This man that whilome was free, to whom the heauen was open and knowen, and was wont to gone in heauenly pathes, and sawe the lightnesse of the redde Sunne, and beheldē the Sterres of the colde Moone, and whiche Sterre in heauen, vseth wanderyng recourses ilikte by diuers spheres. This manne ouercomer had comprehended all this thyng, by nomber of accompting in Astronomie. And ouer this, he was wont to seken the causes, whens the sowning windes mouen, and beten the smothe water of the Sea. And what spirite tourneth the stable heauen. And why the sterre riseth out of the red East, to fallen in the Westeren waues. And what attempreth the lustie houres of the firſte Sommer ſeaſon, and highteth and apparaileth the yearth with roſie floures. And who maketh the plumtuous Autumpne, in full yeres fleeten with heaute Grapes. And ehe this manne was wonte, to tell the diuers cauſes of nature that were hidde. Alas, how lightlie is empted the light of his thought, and his neche is preſſed with heauie chaines, and beareth his chere enclined adowne for the greate weight, and is conſtrained to looken on the fole yearth.

Sed magis medicine (inquit) tempus eſt quam querele. Boe. Tum vero totis in me intenta luminibus. Philo. Tu ne ille es (ait) qui noſtro quondam lacte nutritus, noſtris educatus alimentis, in virilis animi robur euaſeras. &c.

BUT tyme is now of Medicine (q ſhe) more then complainte. Forſothe then ſhe entendynge to me warde, with all the lookyng of her iyen ſaied. Art not thou he (q ſhe) that whilome I nouriſhed with my Milke, and foſtred with my meates, were eſcaped and commen to the courage of a parfaite manne? Certes, I yaue thee ſoche armours, that if thou thy ſelf, ne haddeſt firſte caſte hem awaie, thei ſhoulden haue defended thee in liikernelle, that maie not bee ouercomen. Knoweſt thou not me? Why art thou ſtille? Is it for ſhame, or for aſtoniyng? It were me leuer it were for ſhame, but it ſemeth me that aſtoniyng hath oppreſſed thee. And when ſhe ſawe me not onely ſtil, but rather without office of tongue, and all dombe, ſhe laied her hande ſoftelie vpon my breaſt, and ſaied: Here is no perill (q ſhe) he is fallen into a litrage, whiche that is a common ſickenelle, to hartes that been deceiued. He hath a little forgeten hymſelf. But certes he ſhall lightlie remembren hymſelf, if ſo bee that he hath knowen me er nowe. And that he maie doen ſo, I will wipe his iyen alittle, that be darked by the cloude of mortall thynges. Theſe woordes ſaied ſhe, and with the lappe of her garnemente, iplited in a frounce ſhe dried myne iyen, that weren full of the wawes of my weppynges.

Tunc me diſcuſſa liquerunt nocte tenebre, Luminibuſq; prior redit vigor. Vt cum precipiti glomerantur ſidera choro. Nimboſiſq; polus ſtetit imbribus. Sol latet, ac nondum cœlo venientibue aſtris, &c.

THus when that Nighte was diſcuſſed awaie, Darkenelle forlete me, and to my iyen repaired again her firſt ſtrength. And right as by enſample, as the Sunne is hidde when the Sterres been couerde with Cloudes, by a ſwifte winde that hight Chorus, and the Firmamente ſtante derched by weate plungie Cloudes. And that the Sterres not apperen vpon the heauen, ſo that the Night ſemed ſprad vpon the yearth. If then the wind that hight Boreas, iſent out of the Caue, of the Countrey of Trace, beateth this night, that is to ſaine, chaſeth it awaie, and diſcouereth the cloſed daie. Thā ſhineth Phebus, iſhaken with ſodaine light, and ſmiteth with his beames in marueilyng iyen.

RIght ſo and none otherwiſe, the Cloudes of ſorowe diſſolued, and dooen awaie, I tooke heauen, and receiued myndet knowen the face of my Phiſicien: ſo that I ſette myne iyen vpon her, and faſtened my lookyng. I beheld my Nourice Philoſophie, in whoſe houſe I had conuerſed fro my youthe, and I ſaied thus. O thou Maiſtreſſe of all vertues, diſcended from the ſouerain ſeate, why art thou commen into this ſolitarie place of myne exile? Art thou comen, for thou art made coulpable with me of falſe blames. O (q ſhe) my nourice, ſhould I forſake thee now, ſhould I not parten with thee by commen trauaile, the charge that thou haſte ſuffered for enuie of my name? Certes, it were not leſull ne litting to Philoſophie, to leten without companie, the waie of hym that is innocent: Should I then redout my blame, and agrife as though there wer befallen a newe thing? For troweſt thou that Philoſophie, bee now alderfirſt aſſailed in perilles, by folke of wicked maner? Haue I not ſtriuen with full grate ſtriek, in olde tyme, before the age of my Plato, ayenſt the foole hardineſſe of folye? And ehe the ſame Plato liuyng, his Maiſter Socrates, deſerued victorie of vnright full death in my preſence. The heritage of the whiche Socrates, the heritage, is to ſaine the Doctrine, of the whiche Socrates, in his opinion of felicite, that I cleape welefulnesse: when that the people of Epicuriens and Stoiciēs, and many other, enforced theim to go rauish, euery man for his parte, that is to saine: that euerich of hem would drawen, to the defence of his opiniō, the wordes of Socrates. Thei as in partie of their praie, to droune me, crying and debatyng there ayenste, and corueu and renten my clothes, that I had wouen with myne owne handes. And with tho clothes that thei had araced out of my clothes, thei wenten awaie, wenyng that I had gone with hem euery dele. In whiche Epicuriens and Stoiciens, for as moche as there semed some traces and steppes of my habite. The folie of wenyng tho Epicuriens and Stoiciens, my familiers, peruerted some, through the errour of the wicked multitude of hem: This is to saine, for thei semed Philosophers, thei weren pursued to the death and slaine. So if thou hast not knowen the exilyng of Anaragoras, ne the enpoisoning of Socrates, ne the tourmentes of Zeno, for thei weren straungers, yet mightest thou haue knowen the Senecas, the Cantos, and the Sozanos: Of whiche folke, the renome is neither ouer olde ne vnsolempne. The whiche menne nothyng els ne brought to the death, but onely for thei were enformed of my maners, and semeden moolte vnlike to the studies of wicked folke. And for thy thou oughtest not to wondren, though that I in the bitter sea, be driuē with tempestes blowing about. In the whiche this is my moste purpose, that is to sain, vdisplesen wicked men. Of whiche shrewes, all be the hoolte neuer so greate, it is to dispise, for it is not gouerned with no leader ofreason, but it is rauished onely by fletyng errour, folilie and lightlie. And if thei sometyme, make an hoolte ayenst vs, assaile vs as frenzer: our leader draweth together, his richelles into his Toure, and thei been entendite, about sarpleris or sachelles, vnprofitable for to taken. But we then been high abouen, liker from all tumulte and woode noise, warenestored and enclosed in soche a Paleis, whither as the clateryng or anoiyng folie, maie not attaine, we scorne soche raueners, and henters of fouleste thynges.

Quisquis composito se rennis euo, Fatum sub pedibus egit superbum: Fortunamq; tuens vtramq; rectus, Insultum potuit tenere vultum, &c.

Who so it bee that cleare of vertue, sadde, and well ordinate of liuyng, that hath putte vnder foote the proude werdes, and looketh vpright vppon either Fortune, he maie holden his chere vndisomfited.

The rages ne the manaces of the sea, commouyng and chasyng vnware, heat from the bottome, ne shall not moue that manne, ne the vnstable Mountaigne that hight Vesenus, that wytheth out through his broken Chimeneis, smokyng fires, ne the waie of Thonder leite, that is wonte to smiten high Toures, ne shall not moue that man. Whereto then wretches drede ye Tiraunes, that been wood, and felōnous with any strength? Hope after nothyng, ne drede thou not: and so shalte thou disarmen the ire of thilke vnmightie Tiraunte. But who that quahyng dredeth, or desireth thyng that is not stable of his right, that manne that so dooeth, hath caste awaie his shilde, and is remoued fro his place, and enlaseth hym in the chaine, with the whiche he maie be drawen.

Sentis ne (inquit) hec? Atq; animo illabuntur tuo? Expers ne es lyre? Quid fles? Quid lachrimis manas? Si operam medicantis expectas, oportet vt vulnus detegas tuum, &c.

Telest thou (q she) these thynges? And entren thei aught in thy courage? Art thou like an Asse to the harpe? Why wepest thou? why spillest thou teares? If thou abidest after helpe of the Leche, thee behoueth discouer thy wounde? Tho I had gathered strength in my courage, and answered and saied. And nedeth it (q I) of rehearsyng, or of amonicion, and sheweth it not inough by hymself, the sharpenes that wereth woode against me. He moueth it not thee to se the face, or the maner of this place? Is this the librarie that thou haddest chosen for a right certain liege, to ther in mine hous there as thou disputest oft with me, of the science of thynges, touchyng diuinite, and touthynge mankynde? was then myne habite soche as it is now, was my face or chere, soch as is now, when I sought with the secretes of nature, when thou enformedest my maners, and the reason of all my life, to the ensample of thorder of heauen? Is not this the guerdone that I referre to thee, to whom I haue be obeisaunt? Certes, thou enformedest by the mouthe of Plato this sentence, that is to saine: that comen thinges or comunalties weren blissull, if thei that had studied all fully to wisedome, gouerneden thilke thynges: or els if it so befell, that the gouernours of cõmunalties, studien to gette wisedome. Thou saidest ehe by the mouthe of the saied Plato, that it was a necessarie cause, wise menne to taken and desiren the gouernaunce of comen thynges, for that the gouernaunce of cites, sleft in the handes of felonous tourmentors, citezeins ne shoulden not bringen in pestilẽce and distruccion to good folke. And therefore I followyng thilke auctheurs, desired to put forthe in execucion and in acte, of comen administracion thilke thinges, that I had learned of thee emong my secrete resting whiles, thou and God, that put in the thoughtes of wise folke, been knowen with me, that nothyng ne brought me to maistrie or dignitie, but the common studie of all goodnesse. And therfore cometh it, that betwene wicked folk and me, haue been greuous discordes, that ne mighten not bee released by praiers: for this libertie hath the fredome of conscience, that the wrathe of more mightie folke, hath alwaie been dispised of me, for sauaciõ of right. How oft haue I resisted and withstande, that man that hight Canigast, that made alwaie thassaut, ayenst the prosper fortunes of poor feobie folke? How eft ehe haue I put of or cast out hym Triguill, Prouoste of the kynges hous, bothe of the wronges that he had begonne to doen, and ehe fully performed? How often haue I couered and defended by the auctheritie of me, put ayenst perilles, that is to saine: put myne auctheritie in perill, for the wretched poore folke, that the couetise of straungers vnpunished, turmenteden alwaie with mischeses, and greuaunces out of nomber? Neuer maine yet drowe me fro right to wrong. When I sawe the fortunes and the richelles of the people of the Prouinces, been harmed and amenused, either by priuie rauines, or by comen tributes or cariages, as sory was I as thei ỹ suffreden the harme. Siste. When Theoderike kyng of Gothes in a dedde yere had his garners full of corne, and commaunded that no man should buye no corne, till his corne wer sold, and at a greuous dere prise: Beete withstoode that ordinaunce, and ouercame it, knowyng all this the king Theoderike hymself. Coempcion is to saie, comen achate or buiyng together, that were establisshed vpon the people, by soche a maner imposicion, as who so bought a bushell of corne, he must yeuen the kyng the liueth parte. Tertius. When it was in the sore hongrie tyme, there was establisshed greuous and vnprofitable coempcion, that men seen well, it shuld greatlie tourmenten and endomagen all the Prouince of Campaine. I tooke strife ayenst the Prouost of the Pretorie, for the common profite. And the knowyng of it, I ouercame it, so that the coempcion was not alled, ne tooke effecte.

Pauline a Counsailour of Roome, therichelles of the whiche Pauline, the hondes of the Paleis, that is to saie, the officers wouldden haue deuoured by hope and couetise: yet drowe I out of the lowes, of hem that gapeden. And for as moche as the paine of the accusacion a Judged before, ne should not sodainly henten, ne punishen wrongfully Albine a Counsailour of Roome, I putte me ayenst the hates, and indignacions of the accusour Cipzian. Is it not then inough, sens that I haue purchased great discordes ayenst my self? But I ought bee more assured ayenst other folke, that for the loue of right wisnesse I neuer reserued nothyng to my self, to hewarde of the kynges halle, by whiche I were the more siker. But through tho same accusours accusyng, I am condempned. Of the nomber of whiche accusours, one Basilius that whilome was chased out of the kynges seruice, is now compelled in accusyng of my name, for nede of forsaine money.

Also, Opilion and Gaudencius, haue accused me: All be it, so that the Justice Regall had whilome demed theim bothe, to gone into exile, for her tretcheries and fraudes without nomber. To whiche iudgement theinolden not obeye, but defended hem by the siker nesse of holie houses, that is to saine, fledden into Seinte warie: And then when this was appercetued by the kynge, he commaunded, but if thei auoided the Citee of Rauenne, by certayne daye assigned, that menne should marken hem on the forehedde, with an hotte yron, and chasen hem out of the toune. Now what thyng semeth might be likened to this crueltie, for certes, this same daie was receiued, the accusing of my name, by thilke same accusoures? What maie bee saied hereto? Hath my studie and my connynge deserued thus, or els the forsaied dampnacion of me, made theim rightfull accusours or no? was not fortune a shamed of this? Certes, all had not fortune ben a shamed, that innocẽce was accused, yet ought she haue had shame of the

tirbe of myne accusours. But aske thou in some, of what gilte I am accused. Ben saine that I would sauen the companie of the Senatours. And desirest thou to heren, in what maner I am accused, that I should haue disturbed the accusour to bearen Letters, by whiche he should haue made the Senatours gilte, ayenst the Kynges roiall Maiestie. O Maistresse, what demest thou of this? Shall I forsake this blame, that I ne bee no shame to thee? Certes, I haue would it (that is to saie) the sauacion of the Senate, ne I shall neuer let to wilne it, and that I confesse and am a knowe, but the entente of the accusour to been disturbed, shall cease. Shall I clepe that a felonie or a synne, that I haue desired the sauacion of the order of the Senate. And certes, had thilke same Senate, doen through her decretes and her iudgementes, as though it wer a sinne and a felonie, that is to wilne the sauacion of them. But folie that lieth alwaie to hymself, maie not chaunge the merite of thynges, ne I trowe not by the iudgemente of Socrates, that it were lefull to me, to hide the sothe, ne assente to leasynges: but certes, how so euer it bee of this, I putte it to gessen or prisen, of the iudgement of thee, and of wise folke, of whiche thynge all the ordinaunce and the sothe (for as moche as folke that been to comen after our daies, shal knowen it) I haue putte it in Scripture, and in remembraunce. For touchyng the Letters falsely made, by whiche Letters I am accused, to haue hoped the freedome of Roome, what apertaineth me to speaken thereof. Of whiche Letters, the fraude had been shewed openlie, if I had had libertie for to haue vsed and been at confession of mine accusours, the whiche thyng in all nedes hath great strēgth for what other fredom maie menne hopen? Certes, I would that some other freedome might be hoped, I would then haue aunswered, by the woordes of a man, that hight Canus: For when he was accused of Canius, Celar Germanes soonne, that he was knowyng and consentyng, of a coniuracion made ayenst hym. This Canius aunswered thus: If I had wiste it, thou haddest not wiste it. In whiche thyng, sorowe hath not so dulled my witte, that I plain onely, that shrewde folke apparailen Felonies againste vertue, but I wonder greatly, how that thei maie performe thinges that thei haue hoped for to deon, for why ne wil ne shrewdnesse that cometh paraventure of our defaute, But it is like a Monster and a marueile, how that in the presente sight of GOD, maie been acheued and performed soche thynges, as euery Felenous manne, hath conceiued in his thought againste innocentes. For whiche thynge, one of thy familers not vnskilfull, asked thus. If GOD is: whens comen wicked thynges. But all had it been lefull that felonous folk, that nowe desiren the blood, and the death of all good menne. And eke of the Senate, haue wilned to gone distroyē me, whom thei haue seen alwaie batailen and defenden good men and eke all the Senate, that had not deserued of the fathers (that is to saine of the Senatours) that thei shoulden will my destruccion. Thou remembrest well as I gesse, that when I would doen or saine any thyng, thou thy self alwaie presente ruledest me.

At the citee of Nerone, when that the king gredie of comen slaughter, caste hym to transporten vpō al thorder of the senate, the gilte of his roiall Maiestie, of the whiche gilte, that Albin was accused, with how greate sikernesse of perill to me, defended I all the Senate: Thou wotest well that I saie sothe, ne I ne auaunted me neuer in praisyng of my self. For alwaie, when any wight receiueth precious renome, in auauntyng of hymself, or his werkes, he amenuseth the secree of his conscience.

But now thou maiest well seen, to what ende I am comen for myne innocencie, I receiue paine of false Felonie, for gwerdone of verie vertue. And what open confession of felonie had euer Judges, so accordaunte in cruelte, that is to saine, as myne accusyng hath, that either errour of mannes witte, or els condicion of Fortune, that is vncertaine to all mortall folke, ne submitted some of hē, that is to saie, that it ne enclined some Judge to haue pite or compassion. For although I had been accused, that I would brenne holie houses, and strangle Priestes with wicked swearde, or that I had greithed death to all good men, algates the sentence should haue punished me presente confessed and conuicte.

But now I am remoued from the Citee of Rome, almoste fiue hundred thousand paas, I am without defence dampned, to proscripciō and to death, for the studies and bounties that I haue doen to the Senate. But o well been thei worthie of merite, as who saieth: naie, there might yet neuer none of hem bee conuict of soche a blame as mine is. Of whiche trespace mine accusours seen full wel the dignitie, for thei would darken it with medling of ſome felonie. Thei baren me on hond and laied, that I had polute and defouled my conſcience with Sacrilege, for couetiſe of dignitie: and certes, thou thy ſelf that art plãted in me, chaceddeſt out of the liege of my corage, all couetiſe of mortall thynges, ne Sacrilege, ne had no leaue to haue a place in me before thyne yes. For thou droppedeſt euery daie in mine eares, and in my thought thilke commaundemente of Pythagoras, that is to ſaie: Wenne ſhall ſeruen to God, and not to Goddes. Ne it was not conueniente ne none neede, to taken helpe of the foulеſt ſpirites, I that thou haſt ordeined, and ſet in ſoche excellence, that thou madeſt me trine to God, and ouer this, the right cleane ſecrete chamber of myne hous, that is to ſaie, my wife, and the companie of mine honeſt frendes, and my wiues father, as well holie as worthy to bee reuerenſed for his deedes, defenden me from all ſoche ſuſpeccion of ſoche blame. But oh malice. For thei that acculen me, taken of the Philoſophie laity of ſo great blame, for thei trowen that I haue had affinite to malifice or enchauntment, becauſe that I am repleniſhed, & fulfilled with thy teachynges, and enformed of thy maners. And thus it ſuffiſeth not onely, that thy reuerence ne auaile me naught, but if thou of thy frewill, rather bee blemiſhed with mine offencion. But certes, to the harmes that I haue, there betideth yet this encreaſe of harme, that the geſſyng and the iudgemente of moche folke, ne looken no thyng to the deſertes of thinges, but onely to the auenture of fortune, and iudgen that only ſoche thinges been purueied of God, which that temporalle wilfulneſſe commaundeth.

Gloſa. Is thus, that if a wight haue proſperite, he is a good manne, and worthie to haue that proſperitie, and who ſo hath aduerſitie, he is a wicked manne, and God hath forſake hym, & he is worthie to haue that aduerſitie. This is the opinion of ſome folke, and therof cometh ỹ good geſſing, firſt of all thing forſaked wretches. Certes, it greueth me to thinke right now, in diuers ſentẽces that the people laith of me: & thus moche I ſaie, that the laſt charge of contrarious Fortune is this, that when any blame is laied vpon a caitife, men women, that he hath deſerued that he ſuffereth. And I that am put awaie from good men, and diſpoiled of dignities, and defouled of my name by geſſyng, haue ſuffred turmentes for my good deedes. Certes, me ſeemeth that I ſee the felonous couines of wicked mẽ habounden in ioie and in gladneſſe, and I ſe that euery lorell, shapeth hym to finde newe fraudes, for to accuſe good folk, and I ſe that good folke bee ouerthrowen, for drede of my perill, and euery lururious turmentour, dare dooen all felonie vnpuniſhed, and bee excited thereto by peſtes, and innocentes be not onely diſpoiled of ſikernеſſe, but of defence, and therto me liſt to crien to God in this maner.

THou maker of the wheele, that beareth the ſterres, which that art faſtened to thy perdurable chaire, and turneſt the heauen with a rauelyng ſweigh, and conſtraineſt the ſterres to ſuffre thy Lawe: ſo that the Moone lowe tyme ſhining with her full hornes, metyng with al the beames of the Sunne her brother, hideth the ſterres that been leſſe. And ſometime whi the Moone pale, with her darke hornes approcheth the Sunne, leſeth her lightes: and that the euin ſterre Heſperus, whiche that in the firſt tyme of the night, bringeth firſte her colde ariſing, cometh eft ayen her bled course and is pale by the Morowe at riſynge of the Sunne, and is then icleped Lucifer. Thou ſtraineſt the daie by ſhorter dwellyng, in the tyme of the colde Winter, that maketh the leaues fall. Thou diuideſt the ſwifte tides of the night, when the hote Sommer is comen. Thy might attempreth the variaunt ſeaſons of the yere, ſo that Zepherus the debonaire winde, bringeth ayen in the firſte Sommer ſeaſon, the leaues that the winde that hight Boreas, hath reft awaie in Autumpne, that is to ſaie, the laſt ende of Sommer, and the bedes that the ſterre that hight Arcitures ſew, bee woren high cornes, when the ſterre Sirius enchaſeth hem. There is nothyng vnbouden from this olde Lawe, ne forletteth the werke of his proper eſtate.

O thou gouernour, gouerning all things by certaine ende, why refuſeſt thou onely to gouerne the werkes of menne by due maner: Why ſuffreſt thou, that ſlidyng fortune tourneth ſo greate enterchaunges of thynges, ſo that anoyous paine that ſhould duelle puniſhe felones, puniſcheth Innocentes: And folke of wicked maners, ſitten in high chaires,

chaires, and ennoyeng folke treden (and that vnrightfully) on the neckes of holy men. And vertue clere and shinyng naturally, is hid in derke derhenesses, and the rightful man beareth ỹ paine and the blame of the felons. Ne the forsweringe, ne the fraude couerde and kempt with a false coloure, ne annoyeth not to thre wedenesse, the which thre wdnesse, whā yͤ list vsen her strength, they reioysen hem to put vnder hem the soueraine kynges, which that the people without nombre dreden. O ỹ what so euer thou be that knyttest al bondes of thinges, lothe on these wretches, erthes, wemen that been not a foule partie, but a fayre parte of so great a werke: we ben tourmented in this see of fortune. Thou gouernour, with rawe, and restreine the rauishing flodes, and faken and ferme these yearthes stable, wyth thilke bonde, wyth whiche thou gouernest heuen that is so large.

When I had with a contynuall sorowe sobbed, or broken oute these thinges, the whether there pesible and nothinge amoued with my cõplaintes, said thus. whan I say ỹ (q she) sorowful weping, I wist anõ that thou wer a wretch exiled: But I wist neuer how fere thin exile was, yf the tale ne had yshewed it me. But natheles al be thou ferre fro thy coũtrey, ỹ nart nat put oute of it, but thou hast failed of thy way and gone a mysse. And if thou hast leuer hit to wene that thou be put out of thy countre, than haste thou put out thy selfe, rather than anyother wight hath, for no wight (but thou thy self) ne might neuer haue done that father: For yf thou remembre thee of what countre thou art borne, it nis nat gouerned by emperours ne by gouernement of multitude, as weren the countreis of hem of Athenes, but one lorde and one kyng, and that is ioyful, that is lord of thy countrey, which that reioyseth him of the dwelling of his citezins and not for to put hem in exile. Of the which land it is a fredome to be gouerned by the bridel of hym, and obey to his iustice. Hast thou forgotten thilke olde lawe of thy cyte, in the which cyte it is ordeined and established, that what wyght hath leuer founde therein his seete or his house than els wher, he mote nat be exiled by no right fro that place? For who so that is conteined within the palais of thilke cyte, there is no drede that he maye deserue to be exiled. But who that letteth thee wil tenhabite there, he forletteth also to deserue to be a citezein of thilke cite. So that I say, that the face of this place ne mouethe me not so mykel, as thyne owne face. Ne I ne aske not rather the walles of thy librarie, apparayled and wrought with yuory & with glasse, than after the seete of thy thought, in whiche I put nat whilom bookes, but I put that, that maketh bookes worthy of price or precious: that is to say, sentence of my bokes. And certainly of thy deserte bestowed in comen good, thou haste sayd soth, but after the multitude of thy good dedes, thou haste sayd fewe. And of the honestie or of the falsenesse of thinges that bene opposed agaist the, thou haste remembred thinges that be knowen to all folke. And of the felonies and fraudes of thin accusours, it semeth theto haue touched it, forsoth rightfully and shortly: al mighten tho same thinges better & more plentuously ben couthe in the mouthe of the people, that knowethe all this. Thou haste eke blamed greatlye and complained of the wrongefull deede of the Senate. And thou haste sorowed for my blame, & thou hast wopen for the dommage of thy renoun that is apeired, and thy last sorowe enchaseth ayen fortune, complayneth the guerdons ne be not euenly yolden to the deserts of folke. And in thy latter ende of thy woode muse, thou prayedeste that thylke peace that gouernethe the heuen, shulde gouerne the erthe. But for that many tribulacions of affections haue assailled the, and sorowe and yre and weping to drawē the diuersly, as ỹ art now feeble of thought, mightier remedies ne shullen not yet touchen the, for which we willen somdele vsen lyghter medicynes, so that thylke passions that be waren harde in swellynge by perturbacions flowynge in to thy thoughte, mowen were easy and softe, to receiue the strength of a more mighty and more egre medicyne by an easier touchyng.

Firste woldest thou suffre me to touche and assaye, the estate of thought by a fewe demaundes, so that I may vnderstãd by, the maner of thy curacion? Aske me (ꝙ I) at thy will, that thou wolt, and I shal answer. Tho saide she thus: whether wenest thou (ꝙ she) that this worlde be gouerned folishly by happes a fortunes, or els wenest thou that there be in it any gouernement of reason? B. Certes (ꝙ I) I ne trowe nat in no maner that so certaine thinges shulde be moued by Fortunous fortune. But I wote wel that god, maker and maister is gouernour of his werke, ne was neuer yet day that might put me out of the sothnesse of that sentence. ꝑ. So is it (ꝙ she) for the same thing sange thou a litel here before, and bewailedest and weptest, that onely men were put out of ꝑ cure of god, for of all other thinges thou ne doutest nat, that they nere gouerned by reason. But oughe, I wonder certes gretly why that thou art sicke, sẽs that thou arte put in so hollsome a sentence: But let vs seken deper. I coniecte that there lacketh I not what. But say me this. Sens that thou ne doutest not that this worlde de gouerned by god, with whiche gouernayle takest thou hede that it is gouerned? Vnneth (ꝙ I) know I the sentẽce of thy questiõ, so that I ne make not yet answeren to thy demaundes. I was not disceiued (ꝙ she) that there ne failed somewhat by whiche the malady of perturbacion is crepte in to thy thought, so as the strength of thy paleys shinynge is open: but saye me this. Remẽbrest thou what is thende of thynges? and whider thentencion of al kinde tendeth. I haue herde tolde it some tyme (ꝙ I) but drerinesse hathe dulled my memory. Certes (ꝙ she) thou wotest well whence all thinges be comen and proceden. I wote wel (ꝙ I) and aunswerde, that god is beginninge of al. And howe may this be (ꝙ she) that sens thou knowest the beginning of thinges, that thou knowest nat what is the ende of thinges, but soche ben the customes of perturbacion, and this power thei han that they may moue a man from his place, that is to say, from the stablenesse and perfection of his knowinge. but certes they may nat al arace him, ne alie him in all: but I wold that thou woldest answere to this. Remẽbrest thou that thou art a man? B. Why shulde I not remembre that (ꝙ I) Phi. Mayst thou not tel me than (ꝙ she) what thinge is a man? Askest thou not me (ꝙ I) whether that I be a reasonable mortall best, I wote well and confesse that I am it. Wiste thou neuer yet that thou were any other thinge (ꝙ she). No (ꝙ I). Nowe wel knowe I (ꝙ she) other cause of thy malady, and that righte great: Thou haste lefte for to knowẽ thy selfe what thou art, through whiche I haue plainly founden the cause of thy maladie, or els the entre of recouering of thy heale. For why? For thou art confoûded with forȝetynge of thy selfe: For thou forȝowdest that thou art exiled of thy propre goods. And for thou ne wyste what is thende of thinges, for thy demest thou that felonous and wikked men, be mighty and welful: and for thou hast forleten by which gouernementes the world is gouerned, for thy wenest thou ꝑ these mutations of fortune fletẽ without gouernour. These bẽ the causes not onely to malady, but certes gret causes to deth: But I thanke the actour, and the maker of heale, that nature hath not al forleten the. I haue great nourisshyng of thin heale, and that is the sothe sentence of gouernaunce of the world, that thou bileuest that the gouerning of it is not subiecte ne vnderput to the folie of these happes auenturous, but to the reason of god, ? therfore fore doute the nothing, for of this litel spark thine heate of lyfe shall shyne. But for as much as it is not time yet of sadder remedies, and þ nature is of thoughtes thus disceiued that as ofte as they caste away fothe opinions, they clothen hem in false opinions. Of the which false opinions þ derkenesse of perturbacion wereth vp, that confoundeth the dery in sight. And that darkenesse shal I som what allaye to maken thinne and weake, by light and meaneliche remedies, so that after that the derkenesse of disseruynge thinges be doom away, thou maye knowe the shyning of very lyght.

After this she stinte a litel, and after that she had gadered by a temper stylnesse myne attencion, as who so might sayn thus. After these thynges she syngeth a lytell, and whan she apperceiued by a temperstilnesse, that I was entencife to heren her, she bega to spekē in this wise. If I (q she) haue vnderstonden and knowen vtterly, the causes & the habite of thy maladye, thou languissest and art defected for desire and talent of thy rather fortune. She that ylke Fortune onelye that is chaūged as thou fainest to the warde, hath peruerted the clerenesse and the estate of thy courage. I vnderstonding the felle or many folde colours and discrites of thilke meruaillous mōdre fortune, and how she vseth ful flatteryng familiarite with hem that she enforceth to begile, so lōg, til that she cōfound with vnsufferable sorow, hē that she hath lefe in dispaire vnpurueied. And if thou remembrest well the kinde, the maneres, and the deserte of thilke fortune, thou shalt wel knowe that as in here thou neuer ne hadest, ne haste ylost anye faire thinge: But (as I trowe) I shal not greatly trauailen to done thee remembren on these thinges. For thou were wont to hurtelen and dispisen her with many woordes, whan she was bland, flyng and presente, and pursuedest her with sentences that weren drawen oute of myne entre, that is to saye, of mine enformacion: but no sodaine mutacion ne betideth not without a maner chaunging of corages. And so it is befal, that thou arte a lytel departed fro the peace of thy thoughte, but now is tyme that thou drinke and taaste some softe and delitable thynges, so that whan they bee entred within thee, it mowen make way o strenger drinkes of medecyns. mourning and in to weping? I trowe that thou hatte sene some new thing & vncouthe? Thou wenest that fortune be chaunged ayen me, but thou wenest wrõg if that thou wene alway tho bene her maners. She hathe rather kept as to thee warde, her propre stablenesse in the chaunging of her selfe: right soch was she whan she flatterede thee and disceiued the, with vnlefull likinges and falfe wilfulnesse. Thou haste nowe knowen and ateinte the doubtous or double vilage of thilke blinde goddesse Fortune. She that yet coueretb and wymplethe her to other folke, hath shewed her self euerydele to thee: yf thou approuest her and thinkest that she is good, vse her maners and plaine the nat, and yf thou agriesse her falfe trecherye, dispise and casse away her that playeth so harmefully, for she that is now cause of so moch sorowe to thee, shulde be to thee cause of peace & of ioye. She hath forsaken the forsoth, the which that neuer man maie be syker, that she ne shal forsaken him. Glose. But natheless some bookes haue the texte thus. Forsothe she hathe forsaken the, ne ther nys no man siker that she ne hath not forsaken. Holdest thou than thylke welefulnesse precious to the that shal passen, and is present fortune dereworth to ỳ, which that nys not faithfull for to dwel, and whan she goth awaye, that she bringeth a wight in sorowe. For lens she may not be with holden at a mannes wyll, she maketh him a wretche whan she departethe fro hym. What other thinge is flyttinge fortune, but a maner shewing of wretchidnesse that is to come. Ne it sufficeth not onely to loken on thing that is presente before the eyen of a man, but wysedom loketh and mesureth thende of thinges, and the same chaungyng from one to another that is to saine, frõ aduersite in to prosperite, maketh that the manaces of fortune ne ben not for to dreden, ne the flateringe to be desired. Thus at laste it behoueth thee to suffren with euen wil in pacience, all that is done within the flooze of fortune, that is to saye, in this worlde, sithe thou haste ones put thy necke vnder the yoke of her. For if thou wolt writen a lawe of wending and of dwelling to fortune, which that thou haste chosen frely to ben thy lady: Arte thou nat wrõgful in that, and makest Fortune wroth and asper by thine inpacience, and yet thou mayst nat chaungen her?

Yf thou committest and betakest thy sayles to the wynde, thou shalt be shouen, nat thider that thou woldest, but whider that the wind shoueth the. Yf thou castest thy seedes in the feldes, thou shuldeste haue in minde that the yeres bene amonges other while plentuous, and other while barein. Thou hast betaken thy selfe to the gouernaunce of fortune, and for thy it behoueth thee to ben obeisaunt to the maners of thy lady. Enforcest thou the to aresten or withholden the swyftnesse and the sweygh of her tourning wheele? O thou folke of all mortal fooles, if Fortune began to dwel stable, she cessed than to ben Fortune.

Hec cum superba verterit vices dextra, Exestantis more fertur Euripi. Dudum tremendos seua proterit reges, Humilienq; victi subleuat fallax vultum. Non illa dura miseros audit, haud curat fletus.

When Fortune wyth a proude right hande, with tourned her chaunging stounds, she fareth like the maners of the boiling Euripe.

Glosa. Euripe is an arme of the see, that ebbethe and floweth, and sometyme the streme is on o side, and somtime on that other.

Texte. She crewel fortune casteth adoun hynges, that whylom weren ydrade, and be deceiuable enhaunceth vp the humble chere of him that is discomfited: ne she neither poreth ne recketh of wretched wepinges. And she is so hard, that she laugheth and scorneth the weping of hem, the whiche she hathe maked to wepe with her ire will. Thus she playeth and thus she proueth her strengthes, and sheweth a great wonder to al her seruaunts if that a wighte is seen welefull, and outhrowe in an houre.

Vellem autem pauca tecum, Fortune ipsius verbis agitare. Tu igitur an tus postulet animaduerti? Quid tu o homo ream me agis coticianis querelis &c.

Certes I wold pleden with the a fewe thynges, vsynge the wordes of fortune: take hede nowe thy selfe, yf that she aske right. O thou man, wherfore makest thou me gyltie by thy euery dayes plaininges?

What wrong haue I done thee? what goodes haue I beraft ỳ that were thyn? Stryue or plete with me before what iuge that thou wylt, of the possessyon, of richesses, or of dignites, and if thou maist shewen me, that euer any mortal manne hath receiued any of the thinges thynges to ben his in propre, thā wil I graūt freely, that thilke thinges were thine, which that thou aſkeſt. Whan that nature brought the forth out of thy mothers wombe, I receyued the naked and nedy of all thinges, and I nourished the with al my richeſſes, and was redy and ententife through my fauour to lu-ſaine the: and that maketh the nowe impacient ayenſt me. And I enuironned the with al habounddaunce and shinynge of al goodes, that ben in my righte: nowe it lyketh me to with drawe min honde. Thou haſt had grace as be that hathe vſed forayne goodes. Thou haſt no right to playne the, as though thou haddeſt vtterly forlorne al thy thynges. Why plaineſt thou thanne? I haue done to the no wronge. Rycheſſes, honours, and ſoche other thinges ben of my ryght. My ſeruaūtes knowen me for her lady: they come with me & departen whan I wende. I dare well afferme hardely, that if tho thinges, of whiche thou playneſt that thou haſt forlorn had ben thin, thou ne haddeſt not forlorn hem. Shal I thā be defended only to vſe my right? Certes it is ſkil to the heuen to make clere daies, and after to ouercome tho ſame daies with derke nightes. The yere hathe eke leaue to appaire the viſage of the erthe, now with floures, and nowe with fruite, and to confounde hem ſomtime with raines and with colde.

The ſee hath eke his right, to ben ſomtime ſmilinge & blandiſhinge, with ſmothe water, and ſometime to be horrible with wawes & with tempeſtes. But couetiſe of men, ỹ may not be ſtaunched, ſhall it binde me to be ſtedfaſte, ſythen that ſtedfaſtenneſſe is vncouthe to my maners. Soche is my ſtrength, and ſoche play I play comenly. I turne the whirlinge whele with the turning cerkle, I am glad to chaūgen the loweſt to the hyeſt, and the hieſt to the loweſt. Worth vp if thou wolte, ſo it be by this lawe, that thou ne hold nat that I do the wrong, though thou diſcēde adown. Whā the reaſon of my play aſkethe it. Wiſte thou nat howe Creſus kyng of Lidiens, of whiche kyng Cyrus was full ſore agaſte, a lytel bifore ỹ this Creſus was caughte of Cyrus, and ledde to the fyre to be brende, but that a ſhyne diſcended from heuen ỹ reſcowed him? And it is out of mynde howe that Paulus conſul of Rome, whan he had taken the king of Perciens, weped petouſly for the captiuite of the ſelfe kinge? What other thing bewayen the crienges of tragedies, but onely the yeres of fortune, ỹ with an auhwarde ſtroke ouerturneth the realmes of greate nobleye. Glose. Tragedie is to ſaine, a ditee of a proſperite for a tyme, ỹ endeth in wretchednelle Lernedeſt not thou in Grece whan thou were yonge, that in the entre or in the ſeiter of Iupiter, there ben couched two tonnes, that one is ful of good, that other is full of harme? What right haſt thou to plaine, if thou haſte taken more plentouſly of the good ſyde, that is to ſayne of richeſſe & proſperite? And what ellē if I be not all departed fro ſe? What elle if my mutabylite yeueth the right full cauſe of hope to haue yet better thinges? Natheles diſmaye the not in thy thought. And thou that arte put in the comune realme of al, ne deſyre not to lyuen by thin owne proper right.

Boece, Certainli (q I) thā, theſe ben faire ythinges, and anointed with hony ſwetneſſe of rhetozike and muſike, and onely whils they ben herde & ſowne in eeres, they ben delicious. But to wzetches it is a deperſelynge of harme, this is to ſain, that wzetches ſelen the harmes that they ſuffre moze greuoully, than the remedies oz the delites of theſe wozdes may gladden oz conſozten hem. So that whā theſe thinges ſinten foz to ſown in eares, that ſozow that is inſet greueth the thought. P. Right ſo it dothe (q ſhe). Foz theſe ne ben yet no remedies of the malady, but they ben a maner noziſhinge of thy ſozowes, that rebel ayenſt thy curacion. Foz whā tyme is, I ſhal moue and aiuſt ſoch thinges, that precē hem ful depe. But nathleſſe, that thou ſhalt not wilne to leten thy ſelfe a wzetche. Haſte thou forzeten the numbze & the mamer of thy welfulneſſe, I ſpeake not how that the ſoueraigne men of the citye, toke thee in cure and keping, whan thou were orphelyn of father and of mother and were cholen in affynite of pzinces of the cite. And thou beganne rather to be leſe and dere than foz to be a neighbour, the which thing is the moſte pzecious kinde of any pzopinquite oz aliance that maye ben. Who is it that ne ſayde tho that thou ne were righte welefuł, with ſo great nobley as thy fathers in lawe, and with the chaſtite of thy wyfe, and with thopoztunite and nobleſſe of thy maſculine childrē, that is to ſayn, thy ſōnes. And ouer all thys (me lyſte to paſſen of common thinges) how thou haddeſt in thy youth dignities, that were warned to old men, but it deliteth me nowe to comon to the ſinguler vpheapinge of thy welfulneſſe. If any frute of moztal thinges may haue any wighte, oz pzice of welefulneſſe, myghteſt thou euer foz-peten foz any charge of harme that mighte befal, the remembzaunce of thilke daye, that thou ſaw thy two ſonnes made conſailours, and ladde togyther from thy houſe, vnder ſo great aſſemble of ſenatours, and vnder the blithneſſe of the people: and whan thou ſaw hem ſette in the court in hye chaires of dignities. Thou rhetozien oz pronoūcer of kinges praiſinges, deſeruedeſt glozy of witte and of eloquence, whan thou ſittinge bitwene thy two ſonnes counſailours, in the place that hight Circo, and fulfilledeſt the bydding of the multitude of people that was ſpzade about the with ſo large pzayſynge and laude, as men ſynge in victozies. Tho yaue thou to foztune as I trowe, that is to ſay, tho deſſeſt thou foztune with glozious wozdes, and deceiuedeſt her, whan ſhe acoyed & noziſhed the as her owne delices. Thou bare away of foztune a yelte, that is to ſay, ſoche guerdon that ſhe neuer yaue to pziuate mā. Wilt thou therfoze laye a reheninge with foztune? She hath nowe firſt twyncled vpon ỳ with a wicked eye. If thou conſider the nombze and the maner of thy blifſes and of thy ſozows, thou maiſt nat forſaken that nart yet blifful. Foz if therfoze thou weneſt thy ſelfe not welefuł foz tho thiges that ſemeden ioyful bē paſſed ther nis not why thou ſhuldeſt ſeme thy ſelfe a wzetch, foz thinges ỳ ſemed nowe ſozy, paſſen alſo. Art thou nowe comen a ſodayne geſt in to the ſhadow oz tabernacle of this life? oz troweſt thou that any ſtedfaſtneſſe be in mānes thinges? whan oft a ſwifte houre diſſolueth the ſame man, that is to ſaie, whan the ſoule departed from the body. Foz al though that ſelde is there any faithe that foztunous thynges would dwellen, yet natheleſſe the laſt daye of a mannes lyfe is a maner deathe to foztune, and alſo to thilke that hath dwelt. And therfoze what weneſt thou dare recke, if thou forlet her in diynge, oz els that the foztune forlete the in fleyn awaye.

Then said I thus: O nource of all vertues, thou saiest ful soth ne I may not forsake the right swift course of my prosperitie, that is to saine, that the prosperitie, ne be comen to me wōder swiftlie and sone. But this is a thynge that greatlie smarteth me, when it remembreth me. For in all aduersities of Fortune, the moste vnselie kynde of contrarious Fortune, is to haue been welefull. Phi. But that thou abiest thus (q she) the tourmente of thy false opinion, that maiest thou not rightfullie blamen, ne aretten to thynges, as who saieth, that thou hast yet many haboundances of thynges. Certus. For all be it so, that the idell name of auenturous welefulnesse, moveth thee now, it is lefull that thou reken with me, of howe many thynges, thou haste yet plentie. And therfore, if that thilke thing that thou haddest for more precious, in al thy richesse of Fortune, be kept to thee, yet by the grace of GOD, vnwemmed and vndefouled: maiest thou then plaine rightfully, vpon the mischief of Fortune, sithen thou hast yet thy best thinges? Certes, yet liueth in good point thilke precious honour of mankinde, Symachus thy wiues father, whiche that is a man made of al Sapience and Vertue, the whiche manne thou wouldest buye, with the price of thyne owne life, he bewaileth the wronges, that menne doen to thee, and not for himself. Ful he liueth in siternesse, of any Sentence yt ayenst hym. And yet liueth thy wife, that is attempre of witte, and passyng other women, in clēnesse of chastitie. And for I would tellen shortlie her bounties, she is like her father: I tell thee, that she liueth lothe of this life, and kepeth to thee onelie her ghoste, and is all mate, and ouercome by wepyng and sorowe, for desire of thee. In the whiche thyng onelie, I mote graunten thee, that thy wilfulnesse is amenused. what shall I saine eke of thy two sonnes counsailours, of which as of children of her age, there shineth the likenesse of the witte of her father, and of her eldfather? And sithen the soueraine cure of all mortall folke, is to sauen her owne liues, if thou knowe thy self, thy gooddes make thee more welefull. For yet ben there things dwelled to thee ward, that no man doubteth, that thei ne been more derewor the to thee, then thyne owne life. And for thy drie teares, for yet is not euery Fortune hatefull to thee ward: ne ouer greate tempest, ne hath not yet fallen vpon thee, when thyne ancres cleuen faste: that neither woll suffren the coumfort of this tyme presente, ne the hope of tyme comyng, to passen ne to fallen. Bo. And I praie (q I) that faste mote thei holden for the whiles that thei holde, how so euer that thynges been, I shall well fleten forthe and escapen. But thou maiest well seen, how greate apparailes and araie, that me lacked, that be passed awaie frō me. P. I haue somwhat auaunced and furthered thee (q she) if that thou annoie not, or forthinke not of all thy Fortune, as who saieth, I haue somewhat comforted thee, so that thou tempest not thee thus, with all thy fortune, sithen thou hast yet thy beste thinges. But I maie not suffren thy delices, that plainest so wepyng and anguishous, for that ther lacketh somwhat to thy weltulnes For what man is he that is so sad, or of great parfite welefulnesse, that he ne striueth and plaineth, on some halfe ayen the qualitie of his estate? For why, full anguishous thing is the condicion of mannes goodes. For either it cometh not al together to a wight, or els it ne lasteth not perpetuell. For some man hath greate richesse, but he is ashamed of his vngentill linage. And some man is renomed of nobilesse of kinrede, but he is enclosed, in so greate angisshe of nede of thynges, that hym were leauer that he wer vnknowe. And some man haboundeth bothe in richesse & nobilesse, but yet he bewaileth his chaste life, for he ne hath no wife. And some man is, & selily maried, but he hath no children, and nourisheth his richesses to straunge folk. And some man is gladed with children, but he wepeth full sore, for the trespace of his soonne, or of his doughter. And for this there ne accordeth no wight lighly, to that condicīō of his fortune. For al waie to euery mā, there is in somwhat that vnassaied, he ne wotte nought, or els he dredeth that he hath assaied. And adde this also, that euery welefull man, hath a full delicate feling: so that but if all thinges befallen at his own will, he is impaciēt, or is not vsed to haue none aduersitie, anon he is throwen adoune for euery little thing. And full little thinges been tho, that withdrawen the sōme or the perfeccion of blisfulnesse, fro hem that been moste fortunate. Howe many men trowest thou, would demen hem self, to been almost in heauen, if thei mighten attain to the leaſt partie, of the remnaunte of thy fortune? This ſame place that thou cleapeſte erile, is countrey to them that enhabiten here. And for thy notyng wretched, but whē thou weneſt it, as who ſaith: thou thy ſelf ne no wight els nis a wretch, but whē he weneth himſelf he is a wretch, by reputacion of his courage. And ayenward: al fortune is bliſſull to a mā, by the agreabilitie, or by the egalitie of hym that ſuffreth it. What man is that, that is ſo weleful, that nolde chaungen his eſtate whē he hath loſte his pacience? The ſweteneſſe of mānes welefulneſſe, is ſprant with many bitterneſſes. The which welefulneſſe, although it ſeme ſwete & ioiful, to him that vſeth it, yet maie it not been with holden, ỹ it ne goeth awaie when it wol. Then it is well ſeen, how wretched is the bliſſulneſſe of mortall things that neither it dureth perpetuell with hem, that euery fortune receiuen agreablie or egalily, ne it deliteth not in all to hem that been anguiſhous. O ye mortall folke, what ſeeke ye then bliſſulneſſe out of your owne ſelfe: whiche is put in your ſelf? Errour and folie confoundeth you. I ſhall ſhewe thee ſhortlie the poincte of ſoueraine bliſſulneſſe.

Is there any thyng to thee, more precious then thy life? Thou wilte aunſwere naie. Then, if it ſo bee that thou art mightie ouer thy ſelf, that is to ſaine, by tranquilitie of thy ſoule, then haſte thou thynge in thy power, that thou noldeſt neuer leſen: Ne fortune maie not bynemme it thee. And that thou maieſt knowe that bliſſulneſſe, ne maie not ſtande in thynges, that been fortunous and tempozell, now vnderſtande, and gather it together thus. If bliſſulneſſe be the ſoueraine good of nature, that liueth by reaſō: ne thilke thyng is not ſoueraine good, that maie be taken awaie in any wiſe.

For more worthie thing is, and more digne thilke thing, that maie not be taken awaie. Then ſheweth it well, that the vnſtableneſſe of fortune, maie not attaine to receiue verie bliſſulneſſe. And yet more ouer, what manne that this tomblyng welefulneſſe leadeth, either he wote that it is chaungeable, or els he wote it not? And if ye wote it not, what bliſſull fortune maie there been in the blindnes of ignorance? And if he wot, that it is chaungeable, he mote alwaie been a dradde, that he ne leſe that thing, that he ne douteth not, but that he maie leſen it. As who ſaieth, he mote alwaie be agaſt, leaſt he leſe that, that he woteth right well he maie leſe. For whiche the continuell dreade that he hath, ne ſuffereth hym not to be welefull. Or els if he leſe it, he weneth to bee diſpiſed and forleten. Certes, ek that is a ful litle good, that is borne with euen harte, when it is loſte, that is to ſaine, that men dooe no more force of the loſſe, then of the hauyng. And for as moche as thou thy ſelf arte he, to whom it hath bee ſhewed, and preued by full many demonſtracions, as I wotte well, that the ſoules of menne, ne mowen not dien in no wiſe. And ek ſens it is cleare and certaine, that fortunous welefulneſſe, endeth by the death of the bodie: it maie not be douted, that if death maie take awaie bliſſulneſſe, that all the kind of mortal thing ne diſcendeth into wretchednes, by the ende of death. And ſithen we know well, that many a manne hath ſought the fruict of bliſſulneſſe, not onely with ſufferyng of death, but ek with ſufferyng of paines and tourmentes: howe might then this preſente life make men bliſſull, ſens that thilke ſelf life ended, it ne maketh folke no wretches.

Sed quoniam racionum iam in te mearum fomenta discendunt, paulo validioribus vtendum puto. Age enim. Si iam caduca ac momentaria fortune. &c.

But for as moch, as the nourischynges of my reason, discenden now into thee, I trowe it wer tyme to vsen a litteli strenger Medicens. Nowe vnderstande here, all were it so that the yeftes of Fortune, ne were not brittle ne transitorie, what is there in hem, that maie be thin in any tyme? Or els that it ne is foule, if that it be loobed, and considered perfitlie. Richelesse, been thei precious by the nature of hem self, or els by the nature of thee? what is moste worthe of richelle? Is it not gold, or might of money assembled? Certes that gold and that money shineth, and yeueth better renome to them that dispenden it, then to thilke folke that mockeren it: for auarice maketh alwaie muckerers to been hated, and largesse maketh folke clere of renome. For sithe that soche thinges as been translered, from one man to another: ne maie not dwell with no manne: certes, then is that money precious, when it is translated into other folke, and stinten to be had by vsage of large yeuyng, of hym that hath yeuen it. And also if all the money that is ouer all, in al the worlde, were gadered toward one man, it should make all other men to bee nedie as of that. And certes, a voice all hole, that is to saine, without amenusyng, fulfilleth together the hearing of moch folk. And when thei been apalled, needes thei maken hem poore, that forgone tho richelles.

O, straite and nedy clepe I these richelles, sens that many folke ne maie not haue it all, nal ne maie it not comen to one man, without pouertie of all other folke. And the shining of gemmes, that I call precious stones, haweth it not the yen of folke to hemward, that is to saine, for the beautie. But certes, if there were beautie, or bountie in shinyng of stones, thilke clerenesse is of the stones hem self, and not of menne. For whiche I wonder greatlie, that men maruellen on soche thynges. For why, what thyng is it, that if it wãnteth mouyng, and joyncture of soule and bodie, that by right might semen a faire creature, to hym that hath a soule of reason. For alde it so, that gemmes drawen to hem self, a little of the last beautie of the world, through thentent of her creatour, and the distinccion of hem self, yet for as mihell, as thei been put vnder your excellence, thei ne haue not deserued by no waie, that ye should marueilen on hem. And the beautie of fieldes, deliteth it not mihell vnto you?

B. Why should it not deliten vs, sithe that it is a right faire porcion, of the right faire werke, that is to saine, of this worlde? And right so been we gladded sometime, of the face of the sea, when it is cleare: And also marueilen wee on the heauen, and on the Starres, and on the Sunne, and on the Moone. Wht. Appertaineth (q he) any of thilke thynges to thee? Why darest thou glorifie thee, in the shinyng of any soche thynges? Arte thou distingued and embelised, by the springyng flowres of the first Sommer season? Or welleth thy plẽtie in fruictes of Sommer? Why art thou rauished with idle ioies? Why embracest thou straunge Goodes, as thei wer thine? Fortune ne shall neuer make, that soche thinges been thyne, that nature of thynges, hath maked foraine fro thee? Sothe it is, that without en doubte, the fruictes of the yearth, owen to be to the norishyng of beastes. And if thou wolt fulfill thy neade, after that it sufficeth to nature, then is it no neade, that thou seke after the superfluitie of Fortune. For with full fewe thynges, and with full little thynges, nature hath her apaied. And if thou wolte achoken the fulfillyng of nature with superfluities: certes, thilke thinges that thou wolt thresten or pouren into nature, shulien been vnioyful to thee, or els anoious. Wenest thou elle, that it bee a faire thing, to shine with diuers clothinges? Of whiche clothing, if the beaute be agreable to loken vpõ, I woll marueilen on the nature, of the matter of thilke clothes, or els on the woorke man ỹ wrought hem. Doeth also a long route of meine, make thee a blisfull man? The whiche seruauntes if thei been vicious of condicios, it is a great charge, and distruccion to the hous, and a great enemie to the lorde himself. And if thei been good men, how shal straunge and forain goodnesse, be put in the nomber of thy richesses? So that by all these forsaied thynges, it is clearelie shewed, that neuer one of thilke thinges, that thou accomptedest for thy goodes, nas not thy good. In whiche thinges, if there bee no beautie to be desired, why shouldest thou be sorie to lese them? Or why shouldest thou reioyce thee to hold hem? For if thei been faire of their own kind, what appertaineth that to thee? For also well should thei haue been faire by themself, though thei wer departed from al the richelles. For why, faire ne precious wer thei not, for that thei comen emong the richelles. But for thei semed faire and precious, therefore thou haddest leuer reken hem emonges thy richelles. But what desiresst thou of fortune, with so greate afare? I trow thou sekest to driue awaie nede, with habundaunce of thynges, but certes, it tourneth you all into the contrarie. For why, certes it nedeth of full many helpinges, to kepen the diuersite of precious hostilementes. And sothe it is, that of many thynges thei haue neede, that many thynges haue. And ayen warde, of little thyng nedeth hym, that measureth his till, after the nede of kind, and not after outrage of couetise. It is so then, that ye menne haue no proper good set in you, for soche ye moten seeke outwarde, in forain and subiect thinges. So is then the condicion of thinges tourned vp so doun, that a man that is a diuine beast, by merite of his reasō, thinketh that hymself nis neither faire ne noble, but if it bee through possession of hostilimentes, that ne han no souls, and certes, al other thynges been apaied of her owne beauties: but ye men, that be semblable to god, by your reasonable thought, desirē to aparailen your excellēt kinde of the lowest thinges. Ne ye vnderstanden not how greate a wrong is dooen to your creatour. For he would that mākinde were moste worthie, and noble of any yearthly thing: and ye thresten doun your dignities binethen the lowest thynges. For if that all the good of euery thing be more precious, thā is thilke thing, whose that the good is, sith ye demen that the foulest thynges, been your goodesse: then submitten ye, and put your seluen vnder the foulest thinges, by your estimacion. And certes, this betideth not, without your desert. For certes, soche is the condicion of all mankinde, that onely whē he hath knowyng of it self, then passeth it in noblesse, all other thinges. And when it forsetteth, ỹ knowyng of it self, then it is brought benethen all beastes. For why, all other liuing beastes, han of kind to knowen not himself. But whē that men letten the knowyng of hem self, it cometh hem of vice. But how brode sheweth the errour, and the folie of you men, that wenen that any thynge, maie been appareled, with straunge apparelmentes? But forsothe that maie not be doen. For if a wight shineth with thinges that been put to hym: as thus. If thilke thynges shinen with, which a man is apparelled: Certes, thilke thinges been cōmended and praised, with whiche he is apparelled: but natheless, thyng that is couered, and wrapped vnder that, dwelling in his filthe. And I deny that thilke thing be good, that annoieth hym that hath it. Gabbe I of this? Thou wolte saie naie. Certes, richelles haue anoied full ofte hem, that han had the richesse. Sithe that euery wicked shrewe, is for his wickednesse, the more greadie after other folkes richelles, where so euer it be in any place, bee it golde or precious stones, and weneth hym onely moste worthie that hath hem. Thou then that so busie, dredest nowe the sweard and the speare, if thou haddest entred in the pathe of this life, anoied waitaring man, then wouldest thou sing before the theefe, as who saith, a poor man that beareth no richesse on hym by the waie, maie boldly sing before Theues, for he hath not wherof to bee robbed. O precious and right cleare, is the blisfulnesse of mortall richesse, that when thou hast gotten it, then hast thou lorne thy siskernesse.

Felix nimium prior etas, Contenta fidelibus aruis, Nec inerti perdita luxu. Facilique sera solebat Ieiunia soluere glande. Nec bacchia munera norat, Liquido confundere melle, Nec lucida vellera fucum, &c.

BLisfull was the first age of mi, thei helden hem apaied with the meates that the true fildes broughten forthe, thei ne destroied, nor deceiued not hem self without rage, thei were wonte ligntlie to slaken her burger at eein, with likehornes of Okes, thei ne coude not medell the yefte of Baccus, to the cleare honie, that is to saine, thei could make ne piemente or clarre: Ne thei could not medell the bright fleeces of the Countrey of Seriens, with the venime of Tiry, this is to sain, thei coude not dien white fleces of Syrien Countrey, with the bloode of a maner Shelfishe, that men finden in Tirie, with whiche blood menne dien Purple.

Thei slepten hollome slepes vpō the grasse, and drōken of the rennyng waters, and lien vnder the shadowes of the hie Pine trees. Ne no gesse or straunger, ne carke yet the hie sea, with oores or with shippes, ne thei ne hadden sein yet no newe strondes, to leden Marchandise, into diuers Countreis. Tho weren the cruell clarions full huft, & full still. Ne blood ishad by egre hate, ne had deied yet armures. For where to, or which woodnesse of enemies would would firste mouen armes, when thei sawen cruell woudes, ne none meedes be of blood yshad? I would that our tymes should tourne ayen to the old maners. But the auaritious loue of hauyng in folke, burneth more cruelly, then the mountain of Ethna, that ate breneth. Alas, what was he that firste dalfe vp, the gobbettes or the weightes of golde, couerid vnder yerth, and the precious stones, that woulden haue be hidde? He dalfe vp precious perilles, that is to sain, that he that hem first vp dalfe, he dalfe vp a precious perill, for why for the preciousnes of soche thyng, hath many man been in perill.

Quid autem de dignitatibus, potentiaq; disseram quas vos, vere dignitatis, ac potestatis inscij, cœlo exequatis? Que si imm probissimũ quemq; ceciderit &c.

But what shall I saie of dignities and powers, the whiche ye men that neither knowen verie dignitie, ne verie power, areisen hem as high as the heauen? The which dignities and powers, if thei comen to any wicked manne, thei dooen as greate damages and destruccions, as doeth the flambe of the mountaigne Ethna, when the flambe waloweth vp, ne no auuyne dooeth so cruell harmes. Certes, ye remember well (as I trow) that thilke dignitie, that men cleape the Imperie of counsailours, the whiche whilome was, beginnyng of fredome, your elders coueited to haue doen awaie that dignitie, for the pride of the counsailours. And right for that same, your elders before that tyme, had doen awaie out of the Citee of Roome, the Kynges name, that is to saine, thei nolde haue no lenger no king. But now, if so be that dignities and powers, been yeuen to good men, the whiche thyng is full selde, what agreable thynges is there, in tho dignities and powers, but onely the goodnes of folke that vsen hem? And therefore is it thus, that honour cometh not to vertue, bicause of dignitie: and ayenward, honour cometh of dignitie, for ceuse of vertue. But whiche is thilke your derewoorth power, that is so clere, and so requirable? O ye yearthly beasts, consider ye not ouer whiche thyng, that it semeth that ye haue power? Nowe, if thou sawe a Mouse, emong other Mise, that chalenged to hym self warde, right and power ouer all other Mice, how greate scorne wouldest thou haue of it? Glosa. So fareth it by men, the bodie hath power ouer the bodie: for if thou looke well vpon the bodie of a wight, what thyng shalt thou find more fraile, then is mankinde? The whiche menne full ofte be slaine, by bityng of flies, or elis with entring or creping wormes, into the priuitees of mannes bodie. But where shall men finden any man, that maie exercisen or hanten any right vpon an other man, but onely on his body, or elis vppon thynges, that been lower then the bodie, the whiche I cleape Fortunes possessiones? Maiest thou haue euer any commaundment ouer a free corage? Maiest thou remeue fro the state of his proper rest, a thought that is cleauing togither in hymself, by stedfaste reason? Is whilome a tiraunt wened, to confounde a freman of courage, and wend to cõstrain hym by tourmentes, to maken him discoueren and accusen folke, that wisten of a conuiracion, whiche I cleape a confederacie, that was caste ayenst this tiraunte: but this freman bote of his owne tongue, and caste it in the visage of thilke woode Tiraunte. So that the tourmentes, that this wood tiraunt wende to haue made matter of crueltie: This wise mã made it matter of vertue. But what thyng is it, that a man maie dooe to an other man, that he ne may receiuen the same thing of other folke in himself? Or thus: what may a man doen to folke, that folke ne maie doen to hym the same? I haue heard tolde of Busirides, that was wont to sleen his gestes, that herbroden in his hous: and he was slain hym self, by Hercules that was his geste.

Regulus had taken in battaile, many men of Affrike, and cast hem into fetters: but sone after, he must yeuen his handes to be bound, with the cheines of hē, that he had whilome ouercomen. Weenest thou then, that he bee mightie, that hath power to dooen a thyng, that other ne maie doen in hym, that he hath in other? And yet more ouer, if so were, that these dignitees of powers, hadden any proper or naturell goodnesse in hem, neuer nold thei comen to shrewes. For contrarious thinges, ne been wonte to been ifelowshipped togithers. Nature refuseth that contrarious thynges been ioyned. And so as I am in certaine, that wicked folke haue dignitees ofte tyme, then sheweth it wel that dignitees and powers, ne been not good of her owne kinde, sens that thei suffreren hem self to cleauen, or ioynen hem self to shrewes. And certaine the same thing maie I moste dignely iudgen, and saine of all the yeftes of Fortune, that moste plenteously comen to shrewes, of whiche yeftes I trowe, it ought be considered, ỹ no man doubteth that he is strong, in whom he seeth strength: and in whom swiftnesse is, sothe it is that he is swifte.

Also Musike maketh Musicies, & Philisthe maketh Philisciens, and Rhetorike eke Rhetoriciens. For why, the nature of euery thing maketh his propertie, ne it is not entremedled, with the effecte of contrarious thynges. But certes, richelles maie not restraine auarice vnstanched. Ne power ne maketh not a man mightie ouer hymselfe, whiche that vicious lustes: holden destrained with chaines, that ne mowen not be vnboundē. And dignitees, that be yeuen to shrewde folke, not onely ne maketh hem not digne: But sheweth rather all openly, that thei been vnworthy and indigne. And it is thus. For certes, ye haue ioye to cleape thinges with false names, that bearen hem in all the Countrey, the whiche names been full oft reproued, by the effecte of thesame thynges. So that these ilke richelsses, ne oughten not by right, to bee cleped richelles, ne soche power, ne ought not to bee cleped power, ne soche dignitee, ne ought not to be cleped dignite. And at laste I maie conclude, thesame thyng of all the yeftes of Fortune: In whiche there nis nothyng to be desired, ne that hath in hymselfe naturell bountie, as it is well iseen, for neither thei ioynen hem not alwaie to good men, ne maken hem alwaie good, to whom thei been ioyned.

Nouimus, quantas dederit ruinas. Vrbe flammata, patribusq; cesis. Fratre qui quondam ferus interempto matris effuso maduit cruore. Corpus & visu gelidum perrerans. Ora non tinxit lachrimis: sed esse. Censor extincti potuit decoris. &c.

WE haue well knowen, how many greate harmes and distinctions, were doen by the Emperour Nero. He let brennen the Citee of Roome, and made slea the Senatours, and he cruell whilome slough his brother. And he was made moiste with the bloode of his mother, that is to saie, he lette sleen and slitten the wombe of his mother, to seen where he was conceiued, and he loked on euery halue of her dedde colde body, ne no teare wette his face, but he was so harde harted, that he might be domes manne, or Judge of her dedde beautie. And natheless, yet gouerned this Nero by scepter, al the people that Phebus maie seen commyng, from his vttereste arisyng, till he hid his beames vnder the wawes, that is to saine, he gouerned all the peoples, by ceptre Imperiall, that the Sunne goeth about fro East to west. And eke this Nero gouerned by ceptre, all the peoples that be vnder the colde sterres, that highten the Septentrions, that is to sain, he gouerned all the peoples, that be vnder the partie of the North. And eke Nero gouerned all the peoples, that the violent wind Nothus shorlith, and baketh the brennyng sandes, by his drie heate, that is to saie, al the peoples in the Southe. But yet ne might not all his power, tourne the woodenesse of this wicked Nero. Alas it is a greuous fortune, as oft as a wicked sweard, is ioyned to cruell venime, that is to saie, venemous crueltie, to Lordeshippe.

Tunc ego. Sis (inquam) ipsa, minimum nobis ambicionem mortalium rerum fuisse dominatā. Sed materiam gerendis rebus optauimus, quone virtus cacita consene sceret. P. Et ila. Atq; hoc vnum est. &c.

THen said I thus. Thou wotest well thy self, that the couetise of mortall thinges, ne hadden neuer lordshippe in me. But I haue well desired matter of thinges to doen, as who saith, I desire to haue matter of gouernaunces, ouer cominalties, for vertue still should not elden: that is to saine, that lest er that he were old, his vertue that laie now stil, ne should not perishe vnexercised, in gouernaunce of commune: for whiche men might speaken or write, of his good gouernement. Phi. Forsothe (q she) and that is a thyng that maie drawen to gouernaunce, soche harts as been worthie and noble of her nature: but natheless it maie not drawen, or tellen soche hartes, as been brought to the full perfeccion of vertue, that is to saine, couetise of glorie and renome, to haue well administred the common thinges, or dooen good desertes, to profite of the common. Forse now and consider, how little and how voide of all price is thilke glorie, certain thing is as thou hast learned, by the demonstracion of Astronomie, that all the enuironning of the yearth about, ne halt but the reson of a pricke, at the regard of the greatnesse of the heauen, that is to sain, that if ther were maked, comparison of the yerth, to the greatnes of heaue, men would iudgen in al that ne held no space. Of the whiche little region of this world, the .iiii. part of ꝑ yerth is inhabited with liuing beastes ꝑ we knowē, as thou hast thy self learned by Ptholome ꝑ proueth it.

it. And if thou haddest withdrawen & abated in thy thoughte for thilke fourthe partye, as moche space as the see and ỹ mareis conteynen and ouergone: as moche space as the regiõ of drought ouerstretcheth, that is to sain landes and desertes, well vnneth shuld there dwellen a right straite place to the habitaciõ of men. And ye that be enuironned and closed with the leste pricke of thilke pricke, thinken ye manifesten or publichen your renome and done your name for to ben borne forthe. But your glory that is so narowe & so strayte thongen into so litel boundes, howe mykell conteineth it in larges and in great doynge. And also sette therto, that many a nacion diuers of tonge and of maners, and eke of reason of her lyuinge, ben inhabited in the close of thilke habitacle, the which nacyons what for difficulte of wayes, and what for diuersyte of langage, and what for defaulte of vnusage, and entrecomuninge of marchandyse: not onely the names of singuler men ne may not stretchen, but eke the fame of cities maie not stretchen. Et the last, certes in the time of Marcus Tullius, as him selfe wrytte in hys boke that the renom of ỹ cõmon of Rome, ne had not yet passed ne clomben ouer the mountaine that highte Cancasus, & yet was Rome well waren and redoubted of the Parthes, and eke of other folke enhabyting aboute. Seest thou not than howe straite and howe compressed is thilke glorie that ye trauailen, aboute to shewen and to moulteplye? Maye than the glory of a synguler Romaine stretchen thider as the fame of the name of Rome maye not clymben ne passen? And eke seest thou not that the maners of diuers folke & lawes ben discordant amonges hemselfe, that thilke thing that sum mẽ iudge worthy of prayling, other folke iudgen that, that is worthy of tourment. And herof cometh it that though a man deliteth him in prailyng of his renome, he may not in no wise bringen forthe ne spreden his name to manye maner peoples, and therfore euery man ought to be paide of his glory, that is published among his owne neyghbours, and thylke noble renome shal be restrained within the boundes of tho maner folke. But howe manye a man that was ful noble in his tyme, hath ỹ writches and nedy forgetinge of writers put oute of minde and don away, al be it so that certes thilke thinges prohiten litel, the which things and writinges long and derke elde do awayboth hem and eke her auctours. But ye menne semen to getten you a perdurabilitie whan ye thinken in time coming your fame shal lasten. But natheleslle if thou wilt make comparison to the endelesse spaces of eternite, what thing haste thou, by which thou maist reioycen thee of longe lastinge of thy name? For if there were made comparison of the abyding of a momente to ten thousande winter, for as moche as bothe the two spaces ben ended, for yet hath the momente some porciõ of it, although it be litel: But natheleslle thilke selfe nombre of yeres, and eke as many yeres as therto may be multiplied, ne may not certes be cõparisoned to the perdurabilite that is endelesse. For of thinges whiche that haue ende maye be made comparison, but of thinges which that ben without ende, to thinges that haue ende, may be maked no cõparison. And for thy is it that although renome as of long tyme, as euer the lifte to thinken, wer thought, to ỹ regard of the eternite, that is vnstauncheable & infinite, it ne should not onelie seme littel, but plainlie right nought. But ye semẽ certes ye can do nothing a right but if it be for the audience of the people, and for yle rumours. And ye forsaken the great worthinesse of conscience and of vertue, and ye seken your guerdons of the smale wordes of straunge folke. Haue nowe here and vnderstande in the lightnesse of soche pride and veine glory, howe a man shorned festynally and merily soche vanite. Whylom there was a man that had assayed with stryuynge wordes an other mã, the which not for vsage of very vertue, but for proude vayne glorye, had taken vpon him falsely ỹ name of a philosophre. This rather man that I speake of, thought he wold assay, wheder he thilke wer a philosophre or no, that is to saye: yf that he woulde haue suffred lightlye, in pacence, the wronges that were done to him. This fained philosophre toke pacience a litell while: and whan he had receiued wordes of outrage, he as in striuinge ayen & reioyling of him selfe, sayde at laste thus. Vnderstandest thou not, that I am a philosophre? That other mã answerde againe bitingly and said: I had well vnderstand it, if thou haddest holdẽ thy tong stil. But what is it to these noble worthy mẽ for certes of soch folk speke I that seke glorie with vertue? What is it (ỹ she) what atteyneth fame to soch folke, whan the body is resolued by the deth at the last? for if so be that men dien in al, that is to say body and soule, the which thing oure reason defendeth vs to byleue: than is there no glory in no wise. For what shulde thilke glory be, whan he, of whom thilke glorie is saide to be, nys ryght naught in no wyse. And yf the soule whiche that hath in it selfe seede of good werkes, vnbounden frō the prison of the yerth, wendeth frely to the heuē, dispiseth it not than al erthly occupacion, and beinge in heuen reioyseth that it is exempte from al erthly thynges: as who saith, thā reccheth the soule neuer of no glory of renome of this worlde.

Quicumq; olam mente precipiti petit, summumq; credit gloriam, Lace patentes etheris cernat plagas, Artumq; terrarum situm, Breuē replere non valentis ambitum, &c.

WHo so that wyth ouerthrowinge thoughte onely seketh glory of fame, and weneth that it be soueraine good, let him loken vpon the brode shewing countreis of the heuen, and vpon the strayte seete of this erthe, and he shal be a shamed of thencrease of his name, that maye not fulfil the litel compas of the erthe. O what couetyen proude folke to listen vp her neckes in ydle, in the deedly yoke of thys worlde? For all though that renome yspradd passyng tofore peoples, goth by diuers tonges, and although great houses of kinredes shynen by clere tytles of honours, yet nathelesse deth dispiseth al high glory of fame, and deth wrappeth togithers the high heedes & the lowe, and maketh egual & euen the hyest with the lowest.

Where wōnen now the bones of trew Fabricius? what is nowe Brutus, or sterne Caton? The thynne fame yet lastyng of her ydle names, is marked with a few letters. But al though that we haue knowen the faire wordes of ỳ fame of hem, it is not yeuen to know hem that be deed and cōsumpt. Liggeth thā shyl al vtterlye vnknowable, ne fame ne maketh you not knowe. And yf ye wene to lyue the lenger for winde of youre mortall name, whan one cruel day shal rauisshe you: than is the seconde dwellyng to you close. The first dethe he clepeth here the departing of ỳ body and the seconde dethe here the stintyng of the renome of fame

Sed ne me in exorabile contra fortunam gerere bellum putes, est aliquando, cum de hominibus fallax illa non nihil bene mereatur: tū scilicet cum se aperit, &c.

BVt for as moch as thou shalt not wenen (q she) that I beare an vntretable batayle ayenst fortune, yet somtime it befalleth that she (discreuable) deserueth to haue ryght good thanke of men: and that is whan she her selfe openeth, & whan she discouereth her front, and sheweth her maners. Peraduenture yet vnderstandest thou not that I shall say. It is a wondre that I desire to tell, and therfore vnneth may I vnpliten my sentēce with wordes. For I deme that contrarious fortune profiteth more to men than fortune debonayre. For alway whan fortune semeth debonayre, thā she lieth falsely, biheting the hope of welfulnesse. But forsothe cōtrarious fortune is alwaye sothfaste, whan she sheweth her selfe vnstable throughe her chaungyng. The amiable fortune discreueth folke: the contrary fortune leacheth. The amiable fortune blindeth with the beautie of her false goodes, the hertes of folkes that vsen hem. The contrarie fortune vnbindeth hem with the knowyng of freele welefulnesse. Thamyable fortune maiste thou sene alway wyndy and flowyng, & euer misknowing of her self. The cōtrary fortune is attempre and restrayned and wyse, thorowe exercise of her aduersyte. At the laste amiable fortune with her flaterynges draweth myswandryng men fro the soueraine good: the contrarious fortune leadeth ofte folke ayen to sothefaste goodes, & halseth hem ayen as with an hoke. Wenest thou than that thou oughtest to leten this a lytel thing, that this aspre and horrible fortune hath discouered to the, the thoughtes of thy trew frendes? For why, this ilke fortune hath departed and vncouered to the both the certaine visages, and eke the douteus visages of thy felawes. whā she departed away fro the, she toke away her frendes and left the thy frendes. Nowe whan thou were riche and welefull, as the semed, with howe mykel woldest thou haue bought the full knowing of this, that is to sayne, the knowing of thy very frendes? Nowe plaine the not than of richesse lorne, sithe thou haste foūd the moste precious kynd of richelle, that is to saine, thy very frendes.

Tho

Tho lakened she a litel the syght of her eien, & she withdrew her, right as it wer into the strayte leete of her thought, and begā to speake right, thus. Al the cures (quod she) of mortal folk, which that trauailen hem in many maner studies, gon certes by diuers waies: but nathels they enforcen hem all to comen onely to thende of blisfulnes. And blisfulnes is soche a good, that who so hath gotten it, he ne maye ouer that thing more desire. And thys thyng forsoth is so soueraine good, that it conteineth in him selfe al maner of goodes, to the which good if there failed any thing, it myghte not ben souerain good, for than were some good out of this soueraine good, that might be desyred. Nowe is it clere and certaine, that blisfulnesse is a parfyte state, by the congregacion of all goodes, the whiche blisfulnesse (as I haue sayd) al mortal folke enforcen hem to gette by diuers waies. For why, the couetise of euery good is naturelli planted in the hertes of men: but the miswādryng errour, misledeth hem in to false goodes. Of the whiche men, some of hem wenen that souerain good be to liuen without nede of any thinge. And other men demen, ỳ soueraine good be right digne of reuerence, and enforcē hem to be reuerenced amonge her neighbours, by the honours that they haue goten. And some folke there ben that holden ỳ right hye power be souerain good, and enforcen hem for to reignen, or els to ioynen hem to hem that reigne. And it semeth to other folke, that noblesse of renome be the souerain good, and hastē hem to getten hem glorious name by the artes of werre or of peace. And many folke mesuren and gessen, that souerayne good be ioye and gladnesse, and wenen that it be right blisful thing to plongē in voluptuous delites. And there bene some folke, that entrechaungē the causes and the endes of these forsaide goods: As they that desyren richesses to haue power and delites, or elles they desyre power for to haue money, or for cause of renome. In these thynges and soche other is turned all the entencion of desyrynges and werkes of men, as thus: Noblesse and fauoure of people, which that yeueth to all menne, as it semeth hem, a maner clerenesse of renomme, and wife and children, that men desyren, for cause of delyte and merynesse. But forsoth frendes ne shullen not be rekened amonge the goodes of fortune, but of vertue, for it is a ful holy manner thing. All these other thinges, forsoth be taken for cause of power, or elles for cause of delite. Certes now am I redy to referren the goodes of the body, to these forsayd thynges abouen: For it semeth that strength and gretnesse of body yeuen power and worthynesse, and that beaute and swiftnesse yeuen glorye and renome: and helth of body semeth to yeuen delite. In al these thinges it semeth only that blysfulnesse is desyred: for why, thylke thyng that euery man desireth most ouer al thinges, he demeth that it be souerain good. But I haue defined, that blisfulnesse is soueraine good, for whiche euery wight demeth ỳ thilke estate that he desireth ouer al thinges that it be blisfulnesse. Nowe hast thou than before thin eyen almoste al ỳ purposed forme of the welefulnesse of mankynde, that is to saine, richesse, honours, power, glorie and delites, the which delite only considred he Epicurus, and iudged and established that delite is the soueraine good: for as moche as elle ther thinges: as him thought, byreft away ioy and mirthe from the hart. But I retume againe to the studies of men, of whiche men the corage alway reherseth and seketh the souueraine good, al be it so that it be with a dyked memorie, but he note by whiche pathe, right as a dronken man note nought by whiche pathe he may returne home to his house. Semeth it than that folke forleyen and errunto enforcen hem to haue nede of nothing. Certes there is none other thing, that may so moche performen blisfulnesse, as an estate plenteous of al goodes, that ne hath nede of none other thing, but that is sufficiaūt of him selfe vnto him self. And folien soch folke than that wenen, that thilke thig that is right good, that it is eke right worthy of honor & of reuerence: certes nay. For that thinge nys neither foul ne worthy to be dispised, that wel nigh al the entencion of mortal folke trauailen to get it. And power eke ought not to be rekened amōges goodes, what els: for it nis nor to were, that thilke thing that is moste worthy of all thinges, be feble and without strength. And clerenesse of renome, ought that to ben dispysed? Certes ther may no man forsake, that al thinge that is right excellent and noble, that it ne semeth be right clere & renomed. For it nis it nedeth not to sai, that blisfulnesse be enuious ne dirtye, ne subiect to greuaunces ne sorowes, sens that in right lytel thinges folke seken to haue and to vsen that may delyten hem. Certs these ben the thinges that men willen & desiren to getten: and for this cause desiré thei richelles, dignities, reignes, glorie, and delites. For therby wenen they to haue sufficiaūce, honoure, power, renomme, and gladnesse. Than is it good, that men seken thus by so many diuers studies, in whyche desire, it many not lightely be shewed, howe great is the strengthe of nature. For howe so men haue diuers sentences and disaadinges, algates men accorden all in louinge the ende of good.

THlyketh me to shewe by subtyll song, with slacke and delitable sowne of stringes, nowe that nature mightelie enchineth and stiteth by the gouernement of thinges, & by soche lawe she purueiable kepeth he great worlde, nowe she bindynge restraineth he all thynges by a bonde that maie not be vnbounden. All be it so that the lions of the countreye of Pene, beren the faire chaines, and take meate of the handes of folke, that yeuen it hem, and dreden her sturdie maisters, of whiche they be wont to suffre beatinges, yet that her horrible mouthes ben bledde, that is to sain, of beestes deuoured: her corage of time passed that hath been idle & rested, repaireth ayen, and thei rozen greuously, and remembren on her nature, and slaken her neckes from her chaines vnbounde, and her maister tirke to tume with blody teth, assayeth ỳ woode wrathes of hem, that is to saine, thei fretten her maister. And the iangliyngbirde that singeth in the hye braunches, that is to saine, in the bodde, and after is enclosed in a straite cage all though the plienge besinesse of men yeue hem honied drinkes, and large meates with swete fudy: yet natheles if thilke birde shipping out of her straite cage, seeth the agreable shadowes of ỳ wodes, she defouleth with her fete her meate ishad, and seketh on mourning onely the woode, and twirethe desiring the woode with her swete wise. All thinges tchē ayē to her proper course and al thinges reioysen on her returning againe to her nature: ne none ordinaunce is breaken to thinges, but that hath toyned the ende to the beginninge, and hath made the course so feise stable, that it chaunge not fro his proper kinde.

CErtes also ye men ỳ ben erthly beastes dreamen alwaye your beginning, although it be with a thin imaginaciō, & by a maner thought, al be it not clerely perfectly, ye loke trō afere to thilke beginning of soothfastnes. And therfore naturel entencion leadeth you to thilke very good, but many maner errours misourneth you therfro. Cōsider now if ỳ be thilke thinges, by which a man weneth to get hī blisful nesse if that he may comen to thilke ende ỳ he weneth to come to by nature. For if ỳ money honours, or these other forsaid thinges bringen men to soch a thing that no good ne faile them ne semeth to faile: Certes than wold I graūt that they be maked blisful by thinges that they haue gotte. But if so be that thilke thinges ne mowē not performe that thei byheten, and that there be defaut of many goodes, sheweth it not than clerely ỳ false beaute of blisfulnesse is knowen & atteint in thilke thiges? First and forward thou thy self, that haddest haboundaūce of richelle nat longe agon, I aske thee ỳ in thaboundance of al thy riches, if thou were neuer anguishous or sorie in thy courage of any wrong or greuaūce that betyd the in any lyde. B. Certes (q I) it ne remembreth me not, that euer I was sore of my thought, that I ne was alwaye in anguishe of som what. P. And was that not (q he) for that the lacked som what that thou noldest not haue lacked? Or els thou haddest that thou noldest haue had? B. Right so it is (q I). P. Than desiren thou ỳ presence of the one, and thabsence of that other? B. I graūte well (q I). Ph. For sothe (q she) than needeth there som what that euery man desireth. B. Ye there needeth (q I). P. Certes (q she) and he that hath lacke or neede of aught, nis not in euery way sufficiaūt to himself. B. No (q I). P. And thou (q she) in all the plente of thy richelle haddest thilke lacke of sufficiaunce? B. What els (q I). P. Than may not riches make hen that a man nis nedi, ne that he be sufficient to him selfe: and yet that was it that they beheten as it semed. And eke certes I trowe that this be greatlie to consider, that money hath not in his owne kynde, that it ne maie been binomed of hem, that haue it maugre hem. Boecius. I knowe it weil (q I). Philo. Why shouldest thou not be knowen it (q she) when euery daie the strenger folke, benomen it from the feobler maugre hem: from whēs come els, all these foraine complaintes, quarels, or pleadynges, but for that menne aske her money, that hath been binomed hem, by strength or by gile, and alwaie maugre hem? Boecius. Right so it is (q I). Philosophie. Then hath a man neede (q she) to seeken hym foraine helpe, by whiche he maie defende his money. Boecius. Who maie saie naie (q I). Philosophie. Certes (q she) and hym needed none helpe, if he ne had no money, that he might lese. Boecius. That is doubtles (q I) Philosophie. Then is this thyng tourned in to the contrary (q she) for richesse, that menne wemen, should maken suffisaunce, thei maken a man rather haue nede of forain helpe. Whiche is the maner or the gise (q she) that richesse maie driuen awaie nede? Riche folke maie thei neither haue honger ne thurste? These riche menne, maie thei fele no colde on their limes in Winter? But thou wilte answere, that riche menne haue inough, wherwith thei maie staunchen her honger, and slaken her thurst, and doen awaie colde.

In this wise, maie neede been coumforted by richesse, but certes: neede ne maie not all vtterlie be doen awaie. For if this nede, that alwaie is gaping and gredy, be fulfilled with richesse, and any other thynge, yet dwelleth then a nede, that mote be fulfilled, I hold me still, and tell not how that little thyng, sufficeth to nature: but certes, to auarice sufficeth not mough of nothyng. For sine that riches, ne maie not all dooen awaie neede, and thei maken their owne neede: what maie it then bee, that ye wenen that richesses, mowen yeuen you suffisaunce?

ALL were it so, that a noble coueitous manne had a Riuer, or a Gutter fletyng al of Gold, yet should it neuer staunche his coueitise: and although he had his necke charged, with precious stones of the redde Sea: And though he dooe ere his fieldes plenteous, with an hundred Oxen, neuer ne shall his bityng busines forleten hym, while he liueth, ne the light richesses, ne shall not bearen hym compaignie when he is dedde.

Sed dignitatis honorabilem, reuerendumq; cui prouenerint, reddunt. Num vis ea est magistratibus, vt vtentium mentibus virtutes inferant, vicia depellant. &c.

BVt dignities to whome they be comen, maken they him honorable and reuerent? Haue they not so great strēgth that thei maie putte vertue in hertes of folkes that vse the lordship of hem, or els may they don away the vices. Certes they be not wont to don away wickednes, but they be wont rather to shew wickednesse. And therof cometh it that I haue right great disdain, that dignities ben yeuen to wicked men. For whiche thing Catullus cleped a cōsul of Rome (that highte Nonius) postome of boche, as who saith, he cleped him a congregacion of vices in his brest, as a postome is full of corrupcion: All wen Nonius set in a chaire of dignite. Seest thou not thā, how greate vilonies dignities done to wiked men? certes vnworthinesse of wicked men shulde be the lasse sene, if they nen remoued of non honour. Certes thou thy self ne mightest not be brought with as many perils as thou myghtest suffre, that thou woldest beare the magistrate with decorate, that is to saine, that for peril that myght befall thee by offence of the king. Theodoryke, thou noldest not be felawe in gouernaunce with Decorate, whan thou saw that he had wicked corage of a lycorous shrew and of an accusour. Ne I may not for soche honours iudgen hem worthy of reuerēce, that I deme and hold vnworthy to haue thylke same honours. Now if thou sawe a manne, that wer fulfilde of wisedome, certes, thou ne mightest not deme, that he wer vnworthie to that honour, or els to the wisedome of whiche, he is fulfilled. Boecius. No (q I). Philosophie. Certes (q she) dignities appertainen properlie to vertue, and vertue transporteth dignitie anon to thilke man, to whiche she her self is conioyned. And for as moche as honours of people, ne maie not make folke digne of honour, it is well seen clerely, that thei ne haue no proper beautie of dignitie. And yet menne oughte take more heede in this: for if a wight be in so moche the more outcast, that he is dispised spiled of moste folke, so as dignite ne maye not maken shrewes worthy of no reuerence, than maketh dignite shrewes rather dispised then praised, the which shrewes dignite sheweth to moch folke. And forsothe not vnpunished, that is to sayn, that shrewes reuengē hem ayen ward vpon dignities. For they yelden ayen to dignities as greate guerdons, whan they dispotten and defouleu dignities with her vilonie. And for as moche as thou nowe knowest, that thilke very reuerence ne maye nat comen by these shadowy transitorye dignities, vnderstonde nowe thus: that if a man had vsed and had many maner dignities of consuls and were parauēture comen amonge straunge nacions, shulde thilke honour maken him worshipfull and redouted of straunge folke? Certes if that honour of people were a naturel yefte to dignities, it ne might neuer cessen no where amonge no maner folke to done his office. Right as a fyre in euery countrey ne stinteth not to enchauffen and maken hote. But for as moche as for to ben honorable or reuerēt, ne cometh not to folke of her proper strength of nature, but onely of the false opinion of folke, that is to saine, that wenen that dignities maken folke digne of honours: anone therfore whā they comen ther as folke ne knowē not thilke dignities, her honours banishen awaye and flen anon. But that is amōge straunge folke maist thou sain. Ne amonges hem ther they were borne, ne dured not thilke dignities alwaye. Certes the dignite of the prouostry of Rome was whilom a great power: nowe is it nothinge but an ydle name, and the rente of the senatorie a great charge. And if a wight whilom had thoffice to taken hede to the vitailes of the people, as of corne and of other thinges, he was holdē amonges hem great. But what thing is more now out caste than thilke prouostrie. As I haue said a lytel here beforne, that thilke thing that hath no proper beaute of it self, receiueth sometime price and shining, and sometime leseth it by thopinion of vsaunces. Now if that dignities thā ne mowe not make folke digne of reuerence, and if that dignites were foule of her wyll, by the fylthe of shrewes. And yf dignities leen her shininge by chaunginge of tymes, and yf they weren foule by estimaciō of people, what is it that they han in hem selfe of beaute, ỹ ought to be desired? as who saithe none: than ne mowē they yeuēn no beaute of dignitie to none other.

ALbeit so, that the proude Nero wyth all his wode furure, kēbe him and apparelled him with faire purpure of Tirie, a with white peerles. Algates yet therof be hateful to al folk that is to say that all was he behated of all folkes, yet this wicked Nero had great lordshippe. And yaf whilome to ỹ reuerent Senatours the vnworshypfull seates of dignities. Thē worshipfull seates he clepeth here, for that Nero that was so wicked yaf the dignities.

Who woulde than resonablye wenen, that blisfulnesse were in soche honours, as been yeuen by vicious shrewes

An vero regna, regnumq; familiaritas efficere potentem valent? Quidni. &c.

BVt reignes and familiarities of kynges, make they maken a man to ben mighty? How elles when his blisfulnesse durethe perpetuallie. But certes, the olde age of time passed. & eke of present time nowe, is ful of ensamples, how that kinges haue chaunged in to wretchednesse, out of her welfulnes. O, a noble thing & a clere thinge is power, that nis not founden mighty to kepe it self. And if that power of realmes be authour and maker of blisfulnesse, if thilke power lacketh he on any syde, amenuseth it nat thilke blisfulnesse, and bringeth in wretchednes? But yet al be it so, that the realmes of mankinde stretchen brode, yet mote ther nede ben moche folke, ouer whiche that euery king ne hath no lordship ne commaundement. And certes vpon thilke side that power falleth, which that maketh folke blisful. Right on that same side no power entreth vnderneth that maketh hem wretches. In this maner than mote kinges haue more porcion of wretchednesse thā of welfulnesse.

A tiraunt that was kinge of Cecyle, that had assayed the peril of his estate, shewed by similitude the dredes of realmes by gastnesse of a swerde, that honge ouer the heed of his familier. What thinge is than this power, that maye not done awaye the bitynges of bisinesse, ne eschewe the prickes of drede?

And certes yet wolden they lyuen in syker nesse, but they maye nat. And yet they gloryen hem in her power. Holdest thou than that thilke mā be mighty, ỹ thou seest that he wolde done that he maye not done. And holdest thou than him a mighty man, that hath enuironed his sydes with men of armes or sergeauntes, and dredeth more hem that he maketh agast, than they dreden hym, and that is putte in the handes of his seruaunts for he shulde seme mightye? But of kamplyeres or seruauntes of kinges, why shulde I tell the any thing, sithe that I my selfe haue shewed the that realmes hem selfe ben ful of great feblesse? The whiche kamplyers, certes the royall power of kinges in hoole estate, and in estate abated, full ofte throwethe adowne.

Nero constrained Seneche hys kamplyer and his mayster, to chesen on what dethe he wolde dye. Antonius commaunded that knightes slowen wyth her swerdes Papinian his kamplyer, whiche Papinian hadde ben longe tyme, ful mighty amonges hem of thecourte. And yet certes, they wolden both haue renounced her power. Of whiche two Seneche enforced him to yeuen to Nero his richesse, and also to haue gone in to solytary exile. But whan the great weight, that is to sain, of lordes power, or of Fortune, draweth hem that shullen fall, neither of hem ne might do that he wolde. What thinge is than thylke power, that thoughe men haue it, yet they ben agast, and whan thou woldest haue it, thou narte not syker? And yf thou woldest forleten it, thou maist nat eschewen it. But wheder soch men ben krendes at nede as beē counsayled by fortune, and nat by vertue? Certes soch folke as welful fortune maketh krēdes, cōtrarious fortune maketh hem enemyes. And what pestilence is more mighty for to anoye a wight, than a familier enemye?

Qui se volet esse potentem, Animos domet ille feroces, Nec victa libidine colla. &c.

Who so wol be mighty, he mote daunten his cruell corages, ne put nat his necke ouercomen, vnder the foule raynes of lechery. For all be it so, that the lordshippe stretche so ferre that the cōtrey of Inde quaketh at thy cōmaundementes, or at thy lawes. And that the last yle in the see, that hyght Tyle, be thrale to the: yet yf thou maiste nat putten away thy foule derke desyres, and driuen out fro the wretched complayntes: Certetes, it nys no power that thou hast.

Gloria vero quam fallax sepe, quã turpis est:
Vnde non iniuria tragicus exclamat,
O gloria gloria, millibus mortalium nihil aliud facta, nisi aureum inflatio magna. &c.

But glorie, how deceiuable and howe full is it oft? For whiche thing, not shilfully a tragedie, that is to sayne maker of dites that highten Tragedyes, cried and sayde. O glory glory (he) thou nart nothinge els to thousandes of folks but a sweller of eares. For many haue full great renome by the false opinion of the people.

And what thinge may ben thought fouler then soche prayesynge? For thinke folke that ben praised falsly, they mooten nedes haue shame of her praisinge. And yf that folke haue getten hem thanke or praisinge by her desertes: What thing hath thilke prise echede or encreased to the conscience of wyse folke, that mesuren her good, nat by the rumoure of the people, but by the sothefastenesse of cōscience? And if it seme a faire thinge, a man to haue encreased and spread his name, than foloweth it, ꝑ it is demed to ben a foule thig, if it ne be yspradde and encreased. But as I said a litel here before, ꝑ sithe there mote nedes ben many folkes, to whiche folke the renome of a man ne maye nat comen, it befalleth, that he that thou wenest be glorious and renomed, semeth in the nert part of ꝑ yerthes to ben without glorye and without renome. And certes amōges these thinges I ne trow nat that the prise and the grace of the people, nys neither worthy to ben remembred, ne cometh of wise iugement, ne is ferme perdurably. But now of this name of gētilesse: what man is it that ne may wel sene howe vaine and how flityng it is? For if ꝑ name of gentilesse be referred to renome and clerenesse of lynage, than is gentil name but a forain thing, that is to say, to hem ꝑ glorifiē hem of her linage. For it semeth that gentiles be a maner praysing that cometh of ꝑ desertes of auncestres. And if praising maketh gentilnesse, than mote they nedes ben gentil, that been praysed. For whiche thinge it folowethe, that if thou ne haue no gentylnesse of thy selfe, ꝑ is to saine, prise, that cometh of thy desert. For aine gentilnesse ne maketh the nat gentil. But certes if there be any good in gentilnesse, I trowe it be al onely this: that it semeth as that a maner necessite be imposed to gentilmē, for that they they ne shulde nat outregen or forleauen fro the vertues of her noble kynred.

Omne hominum genus in terris simili surgit ab hortu. Vnus enim rerum pater est. Vnus cuncta ministrat, &c.

All the lynage of men, that ben in erth bē semblable of birth. One alone is father of thynges: one alone ministreth all thinges: he yaf to the sun his beames: he yaf to the moone her hornes: he yafe to mē the erth: he yafe the ferres to the heuen: he closed with membres the soules that camen from his hye seate. Than comen all mortall folke of noble seed. why noilen ye, or bosten of your elders? For yf ye loke your beginning and god youre father authour and your maker. Than nys there no forelyued wight or vngentill but yf he nourishe his corage vnto vices, and forlete his proper kynde

Quid autem de corporis voluptatibus loquar, quarū appetentia quidē plena est anxietatis, &c.

But what shal I sain of delyces of body, of whiche delices the delirynges ben ful of anguisches, and the fulfillinges of hem ben ful of penaunce: how great sikenesses and how great sorowes vnsufferable, right as a maner fruite of wickednes, ben thilke delices wōne to brynge to the bodies of folke that vsen hem? of which delices I not what ioye may ben had ther moninge. But this wote I wel, that who so euer wol remembrē him of his lurynes he shal well vnderstande, that the issues of delices ben sorowful and sory. And yf thilke delices now make folke blissful, than by that same cause moten thele beests bē cleped blissful. Of whiche beestes al the entencīō hasteth to fulfil her bodely iolyte. And the gladnesse of wife and childzen were an honest thynge, but it hath ben said that it is ouer mokel ayēs kinde, that childzen haue ben founden tormentours to her fathers. I not howe many. Of which childzen how biting is euery cōdicion, it nedeth not to tellen it the, that hast er this tyme assayed it, and art yet nowe anguishous. In this tyme aprouе I the sentence of my disciple Euripidis, that said, that he that hathe no childzen is weleful by infortune.

Habet hoc voluptas omnis stimulis agit fruentes: Apiumq; par volautiū vbi gratia mella fuit, Fugit & nimes tenaci ferit ista corda morsu, &c.

Euery delyte hathe this, that it anguisheth hem with prickes that vsen it. It resembleth to these stieng flies that we clepen bees, that after that he hath shedde his agreable honnyes, he fleeth away, and stingeth the hertes of hem that ben smitten with bitinge ouerlonge holden.

Nihil igitur dubium est, quin he ad beatitudinem vie deuia quedam sint, nec perducere eo quemquam valeant

Nowe it is no dout than, that these wayes ne ben a maner mistidinges to blissulnes: ne that they ne mowen not leden folke thider, as they behoten to ledē hem. But with how great harmes these forsaide ways ben eniaced, I shal shew you shortly. For why, if thou enforcest the to assemble money, thou must byreuē him his money ȳ hath it. And if thou wolt shinen with dignities, thou muste beseechen and supplie hem, that yeuen tho dignities. And yf thou coueitest by honour to gone before other folkes, thou shalt defoule thy self thorow humblesse of asking. If ȳ desirest power thou shalt by awaites of thy subiectes anoious be cast vnder by many parils. Alhest thou glorie: thou shalt ben so distracte by aspre thinges, that thou shalt forgone sikernesse. And if thou woldest leden thy lyfe in delites, euery wight shal dispise the and forleten the, as thou that arte thral to thing, that is right foule and bitel, that is to saine, seruaunt to thy bodye. Nowe is it wel sene, how lytel and how bitel possession they coueiten, that putten the goodes of the bodi aboue her own reason. For maist thou surmounten these elifauntes in greatnesse or in weight of body? or mayste thou ben stronger than the bule mayst thou bee swifter than the Tygre? Beholde the spaces and the stablenesse, and the swyft course of heauē, and stinte somtyme to wondren on soule thinges. The whiche heuen certes nys nat rather for these thinges to be wondred vpon, than for the reason by whiche it is gouerned. But the shininge of thy forme, that is to sayne, the beaute of thy body, how swiftly passing is it, & how transitorie, certes, it is more flitting than the mutabilite of floures of the sommer season. For so as Aristotell telleth, that yf the men had eyen of a beeste that hight Lynr, so that the lolynge of folke mizt percen thrughe the tynges that withſtōde it. Who ſo loked than in thatrailes of the body of Alcibiades, that was full faire in the ſuperfycie without, it ſhulde ſeme right foule. And for thy, yf thou ſemeſt faire, thy nature ne maketh nat that, but the deſceiuaunce of feblenelle of the eien that lokē. But praiſe the goodes of the body as moche as euer the lyſte, ſo that ꝑ know al gates that what ſo it be, that is to ſaine, of the goodes of the body, which that thou wōdreſt vpon, maye ben diſtroyed or els diſſolued by the heet of a feuer of thre daies. Of which forſayd thinges I maie reducen this ſhortly in a ſomme, that theſe worldly goods, which that ne mowen yeuen that they behyghten, ne ben not parfite by the congregacion of al goodes, that they ne ben not wayes ne pathes, that bringen men to blilfulneſſe, ne maken men to be blilful.

Heu heu quę miſerōs tramite dęuios abducit ignorantia, Non aurum in viridi quęritis arbore. &c.

ALas, whiche folye, and whiche ignorance miſledethe wandringe wretches, fro the pathe of very good. Certes ye ſeken no golde in grene trees, ne ye gadren not precious ſtones in vines: ne ye ne hyden not youre ginnes in hie mountains to catchen kyſſhe: of the which ye may maken riche feeſtes.

And if you lyſte to hunte to Roes, ye ne gonat to the fords of the water that hight Thyrene. And ouer this men knowe wel the crekes and the cauernes of the ſee yhyd in the floodes, and knowen eke, whiche water is moſt plenteous of white perles, and knowē whiche water habounded moſt of reed purpure, that is to ſaine, of a maner ſhelfyſſhe, with whiche men dyen purpure: and knowē whiche ſtrondes habounden moſte of tendre kyſſhes, or of ſharpe kyſſhes, that hight Echines. But ſothe ſuffrē hem ſelf to ben ſo blind that hem ne retchē not to know wher thilke goodes ben yhidde, which that they coueiten but plungen hem in yerthe, and ſeken there thilke good, that ſurmounteth the heuē, that beareth the ſterres. What prayer may I maken that be digne to the nyce thoughtes of men? But I pray that they coueiten rychelle and honours, ſo that whan they haue gotten tho falſe goodes with great trauayl, that therby they mowen knowe the very goodes.

Hactenus mendacis formā felicitatis oſtēdiſſe ſufficerit, quod ſi perſpicaciter intuearis, ordo eſt deinceps. &c.

IT ſuffiſeth that I haue ſaide hyderto, the forme of falſe welfulnelle: ſo that yf thou loke now clerely: the order of mine entencion requireth from hēſorthe, to ſhewen the very welfulnes. B. Forſoth (ꝙ I) I ſe wel now, the ſuffiſaunce may nat comē by richeſſe, ne power by realmes, ne reuerence by dignities, ne gētilleſſe by glory, ne ioye by delices. P. And hast thou wel knowē the cauſes (ꝙ ſhe) why it is? B. Certs me ſemeth (ꝙ I) that I ſe hem, right as though it were through a litel clyfte: But me were leuer knowen hem more openly of the. Phi. Certes (ꝙ ſhe) the reaſon is al redy. For thilke thinge that ſimply is one thinge without any deuiſion, the errour and folye of mankinde, deuideth and departeth it and miſledeth it, and tranſporteth from very and parfit good, to goodes that be falſe and vnparfit. But ſay me this: weneſt ꝑ that he that hathe nede of power that him ne lacketh nothinge? Boecious Nay (ꝙ I) Philoſophie. Certes (ꝙ ſhe) thou ſayeſt arighte: for yf ſo be that there is a thing that in any partie be feblier of power, certes as in that it mote nedes be nedy of forain help. Boecius. Right ſo it is (ꝙ I) Philoſophie, Suffiſaunce and power ben of one kinde. Boecius. So ſemeth (ꝙ I) Philoſophie, And demeſt thou (ꝙ ſhe) that a thinge that is of this maner, that is to ſaye, ſuffiſaunt and mighty, ought ben diſpiſed, or els that it be righte digne of reuerence a doue all thinges? Boecius. Certes (ꝙ I) it is no doute that it is rizt worthy to be reuerenced. Philoſop. Let vs adden (ꝙ ſhe) reuerence to ſufficiaunce and to power, ſo that we demen that theſe thre thinges be al one thinge. Boecius. Certes let (ꝙ I) vs adden it if we wil graunt the ſothe. P. What demeſt thou (ꝙ ſhe) thā is that a derke thing and not noble, that is ſuffiſaunt, reuerent, and mighty? or elles that it is right noble and right clere by celebrate of renomme? Cōſider than (ꝙ ſhe) as we haue graunted here byforne, that he that ne hath no nede of nothing, and is moſt mighty and moſte digne of honoure, yf hym nedethe any clereneſſe of renomme, whiche clereneſſe he mighte not graunten of him ſelfe, ſo for lacke of thilke clereneſſe he might ſemen the febler on any ſyde, or the more out caſt. Bole That is to ſay, naye: For who ſo that is ſuffiſaunt, mighty, and reuerent, clereneſſe of renomme foloweth of the forſaide thinges: he hath it all redy of his ſuffiſaunce. Boecius.

I maye

I maye not (q I) denye it, but I mote graunten as it is, that this thinge is right celebrable by clerenesse of renomme and noblesse. P. Than folowethe (q she) that we adden clerenesse of renomme to the forsaide thinges, so that there be amonges hem no difference. B. This is a consequence (q I) Philosop. This thinge than (q she) that ne hathe nede of no straine thynge, and that maye do all thynge by hys strengthes, and that is noble and honourable, is it not a merry thinge and ioyfull? Boecius. But whence (q I) that any sorowe might come to this thynge that is sothe, certes I maye not thinke. Philosophie. Than mote we graunten (q she) that this thinge be full of gladnesse, yf the forsayde thynges be sothe. And certes, also mote we graunten, that sufficiaunce, power, noblesse, reuerence, and gladnesse be onelye diuers by names, but her substaūce hath no diuersite. Boecius. It mote nedelye be so (q I). Philosophie. Thilke thinge than (q she) that is one and simple in his nature, the wickednesse of men departeth and deuydeth it: And whan they enforcen hem to getten partye of a thynge, that ne hath no parte, they ne getten hem neyther thilke partye that nys none, ne the thynge al hole that they desyre. Boecius. In whiche maner (q I). Philosophie. Thilke man (q she) that seeketh richesse to flyen pouertye: he trauaileth hym not for to get power, for whathe leauer be derke and vyle, and ofte withdraweth from hym selfe many naturell bytes, for he nolde lese the money that he hath assembled. But certes in thys maner he ne gettethe him no sufficiaunce, that power desireth and that molestie priketh, and that shame maketh out caste, and that derkenesse hydeth. And certes he that desireth only power, walketh and scattereth rychesse, and disireth delyces and ellе honour that is without power, ne he ne prayseth glory nothing. Certes this seest thou well that many thynges failen to him: For he hath sometyme defaute of many necessitees, and many anguysches greuen hym. And when he maye not don tho defautes away, he forgetteth to be myghty, and that is the thynge that he most desyreth. And right thus may I make semblable reasons of honour, of glory, and of delices. For so many of these forsaid thiges is the same that these other thiges ben, that is to saine, al one thing. Who so euer seketh to getten that one of these and not that other, he ne getteth not that he desyreth. Boecius. What sayest thou than, if that a man coueite to getten al these thinges togider. Philosophie. Certes (q she) I wold say that he woulde get him soueraun blisfulnes, but that shall neuer finde in tho thynges that I haue shewed, that mowe not yeue that they beheten. Boecius. Certes no (q I). Phi. Than (q she) ne shullen men not by no way seken blisfulnesse in soch thinges as men wenen that they ne mowe gruen, but one thyng synglerly of al that men seke. Boecius. I graunt well (q I) ne non sothere thing maye be sayde. Philosophy. Now hast thou than (q she) the forme and the cause of false welefulnesse: Now turne and flytte ageyn to thy thought, for there shal thou sene anon thylke very blisfulnesse, that I haue behight the. Boecius. Certs (q I) it is clere and open, though it were to a blynde man: And that shewdest thou me a lytel here bifore, whan thou enforcedeste the to shewe me the causes of the false welefulnesse. For (but if I be begiled) than is that thilke very blisfulnesse and parfite, that parfitelye maketh a man sufficiaūt, mightye, honourable, noble, and ful of gladnes. And for thou shalte wel knowe, that I haue well vnderstanden these thynges within my herte: I knowe well that thylke blisfulnesse that men verely yeue one of ỳ forsayd thinges, sens they ben all one: I knowe doutlesse that thilke thynge is ful of blisfulnesse. Philosophy. O my norice (q she) by this opinion I say that thou arte blisful, yf thou put this therto that I shall sayne. Boecius. What is that (q I). Phi. Trowest thou that ther be any thig in this erthlie mortal tomblinge thinges, that may bringe this estate? Bo. Certes (q I) I trow it not: and thou hast shewed me wel, that ouer thilk good ther nis nothyng more to ben desired. P. These thinges than (q she) that is to saine, erthly sufficiaūce & power, and soch thinges certenly they semen likenesse of very good, or els it semeth that they yeuen to mortall folke a maner of goodnesse, that ne be not parfite, but thilke good that is very and parfite, that may they not yeuen. Boe. I accorde me well (q I). Phi. Than (q she) for as moche as thou hast knowen, which is thilke very blisfulnes, and eke which thilke thinges be, that lie falsely blisfulnesse, that is to say, ỳ they by disceite feme very goodes: Nowe behoueth thee to knowe whence and wher thou mowe seke thilke very blisfulnesse. B. Certes (q I) ỳ desyre I greatly and haue abyden longe time to herken it. P. But for as moch (q she) as it liketh to my disciple Plato in his boke of Tymeo, that in ryght lytel thynges men shulden beseche the help of god: What iudgest thou that be nowe to done, so that we may deserue to finde that seate of thilke souerain god? B. Certes (q I) I deme that we shullen cleape to the father of all goddes, for withouten him nys there nothing founded a right. P. Thou saiest a right (q she) and began anon to singen right thus.

O qui perpetuã mundum ratione gubernas, Terrarum celiq; sator, qui tempus ab euo, ire iubes, stabilisq; manens das cuncta moueri, Quẽ non externe pepulerunt fingere cause &c.

O Thou father, soueraine creatour of heuen & of erthes, that gouernest this world by pardurable reason, that commandest the tymes to gone, sythe that age had beginning. Thou that dwellest thy selfe aye stedefaste and stable, and yeuest al other thiges to be moued, ne forcene causes ne cessedē the neuer to compoun werk of flatering mater, but onely the forme of souerain good yset, within the without enuy, that meued the frely. Thou that art alderfarest, bearinge the fayre world in thy thought formedest this worlde to thy likenesse semblable, of that fayre world in thy thought. Thou drawest all thinge on thy soueraine ensample, and commaundest that this worlde perfectliche ymaked, haue frely and absolute his perfite parties. Thou byndest the elementes by nombres proporcionables, that the colde thynges, mowen accorden with the hotte thinges, and the drie things with the moiste: That the fyre that is purest, ne flye nat ouer hye, ne that the heuinesse ne draw nat adoun ouerlowe the yerthes, that be plonged in the waters. Thou knyttest togider, the meane soule of treble kinde mouing al thinges, and deuidest it by membres acordyng. And whan it is thus deuided, it hath assebled amouyng in to roundes, it gothe to turne agayn to him self, and enuironneth a full deepe thoughte, and turneth the heuen by a semblable ymage. Thou by euen lyke causes enhancelest the soules and the lesse lyues, and abling hem to height by lyght waines or cartes. Thou sowest hem in to heauen and in to yerthe, and whan they be conuerted to thee by thy benigne lawe, thou makest hem retourne ayen to thee by ayen ledyng fire. O father yeue thou to the thoughte to flyen vp in to thy straite sete, and graunt him to enuironne the well of good. And the light ylounde graunte him to fixen the clere syghtes of his corage in the and scatter thou and to brake that weightes and the cloudes of erthely heuinesse, & shyne thou by thy brightnesse. For thou arte clernesse, thou arte pesyble reste to debonayre folke, thou thy selfe arte beginninge, bearer, leder, pathe, and terme to loke on the that is our ende.

Quoniam igitur, que sit imperfecti, que etiã perfecti boni forma vidisti, nunc demonstrandum reor. &c.

FOr as moche than, as thou hast sene which is the forme of good that nys not parfite, and the forme of good, whiche that is parfite. Nowe trowe I that it were good to shewe in what this perfection of blisfulnes is set. And in this thing I trow that we shal first enquire for to weten, if that any soch maner good, as thilke good as thou hast diffynished a litell here beforne, that is to saine, soueraingood, maye befound in the nature of thynges. For that vayne imaginacion of thought ne deceue vs not, and put vs out of the sothefastnesse of thylke thynge that is submytted to vs. But it maye not be denied ỹ thylke nes, and that is right as a wel of al goodes. For al thynge that is cleped imparfite is proued imparfyte, by the amenusyng of perfection of thynge that is parfite. And hereof cometh it that in euery thynge generall, if that men sene any thinge that is imparfyte, certes in thilke thynge generall, there mote be some thyng that is parfyte. For if so be that perfection is don away, men may not thinke ne saye from whence thilke thynge is, that is cleped imperfyte. For the nature ne toke not her beginninge, of thinges amenused and imparfyte, but it procedeth of thynges that ben al hole absolute, and discendeth so down in to the vttrest thynges, and into thynges empty and without frute. But as I haue shewed a litell here beforne, that if that there be a blisfulnesse that be freel and vaine, and imparfayte, there maye no man doubte that ther nys some blisfulnesse, that there is stedefaste and parfyte. Boecious. This is concluded (q I) fermely and sothfastelye. P. But consider also (q she) in whome this blisfulnes inhabyteth. The comune accorde and conceyte of the corage of men, proueth and graunteth, that god prince of all thynges is good. For so as nothynge may be thought better than good, it may not be douted than that he that

nothyng nis better then he nis good. Certes, reason sheweth that GOD is so good, that it proueth by very force, that perfite good is in him. For if God nis soche, he ne maie not ben prince of al thing. For certes, some thing posselyng in it self parfite good, should be more worthie then God: and it should semen that thilk thing wer first and older then God. For wer haue shewed apertlie, that all thynges that been parfite, been firste, or thinges that been imperfite. And for thy, for as moche as that my reasō, or my procesle, ne go not awaie without an ende, we owen to graunten, that the soueraine good is right full of soueraine parfit good. And we haue establisshed, that the souerain good is very blisfulnesse: then mote it nedes be, that verie blisfulnesse is set in souerain good. Boecius. This take I wel (ꝙ I) ne this ne maie not be withsaid in no maner. Philosophie. But I praie thee (ꝙ she) se now how thou maiest prouen holly, and withouten corrupcion, this that we haue saied, that the soueraine God, is full of right soueraine good. Bo. In whiche maner (ꝙ I). Phil. Wenest thou aught (ꝙ she) that the father of all thinges, hath take thilke souerain good, any where out of hymselfe? Of whiche soueraine good, menne proueth that he is ful. Right as thou mightest thinken, that God, that hath blisfulnesse in hymself, and thilke blisfulnes that is in him, wer diuers in substaunce. For if thou wene, that God hath receiued thilke good out of hymself, thou maiest wene, that he that yaue thilke good, to god be more worthie then God. But I am beknowe and confesse, that right dignely, that God is righte worthie above all thynges: And if so be that this good be in him by nature, but that is diuerse from him by wenyng reason, sens wee speaken of God, prince of all thynges. Faine, who so faine maie, who was he that conioyned these thynges togither. And eke at the last se well, that a thyng that is diuers fro anything, that thilk thing nis not that same thing, for whiche it is vnderstanden to been diuers. Then soloweth it well, that the ilke thyng that by his nature, is diuerse from souerain good, that thing is not souerain good But certes, it were a felonous cursednesse, to thinken that of hym, that nothyng nis more worthe. For al waie of all thinges, the name of hem ne maie not been better, then her beginner. For whiche I maie concluden by right verie reason, that thilke that is beginnyng of all thynges, thilke same thyng is souerain God in his substance. Boecius. Thou hast saied rightfully (ꝙ I). Philosophie. But we haue graunted (ꝙ she) that the soueraine good is blisfulnesse. Boecius. That is sothe (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Then (ꝙ she) wee moten needes graunten and confessen, that the ilke same soueraine good bee God. Boecius. Certes (ꝙ I) I ne maie not denie, ne withstande the reasons purposed, and I see well that it soloweth by strength of the premisses. Philosophie. Loke now (ꝙ she) if this be proued yet more firmelie thus, that there ne mowen not been to soueraine goddes that been diuers emong hem self. For certes, the goddes that been diuers emong hem self, that one is not that the other is. Then ne mowen neither of hem be parfite, so as either of hem lacheth to other, but that that nis not parfite, menne maie seen apertlie, that it nis not soueraine. The thynges then that bee souerainlie good, ne mowen by no waie be diuers. But I haue well concluded, that blisfulnesse and GOD, been the soueraine good, for whiche it mote needes been that soueraine blisfulnesse, is soueraine dignitie. Boecius. Nothyng (ꝙ I) is more sothefaste then this, ne more fermē by reason, ne a more worthie thyng then God, maie not be concluded.

Philosophie. Upon these thynges then (ꝙ she) right as these Geometriciens, when thei haue shewed their propositions, been wonte to bryngen in thynges, that thei cleapen porismes, or declarations of forelaied thynges, righte so woll I yeue thee here, as a Corallary or a mede of croune. For why, for almoch as by the gettyng of blisfulnesse, menne been maked blisfull, and blisfulnesse is dignitee. Then it is manifeste and open, that by the gettyng of dignitie, menne been maked blisful, right as by the getting of Iustice. And by the gettyng of Sapience, thei be maked wise, right so needes by the semblable reason, whē thei haue gotten diuinitie, thei be made goddes. Then is euery blisfull man a God. But certes, by nature there nis but one God, but by the participacion of the Diuinitie, there ne letteth ne desourbeth nothyng, that there ne bee many Goddes. Boecius. Ehis is (ꝙ I) a faire thyng and a precious, clepe it as thou wilte, bee it Corallarie, or Porisme, or mede of Croune, or declaryng. Philosophie. Certes (ꝙ she) nothynge nis fairer, then is the thing, that by reason should be added to these forclaied thynges. Boecius. What thyng (ꝙ I), Philosophie. So (ꝙ she) as it seemeth that blisfulnesse containeth many thynges, it were for to weten, whether that all these thinges maken or conioynen, as a mauer bodie of blisfulnesse, by the diuersitie of parties of members, or els if any of all these thinges, bee suche that it accomplisshe by hymself, the substaunce of blisfulnesse. So all these other things been referred, and brought to blisfulnes, that is to saie, as to the chief of hem. Boecius. I would (q I) that thou madest me clerely to vnderstande what thou saiest, & what thou recordest me the forsaied thinges. Philosophie. Haue I not iudged (q she) that blisfulnesse is good? Boecius. yes forsothe (q I) and that soueraine good. Philosophie. Adde then (q she) thilke good that is made blisfulnesse, to all the forsaied thynges. For thilke same blisfulnesse, that is demed to bee Soueraine suffisaunc, thilk self is soueraine power. Soueraine reuerence, soueraine clerenesse or noblesse, and soueraine delite.

What saiest thou then of al these thinges, that is to saie, suffisaunce, power, and these other thynges? Been thei then as members of blisfulnesse, or been thei referred & brought to soueraine good, right as all thinges that been brought to the chief of hem? Boecius. I vnderstōde well (q I) what thou purposest to seke: But I desire for to herken, that thou shewe it to me. Philosophie. Take now thus the discrecion of this question (q she) If all these thynges (q she) weren members to felicitie, then weren thei diuers that one from that other: and suche is the nature of parties or of members, that diuers members compoynen a bodie. Boecius. Certes (q I) it hath well been shewed here before, that all these thinges been al one thing. Philosophie. Thā been thei no members (q she). For els it should seme that blisfulnesse were conioyned all of o member alone, but that is a thyng that maie not be doen. Boecius. This thyng (q I) then, nis not doubtous, but I abide to herken the remnaunt of thy question. Philosophi. This is open and clere (q she) that al other thynges been referred and brought to good. For therfore is suffisaunce required, for it is demed to be good: and for thy is power required, for mē trowen also that it bee good. And this same thyng mowen wee thinken, and coniecten of reuerence, of noblesse, and of delite. Then is souerain good the somme and the cause, of al that ought to been desired. For why, thilke thyng that with holdeth no good in it self, ne semblaunce of good, it ne maie not well in no maner be delired ne required. And the cōtrary: for though that thynges by her nature, ne been not good, algates if men wenē that thei been good, yet been thei desired, as though thei were verely good. And therefore it is said that men ought to wene by right, that bountie bee the soueraine fine, and the cause of all the things that been to requiren. But certes, thilke that is cause for whiche men requiren any thyng, it semeth that thilke same thynge bee moste desired, as thus: if ỳ a wight would riden for cause of heale, he ne desireth not so moche the mouyng to riden, as the effecte of his heale. Now then sens that al thinges den required, for the grace of good, thei ne been not desired of all folke, more then thesame good. But we haue graunted that blisfulnes is that same thyng, for whiche that all these other thynges been desired. Then is it thus, that certes onely blisfulnesse, is required and desired. By whiche thing it sheweth clerelie, that of good and blisfulnes, is all one and the same substaunce. Boeci. I se not (q I) wherefore that men might discorden in this. Philosophie. And wee haue shewed, that God and verie blesfulnesse is all one thyng. Boecius. That is sothe (q I). Philosophie. Then mow wee conclude likerly, that the substaunce of God, is set in thilke same good, and in nom other place.

This alone is the open refute to wrecches, that is to sain, that ye that be combred and deceiued, with worldly affeccions, cometh now to this soueraine good, that is God, that is refute to hem that willen comen to hym. Assentior (inquam) cuncta enim firmissimis nexarationibus constant. Tum illa, quanti, inquit, tu estimabis, si bonum ipsum, quid sit, agnoueris, &c.

BOecius. I assent me (ꝙ I) for al thynges been stronglie boundē with right ferme reasons. Philosophie. How moch wilt thou praisen it (ꝙ she) if that thou knowe what the ilke good is? Boecius. I woll praise it (ꝙ I) by price without ende, if it shal betide me to knowe also together God that is good. Philosophie. Certes (ꝙ she) that shall I doe thee by very reason, if that tho thinges, that I haue concluded a litle here before, dwellen onely in her graunting. Boecius. Thei dwellen graunted to the (ꝙ I) that is to sain, as who saith, I graunte al thy forsaied conclusions. Philosophie. I haue shewed thee (ꝙ she) that the things, that been required of many folke, ne been not very goodes ne perfite. For thei been diuers, that ben from that other. And so as eche of hem is desyryng to other, thei ne haue no power to bring a good, that is full & absolute. But then shal been thei very good, whē thei been gadered togider all into one forme, & into one working: so that thilke thing ỳ is sufficiaunt, thilke same is power, and reuerence, nobilesse, and mirth. And forsothe, but if all these thinges bee all one same thinge, thei ne haue not thereby that thei, mowe be put in the nombre of thynges, that ought to be required and desired. Boecius. It is shewen (ꝙ I) ne thereof ne is there no manne doubten. Philosophie. The thinges then (ꝙ she) that ne been no goodes, when thei been diuers, and when thei be gadered to bee all one thynge, then been thei goodes, ne cometh it not then, by the getting of vnitie, that thei bee maked goodes? Boecius. So semeth it (ꝙ I). Philosophie. But all thyng that is good (ꝙ she) graūtest thou that it be good, by the participacion of good or no? Boecius. I graunte it (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Then must thou graunten (ꝙ she) by semblable reason, that one and good bee one same thyng. For of thinges, of whiche the effecte is not naturelly diuers, nedes her substance must bee one same thyng. Boecius. I ne maie not denie it (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Hast thou not knowen well (ꝙ she) that all thynge that is, hath so long his dwelling and his substance: as long as it is one, but when it forletteth to been one, it must needes dien, and corrumpen togither. Boecius. In whiche maner (ꝙ I)? Philosophie. Right as in beastes (ꝙ she) whē the soule and the bodie been conteined in one and dwellyng together, it is cleaped a beaste: and when her vnitie is destroyed, by thy discreuerance of that one from that other, then saiest thou well, that it is a dedde thyng, and it is no longer no beast.

And the bodie of a wight, while it dwelleth in one forme, by connunccion of membres, it is well seen, that it is a figure of mankinde: And if the parties of the bodie, bee deuided and discouered, that one from that other, that thei distroy the vnitie, the bodie forletteth to bee, that it was before. And who so would renne in the same maner by al thinges, he should seen that without doubte, euery thynge is in his substaunce, as longe as it is one. And when it forleteth to bee one, it dieth and perisheth.

Bo. When I consider (ꝙ I) many thinges, I see none other. Philosophie. Is there any thyng (ꝙ she) that in as moche as it liueth naturellie, that forletteth the talente, or appetite of his beeyng, and desireth to come to death and to corruption? Boeci. If I consider (ꝙ I) the beastes that haue any maner nature of willyng, and of nillyng, I ne finde no beaste, but if it bee constrained, fro without forthe, that forsaketh or diuerteth the intencion to liuen and to duren, or that will his thākes hasten hym to dien.

For euery beaste trauaileth hym to defende and keepe the saluacion of his life, and eschaweth death and destruccion. But certes I doubt me of herbes and trees, that ne haue no feelyng soules, ne no natureil wooldynges, seruynge to appetites, as beastes haue: whether thei haue appetite to dwellen, and to duren.

Philosophie. Certes (ꝙ she) thereof dare thee not doubte. Now looke vpon the herbes and Trees, for thei weren sette in sothe places, as been conuenable to hem: in whiche places thei mowe not dien ne dyen, as longe as her nature maie defende hem. For some of hem weren in fieldes, and some weren in Mountaignes, and other were in Mareis, & other cleauen on roches, and some weren pleuteous in londes. And if any wighte enforce hym to beare hem into other places, thei weren die. For nature yeueth to euery thynge, that is conuenience to hym, and trauaileth that thei ne die, as long as thei haue power, to dwellen and to liuen. What wilt thou saine of this, that thei drawen all her nourishynges by her rootes, righte as thei hadden her mouthes iplounged within the yerthes, and sweaden by her mareis, her woode her barke? And what wilte thou saine of this, that the like thyng that is right soft, as the Marie is, that is alwaie hidde in the seate all within, and that is defended from without, by the stedfastnesse of woode, and that the vttereste Barkes, is put ayenst the distemperaunce of the heauen, as a defendour, mightie to sufferen harme? And thus certes maiest thou wel seen, howe greate is the diligence of nature: for all thinges renouelen and publishen hem with seede imultiplied.

Ne there nis no manne, that ne wote well, that thei ne been right as a foundement, and edifice, for to duren not onelie for a tyme, but right as for to dure perdurablie by generacion. And the thynges ehe, that men wenen ne haue no soules, ne desire thei not by semblable reason, to kepe that is his, that is to saine that is according to her nature, in conseruacion of her beyng and enduryng? For wherefore els beareth lightnes the flambes vp, and the weight prescleth the yearth adoun, but for as moche as thilke places, and thilke mouinges, be conenable to euerichc of hem. And for sothe euery thyng kepeth thilke, that is accordynge and proper to hym, righte as thynges that been contrarious, and enemies corrumpen hem. And yet the hard thyngs (as stones) cleauen and holde her parties togither, right fast and hard, and defenden hem in withstanding, that thei ne departen lightly, and yeuen place to hem, that breake or deuiden hem: but natheleste, thei retourne ayen sone into the same thinges, fro whens thei be araced. But fire fleeth and refuseth all deuision. Ne I ne treate not now here, of wilfull mouynges of the soule that is knowing, but of naturel entencion of thinges, as thus: right as we swalowen the meate that wee receiuen, and ne thinke not on it, and as we drawe our breath in slepyng, that we wete not while we slepen For certes in the beastes, the loue of her liuinges, ne of her beynges, ne cometh not of the wilnynges of the soule, but of the beginnynges of nature. For certes, through constraining causes, will desireth and embraceth full oft times the death, that nature dredeth, that is to saine, as thus: That a man maie be constrained, so by some cause, that his wille desireth, & taketh the death, whiche that nature hateth and dreadeth full sore. And sometyme we seen the contrary, as thus: that the wil of a wight disturbeth & constreineth that, that nature alwaie desireth and requireth, that is to saie, the werkes of generacion, by the whiche generacion onely dwelleth, and is sustained the long durabilitie of mortall thynges, as thus. This charitie & this loue, that euery thyng hath to hymself, ne commeth not of the mouing of the soule, but of the entencion of nature. For the purueiaunce of God hath yeue to thinges, that been create of him this, that is a full greate cause to liuen and to duren, for which thei desiren naturelly her life, as long as euer thei mowen: for which thou maiest not dreden by no maner, that all thinges that been any where, that thei ne requiren naturelly, the ferme stablenesse of perdurable dwellyng, and eke the eschewyng of destruccion.

Boecius. I confesse (q I) that I se wel now, and certainly withouten doubt, the thynges that a while ago, semeden vncertaine to me.

Philos. But (q she) thilke thing that desireth to bee & dwell pardurablie, he desireth to bem one: for if that one were destroyed, certes, being should there none dwellen to no wight

Boecius. That is sothe (q I).

Philosophie. Then (q she) desiren all thyngs one, Boecius.

I assente (q I) Philosophie. And I haue shewed (q she) that ilke same one is, thilke that is good.

Boecius. Ye forsothe (q I).

Philosophie. All thynges then (q she) requiren good. and thilke maist thou discriuen thus: good is thilke thyng, that euery wight desireth.

Boecius. There ne maie be thought no more verie thyng (q I) for either all thynges be referred and brought to nought, and flotten without gouernour dispoiled of one, as of her proper hed, or els if there be any thyng, to which that all thinges tenden & hien to, that thyng must be the souerain good of all goodes.

Philosophie. Then saied she thus: O my nourice (q she) I haue great gladnes of thee, for thou hast fired in thy harte, the middle sothfastnesse, that is to saine the pyche, but this thyng hath be discouered to thee, in that thou sayest, that thou wistest not a litle here beforne.

Boec. what is that (q I).

Philosophie. That thou wistest not (q she) whiche was the ende of thynges, and certes, that is the thyng that euery wighte desireth. And for as moche as we haue gathered and comprehended, that good is thilke thynge, that is desired of all, then mote we nedes confesse, that good is the fine of all thynges.

And let him teachen his courage, that he hath enclosed, and hidde in his treasours, all that he hath compassed or sought fro without: and then thilke thing, that the blacke cloudes of errour, whilome had couered, shall light more clerely thā phebus hymself ne shineth. And let hym ofte sones examine an rollen his thoughes, by good deliberacion, or that he deme. And let hym treachen his soule, that it hath by naturell principles, kindliche thidde within it self, all the trouthe, the which he imagineth to been in thynges without: and then all the darkenesse of his miskno wyng, shall seme more euidentlie to the sight of his vnderstandyng, then the Sonne ne semeth to the sight without forthe. For certes, the body lyngyng the weight of forgetyng, ne hath not chased out of your thought, all the clerenesse of your knowyng, for certainly, the sede of sothe, holdeth and cleaueth within your corage, and it is awaked and excited by the windes, and by the blastes of doctrine.

For wherefore els demen ye of your owne will the rightes, when ye bee asked, but if so were that the nourishyng of reason, ne liued plunged in the depe of your harte, that is to saine, how should men demen, the sothe of any thyng that were asked, and if there nere a rote of sothfastnesse, that were plunged & hid in naturell principles, the whiche sothfastnesse liued within the depenesse of ꝑ thought, And if so bee, that the muse and the doctrine of Plato singeth sothe, all that euery wighte learneth, he ne dooeth nothyng els then, but recordeth, as menne recorden thynges, that been forgeten.

Tum ego, Platoni (inquam) vel ementer assentior. Nam meliorum iam secundo commemoras. Primum quod memoriam corporea contagione, &c.

THen saied I thus. I accord me greatlie to Plato, for thou recordest and remēbrest me these thynges, yet the seconde tyme, that is to saie, first when I left my memorie, by the contrarious coniunccion of the bodie with the soule: and eftsones afterward, when I lost it confounded, by thy charge, and by the burden of my sorowe, and then saied she thus. If thou looke (ꝙ she) first the thynges that thou haste graunted, it ne shall not been right ferre, that that thou ne shalt remembren the ilke thing, that thou saidest that thou nistest not. Boecius. What thyng (ꝙ I). Philosophie. By whiche the gouernement (ꝙ she) that this worlde is gouerned. Boecius. I remember it well ꝙ I) & I confesse well, that I ne wist it naught. But all be it so, that I see now from a farre, what thou purposest, algates I desire yet to harken it of the more plainly. Philoso. Thou ne wēdest not ꝙ she a little here before, that menne should doubte, that this worlde is gouerned by God. Boecius. Certes (ꝙ I) ne yet, ne doubte I it not, ne I nill neuer wene that it were to dout, as who saieth, but I wot wel that God gouerneth this worlde. And I shall answerē the by what reasons, I am brought to this. This worlde (ꝙ I) of so many diuers & contrarious parties, ne might neuer haue been assembled in o forme, but if there were one, that conioyned so many diuers thinges. And the same diuersitie of her natures, that so discorden, that one fro that other must departen, and vnioynen the thynges, that been conioyned, if there ne were one that conteined, that he hath conioyned and bound. Ne the certain order of nature, ne should not bring forthe so ordeine mouynges, by places, by tymes, by dooynges, by spaces, by qualities, if there ne were one, that wer aie stedfast dwellyng, that ordained and disposed, these diuersities of mouynges. And thilke thyng, what so euer it bee, by whiche that all thynges bee imaked and ladde, I clepe hym God, that is a worde that is vsed to al folkes. Philosophie. Then saied she: Sithe thou feelest thus these thynges, I trowe that I haue little more to doen,

doen, that thou mightie of welfulnesse, hole and sounde, ne se ekfones thy countrie. But lette vs looken these thynges, that we haue purposed here beforne. Haue I not nombred and saied (ꝙ she) that sufficiaunce is in blisfulnesse. And we haue accorded, that God is the ilke same blisfulnesse. Boecius. Yes forsothe (ꝙ I). Philosophie. And that to gouern this worlde (ꝙ she) ne shall he neuer haue neede, of no helpe fro without. For els if he had neede of any help, he ne should not haue no full sufficiaunce. Boecius. Yes thus it mote nedes be (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Then ordeined he by him self alone all thynges (ꝙ she). Boecius. That maie not be denied (ꝙ I). Philosophie. And I haue shewed that God is the same good. Boecius. It remembreth me well (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Then ordeineth he al thinges by thilke good (ꝙ she) sith he which we han accorded to bee good, gouerneth all thynges by hymself. And he is a key and a steire, by whiche the edifice of this worlde is kept stable, and without corrumpyng. Boeci. I accord me greatly (ꝙ I). And I haue apperceiued alitle here beforne, that thou wouldest saie thus. All were it so, that it wer by a thinne suspeccion. Philosophie. I trowe well (ꝙ she). For as I trow thou leadest now more ententifly thine ye, to loken ỹ very goodes. But natheles, the thing that I shall tell thee, yet ne sheweth not lasse to token. Boecius. What is that (ꝙ I). Philosophie. So as menne trowe (ꝙ she) and that rightfully, that God gouerneth all thynges, by the key of his goodnes. And all these same thyngs that I haue taught thee, hasten hem by naturel contencion, to come to good, there maie no mã douted, that thei ne been gouerned voluntarelie. And that thei ne conuerten of her owne good wille, to her ordeinour. As that thei been accordyng, & enclinyng to her gouernor, and to her lyng. Boecius. It mote nedes be so (ꝙ I) for the realme ne should not seme blisfull, if there were a poke of misdrawynges in diuers partes, ne the sauyng of obedient thynges, ne should not be then. Philosophie. Is there nothing (ꝙ she) that kepeth his nature, that enforceth hym to gon ayenst God? Boecius. No (ꝙ I). Philosophie. And if that any thynge enforced hym to withstande God, might it auailen at last ayen hym, that wee haue graunted to bee almightie, by the right of blisfulnesse? Boecius. Certes (ꝙ I) all vtterlie it ne might not auaile hym. Philosophie. Then is there nothyng (ꝙ she) that either maie, or will withstande to his Souereine God. Boecius. I trowe not (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Then (ꝙ she) is thilke the soueraine GOD, that all thynges gouerneth strongly, and ordeineth hem softelye. Boecius. Then saied I thus, I delite me (ꝙ I) not onelie in thendes, or in the somme of the reasons, that thou hast concluded and proued, but thilke wordes that thou vsest, delite me moche more so that at laste fooles, that sometyme renden great thinges, oughten been ashamed of hem self, that is to sain, that we fooles that reprehenden wickedly ỹ thinges, that touchen godes gouernaunce, we oughten been ashamed of our self. As I, that saied that God refuseth onely the werkes of men, and ne entermeteth not of it. Philosophie. Thou hast well heard (ꝙ she) the fables of the Poetes, how the Gyauntes assaileden heauen, with the Goddes: but forsoth the debonaire force of God, disposed hem as it was worthie, that is to sain, distroied the Gyauntes as it was worthie. But wilte thou that wee reioynen togither thilke same reasons? For perauenture of soche coniunccions, maie sterten vp some faire sparke of sothe. Boecius. Doe (ꝙ I) as thee list. Philosophie. Wenest thou (ꝙ she) that God ne be almightie? Boecius. No man is in doubt of it certes (ꝙ I). Philosophie. No wight ne doubteth it, if he bee in his minde (ꝙ she). But he that is almightie, there nis nothyng that he ne maie. Boecius. That is sothe (ꝙ I). Philosophie. Maie God doe euill (ꝙ she)? Boe. Nai forsothe (ꝙ I). Phi. Than is euill nothyng (ꝙ she) sith that he maie dooen none euill, that maie doen al thinges. Bo. Scornest thou me (ꝙ I) or els plaiest thou, or disceiuest thou me that hast so wonnen with thy reasons, the hous of Dedalus so enterlasing, that it is vnable to bee vnlaced, that thou otherwhile entrest there thou issuest, and otherwhile issuest there thou entrest. Ne soldest thou not togither, by replicacion of wordes, a maner wonderfull circle, or enuironing of the simplicite diuine? For certes, a little here beforn, when thou began at blisfulnesse, thou saidest that it is a souerain good, and that God is the blisfulnesse, for whiche thou yaue me as a couenable yefte, that is to sain, that no wight nis blisfull, but if he be God also therewith. And saidest eke, that the forme of good is, the substaunce of God and of blisfulnesse. And saidest that ỹ ilke one is thilke same good, that is required and desired of al the kinde of thinges. And thou prouedest in disputing, that GOD gouerneth al the thinges of the world, by the gouer-

gouernaunce of bountie, and saidest that all thinges wold obein to hym, and saydest that the nature of yuell is nothinge. And these thinges thewdest thou not with no reasons taken fro without, but by proues in cercles and homlich knowing. The whiche proues dawen to hem selfe her faith and her accorde euericke of hem of other. Phi. Than said she thus: I ne scorne not, ne plaie, ne disceiue the but I haue shewed the thing that is greatest ouer all thinges, by the yelt of god, that we whilom praiden. For this is the forme of diuine substaunce, that is soothe, that it ne slydeth not in to vttereste forraine thinges, ne reuweth not no straunge thinges, in him. But right as Permenides saied in Greke, of thilke diuine substaunce: He saied thus, that thilke diuine substaunce, tourneth the world and the mouable cercle of thynges, whyle the ilke diuine substaunce kepeth it self without mowynges, that is to sayne, that he moueth neuer mo, and yet it moueth al other thiges. But natheless, if I haue fyxed reason that he not taken fro without the compasse of the thing, of the whiche we treaten, but reasons that been bestowed within cõpasse: there nis not why thou shouldest meruailen, sith thou hast lerned by the sentence of Plato, that nedes the wordes mote been colins to the thinges, of whiche they speken.

Fœlix qui potuit grauis, &c.

BLissed is that man that may sene the clere wel of good: Blisfull is he that may vnbinden him from the boundes of heuy yearthe. The Poete of Thrace Orpheus, that whylome had right great sorowe, for the death of his wife. After that he had maked and constrained by his wepely songes, the woodes mouable to renne, and had maked the ryuers to stonden still, and had maked the Hartes and Hyndes to joynen dredlesse her sydes to, cruell Lions, to berken his songe, and had maked that the hare was not agast of the houde, which was pleased by song: So whan the moste ardaund loue of hys wife, brende the entrales of his breste, ne the songes that hadde ouercomen all thynges, ne myghten not aswagen her lorde Orpheus. He plained him of the heuen goddes, whiche that were cruell to hym, he wente him to the houses of the hell: And he tempered his blandishinge songes, by resowning of stringes, and speaketh and songe in wepinge, all that euer he had receiued and laued out the noble welles of his mother Caliope the goddesse. And he sang with as moch as he might of wepinge and with as moche as loue, that doubled his sorow might peuen him and teache him, and commoued the hell, and required and besoughte by swete prayer the lordes of soules in hell of releasinge, that is to saye, to yelden him his wife. Cerberus the porter of hell, with his thre heedes was caught and al abasshed of the newe songe. And the thre goddesses. Furyes and wengeresses of felonies, that tourmenten and agasten the soules, by anoy woren sorowful and sory and teares wepten for pitee. Tho was not the heede of Jrion tourmented, by the ouerthrowinge wheele. And Tantalus, that was distroyed by the woodnesse of lõg thrust, dispised the floodes to drincke. The foule that hight Vultour, that eateth the stomake or the giserne of Tytius is so fulfylled of his songe, that it nill eaten ne tyren no more. At the last the lorde and iudge of soules was moued to misericordies, and cried: we been ouercomen (q he) yeue we to Orpheus his wife to beare hym companie, he hath well ybought her by his songes and his ditees: but we will putten a lawe in thys, and couenant in the yefte, that is to saine, that till he bee out of hel if he loke behinde him, that his wife shall come agayne vnto vs. But what is he that maye yeue a lawe to louers: loue is a greater lawe and stronger to him self than any lawe that men maye yeuen. Alas, when Orpheus and his wife were almoste at the termes of the night, that is to saine, at the laste boundes of hel, Orpheus loked backwarde on Euridice his wife, and loste her, and was dedde. This fable apertaineth to you all, who so euer desireth or seketh to lede his thought in to the souerain daie, ꝑ is to saye, to clerenesse of souerain good. For who so euer be so ouercomen, that he fire his eyen in to the pitte of hell, that is to saine: who so euer set his thoughtes in yearthlie thynges, all that euer he hath drawen of the noble good celestiall, he leseth it, whē he loketh to ꝑ helles, this is to saine, in to lowthiges of the erthe.

¶ Thus endeth the thirde boke of Boece, and here after followeth the fourthe.

Her

Hec cum Philosophia dignitate vultus, & uis grauitate seruata, leniter suauiterq; decinisset, Tum ego non dum penitus infitum errorisoblitus, &c.

WHā Philosophie had songen softly and delectably the forsaid thinges, keping the dignitye of her chere, & the weight of her wordes. I than that ne had al vtterlye forzeten the wepinge and the mourninge that was sette in min herte, forbrake the entencion of her that entended yet to sain some other thynges.

O (q I) thou that arte gyderesse of very light, the thinges that thou hast saide me hitherto, ben to me so clere and shewing by the deuine loking of hem, & by thy reasons, that they ne mowen ben ouercomen. And thilke thinges, that thou toldest me, all be it so that I had whilom forzetē hem, for the sorowe of the wronge that hath be done to me: yet neuertheleſſe they ne weren not vtterly vnknowen to me. But this same is namely a right great cause of my sorowe, so that as the gouernour of thinges is good, if that yuels mowen ben by any waies, or elles if that yueles passen without punishinge, the which thing only, how worthye is it to ben wōdred vpon. Thou considrest it wel thy self certainly. But yet to this thing there is yet another thynge ioyned more to be wondred vpon. For felonye is Empresse, and floureth full of richesses, & vertue nis not al onely without meedes, but it is castē downe, and ebe forzroden vnder the fete of felonous folke: and it abieth the turmentes in stede of wicked felons. Of al whiche thinges there is no wight may marualen ynough ne complainen, that soch thinges be doone in the reigne of god, that all thynges wote, and all thinges maye, and ne will not only but good thinges. Than saide she thus: Certes (q she) that were a great maruayle, & an abaschinge without ende, and well more horrible than all the monsters, if it were as thou wenest, that is to sain, that in the right ordaine house of so moch a father, and an ordainour of meine, that the vesselles that ben soule and vile, shuld ben honoured and heried and ỳ precious vesseles that shuld ben defouled and vile. But it is not so, forzit the thinges that I haue concluded a lytell here beforne, ben kept hole and vnaraced, thou shalt wel know by the auctorzyte of god, (of the whole reigne I speake) that certes the good folke be alway mightie, and shrewes ben alway outcaste and feble. Ne the vices be neuermore without pain, ne the vertues ne be not without mede. And that blisfulnes cometh alway to good folk, and infortune cometh alway to wicked folke. And thou shalt well knowen many thinges of this kinde, that shulde ceasen thy playntes, & strengthen the with stedfaste sadnesse. And for thou haste sene the forme of verie blisfulnesse by me, that haue whilom shewed it the, and thou hast knowen in whom blisfulnesse is sette: all thing treated, that I trowe be necessary, to put forthe. I shal shewen the the way, that shall bringen the ayen vnto thin house, and I shall fyre fethers in thy thought, by which it may arisen in height, so that al tribulacion ydone away thou by my giding and by my parthe, and by my fedes, shalte mowen retourne hole and sounde in to thy countrie.

Sunt enim penne volucres michi, Que celsa conscendunt poly, Quas sibi cum velox mens induit. &c.

IHan for thy swift fethers that sourmounten the height of the heuen, whā the swift thought hath clothed it in tho feathers it dispiseth the hateful erthes, and surmounteth the roundenesse of the great ayre, and it seeth the clouds behinde his backe, and passeth the heyght of the region of the fire, that enchaufeth by the swift mouinge of the firmament, tyl that he aryseth in to the houses, that bearen the sterres, and ioyneth the way with the sonne Phebus, and felawshipeth the waye of the olde colde Saturnus, & he ymaked a knight of the clere sterre, that is to saine, whan the thought is made goddes knight, by the seynge of clere trouthe to comen to the very knowledge of god. And thilke soule renneth by the cercle of sterres, in all the places there as the shinynge nyght is ypainted, that is to saine, the nyght that is cloudlesse. For on nyghtes that bee cloudlesse it semeth that the heuen were paynted wyth dyuers ymages of sterres. And whan he hath done there ynoughe, he shall forzeten the lasse heuen, and be shal presen an wenden on the backe of the swifte firmamente, and he shall be maked partite of the wurshipful light of god. There holdeth the lorde of thinges the septre of his might, and attempzeth the gouernementes of the worlde, & the shining iudge of thinges stable

table in hym selfe, gouernethe the swifte carte or waine, that is to saine, the circuler mouinge of the sonne. And if thy way ledeth the ayen, so that thou be brought thider, thā wylt thou saye, that is the countrye that thou requirest, of whiche thou ne haddest no mynde: But nowe it remembereth me well, here was I borne, here woll I fastē my degre, here woll I dwell. But if the lyketh than to loken on the derkenesses of the yearthe, that thou hast forleten, than shalt thou sene, that these felonous tyrauntes, that the wretched people dredeth nowe, shullen be exiled from thilke faire countrie.

Tum ego papē inquam, vt magna promittis,
Nec dubito, quin possis efficere, tu modo quē exitaueris, ne moreris, &c.

THan saide I thus. O wonder me that thou beheteste me so great thinges. Ne I ne doute not that thou ne mayste well perfourme that thou beheetest: But I pray the this that thou ne tarie noe, to tell me thylke thynges, that thou hast moued. Philoso. First (q she) thou muste nedes knowe, that good folke been alwaye stronge and myghtye, and the shrewes been feble and deserte, and naked of all strengthes. And of these thynges certes eueriche of hem is declared and shewed by other. For as good and yuell been two contraries, if so be that good be stedfaste, than sheweth the feeble al openly. And if thou know clerely the fairnesse of yuell, the stedfastenesse of good is knowen. But for as moche as the faithe of sylentence shall be the more ferme and habundant, I wol gone by that one waye and by that other, and I woll confirme the thynges that ben purposed now on this syde, and anone on that side. Two thinges ther ben, in whiche the effecte of al the dedes of mankind lyndeth, that is to sayne, wyll and power: and if that one of these two faileth, there nis nothing that maye bee done. For if that wil faileth, there nis no wight that vndertaketh to do that he wol not done: And yf power faille, the wyll nys but ydle, and stante for naught. And therof cometh it, that if thou se a wight that wolde getten that he may not gotten, thou mayst not doute that power ne faileth him to hauen that he wolde. B. This is open and clere (q I) ne it ne may not been beyned in no maner. Philoso. And yf thou se a wight (q she) that hath done that he would done, thou nylt not dout, that he ne hath had power to done it. Boe. No (q I) Phi. And in that that euery wight may, in that men holden hem mighty to done a thing. In so moch as a man is myghty to doone a thyng, in so moch men holde him myghty: and in that that he ne may, in that men demē him to be feble. Bo. I confesse it wel (q I) P. Remembre the (q she) that I haue gathered and shewed by the forsaid reasons, that all the entencion of the wyl of mankinde, whiche that is ladde by dyuers studies, hasteth to comen to blisfulnesse. Boecius. I remembreth me well (q I) that it hath bene shewed. Philosophie. And recordeth the naughte than (q she) that blisfulnesse is thilke same good that men requirē, so that whan blisfulnesse is required of al. Boecius. It recordeth me nat (q I). For I haue it alwaye in my memorie fyxed. Philosophie. All folke than (q she) goode and ek badde enforcen hem without difference of entencion to comen to good. Boecius. This is very consequence (q I) Philosop. And certaine is (q she) that by getting of good be men maked good. Boe. That is certaine (q I). Philosop. Than getten good men that they desiren. Boe. So it semeth (q I). Philosophie. But wicked folke (q she) if they getten the good that they desiren, they ne mowen not be wicked. Boe. So it is (q I). Philoso. Than so as that one and that other (q she) desiren the good, and the good folke getten the good, and not the wicked folke: Than it is no doute that the good folke ne be mightye, and wicked folke be feble. Boecius. Who so that euer douteth of this, he ne may not consider the nature of thinges ne the consequence of reasons. Philosop. And ouer this (q she) if that there been twoo thynges that haue one same purpose by kynde. And that one of hem pursueth and perfourmeth that same thing by naturel office, and that other ne may not done thilke office naturel, but followeth by other maner, than is couenable to nature, him that accomplisheth his purpose kindely, and yet he ne accomplisheth not hys owne purpose: whether of these two demest thou for more mighty. Boeci. If that I confesse (q I) that thou woldest say, algates I desire yet to herken it more plainly of thee. Philosop. Thou nylte not than denye (q she) that the mouement of goynge nis in men by kynde. Boecius. No forsothe (q I) Philosoph. Ne thou doutest not (q she) that thilke naturell office of goynge, ne dee the office of feete. Boecius. I ne doute it no (q I). Philosophie. Than (q she) yf that a wyght be mighty to moue and gothe vpon his fete, and another to whō thilke naturell office of fete lacheth, enforceth hym to go creppynge on his hande, whiche of these two oughte to be holden the more mighty by ryght. Boece. Knytte forthe (q I) the remenaunte. Philosophie. For no wyght ne douteth, that he that maye gon by naturell office of feete, ne be more myghtye thanne he that ne maye not. But the souerayne good (q she) that is euen lyke purposed to the good and to the badde. The good folke seken it by naturel office of vertues, and shrewes enforcen hem to getten it by dyuerse couetises of erthly thinges, whiche that nis no naturel office to gette thilke souerain good. Trowest thou that it be any other wise? Bo. Nay (q I). For the consequence is open, and the wynge of thinges that I haue graunted, that nedes good folke mote ben mighty, and shrewes moten bene feble and vnmighty. P. Thou rennest a ryght before me (q she) and this is the iudgemente, that is to saine, I iudge of right, as these leches ben wont to hopen of sicke folke, whan they apperceyuē, that nature is redressed and withstandeth to the maladye. But for I se the nowe al redy to the withstanding, I shal shew the more thilk and continuel reasons. For loke how greatly sheweth the feblenesse and infirmyte of wicked folke, that ne mowen not comen, to that her naturell entencion leadeth hem: And yet almost thylke naturel entenciō constraineth hem. And what were to demen than of shrewes, yf thilke naturel helpe had forfeten hem the whiche naturel helpe of entencion gothe alway before hem, and is so great, that vneth it may be ouercomen? Consider than how great defaute of power, and how great feblesse there is in wicked felonous folke, as who saith, the greater thing that is coueited and the desire not accomplished, of the lasse might is he that coueiteth it, and may not accomplisshe. And for thy philosophie saith thus by souerain good. Ne shrewes ne requirē not light medes ne vaine games, whiche they ne maye not folowen ne holdē, but they failen of thilke somme of the height of things, that is to saine, souerain good. Ne these wretches ne comen not to thellecte of souveraine good, the whiche they enforcen hem onely to getten by nightes and by dayes, in gettynge of which good, the strength of good folke is ful wel ysene. For right as thou mightest demen him mighty of going, that goeth on his fete till he myght comen to thylke place, fro the whiche place there ne lay no way further to be gone: right so must thou nedes demen him for right mighty, whiche that getteth and atteineth to the ende of all thynges, whyche that bene to desiren, beyonde the which ende there nis nothinge to desire. Of the whiche power of good folke, mē maye conclude, that we wicked men semen to be baraine & naked of al strenght. For why forleten they vertues and folowen vices, nis it not for that they ne knowen not the goodes? But what thinge is more feble and more caytife, than is the blindesse of ignorance? or ells they knowen wel, whichethinges they oughten folowen, but lechery and couetise ouerthroweth hem misturned. And certes so doth distemperaūce to feble men, that mowe not wraklen ayen these vices. Ne know they not wel that they forleten the good wilfully, and tournen hem wilfully to vices. And in this wise they ne forleten not only to be myghty, but they forleten all vtterly in any wyse for to deen. For they that forleten the comune fine of al thinges that den, they forleten also therwithall for to bene. And perauenture it shulde semen to some folke, that this were a meruayle to saine, that shrewes, which that conteinen the more partes of men, ne been not, ne haue no being. But natheleſſe it is so, and thus stant this thinge. For they that be shrewes, I deny not, but that thei be shrewes, but I deny simplye and plainly that they ne be not, ne haue no beinge. For right as thou mightest sayne of the caraine of a man, that it were a ded man: so graunt I wel forsothe, that vicious folke ben wicked, but I ne may not absolutely & simply graūt that they been. For thilke thing that with holdeth ordre and kepeth nature, thilke thinge is and hath beinge. But what thynge faileth that, that is to saye, he that forleteth naturel ordre, he forleteth thilk beinge that is set in his nature? But thou wolt saine, the shrewes mowen. Certes that ne denie I not: but certes her power ne dwelleth not of strength, but of feblesse, for they mowen doone wickednesse, the whiche they ne might not, if they mighten dwellen in the forme, and in the doynge of good people. And thilke power sheweth evidently, that they mowen right naught. For so as I haue ordred and proued a litel here before, that yuel is not, and so as shrewes may onely but shrewednes. This cōclusion is al clere, that shrewes ne mowen right naught, ne haue no power. And for as moche as thuo vnderstonden whiche is the strenght of this power, I haue definished a lytel here beforne, that no thing is so mighty as soueraine good. B. That is sothe (q I). Phil. And thilke same soueraine good maye done none yuel. Boecius. Certes no (q I) Philosop. Is there any wight than (q he) that weneth that men mowen done al thinges. Boecius. No man (q I) but if he be out of his wit. P. But certes shrewes mowen don yuels (q she. Boecius. Ye wolde god (q I) that they ne mighten done none. Phil. Than (q he) so as he that is mightie to done onelye good thinges, he maie done all thynges, and they that ben mighty to done yuell thinges, ne mowen not all thynges. Than is it open thinge and manifeste, that they that mowen don yuel bē of lasse power. And yet the proue this conclusion there helpeth me this, that I haue shewed here beforne, that al power is to be nōbred amonge thinges that men oughtē require. And I haue shewed that all thinges that oughten ben desired be referred to God, right as to a maner height of her nature: but for to mowen done yuell and felonie, ne may not ben referred to god. Than is not yuell of the nombre of thynges, that oughten to ben desired and required. Than is it open and clere that the power ne the mouynge of shrewes nis no power. And of all these thinges it deweth wel that the good folk ben certainly mighty, and the shrewes doutlesse vnmighty. And it is clere and open that thilke sentence of Plato is very and sothe, that saithe, that only wisemen may don that they desiren, & shrewes mowen haunten that hem liketh, but that they desirē, that is to saine, to come to soueraine good, they ne haue no power to accomplisshe that. For shrewes done what hem lyst, whan by tho thinges in which they deliten, they wenen to attaine to thilke good that they desyren, but they ne getten ne attaine not therto, for vices ne comen not to blisfulnesse.

Quos vides sedere celsos, Solii culmine reges, Purpura claros nitente, &c.

Who so that ꝑ couerture, of her vaine aparayles, myght stripen of these proude kynges that thou seest sitten an high in her chaires, glittering in shininge purpure, enuironned with sowefull armures, manassynge with cruell mouth, blowinge by woodnesse of herte, he wolde sene that thilke lordes, bearen within her corages full sterate chaines: for lechery tourmēteth hem on that one side, with gredy benimes and troubladle ire, that araiseth in hem the flode of troublinges, tourmenteth on that other side, her thought or sorowhaie hem wery and ycaught, or sliding and disceiuing hope tourmenteth hem. And therefore sithe thou seest one heed, that is to saine, one tiraūte bearen so manye tirannyes, than ne doth thilke tyraunt, not that he delyreth sythe he is casse downe wyth so manye wycked lordes, that is to saine, so many vices that haue so wickedly lordships ouer him.

Vides ne igitur quando in cœno probra quo perspicuum est nunquam bonis pre-mia, &c.

Seest thou not than, in howe great filthe these shrewes ben ywrapped, and with whiche clerenesse these good folke shinen. In this sweth it well that to good folke ne lacketh neuer mo her medes, ne shrewes lacken never more tourmentes. For of al thinges that be done, thilke thinge for whiche any thinge is done, it semeth as by right, that thilke thing be the mede of that, as thus: If a mā renneth in the stadye or in the forlonge for the crown, than lieth the mede in the crowne for which he renneth. And I haue shewed that blisfulnesse is thilke same good, for whiche that all thynges ben done. Than is thilke same good purposed to the werkes of mankinde, right as a commune mede, whiche mede ne maye not be disceuered from good folke: For no wight as by right, from thenkforth that him lacketh goodnesse, ne shall be cleped good for which thing folke of good maners, her medes ne forsaken hem neuer mo. For albeit so that shrewes waren as wode as hem liste against good folke, yet neuertheless the crowne of wise men, ne shall not fallen ne faden fro soraine shewdnesse, ne benimmen not fro the courage of good people her propre honour. But yf ane wight reioysed him of goodnesse, that he had taken fro without, as who saith, if a man had his goodnesse of any other man than of him selfe: certes he that yaue hym thylke goodnesse, or elles some other wyght might bynome it him. But for as moche as to euery wight his propre bounte yeueth him his mede, than at erste shal he fallen of mede, whā he forleteth to be good. And at the laste, so as all medes ben required, for men wenen that they be good, who is he that nold deme, that he that is ryghte mightye of good, were part felle of mede: And of what mede shall he be reguerdoned. Certes of ryght fayre mede and right great, abouen all medes. Remembre the of thilke noble corallarie that I paue the a lytel here beforne, and gather it togither in this maner. So as god him selfe is blisfulnesse, than is it clere and certain, that al good people ben maked blisful, for they bē good and thilke people that ben blisful, it accordeth and is conuenable to be goddes. Thā is the mede of people soch, that no day ne shal empairen it, ne no wickednesse shall drinken it, ne power of no wight ne shal not amenuse it, that is to saine, that ben maked goddes.

And sithe it is thus, that good men ne failen neuer more of her mede, certes no mā ne may doute of the vndepartable paine of shrewes, that is to saine, that the paine of shrewes departeth not from hem selfe neuer mo. For so as good and puel, and paine and medes be cōtrarie, it mote nedes be, that ryght as we se betiden in guerdone of good, that also mote the paine of the puel answer by the contrary porthes to shrewes. Nowe than so as bountie and prowesse ben mede to good folke, also is shrewdnesse it selfe tourmente to shrewes. Than who so euer is entetched and defouled with paine, he ne doubteth not, that he is entethed and defouled with puel. Yf shrewes than wollen praisen hem selfe, may it semen to hem that they ben wyth outen partie of tourment, sithe they ben soch that the vttrest wickednesse, that is to saye, wicked thewes, whiche is the vttrest & worst kinde of shrewdnesse, nede fouleth ne entecheth not hē onely, but enfeebleth and enuenimeth greatly. And also loke on shrewes, that ben the contrarie partie of good men, how we great paine felowshipeth and fouleth hem: for thou hast lerned a litel here beforne, that all thing that is and hath beeinge, is one, and thilke same one is good: than is this the consequence, that it semeth well, that al thing that is and hath beynge, is good, that is to saine, as who saithe that beinge, vnite and goodnesse is al one.

And in this maner it foloweth than, that all thinge that faileth to be good, it stinteth for to be and for to haue any maner being: wherfore it is that shrewes stinten for to be that they weren. But thilke other forme of mankind, that is to saine, the fourme of the bodye without, sheweth ỹ these shrewes weren whilom men, wherfore whan they bene peruerted and tourned in to malice, certes than they haue forlorne the nature of mankinde: But so as onelie bountie and prowesse maye enhaunsen euerie man, ouer men: than mote it nedes be that shrewes which that shrewdnesse hath caste out of the condicion of mankinde, bene put vnder the merite and deserte of men. Than betideth it, that if thou seeste a wight whiche that is transfourmed in to vices, thou maiest not wene that he bee a man For if he be ardaunte in auarice, and that he be a rauenour by violence of forain richesse, thou shalte saine that he is lyke a wolfe. And if he be felonous and without reste, and exercice his tonge to chidinges, thou shalte lyken him to the hound. And if he be a priue awaytour hydde, and reioyseth him to ranshe by wiles, thou shalte saine hym lyke to the fore whelpes. And if he bee distempred & quaked for ire, men shall wen n that he beareth the corage of a lion. And if he be dredeful and sienge and dredeth thinges, whiche that ne oughten not to be dredde, men shal holde him lyke to the hart. And if he be slowe and astonyed and lache, men shall holde him lyke to an asse. And yf he be lyghte and vnstedfaste of corage, and chaungeth aye his studies, men shal holde him like to the birdes. And yf he bee plounged in foule and vnclene luxuries, he is withholden in the foule delyces of the foule sowe, than foloweth it, that he that forlettethe bounte and prowesse, he forletteth to be a man, sithe he ne maye not passen in the condicion of god, he is turned in to a beest.

Vela Naricii ducis, & vagas pelago rates, Eurus appulit insulæ, pulcra qua residens dea, Solis edita semine, &c.

EVrus the wind, ariued the sailes of Vlires duke of the countre of Narice, and his wandringe shyppes by the see, in to the yle there as Circes the faire goddesse doughter of the sunne dwelleth, that medleth to her newe gestes, drinkes that been touched and maked with enchauntementes. And after that hir hande mighty ouer the herbes, had chaunged hir gestes in to diuers maners, that one of hem is couered his face with forme of a Boor, that other is chaunged in to a Lion, of the countre of Marmorike, and his nailes and his tethe weren. That other of hem is newlyche chaunged in to a wolfe, and howlyth whan he he wolde wepe, that other goth debonairly in the house as a Tygre of Inde. But al be it so that the godheed of Mercury, that is cleped that birde of Archadie, hath had mercy of the pale vlyxes, byseged wyth dyuerse yuelles, and hath vnbounden hym fro the pestilence of hys hostelle, algathes the rowers and the mariners hadden by this ydrawen in to hyr mouthes, and dronken the wicked drinkes. They that weren worē swine, hadden by this ychaunged hyr meate of bread, for to eaten acorne of Okes. None hir limmes ne dwelleth with hem hoole, but they haue lost the voyce and the body, onely hir thought dwellethe with hem stable, that wepeth and bywaileth the monstruous chaungynge that they suffren. O ouer light hande, as who saith, feble and lighty is the hand of Circes the enchaūtresse, that chaungeth the bodies of folke in to beestes, to regarde and to comparyson of mutacion, that is maked by vices, ne the herbes of Circes ne be not myghty, for all be it so that they may not chaungen the limmes of the body, algate yet they may not chaūge the hertes, for wythyn is yhyd the strength and the vigoure of mē in the secretour of hir hertes, that is to saine, the strēgth of reason, but thilke venims of vices, to drawen a man to hem more mightely than the venime of Cyrces, for vices been so cruell that they persen and thorowe passen the courage within, and thoughe they ne anoye not the body, yet vices wooden to destroyen men by wounde of thought.

Tu ego fateor, inquam, nec iniuria dici video vitiosos, tam & si humani corporis speciam seruent. &c.

Than saide I thus: I confesse and am aknowe it (q I) ne I ne se not that men may say, as by right, that shrewes ben chaunged in to beestes, by the qualite of her soules, all be it so that they kepen yet the forme of the bodye of mankynde: but I wolde not of shrewes, of whiche the thought cruel and woode, woodeth alwaye to the destructiō of good men, that it wer lesul to hem to done that.

Certes (q she) ne it is not lesull to hem, as I shall well shewe the incouenable place: but natheleslle if so were that thilke, that men deme bene lesul to shrewes, were bynommed hem, so that they ne might not anoyen or don harme to good men, certes a great partie of the paine to shrewes shulde bene alleged and releued. For all be it so that it ne seme credible thyng, peraventure to some folke, that it mote nedes be that the shrewes ben more wretches and sely, whā they maye full done and parfourme that they couepten, than yt they might not accomplisshe that they couepten. For it so be ꝑ it be wretchednesse to wilnen to done yuel, than is it more wretchednesse to mowen done yuell, without whiche mowyng, the wretched wyl shulde languisshe without effecte. Than in the euery of these thinges hath his wretchydnesse, that is to saine, wil to done yuel, and mowinge to done yuel, it mote nedes be that they shrewes be constrayned by her vnselynesses, that wolen and mowen, and parformen felonies & shrewednesses Boecius. I accorde me (q I) but I desyre greatly, that shrewes losten soone thylke vnselynesse, that is to sayne, that shrewes weren dispoiled of mowynge to done yuell.

Philosophi. So shullen they (q she) soner peraventure than thou woldest, or soner trā they hem selfe wene: for there nys nothinge so late in so shorte bondes of this life, that is lōg to abide, namely to a courage immortell. Of whiche shrewes the great hope & the hye cōpassinges of shrewednesse, is oft destroied by a sodein ende or they be war. And that thing establisheth to shrewes, ꝑ ende of her shrewdnes, for yt that shrewdnes maketh wretches. than must he nedes be most wretch, ꝑ longest is a shrewe, the whiche wicked shrewes wold I demin aldermoste caitifes and vnsely, yt her shrewdnes ne wer finisshed at leest waye by vttereste death, for yt I haue concluded forby of the vnselinesse of shrewdnes, than shewetiy it plaily, that thilke wretchednes, is without ende, the which is certaine to be pardurable. Bo. Certes (q I) this conclusion is harde and wōderful to graunte. But I knowe well that it accordeth mothe to thynges that I haue graunted here beforne. Ph. Thou hast (q she) right estimacion of this. But who so euer wene that it be a harde thing, to accorde him to a conclusion, it is right that he shewe that some of the premisses ben falle, or els he mote shewe that the collacion of propolicions nis not spedeful to a necessary conclusion. And yt it ne be not so, but that the premisses ben igraūted, there nis not why he shulde blame ꝑ argumēt. For this thing ꝑ I shal tel the nowne shall not seme lasse wonderfull, but of the thinges that bene taken. Also it is necessary.

as who saith, it foloweth of that which that is purposed before. Boecius. What is that (q I) Philosophie. Certes (q she) that is, that these wicked shrewes bee more blisfull, or els lasse wretches that abien the tourmentes, that they haue deserued, than if no payne of iustice ne chastised hem. Ne this ne say I not nowe, for that any man myght thynke that the maners of shrewes bene corriged and chastised by vengeaunce, & that they be brought to the right way by the drede of tourmente, ne for that they yeuen to other folkes ensample to flyen fro vices.

But I vnderstand yet in another maner, that shrewes ben more vnsely whan they ne be not punished, all be it so that there ne be had no reason or lawe of correccion, ne none ensample of lookynge. Boecius. And what maner shall that ben (q I) other than hath be tolde here before? Philosophie. Haue we not graunted than (q she) that good folke ben blysfull, and shrewes been wretches? Boeci. yes (q I) Philosophie. Than (q she) if that anye good wer added to the wretchednesse of any wight nys he not more welful, than he that ne hath nomedling of good in his solitary wretchednes? Boecius. So semith it (q I). Philosop. And what sayest thou than (q she) of thilke wretche that lacketh all goodes, so that no good nis medled in his wretchednesse, and yet ouer all hys wickednesse, for whiche he is a wretche that there be yet another yuell anexed and knit to him, shal not men demen him more vnsely, than thilke wretche, of whiche the vnselines is releued by the participacion of some good? Boecius. Why should he not (q I) Philosophie. Than certes (q she) han shrewes whan thei been punished somewhat of good annered to hir shrewdenesse, that is to saine, the same pain that they suffren, which that is good, by the reason of Justice. And whan thilke same shrewes escapen without tourment, than haue they somwhat more of yuell, yet ouer the wickednesse that they han doen, that is to sain, defaut of paines, which defaute of paine thou hast graunted is yuel, for the deserte of felony. Boecius. I ne may not denie it (q I). Philosopie. Moche more than (q she) been shrewes vnsely whan they bene wronfully deliuered fro paine, than whan they been punished by rightefull vengeaunce. But this is open thynge and clere, that it is right that shrewes ben punyshed, and it is wickednesse, and wronge that they eschapen vnpunished. Boecius. Who might denye it (q I) Philosophie. But (q she) may any man deny that all that is right ne is good and also the contrarie, that all that is wrong is wicked. Boeci. Certes (q I) these thynges ben clere ynoughe, and that we haue concluded a litell here before. But I pray the that thou tell me yf thou accordest to letten no tourmente to the soules, after that the body is ended by the death, that is to saine: vnderstandest thou aught, that soules haue anye tourment after the death of the body. Philosoph. Certes (q she) yea, and that right great, of whyche soules (q she) I trowe that some ben tourmented by asprenesse of paine, and some soules I trowe ben exercysed by a purgynge mekenesse, but my counsaile nys nat to determine of this paines. But I haue trauailled and tolde yet hyderto, for thou shuldest know that the mowyng of shrewes, whiche mowing the semeth to be vnworthy, nis no mowynge, and eke of shrewes, of whyche thou playnedest that they ne were not punished, that thou woldest se that they ne weren neuer mo withouten the tourmentes of her wyckednesse. And of the lycence of the mowinge to dooen yuell, that thou praidest that it mighte sone be ended, and that thou wouldest faine lernen that it ne shoulde not longe endure. And that shrewes ben more vnsely yf they were of lenger duringe, and moste vnsely yf they weren perdurable. And after this I haue shewed the that more vnsely ben shrewes, whan they escapen without her rightful paine, than whan they ben punished by rightfull vengeaunce. And of this sentence foloweth it, that than ben shrewes constrained at the last with moost greuous tourment whã men wene that they ne be not punished. Boecius. Whan I cõsider thy reasons (q I) I ne trowe nat that men saine any thyng more verely. And yf I tourne ayen to the studies of men, who his he to whom it shulde seme, that he ne should nat onely leuen these thynges, but eke gladly herken hem. Philosoph. Certes (q she) so it is, but men maye nat, for they haue their eyen so wont the derkenesse of erthely thynges, that they ne may nat lyfte hem vp to the lyght of cleare sothfastenesse. But they been lyke to birdes, of whiche the night lyghtneth her lokynges, and the day blindeth hem. For whan men loken not the ordre of thinges, but her lustes and talentes, they wene that either the leue or the mowyng to dooen wickednesse, or els the scapyng without payne be welefull. But cosyder the iudgement of the perdurable law, for if thou confirme thy courage to the beste thynges, thou ne hast no nede of no iudge, to yeuen the price or mede, for thou haste ioyned thy self to the moste excellent thinges. And if thou haue enclined thy studies, to the wicked thynges, ne seke no forayne wrecherie out of thy self, for thou thy self, hast thrist thy self into wicked thinges, right as thou mightest looken by diuers tymes, the foule yearth and the heauen, and that all other thynges, stinten fro without, so that thou were in neither, ne see nothynge more. Then should it semen to thee, as by onely reason of lokyng, that thou were now in the Sterres, and now in the yearth, but the people looketh not on these thynges. What then, shall we then approche vs to hem that I haue shewed, that been like to beastes? And what wouldest thou sain of this, if that a manne had all forlorne his sighte, and had forgeten that he euer sawe, and wened that nothynge failed hym, of perfeccion of manhod? Now we which mighten seen the same thynges, would wee not saine, that he were blinde, ne also ne accordeth not the people, to that I shall saine, the whiche thyng is sustened, by as stronge foundementes of reason, that is to saine, that more vnselie been thei, that dooen wronges to other folke, then thei that the wronge sustren. Boecius. I would hearen thilke same reasons (q I). Philosoph. Deniest thou (q she) that all shrewes ne been worthie to haue tourment? Boecius. Nate (q I). Philosophie. But (q she) I am certain by many reasons, that shrewes been vnselie. Boecius. It accordeth (q I). Philoso. Then ne doubtest thou not (q she) that thilke folke, that been worthie of tourmente, that thei ne be wretches. Boecius. It accordeth well (q I) Philosophie. If thou were then set a Judge, as knower of thinges, whither trowest thou that men should tourmenten hem, that hath doen wronge, or els hem that suffered the wronge? Boecius. I doubte not (q I) that I wolde doe sufficient satisfaccion, to hem that haue suffred wrong, by the sorowe of hem that hath doen wrong. Philosophy. Then semeth it (q she) that the doer of wronge, is more wretch, then he that suffred wrong. Boecius. That foloweth wel (q I). Philosophie. Then (q she) by these causes, and by other causes, that been enforced by ꝑ same roote, that filth is synne, by the proper nature of it, maketh men wretches, and it sheweth well, that the wronges that men doen, nis not the wretchednesse, of him that receiueth the wrong, but the wretchednesse of him that dooeth the wrong. But certes (q she) these orators or aduocates, doen al the contrary, for thei enforcen hem to commoue the Judges, to haue pitie of hem, that doen the greuaunces and the wronges, the whiche shrewes, it wer a more couenable thyng, that the accusours or aduocates, not wroth, but piteous and debonaire, ledden the shrewes that haue doen wronges, to the iudgement, right as men leden sicke folke to the Leche, for that thei shoulden seethen out, the maladies of synne by tourment. And by this couenaunte, either the entent of aduocates, should cessen in all, or els if the office of the aduocates, would better profiten to menne, it should bee tourned into the habite of accusacion, that is to sain, thei shoulden accuse shrewes, and not excusen hem. And eke the shrewes hem self, if it were lefull to hem, to seen at any cliste, the vertue that thei haue forlorn, & sawen that thei should putten adoune the filthes of her vices, by the tourmentes of paines, thei ne oughten not, right for that recompensacion, for to getten hem bountie and prowesse, whiche that thei haue loste, demen and hold that the like paines weren tourmẽtes to hem, and ere thei woulden refuse, the attendaunce of her aduocates, and taken hem self to her Judges, and to her accusours, for the whiche it betideth, that as to the wise folkes, there nis no place ileften to hate, that is to saine, that hate ne hath no place emonge wisemen. For no wight will haten good men, but if he were ouermoche a foole, and for to haten shrewes, it nis no reason, for right as languishyng is maladie of bodie, right so ben vices and sinne maladie of courage. And so as wee ne deme not that thei, whiche that been sicke of her bodie, been worthie to been hated but rather worthie of pitie. Well more worthie not to been hated, but for to been had in pitie been thei, of whiche the thoughtes ben constrained by felonous wickednesse, that is more cruell, then any languishyng of bodie.

Quid tantos iuuat excitare motos. Et propria fatum sollicitate manu? Simortem petitis propinquat ipsa sponte sua, volucres nec remoratur equos. &c.

What deliteth you to exciten so great mouing of hatredes, and to hasten and basien the fatall disposicion of your death, with your proper handes, that is to saine, by battailes or contekes?

For if ye almen the deathe, it halleth hym of his owne wille, ne deathe ne tarieth not his swifte horse. And the menne that the serpentes, and the Lion, and the Tigre, & the Bere, and the Boze, seken to slean with their teeth, yet thilke same menne, seken to slean euerich of hem other with swearde. Loe, for her maners been diuers and discordaunt. thei moue vnrightfull hostes, and cruell battailes, and wilnen to perishe by enterchaungyng of dartes, but the reason of crueltie, nis not inough rightfull. wilt thou then yelden a couenable guerdon, to the desertes of men? Loue rightfully good folkes, and haue pitie on shrewes.

Hinc ego video inquam, quæ sit vel felicitas vel miseria in ipsis proborum atq; improborum meritis constituta. Sed in hac ipsa fortuna populari, &c.

THis I see, q I either what blisfulnesse, or els what vnselines is established in the desertes of good menne, and of shrewes.

But in this like fortune of the people, I see somewhat of good, and somwhat of euill. For no wiseman had not leauer bee exiled poore and nedie, and nameless, then for to dwellen in his Citee, and floure of richesse, and bee redoubtable of honoure, and strong of power. For in this wise more clearly and witnessfully, is the office of wise menne treated, then the blisfulnesse of power, and gouernours, is as it were had emonges the people, that bee neighbors and subiectes, sith that namely prison, lawe, and these other tourmentes of lawfull paines, bee rather owed to felonous Citezeins: for the whiche felonous citezeins, the paines bee established, more then for good people.

Boecius. Then I maruaile greatly (q I) why that the things be so misse enterchaunged, that tourmentes of felonies, pressen and confounden good people, and shrewes ravisshen medes of vertue, and been in honours, and greate estates. And I desire eke for to weten of thee, what semeth thee to be the reason of this so wrongfull a conclusion. For I would wonder wel the lasse, if that I trowed that all thinges wer medled with fortunous hap. But now crepeth and encreaseth myne astonynges, God gouernour of thyngs, that so as GOD yeueth oft times to good menne, goodes and mirthes, and to shrewes, euil and aspre thynges: And yeueth ayen to good folk hardnesse, and to shrewes he graunteth hem her wille, and that thei desiren. what difference mait there bee, betwene that that God doeth, and happe of fortune, if menne knowe not the cause why it is.

Philosophie. Ne it is no marueile (q she) though that men wenen, that there be somewhat foolishe and confuse. When the reason of the order is vnknowen: but although that thou, ne knowe not the cause, of so greate a disposicion. Natheless, for as moche as God the good gouernour, attempreth and gouerneth the worlde, ne doubte thee not, but all thynges been doen a right.

WHo so that knowe not the sterres Arcture, tourned to the soueraine centure or poinct, that is to saine, tourned nigh to the Soueraine Pole of the firmamente, and wote not why the sterre Bootes palleth, or gathereth his waines, and drecheth his late flambes in the sea, and why that Bootes the Sterre, vnfoldeth his ouerswifte arisynges, then shall he wondren of the Lawe of the high aire. And eke, if that he ne knowe not why, that the homes of the full Moone waren pale and infecte, by the boundes of the darke night, and how the Moone darche and confuse, discouereth the Sterres, that she had coured by her clere visage.

The common errour moueth folkes, and maketh wearie her basins of Brasse by thilke strokes, that is to saie, that there is a maner people, that hight Cozibantes, that wenen, that when the Moone is in the Eclipse, that it bee enchaunted, and therefore for to releue the Moone, thei beaten her basins with the ilke strokes. Ne no man ne wondreth when the blastes of the winde Chorus, beaten the strondes of the Sea, by quaking floodes. Ne no man ne wondreth, when the weight of the Snowe, harded by the cold, is resolued by the brennyng heate of Phebus the Soonne, for here seen menne readily the causes. But the causes thidde, that is to sain in heauen, troublen the breastes of men. The mouable people, is astonied of all thynges, that comē selde and sodainlie in our age, but the troublie errour of our ignorance, departeth fro vs, so that if thei wisten the cause, why that soche thynges betiden, certes thei shoulden ceasse to seme wonders.

Ita eſt inquam. Sed cum tui muneris ſit latentium rerum cauſas euoluere, velataſq; caligine explicare rationes: queſo vti hinc decernas, &c.

Thus it is (q I) but ſo as thou haſte reuen or beheight me, ſo vnwrappe the hidde cauſes of thinges, and to diſcouer me the reaſõs, couered with darkneſſe I praie thee, that thou deuiſe to iudge me of this matter, & that thou do me to vnderſtand it, for this miracle of this wõder, troubleth me right greatly. And then we a litle what ſmiling ſaid. Thou clepeſt me q ſhe to tell that is greateſt of all thinges, ỹ mo wẽ been aſked, & to ỹ which queſtiõ, vnneth there ought inough to lauen it, as who ſaieth, vnneth is there any thyng, to anſwere perfitlie to thy queſtion, for the matter of it is ſoche, that when o doubte is determined and cutte awaie. There waren other doubtes without nomber, right as the heddes of Idre the Serpente waren, the whiche Serpente Hercules ſlough: ne there ne were no manere, ne none vnde, but if a wight conſtrained ỹ doubtes, by aright liuely & quicke fire of thought, that is ſaine, by vigour and ſtrength of witte. For in this matter, men weren wonte to maken queſtions, of the ſimplicitie of the purueighaunce of GOD, and of the order of Deſtinie, and of ſodaine happe, and of knowing of predeſtination diuine. And of the libertie of freewill, the whiche thinges, thou thy ſelf apperceiueden wel, of what weight thei been. But for asmoche as the knowynges of theſe thinges, is a maner porcion or medicine to thee, all bee it ſo, that I haue little tyme to dooen it, yet neuertheleſſe, I would enforcen me to bewen ſomewhat of it: But although the nourſhinges of ditee of Muſike deliteth the, thou muſte ſuffereen and forbearen, a little of the like delite, while that I weue to the reaſons, knitte by order.

Boecius. Aſ it liketh to thee (q I) ſo doe.

Philoſophie. Tho ſpake ſhe righte, as by mother beginnyng, and ſaied right thus. The engenderyng of all thynges (q ſhe) and all the progreſſions of mouable Nature, and all that mouethe in any maner, taketh his cauſes, his order, and his formes, of the ſtabileneſſe of Diuine thought: And the like Diuine thought, that is ſette, and putte in the Toure, that is to ſaine, in the height of the ſimplicitie of GOD, ſtabliſheth many maner giſes, to the thynges that been to dooen, the whiche maner, when that menne looken it, in the pure cleaneſſe of the Diuine intelligence, is cleaped purneighaunce.

But when the like maner is referred by menne, to thynges that it moueth or diſponeth, then of olde menne it was cleaped Deſtinie, the whiche thynges, if that any wight looketh well in his thought, the ſtrengthe of that one, and of that other, he ſhall lightlie mowe ſeen, that theſe twoo thynges been diuers. For purueighaunce is the like Diuine reaſon, that is eſtabliſhed in the Soueraine Prince of thinges, the which purueighaunce diſponeth all thynges. But certes, Deſtinie is the diſpoſicion and the ordinaunce, cleauyng to mouable thynges, by the whiche diſpoſicion, the purueighaunce knitteth all thinges in her order: For purueighaunce embraſeth all thynges to beape, although thei bee diuers, and although thei be infinite, but deſtinie certaine, departeth and ordaineth all thinges ſingulerly, and deuideth in mouing, in places, in formes, and in tymes, as thus: Let the vnfoldyng of temporell ordinaunce, aſſembled and oned in the lookyng of the Diuine thoughte, bee cleaped purueighaunce, and thilke ſame aſſemblyng and oning, deuided and vnfolden, let that be called Deſtinie. And all bee it ſo, that theſe thynges been diuers, yet neuertheleſſe, hanged that one on that other, for why, the order deſtinably, procedeth of the ſimplicitie of purueighaunce.

For right as a werkman, perceiueth in his thoughte, the forme of thynge that he wolle make, and mouethe the effecte of the werke, and leadeth that he had looked beforne in his thought, ſimplie and preſentlie by corporall ordinaunce: certes, right ſo GOD in his purueighaunce, diſponeth ſingulerlie and ſtably the thynges that ben to doen, but he adminiſtreth in maners, and in diuers tymes by Deſtinie, the like ſame thynges that he hath diſponed, then whether Deſtinie bee exerciſed, either by ſome diuine ſpirites, ſeruauntes to the Diuine purueighaunce, or eiles by ſome ſoule, or eis by all nature ſeruyng GOD, or eis by the celeſtiall mouynges of Sterres, or eis by the vertue of Angelles, or eis by diuers ſubteltie of Diuelles, or eis by any of hem, or eilles by hem all, the deſtinable ordinaunce is wouen and accompliſhed. Certes, it is open thyng, that the purueighaunce, is an vnmouable and ſimple forme of thynges to dooen, and the mouable bonde, and the temporalle ordinaunce of thynges, whiche that the Diuine dine simplicitie of purueiaūce hath ordained to doen, that is destinie. For whiche it is that al thinges that been put vnder destinie, been certes subiectes vnto purueiaunce, to which purueiaunce destinie it self is subiect & vnder but some thinges been put vnder purueiaūce, that surmounten thordinaunce of destenie: & tho been thilke that stablie been fired nigh to the first godhed, thei surmounten the order of destinable mouabilitie. For right as cercles turnen about a same cētre, or about a poinct, thilke cercle that is innerest or moste within, he ioyneth to the simplesse of the middle, and is as it wer a centre or a poinct to that other cercles, that turnen aboute him: & thilke that is vtterest, compassed by larger enuironning, is vnfolde by larger spaces, in so moche as it is fertheresse fro the middelest simplititie of the poincte. And if there bee any thyng that knitteth and felowshippeth himself, to thilke middle poincte, it is constrained into simplicitie, that is to saie, into vnmouabilitie, and it ceaseth to been shad, and flit diuerslly. Right so by semblable reason, thilke thing that departeth furtheresse, fro the firste thought of God, it is vnfolden, & also submitted to greater bondes of destinie, and in so moche is the thing, more free and loce fro dignitie, as it asketh and holdeth nere to thilke centre of thinges, that is to saine, to God. And if the thyng cleaueth to the stedfastnesse of the thought of God, and bee without mouyng, certes it surmounteth the necessitie of destinie. Then loche comparison as is skilling to vnderstandyng, and of thinge that was engendred, to thinge that is of time to eternitie, and of the cercle to the centre, right so is the order of mouable destinie, to the stable simplicitie of purueighaunce. Thilke ordinaunce moueth the heauē and the sterres, and attempreth the elemētes togither emong hem self, and transformethe hē by enterchaungeable mutacion. And thilk same order neweth ayen, all things growing and falling adoune, by semblable progressiōs of seedes and of serus, that is to saine, male & female: and this ilke order cōstraineth the fortunes, and the dedes of men, by a bōde of causes, not able to be vnbounden: the whiche destinable causes, when thei passen out fro the beginnynges of vnmouable purueiaunce, it mote nedes be that thei ne be not mutable, as thus: be the things well gouerned, if that the simplicitie dwellynge in the diuine thought, sheweth forthe the order of causes, vnable to be bowed. And this order constraineth by the proper stabilitie, the mouable thinges, or els thei shulden flete folilie. For which it is, that thinges semen confuse, & troublie to vs men, for we ne mowen not cōsider thilk ordinaūce. Neuertheless, þ proper maner of euery thing dressyng hym to good, disponeth hem all, for there nis nothynge dooen for euill, for thilke thyng that is dooen by wicked folke, nis not doen for euil. The whiche shewes, as I haue shewed full plenteously seke good, but wicked errour misgourneth hem, ne the order coming fro the poinct of soueraine good, ne encline not fro his beginnyng. But thou maiest saie, what vnrest maie been a worse cōfusion, thā that good men haue somtyme aduersitie, and somtyme prosperitie: and shewes haue now also thinges that thei desiren, and now thinges that thei haten. whether men liue nowe in loche holinesse of thought, as who saith be men now so wise, that loche folke as thei demen to be good folke or shewes, that it mote nedes be, that folk be loche as thei wenē. But in this maner domes of mē discorden, þ thilke men that some folke demen worthie of mede, other folke deme hem worthy of turment, but let vs graunt: I suppose that some man maie well deme or knowe the good people, and the bad, maie he then knowe and see thilke inwerd attemperaunce of courage, as it hath ben wont to be said of bodies, as who saith: maie a man speaken of complexions, and attemperaunce of bodies, ne it ne is not, as who saith but it is like a meruaile or a miracle, to hem þ ne knowe it not, why that swete thinges ben couenable to sum bodies, that been hole, and sum people bitter things be couenable: & also why sum people ben holpen with light medicines, & some people been holpen with bitter medicines: but natheless tho that knowē the maner, and the temperaunce of heale and of malady, ne marueileth it nothing. But what other thing semeth helth of corages but bontie, and what other thing semeth maladie of courage but vices? who is els keper of good, & driuer awaie of euill, but God the gouernour & leader of thoughtes: the whiche God, whē he hath beholden frō the high toure of his purueiaunce, he knoweth what is couenable to any wight, & leaueth hem that he wot well þ is couenable to hem. Lo, herof cometh & herof is doen this miracle of thorder destinable, whē God that all knoweth doth loche thyng, of whiche thyng, vnknowing folke been astonied, but for to constraine, as who saieth, but for to comprehende and tell a fewe thinges of the diuine depenelle, the which that mannes reason maie vnderstand. Thilke manne that thou wenest to been right iuste, and right keping of equitie, the contrarie of that, semeth to the Diuine purueighaunce that all wote. And Lucan my familier telleth, that the victorious cause liked to the Goddes, & the cause ouersome, liketh to Caton. Then what so euer thou maieste seen, that is dooen in this worlde vnhoped, or elis vnknowen, certes, it is the righte order of thynges, but as to thy wicked opinion, it is a confusion. But I suppose that some mā be so welthewed, that the diuine iudgement, and the iudgement of mānde, accorden hem togider of hym: but he is vnkedlak of courage, that if any aduersitie come to hym, he woll forleten parauēture to continue innocencie, by the whiche he ne maie not withholden fortune: thā the wise disposicion of GOD spareth hym, the whiche nan aduersitie, might empairen, for that god will not hym to trauaile, to whom that trauaile nis not couenable. In other manne is parfite in all vertues, and is an holy manne, and nigh to God, so that the purueighaunce of god would deme, that it were a felonie, that he wer touched with any aduersities, so that it would not suffre, that soche a man be with any bodily maladie moued. But so (as saied the philosophier) the more excellēt is he me said in greate, that vertues haue edified the bodie of the holie manne. And oft tyme it betideth, that the somme of thinges, that been to doen taken to gouerne to good folke, for that the malice habundant of shrewes, should been abated. And God yeueth & departeth to other folke, prosperitees and aduersities, medled to hope, after the qualitie of her courages, and amorteth some folke by aduersities, for thei ne should not waxen proude, by long welfulnesse. And other folke he suffereth, to bee trauiled with hard thyngs, for that thei should enformen the vertues of courage, by the exercitacion of vsage of pacience. And other folk beden more then thei oughten, & whiche thei mighten well bearen, and some dispise, that thei mowe not beare, and thilke folke GOD leadeth into experience of hem self, by aspre and forowfull thynges. And many there folk haue boughte, honourable renome of this worlde, by the prise of glorious death.

And some men that ne mowe not been ouercomen by tourmēt, haue yeuen ensample to other folke, that vertue maie not been ouercomē by aduersities. And of al these thinges there nis no doubt, that thei ne ben doen right fullie and ordeinly, to the perfit good of hem, to whom we seen these thinges betiden. For certes, that aduersities cometh somtyme to shrewes, and somtyme that thei desiren, it cometh of these forefaied causes. And of sorowfull thinges that betiden to shrewes, certes, no man ne wondreth, for all menne wene that thei haue deserued it, and that thei been of wicked merite. Of whiche shrewes, the tourmente agasteth sometyme other to doen felonies: And sometyme it amendeth hem, that suffereth the tourmentes. And the prosperitie that is yeuen to shrewes, sheweth a greate argument to good people, what thing thei should demen of thilk welefulnesse, whiche prosperitie menne seen ofte, serue to shrewes: In whiche thing, I trowe that God dispenseth, for parauenture, the nature of some man is so ouerthrowyng to euell, and so vncouenable, that the nedy pouertie of his houf holde, might rather agreue hym to doen felonies, and to the maladie of hym, God putteth remeadie, to yeuen hym richesse. And some other manne beholdeth his conscience, defouled with synnes, and maketh comparison of this fortune, and of himself: and dredeth parauenture that the blisfulnesse, of whiche the vsage foyfull to hym, that the lesyng of thilk blisfulnesse, ne bee not forowfull to hym, and therefore he would chaunge his maners: and for he dredeth to lese his fortune, he forleteth his wickednesse. To other folkes welefulnes is yeuen vnworthilie, the whiche ouerthroweth hem into destruccion, that thei han deserued, & to some other folke, is yeuen power to punishen, for that it shall bee cause of continuacion, and exercisyng to good folkes, and cause of tourmente to shrewes.

For so as there nis none aliaunce betwene good folkes, and shrewes, ne shrewes ne mowen not accorden emong hem self: and why not? For that shrewes discorden of hem self, by her vices, the whiche vices, all to renden her consciences, and dooen oft tyme thynges, the whiche thinges, when thei haue doen hē, thei deme that tho things, ne should not haue be doen, for which thing the souerain purueiaunce, hath maked oft time miracle: So that shrewes haue maked shrewes, to been good men. For when that some shrewes seen, that thei suffre wrongfully, felonies of other shrewes, thei waxen eschauffed into hate of hem, that anoied hem, & retournen to the fruict of vertue. Then thei studien to be vnlike to hem that thei haue hated. Certes onely is this the diuine might, to the which might iuels been then good, when it vseth the iuelles couenable, and draweth out the effecte of any good, as who saieth, that iuell is good onely to the might of God, for the might of God ordeineth thilke iuell to good: for one order embraceth all thinges, so that what wight departeth frō the reason of thilke order, that is alligned to him, algates yet he slideth into an other order so that nothing is lefull to folie, in the realm of diuine purueighaunce, as who saieth, nothyng is without ordinaunce, in the realme of diuine purueighaunce, sith that the right strong GOD, gouerneth all thynges in this worlde, for it is not lefull for men comprehēde by wit, ne vnfolden by woorde, all the subtell ordinaunce, and the disposicion of the diuine entēt, for onely it ought to suffice, to haue loued that god himself, maker of al natures, ordaineth al thinges to good, while that he hasteth to with holde the thynges, that he hath maked into his semblaunce, that is to say, for to with holden the thinges into good, for he hymself is good. He chaseth out all iuells fro the bōde of his cominalties, by thorder of the necessitie destinable: for w'iche it followeth, that if thou loke the purueiaunce, ordeinyng the thinges, that men wenen be outragious, or haboundāt in yerthes, thou shalt not seen in no place, nothyng of iuell. But I see now that thou art charged, with ỹ weighte of the question, and wearie with lengthe of my reason, and that thou abidest some swetenesse of song, take thā this draught, & when thou art wel refreshed & relect, thou shalt be more redy caste to flie, into higher questions or thinges.

Si vis celsi iura tonantis. Plura solers cernere

If thou wile wolt demē, in thy pure thought, the rightes ory lawes of the hie thonder, that is to sain of God, looke thou & beholde the heightes of the soueraine heauen: There kepen the Sterres, by rightfull aliaunce of thyngs her old peace: The Sonne imoued by his roddie fire, ne disflourbeth not the colde cercle of the Mone, ne the sterre icleped the Bere, that enclineth his rauishing courses, abouten the the soueraine height of this worlde. Ne the same sterre Tirla, nis neuer mo washen in the depe westren sea, ne coueteth not to dien his flambes, in the sea of the Occian, although it see other Sterres, iplonged in the sea: And Hesperus the Sterre boodeth, and telleth alwaie the late nightes: And Lucifer the sterre bringeth ayen the cleare daie.

And thus maketh loue enterchaungeable, the perdurable courses, and thus is dicordable battaile, iputte out of the countrey of the Sterres. This accordaunce attempreth by euenlike maners the Elementes, that the moiste thynges, striuyng with the drie thynges, yeuen place by stoundes: And that the colde thynges ioynen hem by faithe, to the hote thynges, and that the light fire, ariseth in to height, and the heauie yearthes, aualen by her weightes: by the same causes, the flourie yere yeldeth swete smelles, in the first Sommer season warmynge, and the hotte Sommer drieth the Cornes, and Autumne cometh ayen of heauie Ipples, and the sleetyng Raine bedeweth the Winter, this attempraunce nourisheth, and bryngeth forthe all thynges, that deareth like in this worlde, and the ilke same attempraunce rauishyng, hideth, benimeth, and drencheth vnder the laste death, all thynges ibornе.

Emong these thinges, sitteth the high maker, kyng and Lorde, weale and beginnyng, Lawe and wise Judge, to dooen equitee, and gouerneth and encline the bridels of thynges: And tho thinges that he sterreth, to goon by mouynge, he withdraweth and arreseth, and affirmeth the mouable or wanderynge thinges. For if that he ne called not ayen the right goyng of thynges. And if that he nedstrained hem not efte sones, into roundenesse enclined, the thynges that been nowe continued by stable ordinaunce, thei shulden departen from her weale, that is to saine, from her beginnyng and fallen, that is to saine, tournen into nought. This is the common loue to all thynges: and all thynges aspiren to been holden by the fine of good, for elles ne mighten thei not fasten, if thei ne come not efsones ayen by loue, returned to the cause, that hath yeuen hem beyng, that is to saine God.

nderstand (q̄ she). So as all fortune, whether it be ioyfull fortune, or aspre fortune, is yeuen either bicause of guerdonyng, or elles of exercising of good folkes, or els bicause to punishen, or els chastisen shrewes: then is al fortune good, the which fortune is certain, that it be either rightfull, or els profitable.

Boecius. Forsothe this is a full verie reason (q̄ I) and if I consider the purueighaunce and the destinie that thou oughtest me a litle here beforn, this sentence is fastened by stedfalle reasons. But if it like vnto thee, let vs ombrace hem emonges the ilke thynges, of whiche thou saidest a little here beforne, that thei ne wer not able to been wened to the people. Philosophi. why so q̄ she). Boecius. For that the common word of men (q̄ I) misuseth this maner speache of fortune, and same ofte tymes, that the fortune of some wight is wicked. Philosophie. Wilte thou then (q̄ she) that I approche a little to the wordes of the people, that it seme not to hē, that I be ouermoche departed, as fro the vsage of mankinde. Boecius. Is thou wolt (q̄ I) Philosophie. Wenest thou not (q̄ she) that all thyng that profiteth is good. Boecius. Yes (q̄ I). Philosop. Certes all thyng that exerceth or corrigeth, it profiteth. Boecius. I confesse well (q̄ I). Philoso. Then is it good (q̄ she). Boecius. why not (q̄ I). Philosophie. But this is the fortune (q̄ she) of hem that either be putte in vertue, and battailen againste aspre thynges, or elles of hem that enclinen, and declinen fro vices, and taken the waie of vertue. Boecius. This maie I not denie (q̄ I). Philosophie. But what saiest thou of the merie fortune, that is yeuen to good people in guerdon, demeth ofte the people that it be wicked?

Boecius. Naie for soth (q̄ I) but thei demen wit is sothe, that it is right good.

Philosophie. what saiest thou of the other fortune (q̄ she) that although ꝑ it bee aspre, & restraineth the shrewes by rightfull turmēt, demeth aught the people that it bee good?

Boecius. Naie (q̄ I) but the people demeth that it is moste wretched of all thynges, that maie be thought.

Philosophie. Ware now, and looke well q̄ she. lette wee in followyng the opinion of the people, haue confessed & concluded thing, whether that is vnable to been wened to the people. Boecius. what is that (q̄ I)? Phil. Certes if he it followeth or cometh of thynges that been graunted, that all fortune what so euer bee, of hem that been either in possession of vertue, or in the encrease of vertue, or els in the purchasyng of vertue, that thilke fortune is good, and that all fortune is right wicked, to hem that dwellē in shrewdnelle, as who saith, and thus weneth not the people. Boec. That is sothe (q̄ I). Albeit so that no man dare confesse it, ne know it. Philosop. why so (q̄ she). For right as the strong man, ne semeth not to abaishen or disdainen, as ofte tyme as he heareth the noise of the battaile: also it semeth not to the wiseman, to bearen it greuously, as ofte as he is ledde into strief of fortune. For bothe to that one man, and eke to that other, the ilke difficultie is the matter, to that one man of encrease of his glorious renome, and to that other man, to conserue his sapience, that is to saie, to the aspernelle of his estate, for therefore is it called vertue, for that it susteineth & enforceth by his strengthes, so that it nis not ouercomen by aduersities. Ne certes, thou that art putte in encrease, or in the height of vertue, ne haste not comen to fleten with delices, and for to walken in bodily lust. Thou sowest or plantest a full eigre battaile in thy courage, ayenst euery fortune: for that the sorowfull fortune confounde thee not, ne that the merie fortune ne corrumpe thee not, occupie the meane by stedfast strengthes. For all that euer is vnder the meane, or all that ouerpasseth the meane, displeth welefulnes as who saieth, it is vicious, and ne hath no mede of his trauaile, for it is set in your hād, as who saieth, it lieth in your power, what fortune you is leuelle, that is to saie, good or iuell, for all fortune that semeth sharpe or aspre, if it ne exercile not the good folke, ne chastise the wicked folke, it punisheth.

Philosophie. As ofte (q she) as men dooen any thyng, for grace of any other thyng, and vnother thyng then thilke thyng, that men entenden to doen, betideth by some causes, it is cleaped happe, right as a manne dalue the earth, bicause of tilyng of the field, a found there a gobet of golde bedolven, then wenen folke, that it is befall by fortunous betidyng. But forsothe it nis not of naught, for it hath his proper causes, of which causes, the cours vnwareen and vnware, semeth to haue made hap. For if the tiller of the fielde, ne dolue not in the yearth, and if the hider of the gold, ne had hid the gold in that place, the golde ne had not been found. These been then the causes of the abredgyng of fortuit hap, the whiche abredgyng of fortuit hap semeth, of causes encountryng, and flowyng togither to him self, and not by thentencion of the doer. For neither the hider of the golde, ne the delue of the field, ne vnderstanden not, that the gold should haue been founde. Tum egoten inquam difficiliore rursus ambiguitate confundor. &c.

THen said I thus, now am I cofounded, by a moze hard doubt then I was. Philosoph, what doubte is that (q the) foz certes, I coniecte now by soch thinges, thou art troubled. Boecius. It seemeth (q I) to repugnen and to contrarie greatlie, that God knoweth belozne all thinges, and that there is any fredome oz libertie, foz if so bee that God looketh all thynges belozne, ne God ne maie not been deceiued in no maner. Then mote it needes bee, that all thynges the whiche that the puruciaunce of God, hath seen belozne to come, foz which if that GOD knoweth tolozne, not onely the werkes of men, but also her counsailes and her willes, then ne shall there bee no libertie of arbitree, ne certes, there ne maie bee none other deede, ne no wille, but the ilke whiche that the deuine puruciaunce (that ne may not been deceiued) hath seeled belozne, foz if that thei mighten withen awaie, in other maner, then thei been purueighed, then ne should there be no stedfast prescience of thyng to comen, but rather an vncertaine opinion, the whiche thyng to trowen of God, I deme it felonie and vnlefull. Ne I ne proue not the ilke same reason, as who saieth, I ne alowe not, oz I ne praise not thilke same reason, by whiche that some men weenen, that thei mowen assoilen, and vnknitten the knot of this question. Foz certes thei saine, that thyng nis not to comen, foz that the puruciaunce of GOD, hath seen belozne that it is to comen, but rather the cõtrarie, and that is this, that foz that the thynges is to comen, that therfoze ne maie it not been hid fro the puruciaunce of God. And in this maner, this necessitie slideth ayen into the contrarie partie, as it ne behoueth not needes, that thynges beiden that been ipurueighed, but it behoueth nedes, that thynges that been to comen been ipurueighed, but as it wer itraualled, as who saieth, that thilke answere procedeth right as though menne trauaileden oz weren busied enquiren, the whiche thynge is cause of the which thynges. As whether the prescience is cause of the necessitie of thynges to comen, oz eis that the necessitie of thinges to comen, is cause of the puruciaunce. But I ne enforce me not now to shewen it, that the betidyng of thynges I wiste belozne is necessarie, how so oz in what maner, that ỹ ozder of causes hath it self, although that it ne seme not, that the prescience bryng in necessitie of betidyng, to thynges to comen. Foz certes, if that any wight sitteth, it behoueth by necessitie, that the opinion be soth, of hym that coniecteth that he sitteth, and ayen warde also is it of the pozpzietie, foz if the opinion bee sothe of any wighte, foz that he sitteth, it behoueth by necessitie that he sitte. Then is here necessitie in thilke one, and in that other, foz in that one is necessitie of sittyng, and certes in that other is necessitie of soth. But therfoze ne sitteth not a wighte, foz that the opinion of the sittyng

ryng his sothe, but the opinion is rather ide, for that a wight sitteth before. And us although that the cause of the sothe, co-eth of that other side, as who saieth, that al ough the cause of sothe cometh of the sit-ng, and not of the true opinion, algates yet s there a common necessitie, in that one, and n that other. Thus seweth it, that I maie ake semblable thilles, of the purueighance f God, and of thynges to come. For although at for that thynges been to comen, there-ore been thei pursueighed, and not certes, for ei been pursueighed, therfore ne betide thei t, natheless it behoueth by necessitie, that ther the thynges it to comen, been ipurueed of God, or els that the thynges, that been urueighed of God betiden. And this thyngs artie suffiseth inough, to destroien the free-om of our arbitrre, that is to sain, of our fre ill. But certes, nowe sheweth it well howe ure fro the sothe. How vpso doune is this ing, that we seen that the betidyng of temrall thynges, is cause of the eterne prescie ce. But for to wenen that God purueyeth e thynges to comen, for thei ben to comen. hat other thynge is it but for to wene, that ilke thinges that betide whilom, been caued of thilke louerain purueighaunce, that is God. And hereto adde I this thinges, that ight as when that I, wote that a thyng is, behoueth by necessitie, that thilk self thing e, and eke when I haue knowen that any yng shall betiden, so behoueth it by necessie, that thilke same thynges betide. So fol-weth it then, that the betidyng of the thins will before, ne maie not bee eschewed, hat the laste, if that any wighte wene a yng, to been otherwise then it is, it nis not ely vnscience, but it is deceiuable opinion, ll diuers and farre fro the sothe of science. herefore, if any thyng bee so to comen, that e betidyng of it, ne bee not certaine, ne neessarie, who maie weten before, that thilke hing is to comen. For right as scie̅ce, ne maie ot be medled with falsenesse, as who saieth, hat if I wote a thing, it ne maie not be falle hat I ne wote it, right of thilke thyng, that s conceiued by science, ne maie not be none, therwise then as it is conceiued, for that is he cause why, that scie̅ce wanteth leasing, as who saith, why that weting ne receiueth not eyng of that it wote, for it behoueth by neessitie, that euery thyng bee right, as science pprehendeth it to be. What shal I then sain, n whiche maner knoweth God, before all the thynges to come̅, if thei ne be not certain for if that he deme, that thei been to comen vnesciuably, and so maie bee that it is possible, that thei ne shullen not comen. God is de-ceiued, but not onely to trowen, that God is deceiued, but for to speake it with mouthe, it is a felonous synne. But if that God wote, that righte so as thynges been to comen, so shoullen thei comen, so that he wote egally, as who saith indifferently, that thyngs maie bee doen, or els not idoen. What is thilke pre-science, that ne comprehendeth no certaine thyng ne stable, or els what differe̅ce is there bitwene the prescience of thilke iape, worthy Deuinyng of Tiresie Deuinour, that saied.
All that I saie of he either it shall be, or els it shall not bee, or els how moche is worthe the Deuine prescience, more then the opinion of mankinde, if so bee that it demeth the thyn-ges vncertaine, as men doen. Of the whiche domes of men, the betidyng nis not certaine.
But if so be, that none vncertain thynges, ne maie been in him, that is right certaine well of all thynges, then is the betidyng certaine of thilke thynges, whiche that he hath wisse before, fermely to comen. For whiche it fol-loweth, that the fredome of the counsailes, and of the werkes of mankind nis none, sith that the thought of God, that seeth all thyn-ges, without errour of falsnesse, bindeth and constraineth hem to a betidyng by necessitie.
And if this thyng bee ones igraunted and re-ceiued, this is to saine, that there nis no free will, then sheweth it well, how great destruc-cion, and how greate domages there folowen of thinges of mankind, for in idell been there then purposed, and behighte medes to good folke, and paines to badde folke, sith that no mouyng of free courage voluntarie, ne hath not deserued hem, that is to saine, neither mede ne paine. And it should seme then, that thilke thing is alder worst, which that is now demed for aldermoste iust, and moste rightful.
That is to sain, that shrewes been punished, or elles that good folke bee iguerdoned, the whiche folkes sene that her proper wille ne sente hem to that one, ne to that other. That is to sain, neither to good ne harme, but constraineth hem certain necessitie of thynges to comen, then ne shullen there neuer been, ne neuer weren vice ne vertue, but it shullen rather be confusiō of all desertes, medled without discreciō. And yet ther folowe̅th an other inconuenie̅ce, of the whiche there ne maie be thought no more felonous, ne more wicked.

and that is thus, that so as the order of thynges is idel, and cometh of the purueiaunce of God, ne that nothyng nis lefull, to the counsailes of mankinde, as who saieth, that men haue no power to doen nothyng, ne will nothyng, then followeth it that our vices been referred to the maker of al good, as who saith then foloweth it, that God ought to haue the blame of our vices, sith he constraineth vs by necessitie to doen vices, then nis there no reason to hopen in God, ne to praien to God, for what should any wight hopen to God, or why should he praien to GOD, sith that the ordenaunce of destinie, whiche that ne maie not been enclined, knitteth and streineth al thinges, that men maie deliren. Then should ther be doen awaie thilke onely aliaunce, betwen God and man, that is to sain, to hopen and to praien. But by the price of right wisnesse, and of very meknesse, wee deseruen the guerdon of Diuine grace, whiche that is inestimable, that is to say, that is so great, that it ne maie not been full praised, and this is onely ꝑ maner, that is to saie, hope and praiers. For whiche it semeth that men woll speak with God, and by reason of supplicacion, ben conioined to thilke clerenes, that nis not approched no rather, or that men seken it and impetren it. And if men ne wene not the hope ne praiers, ne haue no strēgthes, by ꝑ necessitie of things to comen receiued, what thing is there then, by whiche we mowen been cōioyned, and cleuen to thilke souerain prince of thynges. For whiche it behoueth by necessitie, that the linage of mankinde, as thou song a little here beforne, bee departed and vnioined from his wele, and fallen of his beginnyng, that is to saine God.

Que nam discors federa rerum, Causa resoluit? Quis tanta deus, &c.

What discordable cause hath to rēt, and vnioyned the bindyng or the aliance of thynges, that is to sain, the coniunccions of God, and of man: whiche God hath established so greate battaile, betwene these twoo sothfaste, or verie thynges, that is to sain, betwene the purueiaunce of God, and free will, that been singuler, ꝑ deuided, ne that thei ne wollen not been medled, ne coupled togeder? But there nis no discorde to the very thinges, but thei cleauen alwaie certain to hem self. But the thought of man confounded and ouerthrowen, by the darke mēbers of the body, ne maie not by fire of his darked lookyng, that is to saine, by the vigour of his insight, while the soul is in the bodie, knowen the thyn subtell knittynges of thynges. But wherefore eschaufeth it so by so great loue, to finden thilke notes of soth icouered, that is to saine, wherefore eschaufeth the thought of man, by so greate desire, to knowe thilke notifications, that been hid vnder the couertures of sothe? Wote it ought thilke thynges, that it anguisshous desireth to knowe? As who saieth naie, for no man ne trauaileth, for to weten thynges that he wote. And therefore the terte saieth thus.

But who trauaileth to weten thynges yknowe? And if that he ne knoweth hem not, what seketh thilke blinde thought? what is he that desireth any thynges, of whiche he wote right naught? As who saith, who so desireth any thynges, needes som what he knoweth of it, or els he ne coud not desiren it. Or who maie followe thynges, that ne been not i wiste, and though that he seke the thynges, where shall he finde hem? what wight that is all vnconnyng and ignoraunt, maie know that for me, that is ifounde.

But when the soule beholdeth, and seeth the high thought, that is to saine God, then knoweth it togither the somme and singularities, that is to sain, the principles, and enriche of hem by hymself. But now while the soule is hid in the cloude, and in the darkenesse of the membres of the bodie, it ne hath not al forpeten it self, but it withholdeth the somme of thynges, and leseth the singularities. Thi who so that seeketh sothenesse, he nis in neither nother habite, for he wote not all, ne he ne hath not all forpetten, but yet hym remēbreth the somme of thinges, that he withholdeth, and asketh counsaile, and retreateth depliche thinges iseen beforne, that is to saine, the great somme in his mind, so that he mow adden the partes, that he hath forpetten to thilke parties, that he hath witholden.

Tum illa Vetus inquit, hec est de prouidencia querela: Marcuoq; Tullio, &c.

Then said she, this is (ꝑ the) olde question of the purueiaunce of GOD. And Marcus Tullius, when he deuided the Deuinacions, that is to saine, in his bookes that he wrote of deuinacions, he moued greatlie this questiō, and thou thy self haste isought it moche, and vtterlie and long, but yet ne hath it not been determined

determined, ne isped fermelie and diligentlie many of you, and the cause of this darknesse, and of this difficultie is, for that the mouing of the reaſō of mankinde, ne maie not mouen in, that is to saine, applien or ioynen to the implicitie of the diuine prescience, the which implicite of the diuine prescience, if that mē mighten thinken it in any maner. That is to saine, that if men mighten thinke, and comprehenden the thinges, that God seeth himself then there dwelled vtterly no doubt, the whiche reason and cause of difficulties, I shall allie at last to shewe & to speden, when I haue ake ispended, & answered to thy reasons, by whiche thou art moued, for I aske why thou wenest, that thilke reasons of hem that assoi-in this question, ne bee not spedfull inough sufficient, the whiche soluciō or the which mon, for that it demeth, that the prescience not of necessitie of thinges to come, as who aith, any other waie then thus, but that the e thinges, that the prescience wote before e maie not vnbetiden, that is to saine, that hei moten betide. But then, if that prescience putteth none necessitie to thynges to co-men, as thou thy self hast confessed it, and beowe a little here before, what cause, or hat is it, as who saith, there maie no cause e, by whiche that the endes voluntarie of hynges, mighten be constrained to certaine nidynge. For by grace of polician, so that hou maie the better vnderstand this that fo-loweth, I suppose that there ne bee no presciece: then alhe I (q she) in as moche as apermeth to that, shoulden then thynges that omen of free will, be constrained to betiding y necessitie? Boecius. Naie (q I). Philosop.
Then ayen warde (q she) I suppose that there e prescience, but that it ne putteth no necesitie to thinges, that trowe I that thilk same ndome of will, shall dwellen al hole and ab-olute, and vnbounden. But thou wilt saine, hat albeit so that prescience, nis not cause of he necessitie of betiding to thinges to comen gates yet it is a signe, that the thinges ben betiden by necessitie. By this maner then, though that prescience had neuer be, yet al ates or at lest waie, it is certain thyng, that ales of betidinges of thinges, to come shoul n bee necessarie. For euery thing sheweth & ignifieth onely, what the thing is, but it ne aketh not the thing that it signifieth. For hich it behoueth, first to shewe that nothing betideth, that it ne betideth by necessitie: that it maie appeare, that the prescience is signe of necessitie: or els if there nere no neces-sitie, certes thilke prescience ne might not be signe of thyng that nis not. But certes, it is now certain, that the proue of this susteined by stedfast reason, ne shall not been ladde, ne proued by signes ne by argumētes, taken fro without, but by causes couenable and neces-sarie. But thou maiest saine, how maie it bee that the things ne betiden not, that ben pur-ueied to comen? But certes, right as we tro-wen that the thynges, whiche that the purueiaunce wote before, to comen ne be not to betiden. But that ne sholde we not demen, but rather although thei shall betide, yet ne haue thei no necessitie of her kinde to betiden: and this maiest thou lightly apperceiuen, by this that I shall saine. For we seen many thinges, when thei been before our yne, right as mē seen the Carter woorchyng in the tourning, and in the attempring or a dressing of his cartes or chariottes, and by this maner, as who saieth, maieste thou vnderstande of all other werkemenne. Is there then any necessitie, as who saieth, in our lokyng, that constraineth or compelleth, any of thilke thinges to been doen so? Boecius. Naie (q I) for in vaine and in baine were all the effecte of crafte, if that all thynges weren moued, by cōstrainyng of our yen, or of our sight. Philosophie. The thyn-ges then (q she) that when that men doen hē, ne haue no necessitie that men doen hem, eke the same thynges first or thei bee dooen, thei been to comē without necessitie: for why ther been some thynges to betiden, of whiche the endes and the betidynges of hem, been absolute and quite of all necessitie. For certes, I ne trowe not that any manne would saine this, that the thynges that menne doen now, that thei ne were to betiden first, er thei wer doen.
And thilke same thinges, although men hadden wiste hem before, yet thei haue free betidynges. For right as science of thynges present, ne bryngeth in no necessitie, to thynges that menne doen, right so to the prescience of thynges to comen, ne bringeth in none neces-sitie, to thinges to betiden. But thou maieste saine, that of thilk same it is doubted, as whether that of thilke thynges, that ne haue non issues and betidyng's necessaries, if thereof maie been any prescience. For certes, thei semen to discorden, for thou wenest, that if that thynges been seen before, that necessitie fol-loweth hem, and if necessitie faileth hem, thei ne might not been wiste before, and that nothyng maie be comprehended by science, but certaine. And if tho thynges ne haue no certain betidynges, be purueighed as certain, it should be darkenesse of opinion, not sothfastnesse of science. And thou wenest that it be diuers, fro the holinesse of science, that any mā should deme a thyng, to bee otherwise then it is it self, and the cause of this errour is, that of al the thinges, ꝑ euery wight hath knowe thei wene that tho thinges been knowe, onely by the strengthe, and by the nature of the thynges, that been wiste or knowe, and it is all the contrarie: for all that euer is knowe, it is rather comprehended and knowe, not after his strength and his nature, but after the faculties, that is to saine, the power and the nature of hem that knowē. And for that this thyng, should now shewe by a short ensample the roundnesse of a bodie, otherwise then the sight of the ye knoweth it, & otherwise then the touchyng. The lookyng, by castyng of his beames, watteth and seeth from a farre, all the bodie togither, without mouyng of it self but the touchyng cleaueth to the rounde bodie, and moueth about the enuironnyng, and comprehendeth the parties by roundenesse, and the man hymself, otherwise beholdeth hym, and otherwaies imaginaciō, and otherwise reason, and otherwise intelligence: For the witte comprehendeth without forth, the figure of the bodie of man, that is vnstablished in the matter subiect. But the imagination comprehendeth onelie, the figure without the matter. Reason surmounteth imaginacion, and comprehendeth by vniuersall lokyng, the common speache, but the ye of intelligence is higher, for it surmounteth the enuironnyng of the vniuersitie, and looketh ouer that, by pure subtilitie of thought. The like same simple forme of man, that is perdurable, in the diuine thought, in whiche this ought greatlie to be considered, that the hiest strengthe for to comprehenden thynges, embraceth and containeth the lower strengthe, but ꝑ lower strēgth, ne ariseth not in no maner to the higher strength. For witte ne maie comprehende nothyng out of matter, ne the imagination, ne looketh not the vniuersalle speces, ne reason ne taketh not the simple forme, so as intelligence taketh it. But intelligence that looketh al abouen, when it hath comprehended the forme, it knoweth and demeth all the thynges, that been vnder the forme, but she knoweth hem in thilke maner in whiche it comprehendeth thilke same simple forme, that nemaie neuer bee knowen of none of that other, that is to saie, to none of tho three forelaied strengthes of the soule. For it knoweth the vniuersitie of reason, and the figure of imagination, and the sensible materiall conceiued by wit, ne it ne vseth not ne of reason, ne of imagination, ne of witte without forthe, but it beholdeth all thynges, so as I shall saie, by a stroke of thought fermely, without discours of collacion. Certes, reason when it looketh any thyng vniuersall, it ne vseth not of imagination ne witte, and algates yet it comprehendeth the thynges imaginable, and sensible, for reason is she that definitheth, the vniuersalle of her conceipte, right thus. Man is a reasonable two footed beast, and how so that this knowyng is vniuersall, yet nis there no wight, that ne wote well, that a man is a thynge imaginable and sensible, and this same considereth well reason, but that nis not by imagination, nor by witte, but it loketh it by reasonable conceipcion. Also imagination, albeit so, that it taketh of witte the beginnyng, to seen and formen the figures, algates although that witte were not presente, yet it enuironneth and comprehendeth all thynges sensible, not by reason sensible of demyng, but by reasō imaginatife. Seest thou not then, that all ꝑ thinges in knowyng, vsen more of her faculte, or of her power, then thei dooen of the faculte, or of power of thynges that been to knowen, ne that is no wronge, for so as euery iudgemente is: that deede or doyng of hym, that demeth, it behoueth that euery wight performe his werke, and his entencion, not of foraine power, but of his proper power.

Quondam porticus attulit. Obscuros nimium senes. &c.

When the porche, that is to saie, a gate of the toune of Athenes there as Philosophers hadden congregacion to dispute, thilke porche brought sometyme olde men, full darke in her sentences, that is saie Philosophers, that highten Stoiciens, that wende that Images and sensibilities, that is to saie, sensible imaginacions, or els imaginacions of sensible thinges, were empzinted into soules, fro bodies without forthe, as who saieth, thilke Stoiciens wenden that the soule had bee naked of hymself, as a mirrour, or a cleane perchemine, so that all figures musten first comen fro thynges, fro without in to soules, & been empzinted into soules, right as we been wonte, some-

tyme

tyme by a swifte pointen, to siren letters emprinted in the smothnesse, or in the plainesse of the table of ware, or in þ parchemine, that hath no figure ne note in it. Glose. But now argueth Boece against that opinō and saith thus. But if the thinking soule ne vnpliteth nothyng, that is to saine, ne dooeth thyng by his proper mouing, but suffreth and lieth lubbert to the figures, and to the notes of bodies without forthe, and yeldeth Images idell, ycell and baine, in the maner of a mirroure. whence thriueth then, or whence cometh the like knowyng in our soulle, that discerneth and beholdeth all thynges, and whence is the like strengthe, that beholdeth the singuler thynges, or els whence is the strengthe, that deuideth thynges knowe, and thilke strength that gathered togither thynges deuided, and strength that choseth þ enterchaunged waie: ne somtyme it heaueth the hedde, that is to saie, that it heaueth vp the entencīō, to right high thynges, and somtyme it discendeth in wright lowe thynges, and when it retourneth into hym self, it reprooueth and destroyeth the false thynges, by the true thynges.

Certes, this strength is cause more efficīēt, and mochе more mightie, to seen and to knowen thynges, then thilke cause that suffreth and receiueth the notes and figures, impressed in maner of matter. Algates the passion, that is to saie, the sufferaunce or the witte in the quicke bodie, goeth before exitynge, and mouyng the strengthes of the thought, right as was when that clearenesse smiteth the yen, and moueth hem to seen, or right so as voyce or soun hurleth to the eares, and commoueth hem to hearken, then is the strengthe of the thought moued and excited, cleapeth forth to semblable mouynges, the speces that it halte within it self, and addeth the speces of the notes, and to thynges without forthe, and medleth the Images of thynges without forthe, to thynges hid within hymself.

But what is that in bodies to be feled, that is to saie, in the taking: and in the knowyng of bodily thynges. And albeit so that þ qualities of bodies, that be obiecte fro without forthe, mouen and entalenten the instrumentes of the wittes, and all bee it so, that the passion of the bodie, that is to saine, the witte, or the sufraunce, goeth before the strength, or the worthynge courage, the whiche passion or sufferaunce, cleapeth forthe the deede of the thought in it self, and moueth and exciteth in this meane while, the formes that resten within forthe, and insensible bodies, as I haue said, our courages nis not taught or emprinted, by passion to knowe these thinges, but demeth and knoweth of his owne strength. the passion or sufferaunce, subiecte to the bodie: mochе more then the thynges been absolute, and quicke fro all talentes, or affeccīōs of bodies, as God or his Angels, ne folowen not in discernyng thynges obiect fro without forth, but thei accomplishen and speden, the deedes of her thought. By this reason then, there comen many maner of knowynges, to diuerse and to differyng substaunces.

For the witte of the bodie, the whiche wit is naked, and dispoiled of all other knowyng, thilke witte cometh to beastes, the whiche ne mowen not mouen hem self here and there, as Oysters and Muscelles, and other suche Shelfishe of the Sea, that cleauen and been nourished to rockes, but the imagination cometh of remuable beastes, that semen to haue talente to flien, or to desiren any thyng: But reason is alonelie the linage of mankinde, right as intelligence is alonelie the Diuine nature, of whiche it followeth, that the like knowyng is more worthe then is either, sens it knoweth by his proper nature, not onelie his subiecte, as who saieth, it ne knoweth not alonelie, that appertaineth properlie to his knowyng, but it knoweth the subiectes of all other knowynges. But how shall it thā bee, if that witte and imagination, striuen ayen reasonyng, and saine that of the like vniuersall thynge, that reason weneth to seen, that it nis right naught, for witte and imagination saine, that that is sensible or imaginable, it ne maie not been vniuersall.

Then is there either the iudgement of reason sothe, ne that there nis nothyng sensible, or els for that reason wote well, that many thynges been subiect to wit, and to imagination: then is the conceptiō of reason vain and false, whiche that loketh and comprehendeth that that is sensible and singuler, as vniuersall. And if that the reason would answere ayenste these twoo, that is to saie, to witte and imagination, and saie that sothly she her self that is to saine reason, loketh and comprehendeth by reasō of vniuersalitie, both that that is sensible, and that that is imaginable, and thilke twoo, that is to saine, witte and imaginacion, ne mowen not stretchen hem self, to the knowynge of vniuersalitee, for that the knowing of hem ne maie not exceden, ne surmounten the bodily figures. Certes, of the knowyng of thynges, mē ought en rather yeuen more credence, to the more stedfast, and to the more perfite iudgemente, in this maner striuyng, then we that haue strengthe of reasonyng, and of imaginaciō, and of witte, that is to saie, by reason and by imagination, wee would rather praise the cause of reason, as who saieth, then the cause of witte, and of ymaginacion. Semblable thing is it, that the reason of mankinde ne weneth not, that the Diuine intelligence, beholdeth or knoweth thynges to come, but right as the reason of mankinde knoweth hem: For thou arguste thus, that if that it ne seme not to men, that some thynges haue certaine betidynges, thei ne maie not be wiste, before certainlie to betiden, and then is there no prescience of thilke thynges, and if we trowe, that prescience bee in these thynges, then is there nothyng, that betideth by necessitie. But if we might haue the iudgemente, of the diuine thought, as we been parteners of reason, right so as we haue demed, that it behoueth by imagination and witte, and beneth reason, right so would we demen, that it were rightfull thyng, that mannes reason ought to submitte it self, to be beneath the diuine thought, for whiche if wee maie, as who saieth, that if wee maie, I counsaile, that we enhaunce vs in the height of thilke souerain intelligence, for there shall reason well seen that, that it ne maie not beholde in it self, & certes, that is thus, in what maner the prescience of God, seeth all thyngs and diffinisheth, all though thei haue no certain betidynges: ne this is none opinion, but rather the simplicitie of the souerain science that is not thet, within no maner of boundes

Quam varijs terras animalia permeant figuris.
Namq; alia extento sunt corpore. &c.

THE beastes passen by the yearthes, by full diuers figures, for some of hem haue her bodies straught, and crepē in the dust, and drawen after hem a trace, or a forough continued, that is to saie, as Neders and Snailes, and other bestes, by the wanderyng lightnesse of her winges, beaten the windes, and ouer swimmen the spaces of the long aire, by moste fliyng.

And other beastes gladden hem self, to diggen her traces, or her steppes in the yearthe, with her goyng, or with her feete, and to gon either by the greene fieldes, or els to walken vnder the woodes. And all it be so that thou seest, that thei discorden by diuers formes, algates her faces enclined, heavieth her dulle wittes, onely the linage of manne beaueth highest his hie hedde, and standeth light with his vpright body, and beholdeth the yearthes vnder hym. And but if thou yearthlie manne waresse euill out of thy wit, this figure amonesteth, thee that alkest the heauen, with thy right visage, and hast areised thy forehedde, to bearen vp on high thy courage, so that thy thought ne bee not heauied, ne put lowe vnder foote, sith that thy body is so high arised.

Quoniam igitur vti paulo ante monstratum est, omne quod scitur. &c.

THerefore then, as I haue shewed a little here before that all thing that it wist, nis not knowē by his nature proper, but by the nature of hem that cōprehenden it. Let vs lokē now, in as moche as it is lefull to vs, as who saieth, let vs looken now as wee maie, whiche that is the estate of the Diuine substaunce, so that wee maie well knowe, the what his science is. To common iudgement of al creatures reasonables, then is, that god is eterne. Let vs consider then, what is eternitee, for certes, that shall shewen vs togider, the diuine nature, and the diuine science. Eternitee then is perfite possession, and all together of life interminable, and that sheweth the more clerelie, by the comparison or collacion of tempozall thynges.

For all thyng that liueth in tyme, it is present, and procedeth fro preteritees, into futures, that is to saine, frō time passed, into time comming: ne there nis nothing established in tyme, that maie enbracen togither, all the space of this life, for certes, yet ne hath it not taken, the tyme of to morowe, and it hath lost that of yester daie. And certes, in þ life of this daie, ye ne liuen no more, but right as in this mouable, & transitorie moment. Then thilke thyng that suffereth tempozall condicion, all though that it neuer began to be, ne thought it neuer ceale to be (as Aristoteles demed of þ worzld) and although the life of it be stretched with infinite of tyme, yet algates nis it no sothe thynge, as men might trowen by right that it is eterne. For all though that it comprehende, and embrace the space of the life infinite, finite, yet algates ne embraseth it not the space of the life all togither, for it ne hath not the futures that be not yet: Ne it ne hath no longer the preterities that ben done or passed. But thilke thing than, that hath and comprehendeth togider all the plente of the life interminable, to whom there ne faileth nought of the future, and to whom ther nis nought of þ preterite escaped or passed, thilke same is ywitnessed and proued by right to ben eterne. And it behouethe by necessite that thilke thing be alway presente to him selfe, and competent, as who saith, alway present to him selfe, and so mighty, that all be right at his plesaunce, and that he haue al present the infinite of the mouable tyme. Wherfore some men trowen wrongfullye, that whan they heren that it semed so Plato, that this world had neuer beginninge of time, that it neuer shall haue faylynge: they wene in thilke maner, that this worlde be maked eterne, wyth his maker, as who saythe, they wene that this worlde and god be maked together eterne. And that is a wrõgful wening in other thing it is to be ladde by the life interminable, as Plato graũted to the worlde, and other thinge it is to enbrace togither, al the presence of the life that is interminable, which thinge is clere and manifest to the dyuine thought. Ne it ne shulde not seme to vs that god is elder than thinges that bẽ maked by quantite of time, but rather by the proprete of his simple nature. For this ylke infynyte mouynges of temperal thynges, folowyth thys presentary estate of thys lyfe immouable, and so as it ne maie not countrefeterne faine it, ne be euelike to it for the immobilite, that is to say, that is in the eternite of god, it faileth & faileth in to mowing fro the simplicite of the presence of god, and discreaseth in the infinite quantite of future and preterite. And soas it may not haue togyder all the plentie of the lyfe, algates yet for as moch as it ceaseth neuer, for to bẽ in some maner, yet it semeth somdele to vs, that it followeth and ressembleth thilke thinge, that it ne may not attaine to ne fulfillẽ, and bindeth it selfe to some maner presence of thys lytel moment: the whiche presence of this lytel & swifte momẽt for that it beareth a maner ymage of lykenesse of the aye dwelling of god it graunteth to sochе maner thinges, as it betideth to, þ it semeth hem as these thynges haue ben, and ben. And for that the presence of sochе lytel momẽt ne may not dwell, therfore it rauished and toke thinfinite waie of time, that is to saye, by succession, and by this manere it is done, for that it shulde continue the life in goyng, of the whiche lyfe it ne might not enbrace the plẽtie of dwelling. And for thy, if we wollen put worthy names to thinges that folowen Plato, let vs saye than sothelye, that God is eterne, and that the worlde is perpetuell. Than sithe euery iudgement knoweth & comprehendeth by his owne nature, thinges that ben subiect vnto hym, there is to god alwayes an eterne and a presentarie estate. And the scyence of hym that ouerpasseth al temporal moment, dwelleth in simplicite of his presence, and enbraseth and consydereth all the infynite spaces of tymes preteritees, and of tymes futures. And loketh in his simple knowing, al thynges of preterite, right as they were ydon presently right nowe. If thou wolte than thynken & aduise the prescience, by whiche it knoweth al thinges, thou ne shalt not demẽ it as prescience of thinges to comẽ, but thou shalt demen more rightfully that is scicnce of presence or of instance that neuer ne faileth, for whiche it nis not ycleped prouidence, but it shuld rather bẽ cleped purueiaunce, which is established full ferre fro right low thinges, & beholdeth from a ferre al thinges, right as it were fro the hye hyght of thynges. Why alleft thou than, or why disputeft thou than þ thilke thynges ben doen by neceſſite, whiche that ben ysene & yknowen by the diuine sight, sythe that forsothe men ne maken nat thilke thynges necessary, whiche that they sene ben ydon in her sight, for addeth thy beholding any necessite, to thilke thinges whiche thou beholdeſt present? B. Naye (q I) þ. Certes (q she) than, yf men mighten maken any digne comparison or collacion of the presence diuine, and of the presence of manhind, right so as ye sene some thinges in this temporal presence, right so seeth god all thing by his eterne presence. Wherfore this diuine prescience ne chaſigeth not the nature of the propertie of thinges, but beholdeth soch thinges present to him warde, as they shulden betyden to you warde in tyme to comen. Ne it ne confoundeth not the iudgement of thinges, but by one syght of his thought, he knoweth the thinges to comen, as wel necessary as not necessarie. Right so whan ye sene togither a man walke on the erthe, and the sonne arise in the heuẽ, al be it so that ye sene al togither that one and that other: yet neuertheles ye de-men and discernen, that that one is voluntary, and that other is necessary: Right so than the deuine lokinge, beholdinge al thinges vnder him, ne troubleth nat the qualite of thinges that ben certainly present to him warde, but as to the condicion of tyme, forsothe they ben future. for whiche it folowith that this nys none opinio, but rather a stedfaste knowing ystrengthed by sothenesse, that whan that god knoweth any thinge to be, he ne vnwote nat that thilke thynge wante the necessite to be, this is to sain, that when that god knoweth any thinge to betide, he wote wel that it ne hath no necessite to betide.

And yf thou seist here that thilke thing that god seeth to betide, it ne may nat vnbetide, as who saythe it mote betyde, and thilke thinge that ne may nat vnbetide, it mote betiden by necessite, I that thou streyne me to this name of the necessite. Certes I will well confessen and beknowen a thynge of full sad trouthe, but vnneth shall there anie wight mowe lene it or come thereto, but if that he be beholder of the diuine thought, for I wil answere the thus, that thilke thinge that is future when it is referred to the diuine knowinge than it is necessarie. But certes whan it is vnderstanden in his owne kind, men sene it vtterly free and absolute fro all necessyte. For certes there ben two maners of necessitees, that one necessite is simple, as thus, ỳ it behoueth by necessite that all men be mortall or deedlye. Another necessite is condycionell, as thus, yf thou wost that a man walketh, it behoueth by necessite that he walke, thilke thing than that any wight hath yknowe to be, it ne may nat be none other wyse than he knoweth it to be. But this condicion ne draweth not with her thilke necessite simple, for certes this necessite condicionell, the propre nature of it ne maketh it nat, but the adiection of the condicion maketh it. For no necessite ne constraineth a man to gon, ỳ goeth by his proper wil al be it so that whā he goth, that is necessary that he goth. Right on this same maner than, yf that the purueiaunce of god seeth any thinge present, than mote thilke thinge ben by necessyte, all thoughe that it ne haue no necessyte of his owne nature. But certes the futures that betyden by fredon of arbytrie, god seeth hem al togider present. These thynges than it they ben referred to the diuine sight, than ben they maked necessarie by the condicion of the diuine knowinge. But certes, if thilke thinges ben considered by hem selfe, they been absolute of necessitie, and ne forleten not, ne ceasen not of the libertie of her owne nature. Than certes, without dout all the thinges shullen ben don whiche that god wote before that they ben to comen and betiden of fre arbitrie, or of free will, that al be it so that they betiden, yet algates ne lese they not her proper nature in beynge, by the whiche firste or they weren dorn, they hadden power not to haue betidde. Boecius. what is this to saine than (ỳ I) that thinges ne be not necessary by her proper nature, so that they comen in al her maners in the liknesse of necessie, by condicion of the diuine science: Philosophie. This is the difference (ỳ she) that tho thinges which ỳ I purposed thee a lytel here before, that is to saine, Sonne a rising, and the man walking, that ther whiles that thilke thinges ben done, they ne might not ben vndoone. Natheless that one of hem or it was done, it behoueth by necessite that it was doone, but not that other. Right so it is here that the thynges whiche that god hath present, withouten dout they shullen ben, but some of hem discendeth of the nature of thynges, as the sonne arisinge, and some discendeth of the power of the doers, as the manne walkinge. Boecius. Then said I, no wronge, that if these thynges bee referred to the diuine knowing, than ben they necessarie, and if they been considered by hem selfe, than been they absolute fro the bonde of necessite. Right so as al thinges that apereth or sheweth to ỳ wittes, if thou referre hem to reason it is vniuersall, and if thou loke it or refer it to it self, than is it singuler. But nowe if thou saiest thus, that if that it be in my power to chaungen my purpose, than shall I voiden the purueiaunce of god, whan paraventure I shall haue chaunged the thinges whiche that he knoweth before.

Philosophie. Than shall I answeren the thus: Certes thou maiste wel chaunge thy purpose, but for as moche as the present sothenesse of the diuine purueiaūce beholdeth that thou maiste chaunge thy purpose, and whether thou chaunge it or no, and whider ward that thou tourne it, thou ne maist not eschue the diuine prescience, right so thou ne maiste not flid the sight of the present eye, although that thou tourne thy self by thy fre wil in to diuers actions. But thou maiste saine ayen to this thus: How shall it than be, shall not ỳ diuine science ben chaunge by my disposi-

cion, whan that I will one thing nowe, and nowanother thinge? And thilke prescience ne semeth it not to entrechaunge stoundes of knowinge, as who saithe, ne shal it not semen to vs, that the diuine prescience entrechaūgeth his diuers stoundes of knowinge, so that it knowe sometime one thing, and sometime it knoweth the contrarie of that thing? Philo.

Nay forsothe quod she, for the deuine light renneth before me and seeth al the futures, and cleyeth hem ayen, and retourneth hem to the propre prescience of his propre knowinge, ne he entrechaūgeth not, so as thou weenest the boundes of his forknowing, as nowe this, nowe that: but he dwelling aye cometh before, and embraceth at o stroke al the mutacions. And this prescience to comprehenden and to sene al thinges, god ne hath not take not the betidinges of thinges to comen but of his propre symplicite. And hereby is assoiled thilke thinges ye thou puttest a litel here before me, that is to saine, that it is vnworthy thing to sain, that our futures yeuen cause of the prescience of God. For certes strength of the deuine science, whiche that embraceth al thinges by his presentary knowing, establisheth maner to all thynges, and it ne oweth not to latter thinges. And sithe ye thete, thinges ben thus, that is to saine, that necessite is not in thinges by the diuine prescience, thā ether fredom of arbitrie that dwelleth hole and vnwemmed to mortalmen, ne the lawes ne purposen not wycked medes, and paines to the willinges of men, that ben vnboundē and quite of all necessite: And God beholder and forewetere of al thinges dwelleth aboue, and the presente eternite of sight, renneth alwaye wyth the diuers qualite of our dedes, dispensyng or ordeining medes to good men, and tourmētes to wicked men. Ne in ydel ne in vaine ne ben ther not put in god hope and praiers, that ne mowen not ben vnspedeful, ne without effecte, whan they den rightful.

Withstande than and eschewe thou vyces, worshippe and loue thou vertues, areyse thy corage to rightful hopes, yelde thou humble praiers and highe. Greate necessyte of prouesse and of vertue, is encharged and commaunded to you if ye nil not dissimulen, sith that ye worchen and doone, that is to saine, your dedes and youre werkes before ye eyen of the iudge, that seeth & also that demeth al thinges. Deo gracias.

Thus endeth the boke of Boecius of the consolacio of Philosophie.

The dreame of Chaucer.

I Haue greate wonder by this light
Howe I lyue, for daye ne night
I may not slepe, weiny nought
I haue so many an ydle thought
Purely for defaute of slepe
That by my trouth, I take no hepe
Of nothing, howe it cometh or gothe
Ne me nys nothing leſe nor lothe
Al is liche goood to me
Ioye or sorowe, where so it be
For I haue felinge in nothing
But as it were a maled thing
Alday in pointe to fall adoun
For sorowful ymagination
Is alway wholy in my minde
And well ye wote, againſte kinde
It were to liuen in this wise
For nature wolde not suffise
To none erthy creature
Not longe tyme to endure
Without slepe, and be in sorowe
And I ne may, ne night ne morowe
Slepe, and this melancolye
And dredde I haue for to die
Defaute of slepe and heuinesse
Hath slaine my spirite of quichenesse
That I haue lost al lustiheed
Soche fantasies ben in mine heed
So I not what is best to do
But men might aske me whi so I may not slepe, and what me is But natheles, who aske thys
Leseth his asking trewly
My selfe can not tel why
The sothe, but trewly as I gesse
I holde it be a sickenesse
That I haue suffred this eyght yere
And yet my boote is neuer the nere
For there is phisicien but one
That may me heale, but that is done
Passe we ouer vntil efte
That wil not be, mote nedes be lefte
Our first mater is good to hepe
So whan I sawe I might not slepe
Til nowe late, this other night
Vpon my bedde I sate vpright
And bade one reche me a booke

The dreame

A Romaunce, and it me toke
To rede, and driue the night away
For me thought it beter play
Than play either at Chesse or tables
And in this boke were written fables
That Clerkes had in olde time
And other poetes, put in rime
To rede, and for to be in minde
While men loued the lawe of kinde
This boke ne speake, but of soche thinges
Of quenes lyues, and of kinges
And many other thinges smale
Amonge al this I fonde a tale
That me thought a wonder thing.
This was the tale: There was a king
That hight Seies, and had a wife
The best that might beare lyfe
And this quene hight Alcione
So it befil, thereafter sone
This king wol wenden ouer see
To tellen shortly, whan that he Was in the see, thus in this wise
Soche a tempest gan to ryse
That brake her masse, and made it fal
And cleefte her ship, and dreint hem al
That neuer was founde, as it telles
Borde ne man, ne nothing elles
Right thus this king Seyes loste his life
Nowe for to speake of Alcione his wife
This ladie that was lefte at home
Hath wonder, that the kinge ne come Home, for it was a longe terme
Anon her herte began to yerne
And for that her thought euermo
It was not wele, her thought so
She longed so after the king
That certes it were a pitous thing
To tel her bertely sorowful lyfe
That she had, this noble wife
For him alas, she loued alderbest
Anon she sent both eest and west
To seke him, but they founde nought
Alas (quod she) that I was wrought
And where my lorde my loue be deed?
Certes I nyl neuer eate breed
I make a vowe to my god here
But I mowe of my lorde here
Soche sorowe this lady to her toke
That trewly, I that made this boke
Had soche pite, and soche routhe
To rede her sorowe, that by my trouthe
I tarde the worse al the morowe
After to thinken on her sorowe
So whan this lady couthe here no worde
That no man myght finde her lorde
Ful ofte she swowned, and saide alas
For sorow, ful nigh woode she was Ne she coude no rede but one
But downe on knees she sate anone
And wept, that pite was to here
A mercy swete lady dere
(quod she) to Juno her goddesse
Helpe me out of this distresse
And yeue me grace my lorde to se
Soone, or wete where so he be Or howe he fareth, or in what wise
And I shal make you sacrifice
And holly yours become I shal
With good wil, body, herte and al
And but thou wolte this lady swete
Sende me grace to slepe and mete
In my slepe some certaine swenen
Where through that I may knowe euen
Whether my lorde be quicke or deed
With that worde she hinge downe the heed
And fel in a swoune, as colde as stone
Her women caught her vp anone
And brought her in bed al naked
And she forweped and forwaked
Was wery, and thus the deed slepe
Fel on her, for she toke kepe
Through Juno, that had herde her boone
That made her to slepe soone
For as she praide, right so was don
In dede, for Juno right anon
Called thus her messangere
To do her eraunde, and he come nere Whan he was come, she bad him thus Go bet (quod Juno) to Morpheus
Thou knowest him wel, the god of slepe
Nowe vnderstande wel, and take kepe
Say thus on my halfe, that he Go fast in to the great see
And bid him that on al thinge
He take vp Seis body the kinge
That lieth ful pale, and nothinge rody
Bid him crepe in to the body
And do it gone to Alcione
The quene, there she lyeth alone
And shewe her shortely it is no nay
Howe it was dreynt this other day
And do the body speake right so Right as it was wonned to do
The whiles that it was alyue
Go nowe fast, and hye the blyue.
This messanger toke leue and went Upon his way, and neuer he stente
Tyl he came to the darke valey
That stante betwene rockes twey
There neuer yet grewe corne ne gras

Ne

Betree, ne naught that ought was Beest ne man, ne nought elles
Saue that there were a fewe welles
Came renning fro the clyffes adowne
That made a deedly slepynge sowne
And rennen downe right by a caue
That was vnder a rocke ygraue
Inyd the valey wonder depe
There thesе goddes lay a slepe
Morpheus and Eclympasteyze
That was the god of slepes heire
That slepte, and did none other werke
This caue was also as derke
As bel pitte, ouer all aboute
They had good leyser for to route
To dye who might slepe best
Some hinge her chinne vpon her brest
And slepte vpright her heed yhed
And some lay naked in her bed
And slepte whiles their daies last
This messaunger come renning fast
And cried ho ho, awake anone
It was for naught, there herde him none
I wake (quod he) who lieth there
And blewe his horne right in her eere
And cried awaketh wonder hie
This god of slepe, with his one eye
Cast vp, and asked who clepeth there
Iram I (quod this messangere)
Juno bade thou shuldest gone
And tolde him what he shuld done
As I haue tolde you here before
It is no nede reherse it more
And wente his way whan he had saide
Anone this god of slepe abraide
Out of his slepe and gan to go
And did as he had bidde him do
Toke vp the deed body soone
And bare it forth to Alcione
His wife the quene, there as she lay
Right euen a quarter before day
And stode right at her beddes fete
And called her right as she hete
By name, and said: My swete wife
I wake, let be your sorowful lyfe
For in your sorow, there lyth no rede
For certes swete loue, I am but dede
Ye shall me neuer on lyue yse
But good swete herte that ye
Bury my body, for soche a tide
Ye mowe it finde, the see beside
And fare wel swete, my worldes blisse
I pray god your sorowe lysse
Co lytel while our blisse lasteth
With that her eyen vp she casteth
And sawe naught, alas (quod she) for sorowe
And died within the thirde morowe
But what she said more in that sowe
I may nat tel you as nowe
It were to longe for to dwel
My first matere I wil you tel
Wherfore I haue tolde this thinge
Of Alcione, and Seys the kinge
For thus moche dare I say well
I had be doluen eueridel
And deed, right through defaute of slepe
Yf I ne had red, and take kepe
Of this tale nert before
And I wil tel you wherfore
For I ne might for bote ne hale
Slepe, or I had redde this tale
Of this dreinte Seis the kinge
And of the goddes of slepinge
Whan I had red this tale wele
And ouerloked it euerydele
Me thought wonder, if it were so
For I had neuer herde speake or tho
Of no goddes, that coude make Men to slepe, ne for to wake
And I ne knewe neuer god but one
And in my game, I said anone
And yet me lyst right euil to play
Rather than that I shulde dey
Through defaute of slepinge thus
I wolde gyue thilke Morpheus
Or that goddesse dame Juno
Or some wight els, I ne rought who
To make me slepe, and haue some rest
I will giue him the alther best
Yefte, that euer he abode his lyue
And here onwarde, right nowe as bliue
If he woll make me slepe a lite
Of downe of pure Doues white
I wol yeue him a fether bed
Raied with gold, and right wel cled
In fine blacke Sattin doutremere
And many a pilowe, and euery bere
Of clothe of raines to slepe on softe
Him thare not nede to turne ofte
And I wol yeue him al that falles
To his chambre and to his halles
I wol do painte with pure golde
And tapite hem ful many folde
Of one lute this shal he haue
If I wiste where were his caue
If he can make me slepe sone
As did the goddesse, quene Alcione
And thus this ylke god Morpheus [illegible] pinne of me mo sees thus [illegible] euer he wanne, and to Juno

That

That is his goddesse, I shall so do
I trowe that she shal holde her paide
I had vnneth that worde isaide
Right thus as I haue tolde you
That sodeinly I nyst howe
Soche a luste anone me toke
To slepe, that right vpon my boke
I fel a slepe, and therwith euen
Me mette so inly soche a sweuen
So wonderfull, that neuer yet
I trowe no man had the wit
To conne wel my sweuen rede
No nought Joseph without drede
Of Egypthe, he that rad so
The kinge metinge Pharao
No more than coude the lest of vs
Ne nat scarsly Macrobeus
He that wrote al the auision
That he met kinge Scipion
The noble man the Affrican
Soche meruailles sortuned than
I trowe a rede my dremes euen
Lo thus it was, this was my sweuen.
Me thought thus, that it was Maye
And in the dawning there I lay
Me met thus in my bed al naked
And loked forthe, for I was waked
With smale foules a great hepe
That had afraied me out of my slepe
Through noise, and swetnesse of her songe
And as me met, they sate amonge
Upon my chambre rofe without Upon the tyles ouer al about
And eueriche songe in his wise
The moste solempne seruise
Be note, that euer man I trowe
Had herde, for some of hem songe lowe
Some high, and al of one accorde
To tel shortly at o worde
Was neuer herde so swete steuen
But it had be a thinge of heuen
So merie a sowne, so swete entunes
That certes for the towne of Tewnes
I nolde, but I had herdes hem singe
For al my chambre can to ringe
Through singing of her ermony
For instrument, nor melody
Was no where herde, yet halfe so swete
Nor of accorde halfe so mete
For there was none of hem that fained
To singe, for eche of hem him pained
To finde out many crafty notes
They ne spared nat her throtes
And soth to saine, my chambre was Ful wel depainted, and with glas
Were al the windowes, wel yglased
Ful clere, and nat an hole ycrased
That to beholde it was great ioy
For holly al the storie of Troy
Was in the glasinge ywrought thus
Of Hector, and of kinge Priamus
Of Achilles, and of kinge Lamedon
And eke of Medea, and of Jason
Of Paris, Heleine, and of Lauine
And al the walles with colours fine
Were painte, bothe texte and glose
And al the Romaunte of the rose
My wyndowes weren shit echone
And through the glasse the sunne shone
Upon my bed with bright bemes
With many glad gildy stremes
And eke the welkin was so faire
Blewe, bright, clere was the ayre
And ful atempre, for sothe it was
For neither to colde, ne hote it nas
Ne in al the welkin was no clowde
And as I lay thus wonder lowde
Me thought I herde and hunte blowe
Tassay his great horne, and for to knowe
Whether it was clere, or horse of sowne
And I herde goynge bothe vp and downe
Men, horse, hounde, and other thinge
And al men speake of huntinge
How they wold slee the harte with strength
And howe the harte had vpon length
So moche enbosed, I not nowe what Anon right whan I herde that How that they wolde, on huntinge gone
I was right glad, and vp anone
Toke my horse, and forth I wente
Out of chambre, I neuer stente Tyl I come to the felde without
There ouer toke I a great rout
Of hunters, and eke of foresters
And many relaies and limers
And hied hem to the forest fast
And I with hem, so at the last
I asked one lad, a lymere
Say felowe, who shal hunte here
(quod I) and he answered ayen
Sir, the Emperour Octonyen (quod he) and is here fast by A goddes halfe, in good tyme (quod I)
Go we fast, and gan to ride
Whan we come to the forest side
Euery man dyd right soone
As to hutinge fel to doone
The maister hunte, anone fote hote
With his horne blewe three mote
At the vncouplinge of his hondes

Within a while, the harte founde is
I halowed, and rechased fast
Longe time, and so at the last
This harte rouled and stale away
From al the houndes a priuy way
The houndes had ouer shot him all
And were vpon a defaulte yfal
Therwith the hont wonder fast
Blewe a forloyn at the laste
I was go walked fro my tre
And as I went, there came by me
A whelpe, that fawned me as I stoode
That had yfolowed, and coude no goode
It came and crepte to me as lowe
Right as it had me yknowe
Felde down his heed, and loyned his eares
And laide al smothe downe his heeres
I wolde haue caught it anone
It fled, and was fro me gone
And I him folowed, and it forth went Downe by a floury grene it went Ful thick of grasse, ful softe and swete
With floures fele faire vnder fete
And lytel vsed, it semed thus
For doche Flora, and zepherus
They two, that make floures growe
Had made her dwelling there I trowe
For it was on to beholde
As though the erthe enuye wolde
To be gayer than the heuen
To haue mo floures soche seuen
Is in the welken sterres be
It had forget the pouerte
Bad winter, through his rolde morowes
That made it suffre, and his sorowes
It was forfeten, and that was sene
For all the woode was woxen grene
Swetnesse of dewe, had made it ware
It is no nede eke for to aske
Where there were many grene greues
Of thicke of trees, so ful of leues
And euery tree stode by him selue
Fro other, wel ten foote or twelue
So great trees, so huge of strength
Of fourty or fifty fedom length
Clene without bowe or sticke
With croppes brode, and eke as thicke
They were not an ynche a sonder
That it was shadde ouer all vnder
And many an hart, and many an hinde
Was both before me, and behinde
Of fawnes, sowers, buckes, does
Was ful the wodde, and many roes
And many squirreles, that sete
Ful high vpon the trees and ete
And in her maner made festes
Shortly, it was so ful of bestes
That though Argus the noble countour
Sate to reken in his countour
And reckon with his figures ten
For by tho figures newe al hen
If they be crafty, reken and nombre
And tel of euery thing the nombre
Yet shulde he faile to reken euen
The wonders me met in my sweuen
But forthe I romed, right wonder faste
Downe the woode, so at the laste
I was ware of a man in blacke
That sate, and had yturned his backe
To an ooke, an huge tree
Lorde thought I, who may that be What eyleth him to sitten here
Anon right, I went nere
Than founde I sitte, euen bright
A wonder welfaring knight
By the maner me thought so
Of good mokel, and right ponge therto
Of the age of foure and twenty yere
Upon his berde, but litel heere
And he was clothed al in blacke
I stalked euen vnto his backe
And there I stode, as stil as ought
The sothe to say, he saw me nought
For why he hinge his heed adowne
And with a deedly, sorowful sowne
He made of rime, ten verses or twelue
Of a complainte, to him selue
The moste pite, the most routhe
That euer I herde, for by trouthe
It was great wonder that nature
Might suffre any creature
To haue soche sorow, and he not deed
Ful pitous pale, and nothing reed
He said a lay, a maner longe
Without note, without songe
And was this, for ful wel I can Reherse it, right thus it began
I haue of sorowe so great wone
That ioye get I neuer none
Nowe that I se my lady bright
Whiche I haue loued, with all my might Is fro me deed, and is agone
And thus in sorowe, lefte me alone
Alas dethe, what yeleth the
That thou noldest haue taken me
Whan that thou toke my lady swete
Of all goodnes, she had none mete
That was so faire, so freshe, so free
So good, that men may wel se
Whan he had made thus his complainte

His sorowful hert, gan fast fainte
And his spirites weren dede
The bloode was fledde, for pure drede
Downe to his herte, to maken him warme
For wel it feled the herte had harme
To wete ellε, why it was adradde
By kinde, and for to make it gladde
For it is membre principal
Of the body, and that made al
His hewe chaunge, and were grene
And pale, for there no bloode is sene
In no maner lymme of his Inon therwith, whan I sawe this
He sarde thus ruel, there he sete
I went and stode right at his fete
And grette him, but he spake nought
But argued with his owne thought
And in his witte disputed faste
Why, and howe his lyfe might laste
Him thought his sorowes were so smerte
And lay so colde vpon his herte
So through his sorowe, and holy thought
Made him that he herde me nought
For he had welnye lost his minde
Though Pan, that men clepeth god of kinde
Were for his sorowes neuer so wrothe
But at the last, to saine right sothe
He was ware of me, howe I stoode
Before him, and did of my hoode
And had ygret him, as I best coude
Debonairly, and nothing loude
He said, I pray the be not wrothe
I herde the not, to saine the sothe
Ne I sawe the not, sir truely Thy good sir, no force (quod I
I am right sory, if I haue ought Distroubled you, out of your thought Forgeue me, if I haue myssε take Yes, thamendes is light to make (quod he) for there lithe none therto
There is nothing missaide, nor do
Lo howe goodly spake this knight
As it had be another wight
And made it neither tough ne queint
And I sawe that, and gan me aqueint
With him, and founde him so tretable
Right wounder skylful and reasonable
As me thought, for all his bale
Inon right, I gan finde a tale
To him, to loke where I might ought Haue more knowleging of his thought
Sir (quod I) this game is done
I holde that this hert be gone
These huntes can him no where se
I do no force therof (quod he
My thought is theron neuer a dele
By our lorde (quod I) I trowe you wele
Right so me thinketh by your chere
But sir, o thing woll ye here
Me thinketh in grerat sorowe I you se
But certes sir, if that ye
Wolde aught discure me your wo
I wolde, as wise god helpe me so
Amende it, if I can or may Ye mowe proue it by assay
For by my trouthe, to make you hole
I wol do al my power hole
And telleth me, of your sorowes smerte
Paraunter it may ease your herte
That semeth ful sythe vnder your side
With that he lowed on me a side
As who saithe nay, that nyl not be Graunt mercy good frende (quod he)
I thanke the, that thou woldest so
But it may neuer the rather be do
No man may my sorowe glade
That maketh my hewe to fal and fade
And hath myn vnderstanding lorne
That me is wo, that I was borne
May nought make my sorowes slyde
Not all the remedies of Ouide
Ne Orpheus, god of melodie
Ne Dedalus, with his playes slye
Ne heale me, may no phisicien
Nought Ipocras, ne Galien
Me is wo, that I liue houres twelue
But who so wol assaye hem selue
Whether his hert can haue pite
Of any sorowe, let him se me
I wretche, that dethe hath made al naked
Of al the blisse that euer was maked
I wrothe, werste of al wightes
That hate my dayes, and my nightes
My lyfe, my lustes, be me lothe
For al fare and I be wrothe
The pure deth is so ful my foe
That I wolde die, it wil not foe
For whan I folowe it, it wil flye
I wolde haue him, it nil not me
This is paine withoutreed
Alway dyenge and be not deed
That Tesyphus that lyeth in hel
May not of more sorowe tel
And who so wiste al, by my trouthe
My sorowe, but he hadde routhe
And pyte of my sorowes smerte
That man hath a fendely herte
For who so seeth me first on morowe
May sayne he hath mette with sorow
For I am sorowe, and sorowe is I

Alas.

Alas and I wyl tel the why
My sorowe is tourned to playnyng
And al my laughter to wepyng
My glad thoughtes to heuinesse
Intrauaile is myn ydelenesse
And eke my rest, my wele is wo
My good is harme, and euermo
My wrathe is tourned my playeng
And my delite in to sorowing
Myn heale is turned in to sicknesse
My dede is al my sycknesse
And derke is turned al my lyght
My wytte is foly, my day is night
My loue is hate, my slepe wakyng
My mirth and meles, is fasting
My countenaunce is nicete
And al abawed, where so I be My peace pleding, and in werre
Alas, howe might I fare werre
My boldenesse is turned to shame
My false fortune, hath played a game
At the chesse with me, alas the while
The traytoresse false and ful of gyle
That al behoteth, and nothing halte
She gothe vpright, and yet she halte
That baggeth foule, and loketh fayre
The dispitous debonaire
That scorneth many a creature
In dole of false portraiture
Is she, for she wol sone wryen
She is the monstres heed vnwryen
Is filthe, ouer ystrowed with floures
Her mokke worship and her floures
Shyen for that is her nature
Without faith, lawe, or mesure
She false is, and euer laughing
With one eye, and that other weping
That is brought vp, she set al downe
Lyken her to the Scorpiowne
That is a false flateryng beest
For with his heed he maketh feest
But al amyd his flateringe
With his taile he wil stynge
And enuenim, and so wil she
She is the enuious charite
That is aye false, and semeth wele
So turneth she her false whele
Aboute, for it is nothing stable
Nowe by the fyre, nowe at table
Ful many one hath she thus yblent
She is playe of enchauntement
That semeth one, and is not so
Lo false thefe, what hath she do
Trowest thou, by our lorde I wil the say
At the Chesse with me she gan to play
With her false draughtes ful diuers
She stale on me, and toke my fers
And whan I sawe my fers away
Alas I couth no lenger play
But sayd, farewel swete ywis
And farewel al that euer there is Therwith fortune said, chekke here
And mate in the myd poynt of the chekkere
With a paune errant, alas
Ful craftyer to play she was
Than Athalus that made the game
First of the Chesse, so was is name
But god wolde I had ones or twise
I conde, and knowe the ieoperdise
That coude the Greke Pithagores
I shulde haue plaide thebet at ches
And kept my fers the bet therby
And though wherto, for trewly
I holde that wisdo not worthe a fire
It had be neuer the bet for me
For fortune can so many a wyle
Ther be but fewe can her begile
And eke she is the lasse to blame
Wy selfe I wolde haue do the same Before god, had I been as she She ought the more excused be
For this I say yet more therto
Had I be god, and might haue do
My wyl, whan she my fers caught
I wolde haue drawe the same draught
For al so wise, god gyue me reste
I dare wel swere, she toke the beste
But throughe that draught I haue lorne
My blysse, alas that I was borne
For euermore I trowe trewly
For al my wil, my luste holly
Is turne, but ye, what to done
By our Lorde it is to dye sone
For nothinge I leaue it nought
But lyue and dye, right in this thought
For there nys planet in firmamente
Ne in ayre ne in erthe none elemente
That they ne yeue me a yefte chone
Of wepyng whan I am alone
For whan that I aduise me wele
And bethinke me euerydele
How that there lieth in reheninge
In my sorowe for nothinge
And howe there liueth no gladnesse
May gladde me of my distresse
And howe I haue lost sufficiaunce
And therto I haue no pleasaunce
Than may I say, I haue right nought
And whan al this falleth in my thought
Alas, than am I ouercome,

For that is done, is not come
I haue more sorowe than Tantale
And I herde him tel this tale
Thus pitously, as I you tell
Unneth myght I lenger dwell
It did myn herte so moche wo
I good sir (quod I) say nat so
Haue some pite on your nature
That fourmed you to creature
Remembreth you of Socrates
For he ne counteth not thre strees
Of nought that fortune coude do
No (quod I) I can not so
Why good sir, yes parde (quod I)
Ne say not so for truely
Though ye had lost the feerses twelue
And ye for sorowe murdred your selue
Ye shulde be dampned in this case
By as good right as Medea was That slough her children for Jason
And Phillis also, for Demophon.
Hing her self, so welaway
For he had broke his terme day
To come to her: Another rage
Had Dido, the quene eke of Cartage
That slough her self, for Eneas
Was falle, whiche a foole she was
And Ecquo dyed, for Narcisus
Nolde nat loue her, and right thus Hath many an other foly done
And for Dalida died Samplone
That sloughe him selfe with a pilere
But there is no man a liue here
Wolde for her feeres make this wo
Why so (quod he) it is not so
Thou wotest ful lytel what thou menest
I haue lesse more than thou wenest
Howe may that be (quod I)
Good sir, tel me al holly
In what wise, howe, why, and wherfore
That ye haue thus your blisse lore
Blithely (quod he) come sir doun
I tel the vpon a condicion
That thou shalte hollywith all thy wit
Do thyne entente to herken it yes sir: Swere thy trouthe therto Gladly do than holde here to
I shal right blithely, so god me saue
Holly with al the witte I haue
Here you as wel as I can
A goddes halfe (quod he) and began
Sir (quod he) sith firste I couthe
Haue any maner witte fro youthe
Or kindely vndestandinge
To comprehende in any thinge
What loue was, in mine owne wit
Dredelesse I haue euer yet
Be tributary, and yeue rente
To loue holly, with good entente
And throught plesaunce be come his thral
With good wil, body, herte and al
Al this I put in his seruage
Is to my lorde, and dyd homage
And full deuoutly I praide hym tho
He shulde beset myne herte so
That it plesaunce to him were
And worship to my lady dere
And this was long, and many a yere (Er that min hert was set o where)
That I dyd thus, and niste why
I trowe it came me kindely Paraunter I was therto moste able
As a white wal, or a table
For it is redy to cathe and take Al that men will therin make Whether so men will portrey or painte
Be the werkes neuer so quainte.
And thilke tyme I fared right so
I was able to haue lerned tho
And to haue conde, as wel or better
Paraunter, either arte or letter
But for loue came first in my thought
Therfore I forgate it nought
I chees loue to my first crafte
Therfore it is with we lafte
For why, I toke it of so yonge age
That malice had my corage
Not that time, turned to nothing
Through to mokel knowleging
For that tyme, youth my maistrelle
Gouerned me in ydelnelle
For it was in my first youthe
And tho ful litel good I couthe
For al my werkes were flittyng
That time, and al my thought variyng
Al were to me yliche goode
That knewe I tho, but thus it stode.
It happed that I came on a day
In to a place, there that I sey
Trewly the fairest companie
Of ladies, that euer man with eye
Had sene togithers in o place
Shal I clepe it happe, either grace
That brought me there, not but fortune
That is to lien ful comune
The false traiterelle peruerle
God wolde I coulde clepe her werle
For now she worcheth me ful wo
And I wol tel sone why so.
Amonges these ladies thus echone

Sothe

Sothe to saine, I sawe one
That was lyke none of the route
For I dare swere, without doute
That as the sommers sonne bryght
Is fairer, clerer, and hath more lyght
Than any other planet in heuen
The moone, or the sterres seuen
Or al the worlde so had she Surmounten hem al of beaute
Of maner, and comlynesse
Of stature, and of wel set gladnesse
Of goodly heed, and so wel besey
Shortly, what shal I more sey
By god and by his holowes twelue
It was my swete, right al her selue
She had so stedfast countenaunce
So noble porte, and maintenaunce
And Loue, that wel harde my bone
Had espied me thus sone
That the ful sone in my thought
Ishelpe me god, so was I cought
So sodainly, that I ne toke
No maner counsaile, but at her loke
That min herte, for why her eyen
So gladly I trowe myn herte seyne
That purely tho, min owne thought
Said, it were better serue her for nought
Than with another to be wele
And it was sothe, for euery dele
I wil anone right tel the why
I sawe her daunce so comely
Carol and sing so swetely
Laughe, and play so womanly
And loke so debonatrly
So goodly speke and so frendely
That certes I trowe that euermore
Was sene so blisful a tresore
For euery heer on her heed
Sothe to say it was not reed
Ne neither yelowe ne browne it nas
Me thought most like golde it was
And whiche eyen my lady had Debonaire, good, glad, and sad
Simple, of good mode, not to wide
Therto her loke nas not aside
Ne ouerwhart, but beset so wele
Iwrie we and toke vp euerydele
That on her gan beholde
Her eyen semed anone she wolde
Haue mercy, folly wenden so
But it was neuer the rather do
For nas no counterfeted thinge
It was her owne pure loking
That the goddesse dame Nature
Had made hem open by measure
And close, for were she neuer so glad
Her loking was not lolliche sprad
Ne wildely, though that she plaide
But euer me thought her eyen saide
By god my wrathe is al forgeue
Therwith her lisse so well to liue
That dulnesse was of her adrad
She nas to sobre ne to glad
In all thinges more measure
Had neuer I trowe creature
But many one with her loke she herte
And that sate her ful lytel at herte
For she knewe nothinge of her thought
But whether she knewe, or knewe it nought
Algate she ne wrought of hem a-stree
To get her loue no nere nas she
That woned at home, than he in Inde
The formest was alway behinde
But good folke ouer al other
She loued, as man may his brother
Of whiche loue she was wonder large
In shilful places that here charge
But whiche a visage had she therto
Alas my herte is wonder wo
That I ne can discriuen it
Me lacketh both Englische and wit
For to vndo it at the ful
And eke my spirites ben so dull
So great a thinge for to deuise
I haue not wit that can suffyse
To comprehende her beaute
But thus moche I dare saine that she Was white, rody freshe and lifely hewed
And euery day her beaute newed
And nyghe her face was alderbeste
For certes nature had soche leste
To make that faire, that trewly she Was her chefe patron of beaute
And chefe ensample of al her werke
And monstre, for be it neuer so derke
Me thinketh I se her euer mo
And yet more ouer, though al tho
That euer liued, were nowe a lyue
Ne wolde haue founde to discriue
In al her face, a wicked signe
For it was sad, simple, and benigne
And soche a goodly swete speche
Had that swete, my lyues leche
So frendely, and so well ygrounded
Upon al reason, so wel ifounded
And so tretable to al good
That I dare swere wel by the rood
Of eloquence was neuer fonde
So swete a sowning faconde
Ne trewer tonged, ne scorned lasse

Ne bet coude heale, that by the masse
I durste sweare though the Pope it songe
That ther was neuer yet through her tonge
Man ne woman greatly harmid
Is for her, was al harme hid
Ne lasse flatering in her worde
That purely her simple recorde
Was sounde as trewe as any bonde
Or trouthe, of any mannes honde
Ne chide she coulde neuer a dele
That knoweth al the worlde ful wele
But soche a fairenesse of a neche
Had that swete, that bone nor breche
Nas there none seen, that misse satte
It was white, smothe, streight, & pure flatte
Without hole, or canel bone
And by seming, she had none
Her throte, as I haue nowe memoire
Semed as a rounde tour of yuoire
Of good greatnesse, and not to grete
And faire white she hete
That was my ladies name right
She was therto faire and bright
She had not her name wronge
Right faire sholders, and body longe
She had, and armes euer lith Fattishe fleshy, nat great ther with Right white handes, and nailes rede
Rounde brestes: And of good brede
Her hippes were, a streight flatte backe
I knewe on her none other lacke
That al her limmes nere pure lewing
In as ferre as I had knowing
Therto she coulde so wel playe
What that her lyste, that I dare saye
That was lyke to torche bright
That euery man may take of light
Ynough, and it hath neuer the lesse
Of maner and of comlynesse
Right so larde my lady dere
For euery wight of her manere
Moght catche ynough, if that he wolde
Yf he had eyen her to beholde
For I dare sweare wel, if that she Had among tenne thousande be
She wolde haue be at the beste
I chese myroure of al the feste
Though they had stonde in a rowe
To mennes eyen, that coulde haue knowe.
For where so men had plaide, or waked
Me thought the felowshippe as naked
Without her, that I sawe ones
As a crowne without stones
Trewly she was to min eye
The solein fenix of Arabye
For there liueth neuer but one
Ne suche as she, ne knowe I none
To speke of goodnesse, trewly she Had as moche debonairte
As euer had Hester in the Bible
And more, if more were possible
And sothe to saine, therwithal
She hadde a witte so general
So holy enclined to al goode
That al her witte was sette by the roode
Without malyce, vpon gladnesse
And therto I sawe neuer yet a lesse
Harmful, than she was in doing
I say not that she ne hadde knowyng
What harme was, or els she Had coulde no good, so thinketh me
And trewly, for to speake of trouthe
But she had had, it had be routhe
Therof she had so moche her dele
And I dare saine, and swere it wele
That trouthe him selfe, ouer al and al
Had chose his maner principal
In her, that was his resting place
Therto she had the moste grace
To haue stedfaste perseueraunce
And case attempre gouernaunce
That euer I knewe, or wille yet
So pure suffraunt was her wit
And reason gladly she vnderstode
It folowed wel, she coulde goode
She bled gladly to do wele
These were her maners euery dele
Therwith she loued so wel right
She wronge do woulde to no wight
No wight might do her no shame
She loued so wel her owne name
Her lust to holde no wight in honde
Ne be thou liker, she wolde not fonde
To holde no wight in balaunce
By halfe worde, ne by countenaunce
But if men wolde vpon her lye
Ne sende men in to Walakye
To Pruise, and to Tartarie
To Alisaundrie, ne in to Turkye
And bidde him fast, anon that he Go hoodlesse in to the drie see
And come home by the Carrenare
And sir, be nowe ryght ware
That I may of you here saine
Wurshippe, or that ye come againe
She ne bled no soche knackes smale
But therfore that I tel my tale
Right on this same, I haue saide
Was holly al my loue laide
For certes she was that swete wife

My sufficiaunce, my lucke, my life
Min hope min heale, and al blesse
My worldes welfare, and my goddesse
And I holly hers, and euery dele
By our lorde (quod I) I trowe you wele
Hardly your loue was wel beset
I not howe it might haue do bet
Bet, ne not so wel (quod he)
I trowe sir (quod I) parde.
Nay leue it wel: Sir so do I Leue you wel, that trewly you thought that she was the best
And to beholde, the alderfairest
Who so had loked her with your eyen
With myn, nay al that her seyen
Said and swore, it was so
And though they ne had, I wolde tho
Haue loued best my lady fre
Though I had had al the beaute
That euer had Licipiades
And al the strength of Hercules
And thereto had the worthinesse
Of Alisaunder, and al the richesse
That euer was in Babiloine
In Cartage, or in Macedoine
Or in Rome, or in Niniue
And therto also hardy be
As was Hector, so haue I ioye
That Achilles slough at Troye
And therfore was he slayne also
In a temple, for bothe two Were slaine, he and Antilegius
And so saithe Dares Fregius
For loue of Polixena
Of ben as wise as Mynerua
I wolde euer, without drede
Haue loued her, for I muste nede
Nede: Nay trewly I gabbe nowe
Nought nede, and I wol tellen howe
For of good wil min herte it wolde
Indete to loue her, I was holde
As for the fairest and the beste
She was as good, so haue I reste
As euer was Penelope of Grece
Or as the noble wife Lucrece
That was the beste, he telleth thus
The Romine Titus Liuius
She was as good, and nothing like
Though her stories be autentike Algate she was as trewe as she
But wherfore that I tel the Whan I first my lady sey
I was right yonge, sothe to sey
And ful great nede I had to lerne
Whan myn herte wolde yerne
To loue it was a great empryse
But as my wite wolde best suffise
After my yonge childely wit
Without drede I beset it
To loue her in my beste wise
To do her worship, and the seruise
That I coude tho, by my trouthe
Without fayning, either slouthe
For wonder faine, I wolde her se
So moche it amended me
That whan I sawe her amorowe
I was warished of al my sorowe
Of al day after, tel it were eue
Me thought nothinge might me greue
Were my sorowes neuer so smerte
And yet she syt so in min herte
That by my trouthe, I nolde nought
For al this worlde, out of my thought
Leaue my lady, no trewly
Nowe by my trouthe sir (quod I)
Me thinketh ye haue soone a chaunce
As shrifte, without repentaunce Repentaunce, nay sye (quod he)
Shulde I nowe repent me
To loue, nay certes than were I wel
Worse than was Achitofel
Or Antenor, so haue I ioye
The traitour that betraied Troye
Or the false Genellon
He that purchased the traison
Of Roulande, and of Oliuere
Nay, wile I am a liue here
I nyl forget her neuer mo
Nowe good sir (quod I) tho ye haue wel tolde me here before
It is no nede to reherse it more Nowe ye sawe her first, and where
But wolde ye tel me the manere
To her, whiche was your first speche
Therof I wolde you beseche
And howe she knewe first your thought
Whether ye loued her, or nought
And telleth me eke, what ye haue lore
I herde you tel here before
Ye saide, thou notest what thou menest
I haue lost more than thou wenest
What losse is that (quod I tho)
Nil she not loue you, is it so
Or haue ye ought done amis
That she hath lefte you, is it this
For goddes loue tel me al
Before god (quod he) and I shal
I say right as I haue saide
On her was al my loue laide
And yet she nist it not neuer a dele

Not longe tyme, leue it wele
For be right syker, I durst nought
For al this worlde, tel her my thought
Ne I wolde haue wrathed her trewly
For wost thou why, she was lady
Of the body that had the herte
And who so hath that may not asterte
But for to kepe me fro ydlenesse
Trewly I dyd my busynesse
To make songes as I beste coude
And ofte time I songe hem loude
And made songes, this a great dele
Although I coude nat make so wele
Songes ne knewe the arte al
Is coude Lamekes sone Tubal
That founde out first the arte of songe
For as his brothers hamers ronge
Upon his anuelt vp and downe
Therof he toke the first sownne
But grekes saine of Pithagoras
That he the first finder was
Of the arte, Iuroza telleth so
But therof no force of hem two Algates songes thus I made
Of my felyng, min herte to glade
And lo, this was aither first
I not where it were the werst
Lorde it maketh min herte light
Whan I thinke on that swete wight
That is so semely on to se
And wisshe to god it might so be
That she wolde holde me for her knight
My lady, that is so faire and bright
Nowe haue I tolde the, soth to say
My first songe vpon a day
I bethought me what wo
And sorowe that I suffred tho
For her, and yet she wiste it nought
Ne tel her durst I not my thought
Alas thaught I, I can no rede
And but I tel her, I am but dede
And if I tel her, to say right sothe
I am a dradde she wol be wrothe
Alas, what shal I than do
In this debate I was so wo
Me thought myne herte brast a twaine
So at the laste, sothe for to saine
I bethought me that Nature
Ne formed neuer in creature
So muche beaute trewly
And bountie, without mercy
In hope of that, my tale I tolde
With sorowe, as that I neuer shoulde
For nedes, and maugre myne heed
I must haue tolde her, or be deed
I not wel howe that I began
Ful yuel reherce it I can
And eke as helpe me god withal
I trowe it was in the dismal
That was the ten woundes of Egypte
For many a worde I ouer skipte
In may tale for pure fere
Lest my wordes mysse set were
With sorowful hert, and woundes dede
Softe and quaking for pure drede
And shame, and stinting in my tale
For lerde and mine hewe al pale
Ful ofte I werte bothe pale and reed
Bowing to her I hinge the heed
I durst not ones loke her on
For wit, maner, and al was gone
I said: mercy, and no more
It nas no game, it sate me sore,
So at the laste, sothe to saine
Whan that myne herte was come againe
To tel shortly al my speche
With hole herte, I gan her beseche
That she wolde be my lady, swete
And swore, and hertely gan her hete
Euer to be stedfast and trewe
And loue her alway freshly newe
And neuer other lady haue
And all her worship for to saue
As I beste coude, I swere her this For yours is al that euer there is For euermore, myne hert swete
And neuer to false you, but I mete
I nyl, as wise god helpe me so
And whan I had my tale ydo
God wote she acompted not a stre
Of al my tale, so thought me
To tel shortly, right as it is Trewly her answere it was this
I can not nowe wel countrefete
Her wordes, but this was the grete
Of her answere, she said nay
Al utterly, alas that day
The sorowe I suffred and the wo
That trewly Cassandra that so
Bewayled the distruction
Of Troye, and of Illyon
Had neuer soche sorowe as I tho
I durst no more say therto
For pure feare, but stale away
And thus I lyued ful many a day
That trewly I had no nede
Ferther than my beddes hede
Neuer a day to seche sorowe
I founde it redy euery morowe
For why, I loued her in no gere

So

So it befell an other yere
I thought ones I would fonde
To doe her knowe, and vnderstonde
By wo, and she well vnderstood
That I ne wilned thyng but good
And worship, and to kepe her name
Ouer all thynges, and drede her shame
And was so busie her to serue
And pitie were I should sterue
Sithe that I wilned none harme iwis
So when my Ladie knewe all this My Ladie yaue me all hollie
The noble yelt of her mercie
Sauyng her worship by alwaies
Pydelesse, I mene none other waies
And there with she yaue me a ryng
I trowe it was the first thyng
But il myne harte was iware
Glad, that it is no nede to are
Is helpe me God, I was as blithe
Exiled, as fro death to liue
All happes the alderbest
The gladdest, and the moste at rest
For truelie that swete wight
When I had wrong, and she the right
She would alwaie so goodlie
Forgeue me so debonairlie
In all my youth, in all chaunce
She tooke in her gouernaunce
Therewith she was alwaie so true
Our ioye was euer iliche newe
Our hartes werne so euen a paire
That neuer nas that one contraire
To that other, for no wo
Ne lothe iliche thei suffred tho
O blisse, and ehe o sorowe bothe
Iliche thei were bothe glad and wrothe
All was vs one, without were
And thus we liued full many a yere
So well, I can not tell how.
Sir (q I) where is she now
Now (q he) and stinte anone
Therewith he wore as dedde as stone
And saied, alas that I was borne
That was the losse, that here before
I tolde thee, that I had lorne
Bethinke thee how I saied here besorne
Thou wotte full little what thou menest
I haue losse more then thou wenest.
God wot alas, right that was she Alas sir how, what maie that be
She is dedde: Naie, Yes by my trouthe
Is that your losse, by God it is routhe.
And with that worde right anone
They gan to strake forthe, all was done
For that tyme, the harte huntyng
With that me thought that this kyng
Gan homewarde for to ride
Vnto a place was there beside Whiche was from vs but a lite
A long castell with walles white
By sainct Jhon, on a riche hill
As me mette, but thus it fell.
Right thus me mette, as I you tell
That in the castell there was a bell
As it had smitte houres twelue
Therewith I awoke my selue
And found me lyng in my bedde
And the booke that I had redde
Of Alcione, and Seis the kyng
And of the Goddes of slepyng
I found it in myne hond full euill
Thought I, this is so queint a sweuin
That I would by processe of tyme
Fonde, to put this sweuin in rime
As I can best, and that anon
This was my sweuin, now it is doen.

Explicit.

My master. &c. whē of Christ our kyng was asked, what is troths or sothfastnesse
He not a worde answerde to that askyng
As who saieth, no manne is all true I gesse
And therefore, though I bight to exprese
The sorowe and woe that is in Mariage
I dare not writen of it no wickednesse
Lest I my self fall eft in suche dotage.

I woll not saie how that it is the chaine
Of Sathanas, on whiche he knaweth euer
But I dare saine, were he out of his paine
As by his will, he would be bounden neuer
But thilke doted foole, that eft hath leuer
I chained be, then out of prisone crepe
God let hym neuer fro his woe disceuer
Ne no man hym bewaile, though he wepe.

But yet lesse thou doe worse, take a wife
Bet is to wedde, then brenne in worse wise
But yf thou shalt haue sorowe on thy flesche thy life
And been thy wiues thrale, as saith these wise
And if that holy writte maie not suffise
Experience shall thee teache, so maie happe
Take thy waie leuer to be taken in Frise
Then eft to fall of weddyng in the trappe.

This little writte, prouerbes or figures

I sende you, take kepe of it I rede
Un wise is he, that can no wele endure
If thou be liker, put thee not in drede
The wife of Bathe, I praie you that ye rede
Of this matter, that we haue on honde
God graunt you your life frely to lede
In fredome, for soule is to be bonde.

Explicit.

The assemble of Foules.

THE life so shorte, the craft so long to lerne
Thassaie so hard, so sharp the conquerynge
The dredefull ioy, al waie that flt so yerne
All this meane I by loue, that my felynge
Astonieth, with his wonderfull werkynge
So sore I wis, that when I on hym thinke
Naught wote I well, whether I flete or sinke

For all be that I know not loue in dede
Ne wot how that he quiteth folke her hire
Yet happeth me full ofte in bookes rede
Of his miracles, and of his cruell ire
There rede I well, he woll be lorde and sire
I dare not saie, his strokes be sore
But God saue suche a lorde, I can no more.

Of vsage, what for lust and what for lore
On bookes rede I oft, as I you tolde
But wherfore I speake all this, naught yore
Agon, it happed me to beholde
Upon a booke, was i write with letters old
And thereupon, a certain thing to lerne
The long daie, full fast I radde and yerne.

For out of the olde feldes, as men saieth
Cometh all this newe corne, fro yere to yere
And out of old bookes, in good faieth
Cometh all this newe science, that men lere
But now to purpose, as of this mattere
To rede forthe, it gan me so delite
That all that daie, me thought it but a lite.

This booke, of whiche I make mencion
Entitled was right thus, as I shall tell
Tullius, of the dreame of Scipion
Chapiters seuen it had, of heauen and hell
And yearth, and soules that therein dwell
Of whiche, as shortly as I can it treate
Of this sentence, I woll you saine the greate

First telleth it, when Scipion was come
In Affrike, how he meteth Massinisse
That hym for ioie, in armes hath inome
Then telleth he her speache, and all the blisse
That was betwixt hem, til the daie gan misse
And how his auncestre Affriken so dere
Gan in his slepe that night till hym appere

Then telleth it, that from a sterrie place
How Affrikan hath hym Cartage shewed
And warned hym before, of all his grace
And saied hym what man, lered either leude
That loueth common profite, well it theude
He should into a blissfull place wende
There as the ioye is without any ende.

Then asked he, if folke that here been dede
Haue life, and dwellyng in an other place
And Affrikan saied ye, without any drede
And how our present liues space
Yet but a maner death, what waie we trace
And rightfull folke, shull gon after thei die
To heauen, and shewed hym the Galarie.

Then shewed he him, the little yerth that here is
To regarde of the heauens quantite
And after shewed he hym the nine speris
And after that the melodie heard he
That cometh of thilke speres thrise three
That welles of Musike been, and melodie
In this worlde here, and cause of armonie.

Then saied he him, sens yearth was so lite
And full of tourment, and of harde grace
That he ne should hym in this worlde delite
Then tolde he him, in certain yeres space
That euery sterre, should come into his place
There it was first, and all should out of mind
That in this worlde is doen, of all mankynd.

Then praied hym Scipion, to tell hym all
The waie to come into that heauen blisful
And he saied: First knowe thy self immortall
And loke aie busely, that thou werche wisse
To common profite, and thou shalt not misse
To come swiftly, vnto that place dere
That full of blisse is, and of soules clere.

And breakers of the lawe, sothe to saine
And likerous folke, after that thei been dede
Shull whirle about the world, al waie in paine
Till many a worlde be passed, out of drede

And

And then forgeuen all her wicked dede
Then wullen thei come, to that blisfull place
To whiche to comen, God sende thee grace.

The daie gan failen, and the darke night
That reueth beastes from her businesse
Berafte me my booke for lacke of light
And to my bedde I gan me for to dresse
Fulfilled of thought, and busie heauinesse
For bothe I had thyng, whiche that I nolde
And eke I ne had that thyng that I wolde

But finally my spirite at laste
For wearie of my labour all that daie
Gooke rest, that made me to slepe faste
And in my slepe I met, as that I laie
How Affrikan, right in the self araie
That Scipion hym sawe, before that tide
Was come, and stode right at my beddes side.

The wearie hunter, slepyng in his bedde
The wodde ayen his minde goeth anone
The Judge dremeth, how his plees be spedde
The Carter dremeth, how his cartes gone
The rich of gold, the knight fight w his sone
The siche mette he drinketh of the tonne
The louer mette, he hath his ladie wonne.

Can I not saine, if that the cause were
For I had radde of Affrikan before
That made me to mete that he stoode there
But thus said he: thou hast thee so wel borne
In lookyng of myne old booke all to torne
Of whiche Macrobie raught not a lite
That somedele of thy labour would I quite.

Cithera, thou blisfull Ladie swete
That with thy fire brond, daūtest whē the lest
That madest me this sweuen for to mete
Bethou my helpe in this, for thou maist best
As wisely as I seigh the North North west
When I began my sweuen for to write
So geue me might, to rime it and endite.

This forsaid Affrikan me hent anone
And forthe with hym to a gate brought Right of a Parke, walled with grene stone
And ouer ỳ gate, with letters large iwrought
There were verse iwritten, as me thought
On either halfe, of full greate differēce
Of which I shall you saie, the plain sentence

Through me men gon into that blisful place
Of hartes heale, and dedly woundes cure
Through me men gone into the well of grace
There grene & lustie Maie, shall euer endure
This is the waie to all good auenture
Be glad thou reader, and thy sorowe of cast
All open am I, passe in and spede thee fast.

Through me mē gon, then spake thother side
Unto the mortall strokes of the speare
Of whiche disdain and daunger is the gide
There neuer tree shall fruict, ne leaues beare
This streme you ledeth ỳ sorowfull weare
There as the fishe in prison is all drie
The eschewyng is onely the remedie.

These verses of gold & Asure iwritten weare
Of whiche I gan, astonied to beholde
For with that one, encreased all my feare
And with that other gan my harte to bolde
That on me het, that other did me colde
No wit had I, for errour for to chese
To entre or flie, or me to saue or lese.

Right as betwene Adamantes two
Of euin weight, a pece of yron set
Ne hath no might to moue to ne fro
For what that one maie hale, that other let
So fared I, that I nist where me was bet
To entre or leaue, till Affrican me gide
We hent and thoue, at the gates wide.

And saied, it standeth written in thy face
Thyne errour, though thou tell it not me
But dread thee not, to come into this place
For this writyng is nothyng meante by thee
Ne by none, but he Loues seruaunt bee
For thou of Loue, hast lost thy taste I gesse
As siche man hath, of swete and bitternesse

But natheles, although thou be dull
That thou canst not doe, yet maiest thou se
For many a man, that maie not stande a pull Yet liketh it hym, at the wrestlyng for to be
And demeth yet, whether he doe bet, or he
And if thou haddest conning for tendite
I shall thee shewe matter of to write.

And with that my hād in his he toke anon
Of whiche I comfort caught, and wēt in fast
But Lorde so I was glad, and well begon
For ouer all, where I myne yen cast
Were trees clad with leaues, that aie shal last Eche in his kinde, with colour freshe & grene
As Emeraude, that ioie it was to sene.

The bilder Oke, and eke the hardie Asshe
The piller Elme, the coffer vnto caraine

The

The Bore pipe tree, Holme to whippes lasse
The sailing Firre, the Cipres death to plaine
The shorter Ewe, the Alpe for shaftes plaine
The Olive of peace, and eke the dronken vine
The victor Palme, the Laurer to diuine.

I gardein sawe I, full of blosomed bowis vpon a Riuer, in a grene Mede
There as swetenesse, euermore inough is with floures white, blewe, yelowe, and red
And cold welle streames, nothyng dede
That swommen full of smale fisches light
With finnes rede, and scales siluer bright.

On euery bough the birdes heard I syng
With voice of angell, in her ermonie
That hulied hem, her birdes forthe to bryng
The little pretie Conies, to her plaie gan hie
And further all about, I gan espie
The dredfull Roe, the Buck, the Hart, & Hind Squirels, and beastes, small of gentle kind.

Of instrumentes, of stringes in accorde
Heard I so plaie, a rauishyng swetnesse
That God, that maker is of all and Lorde
Ne heard neuer better, as I gesse
There with a winde, vnneth it might be lesse
Made in the leaues grene, and noise soft
Accordant to the foules song on loft.

The aire of the place, so attempre was
That neuer was ther greuaūce of hot ne cold
There was eke euery holsome spice and gras
Ne no man may there ware sicke ne old
Yet was there more ioie a thousande fold
Then I can tell, or euer could or might
There is euer clere daie, and neuer night.

Vnder a tree, beside a well I seye
Cupide our lorde, his arrowes forge and file
And at his feete, his bowe all readie laye
And well his doughter tempred all the while
The heddes in the well, with her wile
She couched hem after, as thei should serue
Some to flea, and some to wound and carue.

Tho was I ware of pleasance anon right
And of arraie, luste, beautie, and curtesie
And of the craft, that can hath the might
To doen before, a wight to doen folie
Disfigured was she, I will not lie
And by hymself, vnder an Oke I gesse
Sawe I delite, that stoode with gentilnesse.

Then sawe I beautie, with a nice atire
And youth, full of game and iolitee
Foolehardinesse, flatterie, and desire Messagerie, mede, and other three
Her name shall not here be tolde for me
And vpon pillers greate of Jasper long
I sawe a temple of Brasse ifounded strong.

And about the temple, daunced alwaie
Women inow, of which some there were Faire of himself, and some of hem were gaie
In kirtils all disheueled went thei there
That was their office euer, fro yere to yere
And on the temple, sawe I white and faire
Of Doues sittyng, many a thousande paire.

And before the temple doore full soberlie
Dame Peace sat, a curtaine in her honde
And her beside, wonder discretlie
Dame Pacience, sittyng there I fonde
With face pale, vpon an hill stonde
And aither nerte, within and without Behest and Arte, and of her folke a rout.

Within the temple, of sighes hote as fire
I heard a swough, that gan about renne
Whiche sighes were engendred with desire
That made euery harte for to brenne
Of newe flambe, and well espied I then
That all the cause of sorowes, that thei dide
Come of the bitter Goddes ialousie.

The God Priapus, sawe I as I went
Within the temple, in soueraine place stonde
In soche arraie, as when the Alle hym shent
With crie by night, and with ceptre in honde
Full busilie men gan assaie and fonde
Vpon his hedde to set of sondrie hewe
Garlandes, full of freshe floures newe.

And in a priuie corner, in disport
Founde I Venus, and her porter Richesse
That was full noble, and hauten of her port
Darke was that place, but after lightnesse
I sawe a lite, vnnethes it might be lesse
And on a bed of golde, she laie to reste
Till that the hote Sonne gan to weste.

Her gilte heeres, with a gold threde
Ibounde were, vntressed as she laie
And naked from the brest vnto the hede
Men might her se, and sothly for to saie
The remenaunt, couered well to my paie
Right with a little kerchefe of walence
There was no thicker clothe of defence.

The

The place gaue a thousande sauours soote
And Bacchus God of wine, sate her beside
And Ceres next, that doeth of humger boote
And as I saied, a middes late Cupide
To whom on knees, the yong folkes cride
To de their helpe, but thus I let her lie
And farther in the temple, I gan espie.

That in dispite of Diane the chaste
Full many a bowe ibroke, hing on the wall
Of maidens, soche as gone her tymes waste
In her seruice, and painted ouer all
Of many a storie, of whiche I touche shall Hewe, as of Calirte and Athalante
And many a maide, of which ỳ name I want

Semyramus, Caudace, and Hercules
Sibilis, Dido, Tisbe, and Piramus
Tristram, Isoude, Paris, and Achilles
Helaine, Cleopatre, and Troilus
Scilla, and eke the mother of Romulus
All these were painted on that other side
And all her loue, and in what plite thei dide.

When I was comen ayen into the place
That I of spake, that was so soote and grene
Forthe walked I tho, my seluen to solace
Tho was I ware, where there sate a Quene
That as of light, the Sommer Sonne shene
Passeth the Sterre, right so ouer measure
She fairer was then any creature.

And in a launde, vpon an hill of floures
Was set this noble Goddesse Nature
Of braunches were her halles & her boures
Ywrought, after her craft and her measure
Nether nas foule, ỳ cometh of engendrure
That there ne were prest, in her presence
To take her dome, and yeue her audience.

For this was on sainct Valentines daie Whan euery foule cometh to chese her make
Of euery kinde, that men thinke maie
And that so huge a noise gan thei make
That yearth, sea, and tree, and euery lake
So full was, that vnneth there was space
For me to stande, so full was all the place.

And right as Alaine, in the plaint of kinde
Deuiseth Nature, of soche araie and face
In soche araie, men might her there finde
This noble Empresse full of all grace
And euery foule take her owne place
After thei were wont alwaie, fro yere to yere
On sainct Valentines daie, standen there.

That is to saie, the foules of rauine
Were highest set, and then the foules smale
That eaten, as that Nature would encline
As worme or thing, of whiche I tell no tale
But water foule, sat lowest in the dale
And foules that liueth by sede, sat on ỳ grene
And that so many, that wonder was to sene.

There might men the roiall Egle finde
That with his sharpe looke, perseth the son
And other Egles of a lower kinde
Of whiche that clerkes well deuisen con
There was the tirante with his fethers don
And grene, I mean the goshauke ỳ doth pine
To birdes, for his outragious rauine.

The gentle faucon, ỳ with his fete distreineth
The kynges hand, the hardie Sperhauke eke
The Quales foe, the Merlion that peineth
Hymself full oft, the Larke for to seke
There was the Doue, with her iyen meke
The ielous Swan, ayenst his death ỳ singeth
The Oule eke, that of deth the bode bringeth

The Crane, the Geant, with his trõpes soune
The theif the Chough, and the chattring Pie
The scornyng Iaie, the Eles foe the Heroune
The false Lapwing, full of trecherie
The Stare, that the counsaile can bewrie
The tame Ruddocke, and the coward Kite
The Cocke, that horologe is of thropes lite.

The Sparow Venus son, & the Nightingale
That clepeth forthe the freshe leaues newe
The Swalowe murderer of the Bees smale
That maken honie, of floures freshe of hewe
The wedded Turtell, with his harte true
The Pecocke, with his angell fethers bright
The Fesaunt, scorner of the Cocke by night.

The waker Gose, the Cuckowe euer vnkinde
The Popingeie, full of delicasie
The Drake, stroier of his owne kinde
The Storke, wreker of aduoutrie
The hote Cormeraunt, full of glotonie
The Rauin & the Crowe, with voice of care
The Throstell olde, and the frostie feldefare.

What should I saie, of foules of euery kind
That in this worlde haue fethers and stature
Men might in that place assembled finde
Before that noble Goddes of Nature
And eche of them did his busie cure Benignelie to chese, or for to take
By her accorde, his formell or his make.

But

The assemble

But to the poinct, Nature held on her hõd
A formall Egle, of shap the gentillest
That euer she emong her workes fonde
The moste benigne, and eke the goodliest
In her was euery vertue, at his rest
So farforthe, that nature her self had blisse
To looke on her, and oft her becke to kisse.

Nature, the vicaye of the almightie Lorde
That hote, colde, heuie, light, moiste, and drie
Hath knit, by euen nomber of accorde
In ealie voice, began to speake and saie
Foules take hede of my sentence I praie
And for your own eale, i fordrig of your nede
Is fast as I maie speake, I will me spede.

Ye know well, how on S. Valentines daie
By my statute, and through my gouernaunce
Ye doe chese your makes, and after flie awaie
With hem, as I pricke you with pleasaunce
But natheleste, as by rightfull ordinaunce
Maie I not let, for all this worlde to win
But he that moste worthiest is, shall begin.

The tercell Egle, as ye knowe full wele
The foule roiall, aboue you all in degre
The wise and worthie, the secret true as stele
The whiche I haue formed, as ye maie se
In euery parte, as it best liketh me
It nedeth not his shap you to deuise
He shall first chese, and speaken in his gise.

And after hym, by order shall ye chese
After your kinde, eueriche as you liketh
And as your hap is, shall ye win or lese
But which of you, that loue moste entriketh
God sende hym her, that formest for hym liketh
And therewithall, the Tercell can she call
And saied, my sonne the choise is to thee fall.

But natheleste, in this condicion
Muste be the choice, of eueriche that is here
That she agree to his eleccion
Who so he be, that should been her fere
This is our vsage alwaie, fro yere to yere
And who so maie at this time haue his grace
In blissfull tyme he came into this place.

With hed enclined, & with full hũble chere
This roiall Tercell spake, and taried nought
Unto my soueraine Ladie, and not my fere
I chose and chese, with will, hart, & thought
The formell on your hand, so well i wrought
Whose I am all, and euer will her serue
Doe what her lufte, to doe me liue or sterue.

Beseechyng her of mercie, and of grace
As she that is my Ladie souerain
Or let me die, here present in this place
For certes, long maie I not liue in pain
For in my harte is corven euery vain
Hauyng regarde onely to my trouthe
My dere harte, haue on my wo some routhe.

And if I be founde to her vntrue
Disobeisaunt, or wilfull negligent
Iuauntour, or in proceste loue a newe
I praie to you this be my iudgement
That with these foules I be all to rent
That ilke daie, that she me euer finde
To her vntrue, or in my gilte vnkinde.

And sith that none loueth her so well as I
Although she neuer of loue me behet
Then ought she be mine, through her mercie
For other bonde, can I none on her knet
For well nor wo, neuer shall I let
To serue her, how farre so that she wende
Saie what you liste, my tale is at an ende.

Right as the freshe redde Rose newe Against the Sommer Sunne coloured is Right so for shame, all waxen gan the hewe
Of this formell, when she heard all this Neither she answerde well, ne saied amis
So sore abashed was she, till that Nature
Saied, doughter drede you not, I you assure.

An other Tercell Egle spake anon
Of lower kinde, and saied that should not be
I loue her better then ye doe, by sainct Jhon
Or at the least, I loue her as well as ye
And lenger haue serued her in my degree
And if she should haue loued for long louyng
To me alone had be the guerdonyng.

I dare eke saie, if she me finde false
Unkinde, iangler, or rebell in any wise
Or ielous, doe me hang by the halse
And but I beare me in her seruise
As well as my wit can me suffise
Fro poinct to poinct, her honour for to saue
Take she my life, and all the good I haue.

The thirde Tercell Egle answerde tho
Now sirs, ye see the little leaser here
For euery foule crieth out to be ago
Forthe with his make, or with his Ladyden
And eke nature her self, ne will not here
For tariyng her, not half that I would seie
And but I speake, I must for sore we drie.

Of

Of longe seruice, auaunt I me nothing
But as possible is me to die to day
For wo, as ye that hath be languishing
This twenty winter, and wel it happen may
A man may serue better, and more to pay
In halfe a yere, although it were no more Than some man doth, ỳ hath serued ful yore

Ne say not this by me, for I ne can Do no seruise, that may my lady please
But I dare say, I am her trewest man
As to my dome, and fainest wolde her please
In thought wordes, til that de the me cease
I wil be hers, whether I wake or winke
And trewe, in al that hert may bethinke

Of al my lyfe syth that day I was borne
So gentle plee, in loue or other thinge
Ne herde neuer no man me before
Who so that had leiser and conninge
For to reherse their chere, & their speakynge
And from the morow we gan this speche lasse
Til down ward went the sonne wonder lasse

The noise of foules for to be deliuerde
So loude range, haue don and let vs wende
That wel wende I, ỳ wode had all to shiuerd
Some of they cried, alas, ye wil vs shende
Whan shal your cursed pleding haue an ende
Howe shulde a iudge, either partie leue
For ye or nay, without any preue

The goos, the ducke, and the cuckow also
So cried kekke kekke, cuckow, quekke quekke lyke
Throughe myne eares, the noyse went tho
The goos sayde than al this nys worth a flye
But I can shape herof a remedye
And wil say my verdite, faire and swithe
For water foule, who so be wrothe or blithe

And I for worme foule, said the fole cuckow
For I wil of min owne authorite
For cõmon spede, take on me the charge now
For to deliuer vs, it is great charite
Ye may abyde a while, yet perde
(Quod the turtel) if it be your wil
I wight may speke, it were as good be stil.

I am a sede foule, one the vnworthyest
That wote I wel, and leest of conninge
But better is, that a wightes tonge rest
Than entremete him of soche doynge
Of whiche he neither rede can nor singe
And who so it doth, ful foule hi self acloyeth
For office vncommitted, ofte anoyeth

Nature, whiche that alway had an eare
To murmure of the loudenesse behinde
With facõde voice said, hold your tõges there
And I shal soone, I hope a counsaile finde
You for to deliuer, & fro this noyse vnbynde
I charge of euery sloche ye shall one cal
To say the verdite of you foules all

Assented were, to this conclusyon
The birdes al, and foules of raunne
Haue chosen first, by plaine election
The Tercelet of the faucon to defenne
Al her sentence, and as him lust to termine
And to Nature, him they dyd present
And she accepteth him with glad entente

The tercelet sayd than, in this manere
Ful harde it were, to preue it by reason
Who loueth best, this gentel formel here
For euerich hath soche replication
That by skilles may non be brought adown
I cannat se, that argumentes auaile
Than semeth it there must be battaile

Al redy (quod these Engle tercelles tho
Nay sirs (quod he) if that I durst it say
Ye do me wronge, my tale is not ydo
For sirs, taketh nat a grefe I pray
It may not be as ye wolde, in this way
Ours is the voice, ỳ chaue ỳ charge in hande
And to the Iudges dome, ye must stande

And therfore peace I say, as to my wit
We wolde thinke, howe that the worthiest
Of knyghthede, and lengest had vsed it
Most of estate, of blode the gentilest
Were sittinge for her, if that her lest
And of these three, she wote her selfe I trowe
Whiche that he be, for it is light to knowe

The water fooles, haue their heedes laide
Togider, and of shorte auisement
Whan euerich had his verdite saide
They said sothely, al by one assent
Howe that the goos, with the facondе gent
That so desireth, to pronounce our nede
Shal tel our tale, & prayed to god her spede

And for these water foules, tho began
The goos to speke, and in her cakelynge
She said, peace nowe, take heye euery man
And her hẽ whiche a reason I shal forth bring My witte is sharpe, I loue no tarying
I say I rede him, tho he were my brother
But she wil loue him, let him loue another

Lo here a parlite reason of a gose (q the sperhauke) neuer mote she the Lo soche a thing it is to haue a tonge lose
Nowe parde soole, yet were it better
Haue holde thy peace, than shewde thy nicete
It lyeth nat in his wit, nor in is wil
But sothe is saide, a foole can nat be stil

The laughter arose, of gentil soules al
And right anone, the sede soules chosen had
The Turtel trewe, and gan her to hem call
And prayed her to say, the sothe sad
Of this mater, and asked what she rad
And she answered that plainly her entent
She wolde shewe, and sothly what she ment

Nay, god forbede a louer shulde chaunge
The Turtel said, I were for shame al reed
Though that his lady, euer more be straunge,
Yet let him serue her alway, tyl he be deed
For sothe, I praise not the goles reed
For tho she dyed, I wolde none other make I wil be hers, tyl that the dethe me take

Wel ybourded (q the duche) by my hat
That men shulde loue alway causeles
Who can a reason finde or wit in that Daunceth he mery, that is mirtheles
Who shulde recke, of that is recheles
Ye quethe yet (q the duche) ful wel and faire
There be mo herres in the shyre than a paire

Nowe fye churle (q the gentel Tercelet)
Out of the doungbil, came that word aright
Thou canst not se, which thinge is wel beset
Thou farest by loue, as owles do by light
The day he blindeth, ful wel they se by nyght
Thy kinde is of so lowe wretchednesse
That what loue is, thou canst se nor gesse

Tho gan the cuckow put him for the in preace
For foule that eateth worme, and said blyue
So I (q he) may haue my make in peace
I recche nought, howe longe that ye striue
Let eche of hem be soleine al her lyue
This is my rede, sens they may nat acorde
This shorte lesson, nedeth not recorde

Ye, haue the glutton filde his paunche
Than are we wel, said the Emerlon
Thou murderer of the heisugge, on ꝑ drauche
That brought the forth, thou rufull glutton
Liue thou solein, wormes corrupcion
For no force is, of lache of thy nature
Go leude be thou, while the worlde may dure

Nowe peace (q Nature) I commaude here
For I haue herde al your opinion
And in effecte, yet be we neuer the nere
But finally, this is my conclusion
That she her selfe, shal haue her election
Of whom her list, who so be wroth or blithe
Him ꝑ she cheseth, he shal her haue as swithe

For sithe it may not here discussed be
Who loueth her best, as said the Tercelet Than wol I done this fauour to her, ꝑ she Shal haue right him, on whō her hert is set
And he her, that his hert hath on her knet
This iudge I nature, for I may not lye
To none estate, I haue none other eye

But as for counsayle, for to chose a make yf I were reason, than would I Counsaile you, the royal Tercel take
As sayd the Tercelet, ful skilfully
As for the gentelest, and most worthy which I haue wrought so wel to my plesaūce
That to you it ought ben a sufficiaunce with dredfull voice, ꝑ formel her answerde

My right ful lady, goddesse of Nature
Soth is, that I am euer vnder your yerde
As is eueriche other creature
And must be yours, while my life may dure
And therfore graunt me my first boone
And myne entent, you wol I say right soone

I graunt it you (q she) and right anone
This formel Egle spake in this degre
Almighty quene, vnto this yere be done
I aske respite for to auysen me
And after that to haue my choyce all fre
This al and some, that I wold speke and, sey
Ye get no more, although ye do me dey

I wol not seruen Uenus, ne Cupide
For sothe as yet, by no maner way
Nowe sens it may none other wayes betide
(q Nature) here is no more to say
Than wolde I that these soules were away
Eche with his make, for tariyng lenger here
And said hem thus, as ye shal after here

To you spake I, ye Tercelets (q Nature)
Be the of good herte, and serueth al thre
I yere is not so longe to endure
And eche of you paine him in his degre
For to do wel, for god wote quit is she
For you this yere, what after so befal
This entremes, is dressed fro you all

And

And whā this werk brought was to an ende
Of euery foule, Nature vaue his make Hym selfe acorde, and on her way they wende
And lorde the blisse and ioy that they make Eche of hem gan other in his armes take
And with her neckes eche in other winde
Chaūhynge alway, ye noble goddesse of kinde

But first were chosen foules for to synge
Ayere by yere, was al way her vsaunce
To synge a roundel at her departing
To do Nature honour and plesaunce
The note I trowe, maked was in Fraunce
The wordes were soche, as ye may here find
The nexte vers, as I nowe haue in minde

Qui bien ayme tard oublye.

Now welcom somer, with thy sonnes soft
That hast this winter wethers overshake
Saint Valentine, thou arte full hye on lofte
Which dryuest away, the longe nightes blake
Thus singen smale foules for thy sake
Well haue they cause for to gladen ofte
Sens eche of hem recouered hath his make Full blisful maie they sing whē they a wake.

And wt the shouting when her songe was do
That the foules made, at her flight away
I woke, and other bokes tok me to
To rede vpon, and yet I rede alway
I hope ywis to rede so some day
That I shal mete some thinge for to fare
The bet, and thus to rede I nil not spare.

Explicit.

The Floure of

Curtesie, made by Ihon lidgate.

IN Feuerier, whan the frosty Moone
Was horned, full of Phebus firie light
And that she gan to reyse her streames sone
Sainte Valentine, vpon thy blisful night
Of duty, whan glad is euery wight
And foules chese, to voide her olde sorowe
Eueryche hys make, vpon the next morowe

The same tyme I herde a larke synge
Full lustely, againe the morowe gray
Awake ye louers, out of your slombringe
This glad morowe, in al the haste ye may
Some obseruaunce do the vnto this day
Your choise ayen of hert to renewe
In confirming, for euer to be trewe

And ye that be of chesing at your large
This lusty daye, by custome of nature
Take vpon you the blisful holy charge
To serue loue, while your lyfe may duce
With herte, body, and al your besy cure
For euermore, as Venus and Cipride
For you disposeth, and the god Cupide

For lope owe we plainly to obey
Vnto this lordes myghty ordinaunce
And mercyleisse rather for to dey
Than euer in you be founden variaunce
And though your lyfe be medled wt greuaūce
And at your herte closet be your wounde
Beth al way one, there as ye are bounde

That whan I had herde and lysted longe
With deuoute herte, the lusty melodye
Of this heuenly comfortable songe
So agreable, as by armonye
I rose anone, and taste gan me dre Towarde a groue, and the way take Foules to seke, eueriche chopse his make

And yet I was full thrustye in languishing
Myne ague was so feruent in his hete
Whan Aurora, for drery complayninge
Can distil her christal teeres wete
Apon the sorie, with siluer dewe so swete
For shame durst not apere
Under the light of Phebus beames clere

And so for anguisse of my paines kene
And for constraynte of my sighes sore
I let me downe, vnder a laurer grene
Ful pitously, and alway more and more
As I beheld in to the holses hore
I gan complayne min inwarde deedly smert
That aye so sore crampeshe at min hert

And while that I in my drery paine
Sate, and beheld about on euery tre
The foules sitte alway twayne and twayne Thā thought I thus, alas what may this be
That euery foule hath his liberte
Freely to chose, after his desire
Eueriche his make, thus fro yere to yere

The selly wrenne, the tytemose also
The lytel redbrest, haue free election
To flyen ylere, and togither go
Where as hem lyste, aboute environ

As they of kinde haue inclinacion
And as Nature, emprelle and gide
Of euery thing lyst to prouide

But man alone, alas the harde stounde
Ful cruelly, by kindes ordinaunce
Constrained is, and by statute bounde
And debarred from al soche plesaunce what meneth this what is this purueiaūce
Of god aboue, againe all right of kinde without cause, so narowe man to bynde

Thus may I sene and plaine, alas
My wofull houre, and my disauenture
That dulfully stonde in the same caas
So ferre beinde, from al helth and cure
My wounde abideth lyke a surfanure
For me fortune so felly lyste dispose
My harme is hid, that I dare not disclose

For I my herte haue set, in soche a place where I am neuer lykely for to spede
So frere I am hindred from her grace
That saue daunger, I haue none other mede
And thus alas, I not who shal me rede
Ne for myne helpe shape remedie
For male bouche, and for false enuye

The whiche twaine, aye stondeth in my wey
Maliciously, and false suspection
Is very cause also that I dye
Ginning and rote of my distruction
So that I fele, in conclusion with her traines, that they wol me shende
Of my labour, that deth mote make an ende

Yet or I die, with hert, wil, and thought
To god of loue, this auowe I make
As I best can, howe dere that it be bought where so it be, that I slepe or wake while Boreas dothe the leaues shake
As I haue height, plainly tyl I sterue
For wel or wo, that I shall her serue

And for her sake, nowe this holy tyme
Sainct Valentyne, som what shal I write
Although so be, that I can nat tyme
Nor curiously by no crafte endite
Yet leuer I haue, that she put the wite
In vnconning, than in negligence
What euer I say, of her excellence

What euer I saye, it is of dute
In sothfastenesse, and no presumpcion
This I ensure to you that, shal it se
That it is al vnder correction what I reherse in commendacion
Of her, that I shal to you as blyue
So as I can, her vertues here discriue

Ryght by example, as the somer sonne
Passeth the sterre, with his beames shene
And Lucifer, amonge the skyes donne
Amorowe she weth, to voide nightes tene
So verily, withouten any wene
My lady passeth, who so taketh hede
Al tho aliue, to speke of womanhede

And as the Ruby hath the souerainte
Of riche stones, and the regalie
And the rose of swetnesse and beaute
Of freshe floures, without any lye
Ryght so in sothe, with her goodly eye
She passeth al, in bounte and fairenesse
Of maner eke, and of gentelnesse

For she is bothe the fairest and the best
To reken al, in very sothfastenesse
For euery vertue is in her at reste
And furthermore, to speake of stedfastenesse
She is the rote, and of semelynesse
The very mirrour, and of gouernaunce
To al ensample, withouten variaunce

Of porte benigne, and wonder glad of chere
Hauing euermore her trewe aduertence
Alway to reason, so that her desire
Is brideled aye, by witte and prouidence
There to of witte, and of hye prudence
She is the welle, aye deuoide of pride
That vnto vertue, her selfen is the gide

And ouer this, in her daliaunce
Lowly she is, discrete and wise
And goodly gladde, by attemperaunce
That euery wight, of high and lowe degre
Are glad in herte, with her for to be
So that shortly, if I shal not lye
She named is, the Floure of curtesie

And there to speake of femynite
The feste mannishe in comparaison
Goodly abashed, hauing aye pite
Of hem that ben in tribulacion
For she alone is consolation
To al that arne in mischiefe and in nede
To comforte hem, of her womanhede

And aye in vertue is her busie charge
Sad and demeure, and but of wordes fewe
Drede-

Dredful also of tonges that ben large
Elche wing aye hem, that listen to hewe
Idoue her heed, her wordes for to shewe
Dishonestly to speake of anye wight
She deadly hateth, of hem to haue a syght

The herte of whom, so honest is and cleane
And her entent, so faithful and entere
That she ne may, for al the worlde sustene
To suffre her eares any worde to here
Of frende nor foe, neither ferre ne nere
Imille reslowning ȳ hinder shulde his name
And yf she do, she wexeth reed for shame

So trewly in mening she is in sette
Without chaungyng, or any doublenesse
For bountie and beautie, are togither knet
In her persone, vnder faithfulnesse
For boide she is of newfanglenesse
In herte aye one, for euer to persteuer
There she is sette, and neuer to disseuer

I am to rude, her vertues euerychone
Connyngly to discriue and write
For wel ye wote, colour haue I none
Like her discrecion, crastely to endite
For what I say, all it is to lite
Wherfore to you, thus I me excuse
That I aquainted am not with no muse

By Rhetorike, my stile to gouerne
And her preise and commendacion
I am to blynde, so hylye to discription
Of her goodnes, to make discerne
Saue thus I saye in conclusion
If that I shal shortly commende
In her is naught, that nature can amende

For good she is, lyke to Policene
And in sarenesse, to the quene Helaine
Stedfast of herte, as was Dorigene
And welefy trouth, if I shal nat faine
In constaunce ene s faithe, she maye attaine
To Cleopatre, and therto as setrene
Is was of Troye, the white Antigone

Is better meke, lyke Judith of prudence
Hynde as Alcest, or Marcia Catoun
And to Grisilde lyke in pacience
And Iriadne of discrecion
And to Lucrece, that was of Rome toun
She may be likened as for honeste
And for her faithe, vnto Penolope

To faire Phillis, and to Hipsiphilee
For innocence, and for womanhede
For semelinesse vnto Canace
And ouer this, to speake of goodlihede
She passeth al that I can of rede
For worde and dede, that she naught ne fai
Acorde in vertue, and her werkes al

For though that Dido with witte sage
Was in her tyme stedfast to Enee
Of his vnesse yet she dyd outrage
And so for Jason dyd also Medee
But my lady is so assise
That bountie, beautie both in her demaine
She maketh bountie alway soueraine

This is to meane, bountie goth afore
Lad by prudence, and hath the soueraintie
And beaute folweth, ruled by her lore
That she ne sende her in no degre
So that in one, this goodly freshe fre Surmounting all, withouten any were
Is good and faire, in one persone plete

And though that I for very ignorance
Ne may discriue her vertues by and by Yet on this day for a remembrance
Onely supported vnder her mercy
With quakinge honde, I shal ful humbly
To her hinesse, my rudenesse for to quite A lytel balade, here beneth endite

Euer as I can supprise in myne herte
Alway with feare, bet wyt drede and shame
Lesse out of lose, any worde asterte
In this mytre to make it seme lame
Chaucer is dede, that had soche a name
Of faire making, that without wene
Fayrest in our tonge, as the Laurer grene

We may assay for to countrefete
His gay style, but it wol not be
The welle is drie, with the lycoure swete
Bothe of Clye, and of Caliope
And first of all, I wol excuse me
To her that is grounde of goodlihede
And thus I say, vntil her womanhede.

¶ Balade simple.

How pitie is dedde.

WIth al my myght, and my best entent
Wyth all the faithe that mighty god of kinde Me yaue, with me me soule and knowing sent
I chese, and to this bonde euer I me binde
To loue you best, while I haue lyfe & minde
Thus herde I foules in the daunnge
Upon the day of sainte Valentine singe

Yet chese I at the beginning, in this entēt
To loue you, though I no mercy finde
And if you lyst I died, I wolde assent
As euer twinne I quiche of this linne
Suffiseth me to seue your fethers ynde
Thus herde I foules in the morninge
Upon the day of sainte Valentine singe

And ouer this, mine hertes lust to bente
In honour onely of the wodde binde
Holy I yeue, neuer to repente
In ioye or wo, where so that I winde
Tofore Cupide, with his eyen blinde
The foules al, whan Tytan did springe
With deuout hert me, thought I herd singe.

Lenuoye.

Princesse of beautie, to you I represent
This simple dyte, rude as in makinge
Of hert and wil, faithfull in mine entent
Like as this day, foules herde I singe.

Here endeth the Floure of Curtesy, and hereafter foloweth, how pyte is deed and buried in gentyle herte

PYte that I haue I sought so yore ago
With hert sore, and full of busy paine
That in this worlde was neuer wight so wo Without deathe, and yf I shal nat faine
My purpose was, pite to complaine
Upon the cruelte and tyrannye
Of loue, that for my trouth both me dye

And that I by length of certaine yeres
Had euer in one, sought a tyme to speke
To Pite ran I, all bispreint with teres
To prayen her on Cruelte me a wreke
But or I might with any worde out breke
Or tel her any of my paines smerte
I sounde her deed, and buried in an herte

Adowne I fel, whan I sawe the herse
Dead as a stone, while ỳ the swonne me lasse
But vp I rose, with coloure ful diuerse
And pitously on her myne eyen I cast
And nerer the corse I gan prealen fast
And for the soule, I shope me for to pray
I was but lorne, there was no more to say

Thus am I slayne, sithe that Pite is deed
Alas that day that euer it shulde fal
What maner mā dare nowe hold vp his heed
To whom shal now any sorowfull hert call
Nowe Cruelte hath cast to slee vs al
In ydle hope, solke redelesse of paine
Sith she is deed, to whom shal we complaine

But yet encreaseth me this wonder newe
That no wight wote that she is deed but I
So many men as in her tyme her knewe
And yet she diede so sodainly
For I haue sought her euer ful besily
Sithe I had firste witte or mind
But she was deed her I coude her finde

About her herse there stoden luckely
Without en any mo, as thought me
Bountie, perfitely wel ermed and richely
And freshe Beaute, Lust, and Jolite
Assured maner, youthe, and Honeste
Wisdome, Estate Drede, add Gouernaunce
Confedred bothe by bonde and aliaunce

A complainte had I writen in my honde
To haue put to Pyte, as a byl
But I there al this company fonde

That

That rather would all my cause spill
Then doe me helpe, I helde my plainte still For to those folke without faile
Without pite, there maie no bill auaile

Then leaue all vertues, saue onely pitie
Seping the corse, as ye haue heard me laine
Confeder'd by bonde vnto Crueltie
And be assented when I shall be slaine
And I haue put my complainte vp againe
For to my foes, my bill I dare not shewe
The effect, which saith thus in wordes fewe

Humblest of harte, hiest of reuerence
Benigne floure, croune of vertues all
Sheweth vnto your rotall excellence
Your seruaunt, if I durst me so call
His mortall harme, in whiche he is fall
And nought all onely for his wofull fare
But for your renome, as he shall declare

It stādeth thus that your cōtrary crueltie
Allied is ayenst your regalie
Under colour of womanly beautie
For men should not knowe her tyrannie
With Bountie, Gentillesse, and Curtelie
And hath depriued you of your place
That is hie beaute apertenant to your grace

For kindly, by your heritage right
Ye be annered euer vnto bountie
And verely ye ought doe your might
To helpe trouthe in his aduersitie
Ye be also the croune of beautie
Indeede if ye want in these twaine
The worlde is lore, there is no more to saine

Ne what auaileth maner and gentillesse
Without you, benigne creature
Shall crueltie be your gouernesse
Alas, what harte maie it long endure
Wherefore but ye rather take cure
To breake that perillous aliaunce
Ye seen hem that been in your obeisaunce

And further, if ye suffer thus
Your renome is fordoe in a throwe
There shall no man wete what pitie is Alas, that euer your renome is fall so lowe
Ye be also fro your heritake ithrowe
By crueltie, that occupieth your place
And we dispaired that seken your grace.

Haue mercie on me, thou Herenus Quene
That yon haue sought, so tenderly and sore
Let some streame of light on me be sene
That sore I dreade you euer longer the more
For sothly to saine, I beare so sore
And though I be not conning for to plaine
For Goddes loue haue mercie on my paine.

My paine is this, that what so I desire
That haue I not, ne nothing like therto
And euer letteth desire myne harte on fire
Ne on that other side where that I go
What maner thing that may encrease my wo
That haue I ready vnsought euery weste
Me lacketh but my death, and then my beste

What nedeth to shewe parcell of my paine Sith euery wo, that harte maie be in
I suffer, and yet I dare not to you plaine
For well I wote, though I wake or wone
Ye recke not whether I flete or swime
And nathelesse yet my trouth I shall fulfille
Unto my death, and that shall well be seene

This is to saine, I will be youres euer
Though ye me slea by crueltie your so Algate my spirite shall neuer disseuer
Fro your seruice, for any paine or wo
Sith ye be yet dedde, alas that it is so
Thus for your death, I maie wepe and plaine
With harte sore, and full of busie paine.

Explicit.

La belle dame sans Mercy.

Alle in a dreame, not fully well awaked
The golde sleye me wrapped vnder his wyng
Yet not for thy I rose, and well nigh naked
I sodainly my selfe remēbryng
Of a matter, leauyng all other thyng
Whiche I must doe withouten more delaie
For hem, whiche I durst not disobaie

My charge was this, to translate by and by All thyng forgiue as parte of my penaunce
A booke, called La bel dame sans mercy
Whiche Maister Aleine made of remēbraunce
Chiefe secretarie with the kyng of Fraunce
And herebyon a while I stoode musyng
And in my self greatly imagenyng.

What wise I should performe the said procesle
Considerynge by good aduisement
My vnconnynge, and my greate simplenesse
And ayenward, the straite commaundement
Whiche that I had, and thus in myne entent
I was vered and tourned vp and doune
And yet at last, as in conclusioun.

I cast my clothes on, and went my waie
This forsaid charge hauing in remēbraunce
Till I came to a lustie grene valaie
Full of floures, to se a greate pleasaunce
And so boldly with their benigne sufferaunce
Whiche rede this boke, touchyng this matere
Thus I began, if it please you to here.

OF longe ago, ridyng an easie paas
I fell in thought of ioyful desperate
With greate disease and pain, so that I was
Of all louers the most vnfortunate
Sith by his darte, moste cruell full of hate
The death hath take my Ladie and maistresse
And left me sole, thus discomfite and mate
Sore languishyng, and in waie of distresse.

Then saied I thus, it falleth me to cesse Either to rime, or ditees for to make
And surely to make a full promesse
To laugh no more, but wepe in clothes black
My ioyfull tyme (alas) now doeth it slake
For in my self I feele no maner of ease
Let it be written, soche fortune (as I take)
Which neither me, nor non other doth please

If it were so, my will or myne entent
Constrained were, a ioyfull thyng to write
My penne could neuer knowe, what it ment
To speake thereof, my tongue hath no delite
Tho with my mouthe I laugh, moche or lite
Mine ye should make a countenance vntrue
My harte also, would haue thereof dispite
The wepyng teares, haue so large issue.

These siche louers I leue, ỹ to hem longes
Whiche lede their life in hope of alegeaunce
That is to saie, to make Balades and songes
Euery of hem, as thei feele their greuaunce
For she that was my ioye, and my pleasaunce
Whose soule I praie God, of his mercie saue
She hath my will, myne hartes ordinaunce
Whiche lieth here, within this tombe igraue

Fro this tyme forthe, tyme is to hold my pees
It werieth me, this matter for to treate
Let other louers put hem self in prees
Their season is, my tyme is now forgeate
Fortune by strength, the forcer hath vnsheate
Wherein was sperde all my worldly richesse
And all the goodes, which that I haue geate
In my best tyme of youth, and lustinesse.

Loue hath me kept vnder his gouernance
If I misdid, God graunt me forgiuenesse
If I did well, yet felt I no pleasance
It caused neither ioye nor heuinesse
For when she died, that was my maistres
My welfare, then made the same purchase
The death hath shette my bondes of witnesse
Which for nothing mine hart shal neuer pase

In this great thought, sore troubled in mind
Alone thus rode I, all the morowe tide
Till at the last it happed me to finde
The place, wherein I cast me to abide
When that I had no further for to ride
And as I went, my lodgyng to puruaie Right sone I heard, a little me beside
In a garden, where minstrels gan to plaie.

With that anone, I went me backer more
My self and I, me thought we were inow
But twaine that wer my frendes here before Had me espied, and yet I wote not how Thei came for me, awaiwarde I me drowe
Somwhat by force, somwhat by her request
That in no wise, I coud my self resowe
But nedes I must come in and se the feast.

At my commyng, the Ladies euerichone
Bad me welcome, God wote right gentillie
And made me chere, euery one by one
A greate deale better then I was worthie
And of their grace, shewed me greate curtesie
Wt good disport, bicause I should not mourne
That daie I bode still in their companie
Whiche was to me, a gracious sojourne.

The bordes were spred, in right little space
The Ladies sat, eche as he semed best
There were no dedly seruauntes in the place
But chosen men, right of the goodliest
And some there wer, peraucture most freshest
That sawe their Iudges full demure
Without semblaunt, either to mosse or lest Notwithstandyng, thei had hem vnder cure.

Emong all other, one I gan espie

Whiche

Which in great thought, ful oft̄ cam & went
As one that had been rauished vtterly
In his language, not greatly diligent
His countenance he kept with great turmēt
But his desire farre passed his reason
For euer his eye, went after his entent
Full many a tyme, when it was no season.

To make chere, fore hymself he pained
And outwardly he fained greate gladnesse
Colyng also, by force he was constrained
For no pleasaunce, but verie shamefastnesse
For the complaint of his moste heuinesse
Came to his voice, alwaie without request
Like as the soune of birdes doeth expresse
When thei sing loude, in frithe or in forest.

Other there were, that serued in the hall
But none like hym, as after myne aduise
For he was pale, and somwhat leane withall
His speache also trembled in fearfull wise
And euer alone, but when he did seruise
Ill blache he ware, and no deuise but plain
He thought by him, as my witte coud suffise
His harte was nothyng in his owne demain.

To feast hem all, he did his diligence
And well he coud, right as it semed me
But euermore, when he was in presence
His chere was doen, it nolde none other be
His Schole maister had soche auctoritee
That all the while he bode still in the place
Speake coud he not, but vpon her beautee
He looked still, with a right pitous face.

With that his hedde he tourned at the last
For to beholde the Ladies euerichone
But euer in one, he set his eye stedfast
On her, whiche his thought was moste vpon
For of his eyen, the shot I knewe anone
Which fearfull was, w̄ right hūble requestes
Then to my self I saied, by God alone
Sothe one was I, or that I sawe theise ieftes.

Out of the prease he went full easely
To make stable his heauie countenance
And wote ye well, he sighed wonderly
For his sorowes and wofull remembrance
Then in hymself, he made his ordinance
And forthwithall came to bryng in the messe
But for to iudge, his moste wofull penance
God wote it was a pitous entremesse.

After diner anone, thei hem auanced
To daunce aboue the folke euerychone
And forthwithal, this heaue mā he daunced
Somtime with twaine, & somtime with one
Vnto hem all, his chere was after one
Now here now there, as fell by auenture
But euer emong, he drewe to her alone
Whiche he moste dreade, of liuyng creature

To mine aduise, good was his purueiance
When he her chose, to his maistresse alone
If that her harte were set to his pleasance
As moche as was her beauteous persone
For who so euer setteth his trust vpon
The repose of the eyen, withouten more
He might be dedde, and grauen vnder stone
Or euer he should, his hartes ease restore.

In her failed nothyng, that I coud gesse
One wise nor other, priue nor perre
A garison she was, of all goodlinesse
To make a frounter, for a louers herte
Right yong and freshe, a woman full couerte
Assured wele of porte, and eke of chere
Wele at her ease, withouten wo or smerte
Ill vnderneath the standerde of dangere.

To se the feast, it weried me full sore
For heauie ioye doeth sore the harte trauaile
Out of the prease, I me withdrawe therfore
And set me doune alone behinde a traile
Full of leaues, to se a greate merualle
With grene wrethes ibounden wonderly
The leaues were so thicke withouten faile
That throughout, no man might espie.

To this Ladie he came full curtesly
Whē he thought time to daunce w̄ her a trace
Set in an herber, made full pleasantly
Thei rested hem fro thens but a little space
Nigh hem were none, of a certain compace
But onely thei, as farre as I coud se
Saue the traile, there I had chose my place
There was no more bitwen hem two and me

I heard the louer sighyng wonder sore
For aye the more, the sorer it hym sought
His inward pain he coud not kepe in store
Nor for to speake, so hardie was he nought
His leche was nere, ꝑ greater was his thought
He mused sore, to conquere his desire
For no mā maie to more penaūce be brought Then in his heate, to bryng hym to the fire.

The harte began to swell within his chest
So sore strained, for anguishe and for pain
That all to peces almoste it to brest

When bothe at ones, so sore it did constrain
Desire was bolde, but shame it gan restrain
That one was large, the other was full close
No little charge was laied on hym certain
To kepe soche werre, and haue so many sose.

Full oft̄ times to speak himself he pained
But shamefastnesse and drede, saied euer naie
Yet at the last, so sore he was constrained
When he full long had put it in delaie
To this Ladie, right thus then gan he saie
With dredefull voice, wepyng, halfe in a rage
For me was purueied, an vnhappie daie
When I first had a sight of your visage

I suffre pain God wote, full hote brenning
To cause my death, all for my true seruise
And I se well, ye recke thereof nothing
Nor take no hede of it, in no kinde wise
But when I speake after my best aduise
Ye set it at nought, but make thereof a game
And though I sewe, so greate an enterprise
Yet peireth not your worship nor your fame.

Alas, what should it be to you prejudice
If that a man doe loue you faithfully
To your worship, eschewyng euery vice
So am I yours, and will be verely
I chalenge nought of right, and reason why
For I am hole submit vnto your seruice
Right as you list it be, right so will I
To binde my self, where I was in fraunchise

L'amant.

Though it be so, that I can not deserue
To haue your grace, but alwaie liue in drede
Yet suffre me, you for to loue and serue
Withouten maugre of your moste goodlihede
Both faith & trouth I giue your womanhede
And my seruice without any callyng
Loue hath me bound, without wage or mede
To be your man, and leue all other thyng

La dame.

When this ladie had heard al this lāguage
She gaue answere, full oft and demurely
Without chaungyng of colour or courage
Nothyng in hast, but mesurably
Me thinketh sir, your thought is great foly
Purpose ye nought, your labour for to cease
For thinketh not, whiles ye liue and I
In this matter, to set your harte in pease.

L'amant.

Ther maie none make the peace, but onely ye
Which are the ground & cause of all this war
For with your yen, the letters written be
By whiche I am defied and put a farre
Your pleasaunt looke, my very lode starre
Was made heraude, of thilke same defiaunce
Whiche vtterly behight me for to barre
My faithfull trust, and all myne affiaunce.

La dame.

To liue in wo, he hath greate fantasie
And of his harte also slipper holde
That onely for beholdyng of an ye
Can not abide in peace, as reason wolde
Other or me, if ye list ye maie beholde
Our yē ar made to loke, why should we spare.
I take no hede, neither of yong ne olde
Who seleth smart, I counsaile hym beware.

L'amant.

If it be so, one hurte an other sore
In his defaute, that seleth the greuaunce
Of very right, a man maie doe no more
Yet reason would it were in remembraunce
And sith fortune onely by her chaunce
Hath caused me to suffre all this pain
By your beautie, with all the circumstaunce
Why list ye haue me, in so greate disdain.

La dame.

To your persone, ne haue I no disdain
Nor neuer had truelie, ne nought will haue
Nor right greate loue, nor hatred in certain Nor your counsaile to knowe, so God me saue
If soche loue be in your minde ygraue
That litle thyng, maie doe you displesaunce
You to beguile, or make you for to raue
I will not cause, no soche encombraunce.

L'amant.

What euer it be, ȳ me hath thus purchased Wenyng hath not deceiued me certain
But feruent loue, so sore hath me ichased
That I vnware, am casten in your chaine
And sith so is, as fortune list ordaine
All my welfare, is in your handes fall
In eschewyng of more mischeuous paine.
Who sonest dieth, his care is least of all.

La dame.

This sickenesse is right easie to endure
But fewe people, it causeth for to die
But what thei meane, I knowe it very sure
Of more comfort, to dawe the remedie
Soche be there now, plainyng full pitouslie

That

That sele God wote, not aither greatest pain
And if so be, loue hurte so greuously
Lesse harme it wer, one sorowful then twain

L'amant.

Alas Madame, if that it might you please
Moche better it were, by waie of gentilnesse
Of one sorie, to make twain well at ease
Then hym to destroie that liueth in distresse
For my desire is, neither more nor lesse
But my seruice, to doe for your pleasaunce
In eschewyng all maner doublenesse
To make two ioies, in stede of one greuaunce.

La dame.

Of loue I seke, neither pleasaunce nor ease
Nor haue therin no greate affiaunce
Though ye be sich it doeth me nothing please
Also I take no hede of your pleasaunce
Chese who so will, her hartes to auaunce
Free am I now, and free will I endure
To be ruled by mannes gouernaunce
For yearthly good, Nale, that I you ensure.

L'amant.

Loue, which that ioy & sorow doeth depart
Hath set the Ladies out of all seruage
And largely doeth graunt hem for her part Lordship and rule of euery mayer of age
The poor seruant, nought hath of auantage
But what he maie get onely by purchesse
And he that ones, to loue doeth his homage
Full often tymes, dere bought is the richesse.

La dame.

Ladies be not so simple, thus I meane
So dull of witte, so sotted in folie
That for wordes, which said be of the splene
Faire language, painted full pleasauntlie
Whiche ye and mo, holde scholes of daillie
To make hem all, greate wonders to suppose
But sone thei can awaie, their heddes wrie
And to faire speache, lightly their eares close

L'amant.

There is no man, that langleth busilie
And setteth his harte, & al his minde therfore
That by reason, maie plain so pitously
As he that hath moche beauinesse in store
Whose hedde is hole, and saieth that it is sore
His stained chere, is harde to kepe in mewe
But thought, whiche is vnfained euermore
The wordes preueth, as the wordes shewe.

La dame.

Loue is subtill, and hath a greate awaite
Sharp in working, in gabbing great pleasace
And can hym venge, of soche as by deceite
Would seeke & knowe, his secrete gouernance
And maketh hem to obeie his ordinance
By cherefull waies, as in hem is supposed
But when thei fall into repentance
Then in a rage, her counsaile is disclosed.

L'amant.

Sith for as moche, as God and eke nature
Hath auaunced loue, to so hie degree
Moche sharpe is the poinct, thus am I sure
Yet greueth more the faute, where euer it bee
Who hath no colde, of heate hath no deintee
The one for that other, asked is erpselle
And of pleasaunce, knoweth none certaintee
But it be one, in thought and beauinesse.

La dame.

As for pleasaunce, it is not al waie one
That you think swete, I think it bitter paine
Ye maie not me constrain, nor yet right none
After your lust to loue, that is but vain
To chalenge loue by right, was neuer sein
But harte assent, before bonde and promise
For strength and force, maie not attain
I will that standeth enfeffed in franchise.

L'amant.

Right faire ladie, god mote I neuer please
If I seeke other right in this case
But for to shewe you plainly my disease
And your mercie to abide, and eke your grace
If I purpose your honour to deface
Or euer did, God and fortune me shende
And that I neuer vnright fully purchace
One onelie ioye, vnto my liues ende.

La dame.

Ye and other, that sweare soche othes false
And so condempne, and cursen to and fro
Full sikerly ye wene your othes lasse
No lenger then the wordes been ago
And God, and eke his saintes laugh also
In soche swearyng, there is no stedfastnesse
And these wretches that haue ful trust therto
After thei wepe and waylen in distresse.

L'amant.

He hath no courage of a man truelie
That seeketh pleasaunce, worship to dispise
Nor to be called forthe, is not worthie
The yearth to touch, the aire in no kins wise
A trustie harte, a mouthe without feintise
Thus by the strength of euery maner name

And

And who that laieth his faithe for little prise
He leseth bothe his worship and his fame.

La dame.

I cursed harte, a mouthe that is curteise
Full well ye wote thei be not accordyng
Yet fained chere, right sone maie hem apeise
Where of malice is set all her worthyng
Full false semblāt thei were, and true semyng
Her name, her fame, her tongues but fained
Worship in hem is put in forgettyng
Nought repented, nor in no wise complained

L'amant.

Who thinketh ill, no good maie him befall
God of his grace graunt eche man his desart
But for his loue, emong your thoughtes all
Astrinke vpon my wofull sorowes smart
For of my paine, whether your tender hart
Of swete pitie, be not therewith agreued
And of your grace, to me were discouart
That by your mean, sone should I be releued

La dame.

A lightsome harte, a follie of pleasaunce
Are moche better, the lesse while thei abide Thei make you think, & bring you in a traūce
But that sicheneſſe will sone be remedide
Respite your thought, and put all this aside
Full good disporte werieth me all daie
To helpe nor hurte, my will is not aplide
Who troweth me not, I let hym passe awaie.

L'amant.

Who hath a birde, a faucon, or a hounde
That foloweth hym for loue in euer place
He cherisheth him, and kepeth him ful sound
Out of his sight, he will not hym enchace
And I that set my wittes in this case
On you alone, withouten any chaunge
Am put vnder, moche farther out of grace
And lesse set by, then other that be straunge.

La dame.

Though I make chere to euery man about
For my worship, & for myne owne fraunchise
To you I nill doe so, withouten doubt
In eschewyng all maner preiudise
For wote ye well, loue is so little wise
And in bileue, so lightly will be brought
That he taketh all at his owne deuise
Of thing God wote, ỳ serueth him of nought

L'amant.

If I by loue, and by my true seruise
Lese the good chere ỳ straungers haue alwaie
Where of shall serue my trouthe in any wise
Lesse then to him, that cometh & goeth aldaie
Whiche holdeth of you not hyng, ỳ is no naie
Also in you is lost, as to my semyng
All curteſie, whiche of reason will saie
That loue for loue, were lawfull desiryng

La dame.

Curteſie is alied wonder nere
To worship, whiche hym loueth tenderly
And he will not be bounde for no praiere
Nor for no giftes, I saie you verely
But this good chere, depart full largely Where hym liketh, as his conceipt will fall
Guerdon constrained a gift doen thankfully These twain can neuer accord nor neuer shall

L'amant.

Is for guerdon I seke none in this cace
For that deserte, to me it is to hie
Wherfore I aske your pardon and your grace
Sith me behoueth death, or your mercie
To giue the good where it wanteth truly
That were reason, and a curtise manere
And to your own moche better were worthy
Then to strangers, to shewe hem louely chere

La dame.

What cal ye good, fain would I that I will
That pleaseth one, an other smerteth sore
But of his owne, to large is he that kill
Giue moche, and lese his good name therfore
One should not make a graunt, little ne more
But the requeſt were right well accordyng
If worship be not kept and set before
All that is lefte, is but a little thyng.

L'amant.

Into this worlde was founden neuer none
Nor vnder heauen creature ibore
Nor neuer shall, saue onely your persone
To whō your worship toucheth halfe so sore
But me whiche haue no reason lesse ne more
Of youth ne age, but still in your seruice
I haue no yen, no wit, nor mouthe in store
But all be giuen to the same office.

La dame.

A ful greate charge hath he without faile
That his worship kepeth in siserneſſe
But in daunger he setteth his trauaile
That selleth it with others businesse
To hym that longeth honour and nobleſſe given upon none other should not be awaite for of his owne, so moche hath he the lesse

That of other, moche foloweth the conceite.

L'amant.

your tyē hath set the print, which that I sele Within my harte, that where so euer I go
If I doe thyng, that souneth vnto wele
Sides must it cum from you, and fro no more
Fortune will this, that I for wele or wo
My life endure, your mercie abidyng
And verie right will, that I thinke also
Of your worship, aboue all other thyng.

La dame.

To your worship see well, for that is neede
That ye spende not your season all in vain
As touchyng myne, I rede you take no heede
By your follie, to put your self in pain
To ouercome is good, and to restrain
Inharte, whiche is deceiued follilie
For worse it is to breake then bowe certain Better bowe, then to fall sodainly.

L'amant.

Now faire Ladie thinke, sith it first began
That loue hath set mine harte vnder his cure
Inever might, ne truelie I ne can None other serue, while I shall here endure
In moste free wise, thereof I make you sure
Which maie not be withdraw, this is no naie
I must abide all maner aduenture
For I maie neither put to nor take awaie.

La dame.

I holde it for no gilt in sothfastnesse
That one offreth, where it is forsake
For suche a gifte is abandonyng ernestesse
That with worship ayen maie not be take
He hath an harte full fell that list to make A gift lightlie, that put is to refuse
But he is wise, that suche conceipt will slake
So that hym nede, neither to studie ne muse.

L'amant.

He should not muse, that hath his seruice spent
On her, whiche is a Ladie honourable
And if I spende my tyme to that entent
Yet at the least, I am not reprouable
Of fained harte, to thinke I am vnable
Of I mistooke, when I made this requeste
By whiche loue hath of enterprise notable
So many hartes gotten by conqueste.

La dame.

If that ye liste doe after my counsaile
Seche a fairer, and of more higher fame
Whiche in seruice of loue, will you preuaile
After your thought, according thesame
He hurteth bothe his worship and his name
That follily, for twain himself will trouble
And he also leseth his after game
That surely can not set his poinctes double.

L'amant.

This your counsaile, by ought that I can see
Is better saied then doen, to myne aduise
Though I beleue it not, forgiue it me
Mine harte is soche, so hole without feintise
That I ne maie giue credence in no wise
To thyng, whiche is not sounyng vnto truth
Other counsaile I see, be but fantasise Saue of your grace, to shewe pitie and ruth.

La dame.

I holde hym wise that woorketh no folie
And when hym list, can leue and part therfro
But in connyng, he is to learne truelie
That would himself conduite, and can not so
And he that will not after counsaile doe
His lute he putteth into disperaunce
And all the good that should fall hym toe
Is lost and dedde, clene out of remembraunce

L'amant.

Yet woll I shewe this matter faithfullie
Whiles I liue, what euer be my chaunce
And if it hap, that in my truthe I die
Then death shall doe me no displeasaunce
But when that I, by your harde suffraunce
Shall die so true, and with so greate a paine
Yet shall it doe me moche the lesse greuaunce
Then for to liue a false louer certain.

La dame.

Of me get ye right noght, this is no fable
I will to you be neither hard nor straite
And right will, not no man customable
To thinke ye should, be sure of my conceite
Who seeketh sorowe, his be the receite
Other counsaile can I not feele nor see
Nor for to learne I call me not to awaite
Who will thereof, let hym assaie for me

L'amant.

Ones must it be assaied, that is no naie
With soche as be of reputacion
And of true loue, the the right honour to paie

Of free hartes gotten by due raunsome
For frewill holdeth this opinion
That it is greate durelle and discomforte
To kepe a harte in so straite a prison
That hath but one bodie for his disporte.

La dame.

I knowe so many causes marueilous
That I must nede of reason thinke certain That soche auenture is wonder perilous
And yet well more, the coming backe again
Good or worship, thereof is seldome sene
Where I ne will make soche araie
As for to finde a pleasaunce, but a baraine
When it shall cost so dere the first assaie.

L'amant.

Ye haue no cause to doubt of this matter
Nor you to meue with no soche fantasie
To put me farre all out as a straunger
For your goodnesse cā thinke and well aduise
That I haue made aprise in eury wise
By whiche my truthe sheweth open euidence
My long abidyng, and my true seruice
Maie well be knowen by plain experience.

La dame.

Of verie right he maie be called true
And so must he be take in euery place
That can discerne, and let as he ne knewe
And kepe the good, if he it maie purchase
For who that praieth, or swereth in any case
Right well ye wote, in ẏ no trouth is preued
Soch hath there been, ẏ ar, that getten grace
And lese it sone, when thei haue it acheued.

L'amant.

If truthe me cause, by vertue souerain
To shewe good loue, and alwaie find cōtrarie
And cherishe ẏ, whiche sleeth me with ẏ pain
This is to me a louely aduersarie
When ẏ pitie, whiche long on slepe doth tarie
Hath set the fine of all my heuinesse
Yet her comfort to me moste necessarie
Shall set my will more sure in stablenesse.

La dame.

The wofull wight, what maie he think or say
The contrarie of all ioye and gladnesse
A sicke bodie, his thought is alwaie
From hem that felen no sore nor sickenesse
Thus hurtes been of diuers bustinesse
Whiche loue hath put to greate hinderaunce
And truthe also, put in forgetfulnesse
When thei full sore begin to sigh a shaunce.

L'amant.

Now God defende, but he be harmeles
Of all worship or good that maie befall
That to werst tourneth by his leudnesse
A gift of grace, or any thyng at all
That his Ladie vouchsafe vpon hym call
Or cherisheth hym in honourable wise
In that defaute, what euer he be that fall
Deserueth more then death to suffre twise

La dame.

There is no iudge islet an soche trespace
By whiche of right, loue maie recouered be
One curseth fast, an other doeth manace
Yet dieth none, as farre as I can see
But kepe her course alwaie in one degree
And euer more, their labour doeth encrease
To bring Ladies by their greate subtelte
For others gilte, in sorowe and disease.

L'amant.

All be it so, one doeth so greate offence
In dis not dedde, nor put to no iustice
Right well I wote hym gaineth no defence
But he must ende in full mischeuous wise
And all euer saied, God will hym dispise
For falshed is full of cursednesse
That his worship may neuer haue enterprise
Where it reigneth, and hath the wilfulnesse.

La dame.

Of that haue thei no greate fere now a daie
Soche as will saie and maintain it thereto,
That stedfast truthe is not lying for to praise
In hem that kepe it long in wele or wo
Their bulie hartes passen to and fro
Thei be so well reclaimed to the lure
So well learned hem to with holde also
And al to chaūge, whē loue should best endure

L'amant.

When one hath set his harte in stable wise
In soche a place, as is bothe good and true
He should not flit, but doe for the his seruice
Alwaie withouten chaunge of any newe
As sone as loue beginneth to renewe
All pleasaunce goeth anone in little space
As for my partie that shall I eschue
While the soule abideth in his place.

L'amant.

To loue truely, there as it ought of right
Ye maie not be mistaken doubtlesse
But ye be soule disceiued in your sight

Bylight vnderstandyng, as J gesse
Yet maie we well repele your businesse
And to reason haue some attendaunce
Woche better thā to abide by folie simplenes
The feble succour of disperaunce.

L'amant.

Reason, counsaile, wisedome, and good aduise
Been vnder loue arested euerichone
To whiche J can accorde in euery wise
So thei been not rebell, but still as a stone
Their will and myne, be medled all in one
And therwith boundē with so strong a chain
That as in hem, departyng shall be none
But pitie breake the mightie bonde atwain.

La dame.

Ye loue not your self, what euer ye bee
That in loue stande forgette in euery place
And of your wo, if ye haue no pitee
Others pitee bileue ye not to purchace
But be fullie assured, as in this cace
J am alwaie vnder one ordinaunce
To haue better trust not after grace
And all that leueth, take to your pleasaunce

L'amant.

J haue my hope so sure and so stedfast
That soche a Ladie should not lacke pitie
But now alas, it is chit vp so fast
That daunger sheweth on me his crueltie
And if she se the vertue faile in me
Of true seruice, though she doe faile also
No wonder were, but this is my surete
J must suffre, whiche waie that euer it go.

La dame.

Leaue this purpose J rede you for the best
For the lenger ye kepe, it is in vain
The lesse ye get, as of your hartes rest
And to reioyce it shall you neuer attain
When ye abide good hope to make you fain
Ye shall be founde asotted in dotage
And in the ende, ye shall knowe for certain
Hope shall paie the wretches for her wage.

L'amant.

Ye saie as falleth most for your pleasaunce
And your power is greate, all this J see
But hope shall neuer out of my remēbraunce
By whiche J fele so greate aduersitee
For when nature hath set in you plentie
Of all goodnesse, by vertue and by grace
He neuer assembled hem, as semed me
To put pitie out of his dwellyng place.

La dame.

Pitie of right ought to be reasonable
And to no wight do no greate disauauntage
There as is nede, it should be profitable
And to the pitous shewyng no domage
If a Ladie will doe so greate outrage
To shewe pitie and cause her owne debate
Of soche pitie cometh dispitous rage
And of soche loue, also right dedly hate.

L'amant.

To comfort hem that liue all comfortlesse
That is no harme, but comfort to your name
But ye that haue a harte of soche duresse
And a faire Ladie J must affirme the same
If J durst saie, ye winne all this defame
By crueltie, whiche sitteth you full ill
But if pitie, whiche maie all this attain
In your high harte maie rest and tary still.

La dame.

What euer he be that saieth he loueth me
And parauenture J leue well it be so Ought he be wrothe, or should J blamed be Though J did not as he would haue me doe
If J medled with soche or other moe
It might be called pitie mercilesse
And afterward if J should liue in wo
Then to repent, it were to late J gesse.

L'amant.

O marble harte, and yet more harde parde
Whiche mercie maie not perce for no labour
More strong to bowe then is a mightie tree
What auaileth you to shewe so greate rigour
Pleaseth it you more to se me die this hour
Before your yen, for your disport and plaie
Then for to shewe some comfort and succour
To respite death, whiche chaseth me alwaie.

La dame.

Of your disease, ye maie haue allegeaunce
And as for myne, J let it ouer slake
Also ye shall not die for my pleasaunce
Nor for your heale, J can no surete make J will not hurte my self for others sake
Wepe thei, laugh thei, or sing thei, J warraunt
For this matter, so will J vndertake
That none of hem shall make therof auaunt.

L'amant.

J can not chill of loue by God alone
J haue more cause to wepe in your presence
And well ye wote, auauntour am J none
For certainly, J loue better silence
One should not loue by his hartes credence

But he were ſure to kepe it ſecretlie
For a bauntour is of no reuerence when that his tongue is his moſte enemie.

La dame.

Male bouch in court, hath great cõmaũdmẽt
Eche man ſtudieth to ſaie the worſt he maie
Theſe falſe louers, in this tyme now preſent
Thei ſerue beſt to iangle as a Jaie
The moſte ſecrete i wis, yet ſome men ſaie
How he miſtruſted is in ſome partiſe wherfore to ladies whẽ ſo men ſpeake or ſaie
It ſhould be bileued in no wiſe.

L'amant.

Of good and ill ſhall be, and is alwaie
The world is ſoche, the yearth is not al plain
Thei that be good, ỹ profe the weth euery daie
And other wiſe greate villonie certain
It is reaſon, though one his tongue diſdain with curſed ſpeache, to doe hymſelf a ſhame
That ſoche refuce, ſhould wrõgfully remain upon the good renomed in their fame.

La dame.

Soch as be nought, whẽ thei here tidigs new
That eche treſpas ſhall lightly haue pardon
Thei that purſuen to be good and true
Will not ſet by none ill diſpoſicion
To continue in euery good condicion
Thei are the firſt that fallen in domage
And full frely the hartes habandon
To little faithe, with ſoft and faire language

L'amant.

Now knowe I well of verie certaintee
If one doe truelie, yet ſhall he be ſhente Sith all maner of iuſtice and pitee
Is baniſhed out of a Ladies entente
I can not ſee, but all is at one ſtente
The good, the ill, the vice, and ehe the vertue
Soche as be good, ſoche haue the punichmẽte
For the treſpace of hem that liue vntrue.

La dame.

I haue no power you to doe greuaunce
Nor to puniſhe none other creature
But to eſchewe the more encombraunce
To kepe vs from you all, I holde it ſure
Falſe ſemblaunce, hath a face full demure Lightlie to catche theſe Ladies in a waite wherefore we muſt, if we will here endure
Make right good watch, lo this is my cõceite

L'amant.

Sith that of grace, a goodly worde not one
Maie now be had, but alwaie kept in ſtore
I appeale to God, for he maie heare my mone
Of the dureſſe, whiche greueth me ſo ſore
And of pitee, I complaine furthermore Whiche he forgate, in all his ordinaunce
Or els my life to haue ended before
Whiche ſo ſone am put out of remembraunce

La dame.

My harte nor I, haue doen you no forfeite
By whiche ye ſhould complaine in any kinde
Nothyng hurteth you, but your own cõceite
Be iudge your ſelf, for ſo ye ſhall it finde
Thus alwaie let this ſinke in your minde
That your deſire ſhall neuer recouered be ye noye me ſore, in waſting all this winde
For I haue ſaied inough, as ſemeth me.

L'amant.

This wofull man roſe vp in all his paine
And ſo departed with wepyng countenaunce
His wofull harte, almoſte to braſt in twaine
Full like to die, walkyng forthe in a traunce
And ſaied death come forthe, thy ſelf auaunce
Or that myne harte forget his propertie
And make ſhorter all this wofull penaunce
Of my poore life, full of aduerſitie.

Fro thens he wẽt, but whither will I nought
Nor to what part he dre we in ſothfaſtneſſe
But he no more was in his ladies thought
For to the daunce anone ſhe gan her dreſſe
And afterward, one tolde me thus expreſſe
He rent his heer, for anguiſhe and for pain
And in hymſelf toke ſo greate heauineſſe
That he was dedde within a daie or twain.

Lenuoy.

HE true louers thus I beſeche you all
Soche aduentures flie hẽ in euery wiſe
And as people defamed ye hem call
For thei truelie doe you greate preiudice
His caſtelles ſtrong ſtuffed with ordinaunce
For thei haue had long tyme by their office
The whole countrey of loue in obeiſaunce.

And ye Ladies, or what eſtate ye be (place
Of whom worſhip hath choiſe his dwellyng
For

for Goddes loue doe no soche cruelitie
Nor in no wise ne soule not the trace
Of her that here is named right wisely
Whiche by reason me semeth in this cace
Paie be called, La belle dame sans mercy.

Go litile boke, God sende thee good passage
Chese well thy waie, be simple of manere
Looke thy clothyng be like thy pilgremage
And specially let this be thy praiere
Unto hem all, that thei will rede or here
Where thou art wrong after her helpe to call
Thee to correcte in any parte or all.

Praie hem also with thine humble seruice
Thy boldnesse to pardon in this cace
For eis thou art not able in no wise
To make thy self appere in any place
And furthermore beseche hem of her grace
By her fauour and supportacion
To take in gree this rude translacion.

The which God wote stādeth full destitute
Of eloquence, of metre, and colours
Like as a beast naked without refute
Upon a plain to abide all maner showers
I can no more, but alke of hem socours
Be whose request thou wer made in this wise
Commaundyng me with body and seruice.

Right thus I make an ende of this proles
Beseechyng hym, that all hath in balaunce
That no true man be vered cauteleslle
Is this man was, whiche is of remēbraunce
And all that doen her faithfull obseruaunce
And in her trouth purpose hym to endure
Praie God sende hem better auenture.

¶ Of Quene Annelida, and false Arcite.

THou fiers God of armes
Mars the rede
That in thy frostie countrey called Trace
Within thy grisly temples full of drede
Honoured art as patrone of that place
With the Bellona Pallas full of grace
Be present, and my song continue and gie
At my beginnyng thus to thee I crie.

For it full depe is sonken in mynde
With pitous harte in Englishe to endite
This olde storie, in Latine whiche I finde
Of Quene Annelida and false Arcite
That elde, whiche all can frete and bite
And it hath freten many a noble storie
Hath nigh deuoured out of our memorie.

Be fauourable eke thou Polimnia
On Pernaso that hath thy sisters glade
By Elicon, not farre from Cirla
Singest with voice memoriall in the shade
Under the Laurer, which that maie not fade
And doe that I my ship to hauen winne
First followe I Stace, and after him Corinne

Iamq; domos patrias Cithie post aspera gētis.
Prelea laurigero suburente Thesea curru
Letifice plausus missusq; ad sidera vulgi.

When Theseus with warres long and great
The aspre folke of Cithe hath ouercome
The Laurer crouned in his chaire gold beate
Home to his countre houses is icome
For whiche the people blisfull all and some So criden, that to the Sterres it went
And hym to honouren did all her entent.

Before this Duke, in signe of victorie
The Trompes come, and in his baner large
The Image of Mars, and in token of glorie
Men might see of treasure many a charge
Many a bright helme, & many a spere & targe
Many a freche knight, & many a blisfull rout
On horse and on foote, in all the field about.

Ipolita his wife, the hardie Quene

Of Quene Annelida

Of Cithia, that he conquered had
With Emelie her young suster thene
Faire in a chare of golde he with hym lad
That al the ground about her chare she spradd
With brightnesse of beautie in her face
Fulfilled of largesse and of grace

With his triumph & laurer corouned thus
In all the floure of Fortunes yeuyng
Lete I this noble prince Theseus
Coward Athenes in his waie ridyng
And fonde I woll in shortly to bryng
The sle waie of that I gan to write
Of quene Annelida and false Arcite

Mars that through his furious course of ire
The olde wrathe of Juno to fulfill Hath set the peoples hartes bothe on fire
Of Thebes and Grece, & euerich other to kill
With bloodie speres rested neuer still But thrõg now here now there emõg hẽ both
That eueriche other slue, so were thei wroth.

For when Amphiorar and Tideus
Ipomedon, and Partinope also Were dedde, and slain proude Campaneus
And whẽ the wretched Thebans brethrẽ two Were slain, and kyng Idrastus home ago
So desolate stoode Thebes and so bare
That no wight could remedie of his care.

And when the old Creon gan espie
How that ỳ blood roial was brought adoun
He held the citee by his tyrannie
And did the gentils of that regioun
To been his friendes, and dwell in the toun
So what for loue of hem, and what for awe
The noble folke were to the toune drawe.

Emong all these Annelida the quene
Of Ermonie, was in that toune dwellyng
That fairer was then the Sonne shene
Throughout ỳ worlde so gã her name spryng
That her to see had euery wight likyng
For as of trouthe is there none her liche
Of all the women in this worlde riche.

Yong was this quene, of twentie yere olde
Of middle stature, and of soche fairenesse
That nature had a ioye her to beholde
And for to speaken of her stedfastnesse
She passed hath Penelope, and Lucresse
And shortlie if she shall been comprehended
In her might nothyng been amended.

This Theban knight ere sothe to sain
Was yong, and therto withal a lustie knight
But he was double in loue, & nothing plain
And subtill in that crafte ouer any wight
And with his conuyng wan this ladie bright
For so ferforthe he gan her trouth assure
That she hym trusteth ouer any creature.

What should I sain, she loueth Arcite so
That when that he was absent any throwe
Inone her thought her harte brast a two
For in her sight to her he bare hym lowe
So that she wende haue all his harte knowe
But he was false, it nas but fained chere
As nedeth not soche craft men to lere

But neuertheless full mikell bulinesse
Had he, er that he might his Ladie winne
And swore he would dien for distresse
Or from his witte he saied he would twinne
Alas the while, for it was routhe and sinne
That she vpon his sorowes would rue
But nothing thinketh ỳ false as doth ỳ true.

Her fredome found Arcite in soche maner
That all was his, that she hath mochе or litе
Ne to no creature made she chere
Further then it liked to Arcite
Ther was no lack, w̃ which he might her wite
She was so ferforthe yeuen hym to please
That all that liked hym, did her ease.

There nas to her no maner letter sent
That touched loue, from any maner wight
That she ne shewed hym or it was brent
So plain she was, and did her full might
That she nill hide nothyng from her knight
Lest he of any vntrouthe her vpbreide
Without bode his harte she obeide.

And ere he made hym ialous ouer her
That what that any man had to her saied
Anon he would praien her to swere
What was ỳ worde, or make him full apaied
Then wende she out of her witte haue braied
But all was but sleight and flatterie
Without loue he fained feloulie.

And all this tooke she so debonairly
That all his wil, her thought it skilful thing
And euer the lenger she loued hym tenderly
And did hym honour as he were a kyng
Her harte was to hym wedded with a ryng
For so ferforthe vpon trouthe is her entent
That where he goeth, her hart with him wil

Whā ſhe ſhal eate, on him is ſo her thought
That wel vnneth of meate tooke ſhe hepe
And whan ſhe was to her reſt vrought
On him ſhe thought alway tyl that ſhe ſlepe
Whan he was abſent, priuely dothe ſhe wepe
Thus liueth faire Annelida the quene
For falſe Arcyte, that dyd her al this tene

This falſe Arcyte, of his newfanglenelle
For ſhe to him ſo lowly was and trewe
Toke leſſe deinte for her ſtedfaſtnelle
And ſawe another lady proude and newe
And right anon he clad him in her hewe
Note I not whether in white, reed, or grene
And falſed faire Annelida the quene

But neuertheleſſe, great wonder was it none
Though he were falſe, for it is ꝑ kinde of mā
Wythe Lameth was, that is ſo longe agone
To be in loue as falſe as euer he can
He was the firſt father that began
To louen two and was in bigamie
And he founde tentes firſt, but yt men lye

This falſe Arcite, ſomwhat muſte he faine
Whan he was falſe, to couerē his traitourie
Right as an horſe, ꝑ can both bite & plaine
For he bare her in honde of trecherie
And ſwore he coude her doublenelle eſpye
And al was falſeneſſe that ſhe to him ment
Thus ſwore this thefe & forth his way he wēt

Alas what herte might endure it
For routhe or wo, her ſorowe for to tel
Or what man hath the conning or the wit
Or what man might within ꝑ chambre dwel
Al to him reherſen ſhal the hel
That ſuffreth faire Annelida the quene
For falſe Arcite, that did all this tene

She wepeth, waileth, ſwouneth pitouſly
To grounde deed ſhe falleth as a ſtone
Trampiſheth her limmes crokedly
She ſpeketh as her witte were al agone
Other colour than aſſhen hath ſhe none
Se none other worde ſpeketh ſhe moch or lite
But mercy cruel herte min Arcite

And thus endureth, till that ſhe was ſo mate
That nede hath forte, on which ſhe may ſuſtene
But forth languiſhing euer in this eſtate
Of which Arcite hath neither rothe me tene
His hert was elſ where newe and grene
That on her wo, ne deineth him not to thinke
Him recheth neuer whether ſhe flete or ſinke

This newe lady holdeth him ſo narowe
Vp by the bridel, at the ſtaues ende
That euery worde he dred it as an arowe
Her daunger made him bothe bowe & bende
And as her luſte, made him turne or wende
For ſhe ne graunted him in her liuing
No grace, why that he hath to ſinge

But droue him forth, vnneth liſt her knowe
That he was ſeruaunt vnto her ladiſhip
But leſte he were proude, ſhe helde him lowe
Thus ſerueth he, without meate or ſlip
She ſente him nowe to lande, & nowe to ſhip
And for ſhe paue him daunger al his fil
Therfore ſhe had him at her owne wil

Enſample of this, ye thriftie women al
Take hede of Annelida and falſe Arcite
That for her liſt him, her dere herte cail
And was ſo meke, therfore he loued her lite
The kinde of mannes herte is to delite
On thing that ſtraunge is, alſo god me ſaue
For what they may not get, ꝑ wold they haue

Nowe turne we to Annelida ayen
That pineth day by day in languiſhing
But whan ſhe ſawe that her ne gate ne geyn
Vpon a day ful ſorowfully weping
She caſt her for to make a complaining
And with her owne hande ſhe gan it write
And ſente it to her Theban knight Arcyte.

The complaint

of Annelida to falſe Arcite.

SO thirled with the point of remembraunce
The ſwerde of ſorowe, whette with falſe plesaunce
Myne herte bare of bliſſe, and blacke of hewe
That turned is to quaking all my daunce
My ſewertye in waped countenaunce
Sens it auaileth nought to ben trewe
For who ſo trewe is, it ſhall her rewe
That ſerueth loue, and dothe her obſeruaūce
Alway to one, and chaungeth for no newe

I wote my ſelfe as well as any wight
For I loued one, with al min hert and might
More than my ſelf, an hundred thouſāde ſith
And called him my hertes lyfe, my knight
And was al his, as ferre as it was right
And whan ꝑ he was glad, than was I blithe

And his diſeaſe was my dethe as ſwithe
And he ayen, his trouthe hath me plight
For euermore his lady me to kithe

Nowe is he falſe alas, and cauſeles
And of my wo he is ſo routhles
That with a worde him liſt not ones daine
To bring ayen my ſorowful herte in pees
For he is caught vp in an other lees
Right as hym lyſt he laugheth at my paine
And I ne can min herte not reſtraine
For to loue him yet alway neuertheles
And of all this I not to whom to plaine

And ſhulde I plaine, alas the harde ſtounde
Into my foe, that paue myn herte a wounde
And yet deſireth that myn harme be more
Now certes ferther woll I neuer be founde
None other helpe, my ſores for to ſounde
My deſteny hath ſhaped ſo ful yore
I wol none other medecyne ne lore
I wol ben aye there I was ones bounde
That I haue ſaid, be ſaid for euermore

Alas, where is become your gentilneſſe your wordes full of pleſaunce & humbleneſſe your obſeruaunce in ſo lowe manere
Your awaitinge, and your beſineſſe
On me, that ye called your maiſtreſſe your ſoueraine lady in this worlde here
Alas, is there neither worde ne chere
Ye wouchafe vpon myn heuineſſe
Alas your loue, I bye it al to dere

Nowe certes ſwete, though that ye Thus cauſeleſſe the cauſe be
Of my deedlye aduerſite your manly reaſon ought it to reſpite
To flee your frende, and namely me
That neuer yet in no degre
Offended you, as wiſly he
That al wote, of wo my ſoule quite

But for I was ſo plaine Arcite
In al my wordes moche and lite
And was ſo beſy you to delite
Myne honour ſaue, mebe, binde, and fre
Therfore ye put in me this wite
Alas, ye retche not a mite
Though that the ſwerde of ſorowe byte
My wofull hert, through your cruelte

My ſwete foe, why do ye ſo for ſhame
And thinke ye that furthered be your name
To loue a newe, and ben vntrewe aye
And put you in ſlaunder nowe and blame
And do to me aduerſyte and grame
That loue you moſt, god thou woſt alwaye yet turne ayen, and yet be plaine ſome daye
And than ſhall this ỹ now is mis den game
And al forgeue, while I lyue maye

Lo hert myne, al this is for to ſaine
As whether ſhal I praye or els plaine
Whiche is the way to done you to be trewe
For either mote I haue you in my chaine
Or with the deth ye mote depart vs thayne
There bethe none other meane wayes newe
For god ſo wyſely on my ſoule rewe
As verely ye ſlaine me with the paine
That nowe ye ſe on fained on mine hewe

For thus ferforth haue I my deth ſought
My ſelfe I murder with my priuie thought
For ſorowe and routh of your vnkindeneſſe
I wepe, I waile, I faſt, al helpeth naught
I voide ioy that is to ſpeake of aught
I voide company, I flye gladneſſe
Who may auaunt her better of heuineſſe
Than I, ſ to this plite haue ye me brought Without gilte, me nedeth no witneſſe

And ſhould I pray, ſ weiuen womanhede
Nay rather deth, than do ſo foule a dede
And aſke mercy and gilteleſſe, what nede
And if I plaine what life I lede you recheth not, that know I out of drede
And if I vnto you mine othes bede
For mine excuſe, a ſcorne ſhal be my mede
Your chere floureth, but it wol not ſede
Ful longe agon I might haue taken hede

For though I had you to morowe againe
I might as wel holde April from raine
As holde you to maken ſtedfaſt
Almyghty god, of trouthe the ſoueraine
Wher is the trouth of mã, who hath it ſlaine
She that hem loueth, ſhal hem finde as faſt
As in a tempeſt is a rotten maſt
Is that a tame beeſt, that is aye faine
To renne away, whan he is leſt agaſt

Nowe mercy ſwete, if I miſſay
Haue I aught ſaid out of the way
I not, my witte is al away
I fare as doth the ſonge of chantepleure
For nowe I plaine, and nowe I pley
I am ſo maſed that I dey
Arcite hath borne away the key
Of al my world, and my good auenture

For

For in this world there nis no creature
Walking in more discomfiture
Than I, ne more sorowe endure
For yf I slepe a furlonge way or they Than thinketh me that your figure
Before me stante clad in asure
Ete to profre anewe assure
For to ben trewe, and mercy me to prey

The long night, this wonder syght ydrie
That on the day for soche affray I dye
And of al this right naught i wys ye retche
Ye neuermore myne eyen two ben drye
And to your routh, & to your trouth I crye
But wela way, to ferre been they to fetche
Thus holdeth me my desteny a wretch
But me to rede out of this drede or gye
Se may my wit (so weake is it) not stretche

Than ende I thus, sithe I may do no more
I preue it by for nowe and euermore
For I shal neuer efte putten in balaunce
By sikernesse, ne lerne of loue the lore
But as the swan, I haue herde say ful yore
Ayenst his deth wol sing in his penance
So singe I here the destenie and chaunce
Howe that Ircite Innelida so sore
Hath thrilled with the poynt of remembraunce

Whan that Innelida this woful quene
Hath of her hande written in this wise
With face deed, betwixe pale and grene
She fel a swoune, and sithe she gan to rise
And vnto Mars auoweth sacrifise
Within the temple, with a sorowfull chere
That shapen was, as ye may plainly here.

The assemble

Of ladies.

IN Septembre at the fallinge of the lefe
The freshe season was altogider doon
And of the corne was gathered the shefe
In a gardine aboute twayne after none
Ther were ladies walking, as was her wone
Foure in nombre, as to my minde doth fall
And I the lithe, the simplest of hem al

Of gentil women faire there were also Disporting hem, eueriche after her gise
In crosse aleis walking by two and two
And some alone, after her fantasie
Thus occupied we were in diuerse wise
And yet in trouthe we were not al alone
There were knightes and squires many one

Wherof I serued, one of hem asked me
I said ayen, as it fel in my thought
To walke aboute the mase in certainte
As a woman that nothing rought
He asked me ayen whom that I sought
And of my colour, why I was so pale
For sothe (q I) and therby lithe a tale

That must me wete (q he) and that anone
Tel on let se, and make no taryng
Abide (q I) ye ben a hastie one
I let you wete it is no litel thing
But for bicause ye haue a great longing
In your desire, this processe for to here
I shal you tel the plaine of this matere

It happed thus, that in an after noone
My felauship and I by one assent
Whan al other besinesses were doone
To passe our time, in to this mase we went
And tooke our waies, eche after our entent
Some went inward, & wet they had gon out
Some stonde in the mid, & loked all about

And soth to say, some were ful ferre behinde
And right anon as ferforthe as the best
Other there were so mased in her minde
Alwaies were good for hem both eest & west
Thus went they forth, and had but little rest
And some her courage dyd hem sore assaile

For

For very wrathe, they dyd slep ouer ꝑ raile

And as they sought hem selfe to and fro
I gate my selfe a litel auauntage
Al for wery'd, I might no further go
Though I had wō right great for my viage
So came I forth in to a straite passage
Which brought me to an herber faire & grene
Wade with benches ful crafty and cleane

That as me thought, there mizt no creature
Deuise a better, by dewe ꝓpoꝛcioun
Sale it was closed wel I you ensure With masonrye, of compace enuiroun
Ful secretly with staires goyng down
In myddes ꝑ place, w turning whele certain
And vpon that a potte of Wargelaine

With margerettes growinge in ordinaūce
To shewe hem selfe, as solke went to and fro
That to beholde it was a great pleasaunce
And how they were accompained with mo
Ne mombliſnesse and sonenesse also
The poure penses were no disploged there
Ne god wote her place was euery where

The floꝛe & bench was paued faire & smothe
With stones sqare, of many diuers hewe
So wel ioyned, that for to say the soth
Al semed one, that none other knewe
And vnderneth the streames newe and newe
As siluer bright, sprynging in soche a wise
That whence it came, ye coude it not deuise

A lytel while was I al alone
Beholding wel this delectable place
My fela wship were coming euerichone
So muste we nedes abyde for a space
Remembring of many diuers cace
Of tyme passed, with sighes depe
I set me downe, and there I fel a slepe

And as I slept, me thought there came to me
A gentyl woman, metely of stature
Of great worship she semed for to be Atyred wel, not high but by mesure
Her countenaunce full sad and demure
Her colours blewe, al that she had vpon
Ther came no mo but her selfe alone

Her gowne wel was embraudred certainly
With stones after her owne deuise
In her purfil, her worde by and by Bien & loyalement as I coude deuise
Than praide I her in any maner wise
That of her name I might haue remēbraūce
She said she was called Perseueraunce

So furthermoꝛe to speake was I bolde
Where she dwelled, I prayed her for to say
And she againe ful curtesly me tolde
My dwelling is, and hath be many a day
With a lady: what lady I you praye
Of great estate, thus warne I you (ꝙ she)
What cal ye her? Her name is Loyalte

In what office stande ye, or in what degre
(ꝙ I to her) that wold I wete right faine
I am (ꝙ she) vnworthy though I be
Of her chambre her huſsher in certaine
This rodde I beare, as for a token plaine
Lyke as ye knowe the rule in soche seruice
Apertaining is to the same office.

She charged me by her commaundement
To warne you, and your fela wes euerichone
That ye shulde come there as she is present
For a counsaile, whiche shall be nowe anone
Or seuen dayes be comen and gone
And furthermoꝛe, she bad that I shulde say
Excuse there might be none nor delay

Another thing was not forget behinde
Whiche in no wise I wolde but ye knewe
Remembre wel, and beare it in your minde
Al your fela wes and ye muste come in blewe
Euerilyche able, your maters for to sewe
With moꝛe, whiche I pray you thinke vpon
Your wordes on your selues euerychon

And be not abaſshed in no maner wise
As many ben, in soche an high presence
Make your requeſt, as ye can beſt deuise
And she gladly wol yeue you audience
There is no greke, nor no maner offence
Wherin ye fele that your herte his displeased
But with her help, right sone ye shal be eased

I am right glad (ꝙ I) ye tel me this
But there is non of vs that knoweth ꝑ way
As of your way (ꝙ she) ye shal not mis
Ye shal haue to gyde you day by day
Of my fela wes, I can not better say
Soche one as shal tel you the waye ful right
And Diligence this gentil woman hight

A woman of right famous gouernaunce
And wel cherisshed, I tel you in certaine
Her felaushyp shal do you great pleasaunce
Her porte is soch, her maners trewe & plaine
She

She with glad chere wold do her besy paine
To dryg you there, now fare wel I haue done
Hyde said I, ye may not go so sone

Why so (q she) and I haue ferre to go
To yeue warning in many diuers place
To your felawes, and so to other mo
And well ye wote I haue but lytel space
Er we yet (q I) ye must tel me this cace
If we shal any men vnto vs cal
Not one (q she) may come amonges you all

Not one than said I, eigh Benedicite
What haue I done, I pray you tel me that Nowe by my lyfe, I trowe but wel (q she)
But euer I can byleue there is somwhat
And for to saye you trouthe more can I not In questions I may nothing be to large
I meddle no further than my charge

Than thus (q I) do me to vnderstande
What place is there this lady is dwelling
For lothe (q she) and one sought al this lande
Fairer is none, though it were for a king
Deuised wel, and that in euery thing
The toures hie ful pleasaunt shal ye finde
With pynes fresh, turning vp euery wynde

The chambres and parlers of a sorte
Bay windowes, goodly as may be thought
Is for daunsing, and other wise disporte
The galeries right well y wrought
That wel I wote, if ye were thyder brought
And take good hede therof in euery wise
Ye wol it thinke a very paradise

What hight ỹ place (q I) now say me that Pleasaunt regarde (q she) to tel you plaine
Of very trouth (q I) and wote ye what
It may right wel be called so certaine
But furthermore this wold I wit right fain
What I shulde do as sone as I come there
And after whom I may best enquere

I gentil woman, a porter of the yate
There shal ye finde, her name is Coũtenaũce
If ye so hap ye come erly or late
Of her wer good to haue some acquaintaũce
She can you tel howe ye shal you auaunce
And howe to come to her ladyes presence
To her wordes I rede ye geue credence

Nowe it is time I parte you fro
For in good faithe I haue great businesse
I wote right wel (q I) that it is so
And I thake you of your great gentilnesse
Your counforte hath yeuen me hardinesse
That nowe I shal be bolde withouten faile
To do after your aduice and good counsaile

Thus parted she, and I lefte all alone
With that I sawe (as I beheld aside)
A woman come a verie goodly one
And forth withal as I had her aspide
Me thought anone it shoulde be the gide
And of her name anone I did enquere
Ful womanly she yaue me this answere

I am (q she) a simple creature
Sent from the courte, my name is Diligence
As sone as I myght come I you enure
I taried not after I had licence
And nowe that I am come to your presence
Loke what seruice I can do or may Commaunde me, I can no further say

I thanked her, and prayed her to come nere
Bycause I woulde se how she was araide
Her gown was blew dressed in good manere
With her deuise, her worde also that saide
Tant que ie puis and I was wel apaide
And than wist I withouten any more
It was ful trewe that I had herde before

Though we toke nowe before a litel space
It were ful good (q she) as I coude gesse
Howe farre (q I) haue we vnto the place
A dayes iourney (q she) but litel lesse
Wherfore I rede that we outwarde dresse
For I suppose our felawship is past
And for nothinge I wolde not we were ỹ last

Thã departed we at the springing of the daye
And forth we wente softe and easy pace
Til at the last we were on our iourney
So far outwarde, that we might se the place
Nowe let vs rest (q I) a litel space
And say we as deuoutly as we can
A Pater noster for saint Julian

With al my herte I assent with good wil
Moch better shal we spede, whan we haue
Than taried we, and said it euery dyl (done
And whan the day was past farre after none
We sawe a place, and thider came we sone
Whiche rounde aboute was closed w a wal
Seminge to me ful lyke an hospitall

There fonde I one had brought all min aray (A gentil woman of mine acquitaunce)

I haue

I haue meruaile (q I) what maner way ye had knowlege of al this ordenaunce
Yes yes (q she) I verde Perseueraunce
Howe she warned her felawes euerichone
And what aray ye shoulde haue vpon

Nowe for my loue (q I) this I you praye
Sith ye haue take vpon you all the paine
That ye wolde helpe me on with mine araye
For wit ye wel I wolde be gone right faine
Al this prayer nedeth not certaine
(q she) againe, come of and hye you sone
And ye shal se anone it shal be done

But this I doute me greatly, wote ye what
That my felawes be passed by and gone
I warne you (q she) that are they nat
For here they shall assemble euerichone
Notwithstandinge I counsaile you anone
Make you redy, and tary you no more
It is no harme thoughe ye be there before

So than I dressed me in mine araye
And asked her whether it were wel or no
It is right well (q she) vnto my pay
Ye nede nat care to what place euer ye go
And whiles that she and I debated so
Came Diligence and sawe me al in blewe
Sister, q she, right wel brohe ye your newe

Discretion pursuiour.

Than wente we forth and met at auenture
A yonge woman, an officer seminge
What is your name (q I) good creature
Discretion (q she) without lesinge
And where (q I) is your most abidinge
I haue (q she) this office of purchace
Chefe pursuiour that longeth to this place

Acquayntaunce herbyger.

Faire loue (q I) in al your ordenaunce what is her name that is the herbigere
Forsothe (q she) her name is Acquaintance
A woman of right gracious manere
Then thus (q I) what straugers haue ye here
But fewe (q she) of high degree ne lowe ye be the first, as ferforth as I knowe

Countenaunce porter

Thus with tales we came streight to ỹ yate
This yonge woman departed was and gone
Came Diligence and knocked fast therat
Who is without (q Countenaunce) anone
Cruel (q I) fayre sister here is one
Whiche one (q she) and ther withal she lough
I Diligence, ye knowe me wel ynoughe

Than opened she the gate, and in we go
With wordes faire she saide ful gentilly
Ye are welcome ywis, are ye no mo
Nat one (q she) saue this woman and I
Now than (q she) I pray you hertely
Take my chaumbre for a while to rest
Til your felawes come, I holde it best

I thanked her, and forth we go euericone
Til her chambre without wordes mo
Came Diligence and toke her leaue anone where euer ye lyst (q I) nowe may ye go
And I thanke you right hertely also
Of your labour, for whiche god do you mede
I can no more, but Jesu be your spede

Than Countenaunce asked me anone
Your felauship, where be they (q she)
For sothe (q I) they de cominge euerichone
But where they are I knowe no certaintee
Without I may hem at this windowe se
Here wil I stande a waiting euer amonge
For wel I wote they wil not be longe

Thus as I stode musing ful busily
I thought to take good hede of her aray
Her gowne was blewe, this wote I verily
Of good facyon, and furred wel with gray
Upon her sleue her worde this is no nay whiche said thus, as my penne can endite
A moy, qui voy writen with letters white

Than forth withal she came streight towe
Your wordes (q she) fain wold I ỹ I knewe
Forsothe (q I) ye shal wel knowe and se
And for my worde I haue none, this is trew
It is ynough that my clothing be blewe
Is here before I had commaundement
And so to do, I am right well content

Largesse steward.

But tel me this I pray you hertelye
The stewarde here say me, what is her name
She hight Largesse I say you surely
A faire lady and of right noble fame
Whan ye her se ye wil repoyse the same
And vnder her to byd you welcome al
There is Beichier marshal of the hal

Now al this while that ye here tary stil your own maters ye may wel haue in mind
But tel me this, haue ye brought any bill ye ye (q I) and eis I were behinde where is there one, tel me that I may finde
To whom ỹ I may shewe my maters plaine Surely

surely (q she) vnto the chamberlaine.
Remembraunce chamberlaine.

The camberlaine (q I) say ye trewe ye verely (said she) by myne aduise
Ben nat aferde vnto her lowlye sewe
It shal be done (q I) as ye deuyse
But ye must knowe her name in any wise
Crewly (q she) to shewe you in substaunce
Without̄ fainyng her name is Remembraūce

The secretarye she may not yet be forget for she dothe right moche in euery thinge Wherfore I rede, whan ye haue w̄ her mete your matere hole tel her without faininge
Ye shal her fynde ful good and ful louinge
Tel me her name q I of gentelnesse
By my good fothe (q she) Auisenesse

That (q I) for her is passing good for euery dyl and sedule she must se
Howe good (q I) come stande ther as I stode Thy felawes be cominge, ponder they be Ist iape, or say ye sothe q she Iniape, nay nay, I say you for certayne
Se how thei come togither twayn & twayne

Ye fay ful sothe (q she) that is no nay
Ifecoming a goodly company
They ben soch folke (q I) dare I say
That lyst to loue, tainke it verely
And for my loue I pray you faythfully
Many tyme, whan they vpon me call
That ye wol be good frende to hem all

Of my frenship (q she) they shal not misse
And for their ease to put therto my paine
God yelde it you (q I) but take you this Howe shal we know who is ỹ chamberlayne
That shal ye wel know by her word certaine
What is her worde syster, I pray you say (Mais ne pourroye) thus writeth she alwaye

Thus as we stode togyder she and I
Euen at the yate my felawes were echone
So met I hem (as me thought was goodly)
And bade hem welcome al by one and one
Than came forth Countenaunce anone
Ful hertely, faire sisters al (q she)
Ye be right welcome in to this countre

I counsayle you to take a litel rest
In my chambre, if it be your plesaunce
Whan ye be there, me thinke it for the best
That I go in, and cal Perseueraunce
Because she is of your acquaintaunce
And she also wil tel you euery thinge
Howe ye shal be ruler of your cominge

My felawes al and I, by one aduise
Were wel agreed, to do lyne as she layde
Than we begā to dresse vs in our gise (meide
That folke shoulde say we were nat vnpur-
And good wagers among vs there we laide
Whiche of vs was attired moste goodlest
And of vs al whiche shulde be praised best

The porter came and brought Perseueraūce
She welcomed vs in curteise manere
Thinke ye not long (q she) of your attēdaūce
I wil go speke vnto the herbigere
That she puruey for your lodging here
Than wil I go vnto the chamberlaine
To speke for you, and come anone againe

And whan she departed was and gone
We sawe folkes coming without the wal
So gret people, that nombre coude we none
Ladies they were, and gentel women al
Clothed in blewe echone her worde withal
But for to knowe her worde or her deuise
They came so thicke, ỹ I ne might in no wise

With that anone came in Perseueraunce
And where I stode, she came streight to me
Ye ben (q she) of min olde acquaintaunce
You to enquere the bolder wolde I be What worde they bere eche after her degre
If you pray tel it me in secrete wise
And I shall kepe it close on warrantise

We ben fiue ladies (q I) al in fere
And gentil women foure in company
When they begin to open her matere
Than shal ye knowe her wordes by and by
But as for me I haue none verely
And so I tolde Countenaunce here before
Al min aray is blewe, what nedeth more

Nowe then (q she) I wol go againe
That ye may haue knowelege, what ye shuld
In soth (q I) if ye wolde take the paine (do
Ye dyd right moche for vs, if ye dyd so
The rather spede, the soner may we go
Great coste alway there is in tarienge
And longe to se we it is a wery thinge

Than parted she, and came againe anone
Ye must (q she) come to the chamberlaine
We be nowe redy (q I) euerychone

The Assemble

To folowe you, whan euer ye list certaine
We haue none eloquence to tel you plaine
Beleching you we may be so excused
Our trewe meaning, that it be not refused

Than went we forth after Persueraunce
To se the prees it was a wonder case
There for to passe it was great combraunce
The people stode so thicke in euery place
Nowe stande ye stil (quod she) a litel space
And for your ease somwhat I shal assay yf I can make you any better way

And forth she gothe, amonge hem euerychon
Making a way, that we might through passe
More at our ease, and whan she had so done
She bechende vs to come, where as she was So after her we folowed more and las
She brought vs streight vnto ꝑ chãberlayne
There lefte she vs, and than she went againe

We salued her as reason woulde it so
Ful humble beseching her great goodnesse
In our matters that we had for to do
That she wolde be good lady and maistresse ye be welcome (quod she) in sothfastenesse
And se what I can do, you for to please
I am redy, that may be to your ease

We folowed hey vnto the chamber dore
Sisters (quod she) come ye in after me
But wete ye wel, there was a paued flore
The goodlyest, that any wight might se
And further more aboute than loked we
On eche corner, and vpon euery wal
Whiche was made of Burel and Cristal

Wherin was grauen of stories many one
First howe Phillis, of womanly pite
Dyed piteously for loue of Demophone
Nert after was the story of Tisbe
Howe she slewe her selfe vnder a tree yet sawe I more, howe in a ryght pitous
For Antony was slaine Cleopatras (caas

That other syde was Hawes the shene
Ful vntrewly disceiued in her baine
There was also Annelida the quene
Upon Trite howe sore she did complaine
Al these stories were graued there certaine
And many mo, than I reherse you here
It were to longe to tel you al in fere

In bicause the walles shone so bright
With fine vmple they were al ouer spradd
To ꝑ entent folke shulde not hurte her sight

And through it the stories might bers
Than further more I went, as I was lad
And there I sawe without any faile
A chaire set, with ful riche aparaile

And fiue stages, it was set fro the grounde
Of Calsidony ful curiously wrought
With foure pomelles of golde, a very rounde
Set with saphirs, as good as coude be thought
That wot ye what, if it wer through sought
As I suppose, fro this countre to Inde
Another soche it were right farre to finde

For wete ye wel, I was right nere that So as I durst, beholding by and by Aboue there was a riche clothe of estate
Wrought with the nedle ful straungely
Her worde theron, and thus it said truely
I endure to tel you in wordes fewe
With great letters, the better I hem knewe

Thus as we stode, a dore opened anone
A gentilwoman, semely of stature
Bering a mace, came out her selfe alone
Sothely me thought a goodly creature
She speake nothinge to lowde, I you ensure Nor hastely, but with goodly warninge
Make rome (quod she) my lady is cominge

With that anone I sawe Perseueraunce
Howe she helde vp the tapet in her hande
I sawe also right in goodly ordenaunce
This great lady within the tapet stande
Comyng outwarde, I wol ye vnderstande
And after her a noble company
I coude not tel the nombre sikerly

Of their names I wolde nothing enquere
Further than soche as we wolde se we vnto
Saue a lady whiche was the chauncellere
Attemperaunce sothely her name was so
For vs nedeth with her haue moche to do
In our matters, and alway more and more
And so forthe to tel you furthermore

Of this lady, her beaute to discriue
My conninge is to simple verely
For neuer yet the daies of my liue
So inly faire I haue sene none trewly
In her estate assured vtterly
There wanted nought, I dare wel assure
That longed to a goodly creature

And furthermore to speake of her araye
I shal tel you the maner of her gowne

Of

Of clothe of golde, ful riche it is no nay
The colour blewe of right goodly fayroun
In taberde wise, the sleues hanging adown
And what purfil there was, & in what wise
So as I can I shal it you deuise

After a sorte, the coller and the vente
Lyke as Armine is made in purfelinge
With great perles ful fine and orient
They were couched all after one worching
With diamondes in stede of powdering
The sleues and purfell of assise
They were made like in euery wise

Aboute her necke a sorte of faire rubyes
In white flowres of right fine enamaile
Upon her heed set in the fairest wise
A cercle of great balais of entaile
That in ernest to speake without faile
For yonge and olde, and euery maner age
It was a worlde to loken on her visage

Thus coming forth to sit in her estate
In her presence we kneled down euerychone Presenting our bylles, and wote ye what Ful humbly she toke hem by one and one
When we had done, than came they al anone
And did the same eche after her manere
Kneling at ones, and risinge al in fere

And whā this was don, & she set in her place
The chamberlaine she did vnto her cal
And she goodly coming vnto her a pace
Of her entent knowinge nothing at al
Voyde backe the preasse (q she) vp to the wall
Make large rome, but loke ye do not tary
And take these bylles to the secretary

The chamberlaine did her commaūdement
And came againe, as she was byd to do
The secretary there beyng present
The bylles were deliuered her also Not onely ours, but many other mo
Than the lady with good aduise againe
Anone with al, called her chamberlaine

We wol (q she) the first thing that ye do
The secretary ye do make come anone
With her billes, and thus we wil also
In our presence she rede hem euerychon
That we maye take good aduise theron
Of the ladies that ben of our counsaile
Loke this be done, withouten any faile

When the chamberlaine wiste of her entent
Anone she did the secretarye call
Let your billes (q she) be here present
My lady it wil: Madame (q she) I shal
And in presence she wil ye hem call
With good wil I am redy (q she)
At her pleasure, whan she commaundeth me

And vpon that was made an ordinaunce
They that came first her bylles shulde be red
Ful gentelly than said Perseueraunce
Reason it wil they were sonest spedde
Anone withal, vpon a tapet spredde
The secretary layde hem downe echone
Our bylles first she redde one by one

The first lady bearing in her deuise
Sans que iamays, thus wrote she on her byl
Complaining sore, and in ful pitous wise
Of promesse made, with faithful hert & wyll
And so broken ayenst al maner skil
Without deserte, alwaies on her partie
In this mater, desiring a remedye

Her nert folowig, her word was in this wise
Vn sans changer, and thus she did complaine
Though she had be guerdoned for her seruice
Yet nothing like as she that toke the paine
Wherfore she coude in no wise her restraine
But in this case se we vntil her presence
As reason wolde to haue recompence

So furthermore, to speke of other twaine
One of hem wrote after her fantasy
Onques puis leuer, and for to tel you plaine
Her complaint was ful pitous verely
For as she said, there was great reason why
As I can remembre this matere
I shal you tell the processe al in fere

Her byl was made complayninge in her gise
That of her ioye, her comforte and gladnesse
Was no surete, for in no maner wise
She said therin no pointe of stablenesse
Nowe yl nowe wele, out of al sikernesse
Ful humbly desiring of her high grace
Soone to shewe her remedy in this case

Her sela we made her bil, and thus she said
In plaining wise there as she loued best
Whether she were wrothe or wele apaide
She might not se whan she wole faineth
And wrothe she was in very ernest
To tel her worde, as ferforth as I wote
Entiegement vostre, right thus she wrote

And vpon that she made a great request
With hert and wil, & al that might be done
As vntil her that might redresse it best
For in her minde there might she find it sone
The remedy of that whiche was her boone
Rehersing that she had saide before Besechinge her it might be so no more

And in like wise as they had done before
The gentylwomen of our company
Put her bylles, and for to tell you more
One of hem wrote (C'est sans dire) verely
And her matere hole to specyfy
Within her byl she put it in writinge
And what it said, ye shall haue knowynge

It said god wote, and that ful pitously
Lyke as she was disposed in her herte
No misfortune that she toke greuously
Al one to her was the ioy and smerte
Sometime no thanke for al her good deserte
Other comforte she wanted none coming
And so bled, it greued her nothing

Desiring her, and lowly besechinge
That she wolde for seke a better way
As she that had ben her daies lyuing
Stedfast and trewe, and wil be alway
Of her kelawe, somwhat I shal you say
Whose byl was red nerte forthe withal
And what it ment, rehersen you I shal

En Dieu est, she wrote in her deuise
And thus she said withouten faile
Her trouthe might be take in no wise
Like as she thought, wherfor she had merualle
For trouth sōtyme was wont to take auaile
In euery mattere, but al that is ago
The more pyte that it is suffred so

Moche more there was, wherof she shulde cō-
But she thought it to great encōbraūce (plain
So moche to write, and therfore incertain
In god and her she put all her affiaunce
As in her worde is made a remembraunce
Besechyng her, that she wolde in this cace
Shewe vnto her the fauour of her grace

The thirde she wrote rehersing her greuaūce
Ye, wote ye what, a pitous thing to here
For as me thought she felt great displesaūce
One might ryght wel perceiue it by her chere
And no wonder, it sate her pallyng nere
Yet lothe she was to put it in writinge
But nede wol haue course in euery thinge

Soyes asseuré, this was her worde certain
And thus she wrote in a litel space
There she loued, her labor was in vaine
For he was set al al in another place
Ful humbly desiring in that cace
Some good comforte her sorowe to appese
That she might liue more at hertes ease

The fourth surely me thought she liked wele
As in her porte, and in her behauinge
And bien moncile, as ferre as I coude fele
That was her worde tyl her wel belonging
Wherfore to her she praied aboue al thing
Ful hertely to say you in substaunce
That she wold sende her good countenaunce

Ye haue rehersed me these bylles all
But nowe let se somwhat of your entent
It may so hap, parauenture ye shal
Nowe I pray you while I am here present
Ye shal haue knowlege parde what I ment
But thus I say, in trouth and make no fable
The cace it selfe is inly lamentable

And wel I wote ye wol thynke the same
Lyke as I say, whan ye haue herde my byl
Now good tel on, I hate you by saint Jame
Abyde a while, it is not yet my wil
Yet must ye wete by reason and by skil
Sith ye haue knowlege of ꝑ was don before
And thus it is said without wordes more

Nothing so lefe as deth to come to me
For final ende of my sorowes and paine
What shulde I more desire as seme ye
And ye knewe al aforne it for certaine
I wote ye wolde, and for to tel you plaine
Without her helpe ꝑ hath al thinge in cure
I can nat thinke that it may longe endure

As for my trouth it hathe be proued wele
To say the sothe, I can say no more
Of ful longe tyme and suffred euery dele
In pacience, and kepe it all in store
Of her goodnesse, besechyng her therfore
That I might haue my thanke in soche wise
As my deserte serueth of iustice

Whan these billes were rad euerychone
The ladies toke a good aduisement
And hem to answere by one and one
She thought it was to moche in her entent
Wherfore she gaue hem commaundement
In her presence to come bothe one and al
To geue hem per answere in generall

what

What dyd she than suppose ye verely?
She spake her selfe, and said in this manere
We haue wel seue your bylles by and by
And some of hem pitous for to here
We wol therfore ye knowe al this in fere
Within shorte tyme, our court of parliment
Here shal be holde in our palays present

And in al this, wherin you finde you greued
There shall ye finde an open remedy
In soche wise as ye shal be relcued
Of al that ye reherse here throughly
Is for the date ye shal knowe verely
That ye may haue a space in your coming
For Diligence shal it tel you by writing

We thanked her in our most humble wise
Our fela whip, eche one by one assent
Submittinge vs lowly til her seruice
For as we thought, we had our trauaile spēt
In soche wise as we helde vs content
Than eche of vs toke other by the sleue
And forth withal, as we shulde take our leue

Al sodainly the water sprange anone
In my visage, and therwithal I woke Where am I now thought I, al this is gone
I maled, and vp I gan to loke
With that anon I went and made this boke
Thus simply rehersing the substaunce
Beause it shulde not be out of remembraūce

Now verely your dreame is passing good
And worthy to be had in remembraunce
For though I stand here as longe as I dod:
It shulde to me be none encombraunce
I take therin so inly great plesaunce
But tel me nowe what ye the boke do cal
For I muste wete: wyth right good wyl ye shal

As for this boke, to say you very right
Of the name to tel you in certainte
Assemble de dames, thus it hight
How thinke ye, that name is good parde
Nowe go farewel, for they cal after me
My felawes al, and I must after sone
Rede wel my dreme, for now my tale is done.

Finis.

The conclusions

Of the Astrolabie.

Lytel Lowys my sonne, I perceiue well by certaine euidences thyne abylyte to lerne sciences, touching nombres and proporcions and also well considre I thy besy prayer in especyal to lerne the tretyse of the Astrolabye. Than for as moche as a Philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the rightfull prayers of his frende: Therfore I haue giuen thee a sufficient Astrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Orenforde: vpon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell treatise, I purpose to teache thee a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certaine of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusiōs that haue be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the Astrolabye, ben vnknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the Astrolabye that I haue sene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges performe, her behestes: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceiue. This treatise deuided in fiue parts wil I shewe the wōder light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But neuertheles sufficeth to the these trewe conclusyons in englishe, as wel as sufficeth to this noble clerkes grekes these same conclusions in greke, & to the Arabines in Arabike, And to Iewes in Hebrewe, and to the latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had hem firste out of other diuers langages, and write hem in her owne tonge, that is to saine in Latine

And god wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, haue these conclusyons ben sufficyentlye lerned and taught, and yet by diuers rules, right as diuers pathes leaden diuers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely euery person discrete, that redeth or heareth this litel treatise to haue my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The firſt cauſe is, for that curious enditynge and harde ſentences is ful heuy at ones, for ſoch a childe to lerne. And the ſecõde cauſe is this, that ſothely me ſemeth better to writen vnto a childe twiſe a good ſentẽce, than he forȝete it ones. And Lowis if it ſo be that I ſhewe the in my lith Engliſhe, as trew conclusions touchyng this mater, and not onely as trewe but as many and ſubtil concluſionsa, s bene yſhewed in latin, in any comon treatiſe of the Aſtrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye god ſaue the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith beareth, and obeieth euerich in his degre, the more and the laſſe. But conſydre thwell, that I ne vſurpe not to haue foundẽ this werke of my labour or of mine engin. I nam but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde Aſtrologiens, and haue it tranſlated in myn engliſhe onely for thy doctrine: and with this ſwerde ſhal I ſlene enuy.

¶ The firſt party.

THe firſte partye of this treatiſe ſhall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne aſtrolaby, bycauſe that thou ſhalte haue the greater knowinge of thine owne inſtrument.

¶ The ſeconde party.

THe ſeconde partye, ſhall teche the to werken the very practike of the forſaid conclusions, as ferforthe and also narowe as may be ſhewed in ſo ſmale an inſtrumente portatife, aboute. For wel wote euery Aſtrologien, that ſmalleſt fractions ne wol not be ſhewed in ſo ſmal an inſtrument, as in ſubtil tables calculed for a cauſe.

¶ The thirde partye.

THe thirde partye ſhal containe diuers tables, of longitudes and latitudes of ſterres, fixe in the Aſtrolabie. And tables of the declinacions of the Sonne, and tables of the longitude of cities and townes. And tables as wel for the gouernacion of the cloche, as for to finde the altitude meridian, and many an other notable conclucion after the kaleders of the reuerent clerkes frere Iyõ Som, and frere. N. Lenne.

¶ The fourth partye.

THe fourth partye ſhall be a theorike, to declare the meaninge of the celeſtiall bodyes, wyth the cauſes, the whiche the fourth partie in ſpecial ſhal ſhewen a table of the very meuinge of the moone, from one to one, euery daye and euery ſigne, after thin almanacke. Upon the which table there foloweth a canon, ſufficyent to teach as wel in maner of worknge in the ſame concluſions, as to knowe in our orizõte, with which degre of zodiack the moone ariſeth in any latitude, and the ariſinge in any planete after his latitude fro the eclyptyke lyne

¶ The fyfte partye.

THe fythe partye ſhall ben an introductorye, after ỳ ſtatutes of our doctours on whiche, thou mayſte lerne a great parte of the generall rules of theorike in Aſtrologie. In whiche fyfthe partie thou ſhalt finde tables of equaciõs of houſes, after the latitude of Orenforde, and tables of dignitees of planettes, and other noteful thinges. if god vouche ſafe and his mother the mayden, more than I behete.

¶ The ryngе.

THy Aſtrolabye hath a ringe to putten on thy thomb one thy right honde, in takinge of the heyght of thinges. And take hede, from hence forwarde I wol clepe the heyght of heuy thing, that is take by the rule, the altytude withouten mo wordes.

¶ The turet.

THis ringe ronneth in a maner of a turet, faſtened to the moder of thin Aſtrolabye, in a roume a ſpace that it diſtroubeleth not the inſtrument to hangen after his right centure. The moder of thin Aſtrolabye is thickeſt by the brinke, that is the vtmoſte ring with degrees: and al the myddle within the rynge ſhall be thynner, to receiue the plates for diuers clymates, and alſo for the rethe, that is ſhape in maner of a net, or els after the webbe of a loppe.

¶ The moder.

THe moder of thin Aſtrolabye is the thickeſt plate perced with a large hole, that receiueth in her wõbe the thine plates compowned of diuers clymats, and thy rete ſhapen in maner of a net or of a wed of a lope

¶ Of the foure lynes

THis moder is deuided on the backhalfe with a line, that cometh diſcendynge fro the ryng down to the nethereſt bordure, the which line, fro the forſaid ring vnto to the centre of ỳ large hole amidde, is cleped

Cometh

Southe line, or els the line Meridionall: and the remenaunt of this line doune to the bordure is cleaped the Northe line, or all the line of the Midnight.

¶Of fower lines, East, West, Northe, and Southe.

Querthwarte this forsaied long line, there crosseth hym an other line of the same length, fro Easte to weste, of the which line, from a little crosse in the bordure vnto the centure of the large hole, is cleaped the East line, or els the line Oriental: and the remenaunte of the line, fro the forsaied Orientall vnto the bordure, is cleaped the weste line, or the line Occidentall.

Now hast thou here the fower quarters of thin Astrolabie, deuided after the fower principall plages or quarters of the firmament.

¶The degrees fro the the East line, to the Southe.

Euen to the little crosse, vp to the ende of the Meridionall line vnder the ryng shalt thou finde the bordure, deuided with. rc. degrees, and by that same proporciõ is euery quarter of thyn Astrolabie deuided, ouer the whiche degrees, there been nombers of Augrim, that deuiden thilke same degrees fro fiue to fiue, as sheweth by longe strikes bitwene: of the whiche by long strikes the space bitwene, conteineth a mile waie, and euery degree of thilke bordure, conteineth fower Minutes, that is to saie, fower minutes of an houre.

¶Of the twelue signes, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, and the other.

Vnder the Compasse of thilke degrees, been written the names of the twelue signes, as Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, and Pisces. And the nombers of the degrees of thes signes, been written in Augrime aboue, and with long diuisions, from fiue to to fiue, deuideth from the tyme that the signe entreth vnto the laste ende. But vnderstande well, that these degrees of signes, been eueriche of hem considered of. lx. Minutes, and euery Minute of. lx. secondes, and so foorthe into small fractions infinite, as saieth Alcabucius. And therefore knowe well, that a degree of the bordure, containeth fower Minutes. and a degre of a signe, containeth. lx. minutes, and haue this in minde.

¶The cercle of the daies.

Querte this followeth the cercle of the daies, that been figured in maner of the degrees, that conteinen in nomber three hundred, three score and fiue, deuided also with longe strikes, from fiue to fiue, and the nombers of Augrime, written vnder the cercle.

¶The cercle of the twelue monethes.

Querte the cercle of daies, followeth the Cercle of the twelue names of the Monethes, that is to saie, Januarius, Februarius, Marcius, Aprill, Maius, Junius, Julius, Auguste, September, October, Nouember, December.

The names of these Monethes taken her names, some for properties, and some by statutes of Emperours, & some by other Lordes of Roome. Eke of these Monethes, as liked to Julius Cesar, and Cesar Augustus, some wer icompouned of diuers nombers of daies, as July and Auguste. Then hath Januarius rrri. daies, Februarius. rrviii. Marcius. rrri Aprill thirtie, Maie. rrri. Junius thirtie, Auguste. rrri. September thirtie. October thirtie and one. Nouember thirtie. December rrri. Natheleste although that Julius Cesar toke two daies out of Feuerire, and put hem in his Monethe of July, and Augustus Cesar cleaped the Monethe of Auguste after his name, and ordained it of one and thirtie daies yet trust well that the sõne dwelleth therfore neuer the more, ne the lasse in one signe, then in an other.

¶ The names of the holie daies.

Then followeth the names of the holie daies in the kalẽder, and next hem the letters. A. B. C. on whiche they fallen.

¶ The scale of the Astrolabie.

Vert the forsaied cercle of the A. B. C. vnder ꝑ crosse line is marked the scale, in maner of two Squires, or els in maner of ledders, that serueth by his. xrii. poinctes, and his diuisions of full many a subtell conclusion of this forsaied scale: For the crosse line vnto the verie angle, is cleaped Vmbra recta. or els vmbra extensa, and the neather partie vmbra versa.

¶ The Rule.

Then hast thou a broade rule, that hath on euery ende a square plate, parted with certaine holes, some more, and some lesse, to receiue the stremes of the sonne by daie, and eke by mediacion of thyne ye, to knowe the altitude of the sterres by night.

¶ The pin, whiche is imagined to be pole artike and the horse.

Then is there a large pin, in maner of an eriltre, that goth through the hole that halte the tables of the climathes in the reeth, in the wombe of the moder, thorowe which pin there goeth a little wedge, the whiche is cleped the Horse, that straineth all these partes togither. This forsaid great pin, in maner of an eriltre, is imagined to be the pole artike in thyne Astrolabie.

¶ For lines on the wombe side.

The wombe side of thyne Astrolabie is also diuided, with a longe crosse in lower quarters, from the East to weste, and from the Southe to Northe, from right side to left side, as is the backeside.

¶ The degrees of the wombe side.

The border of whiche wombe side, is deuided fro the poinct of the East line, vnto the poinct of the South line, vnder the rynge in. xc. degrees, and by thesame proporciõ, is euery quarter deuided. as is the backside, that amounteth three hundred. lx. degrees. And vnderstande well, that the degrees of this border, been aunswerynge and consentyng to the degrees of Equinoctiall, that is deuided in thesame nomber, as euery other cercle is in the hie heauen.

This border is deuided also with. xrii. letters, and a small crosse aboue the South line that sheweth the. xrii. houres equales of the cloche. And I haue saied fiue of these degrees maken a mile waie, and three mile waie maken an houre, and euery degree of this border containeth fower Minutes, and euery Minute fowertie secondes. Nowe haue I tolde thee twise, and for the more declaracion.

The plate vnder the reete is discriued with three cercles, of whiche the least is cleaped the Cercle of Cãcer, bicause ꝑ the hedde of Cancer tourneth euer more concentrike, vppon thesame Cercle. In this halfe of Cancer is the greatest declinacion Northward of the sonne and therefore is he icleped Solsticium of Sommer, whiche declinacion after the Ptholome is. xriii. degrees and fiftie Minutes, as well in Cancer, as in Capricorne. This Signe of Cancer is cleped the Tropike of Sommer, of Tropos, that is to saine, ayen ward. The middell cercle in widnesse of this three, is cleaped the cercle Equinoctial, vpon whiche turneth euer more, ꝑ heddes of Aries and Libra. And vnderstande well, that euermore this cercle Equinoctiall tourneth iustlie fro very East, to very weste, as I haue shewed in the sphere solid. This same cercle is cleped also the wayer of the daie. For when the Sonne is in the head of Aries and Libra, then been daies and nightes like of lengthe, in all the worlde, and therfore been these twoo signes called Equinoctis. And al that moueth within these heddes of Aries and Libra, is icalled Northward and all that meueth without these heddes, his meuyng is cleped Southward. as for the Equinoctiall, take kepe of ꝑ latitudes northe and South, and forget it not: but this cercle Equinoctiall been considered the. xriiii. hour of the cloche. For euermore the arilyng of. xb. degrees of the Equinoctial, maketh an hour equall of the cloche. This Equinoctiall is cleped the mid waie of the first meuyng, or els of the Sonne. And note that the first meuyng, is cleaped meuyng of the first mouable of the eight Sphere, whiche meuyng is fro East to west, & again into East. Also it is cleped girdell of the firste meuyng. For it departeth the first meuable, that is to sain, ꝑ sphere in twoo like the parties, euen distaunte fro the Poles of this worlde. The widest of these three cercles principall, is cleaped the cercle of Capricorne, and tourneth euermore cõcentrike, vpon the same cercle. In the hedde of this forsaied Capricorne, is the greatest declinacion Southwarde of the Sonne. And therefore it is cleped Solsticium of Winter. This signe of Capricorne, is also clepead the Tropike of Winter, for then begynneth the sonne to come again to ds warde.

Of the almicanteras, the signet, and what is thine Orizont.

Vpon this forsaied plate been compassed certain cercles, that highten almicanteras: of whiche some of hem semen parfite cercles, and some semen imparfite. The centure that standeth a middest the narowest cercle, is cleaped the signet. And the nethereste cercle, that dividerh the twoo emisperies, that is the parte of the heauen aboue the yearthe, and the parte beneth. These almicanteras been compowned by twoo and twoo, all be it so that on diuers Astrolabies, some almicanteras been deuided by one, and some by twoo, and some by three, after the quantite of the Astrolabie. This forsaied signet is ymagined to bee the very poinct ouer the croune of thy hedde, and also this signet is the very pole of the orizont in euery region.

What been thyne azimutes.

From this signet as it semeth there comen croked strikes, like to the clawes of a loppe, or els like to ꝑ werke of a womans calle, in keruing ouerthwart the almicanteras, and these same strikes or diuisions, been cleaped Azimutes and they deuiden the Orizontes on thine Astrolabie in. xxiiii. diuisions. And these Azimutes serue, to knowe the costes of the firmamente, and to other conclusions, as for to knowe the signet of the Sonne, and of euery sterre.

Of the. xii. houres of the Planettes.

Nerte these Azimutes, vnder the cercle of Cancer, been the twelue diuisions embolite, moche like to the shappe of the Azimutes, that shewen the spaces of houres of Planettes.

Thy reete or els thy zodiake.

Thy Reete of thyne Astrolabie, whiche is thy Zodiake shapen in maner of a Nette, or of a lop webbe, after the olde discripcion, whiche thou maiest trouue vp and doune, as thy self list, eueth conteineth certaine nombre of Sterres fixe, with her longitudes and latitudes determinate, if so bee that the maker haue not erred. The names of the Sterres been written in the margin of thy Reete, there thei sit, of the whiche Sterres the small poincte is cleaped the Centure. And vnderstande, that all the Sterres sittyng within the zodiake of thyne Astrolabie, been cleped Sterres of the North, for thei arisen by the North East line, and all the remenaunt fires out of the zodiake, been icleped Sterres of the South, but I saie not that thei arisen all by the Southe East line, witnesse of Aldeberan and also Algomisa. Generally vnderstonde this rule, that thilke Sterres, that been cleaped Sterres of the Northe, arisen rather then the degree of her longitude, and all the Sterres of the South, arisen after the degree of her longitude, that is to saine, Sterres in thyne Astrolabie.

The measure of longitude of Sterres, itaken in the line ecliptike of heauen, vnder the whiche line, when the Sonne and the Moone been line righte, els in the superficie of this line, then is the eclips of the Sonne or of the Moone, as I shall declare and eke the cause why: but sothely the Ecliptike line of the zodiake, is the vttereste bordure of the zodiake, there thy degrees been marked. The zodiake of thy Astrolabie is shapen as a Compasse, whiche that containeth a large brede, as after the quantitie of thy Astrolabie, in ensample that the zodiake of heauen is imagined to be a superficies, conteinyng the latitude of twelue signes, where as all the remenaunte of cercles in heauen, been imagined verie lines, withouten any latitude amiddes the celestial zodiake is imagined a line, which that is cleped the Ecliptike line, vnder the whiche line, is euermore the waie of the sonne. Thus been there fire degrees of the zodiake, if that one side of the line, and fire degrees on that other. The zodiake is deuided in twelue principall deuisions, that departen the. xii. signes, and for the straitnes of thine Astrolabie, the is euery small deuision in a signe iparted by two degrees and twoo, I meane degrees conconteinyng. lx. Minutes, and this forsaied heuenisshe Zodiake, is cleped the circle of the Signes, or the circle of beastes. For Zodiake in langage of Greke, souneth beastes in Latine tongue, and in the Zodiake been the xrii. Signes, that haue names of beastes, bicause when the Sonne entreth in any of the Signes, he taketh the propertie of soche beastes, or els for that the sterres that been there, been fired, been disposed in signe of beastes, or shape like beastes, or els when Planettes, been vnder the Signes, thei transmue vs by her influence, operacions, and effectes. And vnderstande also, that when an hotte Planette, cometh into an hote Signe, then entereth his heate, and if a Planette be cold, then amenuseth his coldnesse, bicause of the hotte Signe. And by this conclusion, maiest thou taken ensample in all Signes, be thei moiste or drie, mouable or fire, rechenyng the qualitie of the Planettes, as I first saied. And euerich of these. xii. signes, hath respect to a certaine parcell of the bodie of a man, and hath it in gouernaunce: as Aries hath thyne head and Taurus thy necke and thy throte, Gemini thyne arme holes and thyne armes, and so forthe, as shall bee shewed more plainlie, in the fifth parte of this treatise. The Zodiake, the whiche is partie of the eight Sphere, ouerheruеth the Equinoctial, and he ouerheruеth hym again in euen partes, and that one halfe declineth Southwarde, and that other Northwarde, as plainlie declareth the treatise of the Sphere.

The Labell.

When haste thou a labell, that is shapen like a rule, saue that it is strait and hath no plates on either ende, but with the smal poinct of the forsaied labell, shalt thou calcule the equacions in the bordure of thyne Astrolabie, as by thin almurie.

The Almurie, the denticle of Capricorne, or els the calculere.

Thyne almurie is cleped, the denticle of Capricorne, or els the calculere, this same almurie set fire in the hed of Capricorne, and it serueth of many a necessarie conclusion in equacion of thynges, as shall be shewed.

Here beginneth the conclusions of thine Astrolabie, to finde the degree in the whiche the Soonne is daie by daie, after his course about.

Reckon and knowe, whiche is the daie of the moneth, and lay thy rule vppon the same daie, and then woll the verie poinct of thy rule, verely sitten on the bordure, vpon the degree of the Sonne. Ensample as thus. The yere of our Lorde a thousande thre hundred, ninetie and one, the. xii. daie of Marche at middaie, I would knowe the degree of the Soonne, I sought in the bache halfe of myne Astrolabie and founde the circle of the daies, the whiche I knewe by the names of the Monethes, written vnder thesame Circle: Tho laied I my Rule ouer the forsaied daie, and founde the poincte of my Rule in the bordер, vppon the first degree of Aries, a litle within the degree: and thus knewe I this conclusion.

An other daie I would knowe the degree of my Soonne, and this was at Middaie in the. xiii. daie of December, I founde the daie of the moneth in maner as I saied: tho laied I my Rule vpon the forsaied. xiii. daie, and founde the poincte of my Rule, vpon the first degree of Capricorne, a little within the degree, and then had I of this conclusion the verie experience.

To knowe the altitude of the Sonne either of celestiall bodies.

Put the ryng of thyne Astrolabie, vppon thy right thombe, and tourne thy lifte side against the light of the Sonne, and remeue thy Rule vp and doune, till the streame of the Sonne, shine throughy bothe holes of the Rule: looke then how many degrees, this Rule is arrised fro the little crosse vpō the East line, and take there the altitude of thy Sonne: and in this same wise maiest thou knowe by nighte, the altitude of the Moone, or of the bright Sterres. This Capiter is so generall euer in one, that there needeth no more declaracion, but forget it not.

To knowe the degree of the Sonne, and of thy Zodiake, by the daies in the backside of thyne Astrolabie.

Then

When it thou wilte wete the rechenyng to knowe, whiche is the daie in thy Kalender of the moneth, that thou art in, laie thyne Astrolabie, that is to saie, the alidatha, vpon the daie in the Kalender of thyne Astrolabie, and he shal shewe thee thy degree of the Sonne.

To knowe euery tyme of the daie, by light of the Sonne, and euery tyme of the nighte, by the Sterres fire, and eke to knowe by night or by daie, the degree of the signe that ascendeth on the east Orizont, which is cleped comenly ascendent.

Take the altitude of the Sonne, when thee liste, as I haue said, and set the degre of the Sonne (in case that it bee before the middle of the daie) emong thin almicãteras, on the Easte side of thyne Astrolabie: and if it be after the middle of the daie, sette the degree of the Sonne, vpon the weste side. Take this maner of setyng, for a generall rule ones for euer.

And when thou haste isette the degree of the Sonne, vppon as many almicanters of light, as was the Sonne, taken by thy rule, laie ouer thy Labell, vppon the degree of the Sonne, and then woll the poincte of the label, sitten in the bordure, vpon the very tide of the daie. Ensample of this.

The yere of our Lorde a thousande, three hundred, ninetie and one, the twelue daie of Marche, I would knowe the tide of the daie, I toke the altitude of my Sonne, and found that it was, xxb. degrees, and. xxx. Minutes of height of the bordure in the backeside, tho turned I myne Astrolabie, and bicause it was before middaie, I tourned my reete, and set the degree of the Soonne, that is to saie, the firste degree of Aries, in the right side in myne Astrolabie, vppon the. xxb. degree, and xx. minutes of height, emong my almicanteras: Tho laied I my label, vpon the degree of my Sonne, and found the poinct of my label in the bordure, on the capital letter, that is cleaped an. E. Tho reckened I all the capitall letters, fro the line of Midnight, vnto the forsaied letter E. and founde it was nine of the Clocke of the daie. Tho looked I ouer my East Orizont, and found there the twelue degree of Geminius ascendyng, whiche that I toke for myne ascendente, and in this wise had I the experience for euermore, in whiche maner I should knowe the tide of the daie, and eke myne ascendente. Tho would I wete that same night following, the houre of the nighte, and wrought in this wise: emong an heape of Sterres, it liked me to take the altitude, of the faire white Sterre, that is cleaped the Alhabor, and founde her sitting, on the weste side of the line of Middaie, eighten degrees of heighte, taken by my Rule on the backside. Tho sette I the Centure of this Alhabor, vpon eightene degrees, emong my almicanteras, vpon the weste side, bicause that he was founde vpon the weste side: tho laied I my Labell ouer the degree of the Soonne, that was discended vnder the Weste Orizont, and reckened all the letters capitalles, fro the line of Middaie, vnto the poincte of my label in the bordure, and founde that it was after noone, passed seuen of the clocke, the space of a leuen degrees. Tho looked I doune vppon my Easte Orizont, and founde there twentie degrees of Libra ascendyng, whom I tooke for myne ascendente, and thus learned ones for euer, to knowe in whiche maner, I should come to the houre of the nighte, and too myne ascendent, as verelie as maie be taken, by so small an instrumente. But natheleslle, this rule in generall will I warne thee for euer: ne make thou neuer none ascendente at noone of the daie. Take a iuste ascendent of thyne Astrolabie, and haue set iustlie a cloke, when any celestiall bodie, by the whiche thou weneste gouerne thilke thynges, been nie the Southe line, for trust well, when the Sonne is nere the Meridional line, the degree of the Sonne remaineth, so long concentrike vpon thyne almicanteras, that sothelie thou shalt erre fro the iuste ascendente. The same conclusion saie I, by my centure of my Sterre fire by the night, and moreouer by experience, I wote wel that fro our Orizont, fro enleuen of the clocke, vnto one, in taking of the iuste ascendente, in a portatile Astrolabie, it is to harde to knowe. I meane from enleuen of the clocke before noone, till one of the clocke next following: and for the more declaracion, loe here thy figure nexte after this rule that followeth.

To knowe the degree of the Sonne in thy Zodiake, by the daies, in the backside of thyne Astrolabie.

Then

Of the Astralabie.

When thou wolte weten, to reckon and knowe, whiche is the daie of the moneth, that thou art in, and lay therule of thy Astrolaby, that is to saie, the allidatha vpon the daie, in the Kalender of thine Astrolabie, and he shall shewe thee thy degree of Sonne.

The ascendente sothlie, is as well in all Natiuities, as in questions, and as in eleccions of tymes is a thyng, whiche that these Astrologiens greatlie obseruen, wherefore me semeth conuenient, sens I speake of the ascendent, to make of it a speciall declaracion. The ascendent sothlie, to take it at the largeste, is thilke degree that ascendeth, at any of these forsaied tymes, on the Easte Orizon: and therefore, if that any Planet ascende at thilk same time, in the forsaid same gree of his lõgitude, men saie that thilke Planet is in Horoscopo, but sothelie the hous of that ascendent, that is to saie, the firste hous or the East angle, is a thynge more broade and large, for after the statutes of Astrologiens, what celestiall body, that is .v. degrees aboue thilke degree, that ascendeth on the Orizont, or within that nomber, that is to saine, nere the degree that ascendeth, yet reckon thei thilk planete in the ascendent, and what Planet that is vnder thilke degree, that ascendeth ỹ space of .xv. degrees, yet saine thei that Planette is like to hym, that is the houre of the ascendẽt. But sothelie, if he passe the boundes of the forsaied spaces, aboue or beneath, thei saine that thilke Planette is fallyng fro the ascendent: yet sain these Astrologiens, that the ascendent, and eke the Lorde of the Ascendent, maie be shapen for to bee fortunate, or infortunate: as thus. A fortunate ascendent cleapen thei, when that no wicked Planette of Saturne or Mars, or els the taile of the Dragon, is in the hous of the ascendente, ne that no wicked Planette, haue no aspecte of enemitie vppon the ascendente: But thei woll caste, that thei haue fortunate Planet in her ascendente, and yet in his felicitie, and then saie thei that it is well. Furthermore, thei saine that Fortune of an ascendente, is the contrary of these forsaid thinges. The lorde of the ascendente saine thei, that he is fortunate, when he is in good place for the accident, and eke the Lorde of the ascentent, is in an angle, or in a succedent, where he is in his dignitie, and coumforted with frendly aspectes receiued, and eke that he maie seen the ascendent not retrograde ne combust, ne ioined with no shrewe in the same signe, ne that he bee not in his discencion, ne reigned with no Planette in his discencions, ne haue vppon hym none aspecte infortunate, and then thei saine that he is well.

Natheless, these been obseruaunces of iudiciall matter, and rites of Painims, in whiche my spirite hath no faithe, ne knowyng of her horoscopũ, for thei saine, that euery signe is departed in thre euen partes, by .x. degrees and the like porcion thei cleapen a face. And although a Planette haue a latitude fro the Ecliptike, yet sain some folke, so that the planette arise in that same signe, with any degree of the forsaied face, in whiche his longitude is reckened. And yet is the Planette in horoscopo, be in natiuities or in eleccion.

¶ To knowe the verie equacion of the degrees of the Sonne, if it so be that it fall betwirt .ii. almicãteras.

For almoche as the almicanteras of thyne Astroladie, been compouned by twoo and two, where as some almicanteras in sondrie Astrolabies, be compouned by one, or els by twoo, it is necessarie to thy learnyng, to teache thee firste to knowe, and witche with thyne instrumente: wherfore, when ỹ the degree of the Sonne, falleth betwene twoo almicanteras or elles if thyne almicanteras, been grauen with ouer greate a poincte of a Compace, for bothe these thynges maie cause erroure, as well in knowyng of the tide of the daie, as of the verie ascendente. Thou muste werken in this wise: set the degree of the Sonne, vpon the higher almicanteras as of bothe. And waite well, where the almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there a pricke of ynke, set adoune againe the degree of the Sonne, vpon the neather almicanteras of bothe, and sette there an other pricke: remeue then thy almurie in the bordure, euen amides bothe prickes and this woll leaden iustlie the degree of the Sonne, to sit betwene bothe the almicanteras in his right place. Laie then the label on the degree of the Sonne, and finde in the bordure ure the very tyde of the day or of the night. And also verely shalt thou synde vpon thy est orizonte thin ascendent.

¶ To knowe the sprynge of the dawnyng and the ende of the euening, the whiche ben clepeth the two coepusculis.

Sette the nadire of thy sonne vpon. 18. degrees of height amonge thyn almycanteras on the west syde, and lay thy label on the degree of the Sonne, and than shall the pointe of the label shewe the sprynge of the daye: also sette the nadire of the sonne vpon the. 18. degrees of height amōg thin almicanteras on the est side, and lay ouer thy label vpon the degre of the sonne, and wyth the poynte of thy labell synde in the bordure the ende of thin euentinge, that is very night. The nadyre of the sonne is thylke degre that is oppolyte to the degre of the sonne in the. 30. ligne, as thus. Euery degree of Aries by ouer, is nadire to euery degree of Libra by ouer, and Taurus to Scorpion, Gemini to Sagitarius, Cancer to Capricorne, Leo to Aquary, Virgo to Pices. And yf any degree in thy zodiake be derke, hys nadire shall declare him.

¶ To knowe the arche of the day, that some folke callen the day artificial, fro the sonne riling tyl it go downe

Sette the degre of the sonne vpon thin est orizonte, and lay thy label on the degree of the sonne, and at the poynte of thy label in ỹ bordure sette a pryche: turne than thy reete aboute, tyll the degree of the sonne lyt vpon the weste orizonte, and laye thy labell vpon the same degre of the sonne, and at the poynte of the labell sette another pryche. Nekt than the quantite of time in the bordure betwixe both pryches, and take there thine arche of the daye: the remnaunt of the bordure vnder the orizonte, is the arche of the night. Thus maist thou reken bothe arches of euery porcion where that thou likeste, and by this maner of werking maist thou se how longe that any sterre lyre dwelleth aboue the erthe, fro the time that he riseth tyll he go to reste. But the daye naturell, that is to sayne. 24. houres, is the reuolucion of the equinoctiall, with as moche partye of te zodiake, as the sonne of his proper mowinge passethe in the meane while.

¶ To turne the houres inequalles, and the houres equalles.

To knowe the nombre of the degrees in the houres inequalles, and departe hem by. 15. and take there thyne houres equalles.

¶ To knowe the quantite of the day vulgare that is to say, fro sprynge of the day vnto the very night.

Knowe thy quantyte of thyne coepusculis, as I haue it taught in the chapiter before, and adde hem to the arche of the day artificial, and take there thy space of al ỹ hole day vulgare vnto the very nyght. In the same maner mayste thou werke to knowe the vulgare nyght.

¶ To knowe the houres inequales by daye.

Vnderstande well that these houres inequales been cleped houres of the planettes: And vnderstonde wel that sometyme ben the longer by daye than they be by night, and somtyme contrarie. But vnderstand thou well, that euermore generally the houres inequale of the daye, wyth the houres inequale of the night, conteineth. 30. degrees of the bordure, the whiche bordure is euermore answeringe to the degrees of the equinoctiall, wherfore depart the arche of the daye artificiall in. 12. and take there the quantite of the houre inequale by day, and if thou abate the quantite of the houre inequale by daye out of. 360. degrees, than shall the remnaunt that leaueth performe the hour inequale by night.

¶ To knowe the quantite of houres equales.

The quantytes of houres equales, that is to saine the houres of the clocke, bē departed by. 15. degrees alredy in the bordure of thy Astrolabie, as wel by night as by daye, generally for euermore. What nedeth any more declaracion: wherfore whan thee lyste to knowe how many houres of the clocke ben passed, or any parte of any of these houres ben to comen, fro soch a time to soche a time, by day or by nygth, knowe the degree of thy Sonne, and laye thy labell on it: than turne thy rete about e ioyntly with thy label and with the point of it reckon in the bozder fro the Sonne arisynge, in to the same place there thou desiresst by day as by night. This conclusion woll I declare in the fourthe partye of the lasse chapiter of this tretyse, so openly that there shal lacke no wozde that nedeth declaracion.

VNderstand wel that euermoze fro the arising of the Sonne tyl it go to reste, the nadyre of the Sonne shall shewe the houre of the planet, and fro that time forwarde al the night tyll the Sonne arise, than shall the very degre of the Sonne shewe the houre of the planet. Ensample as thus. The. 13. day of Marche fel vpon a saturday parauenture, and at the arising of the Sonne I founde the second degree, of Aries sittinge vpon min Est oziзonte, al be it was but lytel. Than founde I the seconde degree of Libza nadire of my Sonne, discendynge on my west oziзonte, vpon whiche west oziзont euery day generally at the Sonne arisyng, entrethe the houre of any planet, vnder the forsaid weste oziзonte, after the whiche planete the day beareth his name, & endeth in the nexte strike of the planet, vnder the forsaid weste oziзonte: and euer as the Sonne clymbeth vpper and vpper, so gothe his nadire downer and downer, and echinge fro soch strikes the houres of planettes by ozder, as they sitten in heuen. The fyrst hour inequale of euery saturday is Saturne, and the seconde to Jupiter, ỹ thirde to Mars the fourth to the Sonne, the fyfth to Uenus, the sixt to Mercurius, the seueuth to the Mone, & than ayen the eight to Saturne, the nineth to Jupiter, the thenthe to Mars, the eleuenth to the Sõne, the twelfth to Uenus. And nowe is my Sõne gon to rest as for that saterday, than shewethe the very degre of the Sonne the houre of Mercury, entring vnder my weste oziзont at euen. And nexte him succedeth the Moone, and so forthe by ozder planete after planet, in houre after houre al the night longe til the Sonne arise. Nowriseth the Sonne the sonday by the mozowe, & the nadyre of the Sonne vpon the weste oziзont, shewethe me the entrynge of the houre of the forsaid Sonne. And in this maner succedeth planete vnder planete fro Saturne vnto the moone, and fro the moone vp agayne to Saturne, houre after houre generally, and thus knowe I this conclusion.

¶ To knowe with which degree of the zodyake any sterre sire in thin Astrolabie ariseth vpon the East oziзonte, although the oziзonte be in an other ligne

SEtte the centure of the sterre vpon the East oziзonte, and loke what degree of anye ligne ỹ sitteth vpon the same oziзonte at the same tyme: And vnderstande wel that with the same degree ariseth ỹ same sterre. And this meruailous arisinge with a stronge degree in another sygne, is bycause that the latitude of the sterre syre is either Nozthe oz Southe fro the equinoctial. But sothly the latitudes of planettes bē comenly reckened fro the ecliptike, bycause that none of hem declineth but few degrees out fro the bzede of the zodiake. And take good kepe of this chapiter of arisinge of celestiall bodyes, for ther trusteth wel, that neither moone neither sterre in our ambolike oziзont, that ariseth with ỹ same degre of his longitude, same in one case, and that is whan they haue no longitude fro the eclyptycke lyne. But neuertheless somtime is euerych of these planettes vnder the same lyne.

¶ To knowe the declinacion of any degree in the zodiake, fro the equinoctiall cercle.

SEtte the degree of anye sygne vpõ the lyne meridional, & reken his altitude in the almicanteras, fro the East oziзonte vp to the same degree sette in the forsaide lyne, and sette there a pricke: Turne vp than thy rete and set the heed of Aries oz Libza in the same meridional line, and set there another pricke. And whan that this is done, cõsider the altitudes of hem bothe: for sothly the differẽce of thilke altitude is the declinacion of thilke degree fro the equinoctial. And yf it so be that thylke degree be nozthward fro the equinoctiall, than is his declinacion Nozth, and if it be southward, thã it is south

¶ To knowe for what latitude in any region the almicanteras in my tables ben compowned.

LEken howe many degrees of almicanteras in the meridionall line, be from the cercle equinoctial, vnto the signet oz els from the pole artike vnto the Nozth oziзont, and for so great a latitude oz so smale a latitude, is the table compouned.

¶ To

¶ To knowe the latitude of the Sonne, in the myddes of the day, that is cleped the altitude meridian.

SEt the degree of thy Sonne vpon the lyne meridionall, and reke how many degrees of almicanteras ben bytwixe thin Est orizonte, and the degree of thy Sonne, and take there thin altitude meridian, that is to sain, the highest degree of of the Sonne, as for that daye. So mayst thou knowe in ꝑ same line the highest lyne that any starre lyre clymbeth by nyght, this is to saine, that whan any starre lyre is pased the lyne meridional, thā beginneth it to discende, and so doth the Sonne.

¶ To knowe the degree of the Sonne, by the reet for a maner cosmolyte

SEke busely with thy rule the highest of the Sonne in myddes of the daye, tourne than thyn Astrolabye, & with a pricke of yrke marke the nombre of ꝑ same altitude, in the lyne meridional. Tourne thā thy reet aboute tyl thou finde a degree of thy zodiake, accordyng with the pricke, this is to sain, sitting on the pricke, and in sothe thou shalt finde but two degrees in al the zodiake of that condicion. And yet thilke two degrees ben in diuers lygnes. Thā mayst thou lightly by the season of the yere, knowe the ligne in whiche is the Sonne.

¶ To knowe whiche day is like to other in length throughout the yere.

LOke whiche degrees ben lyke from the heedes of Cancer and Capricorne, and loke whan the Sonne is in any of thilke degrees, than been the dayes lyke of length, that is to sain, that as longe is that day in that moneth, as was loche a daye in loche amoneth, there varieth but lytell. Also if thou take two dayes naturelles in the yere, ylike farre frō eyther points of the equinoctial, in the oppolite parties, thā as long is the daye artificial on that one day as on that other, and eke the contrarie.

¶ This chapiter is a maner declaration to conclusions that folowety.

VNderstande well, that thy zodiake is departed into halfe cercles, fromc the heed of Capricorne vnto the heed of Cancer, & ayēwarde from the head of Cācer vnto ꝑ head of Capricorne. The head of Capricorn is ꝑ lowest point, wher as the sōne goth in winter, & the head of Cācer is the highest point, in which the sonne goth in sōmer. And therefore vnderstande wel, than any two degrees that ben ylyke far frō any of these two heades, trust wel that thilke two degrees ben lyke declinacion, be it Southward or Northwarde, & the dayes of hem ben lyke of length, and the nyghtes also, and shadowes ylyke & the altitudes ylyke at myddaye for euer.

¶ To knowe the very degree of any maner starre straunge after his latitude, though he be indetermitate in thyn Astrolaby, sothly to the trouth thus he shal be knowen.

TAke the altitude of thy starre, whan he is on the East side of the lyne meridional, as nyght as thou mayste gesse, and take that ascendent anone right by some maner starre lyre, which thou knowest and forget not the altitude of the first starre ne thin ascendent. And whan that this is done, aspie dyligently whan this same first starre passeth any thig to the south westward, and catche him anone rightin the same nombre of the altitude on the west syde of this lyne meridional, as he was caught on the East syde, and take a newe ascendent anone right by some maner lyre, the whiche that thou knowest, & forgete not this seconde ascendent. And whan this is done, reken thā howe many degrees been bytwirt the first ascendent, and the seconde ascendent, and reken wel the middel degree bytwyrt bothe ascendentes, & set thilke myddel degree vpon thin Caste orizonte, and than loke what degre sit vpon the line meridional, and take there the very degree of the ecliptike, in whiche the starre standeth for the tyme. For in the ecliptyke is the longitude of a celestial body, rekened euen fro the halfe of the head of Aries, vnto the ende of Pisces, and his latitude is rekened after the quantite of hys declynacion Northe or South, towarde the poles of thys werke. As thus, if it be of the sonne or any fix starre, reken his latitude or his declinacion fro the equinoctial cercle, and if it be of a planete, reken than the quantite of his latitude frō the ecliptike line, al be it so that from the equinoctial, may the declinacion or the latitude of any body celestiall be rekened, after the light Northe or Southe, and after the quantite of his declinacion. And yet so may the latitude or the declinacion of anye body celestiall, saue onelye of the Sonne, after his light Northe or Southe. And after the quantite of his declinacion be rekened from the ecliptike line, fro whiche lyne all planetes somtime decline, Northe or Southe, saue onely the forsaide Sonne.

¶ To know the degrees of longitudes of fyxe sterres, after that they ben determinate in thin astrolabye, if it so be that they ben trewly set.

SEtte the center of the sterre vpon the lyne meridional, and take kepe of thy zodiake, and loke what degree of anye signe sitte vpon the same lyne meridional at the same tyme, and there the degre in whiche the sterre standeth, and with the same degree cometh the same sterre vnto the same line frō the orizonte.

¶ To know in special the latitude of our centre, I meane after the altitude of Orenforde, and the hight of our people.

VNderstande wel that as farre is the heed of Aries or Libra in the equinoctial, from our orizonte, as is the fynet from the pole artike, & as hie as the pole artike from the orizonte, as the equinoctial is ferre from the fynet, I preue it thus by the latitude of Orenforde, vnderstande wel that the height of our pole artike from our Northe orizont is. 51. degrees, and. 50. minutes, than is the finet from the pole artike. 38. degrees and. 10. minutes, than is the equinoctial from our finet. 51. degrees, and. 50. minutes, than is our southe orizonte from our equinoctial. 38. degrees, and 10. minutes. Understande well this rekening also, forget not that the finet is. 90. degrees of height from the orizont, and our equinoctial is. 90. degrees from our pole artike. Also this shorte rul is soth that the latitude of any planet in a region, is the distance from the finet vnto the equinoctial

¶ To preue the latitude of any place in a region by the prefte of the height of the pole artike in that same place.

IN some winters nyght, whan the fyrmamente is clere and thicke sterred, waite a time tyll that euery ster fyx sit line right perpendiculer ouer the pole artike. and clepe that ster. I. and wayte another ster that sit lyne right vnder I. and vnder the pole, and clepe that sterre F. & vnderstand wel that. F. is not considred but onely to declare that. I. that syt euer on the pole. Take than anone right the altitude of I. from the orizonte and forget it not, let. I. and. F. go farwel tyl againste the dawning a great while, and come than again, and abide tyll that. I. is euen vnder the pole vnder. F. for sothely than wil. F. sit ouer the pole, take than eftsones the altitute of. I. from the orizonte, and note as wel the seconde altitude as the firste altitude. And whan that thys is done, reken howe many degrees that the first altitude. I. exceded his altitude, & take halfe the ilke porcion that is exceded, and adde it to his secōde altitude, and take there the eleuacion of the pole, and eke the altitude of thyn gion. For these two ben of one nombre, that is to sain, as many degrees as thy pole is eleuat, so moche is the latitude of thy region. Ensample as thus. Parauenture the altitude of. I. in the eueninge is. 92. degrees of height than wil the secōde altitude or the dawning be. 21. that is to saine, lesse than. 92. that was his first altitude at euen. Take thā the halfe of. 92. & adde to it. 21. that was his seconde altytude, and thā hast thou ȳ height of the pole & the latitude of thy region. But vnderstande wel to preue this conclusion, & many another faire conclusion, thou maiste haue a plomet hanginge on a lyne hygher than thy head on a perche and that lyne mote hange euen perpendiculer bytwixe the pol and thine eye. and than shalte thou se yt. I. syt euen ouer the pole and ouer. F. at euen. And also if. F. syt euen ouer the pole and ouer. I or daye.

¶ Another conclusion to preue the hyght of the pole artike from the orizont.

LIke any sterre fyxe that euer descendeth vnder the orizont in thilk region, and consyde his hyghest altitude and his lowest altitude from the orizōt, and make a nomber of these altitudes, take than and abate halfe that nombre, and take there the eleuacion of the pole artike in that same region, and for the more declaracion. &c. o 82. 51. o. 20.

¶Another conclusion to preue the latitude of a region that ye ben in.

Understande well that the latytude of anye place in a rigyon, is verely the space betwyxe the sygne of hem that dwellen there, & the equinoctial cercle, Northward & Southe, takinge the measure in the meridionall line, as sheweth in the almicanteras of thin astrolaby, and thilke space is as moch as the pole artike is hie in the same place fro the orizont. And than is the depression of the pole artentike beneth the orizonte, the same quantite of space, neither more ne lesse, than if thou desire to knowe this latitude of the region, take the altitude of the Sonne in the myddle of the daye, whan the Sonne is the heed of Aries or of Libra, for than mouethe the Sonne in the lyne equinoctial, and abate the nombre of that same Sonnes altitude out of .90. degrees, and than is the remnaunt of the nombre that leueth, the altitude of the region, as thus. I suppose that the Sonne is thilke daye at noone. 38. degrees of heyght, abate than .38. degrees out of .90. so leueth ther than is .52. degrees the latitude. I saye not this but for ensample, for wel I wote the latitude of Orenforde is certain minutes lesse. Howe if it so be that thee thinketh to longe tariyng to abyde til that the Sonne be in the head of Aries or of Libra, than waite whan that the Sonne is in anye other degre of the zodiake, and consider the degre of this declynacion de Northward from the equinoctial, abate than from the Sonnes altytude at noon the nombre of his declinacion, and than hast thou the highest of the heedes of Aries and Libra, as thus. My Sonne parauenture is in the .10. degre of Leo almoste. 56. of height at noone, & his declinacion is almoste .18. degrees northward from the equinoctial, abate than thilke .18. degrees of declinacion out of the altitude at noone, than leueth .38. degrees, lo there the heed of Aries or Libra, and thin equinoctial in that regiō. Also if it so be that the Sonnes declinaciō be southwarde from the equinoctial, adde thā thilke declinacion to the altitude of the Sonne at noon, & take there the heedes of Aries and Libra & thyne equinoctiall, abate than the height of the equinoctial out of .90. degrees, and thā leueth there .38. degrees, that is the distaunce of the region from the equinoctial of any sterre fixe that thou knowest, and take the neither elongation lengthyng from the same equinoctial lyne, and werke after the maner a forsaid.

¶Declaracion of the ascencion of signes as well in the circle directe, as in oblique.

The excellence of the sphere solide amōges other noble conclusions, sheweth manifest the diuers ascencions of signes in diuers places, as wel in right cercles as in embolyke cercle. These auctours writen ỳ thilke signe is cleped of right ascencion with which the more part of the cercle equinoctial and the lesse parte of the zodiake ascendeth, & thilke signe ascendeth embolyke, with, which the lesse of the zodiake equinoctial, and the more parte of the zodiake ascendethe, and euermo the arche of the daye and the arche of the night is there ylike longe, and the soone twise euery yere passing through the signe of her heed and, 2. sōmers & 2. winters in a yere haue these forsaide people, and the almycanteras in her Astrolabie ben streight as a line, so hathe shewed in this sygure. The vtilities to knowe the ascencions of sygnes in the right circle is this. Trust wel that be mediacyons of thilke ascencions, these Astrologiēs by her table and her instrumentes, knowen verely the ascencion of euery degre and minute in al the zodiake, in the embolike cercle, as shal be shewed. And note that this forsayd right orizonte that is cleped orizont rectum, deuideth the equinoctiall in to right angles, and embolike orizonte, where as the people is enhaunced vpon the orizonte, ouercomethe the equinoctial embolyke angels.

¶This is the conclusion to know the ascencions of sygnes in the right cercle, that is circulus directus.

Sette the heed of what signe the lyst to knowe the ascending on the right cercle, vpon the lyne meridionall, and wayte were thin almurie touchethe the bordure, and set there a priche, tourne than thy rete westwarde til the ende of the forsaid signe, sette vpon the meridional lyne, and estsones waite where thine almurie thoucheth the bordure, and set there another priche. Reken than the nombres of degrees in the bordure betwixe both priches, and take than the ascencion of the signe in the right cercle, and thus maist thou werke with euery porcion of the zodiake.

Of the Astrolabie.

¶ To knowe the ascencyons of signes in the embolyse cercle in euery region, I mene in circulo obliquo.

Sette the heed of the sygnes, which as the liste to knowe his ascencion vpon the Est orizonte, and wayte where thine almury toucheth the bordure, and sette there a pricke, tourne than thy rete vpwarde til the ende of the same sygne, set vpon the Est orizonte and waite eft sones where as thine almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there another prycke, reken thā the nombre of the degrees in the bordure betwixe bothe prickes, and take there the ascencion of the signe in the embolyse cercle. And vnderstand wel that al the signes in the zodiake, from the heed of Aries vnto the ende of Virgo, ben cleped signes of the Northe frō the equinoctial, and these signes arisen betwixe the very Est & the verye Northe in our orizont generally for euer: and all the signes from the heed of Libra, vnto the ende of Pisces, ben cleped signes of the southe fro the equinoctial, and these sinnes arisen euermore betwixe the very Est and the very southe in our orizonte, also euery signe betwixt the heed of Capricorne vnto the ende of Gemini, ariseth in our orizonte in lesse than two houres equalles, & these same signes from the heed of Copricorne vnto the ende of Geminy, ben called torteuous signes or croked signes, for they risen embolise in our orizonte, and these croked signes ben obediēt to signes that bē of the right ascencion. These signes of right ascencion, ben fro the heed of Cancer vnto the heed of sagitary, and these signes arisen more bpright than dothe the other, and therfore they ben called soueraine signes, and euerye of hem ariseth in more space than in two houres, of whiche sygnes Gemini obeyeth to Cancer, and Taurus to Leo, and Aries to Virgo, Pisces to Libra, Aquarius, to Scorpio, and Capricorne, to Sagitarie, and thus euermore two signes that ben like ferre from the heed of Capricorne, obeyeth eueriche of hem to other.

¶ To knowe fully the foure quarters of the worlde, as Est, west, South, and North.

Take the altitudē of thy sonne whā thou liste, and note well the quarter of the worlde in wich the sonne is from the tyme by the asymutes, tourne than thin Astrolaby, and set the degree of the sonne in the almicanteras of his altytude, on thilke syde that the Sonne standeth, as is in maner of taking of houres, and ley thy labell on the degree of the Sonne, and reken howe many degrees of the Sonne, betwene the lyne meridionall and the point of thy label, & note wel the nombres. Tourne than agayne thyne Astrolabye, and set the point of thy great rule there thou takest thin altitudes, vpon as many degrees in hys bordure from his meridional, as was the pointe of thy labell from the lyne meridional on the wombe syde. Take than thyne Astrolabye with both handes sadly and slyly, and let the sonne shine through bothe holes of thy rule, and slyly in thilke shynyng laye thyne Astrolabye couche a doun euen vpon a playne grounde, and than wyl the meridionall lyne of thin Astrolabye be euē south, and the Est lyne wil lye euē Est, and the West lyne west, and the Northe lyne Northe, so that thou werke softely and auisely in the couchynge, and thou haste thus the foure quaters of the firmament, &c.

¶ To knowe the altitude of planettes from the way of the sonne, whether they ben Northe or southe fro the way alongelayde.

Loke whan a planette is on the line meridional, yf that her altitude be of the same heighte, that is the degree of the Sōne for that daye, and than is the planette in the very way of the sonne, and hath no latitude. And yf the altitude of the planette be hyer than the degree of the Sonne, than is the planette Northe from the waye of the sygne Southe, a quantite of latitude as shewethe by thine Almycanteras and yf the altitude be lesse than the degree of the Sonne, than is the planette South from the waye of the Sonne, soche a quantite of latitude as shewethe by thine Almicanteras. This is to saine fron the waye of the Sonne in euerye place of the zodiake, for on the morowe the Sonne wyll be in another degre.

¶ For to knowe the signet for the ariling of the Sonne, this is to saine, the party of the orizonte in whiche the Sonne ariseth.

Thou

THou muste firste consider that the Soonne ariseth not in the verie Easte signet, sometyme by Northe Easte, and sometyme by Southe Easte, sothelye the Sonne ariseth euermore in the verie Easte in our Orizonte, but if he bee in the hedde of Aries or Libra. Now is thine Orizonte departed into. rrtiii. parties, of thy Minutes in significacion of rriii. partes of the worlde, though it bee so, that thipmen reken all that parties in. rrrii. Then is there no more, but waite in the whiche minute, that the Sonne entreth at his arising, and take there the signet of the rising of the Sonne.

¶ The maner of deuision of thine Astrolabie, is thus enioined, as in this case.

FIrst, it is deuided in fower places principallie, with the line that cometh fro the East, to the weste, and then with an other line, that goeth fro the South to the North, then is it diuided in smal parties of minutes, as East and East by Southe, where that is the firste minute aboue the East line, and so forthe fro partie to partie, till that thou come again to the Easte line. Thus thou might vnderstand the signet of euery sterre, in whiche partie he ariseth.

¶ To knowe in whiche partie of the firmament, is the cõiunccion.

COnsider the tyme of the coniunccion, by the Kalender, as thus: howe many houres that the coniunccion is fro middaie of the daie before, as sheweth the Canon of the Kalender. Reken then that nomber in the bordure of thine Astrolabie, as thou were wont to doe in knowyng of the houres of ẏ daie, or of the night, and lay thy labell ouer the degree of the sone, then will the poinct of the labell, sit vpon the houre of the coniunccion. Loke then in whiche Minute, the degree of the Sonne sitteth, and in that partie of the Firmamente is the coniunccion.

¶ To knowe the signet of the altitude of the Sonne.

THis is no more to saie, but any time of the daie, take the altitude of the sunne and by the Minutes in whiche he ascendeth, thou might see in whiche partie of the Firmamente he is, and in the same wise might thou see by night any Sterre, whether he sit Easte, Weste, or Southe, or any part betwire, after the name of the minutes, in whiche the Sterres standeth.

¶ To knowe sothlie the longitude of the Moone, or any Planette that hath no Latitude, fro the tyme of the Ecliptike line.

TAke the altitude of the Moone and reken thyne altitude by, emong thyne almicanteras, on whiche side that the Moone standeth, and set there a pricke. Take then anone right vppon the Moones side, the altitude of euery sterre fire that thou knowest, and set his cercle vpõ his altitude, emong thyne almicãteras, there the Sterre is founden, waite then of whiche degree the Zodiake is, to whiche the pricke of the altitude of the Moone, and there take the degree in whiche the Moone standeth. This conclusion is verie sothe, of the Starres in thine Astrolabie, & standeth after the trouth. Some treatise of the Astrolabie, maketh non excepcion, whether the Moone haue latitude or none, nor whether side of the Moone, the altitude of the Sterre be founde. And note if the Moone shewe her self by daie, then thou maieste woorche the same conclusion by the Sonne, as well as by the Sterre fire.

¶ This is the werching of the conclusions to knowe whether any Planette bee directe, or retrograde.

TAke the altitude of any sterre, that is cleped a Planette, and note it well, anone righte take the altitude of some Sterre fire, that thou knoweste, and note it well also, and come againe the thirde or the fowerth night nert folowyng, for then thou shalt perceiue well the meuyng of the Planet whether he meue forward, or backward, and waite well then when the Sterre fire, is in this same altitude that she was, when thou tooke her firste altitude, of the forsaied Planet, and note it well, for truste well, if so bee that the Planet be in the right side of the meridionall line, so that his seconde altitude be lesse then the firste altitude was, then is the Planet directe, and if he be in the west side in that condicion, then is he retrograde, and if so be that this Planet be in the East side, whē his altitude is take, so that the seconde altitude, bee more then his firste altitude, then is he retrograde, and if he bee in the west side of the line meridionall, then is he direct, but the cōtrary mouing of these parties, is the cours of the Moone, for sothlie the Moone moueth the cōtrary fro either Planettes, in her eclipthe line, but in none other maner.

¶ The conclusion of equacions of houses, after the Astrolabie.

SEt the beginning of the degree that ascendeth vpon the ende of the. viii. houre inequall, thā will the line of ỹ second house, sit vpon the line of Midnight, remeue then the degree that ascendeth, and set hym vpon the ende of the. x. houre inequall, then will the beginnyng of the. iii. houle, sitte vpon the Midnight line, bring vp again thesame degree that ascēdeth firste, and set hym vpon the Easte Orizonte, and then will the beginning of the. iiii. hous sit vppon the Midnight line. Take then the nadere of the degree, that ascendeth firste, and set hym vpon the ende of the. ii. houre inequall, and then will the beginnyng of the. v house, sit vpon the Midnight line. Take then the nadere of the ascendent, and set him vpon the ende of the. iiii. houre inequall, and then will the beginnyng of the. vi. houle set vpon the Midnight line. The beginnyng of the leuenth houle, is nadere of the ascendente, and the beginnyng of the. viii. houle, is nadere of the seconde, and the beginnyng of the nineth houle, is nadere of the thirde, and the beginnyng of the tenth houle, is nadere of the. iiii. and the beginnyng of the leuenth houle, is nadere of the liueth, and the beginning of the xii. houle, is nadere of the. vi. houle.

¶ An other maner of equacions of houses, by the Astrolabie.

TAke thyne ascendente, and then thou haste the lower angles, for well thou wotelte, that thoppolite is of thine ascendente, that is to saie, the beginnyng of the leuenth hous, sit vpon the west Orizont, and the beginnyng of the tenthe houle, vpon the line Meridionall, and his oppolite vpon the line of Midnight, then laie thy labell vppon the degree that ascendeth, and reken then fro the poinct of thy labell, all the degrees in the bordure, till that thou come to the Meridionall line, and departe all thilke degrees into thre euen partes, and take there the euen porcions of three other houles, for to laie thy labell ouer euery of these three parties, and then thou might see by the labell in the zodiake, the beginning of these three houles fro the ascendent, that is to saie, the twelue nert aboue the ascendente, and then the eleuenth houle and the. x. houle, vpon the Meridional line, as I first saied the same wise werche, fro the ascendent, doune to the line of Midnight and thus thou haste three houles, that is to saie, the beginning of the seconde, the thirde, and the fowerth houle: then is the nadire of these three houles, the beginnyng of these. iii houles that foloweth.

¶ To finde the line Meridionall, to dwell fixe in any certain place.

TAke a rounde plate of metall, for warpyng the border the better, and make thereupon a firste compace, a little within the bordure, and laie this rounde plate vpon an euen grounde, or some euen stone, or on a euen stocke fixe in the ground, and laie it euē by a rule, in the centre of the compace, sticke an euen pinne or a wire vpright, the smaller the better, and set thy pinne or thy wire, by a plomme rules ende vpright euen, and let this pinne be no lenger then a quarter, of thy diameter of the compace fro the pinne, and wait busilie aboute tenne or eleuen of the Cloche, when the Sonne sheweth, when the shadow of the pinne entereth any thyng, within the cercle of the cōpace one heere brede, and make there a pricke with ynke: abide then still waityng on the Sonne, after one of the cloche, til that the shadowe of the pinne, or of the wire, passe any thyng out of the cercle or compace, bee it neuer so little, and sette there a pricke. Take then a compace and measure euen the middle, betwixt bothe prickes, and set there a pricke: Take then a Rule and drawe a strike, euen fro the pinne vnto the middle prick, and take there the line Meridional for euermore, as in thelame place. And if thou draw a crosse ouerthwarte the compace, iustly ouer the line Meridionall, then haste thou East and west, and perconlequens the oppolitile, that is Southe and Norths.

¶ Discripcion of the Meridionall line, and of the longitudes and latitudes, of cities and tounes, as well as of climates.

This

This line Meridionall, is but a maner discripcion of a line ymagined, that passeth vpō the poles of the worlde, and by the signette of our hedde: and it is cleaped the signet, for in what place that any manne, is at any tyme of the yere, when the Sonne by meuyng of the firmamente, cometh to his Meridionall place, then is it the verie Middaie, that wee cleape soone, and therefore it is cleaped the line of Middaie. Then take heede that euermore of twoo Citees, or of twoo Tounes, of whiche the one approcheth nerer the East, then doeth the other Toune, trust well that thilke twoo Tounes haue diuers Meridians. Take kepe also, that the arche of the Equinocciall, that is conteined and bounded, betwene the twoo Meridians, is cleaped the Longitude of the Toune. And if so be that twoo Tounes haue Meridian like, or one Meridian, then is the distaunce of hym bothe like farre: and in this maner thei chaunge not her Meridian, but bethelie thei chaunge her Almicanteras, for the haunsyng of the Pole, and the distaūce of the Sonne. The longitude of a climate maie be cleaped the space of the yearth, fro the beginnyng of the firste climate, vnto the laste ende of the same climate, euen directe against the Pole artike, thus saie some auctours. And some clerkes saie, that if men cleape the latitude of a center, the arche Meridian, that is conteined or intercepte, betwixe the signet and the Equinocciall, then thei saie, that the distaunce fro the Equinocciall, vnto the ende of the climate, euen ayenst the pole artike, is the longitude of the climate for Southe.

¶ To knowe with what degree of the Zodiake, that any planet ascendeth on the Orizonte, where his latitude be Northe, or South

Nowe by thyne Alminacke, the degree of the Ecliptike of any signe, in which that the planette is reckened for to bee, and that is cleped the degree of his lōgitude. And knowe also the degree of his latitude, fro the ecliptike, Northe or South, and by these ensamples folowing in especialle, thou maiest worche with euery signe of the Zodiake. The longitude perauenture of Uenus, or of an other planet was of Capricorne, and the latitude of hem Northward degrees, fro the Ecliptike line, then tooke I subtil compas, and cleped the one poinct of my compace I, and that other F. then tooke I the poinct of I. and set it in the ecliptike line, and my zodiake in the degree of the Longitute of heddes, that is to saie, in the ende of Capricorne, and then set I the poinct of F. vpward in the same signe, bicause that the altitude was Northe, vpon the latitude of Uenus, that is to saie, in the degre fro the hed of Capricorn, and thus haue I the degrees betwixe my twoo prickes, then laid I doune softlie my compace, and set the degree of the longitude vpon the Orizont, then toke I and waxed my label, in maner of a paire of tables, to receiue distinctly the pricke of my compace, then toke I this forsaid labell, and laied it fire ouer the degree of my longitude, then toke I vp my compace, and the poinct of I. in the ware of my labell, as I coud gesse, ouer the ecliptike line, in thende of the lōgitude I set the poinct ouer endlong on the labell, vpon the space of the latitude inwarde, and on the zodiake, that is to say, Northward fro the ecliptike: then laied I doun my compace, and loked well in the waie vpon the ecliptike of I. and F. then tourned I my reete, till that the pricke of F. sate vpon the Orizont, then sawe I well, that ỳ bodie of Uenus in her latitude of degrees septemtrionals, ascendeth in the ende of degree, fro the hed of Capricorne. And note that in this maner, thou mightest werch with any latitude septētrionall in al signes: but sothly the latitude Meridionall, of a planet in Capricorn maie not be take, bicause of the little space betwixe the ecliptike, and the bordure of the Astrolabie, sikerly in al other signes it maie bee take. Also the degree perauenture of Iupiter, or of any other planette, was in the first degree of Pisces in longitude and his latitude was degrees Meridionall. Then toke I the poinct of I. and set it in the first degree of Pisces on the ecliptike, then set I the poinct douward of F. in the same signe, bicause that ỳ latitude was South degrees that is to saie, fro the hed of Pisces, and thus haue I degrees betwixe both prickes. Then set I the degree of the longitude, vpon the Orizont, then toke I my labell, and laied him fire vpon the degree of longitude, then sette I the poinct of I. on my labell euen ouer the ecliptike line, in the ende of the degree of the lōgitude, and I sette the poincte of F. endelong on my labell, the space of degrees of the latitude outwarde fro the Zodiake, that is to saie, Southwarde fro the Ecliptike towarde the bordure, and then tourned I my reete, til the poincte of F. sate vpon the Orizont, then sawe

sawe I well that the bodie of Jupiter, in his Latitude of degrees Meridionall, alcendeth with the degree of Pisces in horescopo. And in this maner thou maiest werche, with any Latitude, as I saied first, saue in Capricorne. And thou wilte plie this crafte, with the arisyng of the Moone, looke thou reben well the course of houre by houre, for she dwelleth in a degree of her Longitude but a little while, as thou woste well: but neuertheleſſe, if thou legen well her verie meuyng by the tables, or after her course houre by houre, thou shalte doe well inough.

Umbra recta.

IF thou wilt wirche with umbra recta, if thou might come to the base of the toure, in this maner shalt thou wirche: take the altitude of the Toure with bothe holes, so that the rule lie euen on a poincte. Enlample, as thus. I see hym through the poincte of lower, then mete I the space, betwixe me and the Toure, and I find it twentie foote, then behold I how lower is to twelue, and I find it is the third part of twelue. Right so the space betwixe thee and the Toure, is the thirde parte of the altitude of the Toure: then thrise twentie foote, is the highest of the toure, with thaddicion of thine owne bodie fro thyne eye. If the Rule fall on fiue, then is fiue tymes twelue, the highest of the Toure.

Umbra versa.

IF thou maieste not come to the base of the toure, and thou sire hym through the nober of one, set there a prick at thy foote, then go nere the Toure, and see hym through at the poincte of twoo, and set there an other prick, and then beholde howe one hath hym to twelue, and thou shalte finde that he hath hym twelue sithes, then behold how twoo haue hym to. xii. and thou shalte finde it sixe sithes, and therefore the space betwixe twoo prickes, is sixe times thyne altitude. And note that at the first altitude of one, thou settest a prick, and afterward when thou seest hym through at twoo, there thou settest a prick, then thou findeste betwene. lxxx. foote, then thou shalte finde that tenne is the sixte parte of. lxxx. then is a foote the altitude of the Toure, but if it fall vpon an other poincte, as thus. It falleth on sixe at the seconde tahyng it, when it falleth on lower, then shalt thou find that sixe is the second part of twelue, and lower is the third parte of twelue, by the thirde parte, that is to say, the space betwixe twoo prickes, twise the height of the Toure, and if the difference were three, then would it be three times the height. Et sic de singulis. In other maner werchyng by umbra recta. If thou maiest not come by the face of the Toure, wirche in this wise: Sette thy rule vpon one, till thou see the altitude, and set at thy foote a prick, and then set thy rule vpon twoo, and so doe in the same maner: then looke what is the difference betwixe one and twoo, and thou shalte finde that it is one. Then measure the space betwixe the two prickes, and that is the twelue part of the altitude of the Toure, and so of all other.

Umbra recta.

IF thy Rule fall vppon the eighte poinct, on the right shadowe, then make the figure of eight, thā loke howe moche space of the feete is, betwixe thee and the Toure, and multiplie that by twelue, and when thou haste multiplied it by the same nomber, then deuide it by the nomber of eight, and kepe the residue, and adde thereto thy height vnto thyne eye, to the residue, and that shall be the verie heighte of the Toure. And thus maiest thou worche on the same side, from one to twelue, &c.

Umbra recta.

AN other maner of worchyng vpon the same side. Looke vpon what poincte thy rule falleth, whē thou seest the toppe of the Toure, through the twoo holes, and then mete the space frō thy foote, to the base of the Toure, and right as the nomber of the poincte, hath hym self to twelue, right so the mesure, betwixt thee and the Toure, hath hym self to the height of the same Toure. Enlample as thus. I sette cast thy rule fall vpon eight, then is eight twoo thirde partes of twelue, so is the space twoo thirde partes of the Toure.

Umbra versa.

TO knowe the height, by the poincte of umbra versa. If the rule fall vpon. iii. when thou seest the toppe of the toure set

ther a prieke there thy foote standeth, and go nere till thou maiest see the same toppe, at the poincte of.iiii. and sette there an other prick: then mete howe many foote is betwixe the two prickes, and the height vp to thyne eye, and that shall be the height of the toure. And note that.iii. is the fowerth part of.xii. and iii. is the thirde part of.xii. Now passeth.iiii. the nomber of.iii. by distaunce of.i. therefore the same space with thy height to thy eye, is the height of the toure. And if it were so that there were twoo or three distaunces in the nō bres, so should the measure betwixe the prickes, by twise or thryse the height of the toure.

Cumbra recta.

TO know the height, if thou maiest not come of the bace of ỹ thing, set thy rule vpon what poinct thou wilte, so that thou mayst se the toppe of the thing, through the twoo holes, and make a marke, there as thy foote standeth, and go nere or ferther, till thou maieste see it through an other poinct, and make there an other marke, and looke what difference is betwixe the twoo poinctes of the scale, and right as that difference hath vnto. xii. right so the spaces betwixe the two markes, hath hym to the height of the thing. Exãple. I set the case, that thou seest through the poinct of.iiii. and after at the poinct of.iii. Now passeth the nomber of.iiii. the nomber of.iii. the distance of.i. and right as this difference of one, hath hymselfe to. xii. right so the measure betwixe bothe the marks hath him to the height of the same thyng wtyng therto the height of thy self to thine eye. And thus maiest thou werke frō.i. to.xii.

Cumbra versa.

FOrthermore, if thou wilte knowe in Cumbra versa, by the crafte of Cumbra recta, I suppose to take thine altitude of the poinct of.iiii. and makest a marke, and then thou goest nere, till thou haste it at the poincte of.iii. & makest there an other marke, then must thou deuide.144. by.4. the nomber that cometh thereof shall be.36. and after deuide.144. by .3. and the nomber that cometh thereof is.48. then loke what difference is betwixe.36. and.48. and that shalt thou finde.12. and right as.12. hath hym to.12. so the space betwixe the twoo prickes, hath him to the altitude of the thyng.

Here endeth the conclusions of the Astrolabie.

The complaint

of the blacke Knight.

IN Maie when Flora the freshe lusshe Quene
The soile hath cladde, in grene, red, and whight
And Phebus gan to shede his stremes shene
Amidde the Bulle, with al the beames bright
And Luciter, to chace awaie the night
Ayen the morowe our Orizont hath take
To bid all louers out of her slepe awake.

And hartes heuie for to recomforte
From derkehed, of heuie nightes sorowe
Nature bad hem rise, and hem disporte
Ayen the goodlie glad greie morowe
And hope also, with sainct Yhon to borowe
Bad in dispite of Daunger and Dispaire
For to take the holsome lusshe aire.

And with a sigh I gan for to abreide
Out of my slomber, and sodainly vp starte
As he (alas) that nigh for sorowe deide
My sickneſſe sate aye so nie my harte
But for to finde soccour of my smarte
Or at the least some releasse of my peine
That me so sore halte in euery veine.

I rose anone, and thought I would gone Into the wodde, to heare the birdes syng when that the mistie vapour was agone
And cleare and faire was the morynyng
The dewe also like siluer in shinyng
Upon the leaues, as any Baume swete
Till kirie Titan with his persaunt hete.

Had dried vp the lusshe licour newe
Upon the herbes in the grene mede
And that the floures of many diuers hewe
Upon her stalkes gon for to spriede
And for to splaie out her leues in brede
Again the Sonne, golde burned in his spere
That doune to hem cast his beames clere.

And by a riuer forthe I gan coste
Of water clere, as direll or crystall
Till at the last I founde a little weie
Toward a parke, enclosed with a wall
In compace rounde, and by a gate small who so that would, freelie might gone
Into this parke, walled with grene stone.

And

Of the blacke knight.

And in I went to heare the birdes song which on the braunches, both in plain & vale
So loude sang, that all the woode rong
Like as it should shiuer in peces smale
And as me thought, that the Nightingale with so great might, her voice gan out wrest Right as her harte for loue would brest.

The soile was plain, smoth, & wonder soft
All ouerspraad with tapettes that Nature
Had made her self: couered ehe a loft with bowes grene, the floures for to cure
That in her beautie thei maie long endure
From all assaute of Phebus seruent fere whiche in his sphere so hotte shone and clere

The aire attempre, and the smothe winde
Of Zepherus, emong the blosomes white
So holsome was, and so nourishing by kinde
That smale buddes, and round blosomes lite,
In maner gan of her breethe delite.
To yeue vs hope there fruict shall take Ayenst Autumpne redy for to shake.

I sawe the Daphene closed vnder rinde
Grene Laurer, and the holsome Pine
The Mirre also, that wepeth euer of kinde
The Cedres hie, vpright as a line
The Filbert eke, that lowe doeth encline
Her bowes grene, to the yearth adoun vnto her knight called Demophon.

There sawe I eke the freshe Hauthorne
In white Motley, that so swote doeth smell
Ashe, Firre, & Oke, with many a yong acorn
And many a tree mo then I can tell
And me before I sawe a little well
That had his course, as I can beholde vnder an hill, with quicke stremes colde.

The grauell gold, the water pure as glasse
The bankes rounde, the well enuironyng
And soft as veluet the yong grasse
That therevpon lustelie came springyng
The sute of trees about compassyng
Her shadowe cast, closyng the well rounde
And all the herbes growyng on the grounde.

The water was so holsome, & so vertuous
Through might of herbes growyng beside
Not like the welle where as Narcisus Slain was, through vengeaunce of Cupide where so couertly he did hide
The grain of death vpon eche brinke
That death mote folowe, who y euer drinke

Ne like the pitte of the Pegace vnder Pernaso, where Poetes slepte Nor like the welle of pure chastite whiche that Diane with her nimphes kept when she naked into the water lepte
That slowe Acteon with her handes fell
Onely for he came so nigh the well.

But this welle that I here rehearse
So holsome was, that it would alwaye
Bollen hartes, and the venim peerce
Of pensiuehed, withall the cruell rage
And ouer more refreshe the vilage
Of hem that were in any werinesse
Of greate labour, or fallen in distresse.

And I that had through daunger & disdain
So drie a thrust, thought I would allaie
To taste a draught of this welle or twain
My bitter langour if it might alaie
And on the banke anone doune I laie
And with mine hed, vnto the welle I raught
And of the water dranke I a good draught.

whereof me thought I was refreshed wele
Of the brennyng that late so nigh my harte
That verely anone I gan to fele
In huge parte released of my smarte
And there withall anone vp I starte
And thought I would walke and see more
For the in the parke, and in the holtes hore.

And through a launde as I yede a pace
And gan about fast to beholde
I founde anone a delectable place
That was beset with trees young and olde whose names here for me shall not be tolde
Amidde of whiche stoode an herber grene
That dreched was, with colours new & clene.

This herber was full of floures gende
Into the whiche, as I beholde gan
Betwixt an Hulseere and a wood bende
As I was ware, I sawe where laie a man
In blacke, and white colour pale and wan
And wonder dedly also of his hewe
Of hurtes grene, and freshe woundes newe.

And ouermore distrained with sicknesse
Beside all this he was full greuouslie.
For vpon hym he had an hote accesse
That daie by daie hym shooke full petouslie
So that for constrainyng of his maladie
And hartely wo, thus lyng all alone
It was a death for to heare hym grone.

whereof

wherof astoined, my fote I gan withdrawe Greatly wondring what it might be
That he so laye and had no felawe
Se that I coude no wight with him se wherof I had routhe, and eke pite
And gan anone, so softely as I coude
Amonge the bushes priuely me to shroude

If that I myght in any wise aspie what was the cause of his deedly wo
Or why that he so petously gan crie
On his fortune, and on vre also with al my myght I layed an eere to Euery worde, to marke what he saide
Out of his swough amonge as he abraide

But first, if I shulde make mencion
Of his persone, and plainly him discriue
He was in sothe, without excepcion
To speake of manhode, one the best on liue
There may no man ayen trouth striue for of his time, and of his age also He proued was, there men shuld haue ado for one the beest therto of breade and length

So wel ymade by good proporcion
If he had be in his deliuer strength
But thought and sickneste were occasyon
That he thus lay in lamentacyon
Grouste on the grounde, in place desolate
Sole by him selfe, awhaped and amate

And for me semeth that it is sitting his wordes al to put in remembraunce
To me that heard al his complaining
And al the grounde of his woful chaunce
If there withall I maye you do plesaunce
I wol to you so as I can anone
Lyke as he saide, reherce euerichone

But who shal helpe me nowe to complaine
Or who shal nowe my stile gie or lede
O Niobe, let nowe thy teeres rayne
In to my penne, and helpe eke in nede
Thou woful Myrre ỹ feleste mine hert blede
Of pitous wo, and myn hande eke quake
Whan that I write, for this mannes sake

For vnto wo accordeth complaining
And doleful chere vnto heuinesse
To sorowe also, sighing and weping
And pitous mourning vnto drerinesse
And who that shall write of distresse
In party nedeth to knowe felingly
Cause and roote of al soche malady

But I alas, that am of witte but dul
And haue no knowing of soche matere
For to discriue, and write at the ful
The woful complainte, whiche ỹ ye shal here
But euen like as dothe a shriuenere
That can no more, what that he shal write
But as his maister bidde dothe endite

Right so fare I, that of no sentement
Saye right naught in conclusion
But as I herde whan I was present
This man complaine, with a pitous soun
For euen like without addicioun
Or disencrease, eyther more of lesse
For to reherse anone I wol me dresse

And if that any nowe be in this place
That sele in loue breuinge or keruence
Or hindred were to his ladies grace with false tonges, that with pestilence
Slea trewe men, that neuer did offence
In worde nor dede, ne in her entent
If any soche be here nowe present

Let him of routhe lay to audience with doleful chere, and sobre countenaunce
To here this man, by ful hye sentence
Hys mortal wo, and his perturbaunce Complaining, nowe lyng in a traunce with lokes vpcast, and ruful chere
The effecte of whiche was as ye shal here.

The thought oppressed w inward sighs sore
The painful lyfe, the body languissching
The woful gost, the hert rent and tore
The pitous chere pale in complaining
The deedly face, like ashes in shining
The salte teares that from min eyen fall
Percel declare, grounde of my paines al

Whole herte is grounde to blede in heuinesse
The thought receite of wo, & complainte
The brest is chest of dole and drerinesse
The body eke so feble and so fainte with hote and colde mine ares is so mainte
That nowe I chiuer, for defaute of heate
And hote as glede, nowe sodainly I sweate

Nowe hote as fire, now colde as ashes deed
Now hote for colde, now cold for hete again
Now colde as yse, now as coles reed
For heate I brenne, & thus betwixe twaine
I posted am, and al forcaste in paine
So that my hete plainly as I fele
Of greuous colde is cause euery dele

Of the blacke knight.

This is the colde of inwarde hir disdane
Colde of dispite, and colde of cruel hate
This is the colde ꝑ euer doth his bely payne
Ayenst trouthe to fight and debate
This is the colde that the fyre abate
Of trewe meaning, alas the harde while
This is the colde that wol me begile

For euer the better that in trouth I mente
With al my myght faithfully to serue
With herte and al to be diligent
The lesse thanke, alas I can deserue
Thus for my trouth daunger doth me sterue
For one that shuld my death of mercy let Hath made dispite new his swerde to whet

Against me, and his arowes to syle
To take vengeaunce of wilful cruelte
And tonges false through her sleightly wyle
Han gone a werre, that wil not stinted be
And false enuie, wrathe and enuyte
Haue conspired against al right and lawe
Of her malyce that trouth shalbe slawe

And male bouche, gan first the tale tel
To sclaunder trouth of indignacion
And falle reporte so loude range the bel
That mylbylese and false suspection
Haue trouthe brought to his dampnacion
So that alas, wrongfully he dyeth
And falsenesse nowe his place occupieth

And entred is in to trouthes londe
And hath thereof the ful possession
O rightful god that first the trouthe fonde
Howe maie thou suffre soche oppression
That falsheed shulde haue iurisdiction
In trothes right to slee him gyltles
In his traunchile he may not lyue in pees

Falsly accused, and of his goone forfuged
Without answere, while he was absent
He damned was, and may not be excused
For cruelte sate in iudgement
Of hastinesse without aduisement
And badde Disdaine do execute anone
His iudgement in presence of his fone

Attourney maye none amitted been
To excuse trouthe, ne a worde to speke
To fauth or othe the iudge lyste not seen
There is no gaine, but he wil be wreke
O lorde of trouthe to the I cal and clepe
Howe may thou se thus in thy presence
Without mercy murdred innocence

Nowe god that art of trouthe soueraine
And seest how I lie for trouthe bounde
So sore knitte in loues fyrie chaine
Euē at the death through gyrte with many a wounde
That lykely are neuer for to sounde
And for my trouthe am dampned to the death
And not abyde, but drawe alonge the breath

Consider and se in thine eternal right
Howe that min herte professed whilom was
For to be trewe with al my ful myght
Onely to one the whiche nowe alas
Of volunte without any trespas
Myne accusours hath taken vnto grace
And cherisheth hem, my death to purchace

What meaneth this? what is this wōder dreme
Of purueiaunce yf I shal it cal
Of god of loue, that false hem so allure
And trewe alas, downe of the whele ben fal
And yet in sothe, this is the worst of al
That falsheed wrōgfully of troth hath ꝑ name
And trouth ayenward of falsheed beareth the blame

This blinde chaunce, this stormy auenture
In loue hath moste his experience
For who that doth with trouth moste his cure
Shal for this mede finde moste offence
That serueth loue with al his diligence
For who can paine vnder lowlyhede
Ne faileth not to finde grace and spede

For I loued one, ful longe sythe agone
With all mine herte, body and ful might
And to be deed my herte can not gone
From his heste but holde that he hath byght
Though I be banished out of her syght
And by her mouthe dampned that I shal dey
Vnto my beheste, yet I wil euer obey

For euer sithe that the worlde began
Who so lyste loke, and in storye rede
He shal aye finde that the trewe man
Was put abacke, were as the falsheede
Ꝑ furthered was for loue taketh none hede
To slea the trewe, and hath of hem no charge
Where as the false gothe frely at her large

I take recorde of Palamydes
The trewe man, the noble worthy knight
That euer loued, and of his paine no reles Notwithstanding his manhode & his might Loue vnto him dyd ful great vnright
For aye the bet he dyd in cheualrye
The more he was hindred by enuye

And

And aye the better he did in euery place
Though his knighthode and busy paine
The ferder was he from his ladyes grace
For to her mercy might he neuer attaine
And to his dethe he coude it not refraine
For no daungere, but aye obey and serue
Is he best coude, plainly tyl he sterue

What was the fyne also of Hercules
For al his conquest and his worthinesse
That was of strength alone peerles
For lyke as bokes of him liste erpresse
He set pillers through his hye prowesse
Iway at Gades for to sygnifie
That no man might him passe in cheualrye

The whiche pillers ferre beyonde Inde
Beset of golde, for a remembraunce
And for al that was he set behinde
With hem that loue lyste feebly auaunce
For him set last vpon a daunce
Against whom helpe may no strife
For al his trouth he loste his life

Phebus also for al his plesaunt lyght
Whan that he went here in yearth lowe
Unto the herte with Venus sight
Y wounded was through Cupides bowe
And yet his lady lyst him not to knowe
Though for her loue his herte dyd blede
She let him go, and toke of him no hede

What shal I say of yonge Piramus?
Of trewe Tristram, for al his hye renowne
Of Achilles or of Antonius
Of Iryte, or of him Palomowne
What was the ende of her passiowne
But after sorowe death, and than her graue
Lo here the guerdon that these louers haue

But false Jason with his doublenesse
That was vntrewe at Colkos to Medee
And Theseus rote of vnkindenesse
And with these two ete the false Enee
Lo thus the false aye in one degre
Had in loue her lust and al her wil
And saue falshode, there was none other skil

Of Thebes ete the false Ircite
And Demephon ete for his slouthe
They had her lust and al that myght delyte
For al her falshode and great vntrouthe
Thus euer loue alas, and that is routhe
His false lieges for thereth what he may
And sleeth the trewe vngoodly day by day

For trewe Adon was slayne with the bore
Amidde the forest in the grene shade
For Venus loue he felte al the sore
But Vulcanus with her no mercy made
The foule chorle had many nightes glade
Where Mars her knight and her man
To synde mercy comforte none he can

Also the yonge freshe Ypomedes
So lustly fresas of his corage
That for to serue with al his hert he ches
Athalaus so faire of her visage
But loue alas quite him so his wage
With cruel daunger plainly at the laste
That with the death guerdonlesse he paste

Lo here the fine of loues seruice
Lo howe that loue can his seruauntes quite Lo how he can his faithful men dispise
To slea the trewe men, and false to respite
Lo howe he doth the swerde of sorowe byte
In hertes, soche as moste his luste obey
To saue the false and do the trewe dey

For faith nor othe, worde, ne assuraunce
Trewe meaning, awaite, or busynesse
Stil porte, ne faithful attendaunce
Manhode ne might in armes worthinesse
Pursute of worship nor hie prowesse
In straunge lande riding ne trauaile
Ful lytel or nought in loue doth auaile

Peril of deathe, nor in see ne lande
Hunger ne thrust, sorowe ne sykenesse
Ne great empryses for to take on hande
Sheding of bloode, ne mankul hardinesse
Ne ofte wounding at sautes by distresse
Nor in parting of life, nor death also Al is for nought, loue taketh no head therto

But lesinges with her flatterie
Through her falshede, & with her doublenesse
With tales newe, and many fained lie
By false semblaunt & counterfect humblesse
Under colour depainte with stedfastnesse
With fraude couered vnder a pitous face
Accept be nowe rathest vnto grace

And can him selfe nowe best magnifie
With fained porte and presumpcion
They haunce her caule with false surquidrie
Under meaning of double entencion

Of the blacke knight,

To thinke one in her opinion
And laye another, to set hym selfe aloste
And hinder trouthe, as it is sene ful ofte

The whiche thinge, I dye nowe all to dere
Thanked be Uenus, and the god Cupide
As it is sene be mine oppressed chere
And by his arowes that stycken in my side
That saue death, I nothinge abide Fro day to day, alas the harde while
When euer his darte that him lyste to file

My wofull herte for to riue a two
For faute of mercy, and lacke of pite
Of her that causeth al my paine and wo
And lyste not ones of grace for to see Unto my trothe through her cruelte
And most of al I me complaine
That she hath ioy to laughe at my paine

And wilfully hath my death sworne
Al giltlesse, and wote no cause why
Saue for the trouthe that I had alorne
To her alone to serue faithfully
O god of loue, vnto the I crye
And to thy blynde double deite
Of this great wronge I complaine me

And vnto thy stormy wilful variaunce
Iment with chaunge and great vnstablenesse
Nowyp now doune, so rening is thy chaunce
That the to trust may be no sykernesse
I wite it nothinge but thy doublenesse
And who that is an archer and is blende
Marketh nothinge but shoteth by wende

And for that he hath no discrecion without aduise he let his arowe go
For lacke of sight, and also of reason
In his shoting it happeth oft so
To hurte his frende rather than his fo
So doeth this god with his sharpe stone
The trew sleeth, and letteth the false gone

And of his woulding this is the worst of al
Whan he hurteth doeth to so cruel wretche
And maketh the sycke for to crie and cal
Unto his foe for to be his leche
And harde it is for a man to seche
Upon the point of death in ieoperdye
Unto his foe to finde remedie.

Thus fareth it nowe euen by me
That to my foe that gaue my hert a wounde
Wote aske grace, mercy, and pite
And namely there where none may be founde
For nowe my sore my leche wil confounde
And god of binde so hath set mine yie
My lyues foe to haue my wounde in cure

Alas the while nowe that I was borne
Or that I euer sawe the bright sonne
For nowe I se that ful longe afore
Or I was borne, my descrny was sponne
By Parcas sisterne to slea me yf they conne
For they my death shopen or my sherte
Onely for trouth I may it not asserte

The mighty goddesse also of Nature
That vnder god hath the gouernaunce
Of worldely thinges committed to her cure
Disposed haue through her wise purueiaunce
To giue my lady so moche sufficiaunce
Of al vertues, and therwithal purpyde
To murdre trouth, hath take daunger to gide

For bounte, beaute, shape, and shemelyhede
Prudence, wit, passingly fairenesse
Benigne porte, glad chere with lowlyhede
Of womanhede right plenteous largenesse
Nature dyd in her fully empresse
Whan she her wrought, & althet last disdaine
To hinder trouthe, she made her chaberlaine

Whan mistrust also, and false suspection
With misbeleue she made for to be Cheke of counsaile to this conclusion
For to exile trouthe, and eke pite
Out of her courte to make mercy flee
So that dispite now holdeth forthe her reine
Through hasty bileue of tales that men feine

And thus I am for my trouthe, alas
Murdred & slayn, with wordes sharpe & keene
Giltlesse god wote of al trespas
And lye and blede vpon this colde grene
Nowe mercy swete, mercy my liues quene
And to your grace of mercye yet I preye
In your seruice that your man may deye

But if so be that I shal die algate
And that I shal none other mercy haue
Yet of my death let this ben the date
That by youre wil I was brought to my Or hastely, if that you lyste me saue (grane
Wy sharpe woundes that ake so and blede
Of mercy charme, and also of womanhede.

For other charme plainly is there none

But

But onely mercy, to helpe in this caſe
For though my woundes bléde euer in one
My lyfe, my death, ſtandeth in our grace
And though my gylte be nothinge, alas
I aſke mercy in all my beſt entente
Redy to die, yf that ye aſſente

For there againſt ſhal I neuer ſtriue
In worde ne werke, plainly I ne may
For leuer I haue than to be alyue
To dyd ſothly, and it be to her paye
Yf though it be this ſame day
Or whan that euer her lyſte to deuiſe
Sufficeth me to dye in your ſeruiſe.

And god ſ knoweſt ꝑ thought of euery wight
Right as it is, in euery thing thou maiſt ſe
Yet er I die, with al my ful myght
Lowly I pray to graunt vnto me
That ye goodly, faire, freſhe and fre
Whiche onely flee me for defaute of rothe
Or that I dye, ye may knowe my trouthe.

For that in ſothe ſufficeth me
And ſhe it knowe in euery circumſtaunce
And after I am wel paide that ſhe
Of that her lyſt of death to do vengeaunce
Vnto me that am vnder her lygeaunce
It ſtee me not her dome to diſobeye
But at her luſte wilfully to deye

Without grutchinge or rebellion
In wil or worde, holy I aſſente
Or any maner contradiction fully to be at her commaundement
And if I die, in my teſtament
My herte I lende, and my ſpirite alſo
What ſo euer ſhe lyſte with hem to do

And alder laſt to her womanhede
And to her mercy, me I recommaunde
That lye nowe her betwixe hope and drede
Bidinge plainly what ſhe lift commaunde
For ſtely this nis no demaunde
Welcome to me while me laſteth breath
Right at her choiſe where it be lyfe or death

In this water more what might I ſaine
Sithe in her hande, and in her wil is al
Bothe lyfe and death, my ioy and al my peine
And finally my heſte holde I ſhall
Or my ſpirite by deſtenye fatal
Whan that her lyſte fro my body wende
Haue here my trouth, & thus I make an ende

And with that worde he gan ſighe as ſore
Like as his hert ryue wolde atwaine
And helde his peace, & ſpake no worde more
But for to ſe his wo and mortal paine
The teres goone fro mine eyen raine
Ful pitcouſly for very inwarde rothe
That I him ſawe, ſo long wilthyng for trothe

And al this while my ſelfe I kepte cloſe
Amonge the bowes, and my ſelfe gonne hide
Tyl at the laſt the woful man aroſe
And to a lodge went there beſide
Where al the day, his cuſtome was tabyde
Sole to complaine of his paines kene
From yere to yere vnder the bowes grene

And for bycauſe that it drewe to the night
And that the ſonne his arke diurnal
Ypalled was ſo that his perſaunt lyght
His bright beames and his ſtremes al
Were in the waues of the water fal
Vnder the border of our occian
His chare of golde, his courſe ſo ſwiftly ran

And whyle the twilight & the rowes rede
Of Phebus light were beaurat alite
A penne I toke, and gan me faſt ſpede
The woful plainte of this man to write
Worde by worde as he dyd endite
Like as I herde and coude him tho reporte
I haue here ſet, your hertes to diſporte

If ought be miſſe, lay the wite on me
For I am worthy for to beare the blame
In any thinge myſſe reported be
To make this ditte for to leme lame (lame Through myne vncõning, but for to fain the Like as this man his complaint dyd expreſſe
I aſke mercy and forgiuenеſſe

And as I wrote, me thought I ſawe a ſterre
Ferre in the weſt luſtely appere
Eſperus the goodly bright ſterre
So glade, ſo faire, ſo perſaunte eke of chere
I meane Venus with her beames clere
That heuy hertes onely to releue
Is wonte of cuſtome for to ſhewe at eue

And I as faſt fel adowne on my kne
And euen thus to her gan I to prey
O lady Venus ſo faire vpon to ſe
Let not this man for his trouthe deye
For that ioy thou haddeſt whan thou leye
With Mars thy knight, whe Vulcanus rode
And with a chaine inuiſible you bonde

Togider bothe tway in the same whyle
That al the courte aboue celestial
At your shame gan laughe and smyle
Ah, faire lady willy sonde at al
Comforte to careful, o goddes immortal
Be helping nowe, and do thy diligence
To let the stremes of thine influence

Descende downe, in forthering of the trouth
Namely of hem that lye in sorowe bounde
Shew now thy mizt & on her wo haue routh
Er falle daunger slee hem and confounde
And special let thy might be founde
For to socouer what so that thou may
The trewe man that in the herber lay

And al trewe forther for his sake
O glad sterre, o lady Venus myne
And cause his lady him to grace take Her hert of stele to mercy so encline
Er that thy demes go vp to declyne
And er that thou nowe go fro vs adowne
For that loue thou haddest to Adowne

And whan she was gone to her rest
I rose anone, and home to bed wente
For wery me thought it for the best
Prayeng thus in al my best entente
That al trewe, that be with daunger shente
With mercy may in release of her paine
Recured be, er Maye come eftc againe

And for that I ne may no lenger wake
Farewel ye louers al that be trewe Prayeng to god, and thus my leue I take
That er the sonne to morowe be rysen newe
And er he haue ayen rosen hewe
That eche of you may haue soche a grace
His owne lady in armes to embrace

I meane thus, in al honeste without more ye may togider speake
What so ye lyst at good liberte
That eche may to other her herte breke
On Jalousies onely to be wreke
That hath so long of his malice and enuy
Werred Trouth with his tiranny.

Lenuoye.

Princesse pleaseth it to your benignite
This litel dyte to haue in minde
Of womanhede also for to se
Your man may your mercy finde
And pite eke, that longe hath be behinde
Let him againe be prouoked to grace
For by my trouthe it is against kinde
False Daungere to occupye his place

Go litel quaire vnto my lyues quene
And my very hertes soueraine
And be right glad, for she shal the sene
Soche is thy grace, but I las in paine
Im lefte behinde, & not to whom to plaine
For mercy, ruthe, grace, and eke pyte
Exiled be, that I may not attaine
Recure to finde of mine aduersite.

Explicit.

A praise of women.

ALl tho the lyste of women euill to speke
And saine of hem worse than thy deserue
I praye to god that her neckes to breke
Or on some euyll deathe mote tho taglers sterue
For euery man were holden hem to serue
And do hem worship, honour an seruice
In euery maner that they best coude deuise

For we ought first to thinke on what maner
Thei bring vs forth, & what pain thei endure
First in our birth, and sith fro yere to yere
Howe busely they done their busy cure
To kepe vs fro euery myslaventure
In our youth whan we haue no might
Our selfe to kepe, neyther by day nor night

Alas, howe may we say on hem but wele
Of whom we were socured and yborne
And ben all our socoure, & euer trewe as stele
And for our sake ful often they suffre sorne
Without women were al our ioye lorne
Wherfore we ought al women to obey
In al goodnesse, I can no more say

This is wel knowen, and hath ben of this
That women ben cause of al highenesse
Of knyghthode, norture, & eschewing al vnthrift
Encrease of worship, and of al worthinesse
Therto curteys & meke, & grounde of al goodnesse Glad & mery, & trewe in euery wise (nesse
That any gentil hert can thinke or deuise

And

And though any would truste to your untruth
And to your faire wordes would aught assent
In good faith me thinketh it wer great ruth
That other women should for her gilt be shēt
That neuer knewe ne wist nought of her entent
For list not to heare the faire wordes ye write Whiche ye you paine fro daie to daie tendite.

But who maie beware of your tales untrue
That ye so subtilie painte and endite
For ye will sweare that ye neuer knewe
Ne sawe the woman, neither moche ne lite
Saue onely her to whom ye had delite
Is for to serue of all that euer ye sey
And for her loue must ye nedes dey.

Then will ye sweare that ye knewe neuer before
What loue was ne his dredfull obseruaunce
But nowe ye fele that he can wounde sore
Wherefore ye put you into her gouernaunce
Whō loue hath ordeined you to serue & do plesaūce Al your mizt your little liues space (saūce
Whiche endeth sone, but if she doe you grace.

And then to bedde will he sone drawe
And sone sicke ye will you then fain
And sweare fast your Ladie hath you slawe
And brought you sodainly in so high a pain
That fro your death maie no mā you restrain
With a daungerous looke of her yen to
That to your death must ye nedes go.

Thus will ye morne, thus will ye sigh sore
As though your hart anon in two wold brest
And sweare fast that ye maie liue no more Syne owne Ladie, that might if ye lest
Bring myne harte somdeale into rest
Is it you list mercie on me to haue
Thus your untrouthe will euer mercie craue

Thus woll ye plain, tho ye nothing smarte
These innocent creatures for to begile
And sweare to hem, so wounded is your harte
For her loue, that ye maie liue no while Scarslie so long as one might go a mile
So hieth death, to bring you to an ende
But if your souerain lady list you to amende

And if for routhe she comfort you in any wise
For pitee of your false othes sere
So that innocēt weneth ȳ it be as you deuise
And weneth your harte be as she maie here
Thus for to comfort, is somwhat do you there
Then woll these tanglers deme of her full ill
And saine that ye haue her fully at your will

Lo how redie her tongues been, and prest
To speake harme of women causelesse
Alas, why might ye not as well saie the best
Is for to deme hem thus giltlesse
In your harte iwis there is no gentilnesse
That of your own gilt, like thus womē same
Now by my trouth, me thinke ye be to blame

For of women cometh this worldly wele
Wherefore we ought to worship hē euermore
And though it mishap one, we ought for to hele
For it is all through our false lore
That daie and night, we pain vs euermore
With many an othe, these women to begile
With false tales, and many a wicked wile.

And if falshede should be reckened and told
In women, iwis full trouth were Not as in men, by a thousande fold
Fro all vices iwis thei stande cleare
In any thyng that euer I could of heare
But if entising of these men it make
That hem to flatteren connen neuer slake.

I would fain wete where euer ye could here
Without mens tising, what womē did amis
For there ye maie get hē, ye lie fro yere to yere
And many a gabbyng ye make to hem iwis
For I could neuer heare, ne knowen er this Where euer ye could finde in any place
That euer women besought you of grace.

There ye you pain, with al your full might
With all your harte, and all your businesse
To plesen hem, bothe by daie and night
Praiyng hem of her grace and gentilnesse
To haue pitee vpon your greate distresse
And that thei wold on your pain haue routh
And slea you not, sens ye meane but trouth.

Thus maie ye se that thei been sautlesse
And innocent to all your werkes slie
And all your crafte that touche falsnesse
Thei knowe hem not, ne maie hem not espie
So sweare ye, that ye must nedes die
But if thei would of her womanhedde
Upon you rewe, er that ye be dedde.

And then your lady, and your harts quene
Ye call hem, and therewith ye sigh sore
And saie, my ladie I trowe that it be sene
In what plite that I haue liued full yore
But nowe I hope that ye woll no more
In these paines suffre me for to dwell
For of all goodnesse, iwis ye be the well.

Lo whiche a painted processe can ye make These harmlesse creatures for to begile
And when thei slepe, ye paine you to wake
And to bethinke you on many a wicked wile
But ye shal se the daie þ ye shall curse þ while That ye so busily did your entent
Hem to begile, that failshed neuer ment.

For this ye know wel, though I would lie
In women is all trouth and stedfastnesse
For trewe faithe, I neuer of hem sie
But moche worship, bountee, and gentilnesse
Right commyng, faire, and full of meknesse
Good and glad, and lowly I you ensure
Is this goodlie angelike creature.

And if it happe a man be in disease
She doeth her businesse, and her full paine
With al her might, him to comfort and please
If fro his disease she might hym restrain
In worde ne deede i wis she woll not faine
But with al her might, she doth her businesse
To bryng hym out of his heuinesse.

Lo what gentillesse these women haue
If we could know it for our rudenesse
How busie thei be vs to kepe and saue
Bothe in heale, and also in sickenesse
And alwaie right sorie for our distresse
In euery maner, thus she we thei routhe
That in hem is all goodnesse and trouthe.

And sith we find in hem gentilnesse & trouth worship, bountee, and kindnesse euermore
Let neuer this gētilesse, through your slouth
In her kinde trouth be aught forlore
That in women is, and hath been full yore
For in reuerence of heauens quene
We ought to worship all women that bene.

For of all creatures that euer wer get & borne
This wote ye well, a woman was the best
By her was recouered þ blis þ we had lorne
And through þ woman shall we come to rest
And been saued, if that our self lest
Wherefore me thinketh, if that we had grace
We oughten honour women in euery place.

Therefore I rede, that to our liues ende
Fro this time forth, while that we haue space
That we haue trespaced, pursue to amende
Praying our Ladie, welle of all grace
To bryng vs vnto that blissfull place
There as she & all good women shal be in fere
In heauen aboue, emong the angels clere.

Explicit.

The House of Fame.

GOD tourne vs euerie dreame to good
For it is wonder thyng by the Rood
To my witte, what causeth slweuenes
On the morowe or on euenes
And why the effecte followeth of some
And of some it shall neuer come
Why that it is an auision
And why this is a reuelacion
Why this a dreame, why that a slweuen
And not to euery man liche euen
With this a fantome, why that Oracles
I not: but who so of these miracles
The causes know bet then I
Deline he, for I certainly
Ne can hem not, ne neuer thinke
To busie my witte for to swinke
To know of her significacions
The gendres, ne distinccions
Of the tymes of hem, ne the causes
Or why this is more then that is Or yeue folkes complexions
Make hem dreame of reflexions
Or els thus, as other saine
For the greate feblenesse of her braine
By abstinence, or by sickenesse
Prison, strief, or greate distresse
Or els by disordinaunce
Or naturall accustomaunce
That some men be to curious
In studie, or Melancolious
Or thus: so inly full of drede
That no man maie hym bote rede
Or els that deuocion
Of some, and contemplacion
Causen soche dreames ofte
Or that the cruell life vnsofte
Of hem that loues leden
Ofte hopen moche or dreden
That purely her impressions
Causen hem to haue visions
Or if spirites han the might
To make folke to dreame on night
Or if the soule of proper kinde
Be so perfite as men finde
That it wote what is to come
And that he warneth all and some Of euerithe of her auentures

Lo, with right soche a conclusion
As had of his auision
Cresus, that was kyng of Lide
That high vpon a gibet dide
This prater shall he haue of me
I am no bette in charitee.

NOw herken, as I haue you saied
What that I mette or I abraied
Of December the tenth daie
When it was night, to slepe I laie
Right as I was wonte to doen
And till a slepe wonder sone
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimage miles twoo
To the corps of sainct Leonarde
To maken lithe, that erst was harde
But as me slept me mette I was Within a temple imade of glas
In whiche there were mo Images
Of golde, standyng in sondrie stages
In mo riche Tabernacles
And with perre mo pinnacles
And mo curious portratures
And queint maner of figures
Of golde worke, then I sawe euer
But certainly I nist neuer
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redely
This temple, for in purtreture
I sawe anone right her figure
Naked fletyng in a see
And also on her hedde parde
Her rose garlande white and redde
And her combe to kembe her hedde
Her douues, and Dan Cupido
Her blinde sonne, and Vulcano
That in his face was full broune
But as I romed vp and doune
I founde that on the wall there was Thus written on a table of bras
I wol now synge if that I can
The armes, and also the man
That first came through his destine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Italie, with full moche pine
Unto the strondes of Lauine
And tho began the storie anone
As I shall tellen you echone
First sawe I the distruccion
Of Troie, through the Grete Sinon
With his false vntrue forswerynges
And with his chere and his lesynges
Made a horse, brought into Troye
By whiche Troians loste all her ioye

And

Of auisions, or by figures
But that our flesshe hath no might
To vnderstande it a right
For it is warned to derkely
But why the cause is, not woote I
Well wot the of this thyng clerkes
That treaten of that, and of other werkes
For I of none opinion
Will as now make mencion
But onely that the holie Rood
Iourne vs euery dreame to good
For neuer sith I was borne
Ne no man els me beforne
Dette I trowe stedfastly
So wonderfull a dreame as I.
The tenth daie now of December
The whiche, as I can remember
I woll you tellen euery deale
But at my beginnyng trusteth weale
I woll make inuocacion
With a deuoute speciall deuocion
Unto the God of slepe anone
That dwelleth in a caue of stone
Upon a streame that cometh fro Lete
That is a flood of hell vnswete
Beside a Fulke, that men clepe Cimerie
There slepeth aye this God vnmerie
With his slepie thoulande sonnis
That alwaie to slepe her won is
And to this God that I of rede
Praie I, that he woll me spede
My sweuen for to tell a right
If euery dreame stande in his might
And he that mouer is of all
That is and was, and euer shall So giue hem ioye that it here
Shall that thei dreame to pere
And for to stande all in grace
Of her loues, or in what place
That hem were leuest for to stonde
And helde hem from pouertee and shonde
And from euery vnhappe and disease
And sende hem that maie hem please
That taketh well and scorneth nought
Ne it mistreme in her thought
Through malicious entencion
And who so through presumpcion
Or hate or scorne, or through enuie
Despite or tape, or felonie
Mistreme it, praie I Jesus good
Dreame he barefoote or dreame he hood
That euery harme that any man
Hath had sith the worlde began
Befall hym therefor or he sterue
And graunt that he maie it deserue

And after this was graued, alas
How Ilions caſtell aſſailed was
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain
And Polites his ſonne certain Diſpitouſly of Dan Pirrus
And nert that ſawe I how Uenus
When that ſhe ſawe the caſtell brende
Doune from heauen ſhe gan diſcende
And bade her ſonne Eneas to flee
And how he fled, and how that he Eſcaped was from all the prees
And tooke his father, olde Anchiſes
And bare hym on his backe awaie
Cryng alas and wela waie
The whiche Anchiſes in his hande
Bare tho the Goddes of the lande Thilke that vnbrenned were Then ſawe I nert all in fere
How Cruſa, Dan Eneas wife
Whom that he loued all his life
And her yong ſonne Julo
And eke Aſcanius alſo
Fledden eke, with drerie chere
That it was pitie for to heare
And in a Foreſt as thei went
At a tourning of a went
How Cruſa was iloſte, alas
That rede not I, how that it was How he her ſought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym flie the Grekes hoſte
And ſaied he muſt into Italie
As was his deſtinie, launs faile
That it was pitie for to heare
When her ſpirite gan appeare
The wordes that ſhe to hym ſaied
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied
There ſawe I grauen eke how he
His father eke, and his meine
With his Shippes gan to ſaile
Toward the countrey of Italie
As ſtreight as thei mighten go
There ſawe I eke the cruell Juno
That art Dan Jupiters wife
That haſt ihated all thy life
All the Troian bood
Ren and crie as thou were wood
On Eolus, the God of windes
To blowen out of all kindes
So loude, that he ſhould drenche
Lorde, Ladie, grome, and wenche
Of all the Troians nacion
Without any of her ſauacion
There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe
That euery harte might agriſe
To ſee it painted on the wall

There ſawe I eke grauen with all
Uenus, how ye my Ladie dere
Weping with full wofull chere
Praiyng Jupiter on hie
To ſaue and kepe that nauie
Of that Troian Eneas
Sithe that he her ſonne was
There ſawe I Joues Uenus kiſſe
And graunted was of the tempeſt liſſe
There ſawe I how the tempeſt ſtente
And how with all pine he went
And priuelie tooke a riuage
Into the countrie of Cartage
And on the morowe how that he
And a knight that height Achate
Metten with Uenus that daie
Goyng in a queinte araie
As ſhe had be an huntereſſe
With winde blowyng vpon her treſſe
And how Eneas began to plaine
When he knewe her of his paine
And how his Shippes dreint were Or els iloſte, he niſte where How ſhe gan hym comforte tho
And bade hym to Cartage go
And there he ſhould his folke finde
That in the ſea were left behinde
And ſhortly of this thyng to pace
Shе made Eneas ſo in grace
Of Dido, Quene of that countree
That ſhortly for to tellen, ſhe
Became his loue, and let hym do
All that weddyng longeth to What ſhould I ſpeake it more quainte
Or pain me my wordes to painte
To ſpeake of loue, it woll not bee
I can not of that faculte
And eke to tellen of the manere
How thei firſt acquainted were
It were a long proceſſe to tell
And ouer long for you to dwell.
There ſawe I graue how Eneas
Colde to Dido euery caas
That hym was tidde vpon the ſee
And eft grauen was how that ſhe
Made of hym ſhortly at a worde
Her life, her loue, her luſt, her lorde
And did to hym all reuerence
And laied on hym all the diſpence
That any woman might do
Wenyng it had all be ſo
As he her ſwore, and hereby demed
That he was good, for he ſoche ſemed
Alas what harme doeth apparence
When it is falſe in exiſtence

For

for he to her a traitour was Wherefore she slowe her self alas
Lo,how a woman doth amis
To loue hym that vnknowen is
For by Christ,lo thus it fareth
It is not all golde that glareth
For allo trouthe I well myne hedde
There maie be vnder goodlihedde
Couered many a shrewde vice
Therefore be no wight so nice
To take a loue onely for chere
Or speache or for frendly manere
For this shall euery woman finde
That some man of his pure kinde
Will shewen outward the fairest
Till he haue caught that what hym lest
And then will he cautes finde
And swere how she is vnkinde
Or falle or priuie,or double was All this saie I by Eneas
And Dido,and her nice lest
That loued all to sone a gest
Wherefore I will saie o prouerbe
That he that fullie knoweth the herbe
Maie safely laie it to his eye
Withouten drede this is no lie
But let vs speake of Eneas
How he betraied her,alas
And lefte her full vnkindelie
So when she sawe all vtterlie
That he would her of trouth faile
And wenden from her into Itaile
She gan to wring her handes twoo
Alas(q she)that me is woo
Alas,is euery man thus true
That euery yere will haue a newe
If it so long tyme endure
Or els three parauenture
And thus of one he will haue fame
Magnifiyng of his owne name
Another for frendship saieth he
And yet there shall the thirde be
That is taken for delite
Lo,or els for singuler profite
In loche wordes gan complaine
Dido of her greate paine
Some mette dreamyng readily
Some other sucthour aledge will I
Alas(q she)my swete harte
Haue pitie on my sorowes smarte
And slea me not,go not awaie
O wofull Dido,welawaie
(q she)vnto her self tho
O Eneas what will ye do
O that your loue ne your bonde
That ye swore with your right honde
Ne my cruell death(q she)
Waite holde you still here with me
O,haue ye of my death no pitee
I wis myne owne deare harte ye
Knowe full well that neuer yet
As farre as euer I had wit
Agilte you,in thought ne in dede
O,haue ye men soche goodlihede
In speache,and neuer a dele of trouthe
Alas that euer had routhe
Any woman on a falle man
Now I see well,and tell can
We wretched women can no arte
For certaine,for the more parte
Thus we been serued euerichone
How sore that ye men can grone
And non as we haue you receiued
Certainlie we been disceiued
For though your loue left a ceason
Waite vpon the conclusion
And eke how ye determine
And for the more parte define
O welawaie that I was borne
For through you my name is lorne
And myne actes redde and song
Ouer all this lande in euery tong
O wicked fame,for there nis
Nothyng so swifte lo as she is O sothe is,euery thyng is wist
Though it be couerde with the mist
Eke though I might duren euer
That I haue doen recouer I neuer
That it ne shall be saied,alas
I shamed was through Eneas
And that I shall thus iudged be Lo right as she hath doen,now she Will doen eftsones hardely
Thus saie the people priuely
But that is doen nis not to done
But all her complaint ne her mone
Certain auailed her not a stre
And when she wist sothly,he Was forthe into his ship agone
She into chamber went anone
And called on her suster Anne
And gan her to complain thanne
And saied,that she cause was
That she first loued hym,alas
And first counsailed her thereto
But what,when this was saied and do
She rofte her selfen to the harte
And deide through the woundes smarte
But all the maner how she deide
And all the wordes how she seide

Who so to knowe it hath purpose
Rede Virgile in Eneidos
Or the Pistels of Ouide
what that she wrote, or that she dide
And nere it to long to endite
By God I would it here write
But wela waie, the harme and routh
That hath betide for soche vntrouth
Is men maie oft in bookes rede
And aldaie seen it yet in dede
That for to thinken it tene is Lo Demophon, Duke of Athenis
How he forswore hym falsely,
And traied Phillis wickedly
That kynges doughter was of Thrace
And falsely gan his terme pace
And when she wist that he was false
She hong her self right by the halse
For he had doen her soche vntrouth
Lo, was not this a wo and routh.
Eke loothe how false and recheles
Was to Briseida Achilles
And Paris to Oenone
And Jason to Hipsiphile
And eke Jason to Medea
And Hercules to Dianira
For he left her for Iolee
That made hym take his death parde.
How false was eke Theseus
That as the storie telleth vs
How he betraied Adriane
The deuill be his soules bane
For had he laughed or floured
He must haue been all deuoured
If Adriane ne had bee
And for she had of hym pitee
She made hym fro the death escape
And he made her a full false iape
For after this within a while
He left her slepyng in an Ile
Desert alone right in the see
And stale awaie and let her bee
And tooke her suster Phedra tho
With hym, and gan to shippe go
And yet he had sworne to here
On all that euer he could swere
That so she saued hym his life
He would taken her to his wife
For he desired nothyng elles
In certain, as the booke vs telles
But for to excule this Eneas
Fulliche of all his greate trespas
The booke saieth saunz faile
The Goddes bad hym go to Itaile
And leauen Affriques regioun
And faire Dido and her toun
Tho sawe I graue how to Itaile
Dan Eneas gan for to saile
And how the tempest all began
And how he loste his stereman
Whiche that the sterne, or he tooke kepe
Smote ouer the borde as he slepe.
And also saugh I how Sibile
And Eneas beside an Ile
To helle went for to see
His father Anchises the free
And how he there founde Palinurus
And also Dido, and Deiphebus
And eueriche tourment eke in hell
Sawe he, whiche long is for to tell Whiche paines who so like to knowe
He muste rede many a rowe
In Virgile or in Claudian
Or Dante, that it tellen can.
Tho sawe I eke all the ariuaile
That Eneas had made in Itaile
And with kyng Latin his treate
And all the battailes that he Was at hymself, and his knightes
Or he had all iwonne his rightes
And how he Turnus refte his life
And wan Lauina to his wife
And all the maruelous signals
Of the Goddes celestials
How maugre Juno, Eneas
For all her sleighe and her compas
Atcheued all his auenture
For Jupiter tooke on hym cure
At the praier of Venus
Whiche I praie alwaie saue vs
And vs aie, of our sorowes light
When I had seen all this sight
In this noble temple thus Hey Lorde thought I, that madest vs
Yet sawe I neuer soche noblesse
Of Images, nor soche richesse
As I see grauen in this churche
But nought wote I who did hem worche
Ne where I am, ne in what countree
But now will I out gone and see Right at the wicked if I can Seen ought where sterynge any man
That maie me tellen where I am
When I out of the doore cam
I saste about me beholde
Then sawe I but a large felde
As farre as euer I might see
Without toune, house, or tree
Or bushe, or grasse, or eared lande
For all the felde was but of sande

Is smal as men maye se at eye
In the deserte of Lybye
Se no maner creature
That is yformed by nature
Se sawe I, me to rede or wisshe
O Christ thought I, that are in blisse from fantom and illusion
Me saue, and with deuocyon
Myne yen to the heuen I caste
Tho was I ware, lo at the laste
That caste by the sonne on hie
Is kenne myght I with mine eye
Me thought I sawe an Egle sore
But that it semed moche more
Than I had anye Egle yseine
This is as sothe as death certaine
It was of golde and shone so bright
That neuer sawe men soche a sight
But yf the heuen had ywonne
Al newe of god another sonne
So shone the Egles fethers bright
And som what downwarde gan it lyght.

Explicit liber primus.

Nowe herken euerye maner man
That Englishe vnderstande can
And lysteth of my dreme to here
For now at erst shal ye here
So sely and so dredefull a dyson
That I saye neither Scipion
Ne kinge Nabugodonosore
Pharao, Turnus, ne Alcanore
Ne metten soche a dreme as this Sowe faire blisful, O Cipris
So be my sauour at this time
That ye me tendrite and rime
Helpeth, that in Pernaso dwel
Syde Elicon the clere wel
Othought, that wrote al that I met
And in the tresorie it set
Of my braine, nowe shal men se
Many vertue in the be
To tel al my dreme aright
Sowe kithe thy engin and thy might
This Egle of whiche I haue you tolde
That with fethers shone al of golde
Whiche that so hie gan to sore
I gan beholde more and more
To sene her beaute an the wonder
But neuer was that dente of thynder
Ne that thinge that men cal soudre
That smite somtime a toure to poudre
And in his swifte comminge brende
That so swithe gan downwarde discende
As this foule whan it beheld
That I a rowme was in the felde
And with his grim pawes stronge
Within his sharpe nailes longe
Me fleyng at a swappe he hente
And with his sours again by wente
Me carieng in his clawes starke
As lyghtly as I had ben a larke
Howe hye I can not telien yowe
For I came by, I nist neuer howe
For so astonied an aswened
Was euery vertue in me beued
What with his sours and my dred
That al my felinge gan to deed
For why, it was a great affraye
Thus I longe in his clawes laye
Til at last he to me spake
In mannes voice, and said awake
And be not agast so for shame
And called me tho by my name
And for I shulde better abraide
Me to awake, thus he saide
Right in the same voice and steuin
That dyeth one that I can neuin
And with that voice sothe to saine
My minde came to me againe
For it was goodly saide to me
So nas it neuer wonte to be
And here withal I gan to stere
As he me in his fete bere
Til that he felte that I had heate
And felte eke tho mine hearte beate
And tho gan he me to disporte
And with gentel wordes me comforte
In said twyse, saint Mary
Thou arte a noyous thinge to cary
And nothinge nedeth it perde
For also wise god helpe me
As thou no harme shalte haue of this
And this case that betidde the is
Is for thy lore and for thy prowe
Lette se, darst thou loke yet nowe
Be ful ensured boldely
I am thy frende, and therwith I
Gan for to wonder in my minde
O God (quod I) that madest al kinde
Shal I none otherwise die
Whether Joue wil me stellifie
Or what thing maye this signifie
I am neither Enoche ne Helye
Ne Romulus, ne Ganemede

That were bore by as men rede
To heuen with dan Jupiter
And made the goddes boteler
Lo,this was tho my fantasie
But he that bare gan aspie
That I so thought and said this Thou demist of thy selfe amyes
For Ioue is not there aboute
I dare the put ful out of doute
To make of the yet a sterre
But er I beare the moche ferre
I wil the tel what I am
And whider thou shalte,and why I came To do this,so that thou take Good hearte,and not for feare quake Gladly (quod I) nowe wel (quod he)
First,I that in my sete haue the
Of whom thou haste feare and wonder
I am dwellinge with the god of thonder
Whiche men callen Jupiter
That doth me flyen ful ofte fer
To do all his commaundement
And for this cause he hath me sent To the: Herke nowe by thy trouthe
Certaine he hath of the routhe
That thou haste so truely
Longe serued ententetily
His blinde newe Cupido
And faire Venus also Without guerdon euer yet
And netheles hast set thy wit
Althoughe in thy heed ful litel is To make bookes,songes and dites
In rime or els in Cadence
As thou best canst in reuerence,
Of loue,and of his seruauntes ehe
That haue his seruice sought,and sehe
And paynest the to praise his arte
Althoughe thou haddest neuer parte
Wherfore also god me blesse
Iouis halte it great humblesse
And vertue,ehe that thou wilte make
I night ful ofte thine heed to ake
In thy studye so thou writest
And euermore of loue enditest
In honour of him and praisinges
And in his folkes fourtheringes
And in her mater al deuisest
And not him ne his folke dispisest
Althoughe thou maiste go in the daunce
Of hem,that him lyst not auaunce
Wherfore as I saide ywis
Jupiter considereth wel this
And also beauslire,of other thinges
That is thou haste no tidinges
Of loues folke if they be glade
Ne of nothinge els that god made
And not onely fro ferre countre
That no thidinges comen to the
Not of thy very neighbours
That dwellen almost at thy dores
Thou herest neither that ne this
For whan thy labour al done is
And haste made al thy reckeninges
In stede of reste and of newe thinges
Thou goest home to thine house anone
And also dombe as a stone
Thou sittest at another boke
Tyl fully dased is thy loke
And lyuest thus as an Hermite
Although thine abstinence is lyte
And therfore Iouis thrOughe his grace
Wil that I beare thee to a place
Whiche that hight the house of Fame
And to doethe spORte and game
In some recompensation
Of thy labour and deuocion
That thou haste hadde,lo causeles
To god Cupido the recheles
And thus this God thrOughe his merite
Wil with some maner thing the quite
So that thou wilte be of good chere
For trust wel that thou shalte here
Whan we ben comen there as I say
Mo wonder thinges dare I lay
And of loues folke mo tidinges
Bothe soth sawes and lesynges
And mo loues newe be gon
And longe serued tyl loue is won
And mo louers casuelly
That ben betide,no man wote why
But as a blinde man starteth an Hare
And moRe iolite and welfare
Whyle they finde loue of stele
As thinke men,and ouer al wele
Mo discORdes and mo ialousies
Mo murmures,and mo nouelries
And also mo dissimulacions
And eke feined reperacions
And mo berdes in two houres
Without reSour or siSoures
Ymade,than graines be of sandes
And eke mo holdinge in mo handes
And also mo renouelaunces
Of olde sORleten aqueintaunces
Mo loue dayes,and mo accORdes
Than on instrumentes ben cORdes
And eke of loue mo exchaunges
Than euer cORne were in graunges
Unneth maist thou trowen this (quod

(q he) no so helpe me god as wis (q I) No why (q he) for it were impossible to my wit
Though Fame had al the yes
In al a realme and al aspies
Nowe that yet he h shulde here al this Or they espien. Oyes yes
(q he) to me, that can I preue
By reason, worthy for to leue
So that thou giue thin aduertence
To vnderstande my sentence
First shal thou here where she dwelleth
Right so as thin owne booke telleth
Her palais standeth as I shal say
Right euen a middes of the way
Betwene heuen, yerthe, and see
That what so euer in al these thre
Is spoken in priue or apperte
The way therto is so ouerte
And stante ehe in so iuste a place
That euery sowne mote to it pace
Or what so cometh from anie tongue
Seround, redde, or songe
Or spoken in suerte or drede
Certaine it mote thider nede
Nowe herken wel for why I wil
Tellen the a proper skil
And a worthy demonstracion
In mine imaginacion
Geffray, thou wottest wel this
That euery kindely thinge that is Hath a kyndely stede there he May best in it conserued be Vnto whiche place euery thinge
Though his kyndely enclininge Beueth for to come to Whan that it is away therfro
Is thus. Lo nowe thou maiste al day se Take any thinge that heuy be
As stone or leed, or thinge of weight
And bere it neuer so hie on height
Let go thine hande, it falleth downe
Right so say I by fire or sowne
Or smoke, or other thinges light
Alway they seke vpwarde on height
Right thinges vp, and downwarde charge
Whyle eueriche of hem be at large
And for this cause, thou maist wel se
That euery riuer vnto the see
Enclined is to go by kynde
And by these shilles as I finde
Some fisshes dwellinge in flode and se
And trees eke on the erthe be Thus euery thinge by his reason
Hath his owne proper mancion
To whiche he seketh to repaire
There as it shulde not appaire
Lo, this sentence is knowen couthe
Of euery Philosophers mouthe
As aristotel, and dan Platone
And other clerches many one
And to confirme my reasoune
Thou woste wel that speche is sowne
Or els no man might it here
Nowe herke what I wol the lere
Sowne is not but eyre ybroken
And euery speche that is spoken
Loude or priue, foule or faire
In his substaunce is but eyre
For as flame is but lighted smoke
Right so is sowne eyre ybroke
But this may be in many wise
Of whiche I will the deuise
As sowne cometh of pype or harpe
For whan a pype is blowen sharpe
The eyre is twist with violence
And rent: Lo, this is my sentence
Eke, whan men harpe stringes smyte
Whether it be moche or lyte
Lo, with the stroke the eyre it breketh
And right so breaketh it whan men speketh
Thus wost thou wel what thing is speche
Nowe hens forthe, I wil thee teche
Howe eueriche speche, voice or sowne
Through his multiplicacion
Though it were piped of a mouse
Mote nedes come to Fames house
I proue it thus, take hede nowe
By experience, for if that thou
Threwe in a water nowe a stone
Wel woste thou it wil make anone
A litel roundel as a cercle
Parauenture, as brode as a couercle
And right anone thou shalte se wele
That whele cercle wil cause another whele
And that the thirde, and so forthe brother
Euery cercle causinge other Broder than him selfe was
And thus from roundel to compas
Eche aboute other goinge
Causeth of others steringe
And multypliyng euermo
Tyl it be so fare go
That it at bothe brinkes be
Although thou maye it not se
I doue, yet gothe it alwaye vnder
Though thou thinke it a great wonder
And who so saithe of trouthe I vary
Bydde him proue the contrary
And right thus euery worde ywis

That loude or pryue yspoken is Moueth firste an eyre aboute
And of his mouinge out of doute
Another eyre anone is moued
As I haue of the water proued
That euerye cercle causeth other Right so of eyre my leue brother
Eueriche eyre in other stereth
More and more, and speche vp bereth
Or voise or noyse, worde or sowne
Lye throughe multiplicacio wne
Tyl it be at the house of Fame
Take it on ernest or in game
Nowe haue I tolde, if thou haue mind
Howe speche or sowne, of pure kinde
Enclined is vpwarde to meue
This maist thou sele wel by preue
And that some stede ywis
That euery thinge enclined to is Hath his kyndelyche stede
That he weth it without drede
That kindely the mancioun
Of euerychе speche of euery soun
Be it either soule or faire
Hath his kinde place in eyre
And lith that euery thinge ywis
Out of his kinde place ywis Moueth thider for to go yf it awaye be therfro
As I haue before proued the Lt she weth euery soune perde
Moueth kindely to pace
As vp in to his kinde place
And this place of whiche I tel
There as Fame like to dwell
Is sette a middes of these thre
Heuen, erthe and eke the see
As moste conseruatife the soun
Than is this the conclusioun
That euery speche of euery manne
As I thee tel firste beganne
Moueth vp on height to pace
Kindely to Fames place
Tel me this nowe faithfully
Haue I not proued thus simply Without any subtelte
Of speche, or great prolixyte
Of termes of Philosophie
Of figures of Poetrie
Or colours of Rhetorike
Perde it oughte the to like
For harde langage, and harde matere
Is in combrous for to here
Lt ones, wolde thou not wel this
And I answered and saide yes

Ah ha (q he) lo so I can Leudlye vnto a leude man
Speke, and shewe him soche skiles
That he maye shake hem by the lyles
So palpable they shulden be But tel me this nowe praye I the Howe thinketh the my conclusioun
A good persuasioun
(q I) it is and lyke to be Right so as thou haste proued me
By God (q he) and as I leue
Thou shalte haue it or it be eue
Of euery worde of this sentence
I prose, by experience
And with thine eares hearen wel
Coppe and taile, and euery del
That euery worde that spoken is Cometh in to Fames house ywis
As I haue saide, what wilte thou more
And with this worde vpper to sore
He began, and saide by sainte Jame
Nowe wyll we speake al of game
Howe farest thou nowe (q he) to me
Wel (q I) nowe se (q he)
By thy trouthe yonde adowne
Where that thou knowest any towne
Or house, or any other thinge
And whan thou haste of ought knowynge
Loke that thou warne me
And I anone shal tel the Howe farre that thou arte nowe therfro
And I adowne gan to loken tho
And beheld feldes and plaines
Nowe hylles, and nowe mountaines
Nowe baleys, and nowe forestes
And nowe vnneth great beestes
Nowe riuers, nowe citees
Nowe townes, nowe great trees
Nowe shippes sailinge in the see
But thus soone in a while he Was flowen fro the grounde so hye
That al the worlde as to myne eye
No more semed than a pricke
Or els was the eyre so thicke
That I might it not discerne
With that he spake to me so yerne
And said: Seest thou any token
Or ought, that in this worlde of spoken
I saide naye, no wonder is (q he) for never haste so hye as this Nas Alexander of Macedon
Kynge: Ne of Rome dan Scipion
That sawe in dreame at pointe deuise
Heuen and erthe, hel and paradise
Ne ehe the wretche Dedalus

Ne

Of his childe nice Icharus
That flewe so hie, that the hete
Hys winge molte, and he fel wete
In mydde the see, and there he dreinte
For whom was made a great complainte
Nowe tourne vpwarde (quod he) thy face
And beholde this large place
This eyre, but loke that thou ne be Adrad of hem that thou shalt se
For in this regioun certaine
Dwelleth many a citezeine
Of whiche speketh dan Plato
These ben the eyrishe beestes lo
And tho sawe I al the menye
Bothe gone and also flye
Lo (quod he) cast vp thine eye
Se yonder lo, the Galarie
The whiche men clepe the milky way
For it is white: And some parfay
Callen it Watlynge strete
That ones was brente with the heate
Whan the Sunnes sonne the reade
That hite Pheton wolde leade
Algate his fathers carte, and gie
The carte horse gan wel aspie
That he coude no gouernaunce
And gon for to lepe and praunce
And beare him vp, and nowe downe
Tyl he sawe the Scorpiowne
Whiche that in heuen a signe is yet
And he for fere loste his wit
Of that, and let the reines gone
Of his horse, and they anone
Soone vp to mounte, and downe discende
Tyl bothe eyre and erthe brende
Tyl Jupiter lo, at the laste
Hym slewe, and fro the carte caste
Lo, is it not a great mischaunce
To let a foole haue gouernaunce
Of thinges that he can not demaine
And with this worde sothe for to saine
He gan alway vpper to sore
And gladed me than more and more
So faithfully to me spake he Tho gan I to loke vnder me
And beheld the eyrishe beestes
Cloudes, mystes, and tempestes
Snowes, hailes, raines, and windes
And thengendringe in her kindes
Al the way throughe whiche I came O god (quod I) that made Adame
Moche is thy myght and nobles
And tho thought I vpon Boece
That writeth a thought may flye so hie
With fethers of Philosophie
To passen euerych Element
And when he hath so farre ywent
Than may ben sene behinde his bache
Cloude, and erthe, and al that I of spake Tho gan I wexe in a were
And said, I wote wel I am here
But whether in body or in goost
I not ywis, but god thou woost
For more clere entendement
Nas me neuer yet ylent
And than thought I on Marcian
And eke on Anticlaudian
That sothe was her discripcion
Of al the heuens region
As farre as that I sawe the preue
And therfore I can hem leue
With that the Egle gan to crie
Let be (quod he) thy fantasie
Wylte thou lerne of sterres ought Nay certainly (quod I) right nought
And why (quod he) for I am olde
Or elis wolde I the haue tolde
(quod he) the sterres names lo
And al the heuens signes to
And whiche they be: No force (quod I)
Yes perde (quod he) wost thou why
For whan thou redest poetry
Howe the goddes can stellify
Brode, fysshe, or him, or her
As the Rauyn and other
Or Triones harpe fyne
Castor, Polexe, or Delphine
Or Ithalantes doughters seuen
How al these are set in heuen
For though thou haue hem ofte in hande
Yet wost thou nat where they stande
No force (quod I) it is no nede
As wel I leue so god me spede
Hem that writen of this matere
As though I knewe her places here
And eke thy seluen here so bright
It shulde shenden al my sight
To loke on hem, that may wel be (quod he and so forth bare he me
A while, and tho began to crie
That neuer herde I thinge so hie
Holde vp thine heed, for al is wel
Sainte Julyan lo, bonne hostel
See here the house of Fame lo
Maist thou not here that I do
What (quod I) the great sowne
(quod he) that rombleth vp and downe
In Fames house ful of tidinges
Bothe of faire speche and chidinges
And of false, and sothe compowned

Yerken wel it is not rowned
Herest thou not the great swough
Yes perde (quod I) wel ynough
And what sowne is it lyke (quod he)
Peter, lyke the beating of the see (quod I) against the roches balowe whan tempestes done her shyppes swalowe
And that a man stande out of doute
I myle thens, and here it route
Or els lyke the humblinge
After the clappe of a thundringe whan Iouis hath the eyre ybete
But it dothe me for feare swete
Nay, drede the not therof (quod he)
It is nothing that wil byten the Thou shalt haue no harme truely
And with that worde both he and I
As nighe the place arriued were
As men might cast with a spere
I nisse howe, but in a strete
He set me faire on my fete
And said, walke forth a pace
And tel thine aduenture and case
That thou shalte finde in Fames place
Nowe (quod I) while we haue space
To speke, or that I go fro the
For the loue of god tel me
In sothe, that I wil of the lere
If this noise that I here
Be as I haue herde the tel
Of folke that done in erthe dwell
And cometh here in the same wise
As I the herde or this deuise
And that here liues body nis
In al that house that yonder is That maketh al this loude fare
No (quod he) by sainte Clare
And also wisse god rede me
But o thinge I will warne the
Of the whiche thou wilte haue wonder
Lo, to the house of Fame yonder
Thou woste howe cometh euery speche
It nedeth not the efte to teche
But vnderstande nowe right wel this whan any speche ycomen is Vp to the palais anone right
It wereth like the same wight whiche that the worde in earth spake
Be he clothed in reed or blake
And hath so very his likenesse
And spake the worde that thou wilte gesse
That it the same body be Man or woman, he or she
And is not this a wonder thinge
Yes (quod I tho) by heuen kinge
And with this worde farewel (quod he)
And here wil I abyde the
And god of heuen sende the grace
Some good to learne in this place
And I of him toke leaue anone
And gan forth to the palays gone.

Explicit liber secundus.

God of science and of lighe
Apollo through thy great might
This litel last boke nowe thou gye
Nowe that I will for maistrie
Here arte potencially be shewde
But for the rime is lyght and lewde
Yet make it somwhat agreable
Though some verse faile in a sillable
And that I do no diligence
To shewe crafte, but sentence
And if deuine vertue thou
Wilte helpe me to shewe nowe
That in my heed ymarked is Lo, that is for to meanen this
The house of Fame for to discriue
Thou shalt se me go as blyue
Vnto the next laurer I se
And kysse it, for it is thy tree
Nowe entre in my brest anone whan I was from the egle gone
I gan beholde vpon this place
And certaine or I further passe
I wol you al the shappe deuise
Of house and cite, and al the wise
Howe I gan to this place approche
That stode vpon so hie a roche
Hyer standeth none in Spaine
But vp I clambe with moche paine
And though to climbe greued me
Yet I ententife was to se
And for to poren wondrely owe
If I coude any wise yknowe
What maner stone this roche was
For it was lyked a limed glas
But that it shone ful more clere
But of what congeled matere
It was, I nisse redely
But at the laste espied I
And founde that it was euerydele
A roche of yse and not of stele
Thought I by saint Thomas of Kent

This

This were a feble foundement
To builden on a place hie
Me ought hym little to glorifie
That heron bilte, God so me saue
Tho sawe I all the hall i graue
With famous folkes names fele
That had been in moche wele
And her fames wide iblowe
But well vnneth might I knowe
Any letters for to rede
Her names by, for out of drede
They weren almoste of thawed so
That of the letters one or two Were molte awaie of euery name
So vnfamous was were her fame
But men saie, what maie euer last Tho gan I in myne harte cast
That they were molte awaie for heate
And not awaie with stormes beate
For on that other side I sey
Of this hill, that Northward ley
How it was writen full of names
Of folke that had afore greate fames
Of olde tyme, and yet they were
Is freshe as men had written hem there
The self date, or that houre
That I on hem gan to poure
But well I wiste what it made
It was conserued with the shade
Ill the writyng that I sie
Of a Castell that of stoode on hie
And stoode eke in so cold a place
That heate might it not deface
Tho gan I on this hill to gone
And found on the coppe a wone
That all the men that been on liue
Ne han the connyng to discriue
The beaute of that like place
Ne could caste no compace
Soche an other for to make
That might of beautie be his make Ne so wonderly i wrought
That it astonieth yet my thought
And maketh all my witte to swinke
On this Castell for to thinke
So that the greate beautie
The caste, crafte, and curiositie
Ne can I not to you deuise
My witte ne maie me not suffise
But natheless all the substaunce
I haue yet in my remembraunce
For why me thought by sainct Gile
Ill was of stone of Berile
Bothe the Castell and the Toure
And eke the hall, and euery boure
Without peces or joynynges
But many subtell compassynges
As babeuries and pinnacles
Imageries and tabernacles
I sawe, and full eke of windowes
As flakes fallen in greate Snowes
And eke in eche of the pinacles
Weren sondrie habitacles
In whiche stoden all withouten
Full the castell all abouten
Of all maner of Minstrales
And Jestours that tellen tales
Bothe of wepyng and of game
And of all that longeth vnto fame
There heard I plaie on an Harpe
That souned bothe well and sharpe
Hym Orpheus full craftely
And on this side fast by Satte the Harper Orion
And Gacides Chirion
And other Harpers many one
And the Briton Glasbirion
And smale Harpers with her glees
Satte vnder hem in diuers sees
And gone on hem vpwarde to gape
And counterfaited hem as an Ape
Or as crafte counterfeite kinde
Tho sawe I standen hem behinde
A farre from hem, all by hem selue
Many a thousande tymes twelue
That made loude Minstralcies
In Cormuse and Shalmies
And many an other pipe
That craftely began to pipe
Bothe in Douced and in Rede
That been at feastes with the brede
And many a Floite and litlyng horne
And pipes made of grene Corne
As haue these little heerde gromes
That kepen beastes in the Bromes
There sawe I then dan Citherus
And of Athenes dan Pistolerus
And Mercia that lofte her shinne
Bothe in face, bodie, and chinne
For that she would enuien, lo
To pipen bette then Apollo
There sawe I eke famous old and yong
Pipers of all the Duche tong
To learne loue daunces, springes
Reyes, and the straunge thinges
Tho sawe I in an other place
Standyng in a large space
Of hem that maken bloodie soun
In trumpe beme, and Clarioun
For in fight and bloodshedynges

Is vsed glad clarionynges
There heard I trumpe Mellenus
Of whom that speaketh Vergilius
There heard I Joab trumpe also Theodomas and other mo
And all that vsed clarion
In Casteloigne, and Aragon
That in her tymes famous were
To learnen sawe I trumpen there
There sawe I sit in other sees Playyng vpon other sondrie glees
Whiche that I can not neuen
Mo then Sterres been in heauen
Of whiche I nill as now not rime
For ease of you, and losse of time
For tyme ilost, this knowe ye
By no wāie maie recouered be There sawe I playyng Jogelours
Magiciens and Tragetours
And Phetonisses Charmeresses
Olde Witches Sorceresses
That vsen Experiences
And eke fumigacions
And clerkes eke whiche conne well
All this Magike naturell
That crafftely doe her ententes
To maken in certain ascendentes
Images lo, through whiche Magike
To maken a man been hole or sike
There sawe I the quene Medea
And Circes eke, and Caliophia
There sawe I Hermes Ballenus
Limote, and eke Symon Magus
There sawe I, and knewe by name
That by loche arte doen men haue fame
There sawe I Coll Tragetour
Upon a table of Sicamour
Playe an vncouth thyng to tell
I sawe hym cary a winde Well
Under a Walnote shale
What should I make lenger tale
Of all the people that I sey
I could not tell till Domisdey
When I had all this folke beholde
And founde me loce and not holde
And I amused a long while Upon this wall of Berile
That shone lighter then a glas
And made well more then it was
As kinde thing of fame is
And then anone after this
I gan forthe romen till I fonde
The castell yate on my right honde Whiche so well corven was
That neuer sothe an other nas
And yet it was by auenture
Iwrought by greate and subtill cure
It nedeth not you more to tellen
To make you to long dwellen
Of these yates florishynges
Ne of compaces, ne of karuynges
Ne how the hachyng in Masonries
Is corbettes, and Imageries
But Lorde so faire it was to shewe
For it was all with golde behewe
But in I went, and that anone
There met I criyng many one
I larges a larges, holde vp well
God saue the ladie of this pell
Our owne gentill Ladie Fame
And hem that willen to haue a name
Of vs, thus heard I crien all
And fast comen out of the hall
And shoke nobles and starlynges
And crouned were as kynges
With crounes wrought full of Losynges
And many ribans, and many fringes
Were on her clothes truely
Tho at the last espied I
That Pursеuauntes and Heraudes
That crien riche folkes laudes
Ye weren, all and euery man
Of hem, as I you tell can
Had on hym throwe a vesture
Whiche men clepe a coate armure
Embroudred wonderly riche
As though thei were not iliche
But nought will I so mote I thriue
Be aboute to discriue
All these armes that there weren
That thei thus on her coates weren
For to me were impossible
Yen might make of hem a bible
Twentie foote thicke as I trowe
For certain who so could knowe
Might there all the armes seen
Of famous folke that had been In Affrike, Europe, and Asie
Sith first began cheualrie
Lo, how should I now tell all this Ne of the hall eke what nede is To tellen you that euery wall
Of it, and rofe and flore with all
Was plated halfe a foote thicke
Of golde, and that nas not wicke
But for to proue in all wise
As fine as duchet in Venise
Of whiche to lite all in my pouche is
And thei were set as thicke of ouches
Fine, of the finest stones faire

That

That men reden in the lapidaire
Or as Gralles growen in a Mede
But it were all to long to rede
The names: and therefore I pace
But in this iustic and riche place
That Fames hall called was Full moche prees of folke there nas
Ne croudyng, for to moche prees
But all on hie aboue a dees
Satte in a see Imperiall
That made was of Rubie rotall
Whiche that a Carbuncle is icalled
I saw e perpetually istalled
A femine creature
That neuer formed by nature
Was soche an other thyng I saie
For altherfirste, sothe to saie
Me thought that she was so lite
That the length of a cubite
Was lenger then she semed be But thus sone in a whyle she
Her self tho wonderly streight
That with her feete she therthe reight
And with her hedde she touched heauen
There as chineth the Sterres seuen
And thereto yet, as to my wit
I saw e a greate wonder yet
Upon her ipen to beholde
But certainly I hem neuer tolde
For as fele ipen had she
As fethers vpon foules be
Or weren on the beastes foure
That Goddes trone can honoure
As writeth Jhon in the Apocalips
Her heer that was owndie and crips
As burned golde it shone to se
And sothe to tellen also she Had also fele vp standyng eares
And tonges, as on beast been heares
And on her feete woren saw e I
Partriche winges redily.
But Lorde the perrie and the richelle
I saw e sittyng on the Goddesse
And the heauenly melodie
Of songes full of armonie
I herde about her trone isong
That all the palais wall rong
So longe the mightie Muse she
That cleped is Caliope
And her seuen sisterne eke
That in her faces semen meke
And euermore eternally
Thei songe of Fame tho heard I
Heried be thou and thy name
Goddes of renoun and of Fame

Tho was I ware at the last
As I myne ipen gan vp cast
That this like noble Quene
On her shulders gan sustene
Bothe the armes and the name
Of tho that had large Fame
Alisander, and Hercules
That with a sherte his life did lese
And thus founde I sittyng this Goddesse
In noble honour and richesse
Of whiche I stinte a while now
Other thing to tellen you
Tho saw e I stande on thotherside
Streight doune to the doores wide
From the dees many a pillere
Of metall, that shone not full clere
But though thei were of no richesse
Yet were thei made for greate nobiesse
And in hem greate sentence
And folke of hie and digne reuerence
Of whiche to tell will I sonde
Upon a piller saw e I stonde
Alderfirst there I sie
Upon a piller stonde on hie
That was of Lede and of Iron fine
Hym of the secte Saturnine
The Ebraike Josephus the old
That of Jewes gestes told
And he bare on his shulders hie
The fame vp of the Jurie
And by hym stoden other seuen
Wise and worthie for to neuen
To helpe hym beare vp the charge
It was so beauie and so large
And for thei written of battailes
As well as of other maruailes
Therefore was lo, this pillere
Of whiche I you tell here
Of Leade and Iron bothe I wis
For Iron Martes metall is Whiche that God is of battaile
And the Leade withouten faile
Is lo, the metall of Saturne
That hath full large whele to tourne
To stande forthe on either rowe
Of hem, whiche I could knowe
Though I by order hem not tell
To make you to long to dwell
These, of whiche I gan rede
These saw e I stande out of drede
Upon an Iron piller strong
That painted was all endlong
With Tigres blood in euery place
The Tholason that height Stace
That bare of Thebes vp the name vpon his sholders, and the same

Also of cruell Achilles
And by hym stode withouten lees
Full wonder hie vpon a piller
Of Iron, he the greate Omer
And with him Dares and Titus
Beforе, and eke he Lollius
And Guido eke the Colempnis
And Englische Galfride eke iwis
And eche of these as I haue ioye
Was busie to beare vp Troye
So heauie thereof was the fame
That for to beare it was no game
But yet I gan full well espie
Betwine hem was a little enuie
One saied that Omer made lies
Feinyng in his Poetries
And was to the Grekes fauourable
Therefore held he it but fable
Thus saw I stande on a pillere
That was of Tinned Iron clere
The Latine Poete Virgile
That hath bore vp a long while
The fame of Pius Eneas
And next hym on a piller was
Of Copper, Venus clerke Ouide
That hath sowen wonders wide
The greate God of loues fame
And there he bare vp well his name
Vpon this piller also hie
As I might see it with myne ye
For why this hall wherof I rede
Was wore on height, length, and brede
Well more by a thousande deale
Then it was erst, that saw I weale Tho saw I on a piller by
Of Iron wrought full sternely
The greate Poete dan Lucan
That on his sholders bare vp then
As hie as that I might see
The fame of Julius and Pompee
And by hym stoden all these clerkes
That write of Romes mightie werkes
That if I would her names tell
All to long must I dwell
And nexte hym on a piller stoode
Of Sulphure, liche as he were wood
Dan Claudian, sothe for to tell
That bare vp all the fame of hell
Of Pluto, and of Proserpine
That Quene is of the derke pine
What should I more tell of this
The hall was all full iwis
Of hem that written old ieftes
As been on trees Rokes nestes
But it a full confuse mattere
Were all these ieftes for to here
That thei of write, and how thei height
But while that I beheld this sight
I herde a noise approchen blyue
That fareth as Bees doen in an hiue
Ayenst her tyme of out flyyng
Right soche a waner murmuryng
For all the worlde it semed me
Tho gan I looke about and see
That there come entryng into the hall
A right greate companie withall
And that of sondrie regions
Of all kins condicions
That dwell in yearth vnder the Moone
Poore and riche, and also sone
As thei were come into the hall
Thei gan on knees doune to fall
Before this ilke noble quene
And saied, graunt vs Ladie shene
Eche of vs thy grace abone
And some of hem she graunted sone
And some she warned well and faire
And some she graunted the contraire
Of her asking vtterlie
But this I saie you truelie
What her grace was I nist
For of these folke full well I wist
Thei had good fame eche deserued
Although thei were diuerslie serued
Right as her sister dame Fortune
Is wont to serue in commune
Now herken how she gan to paie
Hem that gan her of grace praie
And yet lo, all this companie
Saiden sothe, and not a lie
Madame saied thei, we be Folke that here beseechen thee
That thou graunt vs now good fame
And let our workes haue good name
In full recompensacion
Of good worke, giue vs good renoun
I warne it you (q she) anone
Ye get of me good fame none
By God, and therefore go your waie
Alas (q thei) and wela waie
Tell vs what your cause maie be
For me lifte it not (q she)
No wight shall speake of you iwis
Good ne harme, ne that ne this
And with that worde she gan to call
Her messenger that was in hall
And bad that he should fast goue
Vpon pain to be blinde anone
For Eolus the God of winde

In

In Trace there ye shall hym finde
And bid hym bryng his clarioun
That is full diuers of his soun
And it is cleped cleare Laude
With whiche he wont is to herande
Hem that me list ypraised be
And also bid hym how that he Bryng eke his other clarioun
That height Sclaunder in euery toune
With whiche he wont is to diffame
Hem that me list and doe hem shame
This messenger gan fast to gone
And founde where in a caue of stone
In a countree that height Trace
This Eolus with harde grace.
Held the windes in distresse
And gan hem vnder hym to presse
That thei gone as the Beres roze
Be bounde and pressed hem so soze
This messenger gan fast crie
Rise vp (q he) and fast thee hie
Till thou at my Ladie be
And take thy clarions eke with thee
And spede thee fast, and he anone
Toke to one that hight Tritone
His clarions to bearen tho
And let a certain winde go
That blewe so hidously and hie
That it ne left not a shie
In all the welken long and brode
This Eolus no where abode
Till he was come to Fames fete
And eke the man that Triton hete
And there he stode as still as stone
And here withall there came anone
In other huge companie
Of good folke and gan to crie
Ladie, graunte vs now good Fame
And let our woorkes haue that name
Now in honour of gentilnesse
And also God your soule blesse
For we han well deserued it
Therefore is right that we be quit
As thrue I (q she) ye shall faile
Good woorkes shall you not auaile
To haue of me good Fame as now
But wote ye what, I graunt yowe
That ye shall haue a shrewde name
And wicked loos, and worse fame
Though ye good loos haue well deserued
Now goeth your waie for ye been serued
And thou Dan Eolus (q she)
Take forthe thy trompe anone let se
That is icleped Sclaunder light
And blowe her loos, that euery wight
Speake of hem harme and shrewednesse
In stede of good and worthinesse
For thou shalt trumpe all the contraire
Of that thei haue doen, well and faire.
Alas thought I what auentures
Haue these sorie creatures
That thei emong all the pres
Should thus be shamed giltles
But what, it must nedes be What did this Eolus, but he Toke out his blacke trompe of bras
That fouler then the Deuill was
And gan this trompe for to blowe
As all the worlde should ouerthrowe
Throughout euery regioun
Went this foule trumpes soun
As swift as a pellet out of a gonne
When fire is in the pouder ronne
And soche a smoke gan out wende
Out of the foule trumpes ende
Blacke, blo, grenisshe, swartisshe, rede
As doeth where that men melte lede
Lo, all on hie from tewell
And thereto one thyng sawe I well
That the ferther that it ranne
The greater weren it beganne
As doeth the riuer from a well
And it stanke as the pitte of hell
Alas, thus was her shame trong
And giltelesse on euery tong
Tho came the thirde companie
And gone vp to the dees to hie
And doune on knees thei fell anone
And saiden, we been euerichone
Folke that han full truelie
Deserued fame rightfullie
And praied you it might be knowe
Right as it is and forthe blowe
I graunte (q she) for now me list
That your good woorkes shall be wist
And yet ye shall haue better loos
Right in dispite of all your foos
Then worthie is, and that anone
Let nowe (q she) thy trumpe gone
Thou Eolus, that is so blacke
And out thyne other troumpe take
That hight Laude, and blowe it so
That through the worlde her fame go
All easely and not to fast
That it be knowen at the last Full gladly Ladie myne he saied
And out his trumpe of golde he braied
Anone, and set it to his mouthe
And blewe it East, west, and Southe
And Northe, as loude as any thonder

That

That euery wight hath of it wonder
So brode it ran or that it stent
And certes all the breath that went Out of his trumpes mouthe smelde
As men a potte full of baume helde
Among a basket full of roses
This sauour did he to her loses
And right with this I gan espie
There came the foweth companie
But certaine thei were wonder fewe
And gonne to standen on a rewe
And saiden, certes Ladie bright
We haue doen well with all our might
But we ne keepe to haue fame
Hide our workes and our name
For Goddes loue, for certes we Haue surely doen it for bountee
And for no maner other thyng
I graunt you all your askyng
(q she) let your workes be dedde
With that about I tourned my hedde
And sawe anone the fiueth rout
That to this Ladie gan lout
And doune on knees anone to fall
And to her tho besoughten all
To hiden her good workes eke
And saied, thei yeue not a leke
For no fame, ne soche renoun
For thei for contemplacioun
And Goddes loue had it wrought
Ne of fame would thei nought.
What (q she) and be ye wood
And wene ye for to doe good
And for to haue of that no fame
Haue ye dispite to haue my name
Haie ye shall lien euerichone
Blowe thy trumpe and that anone
(q she) thou Eolus I hote
And ring these folkes workes by note
That all the worlde maie of it heare
And he gan blowe her loos so cleare
In his golden clarioun
Through the worlde went the soun
Also kindely, and eke so soft
That their fame was blowe aloft
Tho came the first companie
And gan fast to Fame crie
Right merely in this manere
Thei saiden, mercie Ladie dere
To tell certain as it is We haue doen neither that ne this But idell all our life hath be
But natheleſſe yet praie we
That we maie haue as good a fame
And greate renoume and knowen name
As thei that haue doe noble ieſtes
And acheued all her queſtes
As well of loue as other thyng
All was vs neuer broche ne tyng
Ne els what fro women sent Ne ones in her harte iment
To maken vs onely frendly chere
But mought temen vs on bere
Yet let vs to the people seme
Soche as the worlde maie of vs deme
That women louen vs for wood
It shall doe vs as moche good
And to our harte as moche auaile
The counterpeiſe, eaſe, and trauaile
As we had won with labour
For that is dere bought honour
At regard of our greate eaſe
And yet ye muſt vs more pleaſe
Let vs beholde eke thereto
Worthie, wiſe, and good alſo
And riche, and happie vnto loue
For Goddes loue that sitteth aboue
Though we maie not the bodie haue
Of women, yet so God me saue
Let men glewe on vs the name
Sufficeth that we haue the same
I graunt (q she) by my trouth
Now Eolus withouten slouth
Take out thy trumpe of golde (q she)
And blowe as thei haue alked me
That euery man wene hym at eaſe
Though thei go in full badde leaſe
This Eolus gan it so blowe
That through the worlde it was knowe
Tho came the seuenth route anone
And fill on knees euerichone
And saied, Ladie graunte vs soone
Thesame thyng, thesame boone
That this nexte folke haue done
Fie on you (q she) euerichone ye maſtie swine, ye idle wretches
Full of rotten slowe tetches
What falſe theues, where ye wolde
Been famed good, and nothyng nolde
Deſerue why, ne neuer thought Men rather you to hangen ought
For ye be like the slepie Cat
That would haue fiſhe: but woſt thou what?
He woll nothyng weate his clawes
Euill thrifte come to your lawes
And on myne if I it graunte
Or doe fauour you to auaunte.
Thou Eolus, thou hyng of Thrace
Go blowe this folke a foule grace (q she) anone, and woſt thou how

Is I shal tel the right nowe
Sey tirele ben they that wolde honour
Haue, and do no kins labour
Ne do no good, and yet haue laude
And that men wende that belle I saude
Ne coude hem not of loue werne
And yet the that grint at quirne
Is al to good to ease her herte
This Eolus anone by sterte
And with his blacke clarioun
He gan to blasen out a soun
Is loude as belleth winde in hel
And eke therwith sothe to tel
This sowne was so ful of iapes
Is euer mowes were in apes
And that went al the worlde aboute
That euery wight gan on hem shoute
And for to laugh as they were wode
Soche game founde they in her hode
Tho came another companye
That hadde ydone the trechery
The harme and great wickednesse
That any herte couden gesse
And praied her to haue good fame
And that she nolde do hem no shame
But giue hem loos and good renoun
And do it blowe in clarioun
Nay wis (q she) it were a vyce
Ilbe there in me no iustice
Ne lyst not to do it nowe
Ne this I nil graunt it you
Tho came there leapinge in route
And gan clappen al aboute
Euery man vpon the crowne
That al the hal gan to sowne
And said, lady lefe and dere
We ben soche folkes as ye may here
Come tel al the tale aright
We ben shrewes euery wight
And haue delite in wickednesse
Is good folke haue in goodnesse
And ioye to ben knowen shrewes
And ful vice and wicked thewes
Wherfore we pray you on a rowe
That our fame be soche yknowe
In al thinges right as it is
I graunte it you (q she) ywis
But what arte thou that saiest this tale
That wearest on thy hose a pale
And on thy tippet soche a bel
Madame (q he) sothe to tel
I am that ilke shrewe ywis
That brent the temple of Isidis
In Athenes, lo that cyte
And wherfore diddest thou so (q she) Ywis my trouthe (q he) madame
I wolde faine haue had a name
Is other folke had in the towne
Although they were of great renowne
For her vertue and her thewes
Thought I, as great fame haue shrewes
(Though it be nought) for shrewdnesse
Is good folke haue for goodnesse
And sithen I may not haue that one
That other nyl I not forgone
Is for to get a fame here
The temple sette I al on fire
Nowe done our loos be blowe swithe
Is wisly be thou euer blythe
Gladly (q she) thou Eolus
Herest thou not what they prayen vs Madame yes, ful wel (q he)
And I will trumpen it parde
And toke his blacke trumpe fasse
And gan to puffen and to blasse
Tyl it was at the worldes ende
With that I gan aboute wende
For one that stode right at my backe
Me thought ful goodly to me spake
And said, frende what is thy name
Arte thou come hider to haue fame
Nay for sothe frende (q I)
I come nat hither grant mercy
For no soche cause by my heed
Suffiseth me, as I were deed
That no wight haue my name in honde
I wot my selfe best howe I stonde
For what I drie, or what I thinke
I wol my selfe al it drinke
Certaine for the more parte
Is ferforth as I can mine arte
What doest thou here than (q he) (q I) that wol I tel the
The cause why I stande here
Some newe tidinges for to lere
Some newe thinge I not what Tydinges eyther this or that Of loue, or soche thinges glade
For certainly he that me made
To come hyder, said to me
I shulde bothe here and se
In this place wonder thinges
But these be no soche tidinges
Is I ment of: No (q he)
And I answerde, no parde
For wel I wote euer yet
Sithe that firste I had wit
That some folke han desired fame
Diuersly, and loos and name
But certainly I nist how Ne where that fame dwelled or nowe

Ne eke of her discripcion
Ne also her condicion
Ne the ordre of her dome
But nowe I not til I hider come
Why than be lo these tidinges
That thou nowe hether bringes
That thou hast herde (q he) to me
But nowe no force, for wel I se
What thou desirest for to lere
Come forth and stande no lenger here
And I woll the without drede
In to soche another place lede
There thou shalte here many one
Tho gan I forthe with him gone
Out of the castel sothe to sey
Tho sawe I stande in a baley
Under the castel fast by
And house, that domus Dedali
That Labyrintus ycleped is Nas made so wonderly ywis
Ne halfe so quently ywrought
And euermo, as swifte as thought
This queint house aboute went
That neuermo it still stent
And there came out so great a noise
That had it stonde vpon Oyse
Men might haue herde it easely
To Rome, I trowe sikerly
And the noise whiche that I herde
For al the worlde right so it ferde
As dothe the rowtinge of the stone
That fro thengin is letyn gone
And al this house of whiche I rede
Was made of twygges falowe rede
And grene eke, and some were white
Soche as men to the cages twhite
Or maken of these paniers
Or els hutches or dossers
That for the swough and for the twigges
This house was also ful of gigges
And also ful eke of chirkinges
And of many other worknges
And eke this house hath of entrees
As many as leues ben on trees
In sommer whan they bene grene
And on the rofe yet men may sene
A thousande holes, and wel mo
To letten the sowne out go
And by day in euery tyde
Ben al the dores open wide
And by night eche one vnshette
Ne porte is there none to lette
No maner tydinges in to pace
Ne neuer rest is in that place
That it nis filled full of tidinges
Eyther loude or of whisperinges
And euer al the houses angels
Is ful of rownynges and of iangles
Of werres, of peace, of mariages
Of restes, and of labour of biages
Of abode of deathe, and of lyfe
Of loue, of hate, accorde, of strife
Of losse, of lore, and of winninges
Of heale, of sickenesse, or of lesinges
Of faire wether, and eke of tempestes
Of qualme, of folke, and of beestes
Of diuers transmutacions
Of estates, and eke of regions
Of trust, of drede, of ialousy
Of witte, of winning, of folly
Of plenty, and of great famine
Of cheper, of derthe, and of ruine
Of good or misgouernement
Of fyre, and of diuers accident
And lo, this house of whiche I write
Syker be ye it nas not lite
For it was fyrtie mile of length Al was the tymber of no strength yet it is founded to endure
While that it lyste to Auenture
That is the mother of tidinges
As the see of welles and springes
And it was shapen lyke a cage
Certes (q I) in al mine age
Ne sawe I soche an house as this
And as I wondred me ywis
Vpon this house, tho ware was I
Howe myne Egle fast by
Was perched hye vpon a stone
And I gan streight to him gone
And said thus, I pray the
That thou a while abide me
For goddes loue, and let me sene
What wonders in that place bene
For yet paraunter I may lere
Some good therin, or som what here
That lefe me were, or that I went Peter, that is nowe myne entent
(q he to me) therfore I dwel
But certaine one thinge I the tel
That but I bring the therin
Ne shal thou neuer conne the gin
To come in to it, out of doute
So fast it whirleth lo aboute
But sithe that Joues of his grace
As I haue said, wil the solace
Finally with these thinges
Uncouthe sightes and tidinges
To passe with thine euilnesse
Soche routhe hath he of thy distresse
That thou suffredest debonairly
And woste they seluen vtterly

Desperate of al blisse
Sithe that fortune hath made a misse
The swote of al thine hertes rest
Languishe, and eke in pointe to brest
But he through his mightie melite
Wil do the ease, al be it lite
And gaue in expresse commaundement
To whiche I am obedient
To forther the with al my myght
And wisshe and teche the aright
Where thou maiste most tidinges here
Thou shalte here many one lere
With this worde he right anone
Rent me vp byt wene his tone
And at a windowe in me brought
That in this house was, as me thought
And there withal me thought it stent
And nothinge it aboute went
And me set in the flooze adoun
But soche a great congregacion
Of folke, as I sawe rome about Home within and some without
Was neuer sene, ne shal be efte
That certes in this worlde nis lefte
So many formed by nature
Ne deed so many a creature
That wel vnneth in that place
Had I a foote brede of space
And euery wight that I sawe there
Rowned eueriche in others eere
Ineawe tidinge priuely
Or els he tolde it al openly
Right thus, and said: Hast nat thou
That is betidde, lo right nowe Sooth he) tel me what
And than he tolde him this and that
And swore therto, that it was sothe
Thus hath he said, and thus he dothe
And this shal be, and thus herde I say
That shal be founde, that dare I lay
That al the folke that is on lyue
Ne haue the konninge to discriue
The thinges that I herde there
What a loude, and what in eere
But al the wonder moste was this Whan one had herde a thinge y wis
Became streight to another wight
And gan him tellen anone right
The same that him was tolde
Nat a forlonge way was olde
And gan som what forto eche
To this tiding in his speche
More than euer it spoken was
And nat so sone departed nas
Tho fro him that he ne mette
With the thirde, and er he lette
Any stounde, he tolde him alse
Were the tidinges sothe or false
Yet wolde he tel it natheles
And euer more with mo encrees
Than it was erst: thus north and south
Went euery tiding, fro mouth to mouthe
And that encreasinge euermo
As fire is wont to quicken and go
From a sparcle sprongen amis
Tyl al a cite brent vp is
And whan that was ful vp sprongē
And waren more on euery tonge
Than euer it was, and went anone
Vp to a windowe out to gone
Or but it might out there passe
It gan out crepe at some creuasse
And flewe forthe fast for the nones
And somtyme I sawe there at ones
A leasing, and a sadde sothe sawe
That gonnen of aucnture drawe
Out at a windowe for to pace
And whan they metten in that place
They were achecked bothe two
And neither of hem myght out go
For eche other they gonne so croude
Tyl eche of hem gan crien loude
Let me gone first, nay but let me
And here I wol ensuren the
With nones that thou wolt do so
That I shal neuer fro the go
But be thin owne swore brother
We wol meddle vs eche in other
That no man be he neuer so wrothe
Shal haue one two, but bothe
At ones, as beside his leue
Come we a morowe or on eue
Be we cryde or styl yrowned
Thus sawe I false and sothe compowned
Togider flye for o tidinge
Thus out at holes gonne wringe
Euery tiding streight to fame
And she gan yeue eche his name
After her disposicion
And yeue hem ese duracion
Some to were and wane soone
As dothe the faire white moone
And let hem gonne, there might I seen
Winged wonders fast flien
Twenty thousande in a route
As Eolus hem blewe aboute
And lorde this house in al times
Was ful of shypmen and pilgrimes
With scrippes brette ful of leasinges
Entermelled with tidinges

The Prologue.

And eke alone by hem selue
O many thousande tymes twelue
Saw I eke of these pardoners
Currours, and eke messaungers
With bores crommed ful of lyes
As euer vessel was with lies
And as I alther fastest went
I doute, and dyd al myne entent
Me for to playen and for to lere
And eke a tiding for to here
That I had herde of some countre
That shal not nowe be tolde for me
For it no nede is redyly
Folke can singe it bet than I
For al mote out late or rathe
Al the sheues in the rathe
I herde a great noise withall
In a corner of the hal
There men of loue tydinges tolde
And I gan thider warde beholde
For I sawe renninge euery wight
As faste as that they hadden might
And euerych cride, what thinge is that
And some said I not neuer what
And whan they were al on an hepe
Tho behinde gonne vp lepe
And clamben vp on other faste
And vp the noise on hyghen caste
And reden fast on others heles
And stampe as men done after eles
At the laste I sawe a man
Whiche that I nought ne can
But he semed for to be
A man of grear auctorite
And there withal I abraide
Out of my slepe halfe a fraide
Remembringe wel what I had sene
And nowe hye and ferre I had bene
In my goost, and had great wonder
Of that the god of thonder
Had let me knowen, and began to write
Lyke as ye haue herde me endite
Wherfore to study and rede alway
I purpose to do day by day
Thus in dreaminge and in game
Endeth this litel booke of Fame.

Here endeth the booke of Fame.
):(

The Prologue of the testament of Loue.

MAny men there ben, that with eeres openly spread so moche swalowen the delicioulnesse of ielles and of ryme, by queynt knittinge coloures, that of the goodnesse or of the badnesse of the sentence, take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfull soule so sore haue mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boistous persen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and plante there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring. This booke that nothynge hath of the great floode of wytte, ne of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, & so haue we togider to maken the caithers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with bers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: And yet is there good matter to the leude people of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as hem thinketh for the tyme, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeue to hem more ioye for the first leudenesse. So lothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeue sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reuerence. In latin and french hath many soueraine wittes had great delyte to endite, and haue many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben some that speaken their poesye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men haue as goods fantasye as we haue in heryng of Frenche mens Englische. And many termes ther ben in Englysshe, whiche vnneth we Englische men connen declare the knowlegynge: How should than a frenche man borne, soche termes conne iumpere in his matter, but as the Jay chatereth Englisshe. Right so truely the vnderstandyng of Englischmen woll not

stretche to the priuye termes in frenche, what so euer we bosten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in latin, for they haue the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette frenchemen in their frenche also enditen their queinte termes, for it is kyndely to their mouthes, and let vs shewe our fantasies in soche wordes as we lerneden of our dames tonge. And although this booke be lytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in trauail, yet soch writing eriten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarie: for euery mā therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightely may be conceiued to eschewe perils, and necessaries to catch, after as auentures haue fallen to other people or persons.

Certes the soueraingst thinge of desire and most creature reasonable, haue or els shuld haue full appetite to their perfectyon: vnreasonable beestes mowen not, sithe reasō hath in hem no workinge: Than reasonable that wol not, is comparisoned to vnreasonable, and made lyke hem. For sothe the most soueraine and finall perfection of mā is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent deceiuable, and in loue of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and loue his creature.

Nowe principally the meane to bringe in knowleging and louynge his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wherthrough be thylke thinges that ben made, vnderstandynge here to our wittes, arne the vnsene priuyties of God made to vs syghtfull an knowinge, in our contemplacion and vnderstondinge. These thinges than forsoth moche bringen vs to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfyte loue of the maker of heuenly thynges. Lo Dauid saith thou haste delited me in makinge, as who saith, to haue delite in the tune how God hath lent me in consideracion of thy makinge. wherof Tristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a greate likynge in loue of knowyng their creatoure: and also in knowinge of causes inkindelye thynges conditioned. For sothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the shap, a great kyndely loue me shulde haue to the werkmā that hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore truly ỳ philosophers with slyuely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious and worthy to memorye writen, and by a great swetande trauaille to vs left ten of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore Philosophers it was more ioy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reason the perfection by busy study to knowe, than to haue had all the treasour, al the richesse, al the vaineglory that the passed Emperours, Princes, or Kinges hadden. Therfore the names of hem in the booke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and peace arne writen, and in the contrarie, that is to saine, in styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch goodnes hated. And bicause this booke shall be of loue, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseases for wantinge of desire, I wil that this booke be cleped the Testament of Loue.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he wil rende out the swerde of Hercules handes. And also he shulde set Hercules gades a mile yet ferther, and ouer that he had power of strēgth to pull vp the spere, that Alisander the noble might neuer wagge.

And that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his great prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere.

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and iape of me, that I so vnworthely clothed al togither in the cloudie cloude of vncōning, wil puten me in prees to speke of loue, or els of the causes in that matter, sithē al the grettest clerkes hā had ynough to don, & as who saith gathered vp clene to corne hem, and with their sharp sithes of cōning al mowē and made therof great rekes & noble, ful of al plenties to fed me and many another. Enuye forsothe cōmendeth noughte his reason, that he hath in hain, be it neuer so trusty. And al though these noble repers, as good workmē & worthy their hier, han al drawe & bounde vp in the sheues, & made many shockes, yet haue I ensample to gader the smale crōmes, and fullin my walet of tho that fallen from the bourde amōg the smalle houndes, notwithstandinge the trauaile of the almoigner, ỳ hath drawe vp in ỳ cloth al ỳ remissailes, as trenchours, & the relief to bere to ỳ almesse.

yet alſo haue I leue of the noble huſbande Boece, all though I be a ſtraunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and theſe great workmen, and glene my handfuls of the ſwedynge after their handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encreaſe my porcio with that I ſhal drawe by priuyties out of ſhockes, a fye ſeruaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended, knowynge of trouthe in cauſes of thynges, was more hardier in the firſte fechers, and ſo ſayth Ariſtotle, and lighter in vs that han folowed after. For their palling ſtudy han freſſhed our wittes, and oure vnderſtandynge han excited in conſideracion of trouth by ſharpenes of their reaſons. Utterly theſe thinges be no dremes ne iapes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych meate for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whā the wether out of meaſure was boiſtous, & the wyld wind Boreas as his kind aſketh with dryinge coldes, maked the wawes of the occian ſee ſo to arife vnkindely ouer the commune dankes that it was in point to ſpill all the erthe.

Thus endeth the prologue, and here after foloweth the firſt boke of the Teſtament of Loue.

The teſtament of loue.

ALas Fortune alas, I that ſome tyme in delicious houres was wont to enioy diſſful ſtoūdes, am nowe dryue by vnhappy heuine ſſe to bewaile my ſondrie yuels in tene. Trewlie I leue, in myn herte is writte of perdurable letters al the entencyons of lamētacion that now ben ynempned, for any maner diſeaſe outward in ſobbyng maner, the weth ſorowful perynge from within. Thus from my conſort I ginne to ſpille, ſith the that ſhulde me ſolace, is ferre fro my preſence. Certes her abſence is to me an hell, my ſternynge death thus in wo it myneth, that endeleſſe care is throughout myne harte clenched, blyſſe of my ioye, that ofte me murthed is turned into galle, to thynke on thing that may not at my wil in armes me hēt. Mirth is chaunged in to tene, whā ſwink is there continually, that reſt was wōt to ſoiourne and haue dwellynge place. Thus witleſſe thoughtfull, ſightleſſe lokynge, I endure my penaunce in this derke priſonne, caitifned fro frēdſhippe and acquaintaunce, and forſaken of al that any worde dare ſpeake. Straūge hath by way of intrucioun made his home there me ſhulde be, yf reaſon were herde as he ſhulde. Neuer the later yet herely lady precyous Margarit, haue minde on thy ſeruaunte, and thynke on his diſeaſe, howe lightles he lyueth, ſithe the beames brēnende in loue of thin eien arn ſo bewet, that wordes e cloude atwene vs twey wol not ſuffre my thoughtes of hem to be enlumyned. Thinke that one vertue of a Margarite precious, is amonges manye other the ſorowful to comforte, yet wil of that me ſorowfull to comforte, is my luſte to haue nought elſ at this tyme, deede ne death, ne no maner traueylle hath, no power myne hert ſo moche to fade, as ſhulde to here of a twinclinge in your diſeaſe. Ah, God forbede that, but yet lete me dey, let me ſterue without en any meaſure of penaunce, rather than myne hertely thinking comforte in ought were diſeaſed. What may my ſeruice auelle in abſence of her, that my ſeruice ſhulde accepte? is this nat endeleſſe ſorowe

sorowe to thinke? yes, yes God wote, myne hart breaketh nie a sonder, how should the ground wout kindly noriture, dringē forth any fruites? How should a ship withoten a sterne in ꝑ great sea be gouerned? how shold I withouten my blisse, my harte, my desire, my ioye, my goodnesse, endure in this contrarious prison, that thinke euery houre in the daie, an hundred winter? wel maie now cue sain to me Adam, in sorowe fallen frō wealthe, driuen art thou out of Paradise, with sweate thy sustenaunce to be swinke. Depe in this pinyng pitte, with wo I ligge stocked, with chaines linked of care, and of tene. It is so hie from thens I lie, and the common yerth, there ne is cable in no land maked, that might stretche to me, to drawe me into blisse, ne steyers to steye on is none, so that without recouer endlesse, here to endure I wote well I purueide. O, where art thou nowe frendship, that sometyme with laughande chere, madest bothe face & countenaunce to me wardes? Truely nowe arte thou wente out of toune, but euer me thinketh, he weareth his olde clothes, and that the soule, in the whiche the life of frendship was in, is drawē out frō his other spirites. Now then farewell frendship, and farewell leawes, me thinketh ye all han taken your laue: no force of you all at ones.

But ladie of loue, ye wote what I mean, yet think on thy seruaunt, that for thy loue pitteth, all thynges haue I forsake, to folowē thine hestes: reward me with a thought though ye doe naught els. Remembraunce of loue, lith so sore vnder my breste, that other thought cometh not in my mynde, but gladnesse to thinke on your goodnesse, and your merie chere, frendes & sorowe, to think on your wretche and your daunger, from whiche Christ me saue. My greate ioye it is to haue in meditacions, the bounties, the vertues, the nobley in you printed: sorowe and hel comen at ones, to suppose that I be veined. Thus with care, sorowe, & tene am I bapt, min ende with death to make. Now good goodly thinke on this.

O wretched foole that I am fallen into lowe, the heate of my brenning tene hath me all defaled: how should ye Lady set prise on soule filth? My conning is thinne, my witte is exiled, like to a foole naturell am I compariſoned. Truely ladie, but your mercie the more were. I wote well all my labor were in idell: your mercie thā passeth right. God graunt that proposicion to be verified in me, so that by trust of good hope, I mowe come to the hauen of ease, and sith it is impossible, the colours of youre qualities to chaunge: and forsoth I wote well, wemme ne spot maie not abide, there so noble vertue haboūdeth, so ꝑ the defalyng to you is verily imaginable, as cōtenāce of goodnes vd encreasig vertue, is so in you knit to abid by necessarie maner, yet if the riuers might fal, which is ayenst kinde, I woll well myn hart, ne should therefore naught flit, by the leste poinct of Geometrie, so sadlie is it sonded, that awaie from your seruice in loue, maie he not departe. O loue, when shall I been pleased? O charitie, when shall I been eased? O good goodlie, when shall the Dice tourne? O full of vertue, doe the chaunce of comforte, vpwarde to fall. O loue, when wolt thou think on thy seruaunt? I can no more, but here out cast of all welfare, abide the daie of my death, or els to see the sight ꝑ might all my wellynge sorowes voide, and of the floode make an ebbe. These diseases mowen well by dureſſe of sorowe, make my life to vnbodie, and so for to die: but certes, ye ladie in a full perfeccion of loue, been so knitte with my soule, that death maie not thilke knotte vnbinde ne departe, so that ye and my soulle together is endlesse, in blisse should dwel, and there shall my soule at the full been eased, that he maie haue your presence, to shewe the entent of his desires: Ah dere God, that shall bee a greate ioye. Now yearthlie Goddesse, take regarde of thy seruaunt, though I be feble, for thou art wōte to praise them better, that would con serue in loue, all be he full meaner then kinges or princes, that woll not haue that vertue in minde. Now precious Margarite, that vd thy noble vertue, hast drawen me into loue firste, me wenyng therof to haue blisse, as Galle and Aloes are so moche sprong, that sauour of swetenesse maie I not acast. Alas that your benigne yen, in which that mercie semeth, to haue all his noriture, nill by no waie tourne the clerenesse of mercie to mewardes. Alas that your brennande vertues, shining emonges all folke, and enluminyng all other people, by habundaunce of encreasyng, shewēth to me but smoke, & no light. These thinges to thinke in myne harte, maketh euery daie weppyng in myne yen to renne. These liggen on my backe so sore, that importable burden me semeth on me backe to be charged, it maketh me backwarde to meue, when my steppes by comon course euen forthe pretende: These thynges also on right side and lefte, haue me so enuolued with care, that wanhope of helpe is throughout me ronne truelie, and leue that gracelesse is my fortune, whiche that euer sheweth it me wardes by a cloudie disease, all readie to make stormes of tene, and the blisfull side halte still a waiward, and woll it not suffer to me wardes to turne: no force yet woll I not been conquered.

O, alas that your nobley so moche emōg all other creatures, cōmended by folowyng streme, by al maner vertues, but there been wonderfull, I not whiche that let the flood to come into my soul, wherfore purely mated with sorowe throughout sought, my self I crie on your goodnes, to haue pitee on this caitife, that in the inrest degree of sorowe and disease is left, and without your goodlie will, from any help and recouery. These sorowes maie I not susteine, but if my sorowe should bee tolde, and to you wardes shewed, although moche space is betwene vs twaine, yet me thynketh that by soche soleinyng woordes, my disease ginneth eb. Truelie me thynketh that the soune of my lamentacious wepyng, is right now sowe into youre presence, and there crieth after mercie and grace, to whiche thynge me semeth, thee liste none answere to yeue, but with a deinous chere, ye commaunded it to auoide, but God forbidde that any woorde should of you spryng, to haue so little ruth. Parde pitie and mercie, in euery Margarit is closed by kinde, emongs many other vertues, by qualities of comforte, but comfort is to me right naught worthe, withouten mercie and pitie of you alone, whiche thinges hastly God me graunt for his mercie.

Rehearsing these things and many other, without time or moment of rest, me semed for anguishe of disease, that all togither I was rauished. I can not tell how, but holly al my passions and felynges weren loste, as it semed for the time, and sodainly a maner of dreade, light in me al at ones, nought soche feare as folke haue of an enemie, that were mightie, and would hem greue, or doon hem disease: for I trowe this is wel knowe to many persones, that otherwhile if a mā be in his Soueraines presence, a maner of ferdnesse crepeth in his hart, not for harme, but of goodlie subiection: namelie as men reden that Aungelles been aferde of our sauiour in heauen. And parde there ne is, ne maie no passion of disease bee, but it is to meane, that Aungelles been a dradde, not by frendes of drede, sithen thei been perfitly blissed, as affeccion of wonderfulnes, and by seruice of obedience, soche ferde also han these louers in presence of their loues, and subiectes afore their soueraines: right so with ferdnesse, mine hart was caught. And I sodainlie astonied, there entered into the place, there I was lodged a ladie, the semeliche and moste goodlie to my sight, that euer to forne appeared to any creature, and trulie in the blusshing of her looke, she yaue gladnesse and comforte, sodainly to all my wittes, a right so she doeth to euery wight, that cometh in her presēce. And for she was so goodlie (as me thought) mine harte begā somedeale to be enbolded, and wext a little hardie to speake, but yet with a quakynge voice, as I durst, I salued her, and enquired what she was, and why she so worthie to sight, dained to entre into so foule a dongeon, and namely a prison, without leaue of my kepers. For certes, although the vertue of deedes of mercie, stretchen to visiten the poore prisoners, and hem after that facultes been had to comforte, me semed that I was so ferre fallen into miserie & wretched hid caitifnesse, that me should no precious thing neigh: and also that for my sorowe euery wight should been heauie, & wilsche my recouery. But whē this lady had somedeale apperceiued, as well by my woordes, as by my chere, what thought dulied me within with a good womanlie countenaunce, she said these woordes. O my nozie, weneste thou that my maner bee, to forget my frendes, or my seruauntes? Naie (q she) it is my full entent, to visite and comforte all my frendshippes and alies, as well in tyme of perturbacion, as of moste propertie of blisse, in me shall vnkindnesse neuer be founden. And also sithen I haue so fewe especial true, now in these daies, wherfore I maie well at more leisar, come to hem that me deserueu, and if my comyng maie in any thyng auaile, wete well I woll come often.

Now good ladie (q I) that art so faire on to loke, rinyng honie by thy woordes, blisse of paradise arne thy lokynges, ioye and cō-

fort

sort are thy moutinges. what is thy name? how is it that in you is so mokell werking vertues enpight. as me semeth, and in non other creature, that euer sawe I with mine yen? My disciple (q she) me wondreth of thy wordes, and on thee, that for a little disease hast forgeten my name. Wost thou not well that I am Loue, that firste thee brought to thy seruice? O good Ladie (q I) is this worship to thee, or to thyne excellēce, for to come into so foule a place? Parde somtime tho I was in prosperitie, and with forain goodes enuolued, I had mokil to doen to draw thee to mine hostell, & yet many werninges thou madest, ere thou liste fullie to graunt, thine home to make at my dwelling place: & now thou comest goodlie by thine owne vise, to comfort me with words, & so there through I ginne remember, on passed gladnes. Trulie ladie I ne wot, whether I shall sate welcome or none, sithen thy commyng woll as moche doe me tene and sorowe, as gladnesse and mirthe: se why. For that me comforteth to thinke on passed gladnesse, that me anoyeth elt to be in doing. Thus thy comming both gladdeth and teneth, and that is cause of moche sorowe: lo Ladie, how then I am comforted by your conning, and with that I gan in teares to distill, & tenderlie wepe. Now certes (q Loue) I se well (and that me ouerthinketh) that wit in thee faileth, and art in poinct to dote. Trulie (q I) that haue ye maked, and that euer wol I rue. Wottest thou not well (q she) that euery Shepherde ought by reaſō, to seke his sperkeland shepe that arne ron into wildernesse, emong bushes and perils, and hem to their pasture ayen bryng, and take of hē pryuie bulie cure on keping? And tho the vnconning Shepe. scattred would been lost, renning to wilder nesse, and to desertes drawe, or els woulden put hem self to the swallowyng wolfe, yet shall the Shepherde, by bulinesse and trauaile, so put him forthe, that he shall not let him be lost by no waie. I good shepherd put teth rather his life to been lost for his shepe

But for thou shalt not wene me, being of verse condicion, truelie for eueriche of my folke, and for all tho that to me warde, bee mit in any condicion, I woll rather die thā suffre hem through errour to been spilte. For me liste, and it me liketh, of all myne a Shepherdesse to bee cleaped. Wost thou not well, I failed neuer wight, but he me refused, and would negligētlie go with vnkindnesse? And yet parde, haue I many foche holpe and releued, and thei haue ofte me begiled, but euer at thende, it discēded in their owne neckes. Haste thou not radde, howe hinde I was to Paris, Priamus soonne of Troie? How Jason me failed, for al his fals behest? How Sesars sonne, I lefte it for no tene, till he was troned in my blisse, for his seruice. What (q she) moste of all, maked I not a louedaie, bitwene God and mankind, and chese a maide to be nompere, to but the quarell at ende? Lo, how I haue trauailed to haue thanke on all sides, and yet list me not to reste, and I might finde on whom I should werche. But trulie mine owne disciple, bicause I haue thee founde at all assais in thy will to bee redie, mine hestes to haue followed, and haste been true to that Margarite Perle, that ones I thee shewed, and the alwaie ayenward, hath made but daungerous chere, I am come in proper persone to put thee out of errours, & make thee glad by waies of reason, so that sorow ne disease shal, no more hereafter the amaistrie. Wher through I hope, thou shalt lightlie come to the grace, that thou longe haste desired, of thilke Jewell. Haste thou not heard many ensamples, how I haue comforted, and releued ỳ scholers of my lore? Who hath worthied kinges in the felde? Who hath honoured ladies in boure, by a perpetuall mirror of their truth in my seruice? Who hath caused worthie folke, to voide vice and shame? Who hath holde cites, and realmes in prosperitie? If thee list clepe ayen thyne old remembraunce, thou coudest euery poincte of this declare in especiall, and sate that I thy maistres haue be cause, causyng these thinges, and many mo other.

Now i wis madame (q I) all these things I knowe well my self, and that thyne excellence, passeth the vnderstandyng of vs beastes, and that no mannes witte yearthlie, maie comprehende thy vertues. Well then (q she) for I see thee in disease and sorowe, I wote well thou art one of myne nories, I maie not suffer thee so to make sorowe, thin owne self to shende: but I my self come to be thy fere, thine heuy charge to make to seme the lesse, for wo is him that is a loue: And to the sory to been moued by a sorowfull wizt it is great gladnes. Right so with my sicke frendes I am sicke, and with sorie, I can not els but sorowe make, till when I haue hem releued, in soche wise that gladnesse in a maner of counterpaiſyng, ſhall reſtore as mokell in ioye, as ỹ paſſed yeuneſſe biforne did in tene. And alſo (q ſhe) when any of my ſeruauntes been a lone in ſolitarie place, I haue yet euer buſied me to be with hem, in comfort of their hartes, and taught hem to make ſonges of plaine and of bliſſe, and to enditen letters of Rhetorike, in queint vnderſtādinges, and to bethinke hem in what wiſe, thei might beſte their Ladies in good ſeruice pleaſe, and alſo to learne maner in countenaunce, in wordes, and in bearyng, and to been mebe & lowlie to euery wight, his name and fame to encreaſe, and to yeue greate yeftes and large, that his renome maie ſpryngen, but thee thereof haue I excuſed, for thy loſſe and thy greate coſtages, where through thou arte neadie, arne nothing to me vnknowen, but I hope to God ſometime it ſhal been amended, as thus, as I ſaied. In norture haue I taught al mine, and in curteſie made hem expert, their Ladies hartes to winne, and if any would endeinous, or proude, or be enuious, or of wretches acquaintaunce, haſteliche haue ſoche voided out of my ſchole: for all vices truelie I hate: vertues and worthineſſe in all my power I auaunce.

Ah worthie creature (q I) and by iuſte cauſe, the name of Goddes dignetye mow beare: in thee lithe the grace, through whiche any creature in this worlde hath any goodneſſe, truly all maner of bliſſe, and preciouſneſſe in vertue out of thee ſpringen, and wellen, as brookes and riuers, proceaden from their ſprynges, and like as all waters by kinde, drawen to the ſea, ſo all kindly thinges threſten, by ful appetite of deſire to drawe after thy ſteppes, and to thy preſence approche, as to their kindlie perfection how dare then beaſtes in this world, aught forfete ayenſt thy Diuine purueighaunce: Alſo lady ye knowen all the priuie thoughtes, in hartes no counſaile maie been hidde from your knowyng. Wherfore I wote wel Ladie, that ye knowe your ſelf, that I in my conſcience am, and haue been willyng to your ſeruice, all coude I neuer dooe as I ſhould, yet forſothe ſained I neuer to loue otherwiſe, then was in myne harte: and if I coud haue made chere to one, and ithought an other, as many other dooen aldaie afore myne yen, I trowe it would not me haue vailed. Certes (q ſhe) haddeſt thou ſo dooen, I would not now haue thee here viſited, ye were well Ladie ethe (q I) that I haue not plaid raket, Nettle in, Docke out, and with the weathercocke waued, and truely there ye me ſette, by accorde of my conſcience, I would not flie, till ye and reaſon by aperte ſtrength, maden myne harte to tourne.

In good faithe (q ſhe) I haue knowe thee euer of tho condicions, ſithen thou wouldeſt (in as moche as in thee was) a made me priuie of thy counſaill, and iudge of thy cōſcience, though I forſoke it in tho daies, till I ſawe better my tyme, would neuer God that I ſhould now faile, but euer I woll be readie, witneſſyng thy ſothe, in what place that euer I ſhall, ayenſt al tho that woll the contrary ſuſtein, and for as moche as to me is naught vnknowen, ne hid of thy priuie harte, but all haſte thou tho thynges, made to me open at the full, that hath cauſed my comyng into this priſon, to voide the webbes of thine yen, to make thee clerely to ſee the errours thou haſte been in, and bicauſe that men been of diuers condicions, ſome a dradde to ſaie a ſothe, and ſome for a ſothe anone readie to fight, and alſo that I maie not my ſelf been in place, to withſaie thilke men, that of thee ſpeaken, otherwiſe then the ſothe, I woll and charge thee, in vertue of obedience, that thou to me oweſt, to writen my wordes, and let hem in writynges, that thei mowe as my witneſſyng, been noted emong the people. For bookes written, neither dreden ne ſhamen, ne ſtriue conne, but onely ſhewen the entente of the writer, and yeue remembraunce to the hearer: and if any woll in thy preſence ſaie, any thinge to tho writers, looke boldlie, truſt on Mars to anſwere at the ful. For certes, I ſhal him enforme of all the trouthe in thy loue, with thy cōſcience, ſo that of his helpe thou ſhalt not varie at thy nede. I trowe the ſtrongeſt and the beſt that maie bee founde, woll not tranſuers thy wordes, whereof then wouldeſt thou dreade.

GReatlie was I tho gladded of theſe wordes, & as who ſaith, weren ſomdele light in hart, both for thauctorite of witneſſe, and alſo of liberneſſe of helpe of the forſaied beheſte, and ſaid, Truely ladie now am a well gladded, through comforte of your wordes: be it now likyng vnto your nobly-te ſhewe, whiche ſolke diſſame your ſeruauntes, ſub your ſeruice

seruice oughte aboue all other thynges to been commended. Yet (q she) I see well thy soule is not al out of the amased cloude: the were better to heare thing, that thee might light out of thyne heauie charge, and after inowyng of thyne own helpe, then to stirre swete woordes, and soche reasons to heare: for in a thoughtfull soule (and namely soch one as thou art) woll not yet soche thinges sinken. Come of therefore, and let me seen thy heuie charge, that I maie the lightlier for thy comfort purueigh.

Now certes ladie (q I) the moste comfort I might haue, were vtterlie to wete me bee sure in hartes, of that Margarite I serue, and so I thinke to doen with all mightes, whyle my life dureth. Then (q she) maiest thou thereafter, in soche wise that misplea-saunce ne entre? In good faithe (q I) there shall no misplesaūce be caused, through trespace on my side. And I dooe thee to wete (q she) I sette neuer yet persone to serue in no place (but if he caused the contrary, in defaultes and trespaces) that he ne sped of his seruice. Myne owne yearthly ladie (q I tho) and yet remember to your worthinesse how long sithen by many reuoluyng of yeres, in tyme when October, his leaue ginneth take, and Nouember sheweth hym to sight, when Bernes been full of goodes, as is the Nutte on euery halke, and then good londe tillers, ginneth shape for the yearth, with greate trauaile to bryng forthe more Corne, to mannes sustenaunce, ayenste the next yeres folowing. In soche tyme of plentie, he that hath an home, and is wise, liste not to wander meruailes to seche, but he be constrained or excited: oft the lothe thing is doen, by excitacion of other mannes opinion, whiche woulden faine haue myne abidyng, take in harte of luste to trauaile, and see the windyng of the yearth, in that tyme of winter, by woodes that large streates werne in, by small pathes, that swine and hogges hadden made, as lanes with ladels their maste to seche. I walked thinkyng alone, a wonder greate while, and the greate beastes that the woode haunten, and adorneth al maner forestes, and heerdes gone to wilde: then ere I was ware, I neighed to a sea banke, and for ferde of the beastes, shipcraft I cride: for ladie I trowe ye wete well your self, nothyng is werse then the beastes that shoulden been tame, if thei catche her wildenesse, and ginne again ware ramage: thus forsothe was I aferde, and to Shippe me hied. Then were there inowe to lache myne handes, and drawe me to Shippe, of whiche many I knewe well the names. Sight was the firste, Luste was an other, Thought was the thirde, and Will ehe was there a Master: these broughten me within borde, of this Shippe of trauaile. So when the saile was spradd, and this Shippe gan to moue, the winde and water gan for to rise, and ouertwhartlie to tourne the welken, the wawes semeden as thei hitte togither, but often vnder colour of hissyng, is mokell olde hate priuelie closed and kepte. The storme so straungelie, and in a deouryng maner, ganne so fast vs assaile, that I supposed the date of my death, should haue made there his ginning, now vp, now doun nowe vnder the wawe, and nowe aboue was my Shippe a greate while. And so by mokell duresse of weathers, and of stormes, and with greate auowyng pilgrimages, I was driuen to an Ile, where vtterlie I wēd firste to haue be relcowed, but truelie as the firste beginnyng, it semed me so perillous, the hauen to catch, that but through grace I had been comforted, of life I was full dispaired. Truelie Ladie, if ye remember a right of all maner thynges, your self came hastelie to seen vs sea driuen, and to weten what we weren: but firste ye were deinous of chere, after whiche ye gon better alight, and euer as me thought, ye liued in greate drede of disease, it seemed so by your chere. And when I was certified of your name, the lenger I looked in you, the more I you goodlie dradde, and euer myne harte on you opened the more, and so in a little tyme, my Shippe was out of mynde. But ladie as ye me lad I was ware, bothe of beastes and of fishes, a greate nomber throngyng togider: emong whiche a Muskell in a blewe shell, had enclosed a Margarite Perle, the moste precious, and best that euer tofore came in my sighte, and ye tolden your self, that like iewell in his kinde, was so good and so vertuous, that her better should I neuer finde, all sought I thereafter to the worldes ende, and with that I helde my peace a greate while: and euer sithē I haue me bethought on the man, that sought the precious Margarites, and when he had founden one to his likyng, he solde all his good to buy that iewell: I wis thought I, and yet so I think, now haue I founden the iewell, that mine

harte

harte desireth, whereto should I seeke further, trulie nowe woll I cease, and on this Margarite I sette me for euer. Now then also, sithen I wiste well it was your will, that I should so soche a seruice me take, and so to desire that thynge, of whiche I neuer haue blisse, there liueth none, but he hath disease: your might then that brought me to soch seruice, that to me is cause of sorow & of ioy, I wonder of your worde that ye sain, to bringen men into ioye, and parde ye wot well that default ne trespace, maie not reasonable been put to me wardes, as ferre as my conscience knoweth: but of my disease me list nowa while to speake, & to enforme you in what maner of blisse ye haue me throng. For truly I wene that all gladnesse all ioye, and all mirthe is beshet vnder loch, and the kete throwe in soche place, that it maie not be found: my brenning who hath altered all my hewe. When I should slepe, I walowe and I thinke, & me disporte. Thus combred, I seme that all folke had me mased. Also ladie mine, desire hath long dured, come speakyng to haue, or els at the leaste haue been enmoised with sight: and for wanting of these thynges, my mouthe would and he durste, pleine right sore, sithen euils for my goodnesse, arne manifold to me holden. I wonder Ladie truely, saue euermore your reuerence, howe ye mowe for shame soche thynges suffer on your seruaunte, to be so multiplied: wherefore kneling with a lowe harte, I praie you to rue on this caitife, that of nothyng nowe maie serue. Good ladie, if you liste nowe your help to me shew that am of your priuiest seruauntes, at all assaies in this tyme, and vnder your wings of protection. No helpe to me wardes is shapen, how shall then straungers in any wise after succour looke, when I that am so priuie, yet of helpe I doe faile: Further maie I not, but thus in this prisone abide: what bondes and chaines me holden, Ladie ye sewel your self: A remiant forthudged hath not halfe the care. But thus sighyng and sobbyng I waile here alone, and nere it for comforte of your presence, right here would I sterue. And yet a little am I gladded, that so goodlie soche grace and none happe haue I hence, graciouslie to finde the precious Margarite, that all other lefte, men should huie, if thei should therefore sell al her substaunce. Wo is me that so many let games, and purpose breakers been maked wasters, soche prisoners as I am euermore, to ouerlooke and to hinder, and for soche lettours, it is harde any soche iewell to winne. Is this lady an honour to thy deitie? Me thinketh by right, soche people should haue no maistrie, ne been ouerlookers, ouer none of thy seruauntes. Truely were it lefull vnto you, to all the Goddes would I plaine, that ye rule your Diuine purueighaunce emonges your seruauntes, nothing as ye should. Also Ladie my moeble is insufficiaunte, to counteruaile the price of this iewell, or els to make thechaunge: eke no wight is worthie, soche perles to weare, but kynges or Princes, or els their peers: This iewell for vertue, would adorne and make faire all a realme, for nobley of vertue is so moche, that her goodnesse ouer all is commended. Who is it that would not waile, but he might soche riches haue at his wille, the vertue thereof out of this prisone maie me deliuer, and nought els. And if I bee not there throwe holpen, I see my self withouten recouery: although I mighte hence voide, yet would I not, I would abide the daie, that destenie hath me ordeined, which I suppose is without amendemente, so sore is myne harte bounden, that I maie thinken none other. Thus straite (Ladie) hath sir Daunger laced me in stoches, I leue it be not your will: and for I see you taken so little heede, as me thinketh, & woll not maken by your might, the vertue in mercie of the Margarite on me for to stretch, so as ye mowe wel, in case that you list: my blisse and my mirth arne felde, sickenesse & sorowe been alwaie readie, the cope of tene is wounde about all my bodie, that standyng is me beste, vnneth maie I ligge for pure misealie sorowe, and yet al this is little inough, to be the earnest siluer, in forward of this bargaine, for treble solde, so mokell muste I suffer, ere tyme come of myne ease. For he is worthie no wealth, that maie no wo suffer. And certes, I am heauie to thinke on these thinges, but who shall yeue me water inough to drinke, lest mine yen drie for rennyng streames of teares? who shall wailen with me myne owne happie heauinesse? who shall counsaile me nowe in my likyng tene, and in my goodlie harse? I not. For euer the more I brenne, the more I coueite: the more that I sorowe, the more thirst I in gladnesse. Who shall then yeue me a contrarious drinke, to staunch the thrust of my blissfull bitternes?

thus I brenne and I drenche, I shiuer and sweate, to this reuerted ruel was neuer yet ydeined salue, forsoth al lithes ben vnconninge, saue the Margarite alone, any sothe remedy to puruey.

And wyth these wordes I brake out to wepe, that euery teare of myne eyen for greatnesse semed they boren out the bal of my syght, and that al the water hadde been out ronne. Than thought me, that loue gan a litel to heauy for my discomforte of my chere, and gan soberly and in easy maner speake, wel auising what she said. Comenly the wise speaken easylie & softe for many skilles: One is, their wordes are the better beleued, and also in easy speakynge, auisement men may catche, what to put forthe, and what to holden in. And also the auctoritie of easye wordes is the more, & the they geuen the more vnderstandyng to other intuicion of the mater. Ryght so this ladye easely and in a softe manere, gan say these wordes.

Merualle (q she) great it is, that by no maner of semblaunt, as ferre as I can espie thou lyste not to haue any recour, but euer thou plainest and sorowest, and wayes of remedie for fooliche wilfulnesse the liste not to seche: but enquire of thy nexte frendes, that is thyne in witte, and me that haue ben thy maistresse, and the recour and syne of thy disease, for of disease is gladnesse and ioye, with a ful vessel so helded, that it quēcheth the seling of the first tenes. But thou that were wonte not onely these thynges remembre in thyne herte, but also fooles therof to enfourmen, in admulling of their errours, and distroynge of their derke opinions, & in comfort of their seare thoughtes: nowe canste thou not ben comforte of thin owne soule: in thinkinge of these thinges. O where haste thou be so long commensal, that haste so mikel eaten of the potages of sorgetfulnesse, and dronken so of ignorance that the olde souking, whiche thou haddest of me, arne a maistred and lorne fro all maner of knowinge? O this is a worthy persone to helpe other, that can not counsaile him selfe. And with these wordes for pure and stronge shame I wox al reed.

And she than seinge me so astonied by diuers stoundes, sodainly (whiche thynge hyde hateth) gan delycioully me comforte with sugred wordes, puttinge me in ful hope that I shulde the Margarite getten, if I folowed her hestes, and gan with a faire clothe to wipen the teares that hyngen on my cheches: and than said I in this wise. Now welle of wisedome and of all welthe, withouten the may nothynge ben lerned, thou bereft the keies of all priuy thinges. In vaine trauaile men to catche anye stedfhyp, but if ye lady sirste the locke vnshet, ye lady lerne vs the waies & the bypathes to heauen: ye Lady maken all the heuenly bodies goodly and benignely to done her course, that gouernen vs beestes here on erthe, ye armen your seruauntes ayenst al debates, with imperciable harneis, ye setten in her hertes insuperable bloode of hardenesse, ye leaden hem to the parfite good. yet al thinge desireth, ye werne no man of helpe that weie done your lore, graunt me nowe a litell of your grace, all my sorowes to cease. Myne owen seruaunt (q she) trewly thou sittest nie myne herte, and thy badde chere gan sorely me greue: but amonge thy plaining wordes, me thought thou allegest thinges to be letting of thine helping, and thy grace to hinder, wherthrough me thinketh that wanhope is crope through thine hert: god forbid that ony vnthrifti thought shulde come in thy mynde thy wittes to trouble, sithen euery thynge in commynge is cōtingent, wherefore make no more thy propolycion by an impossible. But nowe I pary the reherse me ayen tho thynges, that thy mystrust causen, and thilke thinges I thinke by reason to distroyen, and put full hope in thine herte. what vnderstandest thou there (q she) by that thou saidest, many let games are thin ouerlokers. And also by that thy moeble is insuffysaunt, I not what thou therof meanest.

Trewly (q I) by the first, I say that iangelers euermore arne speakinge, rather of euyll than of good, for euery age of man rather encline th to wickednesse, thā any goodnesse to auaunce. Also false wordes springen so wyde, by the sterynge of false lynge tonges, that fame als swyftly flieth to her eares, and saithe manye wicked tales, and as sone shal falsenesse ben leued as trouth, for all his greate sothenesse. Now by that other (q I) me thinketh thilke iewel so precious, ȳ to no soch wretche as I am wolde vertue therof extende, & also I am to feble in worldely ioyes, any sothe iewell to contreuaile. For soche people that worldely loyes han at her will, ben sette at the hyghest degre, and moste in reuerence ben accepted, for false weninge maketh felicite thyder in to be supposed: but soche captiues as I am euermore ben hindred. Certes (q she) take good hede and I shal by reason to thee theuen, that all these thinges mowe not let thy purpose, by ẏ lest point that any wight coude pricke.

REmẽbrest nat (q she) ensample is one of the strongest maner, as for to preue a mannes purpose. Than yf I nowe by ensample enduce thee to any propolicion, is it nat proued by strengthe? Yes forsothe (q I). Well (q she) raddeste thou neuer howe Paris of Troye and Helaine loued togider, and yet had they not entrecomuned of speche? Also Perisius shette Dane his doughter in a tour, for suertie that no wight shulde of her haue no maistrie in my seruice, & yet Jupiter by sygnes without any spech, had al his purpose ayẽst her fathers will. And many soche mo haue ben knitte in trouthe, and yet spake they neuer togider, for that is a thinge enclosed vnder secretenes of priuitie, why twey persons entremellen hertes after a light. The power in knowing of soche thynges so preuen, shal nat al vtterly be peuen to you beestes, for manye thynges in soche precious matters, ben reserued to iudgement of deuine purueiaunce, for amonge lyuing people, by mannes cõsideracion mounthey not be determined. wherfore I saye, all the envye, al the ianglinge, that weiny people vpon my seruauntes maken ofte, is rather cause of esploite, than of any hindringe.

why than (q I) suffre ye soche wronge, and moun whẽ ye list, lightly all soche yuels abate, me semeth to you it is a great vnwurthip. O (q she) holde nowe thy peace, I haue founden to many that hã ben to me vnkind that trewly I woll suffre euery wyght in that wise to haue disease, and who that continueth to the end wel and trewly, hem wol I helpen, and as for one of mine in to blysse to wende, as marcial doing in Grece. who was perowned, by God nat the strongest, but he that rathest come and lengest abode and continued in the iourney, and spared nat to trauaile as longe as the play lest. But thilke persons that profered him nowe to my seruice theryn is a while, and anon voideth and redy to another, and of nowe one he thinketh, and nowe another, and in to water entreth and anõ respireth, soche one liste me nat in to perfite bliss of my seruyce bring. I tree ofte set in diuers places woll not by kinde endure to bringe forth fruites. Lobe nowe I pray the, howe myne olde seruauntes of tyme passed continued in her seruice, and folow thou after their steppes, and thanne might thou not faile, in case thou worche in this wise.

Certes (q I) it is nothinge lich, this world to time passed, ẽke this coũtre hath one maner, & another countre hath another. And so manie nat a man alwaye put to hys eye, the salue that he healed with his hele. For this is sothe, betwyxe two thynges liche, ofte diuersite is required. Now (q she) that is sothe, diuersite of natyon, diuersite of lawe, as was maked by many reasons, for that diuersyte cometh in by the contrarious malice of wicked people, that han enuious hertes ayenst other. But trewly my lawe to my seruauntes euer hath ben ingenerall, whiche maie not faile, for ryght as mannes lawe, that is ordeined by manie determinacions, may not be knowe for good or badde, tyl assay of the people han proued it, and to what ende it drawe th, and than it sheweth the necessite therof, or elles the impossibilite. Right so the lawe of my seruauntes so wel hath ben proued in general, that hitherto hath it not failed. wiste thou not well that all the lawe of kinde is my lawe, and by God ordained and stablished to durr by kinde reasoun, wherfore al lowe by mannes witte pursueid, ought to be vnderputte to lawe of kinde, whiche yet hath be commune to euery kindely creature, that my statutes and my lawe that been kyndely, arne generall to all peoples. Olde doinges, and by many turninges of yeres sted, and with the peoples maner proued, mowen not so lightly been defased, but newe doinges contrariauntes soche old, often causen diseases and breaken many purposes.

Yet saie I nat therfore, that ayen new mischiefe, men should not ordained a newe remedye, but alway looke it contrary not the olde, no ferther than the malice stretcheth. Than folowethit, the olde doinges in loue han been vniuersall, as for moste exploite for the sted: wherfore I wold not yet that of my lawes nothinge be adnulled.

But thanne to thy purpose, soche tangelers

gelers and lookers, and waiters of games, if thei thinke in ought they mowe dere, yet lowe wel alway, and sette hem at nought, & lette thy porte been lowe in euery wightes presence, and redie in thine herte to maintenine that thou hast begone, and a stedfast the same with meknesse in wordes, and thus with sleight shalte thou surmounte and dequace the yuell in their hertes. And wisedome yet is to seme blye other while there a manne woll fight. Thus with soche thynges, the tonges of yuell shal been stilled: els fully to graunte thy full meaning, forsothe euer was and euer it shall be, that mine enemies ben a ferde to trust to any fighting: and therfore haue thou no cowardes herte in my seruice, no more thanne somtime thou haddest in the countrarye, for if thou dredest soche iangliers thy viage to make: vnderstand wel, that he that dredeth any rain to lowe his cornes, he shall haue thin bernes, also he that is a ferde of his clothes, let him daunce naked. Who nothinge vndertaketh, and namelie in my seruice, nothinge atcheueth. After great stormes the wether is often mery and smothe. After moche clatering, there is mokill rowninge: thus after iangling wordes cometh huishte, peace and be still. O good lady (q I than) se now yow seuen yere passed and more, haue I grafted and groubed a vine, and with al the waies that I coude, I sought to a fede me of the grape, but fruit haue I non founde. Also I haue this seuen yere serued Labā to awedded Rachel his doughter, but blere eyed Lia is brought to my bedde, whiche alway engendreth my tene, and is full of children in tribulacion and in care: and although the slippinges and hyssynges of Rachell shulde seme to me swete, yet is the so baraine, that gladnesse ne ioye by no way wol springe, so that I may wepe with Rachel, I may not been counsailed with solace, sithen issue of min hertely desire is failed. Nowe than I pray that to me sone fredome grace, in this sight yere, this eyghteth mow to me bothe by hynreske and masseday after these seuen werke daies of trauail, to folow the christē lawe: and what euer ye do ells, that thilke Margarite be holden so lady in your priuy chambre, that she in this case, to none other person be cōmitted. Lobe thā (q she) in this cace to none other persone be committed: Looke than (q she) thou perseuer in my seruice, in whiche I haue thee grounded, that thilke shorne in thy enemies mowe this on thy person be not sothed: lo this man begā to edifie, but for his foundement is bad, to the ende maye he it nat bring. For meknesse in countenaunce, with a manly herte in dedes and in longe continuaunce, is the conisance of my liuery, to al my retinue beliuered. What wenist thou ẏ me lyst auaūce soche persones as louen the firste sittinges at feestes, the highest stoles in churches, & in hal, loutinges of peoples in marketes & faires, vnstedfaste to byde in one place any while togider, wenyng his owne wit more excellent than other, scorning al maner deuise but his owne: Nay nay god wot, these shul nothing partē of my bylle. Truely my maner here to forn hath ben, worship with my bliss, Lions in the felde, and lambes in chambre, Egles at assaute, and maidens in halle, fores in counsaile, stil in their dedes, and their protection is graunted redy to ben a bridge, and their baner is arered like wolues in the felde. Thus by these wayes shul men ben auaūced: ensample of Dauid that from heping of shepe, was drawen vp in to the order of kingly gouernaunce, and Jupiter from a bole to been Europes fere, & Juli' Cesar frō the lowest degre in Rome, to be maister of al erthly prices, and Eneas from hell, to be kynge of the countre there Rome is now stonding. And so to the I say thy grace by bering theraster, maye set the in soch plight that no iangling may greue the lest tucke of thy hemmes, that are their ianghes, is nought to counte at a cresse in thy disauauntage.

Lieue (q she) hath the people in this worlde desired to haue had great name in worthinesse, and hated soule to here any fame, and that is one of the obiections thou alegest to be ayen thin hertely desire, ye forsothe (q I) and that so comenly the people wol lye & bringe aboute soche enfame. Now (q she) if men with lesinges put on the enfame, we nest thy self thereby ben enpeired: that wening is wrong, se why, for as moch as they lien thy merite encreaseth, and make the ben more worthy to be that knowē of the the sothe, by what thing thou art apeired, that in so mokil thou arte encreased of thy beloued frendes: and sothely a wounde of thy frend to the lasse harme, ye sir, and better than a false hyssynge in disceiuable glo-singe of thin enemy, aboue that than to be wel with thy frende maketh soch enfame. Ergo thou art encreased and nat apeired. Lady (q I) somtyme yet it a man be in disease, the estimacio of the enuious people ne loketh nothing to desertes of men, ne to the merites of theyr doynges, but onely to the auenture of fortune, and thereafter they yeuen their sentence. And some loken the voluntary wil in his herte, and therafter telleth his iudgemēt, not taking hede to reason ne to the qualyte of the doing, as thus. If a man be riche and fulfilde with worldly welfulnesse, some cōmenden it, and saine it is so lente by iustice cause, & he that hath aduersite, they saine he is weshed, & hath deserued thilke anoye. The contrarye of these thinges some men holden also, and sain that to the rich, prosperite is puruaied in to his confusion, and vpon this matter, many autorites, of many and great wittrd clerkes they alegen. And some men sayne, though all good estimacion forsaken folke that han aduersite, yet is it merite and encrease of hys blisse, so that these purposes arne so wonderful in vnderstondinge, that trewly for mine aduersite, nowe I not how the sentence of the indifferent people wyll iudgen my fame. Therefore (q he) if anye wight shulde yeue a trew sententе on soche matters, the cause of the disease maist thou se well, vnderstande therupon after what ende it drawethe, that is to sayne good or bade, so ought it to haue his fame, or by goodnesse enfame by baddenesse: for euery reasonable persone, and namelye of a wise man, his witte ought not without reason to forne herde, sodainly in a matter to iuge. After the sawes of the wise, thou shalt not inge ne deme to forne thou knowe. Lady (q I) ye remembre wel that in moste laude and praising of certain saintes in holy church, is to rehearsen their conuersacion frome badde in to good, and that is so rehersed, as by a perpetuall myrour of remembraunce in wurthiping of tho saintes, and good ensample to other misdoers in amendement. How turned the Romaine zedeories fro the Romaines, to be with Hanibal ayenst his kind nacion: And afterwardes him seming the Romains to be at the next degre of confusion, turned to his olde alies, by whole witte after was Hanibal discōfited. wherfore to enfourme you lady, the maner, why I meane, se now in my youth I was drawe to be assentaūt, and in my mghtes helping to certaine coniuracions, and other great matters of rulynge of citezins, and thilke thinges been my drawers in, and eritours to tho matters werne so painted and coloured, that at the prime face, me semed them noble and glorious to al the people: I than wenynge myhell merite, haue deserued in furthering and maintenaunce of tho thinges, besyed and laboured with all my diligence, in werkinge of thilke matters to the ende. And trewly lady to tell you the sothe, me rought lytell of any hate of the mighty senatours in thilke cite, ne of communes malice, for two thilles: One was I had com forte to ben in soche plite, that both profite were to me & to my frendes. Another was, for commen profite in comunaltie, is not but peace and tranquilite, with iust gouernaunce proceden from thilke profite, sithē by counsaile of mine in witte, me thought the first painted thinges, malice and eupll meaninge, withouten any good auailinge to anye people: and of tyrannye purposed, and so for pure sorowe and of my medlyng, and badde infame that I was in ronne, tho teares lashed out of myne eyen, were thus awaye washe, thanne the vnder hydde malice and the rancoure of purposinge enmie forncaste and ymagined, in distruction of mobil people, shewed so openly, that had I been blinde, with mine handes all the circoumstaunce I might wel haue feled.

Nowe than tho persones that soch thinges haue caste to rdreste, for wrathe of my firste meddlynge, shopen me to dwel in this pynande prison, tyll Lachases my threde no lenger wolde tweyne. And euer I was sought, if me lyste to haue grace of my lyfe, and frenesse of that prison, I shulde openly confesse howe peace might been endused to enden al the firste rauncours. It was fullie supposed, my knowinge to be ful in tho matters. Than lady I thought that euery man that by any waye of ryght, ryghtfully done, maye helpe anye comune helpe to been saued, whiche thing to kepe aboue all thinges I am holde to mayntaine, and namely in distroiyng of a wrong, al shulde I therthrough enpeche myne owne fere, if he wer gilty, and to do mildede assentaunt. And maister ne frende maye nought auaile, to the soule of hym that in fallesnesse deyeth, sallo that I nere desired wrathe of the people, ne indignacio of the worthy, for nothing

nothinge that euer I wrought or dyd, in anye doinges my selfe els, but in the maintenaunce of these forsaid errours, and in hydyng of the priuities thereof.

And that al the peoples hertes holding on the errours side, weren blinde and of elde so forforthe begiled, that debate and strife they maintained, and in disturbacion on that other side, by whiche cause the peace, that moste in cōmunaltie should be desired, was in pointe to be broken and adnulled. Also the cytye of London, that is to me so dere & swete, in whiche I was forth growen and more kindely loue haue I to that place, thā to any other in yerth, as euery kindly creature hath full appetite to that place of his kindely engendrure, and to wilne reste and peace in ỳ stede to abyde: thilke peace should thus there haue ben broken, and of al wise it is commended and desired. For knowe thynge it is, all menne that desiren to comen to the parfite peace euerlasting, muste the peace by God commended, both maintaine and kepe. This peace by angels voice was confirmed, our God entryng in this worlde. This as for his testament, he lefte to al his frendes, when he retourned to the place from whence he came: This his Apostell admoneseth to holden, without whiche man parfitly may haue none insight. Also this God by his comynge, made not peace alone betwene heuenly and yerthely bodies, but also among vs on yearth, so he peace confirmed, that in one heed of loue, one body we should perfourme. Also I remembre well howe the name of Athenes was rather after the God of peace, than of batalle, shewyng that peace moste is necessarie to communalties and cytyes. I than so stered by al these wayes to forme nēpned, declared certain pointes in this wise. First that thilke persons that hadden me drawē to their purposes, and me not witting the priuy entent of their meanings, drawen also the feoble witted people, that haue none insight of gubernatile prudēce, to clamure and to crie on matters that they stired, and vnder pointes for cōmune auauntage, they embolded the passike, to take in the actiues doyng, and also stired innocentes of cōning to crie after thinges, whiche (ỳ they) maye not stand but we bē executours of tho matters, and auctorite of execucion, by comen election to vs be deliuered, and that muste enter by strength of your maintenaunce, for we out of such degree put, oppressiō of these olde hinderers shal againe surmounten and putten you in soche subiection, that in endlesse woe shul complaine. The gouernementes (ỳ thei) of your citee left in the handes of forcencious citezins, shal bring in pestilence and distruccion to you goodmenne. and therfore let vs haue the comune administracion to abate soche quelles. Also (ỳ they) it is worthy the good to cōmende, and thy gilty desertes to chastice. There ben citezins many for ferde of execucio that shall be doone, for extorcions by hem committed ben euer more ayenst these purposes, and al other good meninges. Neuer ỳ latter ladie, trewly the meaninge vnder these wordes, was fully to haue apeched the mighty senatours, whiche hadden heauy herte for the misgouernaunce that they seen. And so lady, whan it fel that free election, by great clamour of moche people, for great disease of misgouernaunce so feruently stoden in her election, that they hem submitted to euery maner face, rather than haue suffered the maner and the rule of the hated goueruours, notwithstandyng that in the cōtrary beldē moch comune meiny, that haue no consideracion, but onelye to voluntary lustes withouten reason. But than thilke gouernour so forsaken, fainnge to forme his vndoinge for misrule in his time, hope to haue letted thilke election, & haue made a newe him selfe to haue bene chosen, and vnder that mokyl rore haue arered. These thinges lady knowen amonge the princes, and made open to the people, draweth in amendement, that euery degree shal bene ordained to stande there as he shulde, and that of errours coming herafter, mē may lightly to forme hande puruaye remedye, in tyys wise, pace and rest to be furthered and hold. Of the which thinges ladie, thilke persons broughten in answer to forme their most soueraine iudge, not coarted by painnge dures openlye knowlegeden, and alled therof grace, so that apertely it preueth my wordes ben soche without forginge of leasinges.

But nowe it greueth me to remēbre these diuers sentences, in tanging of these thyyy people: certes me thinketh they oughten to maken for that a sothe maie be knowe. For my trouth and my conscience bere witnesse to me bothe, that this knowing for he haue I saide for no harme, ne malyce of tho persones, but onely for trouth of my sacrement in my leigeaunce, by whiche I was charged on my kinges behalfe. But ſee ye not nowe lady, how the felonous thoughtes of this people, and couins of wicked men, conſpiren ayen my ſothfaſt trouth. Se ye not euery wight that to theſe erronious opinions, were aſſentaunts helpes to the noiſe, and knewen all theſe thinges better than I my ſelue, apparayled to fynden newe frendes, and cleapen me falſe, and ſtudyen howe they mowen in her mouthes werſe plyte nempne. O God what maye this be, that thylke folke which that in tyme of my mayntenaunce, and whan my might auailed to ſtreth to the forſaid matters, tho me commended, and paue me name of trouth, in ſo manye folde meaneres, that it was nighe in euery wightes eare, there as any of thylke people weren: and on the other ſyde, thylke companie ſomtyme paſſed, ye vpynge me name of badde loos. Nowe bothe tho peoples turned the good in to badde, & badde in to good, whiche thing is wonder, that they knowing me ſaiyng but ſoth arne nowe tempted to reply her olde prayſinges, and knowen me well in all doinges to ben trewe, and ſaine openly that I falſe haue ſaid many thinges. And they aleged nothinge me to ben falſe or vntrewe, ſaue thilke mater knowleged by the parties hē ſelfe: and God wot other mater is none. Ye alſo lady knowe theſe thinges for trewe, I auaunte not in praiſing of my ſelfe, therby ſhulde I ſele the precious ſecre of my conſcience. But ye ſe well that falſe opinion of the people for my trouthe, in tellinge out of falſe conſpired maters, and after the iudgement of theſe clerkes I ſhulde not hide the ſoth of no maner perſon, maiſter ne other, wherefore I wolde not drede, were it put in the conſideracion of trewe and of wyſe. And for comers hereafter ſhullen fully out of den were, all the ſothe knowe of theſe thinges in acte, but as they werne, I haue put it in ſcripture, in perpetuel remēdrance of true meanig. For treuly lady me ſemeth, that I ought to beare the name of trouth, that for the loue of right wiſeneſſe haue thus me ſubmitten: But nowe than the falſe fame whiche that clerkes faine flieth as faſte as dothe the fame of trouthe, ſhall ſo wide ſprede, til it be brought to the iewel that I of meane, and ſo ſhall I ben hindred withouten any meaſure of trouthe.

Than gan Loue ſadlye me beholde, and ſaide in a chaunged voyce, lower than ſhe hadde ſpoken in any tyme. Faine wolde I (q ſhe) that thou were holpen, but haſt thou ſaid any thinge, whiche thou might not prouen? Parde (q I) the perſons euery thinge as I haue ſaid, han knowleged hem ſelfe. Yea (q ſhe) but what yf they hadden nated, how woldeſt thou haue mainteined it. Sothelye (q I) it is well wiſte bothe amongeſt the greateſt, and other of the realme, that I profered my body ſo largely in to prouinge of tho thinges, that Mars ſhuld haue iudged thende: but for ſothneſſe of my wordes they durſt not to thilke iudge truſt. Nowe certes (q ſhe) aboue all fames in this world, the name of marcyal doynges moſte pleaſen to ladies of my lore, but ſythē thou were redy, and thine aduerſaires in thy preſence refuſed thilke doynge, thy fame ought to be ſo borne, as it in ded it had take to the ende. And therfore euery wight that anye droppe of reaſon hath, and heareth of the infame, for theſe thinges hath this anſwere to ſaye: trewly thou ſaideſt for thyne aduerſaries thy wordes affirmed. And yf thou haddeſt lied, yet are they diſcōfited, the prife leaned on thy ſide, ſo that fame ſhall holde downe infame, he ſhall bringe vpon none half. What greueth thee thine enemy to faine their owne ſhame, as thus: We arn diſcomfited, and yet oure quarell is trewe. Shall not the loos of thy frendes, ayenward dequace thilke enfame, and ſay they graunted a ſothe without a ſtroke or fighting. Many men in batail ben diſcomfited and ouercome in a right full quarell, that is goddes priuy iudgement in heauen: but yet although the partie be poldē, he may w wordes ſay his quarell is trew, and to yelde him in the contrarie for drend of dethe, he is compelled, and he that graunteth and no ſtroke hath feled, he may not crepe away in this wiſe, by none excuſacion. Indifferent folke will ſay, ye who is trew, who is falſe him ſelf knowiegeth tho thinges. Thus in euery ſide fame fleweth to the good and no badde. But yet (q I) ſome will ſaye I ne ſhuld for no death haue diſcouered my maiſtreſſe, and ſo by vnkindnes they wol knette infame to purſue me aboute: thus enemies of wil in manifold maner wol ſeche priuie ſerpentines queintiſes, to quenche and di-

stroye benime of many businesses, the light of truthe, to make hartes to murmoure a-gest my persone, to haue me in haine, without any cause. Nowe (q she) heare me a fewe wordes, and thou shalt fully been answered, I trowe. Me thinketh (q she) right nowe by thy woordes, that Sacramente of swearyng, that is to saie, charging by othe was one of the causes, to make thee discouer, the malicious ymaginacions tofore nempned, euery othe by knittyng of copulacion, must haue these lawes. That is true iudgemente and right wisenesse, in whiche thyng, if any of these lacke, the othe is iturned into the name of periurie: then to make a true sermente, muste nedes these thynges followe, for ofte tymes a man to saie sothe, but iudgement and iustice folowe, he is forswone: ensample of Herodes for holdyng of his serment, was dampned.

Also to saie truthe right fulliche, but in iudgement otherwhile is forboden, by that all sothes be not to saine. Therefore in iudgement, in truthe and right wisenelles, is euery creature bounden vp paine of periurie full knowyng to make, tho it were of his owne persone, for drede of sinne, after that worde better is it to dey, then liue false, and all would peruerted people, false reporte make in vnkindnes, in that entēt thy fame to reise, when light of truthe in these matters is forthe sprōgen, and openly published emong commons, then shall not soche darh enfame dare appeare, for pure shame of his falsnes, as some men there been that their owne enfame, can none otherwise boide, or els excuse, but be hindring of other mennes fame, whiche that by none other cause, clepen other men fals, but for with their own falsnesse, mowen thei not been auaunsed, or els by false sclandryng woordes, other men bendin their owne true sclaunder, to make seme the lasse, for if soche men wouldē their yen of their conscience reuoluen, shoulden seen the same sentence, thei legen on other, spring out of their sides, with so many brāches, it wer impossible to nōber. The which therfore maie it be saied in that thing, this man thou demest, therein thy self thou condēpnest. But (q she) vnderstande not by these woordes, that thou wene me saie thee, to bee worthie scläder, for any matter tofore written, truly I would witnesse the cōtrary, but I saie that the beames of sclandring woords maie not been dooen awaie, till the daie of dome. For how should it not yet emonges so great plētie of people, been many shrewes, sithen when no mo but eighte persones, in Noes ship wer closed, yet one was a shrewe, and scorned his father. These things (q she) I trowe, shewen that false fame is not to drede, ne of wise persones to accepte, and namely not of thy Margarite, whose wisedome hereafter I think to declare, wherfore I wot well soche thyng shall not her astert, then of vnkindnesse, thine oth hath thee excused at the full. But now if thou wouldest not greue, me liste a fewe thinges to shewe. Saie on (q I) what ye wol, I trow ye mean but trouthe, and my profite in tyme commyng. Truelie (q she) that is sothe, so thou con wel kepe these woordes, and in the inrest secrete chamber of thine harte, so faste hem close, that thei neuer flette, then shalte thou finde hem auailyng. Looke now what people haste thou serued, whiche of hem all in tyme of thine exile euer thee refreshed, by the value of the lest coigned plate, that wal heth in money. Who was sorie, or made any rueth for thy disease? If thei hadden gotten their purpose of thy misauenture, sette thei not an haw. Lo whē thou wer enprisoned, how faste thei hied in helpe of thy deliueraunce. I wene of thy death, thei yeue but lite: Thei looked after no thyng, but after their owne lustes. And if thou list, saie the sothe, all that meinie that in this brigge thee broughten, lokeden rather after thyne helpes, then thee to haue releued.

Owen not yet some of hem money for his commons? Paidest not thou for some of her dispences, till thei were tourned out of Selande? Who yaue thee euer ought, for anyridyng thou maidest? yet pardie, some of hem tooken money for thy Chamber, and putte tho pens in his pourse, vnwetyng of the renter.

Lo, for which a companie thou medlest, that neither thee, ne thē self mighten helpe of vnkindenesse, nowe thei beare the name, that thou supposest of hē for to haue. What might thou more haue doen, then thou diddest, but if thou wouldest in a false quarell, haue been a stinking martire? I wene thou fleddest as long as thou might, their prinitie to counsaile, whiche thyng thou helest lenger then thou shouldest. And thilke that ought thee money, no penuie would paie, thei wend thy returne had been an impossible. How might thou better haue hē proued but thus in thy nedie diseases? Now haste thou ensample, for whō thou shalt meddle: truelie this lore is worth many goodes.

Ofte gā loue to lerne me these wordes, thinke on my spech, for truelie here after, it woll dooe thee likyng, and how so euer thou see Fortune shape her whele to tourne, this meditacion by no waie reuolue. For certes fortune sheweth her fairest, when she thinketh to begile. And as me thought here tofore, thou saidest thy loos in loue, for thy rightwisenesse ought to be raised, should bee alowed in tyme comyng. Thou might in loue so thee haue, that loos & fame shull so been raised, that to thy frendes comforte, and sorowe to thin enemies, endlesse shul endure.

But if thou were that one Shepe emonges the hundred, were luste in deserte, and out of the waie had erred, and nowe to the floche art restored, the Shepherde hath in thee no ioye, and thou ayen to the Forreste tourne. But that right as the sorowe and anguishe was greate, in tyme of thyne out waie goyng, right so ioye and gladnes shall bee doubled, to seen thee conuerted, and not as Lothes wife ayen lookyng, but hoole counsaile with the Shepe folowyng, and with them grasse and herbes gader. Neuer the later (q she) I saie not these thynges for no wantruste that I haue, in suppolyng of thee otherwise then I should. For truelie I wote wel, that now thou art sette in soche a purpose, out of whiche thee liste not to part. But I saie it, for many men ther been that to knowyng of other mennes doyngs, setten all their cure, and lightly desiren the badde to clatter, rather then the good, and haue no will their owne maner to amende. Thei also hate of old rancour lightly haue, and there that soche thing abideth, sodainly in their mouthes procedeth, the habundaunce of the harte, and wordes as stones, stones out throwe. Wherfore my counsaile is euermore, openlie and apertlie, in what place thou sit, counterplete therrours and meaninges, in as ferre as thou hem wistest false, and leaue for no wight, to make hem be knowe in euery bodies eare, & be alwaie pacient, and vse Jacobes wordes, what so euer menne of thee clappen; I shall sustain my ladies wrathe, whyche I haue deserued, so long as my Margarite hath right wised my cause. And certes (q she) I witnesse my self, if thou thus cōuerted, sorowest in good meanyng in thyne harte, wolt from all vanitie partitely departe, in consolacion of al good pleasaunce of that Margarite, which that thou desirest after wil of thine hart, in a maner of a mothers pitie, shull fullie accept thee into grace. For right as thou rentest clothes in open light, so openlie to sowe hem at his worshippe, withouten reproofe commended. Also, right as thou were ensample of moche folde errour, right so thou musse bee ensample of manyfolde correccion, so good fauour to forgoyng all errour destroyng, causeth diligente loue, with many plaited praisynges to followe, and then shall all the firste errours, make the followyng worshippes, to seme hugelie encreased, blache and white sette togider, euery for other more semeth, and so doth euery things contrarie in kinde. But infame that goeth alwaie tofore, and praising worship by any cause folowyng after, maketh to rise thilke honour, in double of wealth, and that quicheth the spotte of the firste enfame. Why weneste I saie these thynges, in hinderyng of thy name? Naie naie God wotte, but for pure encreasyng worshippe, thy rightwisenesse to commende, and thy trouthe to seme the more. Wosse not well thy self, that thou in forme of makyng, passeth not Adame, that eate of the apple. Thou passeth not the stedfastnes of Noe, that eatyng of the grape become dronke. Thou passest not the chastitie of Lothe, that laie by his doughter. Ne the nobley of Abraham, whom God reproued by his pride. Also Dauides meknesse, whiche for a woman made virie bee slawe. what also Hector of Troie, in whom no defaute might bee founde, yet is he reproued that he ne had with māhod, not suffred the warre begon: ne Paris to haue went into Grece, by whom ganne all the sorowe: for truelie hym lacketh no venime of priuie cōsentyng, whiche ỳ openly leaueth a wrong to withstaie. Lo eke an olde prouerbe, emōg many other. He that is stille, semeth as he graunted.

Now by these ensamples, thou might fully vnderstand, that these thinges been writ to your learning, and in right wisnes of tho persones, as thus: To euery wight his defaut committed, made goodnesse afterwardes doen, be the more in reuerence, and in open shewyng, for ensample is it not song in holy holy churche. Lo how necessarie was Idās sinne, Dauid the kyng gatte Salomon the king, of her that was Uries wife. Truelie for reprofe, is none of these thynges writte: right so tho I rehearse thy before deede, I repreue thee neuer the more, ne for no villany of thee, ar thei rehearsed, but for worship so thou cōtinue well hereafter, and for profite of thy self, I rede thou on hem thinke.

Then saied I right thus. Ladie of vnitie and accorde, enuie and wrathe lurken, there thou comeste in place, ye weten well your selue, and so dooen many other, that while I administred the office of common dooyng, as in rulyng of the stablichementes emonges the people, I defouled neuer my conscience for no maner deede, but euer by wit & by counsail of the wisest, the matters weren drawē, to their right endes. And thus truly for you ladie, I haue desired soche cure, and certes in your seruice was I not idle, as far as soch doing of my cure stretcheth. That is a thing (q she) that may drawe many harts of noble, and voyce of common into glorie, and fame is not but wretched and fickle.

Alas, that mankinde coueteth in so leud a wise, to bee rewarded of any good deede, sithe glorie of fame in this worlde, is not but hinderyng of glorie in tyme commyng. And certes (q she) yet at the hardeste soche fame into heauen, is not the yearthe but a centre, to the cercle of heauen. A pricke is wonder little, in respecte of all the cercle, and yet in all this pricke, maie no name be borne, in maner of persyng, for many obstacles, as waters and wildernesse, & straunge languages, and not onelie names of menne been stilled, and holden out of knowleging, by these obstacles, but also cities and realmes of prosperitie, been letted to be knowe, and their reason hindred, so that thei mow not been perfitely in mennes proper vnderstandyng. Howe should then the name of a singuler lōdenoys, passe the glorious name of London, whiche by many it is commended, and by many it is lacked, and in many mo places in yearth not knowen, then knowen: for in many countrees, little is Londō in knowyng, or in speache, and yet emong one maner of people, maie not soche fame in goodnesse come, for as many as praisen, cōmonly as many lacken. Fie then on soche maner fame, slepe and suffre him that knoweth priuitie of hartes, to deale soche fame in thilke place, there nothing ayenst a sothe shal neither speake, ne dare apere, by atturney, ne by other maner. How many greate named, and many greate in worthinesse losed, han bee tofore this tyme, that now out of memorie are slidden, and cleanly forgetten, for defaute of writynges, and yet scriptures for great elde, so been defased, that no perpetualtie maie in hem been iudged. But if thou wolt make cōparison to euer, what hope maiest thou haue in yearthly name, it is a faire likenesse, a pees or one graine of wheat, to a thousande shippes full of corne charged. What nomber is betwene the one and the other, and yet mowe bothe thei bee nombred, and ende in reckenyng haue. But truely al that maie be nombred, is nothing to reckē, as to thilke that maie not bee nōbred, for olde thinges ended is made comparison, as one little, an other greate, but in thynges to haue an ende, and an other no ende, soche comparison maie not bee founden. Wherfore in heauen to been losed, with God hath none ende, but endlesse endureth, and thou canste nothyng doen arighte, but thou desire the rumour thereof bee healed, and in euery wightes eare, and that dureth but a pricke, in respecte of the other. And so thou seeheste reward of folkes, smale woordes, and of vain praisynges. Truelie therein thou leeseste the guerdone of vertue, and leseste the greateste valour of conscience, and vphap thy renome euerlastyng. Therefore boldly renome of fame, of the yearth should be hated, and fame after death should be desired, of werkes of vertue asketh guerdoning, and the soule causeth all vertue. Thā the soule deliuered out of prison of yearthe, is moste worthie soche guerdone emong, to haue in the euerlastyng fame, and not the bodie, that causeth all mannes euils.

Of twey thynges art thou answered, as me thinketh (q Loue) and if any thyng be in doubte in thy soule, shewe it foorthe, thyne ignorannce to cleare, and leaue it for no shame. Certes (q I) there ne is no bodie in this worlde, that aught could saie by reasō, ayenst any of your skilles, as I leue, and by my wit now sele I well, that euill speakers, or bearers of enfame, may little greue or let my purpose, but rather by soche thing my quarell to bee forthered. Yea (q she) and it is proued also, that the ilke iewell in my

keping, shall not there through bee stered, of the lest moment that might be imagined. That is sothe (q I). Well (q she) then leneth there, to declare that thy insufficiaunce, is no maner letting, as thus, for that she is so worthie, thou shouldest not climbe so high, for thy moebles and thine estate arn voided thou thinkeste fallen in soche miserie, that gladnes of thy pursute, woll not on thee discende. Certes (q I) that is sothe: right soche thought is in mine harte, for commonlie it is spoken, and for an olde prouerbe it is ledged: he that heweth to hie, with chippes he maie lese his sight. Wherefore I haue been about in al that euer I might, to studie wayes of remedie, by one side or by an other. Now (q she) God forbede, ere thou sehe any other doynges, but soche as I haue learned thee in our restyng whiles, and soche herbes as been planted in our Gardins. Thou shalte well vnderstande, that aboue man is but one God alone. How (q I) han men to forne this tyme, trusted in writtes & chauntementes, and in helpes of Spirites, that dwellen in the aire, and thereby thei han getten their desires, where as firste for all his manlie power he daunced behinde.

O (q she) fie on soche matters, for truelie that is sacrilege, and that shal haue no sort with any of my seruauntes, in myne syen shal soche thing not be loked after. How often is it commanded by these passed wise, that to one God shall men serue, and not to Goddes. And who that liste to haue mine helpes, shall aske non help of foule spirites. Alas, is not man maked semblable to God: woste thou not well, that all vertue of liuelihe werkyng by Goddes purueighaunce, is vnderput to reasonable creature in yerth is not euery thyng a thilshalte Gode Made burome to mannes contemplacion, vnderstandyng in heauen, and in yearthe, and in helle. Hath not manne beyng with stones, soule of weryng with trees and herbes.

Hath he not soule of feling, with beastes fisches, and foules, and he hath soule of reason, and vnderstãding with Angels, so that in him is knitte all maner of liuinges, by a reasonable proporcion. Also man is made of all the fower Elementes. All vniuersitie is rekened in him alone: he hath vnder God principalitie aboue al thinges. Now is his soule here, now a thoulande mile hẽce, now farre, now nigh, now highe, now lowe, as farre in a moment, as in mountenaunce of ten winter, and all this is in mannes gouernaunce and disposicion. Then sheweth it, that menne been liche vnto Goddes, and childzen of moste height. But nowe sithen all thynges vnderput, to the wille of reasonble creatures, God forbede any man to win that Lordship, and alke helpe of any thyng lower then hym selfe, and then namelie of foule thynges innominable.

Nowe then, why shouldest thou wene to loue to high, sithen nothyng is thee aboue, but God alone. Truelie I wote well, that the ilke iewell is in a maner, euen in line of degree, there thou art thy seluc, and nought aboue, saue thus. Angell vpon Angell, man vpon man, and Deuill vpon Deuill, han a maner of Soueraintie, and that shall cease at the daie of Dome: and so I saie, though thou bee put to serue thilke iewell, duryng thy life, yet is that no seruage of vnderputyng, but a maner of trauailing pleasance, to conquere and get that thou haste not.

I set nowe the hardest in my seruice, now thou deidest for sorowe, of wantyng in thy desires: Truelie all heauenlie bodies, with one voyce shull come, and make melodie in thy coming, and saie welcome our fere, and worthie to enter into Jupiters ioy, for thou with mighte haste ouercome deathe, thou wouldest neuer flitte out of thy seruice, & we all shull nowe praie to the Goddes, rowe by rowe, to make the ilke Margarite, that no routhe had in this persone, but vnkindely without comforte lette thee deie, shall beset her self in soch wise, that in yearth for part of vengeaunce, shall she noioye haue in loues seruice: and when she is dedde, then shal her soule been brought vp into thy presence, and whider thou wilte chese, the ilke soule shal been committed. Or els after thy death, anone all the forsaid heauenlie bodies by one accorde, shall bee nommen from thilke perle, all the vertues that firste her were taken, for she hath hem forfeited, by that on thee my seruauntc, in thy liue she would not suffer to worche all vertues, withdrawen by might of the high bodies: why then shouldest thou wene so any more. And if thee liste to looke vpon the lawe of kinde, and with order, whiche to me was ordained, sothlie none age, none ouertournyng tyme, but hitherto had no tyme ne power, to chaunge the weddyng, ne that knotte to vnbinde of two hartes, through one assente in my presence, togither accorden to endure till death hem departe. What trowest thou euery ideot, wot the meanyng and the priue entente of these thinges? Thei wene for soth, that soche accorde maie not be, but the Rose of maidenhede bee plucked, dooe waie dooe waie, thei knowe nothyng of this: for consente of twoo hartes a lone, maketh the fastenyng of the knot, neither lawe of kinde ne mannes Lawe, determineth neither the age, ne the qualitie of persones, but onelie accorde betwene thilke twain. And truelie, after tyme that soche accorde, by their consent in harte, is enseled and put in my tresorie, emonges my priuie thinges: then ginneth the name of spousaile, and although thei breaken forward bothe, yet soche matter enseled, is kepte in remembraunce for euer. And se nowe that spouses haue þ name mon after accorde, though the Rose be not take. The Aungell bade Joseph, take Mari his spouse, and to Egipt wende: Lo she was cleped spouse, and yet tolorne ne alter, neither of hem bothe meante, nd fleshely luste knowe, wherefore the wordes of trouth accepden, that my seruantes shoulden forsake bothe father and mother, and be adherand to his spouse, and thei twoo in vnitie of one flesshe, shoulden accorde. And this wise twoo that werne firste, in a little maner disacordaunte, higher that one, and lower that other, been made euenliche in gree to stonde.

But nowe to enforme thee, that ye been liche Goddes, these clerkes saine, and in determinacion shewen, that thre thinges hauen the names of Goddes been cleped, that is to saine: Man, Deuill, and Images, but yet is there but one God, of whom all goodnesse, all grace, and all vertue cometh, and he is louyng and true, and euerlasting, and prime cause of all beyng thynges: but men been goddes, louing and true, but not euerlasting, and that is by adopcion, of the euerlasting God. Deuils been Goddes, stirring by a maner of liuyng, but neither been thei true, ne euerlasting, and their name of godlihede, thei han by vsurpacion, as the Prophete saieth: All Goddes of Gentiles, that is to saie, Painims, are Deuils. But Images been Goddes by nuncupacion, and thei been neither liuing ne true, ne euerlasting: After these woordes, thei clepen Goddes Images, wrought with mennes handes.

But nowe reasonable creature, that by adoption alone, art to the greate God euerlasting, and thereby thou art God cleaped: set thy fathers maners so entre thy wittes, that thou might folowe, in as moche as longeth to thee thy fathers worship, so that in nothing, thy minde from his will decline, ne from his nobley pouertie. In this wise if thou werche, thou art aboue al other thinges, saue GOD alone, and so saie no more thine harte, to serue in to hie a place.

Tullie haue I nowe declarrd, thin estate to be good, so thou followe thereafter, and that the abiection first be thee aleged, i worthines of thy Margarite, shall not thee let, as it shall forther thee, & encrease thee, it is now to declare, the last obiectiõ in nothing maie greue. Yes certes (q I) bothe greue, and let muste it nedes, the contrary maie not been proued, and see now why, while I was glorious in worldlie welfulnesse, and had soch goodes in wealth, as maken men riche, tho was I drawe into compaignies that loos, prise, and name yeuen: Tho louteden blasours, tho curreiden glosours, tho welcomedē flatterers, tho worshipped thilk, that nowe deinen not to looke. Euery wight in soche yearthlie weale habundaunt, is hold noble, precious, benigne, and wise, to dooe what he shall, in any degree that men hym set, all be it that the sothe be in the contrary of all tho thinges: but he that can, ne neuer so wel him behaue, and hath vertue haboundaunte, in manyfolde maners, and be not wealthed with soche yearthlie goodes, is holde for a foole, and saied his wit is but sotted. Lo how false for auer is holde true. Lo howe true is cleaped falle, for wantyng of goodes. Also Ladie, dignitees of office, maken menne mikell comended, as thus: he is so good, wer he out, his pere should mē not find. Truelie I trowe of some soch that are so praised, were thei out ones, an other should make him so bee knowe, he should of no wise no more been loked after: but onely fooles well I wot, deliren soche newe thinges. Wherefore I wonder that thilke gouernour, out of whom alone the causes proceden, that gouernen all thinges, which that hath ordeined this worlde, in werkes of the kindly bodies so be gouerned, not with vnstedfast or happious thinge, but with rules of reason, whiche shewen the course of certain thinges: why suffreth he soche sliding chaunges, & misturnen soche noble thinges as been we men, that arne a faire perſell of the yearth, and holden the vppereſt degree vnder God of benigne thinges, as ye ſaiden right now your ſelf. Should neuer man haue been ſet in ſo worthie a place, but if his degree were ordained noble. Alas, thou that knitteſt the purueighaunce of all thynges, why looketh thou not to amenden theſe defautes: I ſee ſhrewes that han wicked maners, ſitten in chaires of downes, Lambes to punishen, there wolues ſhould been punished. Lo, vertue ſhined naturelly, for pouertie lurketh, and is hid vnder cloude: but the Mone falſe forſworne, as I know me my ſelf, for auer and yeftes hath vſurped, to ſhine by daie light, with peinture of other mennes praiſynges: & truely thilke forged light ſoulyſhould fade, were the drouth a waie of colours feined. Thus is night tourned into daie, and daie into night, winter into Sommer, and Sommer into winter, not in dede but in miſcleapyng of fooliſhe people.

Nowe (q ſhe) what weneſte thou of theſe thynges? How feleſt thou in thyne hart, by what gouernance that this cometh aboue?

Certes (q I) that wotte I neuer, but if it be, that Fortune hath graunt from aboue, to lede the ende of menne as her liketh. Thy now I ſe (q ſhe) the entent of thy meanyng: Lo, bicauſe thy worldly goodes, been fullyche diſpente, thou berafte out of dignitie of office, in which thou madeſt thy gathering, of thilke goodes, and yet diddeſt in that office, by counſaile of wiſe, any thynge were ended: and true were vnto hem, whoſe profite thou ſhouldeſt looke, and ſeeſt now many, that in the ilke herueſt made of thee mokell, and now for glosyng of other, deineth thee nought to forther, but enhaunſen falſhrewes, by witneſſyng of trouthe. Theſe thinges greueth thine harte, to ſeen thy ſelf thus abated, and then fraiſtie of manhinde ne ſetteth but litle, by the leſers of ſoche richeſſe, haue he neuer ſo mochy vertue, and ſo thou weneſt of thy iewell, to renne in diſpite, and not been accepted into grace: All this ſhall thee nothyng hinder. Now (q ſhe) firſt thou woſte well, thou loſeſt nothyng, that euer mighteſt thou chalenge for thine own: whē nature brought thee forth, come thou not naked, out of thy mothers wombe Thou haddeſt no richeſſe, and when thou ſhalt enter, into the ende of euery fleſhly bodie, what ſhalte thou haue with thee then? So euery richeſſe thou haſte, in tyme of thy liuing, nis but lent, thou might therin chalēge no propertie. And ſe now, euery thing that is a mannes owne, he maie doe therewith what hym liketh, to yeue or to keepe: but richeſſe thou plaineſt from thee loſte, if thy might had ſtretched ſo ferforthe, faine thou wouldes haue kepte, multiplied with mo other: and ſo ayenſte thy will, been thei departed from thee, wherefore thei were neuer thine. And if thou laudeſt and loueſt any wight, for he is ſtuffed with ſoche maner richeſſe, thou art in that beleue begiled, for thou weneſt thilk loue to be ſelineſſe, or eis eaſe, & he that hath loſte ſoche haps, to been vnſelie. Ye forſothe (q I). well (q ſhe) then woll I proue that vnſely, in that wiſe is to praiſe, and ſo the tother is the contrary to be lacked. Howe ſo (q I)? For vnſelie (q ſhe) begileth not, but ſheweth the entent of her worhyng. Et ecōtra. Selineſſe begileth, for in proſperitie, ſhe maketh a lape in blindneſſe, that is ſhe windeth hym to make ſorowe, when ſhe withdraweth. Wolte thou not (q ſhe) praiſe hym better, that sheweth to thee his harte, tho it be with bitāde wordes, and diſpitous, then hym that gloſeth, and thinketh in their abſence, to dooe thee many harmes. Certes (q I) the one is to cōmende, and the other to lacke and diſpiſe. Ha (q ſhe) right ſo eaſe while he lafteth, gloſeth and flattereth, & lighely voideth, when ſhe moſte pleaſauntly ſheweth, and euer in her abſence, ſhe is aboute to dooe thee tme and ſorowe in harte: But vnſelie all bee it with bitande chere, ſheweth what ſhe is, & ſo dooeth not that other, wherefore vnſelie dooeth not begile. Selineſſe diſceiueth: vnſelie put awaie doubt. That one maketh men blind, that other openeth their iyen, in ſhewyng of wretchednesſe. The one is fulloi drede, to leſe that is not his owne: That other is ſober, and maketh men diſcharged of mokell heautneſſe in burthen: The one draweth a man from very good, the other haleth him to vertue, by ỹ hokes of thoughtes. And weneſt thou not, that thy diſeaſe hath doen thee mokell more to winne then euer yet thou loſteſt? And more thā euer the contrary made thee winne. Is not a great good to thy thinking, for to knowe the hartes of thy lothlaſt frendes. Parde thei been proued to the full, and the true haue diſcouered from the falſe. Truely at the goyng of thilke brotell ioye, there yede no more awaie, then the ilke that was not thyne proper:

per: he was neuer from that lightly departed, thine owen good therfore leaueth it stil with the. Nowe good (q she) for how moche wolde thou sometyme haue bought, this very knowynge of thy frendes, frome the flaterynge fyes that they gloſed, whan thou thought thy ſelfe ſely. But thou that plaineſt of loſſe in richeſſe, hast founden the moſt dere worthy thinge that thou cleapeſt vnſely, hath made the moche thing to winnen. And also for concluſioun of all, he is trend that nowe leaueth not his hert from thin helpes. And if that Margarit denieth now not to ſuffre her vertues ſhine to the wardes, wyth ſpreadinge beames, as farre or farther than if thou were ſely in worldely ioye: Trewly I ſaye not elles but she is some dele to blame.

Ah, peace (q I) and ſpeake no more of thys mine herte braketh, nowe thou touchest any ſoche wordes. I well (q she) thanne lette vs ſyngen, thou herest no more of theſe thinges at this thime

¶Thus endeth the firſt booke of the Teſtament of Loue, and here after foloweth the ſeconde.

VEry welth maye not be founde in al this world, and that is wel ſene: Lo howe in my moſte comfort, as I wende to moſt ſupoſed to haue had full anſwer of my contrary thoughtes, ſodainly it was vaniſhed. And all the workes of man faren in the ſame wiſe whan folke wenen beſte her entente for to haue, and willes to perfourme, anon chaunging of the liſt ſide to the right halue, tourneth it ſo clene in to another kind, that neuer ſhal it come to the firſte plite in doinge.

O this wrongful ſteering ſo ſoone, otherwiſed out of knowing, but for my purpoſe was at my beginninge, and ſo dureth yet, yf God of his grace tyme woll me graunt, I thinke to performe this worke, as I haue begonne in loue, after as my thinne witte, wyth inſpyracyon of him that wilneth all grace woll ſuffre. Greuouſlye God wotte haue I ſuffred a great throwe that the Romayn Empefour, whiche in bnyte of loue ſhuld accorde and euery with other, in cauſe of other to auaunce, and namely ſithe this Empire to be corrected of ſo many ſectes in hereſy, of faith, of ſeruice, of rule in loues religion. Trewly all were it but to ſhende erronious opinions, I maye it no lenger ſuffre: For many menne ther ben that ſain loue to ben in grauell and ſande, that with ſea ebbing and flowing woweth, as riches that ſodainly wanisheth. And ſome ſaine that loue ſhulde be in windy blaſtes, that ſtoundemele tourneth as a phane, and glorie of renome, whiche after luſtes of the variaunt people is areyſed or ſtilled. Many alſo wenen that in the funne & the moone, and other ſterres, loue ſhulde ben founden, for amonge all other planettes moſte ſoueraynlie they ſhinen, as dignitees in reuerence of eſtates rather than good han, and occupien. Full many alſo there ben that in okes and in huge poſtes ſuppoſen loue to ben groſſded, as in ſtregth and in might, which mowen not helpen their owne wretchednelle, whan they gunne to fal. But ſoche diuerſite of ſectes ayenſt the right full byleue of loue, theſe errours been forth ſpredde, that loues ſeruaūtes in the treue rule and ſtedfaſt faith, in no place darne apere: Thus irrecuparable ioy is went, & anoy endleſſe is entred. For no mā aright reproueth ſoche errours, but confirmen their wordes, and ſain that badde is noble good, and goodnes is badde, to whiche folke the prophet biddeth, wo without ende.

Alſo many tongues of great falſe techinges in gilinge maner, principallye in my times, not onely with wordes, but alſo with armes, loues ſeruaūts and profeſſe in his religion of trew rule, purſewen to confoun den and to diſtroyen. And for as moche as holy fathers, that our chriſten faithe aproued and ſtrengthed to the Jewes, as to men reaſonable, and of diuinite lerned, proued thilke faithe with reaſones, and with auctorites of the olde teſtamēt, and of the newe, her pertinacie to diſtroy: But to painyms, that for beeſtes & houndes wer holde to putte hem out of their errour, was myracles of god ſhewed. Theſe thinges were figured by coming of thangell to the ſhepherdes, & by the ſterre to painims kinges as who ſaith: Angel reſonable, to reaſonable creature & ſterre of miracle to people beſtial I notlearned, werne ſent to enforme. But I ouerſclerke in al my conning & with al my mightes, trewly I haue no ſothe grace in vertue of miracles, ne for no disconfite falshedes, sufficiently not auctorites alone, sithē that suche heretikes and mayntaynours of falsites. wherfore I wot well sithen that they been men, and reason is approued in hem, the clowde of errour hath her reason bewond probable reasons, whiche that catchēde wit rightfully may not with sitte. But my trauaillynge studie I haue ordeined hem, with that auctorite mysglosed by mannes reason, to graunt shall bee enduced.

Now ginneth my pēne to quake, to thinken on the sentences of the enuious people, whiche alwaye been redy, both ryder and goer to shorne and to iape this leude booke and me for rancoure and hate in their hertes they shullen so dispyse, that although my booke be leude, yet shal it ben more leude holden, and by wicked wordes in manye maner apaired. Certes me thinketh the sowne of their badde speche, right nowe is full bothe mine eares. O good precious Margarite, mine herte shulde wepe, yf I wist ye tohen hede of soche manere speche, but trewly I wotte wel in that your wysedome shall not asterte. For of God maker of kind witnesse I take, that for none enuy ne yuel haue I drawe this matter togider, but only for goodnesse to maintain, & errours in falsetes to distroy. wherfore (as I said) with reasō I thinke, thilke for said errours to distroye and dequace. These resons and soch other, yf they enduce men in loues seruice, trewe to beleue of parfite blisse, yet to full saithe in credence of desert, fully mowe they not suffise, sithen faith hath no merite of mede, whan mannes reason sheweth experience in doing. For vtterly no reason the parfite blisse of loue by no way maye make to be comprehended. Lo what is a perfell of louers ioye, parfite science in good seruice, of their desire to comprehende in bodely doinge, the liking of the soule, nat as by a glasse to haue contemplacion of tyme cominge, but thilke firste imagined and thought, after face to face in beholdynge: what hert, what reason, what vnderstandinge can make his heuen to be feled and know without assay of doinge: certes none. Sithen than of loue cometh soche fruite in blisse, and loue in him selfe is the moste amonge other vertues, as clerkes sain: The sede of soche springinge in all places, in all countreis, in all worldes shulde been sowe.

But o well awaye thilke sede is forsake, and mowen not been suffred the londe tillers to set a werke, without meddlynge of cockle, badde wedes which somtime sonnē hath caught the name of loue amonge yoiotes and badde meaning people. Neuer the latter, yet howe so it be that menne cleape thilke kinge precioselest in kinde, with manyche names, that other thinges, that the soule yeuen the ilke noble name, it sheweth well that in a maner men haue a great lysing in wurshipping of thilke name, wherfore this worke haue I writte, and to the tytled of loues name, I haue it auowed in a maner of sacrifice, that where euer it be radde, it mow in merite be the excellence of thilke name the more wex in authorite and wurshippe of takinge in hede, and to what entente it was ordained, the in seeres mowen been moued: Euery thinge to whome is owande occasion done as for his ende, Aristotle supposeth that the actes of euery thinge been in a maner his finall cause. I final cause is noblerer, or els euen as noble as thilke thinge that is finally to thilke ende, wherfore accion of thinge euerlasting is demed to be eternall, and not tempozall, sithen it is his finall cause: Right so the actes of my booke loue, and loue is noble, wherfore though my booke be leude, the cause with whyche I am stered, and for whō I ought it don, noble forsothe been bothe. But bycause that in conninge I am yonge, and canne yet but crepe, thys leude A, b, c, haue I set in to lerning, for I can not passen the tellinge of thre as yet: and yf God will in shorte time, I shall amend this leudnesse in ioynynge of silables, whiche thing for dulnesse of witte I maye not in thre letters declare. For trewly I say the goodnesse of my Magarite perle wolde yeue matter enditinge to many clerkes: certes her mercy is more to me swetter than anye lyuynges, wherfore my lyppes mowen not suffice in speaking of her ful laude and worshippe as they shuld. But who is that in knowing of the orders of heuē, and putteth his resones in the erthe: I forsothe may not with blere eyen, the shininge sonne of vertue in bright whele of this Margarite beholde, therfore as yet I maye her not discriue in vertue as I wolde. In time comming in another tretise thorow goddes grace, this sonne clerenesse of vertue to be knowe, and howe she enluminethal this day, I thinke to declare.

IN this meane while this cõfortable lady gã sing, a wonder mater of enditing in Latin, but trewly the noble colours in Rhetorike, wise knit were so craftely, that my cõning woll not stretche to remembre, but the sentence I trowe somedele haue I in minde. Certes they were wonder swete of sowne, and they were touched al in lamentacion wise, and by no werbelles of mirthe Lo thus ganne she sing in Latin, as I may construe it in our Englishe tonge.

Alas that these heuenlye bodies their light and course shewen, as nature paue hem in commaundement at the ginning of the firste age, but these thinges in fre choise of reason han none vnderstandinge: but manne that ought to passe all thynge of doinge, of right course in kinde, ouer whelmed sothenesse by wrongful tytle, and hath drawen the sterre of enuy to gon by his side that the clipes of me that shoulde be his shinande sonne, so okte is sey, that it wened thilke errour throwe hem come in, shulde been myne owne delaute. Trewly therfore I haue me withdrawe, and made my dwellynge out of lande in an yle by my selfe, in the occian closed, and yet saine there many they haue me harberowed, but God wot they faylen. These thinges me greuen to thinke, & namely on passed gladnesse, that in this worlde was wonte me disporte of highe and lowe, and nowe it is failed: they that wolden maistries me haue in thilke boundes. I heauen on high aboue Saturnes sphere, in seasonable tyme wer they loged, but nowe come queinte counsaillours that in no house woll suffre me seiourne, wherof is pite: And yet sain some that they me haue in celler with wine shed, in garnere ther corne is laide, couered with whete in sacke sowed with wol, in purse with money salte knitte, among pannes mouled in a wiche, in presse among clothes laid with riche pelure araied, in stable amonge horse and other beestes as hogges, shepe, & nete, and in other maner wise. But thou maker of light (in winkinge of thin ye the sonne is queint) wotte right well that I in trewe name was neuer thus herberowed. Somtyme to forne the sonne in the seuenth partie was smitē, I bare both crosse and mitre, to preue it were I wolde, with me the pope went a fote, and I tho was wurshiped of al holy churche, kinges baden me their crownes holden. The lawe was set as it shuld: to fore the iudge as wel that pore durst shewe his grefe as the riche, for all his money. I defended tho tailages, and was redy for the poore to pay. I made great feestes in my time, and noble songes, and maried damoselles of gentill feture, withouten golde or other rychesse. Poore clerkes for witte of schole, I sette in churches, and made soche persones to preach: and tho was seruice in holy churches honest and deuoute, in plesaunce bothe of God and of the people. But nowe the leude for simonie is auanced, and shendeth al holye churche. Now is steward for his achates, nowe is courtiour for his debates, now is eschetoure for his wrõges, nowe is iolell for his songes, persone and prouendre alone, with whiche many thrifte shulde encrease. And yet is this shrewe behinde, fre herte is forsake, & iolengeour is take. Lo it accordeth, for soche there ben that voluntarie lustes haunten in courte with ribaudrie, that til midnight and more wol playe and wake, but in the churche at matins he is behinde, for euil disposicion of his stomake: therfore he shuld eate beane breade, and so dyd his sire, his estate there with to strengthen. His aulter is broke, and lowe lithe in pointe to gone to the yerthe, but his horse must ben esly and hie to beare him ouer greate waters. His chalice poore, but he hath riche cuppes. No towaile but a shete there God shall been handeled. And on his meate borde there shall been borde clothes and towelles many paire. At masse serueth but a clergion: fiue squiers in hall. Poore chauncell, open holes in euery side: beddes of silke with tapites going al about his chambre. Poore masse booke and leude chapelaine, and broken surplice with manye an hole: good houndes and manye, to hunte after harte and hare, to fede in their feestes. Of poore men haue they great care, for they euer craue, & nothinge offren, they wolden haue hem doluen But amonge legystres there dare I not come, my doinge they saine maken hem nedie, they ne wolde for nothing haue me in town, for than wer tort & forth nought worthe an haw about, and pleasen no mē, but thilke greuous and torcious been in might and in doinge: these thinges toforne said mowe wel if men liste ryme, trewly they acorde nothinge. And for as moch as al thinges by me shuldē of right ben gouerned, I am sorye to se that gouernaunce faileth, as thus: To sene smale and low gouerne the hie, and bodies aboue. Certes that polisye is nought, it is forbode by them that of gouernaunce treaten and enformen. And right as beestly witte shulde ben subiecte to reason, so erthely power in it self, the lower shuld ben subiect to ȳ hier.

What is worthy thy body but it be gouerned with thy soule: right so litel or nought is worthe erthely power, but if regnatife prudence in heedes gouerne the smale, to whiche heedes the smal owen to obey, and suffre in their gouernaunce. But soueraine nesse ayen warde shulde thinke in this wise I am seruaunt of these creatures to me deliuered, not lord but defendour: not maister but enfourmer, not possessour but in possessyon, and to hemlyche a tree in whiche sparowes shullen stelen, here bydes to norisshe and forth bringe vnder suertie ayenst al reueinous foules and beestes, and not to be tiraunt them selfe. And than the smale in reste and quiete, by the heedes wel disposed, owen for their soueraines helth and prosperite to pray, and in other doinges, in maintenaunce thereof performe, wythouten other administracion in rule of anye maner gouernaunce. And they wit haue in hem, and grace to come to soch thinges, yet shuld they cease tyll their heedes them cleped, although profit and plesaūce shulde folowe. But trewly other gouernaūce ne other medlinge ought they not to claime, ne the heedes on hem to put. Trewly amonges colinage dare I not come, but if richesse be my meane, sothly the ꝛ other bodily goods maketh nigh colinage, ther neuer propinquite ne alyaunce in lyue was, ne shulde haue be, nere it for her medlinge maners, wherfore kindely am I not there leged. Pouert of kinred is behind, richesse suffreth him to passe: truly he saithe he come neuer of Japhetes children: wherof I am sory ȳ Japhetes children for pouert, in no linage ben rehened, ꝛ Caines children for riches be maked Japhetes heirs. Alas this is a wōder chaūge betwene tho two Noes children, sithen that of Japhetes ofspringe comeden knyghtes, and of Cain discended the line of seruage to his brothers childrē. Lo howe gentillesse ꝛ seruage as colins, both discēded out of two bretherne of one body: wherefor I say sothnesse ȳ gentilesse in kinrede maken not gētil linage in succession, without desert of a mannes own selfe. where is nowe the lyne of Alysaundrie the noble, or els of Hector of Troye? who is discended of right blode of lyne fro kinge Artour? Parde sir Perdicas, whom that kinge Alysandre made to been his heire in Grece, was of no higes blod, his dame was a tōbystere. Of what kinred been the gentils in our daies: I trow therfore if any good be in gentylesse, it is onely that it semeth a maner of necessyte be input to gentilmen, that they shulden not varien fro the vertues of their auncestres. Certes all maner lynage of men bene euen lyche in birth, for one father maker of all goodnes enformed hem al, and al mortal folke of one sede are greined. wherto auaunt men of her lynage, in colinage or in elde fathers. Loke nowe the ginning, ꝛ to god maker of mans person, there is no clerke ne no worthy in gentilesse: ꝛ he that norisheth be his contrare with vices and vnresonable lustes, and leaueth the kinde course, to whiche ende him brought forthe his brythe, trewly he is vngentil, and amonge clerkes may been nempned. And therfore he that wol been gentil, he mote daunten his flesche fro vyces ȳ causen vngentilnesse, and leaue also reignes of wicked lustes, and draw to him vertue, that in al places gentilnesse gentilmen maketh. And so speake I in femynine gendre in generall, of tho persones at the reuerence of one, whom euery wight honoureth, for her bountie an her noblesse ymade her to God so dere, that his moder she became, and she me hath had so great in worshyp, that I nil for nothinge in open declare that in any thing ayenst her secte maye so wene: for al vertue and al worthinesse of plesaunce in hem habondeth. And although I wolde any thing speake, truly I can not, I may finde in yuel of hem no maner mater.

Right with these wordes she stinte of that lamentable melodie, and I ganne with a lyuely herte to praye, if that it were lyfynge vnto her noble grace, she wolde her deine to declare me the mater that first was begōne in whiche she lefte and stinte to speake before she ganne to singe.

O (ꝛ she) this is no newe thynge to me to sene you mēne delyren after mater, whiche your selfe caused to voyde.

My good lady (ꝙ I) in whom victorye of strength is proued aboue all other thing, after the iudgement of Eldram, whose lord hyp al lignes: no ho is that right as Emperour hem cõmaundeth, whether thilke ben not womẽ, in whose likenesse to me ye apeerm. For right as man halte the principalte of al thing vnder his beinge, in the masculyne gender, and no mo genders been there but masculine, and femynyne, all the remnaunte been no genders but of grace, in familie of grammer. Right so in the femine, the women holden the vpperest degree of al thinges, vnder thilke gendre conteyned. who bringeth forth kinges, which that been lordes of see and of perthe, and al peoples of women ben borne: they norisshe hem that gratẽ vines, they make men comforte in their gladde cheres. Her sorowe is death to mannes herte. without women the being of men were impossible. They conne with their swetenesse the cruel hert ravish and make it mehe, burome, & benyng, without violence meuing. In beautie of their yen, or elles of other manere letures is all mens desires, ye more than in golde, precyous stones, eyther anye richesse. And in this degree lady your self manye hertes of men haue so bounden, that partite blisse in womankind to ben men wenen, and in nothinge els. Also lady the goodnesse, the berme of women, by propertie of discrecion, is so wel knowen, by litelnesse of malice, that desire to a good asker by no waye conne they warne, and ye thanne that woll not passe the kinde werchinge of your sectes by general discrecion, I wotte well ye woll so encline to by prayere, that grace of my requeste shal fully been graunted. Certes (ꝙ he) thus for the more parte fareth al mankinde to praye, and to crie after womans grace, and faine manie fantasies to make hertes to encline to your desires: and whan these sely womẽ frely of their kind beleuen your wordes, and wenen all be gospell the promise of your behestes, than graunt they to you their hertes, and full fyllen your lustes, wherthrough their liberte in maistership that they tofore had is thralled, and so maked souerain and to be praid, ẏ first was seruaunt, and boice of prayer bled. Anone as fulled is your luste manye of you be so trewe, that litell hede take ye of soche kindnesse, but with traisoun anone ye thinke hem begile, and let light of that thynge whiche first ye maked to you wonders dere, so what thig to womẽ is to loue any wight er she him well know, and haue him proued in many halse, for euery glittering thing is not golde, and vnder colour of faire speche many vices may be hid and conseled. Therfore I rede no wight to trust on you to rathmens chere, and her speche right giletul is ful ofte, wherfore without good assaye, it is not worthe on many on you to truste: Truly it is right kindly to euery man that thinketh women betraye, and shewen outward al goodnes, tyl he haue his will performed. Lo the birde is begiled with the mery boice of the foulers whistell. whan a woman is cloped in your nette, thã wol ye causes finden, & beare vnkindnes her on hande, or false vpõ her purte, your own malicious traison with soche thing to excuse. Lo thã han women non other wrech in vengeaũce, but blober and wepe til hem lyst stint, and sorily her mishap cõplaine, & is put in towenyng that al men den so vntrew. How oftẽ haue men thaunged her loues in a litel while, or els for fasling their wil in their places hem sette: for frendship shal be one, & fame with another him list for to haue, & a thirde for delyte, or els were he lost both in pache and in clothes: is this faire, nay God wot. I maye nat tel by thouland partes, the wronges in trechery of soche false people, for make they neuer so good a bonde, all set ye at a myte whan your herte tourneth: And they that wenen for sorow of you dey, the pite of your false hert is flow out of towne. Alas therfore, that euer any woman wolde take any wighte in her grace, til she know at the ful on whome she might at all assayes truste. Women con no more craste in queinte knowinge, to vnderstande the false discetuable conjectementes of mannes begilinges. Lo howe it fareth, though ye men gronen and crien, certes it is but disceit, & that preueth wel by thendes in your werking. How manye womẽ haue bene lorne, and with shame foule shent by longe lastynge time, whiche thorowe mennes gile haue been disceiued: euer their fame shall dure, and their dedes radde and longe in many londes, that they han done recoueren shal they neuer, but alway been demed lightly, in soche plite ayen shulde they fal, of whiche flaunders and tenes ye false men and wicked bene the very causes, on you by right ought these shames and these repproues all holy discende. Thus arne ye al nighe vntrewe, for all your faire speche your herte is full fickell. what cause han ye women to dispise: better fruite than they bene, ne swetter spices to your behoue mowe ye not finde, as farre as worldly bodyes stretchen. Loke to their forminge at the makinge of their persones by God in ioye of paradice, for goodnesse of mannes propre bodye were they maked, after the sawes of the bible, rehersing goddes wordes in this wise: It is good to mankinde that we make to him an helper. Lo in paradise for youre helpe was this tree grafted, out of whiche all linage of man discendeth: yf a man be noble frute, of noble frute it is sprongen: the blysse of paradise to-mennes sory hertes, yet in this tree abydeth. O noble helpes ben these trees, and gentil iewel to ben worshipped of euery good creature: He that hem anoith doth his owne shame, it is a cõfortable perle ayenst al tenes. Euery cõpany is mirthed by their presẽt being. Trewly I wist neuer vertue, but a women were therof the rote. what his heauen the worse though, Sarazins on it lien. Is your faith vntrew though rẽnogates make theron lealinges. If the fire doth anye wight bren, blame his own wittes put himself so farre in the heate. Is not fyre gentillest and moste element comfortable amonges all other: fire is cheefe werker in fostering sustenaunce to mankinde, shal fire bene blamed for it brend a foole naturelly, by his owne sinfulty witte in sterringe. Ay wicked folkes, for your propre malice, and shrewdenesse of your self, ye blame and dispise the precious thinge of your kinde, and whiche thinges amõge other most ye desiren. Trewly Nero and his children been shrewes, that dispisen so their dames. The wickednesse and giling of men, in disclaundring of thilke that most hath hem gladded and pleased, were impossible to write or to nempne. Neuer the later yet I saye he that knoweth a waye, may it lightly passe: eke an herbe proued may safely to smertande sores ben laide: So I say in him that is proued is nothing soch puels to gesse. But these thinges haue I rehersed to warne you women all at ones, that to lyghtly without good assay ye assenten not to mans speche. The sonne in the day light, is to knowe from the moone that shineth in the nighte. Nowe to thee thy self (q she) as I haue oft said. I know wel thine herte, thou arte none of all the tofore nempned people, for I know wel the continuaunce of thy seruice, that neuer sithen I set the werke, might thy Margarite for pleasaunce, frendeship, ne fairehede of none other be in pointe moued from thin herte, wherfore in to myne housholde haskelye I wol that thou entre, and all the parfyte priuyte of my werhynge make it bee knowe in thy vnderstandynge, as one of my priuy familyers. Thou desirest (q she) faine to here of tho thiges there I left.

Ye forsothe (q I) that were to me a great blisse. Nowe (q she) for thou shalt not wene that womans condicyons for faire speche soche thinge belongeth.

Thou shalte (q she) vnderstande first amonge all other thynges, that al the cure of my seruice, to me in the parfyte blisse in doinge, is desyred in euery mannes herte, be he neuer so moche a wretche, but euery man trauaileth by diuers studye, and seke thilke blysse by diuers waies, but all the endes are knitte in felynesse of desire in the perfite blisse, that is soche ioye, whan men it haue gotten, there liueth no thing more to be coueited: But how that desire of soche perfectiõ in my seruice be kindely set in louers hertes, yet her erronious opiniõs misturneth it by falsenesse of wenynge. And although mennes vnderstandinge be misturned, to knowe whiche shoulde been the waye vnto my persone, and whyther it abydeth: yet wote they ther is aloue in euery wight, whereth by that thing that he couepteth most he shoulde come to thilke loue, and that is parfite blysse of my seruauntes, but that full blysse maye not bee, and there lacke anye thinge of that blisse in anye side. Ech it foloweth than, that he that muste haue ful blysse, lache no blysse in loue on no side.

Therfore lady (q I tho) thilke blisse to haue desired, and sothe to forne this my self by wayes of riches, of dignite, of power, of renome, wenynge me in tho thinges haben thilke blisse, but ayenst the heere it turneth, whã I supposed best thilke blisse haue get and come to the full purpose of your seruice, sodainly was I hindred, and throwen so ferr abache, that me thinketh an impossible to come there I leste. I wol (q she) and therfore haste thou failed, for ỹ wentest not by the hye waye a, litell misgoynge in the ginning, causeth mikell errour in the ende, wherefore of thilke blisse thou failedest for hauing of richesse, ne none of thother thinges thou nempnedest, nowen not make soche perfite blisse in loue, as I shall shewe. Therfore thei be not worthie to thilke blisse, and yet somewhat must been cause and waie to thilke blisse: ergo there is some soche thing, and some waie, but it is little in biage, and that is not openly inow. But what seiest thyn hart of ꝑ seruice, in which by me thou art entred: wenest aught thy self, yet bee in the hie waie to my blisse: I shall so shewe it to thee, thou shalt not con sate the cõtrary.

Good Ladie (ꝙ I) altho I suppose it in my harte, yet would I heare thyne wordes, how ye meanen in this matter. (ꝙ she) that I shall with my good will. The ilke blisse desired, somedeale ye knowen, altho it bee not perfitely, for kindelie entencion leadeth you thereto, but in three maner liuynges, is all soche waies shewed. Euery wight in this worlde to haue this blisse, one of the ilke three waies of liues muste proceade, whiche after opinions of greate Clerkes, arne by names cleped, beastialliche, reasonabliche, in vertuous: Manliche is worldliche, beastialich is lustes and delitable, nothing restrained by bridle of reason, all that lieth and yeueth gladnesse to the hart, and it be ayenst reason, is likened to bestiall liuing, whiche thing followeth lustes ⁊ delites, wherfore in soche thing maie not that precious blisse, that is maister of al vertues abide. Your fathers tofore you, haue cleaped soche lustie liuynges, after the flesh passions of desire, whiche are innominable to fore God and man bothe. Then after determinacion of soche wise, wee accorden that soche passions of desire, shull not been nempned, but holden for absolute from all other liuinges and prouinges, and so liueth into liuinges, manliche ⁊ reasonable, to declare the matters begon. But to make thee fullie haue vnderstanding in manliche liuinges, which is holden worldlich in these things, so that ignorance be made no letter. I wol (ꝙ she) nempne these forsaied waies by names and conclusions.

Firste, riches, dignitee, renome, and power, shull in this woorke bee cleaped bodily goodes, for in hem hath been a great throw manness trust of liuines in loue, as in riches sufficiaunce to haue maintained that was begonne, by worldlie cattell in dignitie, honour, and reuerence of hem that werne vnderput, by maistrie thereby to obeie. In renome glory of peoples praising, after lustes in their harte, without hede taking to qualitie and maner of doyng, and in power, by trouth of Lordships maintenaunce, thing to procede foorthe in dooyng. In all whiche thynges a longe tyme, mannes coueitise in commune hath been greatly grounded, to come to ꝑ blis of my seruice, but truely thei wer begiled, and for the principall must nedes faile, and in helping nowe not availe. Se why for holdest him not poor that is nedyes parde (ꝙ I). And him for dishonored that moche folke dein not to reuerence. That is soth (ꝙ I) ⁊ what him ꝑ his mightes failē and nowe not helpen. Certes (ꝙ I) me semeth of all menne, he should bee holden a wretche. And wenest not (ꝙ she) that he that is little in renome, but rather is out of the prisinges, of mo men then a fewe be not in shame: For sothe (ꝙ I) it is shame ⁊ villanie to hym that coueiteth renome, that more folke not praise in name then praise. Soth (ꝙ she) thou saiest sothe, but all these thynges are followed of soche maner doyng, and wēden in riches sufficiaunce, in power mixt in dignitie worship, and in renome glorie, wherefore thei discended into disceiuable wening, and in that seruice discrete is followed. And thus in generall, thou ⁊ all soche other that so worchen, failen of my blisse, that ye long han desired, wherfore truly in life of reason, is the hie waie to this blisse, as I thinke more openlie to declare hereafter. Neuer the later, yet in a little to comforte thy harte, in shewyng of what waie thou art entred thy self, and that thy Margarite maie knowe thee set in the hie waie, I wol enforme thee in this wise. Thou hast failed of thy first purpose, bicause thou wēnedest wrong, and leftest the hie waie on thy right side, as thus, thou lokedest on worldly liuyng, and that thyng thee begiled, and lightly therfore as a litle assaie thou longedest, but when I tourned thy purpose, ⁊ shewed thee a part of the hie waie, tho thou abode therin, ⁊ no death ne herdnesse of none enemie might thee out of thilke waie reue, but euer one in thine hart, to come to thilk blisse, when thou wer arested, and first time enprisoned, ꝑ wer loth to change thy waie, for in thy harte thou wendest to haue been there thou shouldest, ⁊ for I had routh to see thee miscaried, ⁊ wist wel thine ablenes my seruice to fother and encrease, I come my self without other meane to visite thy persone, in comforte of thy harte: and parde in my commyng thou were greatly gladed, after whiche time, no disease, no care, no tene might moue me out of thy harte. And yet I glad and greatly enpited. How continually thou haddest me in minde, with good auisement of thy conscience, when thy king and his princes, by huge wordes and great, looked after variaunce in thy speach, and euer thou wer redy for my sake, in pleasaunce of that Margarite perle, and many mo other, thy body to obligel to Marces doing, if any contraried thy lawes, stedfast waie maketh stedfaste harte, with good hope in the ende. Truely I woll that thou it well knowe, for I se thee so set, and not chaunging hart haddest in my seruice, and I made thou haddest grace of thy king, in forpeuenesse of mikel mysdeede: to the gracious king, art thou mikel holden, of whose grace and goodnesse sometime hereafter I thinke to enforme, whē I shewe the ground, where as mortall vertue groweth. Who brought þ to werke? Who brought this grace about? who made thy harte hardie? Truely it was I, for haddest thou of me failed, then of this purpose had neuer taken in this wise. And therfore I saie, thou might well trust to come to thy blisse, sithen thy gimmyng hath been heard, but euer graciously after thy hartes desire hath proceaded. Siluer fined with many heates, menne knowen for true, and falsely men maie trust in thee alwaie in werbyng. This diseases hath proued, what waie hēce forwarde thou thinkeste to holde. Nowe in good faith Ladie (q I tho) I am now in, me semeth it is the lye waie and the righte. ye forsothe (q she) and nowe I woll disproue thy firste waies, by whiche many men wenē to gette thilke blisse. But for as moche as euery hart that hath caught full loue, is tied with queinte knittinges, thou shalt vnderstande that loue, and thilke forsaied blisse tofore declared, in this prouynges, shall hote the knotte in the harte. well (q I) this impossession I woll well vnderstand. Now also (q she) for the knotte in the harte, must be from one to an other, and I knowe thy desire: I woll thou vnderstande these matters, to been saied of thy self, in disprouyng of thy firste seruice, and in strengthyng of thilk that thou hast vndertake to thy margarite perle. I Goddes halse (q I) right wel I fele that all this case is possible and true, and therefore I admitted all togither. Vnderstāden well (q she) these termes, and lone no contradiccion thou graune. If God wol (q I) of all these thinges woll I not faile, and if I graunte contradiction, I would graunt an impossible, and that wer a foule inconuenience, for whiche thinges, Ladie swis hereafter I thinke me to kepe.

Well (q she) thou knowest well that euery thyng is cause, wherethrough any thyng hath beyng, that is cleaped causes, then of riches causen knot in hart, thilke riches arne cause of the like precious thyng beyng: But after the lenēce of Aristotle, euery cause is more in dignitie, then his thyng caused, wherethrough it followeth richelle, to been more in dignitie then thilke knotte, but richelle arne kindly naughtie, badde, and nedy, and the like knotte is thing kindly good, most praised and desired: Ergo thyng naughtie, badde, and neadie, in kindly vnderstanding is more worthie, then thyng kindely good, most desired and praised: The consequence is false, neades the antecedente mote been of the same condicion. But that richelles been badde, naughtie, and nedie, that woll I proue, wherfore thei mowe cause no soch thing, that is so glorious a good: the more richelle thou hasse, the more nede hast thou of help hem to kepe. Ergo thou nedest in richelle, whiche nede thou shouldest not haue if thou hem wantest. Then must riches ben nedy, that in their hauyng maken the nedy to helpes, in suretie thy richelle to kepen, wherthrough folowēth richelle to been nedie. Euery thyng causyng euills is bad and naughtie: but riches in one causen misease in an other thei mowen not euenly stretchē al about. Wherof cometh plee, debate, theft begilinges, but riches to win, whiche thinges been bad, and by richelle arn caused: ergo the like richelle been badde, whiche badnesse and nede, been knitte into riches, by a maner of kindlie propertie, and euery cause and caused accordē, so that it followeth the like richelle, to haue thesame accordaunce, with badnes and mede, that their cause asketh. Also euery thyng hath his beeyng by his cause, then if the cause bee destroyed, the beeyng of caused is vanished: And so if richelle causen loue, and richelle weren destroyed,

destroyed, the loue should banishe, but the like knotte and it bee true, maie not banishe for no goyng of no richelle: Ergo richelle is no cause of the knotte. And many men as I saied, setten the cause of the knotte in richelle, the like knitten the richelle, and nothyng the euill: the like persones what euer thei been, wenen that riches is moste worthie to be had, and that make thei the cause: and so wene thei thilke riches, be better thā the persone. Commenly soche asken, rather after the quantitie, then after the qualitie, and soche wenen as well by hem self, as by other, that cōiunccion of his life and of his soule is no more precious, but in as mekell as he hath of richelle. Alas, howe maie he holdē soche thynges precious or noble, that neither han life ne soule, ne ordiuaunce of werchyng limmes: soche richelle been more worthie, when thei been in gatheryng, in departyng ginneth his loue of other mennis praisyng. And auarice gatheryng, maketh bee hated, and neadie to many out helpes: and when leueth the possession of soche goodes, and thei ginne banishe, then entereth sorowe and tene in their harts. O bad and straite been thilke, that at their departyng, maketh men tenefull and sorie, and in the gatheryng of hem, make menne neady: Soche folke at ones mowen not togither, moche thereof haue. A good geste gladdeth his hoste, and al his meinie, but he is a bad geste, that maketh his hoste neadie, and to bee aferde of his gestes goyng. Certes (q I) me wondereth therefore, that the common opinion is thus: he is worthe no more then that he hath in cattell. O (q she) looke thou bee not of that opinion, for if golde or money, or other maner of riches, shinen in thy sight, whose is that? Not thine: and tho thei haue a little beautie, thei bee nothyng in comparison of our kinde, and therefore ye should not set your worthinesse in thing, lower then your self, for the riches, the fairnesse, ỹ worthinesse of thilke goodes, if there be any soche preciousnesse in hē ar not thin, thou madeste hem so neuer, from other thei come to thee, and to other thei shull frō the: wherfore enbraces ỹ other wightes goodes, as tho thei wer thine. Kinde hath drawe hem by hem self. Ye is soth the goodes of the yearth, been ordeined in your fode and nourishing, but if thou wolte holde thee apaied with that sufficeth to thy kinde, thou shalt not be in daunger of no soch riches, to kind sufficeth little thing, who that taketh hede. And if thou wolt algates with superfluitie of riches bee a throted, thou shalt hastelich be anoied, or els euill at ease. And fairnesse of fieldes, ne of habitaciōs, ne multitude of meine, maie not bee rekened as riches, that are thine owne, for if thei be bad, it is great sclander and villanie to the occupier, and if thei be good or faire, the matter of the work man that hē made, is to praise. How should otherwise boūtie be compted for thine, the like goodnesse and fairnesse be proper to tho thinges hem self, then if thei be not thin, sorowe not when thei wend, ne glad thee not in pompe and in pride, when thou hem hast for their boūtie and their beauties, cometh out of their owne kind, & not of thine owne persone: as faire been thei in their not hauing, as when thou haste hem, thei bee not faire, for thou hast hem, but thou hast getteē hem for the fairenesse of thē self. And there the balance of men, is demed in riches outforthe, wenen me to haue no proper good in them self, but seche it in straunge thinges. Truely the condicion of good wening is in the misbourned, to wene your noblenes be not in your self, but in ỹ goodes and beautie of other thinges. Parde the beastes that hā but feling soules, haue sufficiaunce in their owne self: and ye that been like to God, seh encrease of sufficiaunce, from so excellente a kinde, of so low thinges, ye do great wrong to him that you made lordes, ouer al yerthly thinges, and ye put your worthinesse vnder the nomber of the feete, of lower things and foule, when ye iudge thilke riches to be your worthinesse, then put ye your self by estimacion, vnder thilke foule thinges, and then leue ye the knowing of your self, so be ye viler then any dombe beast, that cometh of shrewde vice. Right so thilk persons that louen none euil, for deare worthines of the persone, but for straunge goodes, and saith the adornement in the knotte lieth in soche thinge, his errour is perilous and shrewde, and he wrieth moche benime, with moche wealth, and that knotte maie not be good, whē he hath it getten. Certes thus hath riches with flickering lighte anoied many: & often when there is a throw out shrewe, he coineth al the gold, all the precious stones ỹ mowen be founden to haue in his bandon, he weneth no wight be worthi to haue soch thinges but he alone. How many hast thou knowe now in late time, ỹ in their richelle, suppo-

ſuppoſed ſufficaūce haue ſolowed, and now it is all failed. Ye ladie (q I) that is for mille medling, and otherwile gouerned thilke richeſſe, then thei ſhould. Yea (q ſhe tho) had not the floode greatlie areiſed, and throwe to hem warde, borhe grauell and Sande, he had made no medlyng. And right as ſea yeueth flood, ſo draweth ſea ebbe, and pulleth ayen vnder wawe, all the firſte out throwe, but if good piles of noble gouernaunce in Loue, in well meanyng maner, been ſadlie grounded, to whiche hold thilke grauell, as for a while, that ayen lightly mowe not it turne: and if the piles been true, the grauel and ſande woll abide. And certes, full warning in loue ſhalt thou neuer, through hem get ne couer, that lightlie with an ebbe eve thou beware, it will ayen meue.

In richeſſe, many men haue had tenes & diſeales, which thei ſhould not haue had, if therof thei had failed. Through whiche nowe declared, partlie it is ſhewed, that for richeſſe ſhould the knotte in harte, neither been cauſed in one, ne in other: truely knot maie been knitte, and I trow more ſtedfaſt in loue, though richeſſe failed, and els in richeſſe is the knot, and not in hart. And then ſoche a knotte is falſe, when the ſea ebbeth and withdraweth the grauel, that ſoche richeſſe voideth, thilke knotte woll vnknitte. Wherefore no truſte, no waie, no cauſe, no parfite being is in richeſſe, of no ſoche knot therefore an other waie muſt we haue.

HOnor in dignitie is wened, to peuen a full knotte. Ye certes (q I) and of that opinion ben many, for thei ſaine dignitie, with honour, and reuerence, cauſen hartes to encheinen, and ſo abled to knitte togither, for the excellence in ſouerainte of ſoche degrees.

Now (q ſhe) if dignitie, honoure, and reuerence, cauſen thilke knotte in harte, this knotte is good and profitable. For euery cauſe of a cauſe, is cauſe of thynge cauſed: Then thus, good thynges and profitable been by dignitie, honour, and reuerence cauſed. Ergo thei accorden, and dignities been good with reuerēces and honour, but contraries mowen not accorden: wherfore by reaſon there ſhould no dignitie, no reuerence, none honour accorde with ſhrewes. but that is falſe: Thei haue been cauſe to ſhrewes, in many ſhrewdneſſe, for with hem thei accorden. Ergo from beginning, to argue ayen warde, till it come to the laſte concluſion, thei are not cauſe of the knotte. Lo all daie at eye, arne ſhrewes not in reuerēce in honour, and in dignitie? Yes forſothe, rather then the good. Then ſoloweth it, that ſhrewes rather then good, ſhull been cauſe of this knotte. But of this contray, of all louers is beleued, and for a ſothe openlie determined to holde.

Now (q I) fain would I heare, how ſoch dignities accorden with ſhrewes.

O (q ſhe) that woll I ſhewe in manifolde wiſe. Ye wene (q ſhe) that dignities of office here in your Citee, is as the Sonne, it ſhineth bright withouten any cloude: whiche thynge, when thei comen in the handes of malicious tyrauntes, there cometh moche harme, and more greuaunce therof, then of the wilde fire, though it brende all a ſtreate. Certes, in dignitie of office, the werkes of the occupier, ſhewē the malice and the badneſſe in the perſone, with ſhrewes thei maken manifolde harmes, and moche people ſhamen. How often han rancours, for malice of the gouernour ſhould been maintained? Hath not then ſoche dignities cauſed debate, rumours, and euils? Yes God wote, by ſoche thinges haue been truſted to, make mennes vnderſtandynge encline to many queinte thynges. Thou wotteſt well, what I meane. Ye (q I) therfore as dignitie ſoche thyng in tene i wrought, ſo ayen warde the ſubſtaunce in dignitie chaunged, relied to bryng ayen good plite in dooyng. Howaie, howaie (q ſhe) if it ſo betide, but that is ſeld that ſoche dignitie is betake in a good mannes gouernaunce. What thyng is to recken in the dignities goodneſſe? Warde the bountie and goodneſſe is hers, that vſe it in good gouernaunce, and therefore cometh it, that honour and reuerence, ſhould been doen in to dignitie, bicauſe of encreaſyng vertue in the occupier, and not to the ruler, bicauſe of ſouraintie in dignitie. Sithen dignitie maie no vertue cauſe, who is worthie worſhip for ſoche goodneſſe? Not dignitie, but perſone that maketh goodneſſe in dignitie to ſhine. This is wonder thyng (q I) for me thinketh, as the perſone in dignitie is worthie honour for goodneſſe, ſo tho a perſone for badneſſe, magre hath deſerued, yet the dignitie leneth to be commended. Let be (q ſhe) thou erreſt right foule, dignitie with badneſſe, is helper to performe the felonous doing: parde wer it kindly good, or any propertie of kindly vertue, hadden in hem self, thewes should hem neuer haue, with hem should thei neuer accorde. Water & fire that been contrarious, mowen not togider been assembled, kinde woll not suffre soche contraries to ioyn. And sithen at ye by experience in dooyng, we seen that thewes haue hem more often, then good men, liker maist thou be, that kindly good in soch things, is not appropred. Parde wer thei kindly good as well one as other, shoulden euenliche in vertue of gouernance been worthe: but one faileth in goodnesse, an other doeth the contrary, and so it sheweth kindly goodnesse, in dignitie not be grouded. And this same reason (q she) maie bee made in generall, on all the bodily goods, for thei comē oft to throw out thewes. After this he is stronge, ẏ hath might to haue greate burthens, and he is light & swift, that hath souraintie in ronning to passe other, right so he is a shrew on whom shrewde thinges and bad, han mosse werchig. And right as Philosophy maketh Philosophiers, and my seruice maketh lo-uers: right so if dignities weren good or ver tuous, thei should makē thewes good, and tourne her malice, and make hem be vertuous, but that dooe thei not, as it is proued, but causen rācour and debate. Ergo thei be not good, but vtterly bad. Had Nero neuer been Emperor, should neuer his dame haue be slaine, to maken open the priuitie of his engendrure. Herodes for his dignitie, slewe many children. The dignitie of king Jhon would haue destroied all Englande. Therefore mosell wisedome and goodnes bothe, nedeth in a persone, the malice in dignitie, fully to bridell, & with a good bit of aresse to withdrawe, in case it would praunce otherwise thē it should: truly ye yeue to dignities wrōgful names in your cleping. Thei should bete not dignitie, but monstre of badnesse, & maintetner of shrewes. Perde shine ẏ sonne neuer so bright, and it bring forth no heat, nereasonably the herbes out bringe of the yearth, but suffre frostes and cold, & therato baraine to ligge, by time of his compas, in circuite about, ye would wonder & dispreise that sonne. If the moone be at full, and sheweth no light, but dark and dimme to your light appereth, & make distrucciō of the waters, wol ye not suppose it be vnder cloude, or in clips? And ẏ some priuie thing vnkno-wen to your wittes, is cause of soche cōtra-rious dooyng. Then if clerkes that han full insight, and knowing of soche impedimen-tes, enforme you of the soth, bery idiotes ye been, but if ye yeuen credence to thilke clerkes wordes. And yet it doth me tene, to seen many wretches reioycen, in soch many planettes. Truly little con thei on Philosophy or els on my lore, that any desire haue soche lighting planettes, in that wise any more to shewe. Good ladie (q I) tell ye me how ye mean in these things. Lo (q she) ẏ dignities of your citee, sonne and Moone, nothing in kinde shew their shining as thei should. For the sonne made no brenning heate in loure, but freled enuie in mēs hartes, for feblenes of shining heate: and the Mone was about vnder an old cloud, the liuynges by waters to destroye. Ladie (q I) it is supposed thei had shined as thei should. Ye (q she) but now it is proued at the full, their beutie in kindly shining failed, wherefore dignitie of him seluen, hath no beautie in faireneſſe, ne driueth not a waie vices, but encreaseth, and so be thei no cause of the knotte. Now se in good truthe, holde ye not soche sonnes worthie of no reuerence and dignities, worthie of no worship, that maketh men to dooe the more harmes? I not (q I). No (q she) a thou se a wise good man, for his goodnesse and wiseneſſe, wolt thou not doe hym worship?

Thereof he is worthie. That is good skil (q
I) it is dewe to soche, bothe reuerence and worshippe to haue. Then (q she) a shrewe for his shreudnesse, altho he be put forth to sorou other for ferde, yet is he worthie for shreud-nesse, to bee vnworshipped: of reuerence no parte is he worthie to haue, to contrarious dooyng belongeth, and that is good skille.
For right as he bee smiteth the dignities, thilk same thing ayenward him smiteth, or els should smite. And ouer this thou wosse well (q she) that fire in euery place, heateth where it be, and water maketh weat: why?
For kindly werking is so sput in hem, to do soche thinges: for euery kindely in werking sheweth his kind. But though a wight had been Maior of your Citee, many winter together, and come in a straūge place, there he were not knowen, he should for his dignitie haue no reuerence. Then neither worship ne reuerence, is kindelie proper in no dignitie, sithen thei shoulden doen their kinde, in soche dooyng if any were. And if reuerence ne worshippe, kindely be not sette in digni-ties, and thei more therein been shewed thā good

goodnesse, for that in dignitie is shewed, but it proueth that goodnesse, kindlie in hē is not grounded. I wis neither worship ne reuerence, ne goodnesse in dignitie, dooen none office of kind, for thei haue none soche propertie, in nature of dooyng, but by false opinion of the people. Lo, howe sometyme thilke that in your Citee werne in dignitie noble, if thou liste hem nempne, thei been nowe ouertourned, bothe in worshippe, in name, and in reuerence, wherefore soche dignities, haue no kindely werchyng of worship, and of reuerence, he that hath no worthinesse on it self. Now it riseth, and now it vanisheth, after the variaunte opinion in false hartes of vnstable people.

Wherefore, if thou desire the knot of this iewelle, or elsif thou wouldest suppose, she should set the knotte on thee, for soche maner of dignitie, then thou wenest beautie or goodnesse of the ilke somewhat, encreaseth the goodnesse or vertue in the bodie: but dignitie of hem self been not good, ne yeuen reuerence ne worship by their owne kinde, howe should thei then, yeue to any other a thing, that by no waie mow thei haue hem self: Ie is seen in dignitie of the Emperour, and of many mo other, that thei mowe not of hem selue, kepe their worship ne their reuerēce, that that in a little while, it is now vp, and now doun, by vnstedfast hartes of ꝑ people. what bountie mowe thei yeue, that with Cloude, lightlie leaueth his shinyng: Certes, to the occupier is mokell apeired, sithen soche doing doeth vilanie, to him that maie it not maintain, wherfore thilke way to the knotte is croked: and if any desire to come to ꝑ knot, he must leaue this waie on his left side, or els shal he neuer come there.

Auaileth aught (ꝙ she) power of mighte, in maintenaunce of worthie, to come to this knot. Parde (ꝙ I) ye, for hartes been rauished from soche maner thyngs. Certes (ꝙ she) though a fooles harte, is with thyng rauished, yet therfore is no generall cause of the powers, ne of a liker partite harte, to be looked after. Was not Nero the moste shrewe, one of thilke that men rede, and yet had he power to make Senatours, Justices, and Princes of many landes? was not that greate power? Yes certes (ꝙ I). Well (ꝙ she) yet might he not helpe hymself out disease, when he gan fall. Howe many enlampies canst thou remember of kynges, greate and noble, and huge power holden, and yet thei might not keepe hem selue from wretchednesse. How wretched was kyng Henry Curmantil ere he diede? He had not so moche as to couer with his members: and yet was he one of the greatest kynges, of all the Normādes offspring, & moste possession had. O, a noble thing and cleare is power, that is not founden mightie to kepe hymself.

Now truelie a greate foole is he, that for soche thyng, would set the knotte in thyne harte. Also power of realmes, is not thilke greatest power, emonges the worldlie powers reckened? And if soche powers han wretchednesse in hemself, it foloweth other powers of febler condicion, to been wretched, and then that wretchednesse, should been cause of soch a knot. But euery wight that hath reason, wote well that wretchednesse by no waie, maie been cause of none soche knotte, wherefore soche power is no cause. That powers haue wretchenesse in hem self, maie right lightly been preued.

If power lache on any side, on that side is no power, but no power is wretchednes: for all bee it so, the power of Emperours or kinges, or els of their realmes (which is the power of the Prince) stretchen wide & brod, yet besides is there mokell folke, of whiche he hath no commaundemente ne lordeship, and there as lacketh his power, his nonpower entereth, where vnder springeth, that maketh hem wretches. No power is wretchednesse, & nothyng els: but in this manr hath kinges, more portion of wretchednes, thā of power. Truly soche powers been vnmightie, for euer thei ben in drede, how the ilke power from lesyng, maie be keped of sorowe, so drede sorily prickes, euer in their hartes: Little is the power, whiche careth and ferdeth it self to maintaine. Vnmightie is that wretchednesse, whiche is entered by the ferdfull wenyng of the wretche hym self: and knotte imaked by wretchednesse, is betwene wretches, and wretches all thyng bewailen: wherefore the knotte should bee bewailed, and there is no soche parfit blisse that we supposed at the ginnyng. Ergo power in nothing, should cause soch knottes. Wretchednesse, is a kindlie propetie in soche power, as by waie of drede, whiche thei mowe not eschue, ne by no waie liue in sikernesse. For thou woste welle (ꝙ she) he is nought

nought mighty, that wolde not done that he may not don ne perfourme. Therfore (q I) these kinges and lordes that han fulfylsaūce at the ful of men and other thinges, mowē well been holden mighty: their commaundemētes been done, it is neuermore denied. Foole (q she) or he wot him selfe mightye or wotte it not: for he is nought mighty, that is blinde of his might and wotte it not. That is soth (q I). Than yf he wot it, he must nedes been a drade to lesen it. He that wote of his might is in doute that he mote nedes lese; and so leadeth him drede to been vnmighty. And if he retche not to lese, litel is that worth that of the lesing reason retcheth nothinge: and if it were mighty in power or in strength, the lesing shulde den withset, and whan it cometh to the lesinge he may it not withsitte. Ergo thilke might is leude and naughty. Soch mightes arne ylike to postes and pillers that vpright stonden, and great might han to beare manye charges, and yf they croke on any side, litel thinge maketh hem overthrowe. This is a good ensāple q I to pillers and postes that I haue sene overthrowed my self, and hadden they been vnderput with anye helpes, they had not so lightlye fal. Than holdest thou him myghty that hath many men armed and may seruauntes, and euer he is adradde of hem in his herte, & for he gasteth hem somtime he mote the more feare haue. Comenly he that other agasteth, other in him ayenward werchen the same: and thus warnished mote he be, and of warnishe the houre drede: Litel is that might and right leude, who so taketh hede. Than semeth it (q I) that soche famulers aboute kinges & great lordes, shull great might haue. Although he a sipher in augrim haue no might in signification of it selue, yet he yeueth power in significatiō to other, and these clepe I the helpes to apost, to kepe him from falinge. Certes q she thilke shilles ben leude. Why but if the shores been well grounded, the helps shullē sliden and suffre the charge to fal, her myght litel auaileth. And so me thinketh (q I) that a poste alone stondynge vpright vpon a basse, maye lenger in great burthen endure, than croked pillers for all their helpes, and her grounde be not siker. That is sothe (q she) for as the blind in bearing of the lame ginne stomble, bothe shuld fal, right so soch pillers so enuironed with helpes in falinge of the grounde, faileth all togider, howe ofte than soche famulers in their most pride of prosperite been sodainly overthrowen. Thou haste knowe manye in a moment so ferre overthrowe, that couer might they neuer, whan the heuinesse of soche faling cometh by case of fortune, they mowe it not eschewe: and might & power, if ther wer any shulde of strēght soche thinges voide and weiue, & so it is not. Lo than whiche things is this power that tho men han it they ben agast, and in no time of full hauing be thei siker: & if they wold weyue drede, as they mowe not, lytel is in worthines. Fye therfore on so noughty thing any knot to cause. Lo in aduersitie, thilke been his foes that gloied & semed frēdes in welth thus arne his familiers his foes & his enemies: And nothing is werse ne more might for to anoy, than is a familier enemye, and these thinges may they not weiue, so treuly their might is not worth a cresse. And ouer al thinge, he that may not withdraw the bridel of his fleshly lustes and his wretched complaintes (now thinke on thy self) trewly he is not mighty: I can sene no way that lithe to the knotte. Thilke people thā that setten their hertes vpon soch mightes and powers, often ben begiled. Parde he is not myghty that may do any thinge, that another may done him the selue, and that men haue as greate power ouer hym as he ouer other. A iustice that demeth men, ayēward hath ben often demed. Bulerus slew his gestes, and he was slayne of Hercules his gest. Huget betraished many menne, & of Collo was he betraied. He y with swerde smiteth, with swerde shalbe smitten. Than gan I to studien a while on these thinges, and made a contenaunce with my hande in maner to been huishte. Nowe let sene (q she) me thinketh somwhat there is within thy soule, y troubleth thy vnderstanding, saye on what it is. (q I tho) me thinketh that although a man by power haue soche might ouer me as I haue ouer other, that disproueth no might in my persone, but yet maye I haue power and might neuer the later. Se now (q she) thine owne leudenesse: He is mighty that maye without wretchednesse, and he is vnmighty that may it not withsitte: but than he that might ouer the, and he woll put on the wretchednes, thou might it not withsitte. Ergo thou seest they selfe what foloweth. But nowe (q she) wouldest thou not shorne and thou se a flye han power to don harme to an other flie, and thilke haue no might ne ayenturninge him selfe to defende. Yes certes (q I). Who is a frailer thinge (q she) than the fleshlye body of a man, ouer whiche haue often tyme flyes, and yet lasse thing than a flye mokel myght in greuaunce and anoyenge, withouten anye wythlittynge, for all thylke mannes mightes. And sythen thou seest thine fleshly body in kindely power faile, howe shoulde than the accident of a thynge been in more suretie of being than substancial: wherfore thilke thinges that we clepe power, is but accidēt to the fleshly body, and so they maie not haue that suretie in might, which wāteth in the substanciall body. Why there is no waye to the knotte, that loketh aryght after the hye waie as he shulde.

VErelye it is proued that richesse, dignite, and power bē not trewe way to the knotte, but as rath by soche thinges ꝑ knotte, to be vnbouūd: wherfore on these thynges I rede no wight trust, to gette anye good knotte. But what shulde we saye of renome in the peoples mouthes, shuld that ben any cause what suppolest thou in thin hert?

Certes (q I) yes I trowe, for your flye reasons I dare not safely it saye. Than (q she) wol I proue that shrewes as rathe shul ben in the knotte as the good, and that wer ayenst kinde. Fayne (q I) woulde I that hear, me thinketh wōder how renome shuld as well knitte a shrewe as a good persone: renome in euery degree hath auaunced, yet wist I neuer the contrarye: shulde than renome accorde with a shrewe? It maye not sinke in my stomake till I here more. Now (q she) haue I nat said alwayes, that shrewes shul not haue the knotte. What nedeth (q I) to reherse that any more, I wotte wel euery wight by kindely reason, shrewes in knittinge woll eschewe. Than (q she) the good ought thilke knotte to haue. How els (q I). It were greate harme (q she) that the good were weued and put out of espoire of the knot, if he it desired. O (q I) alas, on soche thinge to thinke. I wene that heuen wepeth to se soch wronges here ben saffred on yearth: the good ought it to haue and no wight elles. The goodnesse (q she) of a person maye not ben knowe outforth, but by renome of the knowers, wherefore he must be renomed of goodnes to come to the knot. So musste it be (q I) or elles all lolle that we carpen. Sothly (q she) that were greate harme, but if a good man might haue his delyres in seruice of thilke knot, & a shrewe to be beined, and they been not knowen in general but by lacking and praising and in renome, and so by the consequence it foloweth, a shrewe ben praised and knit, and a good to be forsake and vnknit. Thō (q I) tho haue ye lady ben her abouten, yet wold I se by grace of our argumentes better declared, howe good and bad do accorden by lacking and praising, me thinketh they it ayēst kinde. Nay (q she) and that shalt thou se as yerne: these elementes han contrarious qualites in kinde, by whiche they mow not accorde no more than good and bad: and in qualites they accorde, so that contraries by qualite, accorden by qualyte. Is not yearth drie, and water that is nerte and bytwene therth is wete, drie and wete been contrary and mowen not accorde, and yet this discordaunce is bounde to accorde by cloudes, for bothe elements ben colde. Right so the eyre that is nerte the water is weate, and eke it is hot. This eyre by his heate contrarieth water ꝑ is colde, but thilke contrariousnye is oned by moisture, for both be they moist. Also the fyre that is nerte the yerth, and it encloseth al about, is drye, wherthrough it cōtrarieth yearth that is wete: and in hete they accorde, for both they ben hote. Thus by these accordaunces, discordantes ben ioyned and in a maner of accordaunce they accorden by connection, that is knittinge togider, of that accorde cometh a maner of melodye that is right noble. Right so good and bad arne contrarie in doinges, by lackinge and praisinge: good is bothe lached and praised of some, and badde is bothe lacked and praised of some: wherfore their contrariousnye accorde bothe by lacking and praising. Thā foloweth it though good be neuer so mokel praised, oweth more to ben knit than the bad: or elles bad for the renome that he hath must be takē as wel as the good, and that oweth not. No forsothe (q I) well (q she) than is renome no waye to the knot: lo foole (q she) how clerkes writen of soche glorie of renome. O glorye, glorye, thou art none other thinge to thousandes of follie, but a great sweller of eares. Manye one hath had full great renome by false opinio, of variaunt people: And what is fouler than folke wrongefully to ben praised, or by malice of the people giltlesse lacked? Nedes shame foloweth thereof to hem that wyth wronge prayseth, and also to the desertes praised, and bylanye and reproke of him that disclaundreth.

Good childe (q she) what echeth soche renome to the conscience of a wise man, that loketh and measureth his goodnesse, not by fleuelesse wordes of the people, but by sothfastnesse of conscience: by God nothinge. And if it be faire a mannes name be eched by moche folkes praising, and fouler thing that mo folke not praisen. I said to the a litel here before, that no folke in straunge coūtreies nought praisen, soch renom may not comē to their eares, bycause of vnknowing, and other obstacles, as I saide: wherfore more folke not praisen, & that is right foule to him that renome desireth, to wete lesse folke praisen than renome enhaunce. I trowe the thanke of a people is naught worth, in remembraunce to take, ne it procedeth of no wise iugement, neuer is it stedfast pardurable: It is beine & fleynge, with winde wasketh and encreaseth. Trewly soch glory ought to be hated. If gentillesse be a clere thynge, renome and glorie to enhaunce, as in rechening of thy linage, thā is gentillesse of thy kinne, for why it semeth that gentillesse of thy kinne, is but praysinge and renome that come of thine auncestres desertes, and if so be that praisinge and renome of their desertes, make their clere gentilnesse, than mote they nedes ben gentill for their gentil dedes, and not thou: for of thy self cometh not soche maner gentillesse, praisinge of thy desertes. Than gentillesse of thine auncestres that forayne is to the, maketh the not gētil, but vngētil and reproued, and if thou continuest not their gentillesse. And therfore a wise man ones said: Better is it thy kinne to been by the genteled, then thou to glorifye of thy kinnes gentillesse, and hast no desert therof thy self.

How passing is the beautie of fleshly bodyes more flyttinge than mouable floures of sōmer. And if thine eyen weren as good as the Lynx, that may sene thorowe many stone walles, both & faire and foule in their entrailes, of no maner hew shulde apere to thy sight, that were a foule sight. Than is fairenesse by feblesse of eyen, but of no kid, wherfore thilke shuldbe no way to the knot: whan thilke is went the knot wendeth after. Lo now al proues, none of al these thinges mowe partitly ben in vnderstanding, to ben waye to the durynge blisse of the knotte. But nowe to conclusion of these maters, herkeneth these words. Euery sōmer is know from the winter: in shorter course drawe the dayes of December, then in ỳ moneth of June: The sprynges of May faden and folowen in Octobre. These thinges be not vnbounden from their olde kind they haue not lost her worke of their proper estate. Men of voluntarious wil withlitte that heuens gouerneth. Other thinges sufferen thinges pacientlye to werche: Man in what estate he be, yet wolde he ben chaunged. Thus by queint thynges blisse is desired, and the fruit that cometh of these sprynges, nis but anguis and bitter, all though it be a whil swete, it may not be with hold, hastely they departe: thus all daye faileth thinges that fooles wēde. Right thus hast thou faileth in thy firste weninge. He that thinketh to saile, and draw after the course of that sterre, de polo autartico, shall he neuer come Northward to the contrary sterre of polus articus, of whiche thinges if thou take kepe, thy first out waye goinge, prison and exil may be cleped. The grounde falsed vndernethe, and so hast thou fayled. No wight I wene blameth him that sliteth in misgoing, and secheth redy way of his blisse

Nowe me thenketh (q she) that it sufficeth in my shewing the wayes, by dignite, richelle, renome, and power, if thou loke clerely arne no wayes to the knotte.

Euery argumente lady (q I tho) that ye han maked in these fore nempned matters, me thinketh hem in my full wytte conceiued, shall I no more if God will in the contrarie be begiled: But faine wolde I and it were your will, blisse of the knotte to me wer declared, I might fele the better howe my herte might assete to pursue thende in seruice, as he hath begonne. O (q she) there is a melodye in heauen, whiche clerkes clepen armony, but that is not in breaking of voice, but it is a maner swete thig of kindly werchinge, that causeth ioy out of nōbre to reckē, and that is ioined by reason and by wisedome, in a quantite of proporcion of knitting. God made all thing in reason and in witte of porporcion of melodye, we mowe not suffise to shewe. It is written by great clerkes and wise, that in erthly thinges lightly by studye, & by trauile, the knowinge may be getten: but of soche heuenly melodye, mokel trauaile woll bringe out in knowing right lytel. Swetnese of this paradyse hath you rauished. it semeth ye slepten, reked from al other diseases so kindely is your hertes therin ygrounded. Blisse of two hertes in full loue knitte, maye not aright ben imagined: euer is their contemplacio in ful of thoughty study to plesance, matter in bringing comforte eueriche to other. And therfore of erthelye thinges, mokel matter lyghtly cometh in your lerning. Knowledge of vnderstanding that is nighe after ye, but not so nigh the couetise of knittinge in your hertes: More souerain desire hath euery wight in litel hering of heuenly conninge, than of mokell materiall purposes in yerth. Right so it is in propertie of my seruauntes, that they den more alyched in steringe of lytel thinge in his desyre, thā of mokel other matter, lasse in his conscience. This blisse is a maner of sownе delycious, in a queint voice touched, and no dynne of notes: there is none impression of breakinge laboure. I canne it not otherwise nempne, for wāting of priue wordes, but paradyse terrestre ful of delicious melodye, withoutē trauaile in sown perpetuell seruice, in ful ioye coueited to endure. Only kinde maketh hertes in vnderstandinge so to slepe, that otherwise may it not ben nēpned, ne in other manere names for likynge swetnesse can I nat it declare, all sugre and honye, al minstralsy and melodie been but soote and galle in comparison, by no maner proporcion to reken, in respecte of this blisful ioye. This armonye, this melodye, this perdurable ioye may nat be in doinge, but betwene heuens and elemētes, or twey kindely hertes, full knit in trouth of naturell vnderstanding, withouten wening and disceit, as heuens and planettes, whiche thinges continually for kindely accordaunces, forleteth al cōtrarious meuinges, that in to passyue diseases maye sowne, euermore it thristeth after more werkinge. These thinges in proporcion be so wel ioyned, that it vndoth al thing, which in to badnes by any way may be accōpted. Certes (q I) this is a thing precious & noble. Alas that falsenesse euer or wantrust shuld euer be mainteined, this ioy to void. Alas that euer any wretch shulde thorow wrathe or enuy, tanglig dare make to shoue this medlody so farre abache that openly dare it not bē bled: surely wretches been fulfylled with enuy and wrathe, and no wight els. Flebring & tales in soche wretches dare appere opēly in euery wightes eare w ful mouth so charged, mokel malyce moued many innocentes to shēde, God wold their soule therwith were strangeled. Lo, trouth in this blisse is hid & ouer al vnder couer him hideth: He dare nat come & place for waiting of shrewes. Cōmenly badnes, goodnes amaisereth hd my self and my soule this ioy wolde I bye, yf the goodnesse wer as moch as ȳ nobli in melodi. O (q she) what goodnesse may be a compted more in this material world, truly non ȳ shalt thou vnderstande. Is not euery thing good that is cōtrariant & distroiēg yuel? How els (q I) Enuye, wrathe, and falsenes ben generall (q she) and that wot euery mā beyng in his right mind, the knotte the which we haue in this bleste, is contrariaunt & distroieth soche maner yuelles. Ergo it is good, what hath caused anye wight to do anye good dede? Fynd me any good, but if this knot be the chefe cause: Nedes mote it be good, that causeth so many good dedes. Euery cause is more, and worthier than thing caused, and in that mores possession, all thynges lesse been compted. As the kinge is more than his people, & hath in possessiō al his realme after: Right so the knot is more than all other goodes, thou might recken al thinges lasse, and that to him longeth owethe in to his mores causes of worship and of wil do tourne, it is elles rebel and out of his mores defending to boyd. Ryght so of euery goodnesse in to the knot and in to the cause of his worship oweth to tourne. And trewly euery thinge that hath beynge profitablye is good, but nothing hath to ben more profitably than this knot: Kynges it maintaineth, and hem their powers to maintaine: It makethe misse to bene amended, with good gouernaunce in doynge. It closeth hertes so togider, that rācour is out thrēste. who that it lengest kepeth, lengest is gladed. I trow (q I) heretykes, and misse meaning people hence forward wol maintaine this knotte, for therthrough shull they ben maintained, and otterly woll tourne. and

yeaue their olde yuel vnderstãding, & knitte this goodnes, and pyoker so terre in seruice that name of seruauntes might they haue. Their iangles shal cease, me thinketh hem lacketh mater now to alege. Certes (q loue) if they of good will thus tourned as thou sayst wolē trewly persourme, yet shull they be abled party of this blisse to haue: & they wol not, yet shul my seruauntes the werre wel susteyne in min helpe of mayntenaūce to the end. And they for theyr good trauaile shullen in reward so ben meded, that endelesse ioy body and soule togider in this shulen abyden, there is euer action of blisse withouten possible corrupcion, there is action perpetuel in werke without trauaile, there is euerlasting pastyse withouten any ol labour: continuel plite without ceasing coueited to endure. No tonge may tell ne herte maye thinke the leeste pointe of this blisse. God bringe me thider (q I than). Continueth wel (q she) to the ende, & thou might not fail than, for though thou spede not heare, yet shal the passiō of thy martred lyte ben wytē, and radde toforne the great Iupiter that God is of routhe, an highe in yholownesse of heuē, ther he sit in his tron and euer thou shalt forward ben holden amonge all these heuins for a knight, that mighteth with no penaunce ben dicomfited he is a verie martyr that liuingely goinge is gnawen to the bones. Certes (q I) these ben good wordes of comforte, a litell mine hert is reioysed in a mery wise. Ye (q she) and he that is in heuē felith more ioye, thā whan he firste herde therof speke. So it is (q I) but wist I the soth, that after disease comforte wolde folowe with blisse, so as ye haue often declared, I wold wel suffre this passion with yt better chere, but my thought ful forow is endelesse, to thinke howe I am cast out of a welefare, and yet daineth not this yuel none herte none hede to me warde throwe, whiche thinges wold gretly me by wayes of comforte disporte, to weten in my selfe a litel with other me ben ymoned: and my forowes peisen not in her balaunce the weight of a peasse: Slinges of her daunger, so heuily peysen, they drawe my causes so bye, that in her eyen they semen but light and right lytell.

O, for (q she) heuen with skies that soule cloudes maken and darke wethers, with great tempelles and huge, maketh the mery dayes with sodeyn thinninge sonnes. Also the yere with drayeth floures and beaute of herbes & of yearth. The same yeres maketh springes & iolyte in were so to renouel with peinted coloures, that earthe semed as gay as heuē. Sees that blaketh & with wawes throweth shippes, of which the liuing creatures for great peril of hem drowenright so the same sees maketh smothe waters and golden sailing, and comforteth hem, with noble hauā that firste were so ferde. Hale yt not (q she) lerned in thy youth that Iupiter hath in his warderobe do the garnementes of ioye and of forowe: what wost thou howe soone he wol turne of thee that garmente of care, and clothe the in blisse: Parde it is not ferre fro the. Lo an olde prouerbe alleged by many wise: whan bale is greatest, than is bote a nie boxe. wherof wylt thou dismaye: hope wel and serue well, and that shal the saue, with thy good byleue. Ye, ye (q I) yet se I not by reason howe this blisse is cōming, I wot it is contingent, it maye fal an other. O (q she) I haue mokel to done to clere thine vnderstāding and voide these errours out of thy mynde, I woll prouc it by reason thy wo maie not alway enduren. Euery thinge kindely (q she) is gouerned & ruled by the heuenly bodies, whiche hauen ful werching here on erth, and after course of these bodyes, all course of your doynges here ben gouerned and ruled by kind. Thou woste well by cours of planettes all your dayes procedē, & to euerich of singuler houres be enterchaunged stondemele about, by submitted worchyng naturelly to suffre, of whiche chaunges cometh these transitorie tymes, that maketh reuoluing of your yeres thus stoundmele, euery hath ful might of woorchinge, till all seuen han hadde her cours about. Of whiche worchinges and possession of houres, the dayes of the weke haue take her names, after denominacion in these seuen planettes. Lo your sōday ginneth at the firste houre after noone on the saturday, in whiche houre is thā the sonne in ful might of worchyng, of whō sonday taketh this name. Ner him soloweth Venus, and after Mercurius, & than the Moone, so than Saturnus, after whō Iouis & than Mars & ayen than the Sonne, & so forthe be. xxiiii. houres togider, in whiche houre ginning in the. ii. day stāte ỳ Moon, as maister for that time to rule, of whō mōday taketh his name, and this course soloweth of al other dayes generally in doinge. This course of nature of these bodyes chaūging, stinte at a certaine terme, limitted by their first kind, & of hem al gouernemētes in this elementedworld proceden, as in sprynges, constellatiōs, engēdrures, & al that folowen kind and reason, wherfore the course that foloweth sorow and ioy, kindely moten entrechangen their tymes, so that alway on wele as alway on wo may not endure. Thy sect thou appertely thy sorowe into wele mote ben chaunged, wherfore in soche case to better side euermore enclin thou shuldest Trewly nexte the ende of sorowe anon entreth ioye, by maner of necessite, it wol ne may non other betide, and so thy cōtigence is disproued: if thou holde this opinion any more, thy wit is right leud. Wherfore in ful concluſiō of al this, thilke Margarite thou desirest, hath bē to the dere in thy herte, and for her hast thou suffred many thoughtfull diseases, hereafter shall be cause of mokell myrth and ioy, and lohe how glad cāst thou bene, and cease al thy passed heuinesse with manyfolde ioyes. And than wol I as blithly here the speaken thy myrthes in ioy, as I nowe haue yharde thy sorowes and thy complaintes And if I nowe in aughte thy ioy encrease, by my trouthe on my side, shal nat be leaued for no maner trauaile, that I with al my mightes, right blithly wol helpe and euer ben redy you both to please. And thā thāked I that lady with al goodly maner that I worthely coude, & trewly I was greatly reioysed in myne herte, of her faire behestes, and profered me to be flawe in all that she me wold ordein whyl my life lested.

Me thinketh (q I) that ye haue right wel declared, that way to the knot shuld not ben in none of these disprouig thinges, & nowe order of our purpose this asketh, ȳ ye shuld me shewe if any way be thither, & which thilke way shuld ben, so ȳ openly may be seyn ȳ very rye way in ful cōfutiō of these other thiges

Thou shalt (q she) vnderstande, that one of thre lyues (as I firste said) euery creature of mankind is sprongen, and so forth procedeth. These lyues bē thorow names departed in thre maner of kindes, as bestialliche, manlyche, and resonabliche, of whiche two ben vsed by fleshely body, and the thirde by his soule. Bestial amonge resonables is forboden in euery lawe and euery secte, but he in christen & other, for euerye wight dispiseth hem that lyueth by lustes and delites, as him that is thral and bounden seruaūte to thinges right foule, soche been compted werse than men, he shal nat in their degree ben rekened, ne for soche one alowed. Heritikes saine they chosen life bestial, that voluptuoustye lyuē, so that (as I first saide to the) in manly and resonable liuinges, our mater was to declare, but manly lyfe in lyuing after flesh, or els fleshly wates to chese may nat blisse in this knot be cōquered, as by reason it is proued. Wherfore by resonable like he must nedes it haue sithe a way is to this knotte, but nat by the first tway lyues, wherfore nedes mote it bē to the thirde and for to lyue in flesche but nat after flesche, is more resonablich than mālyche rekened by clerkes. Therfore how this way cometh in I wol it blithely declare.

Se nowe (q she) that these bodily goods of manliche liuinges, pelden sorowfully froūdes and smertāde houres. Who so wel remēbre him to their endes, in their worchinges they ben thoughtful & sorie. Right as a bee ȳ hathe had his honie, anone at his flight beginneth to stinge: So thilke bodyly goodes at the laste mote away, and than sting they at her goinge, wherthroughe entreth and clene bodeth al blisse of this knot.

Forsothe (q I) me thinketh I am wel serued, in shewing of these wordes. Although I hadde lyttell in respecte amonge other greate and worthy, yet had I a faire parcel, as me thought for the tyme, in forthering of my sustenaunce, whiche while it dured, I thought me hauing mokel hony to mine estate. I had richesse sufficiauntly to weine nede. I had dignite to be reuerenced in worthip. Power me thought that I had to kepe fro min enemies, & me semed to shine inglory of renome, as manhode asketh in meane, for no wighte in myne administracyon, coude non yuels ne trechery by sothe cause on me putte. Lady your selue weten wel, that of tho confederacies maked by my soueraine, I nas but a seruaunt, and yet mokel meane folke woll fully ayenste reason thilke maters mainteine, in which maintenaunce glorien them self, and as often ye hauen saide, therof ought nothing in yuel to be laide to me wardes, sithen as repentaunt I am tourned, and no more I thinke, neither tho thiges ne none soch other to sustene, but vtterly distroye without medling maner, in all my mightes. Now am I now call

cast out of all swetenes of blisse, and mischeuously stongen my passed ioye: Sorowfully must I bewaile, and liue as a wretche. Euery of tho ioyes, is turned into his contrary: for richesse, now haue I pouertie, for dignitie now am I enprisoned, in stede of power, wretchednesse I suffre, & for glory of renome I am now dispised, and foulliche hated: thus hath farne fortune, that sodainly am I ouerthrowen, and out of all welth disposed. Truely me thinketh this wale in entree is right harde, God graunt me better grace et it be al passed, thother wale lady, me thought right swete. Now certes (q Loue) me list for to chide: what aileth thy darcke dulnesse? woll it not in clerenesse been sharped. Haue I not by many reasons to thee shewed, soch bodily goodes fallen to yeue blesse, their might so ferforth woll not stretch? Shame (q he it is to saie) thou liest in thy wordes. Thou ne hast wit but right few, that these bodily goodes hadde all atones, commenlie theidwellen not togither. He that plentie hath in riches, of his kinne is a shamed: another of linage right noble and well know, but pouertie him handeleth, he were leuer unknowe. In other hath these, but renome of peoples praising maie he not haue, ouer all he is hated, & defamed of thinges righte foule. In other is faire and semely, but dignitie him faileth: and he that hath dignite scrobed or lame, or els mishapen, and foully dispiled. Thus partable these goodes dwellen, commonly in one houshoulde been thei but selde. Lo how wretched is your truste, on thing that woll not accord. Me thinketh & depest thilk plite thou wer in selines of fortune, and thou saiest for that that selines is departed, thou art a wretch. Then foloweth this upon thy wordes, euery soule reasonable of mā, maie not die, and if death endeth selines, and maketh wretches, as needes of fortune maketh it an end. Thā soules after death of the body, in wretchednes should liuen. But we knowe many that han getten the blisse of heauen after their death. Howe then maie this life makē men blisfull, that when it palleth, it yeueth no wretchenesse, & many times blisse, if in this life he con liue as he should. And wolt thou accompt with fortune, that now at the first she hath doen the tene & sorowe: if thou loke to the maner of all glad things and sorowful, thou maist not naie it, that yet, and namely now thou standest in noble plite in a good ginning, & good forthy going hereafter. And if thou wen to be a wretch, for soch welth is passed, why then art thou not well fortunate, for badde thinges & anguis wretchednes been passed. Art thou now come first into the hostrie of this life, or els & both of this world, art thou now a sodain gest into this wretched exile: wenest there be any thing in this yerthly stable: Is not thy first arest passed, that brought thee in mortall sorow: Been these not mortall things agon, with ignorance of beastial wit, & hast received reason in knowing of vertue: what comforte is in thy harte: The knowing liberly in my seruice be grounded And wost thou not wel as I said, that death maketh ende of all fortune: what then, stādest thou in noble plite, litle hede or reching to take, if thou let fortune passe ding, or els that she flie when her list, now by thy liue. Parde a mā hath nothyng to lese as his life and for to holde that he doeth all his cure & diligēt trauaile. Then saie I thou art blisfull and fortunate sely, if thou knowe thy goodes, that thou hast yet be loued, whiche nothing may doubt, that thei ne been more worthy thā thy life: what is that (q I) good contemplacion (q she) of well doyng in vertue, in time coming, bothe in pleasaunce of me, and of thy Margarite perle: hastily thyn hart in full blisse, wher shalbe eased. Therfore dismay the not, fortune in hate greuously ayenst thy bodilie person, ne yet to great tempest hath she not sent to thee, sithen the holding cables and ankers of thy life, holdē by knitting so faste, that thou discomforte the nought of time that is now, ne dispaire thee not of time to come, but yeuen the comfort in hope of well doing, and of getting again the double of thy lesing, with encreasing loue of thy Margarit perle therto. For this hiderto & hast had al her full daunger, and so thou might amend al that is misse, & all defautes that somtime thou diddest, and that now in all thy time, to that ilke margarite in full seruice of my lore, thine hart hath continued, wherfore she ought moche the rather, encline fro het daungerous seat These thinges been yet knit, by the holding anker in thy liue, and holden mote thei: To God I praie al these things at ful been performed. For while this anker holdeth, I hope & shalte safly escape, & while thy true meaning seruice about byng, in dispite of all false meaners, that thee of newe haten, for this true seruice, thou art now entered.

CErtes (q I) emong thynges I asked a question, which was the waie to the knot. Truelie ladie how so it be, I tẽpt you with questions & answeres, in speking of my first seruice, I am now in ful purpose in the prick of the hart, ꝑ thilk seruice was an emprisonment, & al waie bad & naughtie, in no maner to be desired. Ne that in getting of the knot, maie it nothing auaile. A wise gentil hart loketh after vertue, & non other bodily ioies alone. And bicause tofore this, in the waies I was set, I wot well my self I haue erred, and of the blisse failed, and so out of my waie huge ly haue I ronne. Certes (q she) that is soth, and there thou hast miswente, eschue that pathe from hence forward I rede. Wonder I truelie, why the mortalle folke of this worlde, seche these waies outforthe, and it is priued in your self. Lo how ye been confounded with errour and follie. The knowing of very cause and waie, is goodnes and vertue. Is there any thing to the more precious then thy self? Thou shalt haue in thy power, that thou wouldest never lese, & that in no waie maie be taken fro thee, and thilk thing is that is cause of this knotte. And if death mowe it not reue, more thã an earthly creature, thilke thing then abideth with thy self soule. And so our cõclusion, to make soch a knot thus getten, abideth with this thing, and with the soule, as longe as thei laste. I soule dieth neuer, vertue and goodnes euermore with the soule endureth, and this knot is perfite blisse. Then this soul in this blisse, endlesse shall enduren. Thus shul hartes of a true knot been eased: thus shull their soules been pleased: thus perpetually in ioye shull thei sing. In good trouth (q I) here is a good beginning, yeue vs more of this waie. (q she) I saied to thee not long sithen, that reasonable life was one of three thinges, and it was proued to the soule. Euery soule of reason, hath twoo thinges of steryng life, one in vertue, and an other in the bodilie worthyng: and whan the soule is the maister ouer the bodie, then is a manne maister of himself: and a man to be a master ouer himself, liueth in vertue and in goodnesse, and as reason of vertue teacheth. So the soule and the body worthing vertue together, liuen reasonable life, whiche clerkes clepen felicitie in liuing, and therein is the hie waie to this knot. These olde Philosophers, that hadden no knowyng of Diuine grace of kindely reason alone, wenden that of pure nature, without any help of grace, me might haue ichoned the other liuinges, reasonablie haue I liued: and for I thinke heraste, if God woll (and I haue space) thilk grace after my leude knowyng declare: I leaue it as at this tyme. But (as I saied) he that out foorthe looketh after the waies of this knotte, conning with whiche he shold knowe the waie inforthe, slepeth for the tyme, wherefore he ꝑ woll this waie know, muste leaue the looking after false waies outforthe, and open the iyen of his conscience, and vnclose his hart. Seest not he that hath trust in the bodily life, is so busie bodily woundes, to anoint in hepyng frõ smert (for all out maie thei not be healed) that of woundes in his true vnderstanding, he taketh no hede, the knowing euẽ forth slepeth so harde, but anone as in knowing awake, then ginneth the priuie medicines, for healyng of his true entente, inwardes lightlie healeth conscience, if it be well hãdled. Then must nedes these waies come out of the soul by steryng life of the bodie, and els maie no man come to perfite blisse of this knot: and thus by this meane, he shal come to ꝑ knot, & to the perfite fulnesse that he wende haue had in bodily goodes outforth. Ye (q I) shall he haue bothe knot, riches, power, dignitie, and renome in this maner wair? Ye (q she) that shall I shewe thee. Is he not riche that hath sufficiaunce, and hath the power that no man maie amaistrien? Is not greate dignitie to haue worship and reuerence? And hath he not glory of renome, whose name perpetuall is during, and out of nomber in comparacion? These be the things that mẽ wenen to getten outforthe (q I). Ye (q she) thei that lokẽ after a thing that nought is, thereof in all ne in partie, longe mowe thei gapen after: that is soth (q I:) therefore (q she) thei that sechen gold in grene trees, and wene to gader precious stones emong vines and laine her nettes in mountaines to fish, and thinken to hunt in depe seas after hart and hind, and sechen in yearth thilke thinges that surmounteth heauen, what maie I of hem saie? But folithe ignorance, misledeth wandring wretches by vncouth waies, that shullen be forleten, & maketh hem blind fro the right pathe of true waie, that should been vsed. Therefore in generall errour in mankinde, departeth thilke goodes

by misse seching, which he should haue hole and he sought by reason. Thus goeth he begiled of that he sought, in his hode nō haue blowe a tape. Now (q I) if a man be vertuous, and al in vertue liueth, how hath he al these thinges? That shall I prouen (q she) what power hath any man, to let an other ofliuing in vertue? For prisonment or any other disease, he take it paciently, discomfiteth he not, the tiraunte ouer his soule, no power maie haue: then hath ꝑ man so tourmented soche power, that he will be discomfite, ne ouercome maie he not been, sithen pacience in his soule ouercometh, & as not ouercomen. Soche thing that maie not be a maistred, he hath nede to nothyng, for he hath sufficiaunce inow to help himself. And thilke thing that thus hath power and sufficiaunce, and no tiraunte maie it reue, and hath dignitie to set at naught all thynges, here it is a great dignitie that death maie a maistrie. Wherfore thilke power sufficiance so enclosed with dignitie, by all reason renome must haue. Thus is thilk riches with sufficiaunce ye should loke after: this is thilk worshipful dignitie ye shuld coueit: this is ꝑ like power of might, in which ye shuld trust: this is thilke renome of glory, that endlesse endureth, and al nis but substaunce in vertuous liuing. Certes (q I) all this is sothe, and so I se well that vertue with ful gripe, encloseth al these things. Wherfore in soth I maie saie, by my troth, vertue of my Margarite, brought me first into your seruice, to haue knitting with that ie well, not sodain longinges ne folkes smale wordes, but onely our conuersacion together: & then I seing thentent of her true meaning, with flourishing vertue of pacīce, that she bled nothing in euill, to quite the wicked leasynges, that false tōges oft in her haue laied. I haue sey it my self, goodly forgeuenesse hath sponge out of her hart, whitie and accorde aboue al other thinges, she desireth in a good meke maner, and suffreth many wicked tales.

IRuelie ladie, to you it were a great worship, that soch thinges by due chastisment were amended. Ye (q she) I haue the excused, all soche thinges as yet mow not be redressed: ti ꝑ Margarites vertue, I commende well the more, that paciently soche anoies suffreth. Dauid king was meke and suffred mokell hate, and many euil speaches: no dispite ne shame, that his enemies him deden, might not moue pacience out of his hart, but euer in one plite mercie he bled. Wherfore God himself take reward to the thinges, & theron soche punishment let fal. Truely by reason it ought be ensample of drede, to al maner peoples mirthe. I manne vengeable in wrath, no gouernance in punishmēt ought to haue. Plato had a cause his seruaunte to scourge, and yet cleped he is neighboure, to performe the doing, himself would not, ielt wrath had him a maistred, and so might he haue laid on to moche: euermore grounded vertue sheweth the entent fro within. And truly I wot well for her goodnes & vertue, thou hast desired my seruice, to her pleasant well the more, and thy self therto fully hast profered. Good Ladie (q I) is vertue the hie waie to this knot, that long we haue handled: ye forsoth (q she) and without vertue, goodly this knotte maie not be gotten. Ah now I see (q I) how vertue in me faileth, & I as a sere tree, without burioning or frut alwaie welke, and so I stonde in dispaire of this noble knotte, for vertue in me hath no maner working. I wide where about haue I traueiled. Peace (q she) of thy firste waie thy trauaile is in idell, and as touching the seconde waie, I se well thy meanyng. Thou wouldest cōclude me if thou couldest, bicause I brought thee to seruice, & euery of my seruauntes I helpe to come to this blisse, as I said here before: and thou saidest thy self, thou mightest not be holpē as thou wenest bicause that vertue in the faileth. And this blisse perfitly wout vertue, maie not be gotten. ꝑ wenest of these wordes, contradiction to folowe. Parde at ꝑ hardest I haue no seruant, but he be vertuous in dede & thought I brought thee in my seruice, yet art ꝑ not my seruaunt: but I saie, thou mist so werch in vertue hereafter, that then shalt thou be my seruaunt, & as for my seruaunt accompted. For habite maketh no Monke, ne wearing of gilt spurres, maketh no knight. Neuer the later, in cōfort of thine hart, yet wol I otherwise answere. Certes ladie (q I tho) so ye muste needes, or els I had nigh caught soche a cordiacle for sorowe, I wot it well I shuld it neuer haue recouered. And therfore now I praie to enforme me in this, or els I hold me without recouerie. I maie not lōg endure, till this lessō be learned, and of this mischief the remedie knowen. Now (q she) be not wroth be, for there is no man on liue, that that maie come to a precious thyng, longe coueited, but he somtime suffre tenefull diseases, and weneſt thy self to been vnliche to al other: That maie not been: and with the more sorowe that a thynge is getten, the more he hath ioye, the ilke thyng afterwardes to kepe, as it fareth by childrē in schole, that for learnyng arne beaten, when their lesson thei forgetten, commōly after a good disciplinyng with a yerde, thei keepe right well doctrine of their schole.

Right with these woordes, on this Ladie I threwe vp mine eyen, to see her countinaunce and her cheare, and she aperceiuing this fantasie in mine harte, ganne her semblaunte goodlie on me cast, and said in this wise.

It is well knowe, bothe to Reason and Experience in dooyng, euery actiue woorcheth on his passiue, and when thei been togither, actiue and passiue, been ieaped by these Philosophers, if fire bee in place, chafyng thyng able to bee chafed or heate, and the ilke thynges been sette in soche a distaunce, that the one may werche, the other shall suffre. The ilke Margarite thou desirest, is full of vertue, and able to bee actiue in goodnesse: But euery herbe sheweth his vertue, outforthe from within, the Sonne yeueth light, that thinges maie bee seye.

Euery fire heateth the ilke thyng that it neighed, and it be able to be heat, vertue of this Margarite outfoorthe wrethe, and nothynge is more able to suffer woorchyng, or woorke catche of the actife, but passife of thesame actife, and no passife to vertues of this Margarite, but thee in all my donet canne I finde, so that her vertewe muste needes on thee werche, in what place euer thou bee, within distaunce of her worthinesse, as her very passife thou art closed: but vertue maie thee nothyng profite, but thy desire bee performed, and all thy sorowes ceased. Ergo through werchyng of her vertue, thou shalt easelie been holpen, and driuen out of all care, and welcome to this long by thee desired.

Ladie (q I) this is a good lesson, in ginnyng of my ioye: But wete ye well forsoth, though I suppose she haue moche vertue, I would my spousale wer proued, and then maie I liue out of doubte, and reioyce me greatlie, in thinkyng of tho vertues so shewed. I heard thee saie (q she) at my beginning, when I receiued thee first for to serue that thy iewell, thilke Margarite thou desirest, was closed in a muskle, with a blewe shell. Ye forsothe (q I) so I said, and so it is. Well (q she) euery thyng kindelie, sheweth it self, this iewell closed in a blewe shell, excellence of colours, sheweth vertue from with in, and so euery wight should rather looke, to the proper vertue of thynges, then to his forayne gooddes. If a thyng bee engendred of good matter, comonlie and for the more parte it followeth, after the congelemente vertue of the first matter, and it be not corrupte with vices, to proceade with encrease of good vertues: Ehe right so it fareth of badde. Truely greate excellence in vertue of linage, for the more part discendeth by kind to the succession in vertues to folowe. Wherfore I saie, the colours of euery Margarite, sheweth from within the finesse in vertue.

Kindely heauen, when merie weather is a lofte, appereth in mannes eye of colour in Blewe, stedfastnesse in peace, betokenyng within and without: Margarite is engendred by heauenlie Dewe, and sheweth in it self, by fineneſſe of colour, whether the engendrure, wer maked on morowe or on eue: thus saieth kinde of this peerie. This precious Margarite that thou seruest, sheweth it self discēded by nobley of vertue, from his heauenliche dewe, nourished and congeled in mekenesse, that mother is of all vertues, and by werkes that men, seen withoutrn the signification of the coloures, been shewed mercie and pitie in the hart, with peace to al other, and al this is iclosed in a Muskle, who so readilie these vertues loken. All thyng that hath soule, is reduced into good by meane thynges, as thus: Into GOD manne is reduced by soules reasonable, and so foorthe beastes, or bodies that mowe not mouen, after place been reduced into man, by beastes meue that mouen from place to place: so that thilke bodies that han selyng soules, and moue not frō places, holden the lowest degree of solyng thynges in selyng, and soche been reduced into man by meanes. So it folowe th, the muskle as mother of all vertues, halte the place of mekenesse, to his lowest degree discendeth doune of heuen, and there by a maner of virgin engendrure, arne these Margarites engendred, & afterward cōgeled. Made not mekenesse so lowe the hie heauen, so enclose & catchout thereof so noble a dewe, that after congelement a Margarite, with endles vertue and euerlasting ioy, was with ful vessel of grace yeuen to euery creature, that goodly would it receiue. Certes (quod I) these thinges been right noble, I haue er this herde these same sawes. Then (quod she) thou woste well these thynges been sothe: Ye forsothe (quod I) at the full. Now (quod she) that this Margarite is ful of vertue, it is well proued, wherefore some grace, some mercie emong other vertues, I wotte right well on thee shall discende: ye (quod I) yet would I haue better declared vertues in this Margarite, kindelie to been grounded. That shall I shewe thee (quod she) and thou wouldest it learne: Learne (quod I) what needeth soche woordes: wete ye not well Ladie your self, that all my cure, all my diligence, and all my might, haue tourned by your counsaile, in pleasance of that perle, al my thought and all my study, with your helpe desireth, in worshippe the ilke iewell, to encrease al my trauaill, and all my busines in your seruice, this Margarite to glad in somehalue: me were leuer her honour, her pleasaunce, and her good cheare, thorowe me for to be maintained and kept, and I of soche thynge in her likyng to bee cause, then all the wealthe of bodily goodes ye could reckon. And would neuer God, but I put my self in greate ieopardie of al that I would, that is now no more but my life alone, rather then I should suffer thilke iewel in any poincte been blemished, as ferre as I maie suffre, and with my mightes stretche. Soche thing (quod she) maie mokel further thy grace, and thee in my seruice auaunce. But now (quod Loue) wilt thou graunte me thilke Margarite to been good: O good good (quod I) why kept ye me and tene with soche maner speache: I would graunte that, though I should anone die, and by my trouth light in the quarell, if any wighte would counterpleade. It is so moche the lighter (quod Loue) to proue our entent. Ye (quod I) but yet would I heare, how ye would proue, that she were good by reasonable skill, that it mowe not been denied, for although I knowe, and so doeth many other, manyfolde goodnes and vertue, in this Margarite been printed, yet some menne there been, that no goodnesse speaken: and where euer your woordes been heard, and your reasons been shewed, soche euill speakers Ladie, by auctoritie of your excellence, shullen been stopped and aswamed. And more thei that hã none acquaintaunce in her persone, yet mowe thei know her vertues, and been the more enformed in what wise thei mowe set their hartes, whẽ hem lift into your seruice any entree make: for truely all this to begin, I wote well my self, that thilke iewell is so precious perle, as a womanly woman in her kinde, in whõ of goodnesse, of vertue, and also of aunswering, shappe of limmes, and fetures so well in all poinctes accordyng, nothing faileth: I leue that kinde her made with greate studie, for kinde in her persone nothyng hath foryet, and that is well seen. In euery good wightes harte, she hath grace of commendyng, and of vertuous praisyng. Alas that euer kinde made her deadlie, saue onelie in that I wote well, that Nature in formyng of her in nothyng hath erred.

Certes (quod Loue) thou hast well begonne, and I aske thee this question: Is not in generalle euery thyng good: I not (quod I). No (quod she) saue not GOD euerie thing that he made, and werne righte good. Then is wonder (quod I) howe euill thynges commen a place, sithen that all thinges weren right good. Thus (quod she) I woll declare euerichе qualitie, and euery accion, and euery thing that hath any maner of beyng, it is of God, and GOD it made, of whom is all goodnesse, and all beyng, of hym is no badnesse: badde to bee is naught: Good to be is somewhat, and therfore good and beeyng, is one in vnderstanding. How maie this bee (quod I) for often han shrewes me assailed, and mokell badnesse therein haue I founden, and so me semeth bad, to bee somewhat in kinde. Thou shalt (quod she) vnderstande that soche maner badnesse, which is vsed to purlie wrong doers is somewhat, and God it made, and beeyng hath, and that is good: other badnes no beyng hath vterlie, it is in the negatiue of somewhat, and that is naughte, and nothinge beyng. The parties essenciall of beyng, arne saied in double wise, as that it is, and these parties been found in euery creature, for all thing a this halfe the firste beyng, is beyng through participaciõ, taking partie of being, so that euery creature is difference, betwen beyng, and of him through whom it is and his owne beyng: right as euery good is a maner of beyng, so is it good through beyng, for it is naught other to be: and euery thing though it be good, it is not of hymselfe good. but it is good by that, it is ordinable to the greate goodnes. This dualitie after Clerkes determillion, is founden in euery creature, bee it neuer so single of onhed. Ye (q I) but there as it is saied, that God saue euery thyng of his makyng, and were right good, as your self said to me, not long tyme sithē. I aske whether euery creature is saied good, through goodnesse vnformed, either els formed, and afterwarde if it bee accepte vtterly good. I shall saie thee (q she) these greate passed clerkes, han deuided good, in to good being alone, & yt is nothing but good, for nothyng is good in that wise, but God. Also in good by participaciō, and that is icleaped good, for farre sette, and representatiue of goodlie goodnesse, and after this manifolde good is said, that is to saie, good in kinde, and good in gendre, and good of grace, and good of ioye.

Of good in kind Augustine saith, al that been, been good: but peraunter thou wouldest wete, whether of hemself it bee good, or els of an others goodnes, for naturell goodnesse of euery substaunce, is nothing els thā his substaunciall beyng, whiche is icleaped goodnesse, after comparison that he hath to his first goodnesse, so as it is inductatife, by meanes into the firste goodnesse. Boece sheweth this thing at the full, that this name good, is in generall name in kinde, as it is comparisoned generally to his principalle ende, whiche is God, knotte of all goodnes. Euery creature crieth God vs made, and so thei han full apeted to thilke God by affection, soche as to hem belongeth: and in this wise all thynges been good, of the greate GOD, whiche is good alone. This wonder thing (q I) how ye haue by many reasons proued, my first waie to bee errour and misgoyng, and cause of badnesse and feble meanyng, in the ground ye aledged to be rooted: whence is it, that soche badnesse hath springes, sithen all thinges thus in generall ben good, & badnesse hath no beyng, as ye haue declared: I wene if all thynges been good, I might then with the firste waie, in that good haue ended, and so by goodnesse haue comen to blisse in your seruice desired. All thing (q she) is good by beyng in participacion, out of the first goodnesse, which goodnesse is corrupte by badnesse, and bad meanyng maners: God hath in good thynges, that thei been good by beyng, & not in euel, for there is absence of rightfull loue, for badnesse is nothing only but euil wil of the vser, and through gilles of the doer, wherefore at the ginning of ỳ worlde, euery thing by himself was good, and in vniuersall thei werne right good. In ye or a bande is fairer, and better in a bodie sette in his kindlie place, then from the bodie discouered. Euery thing in his kindlie place beyng kindlie, good doth werche, and out of that place voided, it dissolueth and is defouled hym selue. Our noble GOD in gliterande wise by armonie this worlde ordeined, as in purtreitures, florted with colours medled, in whiche blache, and other darcke colours, commenden the golden & the Assured painture, euery put in kindely place, one beside an other, more for other glitereth: right so little faire, maketh right faire more glorious, and right so of goodnes, and of other thynges in vertue. wherefore other bad, and not so good perles as this Margarite, that we hā of this matter, yeuen by the aire little goodnesse, and little vertue, righte mokell goodnesse, and vertue in thy Margarite to been proued, in shining wise to be fond & shewed. How should euer goodnes of peace haue ben knowe, but if vnpeace somtime reigne, and mokell euill wrothe? Howe should mercie been proued, and no trespasse were, by due iustificaciō to be punished? Therefore grace and goodnesse of a wighte is founde, the sorowful hartes in good meaning to endure, been comforted, vnite, and accorde betwene hartes knitte in ioye to abide.

What wenest thou that I reioce, or els accoumpte hym emong my seruauntes, that pleaseth Pallas, in vndoyng of Mercurie, all be it that to Pallas he be knitte by title of Lawe, not accordyng to the realonable conscience: and Mercurie in dooyng, haue grace to been suffered: or els hym that weneth the Moone, for fairenesse of the eue Sterre. Lo, otherwhile by nightes light of the Moone, greatlie comforteth in darcke thoughtes and blinde, vnderstandyng of loue, yeueth greate gladnesse: who so liste no bileue, whē a soth tale is shewed, adewe and a deblis his name is entred. Wise folke and worthie in gentillesse, bothe of vertue and of liuyng, yeuen full credence in sothenes of loue with a good hart, there as good evidence

euidence or experience in doinge, shewethe not ꝑ contrarie. Thus mightest thou haue tul preue in thy Margarites goodnesse, by cõmendement of other iewels badnesse, and euelnesse in doinge. Stoundemele diseases greueth seuerall houres in ioye.

Nowe by my trouthe (ꝙ I) this is wel declared, that my Margarite is good, for sythen other been good, and she passeth many other in goodnes and vertue, wherthrough by maner necessarye she muste be good: and goodnesse of this Margarite is nothinge elles but vertue, wherfore she is vertuous, and if there failed anye vertue in anye side, there were lacke of vertue: badde nothinge els is ne maye bee: but lacke and wante of good and goodnesse, and so shoulde she haue that same lacke, that is to sayne badde, and that maye not be, for she is good, and that is good me thinketh all good: and so by consequence me semeth vertuous, and no lacke of vertue to haue. But the Sonne is not know but he shine, ne vertuous herbes but they haue her kinde werchinge, ne vertue but it stretche in goonesse or profite to another, is no vertue. Than by al waies of reason, sithen mercie and pite ben moste commended amonge other vertues, and they might neuer been shewed refreshemẽt of helpe, and of comforte, but nowe at my moste nede, and that is the kinde werkinge of these vertues: trewly I wene I shall not varie from these helpes.

Fyre and if he yeue none heate, for fire is not demed. The Sonne but he shine, for sonne is not accompted. Water but it wete, the name shal ben chaunged. Vertue but it werche, of goodnes dothe it faile, sin to his cõtrarie the name shal bereuersed, and these ben impossible: wherfore the contradictory that is necessarie, nedes must I leue. Certes (ꝙ she) in thy person and out of thy mouth these wordes lien well to been said, and in thine vnderstandinge to be leued, as in entent of this Margarite alone: and here now my speech inconclusiõ of these wordes.

IN these thynges (ꝙ she) that me list nowe to shewe openly, shal be founde the matter of thy sickenesse, & what shal been the medicin that maye be thy sorowes lisse and comfort, as well thee as all other that amisse haue erred, and out of the waye walked, so that any drop of good will in amendement ben dwelled in their hertes. Prouerbes of Salomon openly teacheth, howe somtime an innocent walkid by the waye in blindenesse of a derke night, whome mette a woman (if it be lekely to saye) as a strumpete arated, redily purueied in turning of thoughtes with veine janglinges, and of reste inpacient dissimulacion of my termes, saiyng in this wise: come and be we dronke of our swete pappes, vse we coueitous collinges. And thus drawen was this innocente, as an ore to the larder. Lady (ꝙ I) to me this is a queinte thinge to vnderstande: I praye you of this parable declare me the entente. This innocente (ꝙ she) is a scholer lerninge of my lore, in seching of my blisse, in which thinge the daye of his thought turninge enclineth in to eue, and the sonne of verye light failinge, maketh darke night in his conninge. Thus in derkenesse of manye doutes he walketh, and for blindenesse of vnderstanding, he ne wote in what waye he is in: forsothe soche one may lightly ben begiled. To whome came loue fained, not clothed of my liuery, but vnlekful lustie habite, with softe speche and mery, and with faire honied wordes heretikes and misse meninge people, shleren and wimplen their errours. Austen withnesseth of an heretike that in his firste beginninge, he was a man right experte in reasons, and swete in his wordes and the werkes miscordẽ. Thus fareth fayned loue in her first werchinges: thou knowest these thinges for trewe, thou hast hem proued by experience. Somtime in doinge to thin owne person, in whiche thing thou hafte founde matter of mokel disease, was not fained loue redily purueied, thy wittes to cath & tourne thy good thoughtes: trewly she hath wounded the conscience of manye, with flosshinge of mokell janglinge wordes: and good worthe thanked I it for no glose, I am gladde of my prudence thou haste so manly her veined. To me arte thou moche holden, that in thy kinde course of good meaninge I returne thy minde: I trowe ne had I shewed the thy Margarite, thou haddest neuer returned. Of firste in good perfite ioye was euer fayned loue impacient, as the water of Syloe, which euer more floweth with stilnesse and priui noise tyl it come nyghe the drinke, and than ginneth it so out of measure to boine, with nouelleries of chaungynge stormes, that in course of euery renninge, it is in pointe to spil al his circuit of cankes. Thus fained loue priuely at the fullest of his flowinge, newe stormes debate to araise. And al be it that Mercurius often with hole vnderstãding, knowen soche perillous matters, yet veneries so lustie ben and so leude in their wyttes, that in soche thinges right litel or naught don they sele, and writen and sryen to their felowes: here is blisse, here is ioye, and thus in to one same errour, mokel folke they drawen. Come they saine, and be we dronken of our pappes, that ben tallas and liyng glose of whiche nowe they not souke mylke of helthe, but deedly venym and poison, corruption of sorowe. Mylke of tallas, is venym of disceite: Mylke of liynge glose is venym of corrupcio. Lo what thinge cometh out of these pappes: vse we coueited collinges, desire we and meddle we falle wordes with sote, and sote with falle, truely this is the sorinesse of fained loue, nedes of these surlettes, slikenesse must folow. Thus as an ore to thy langorying deth wer thou drawen, the sote of the smoke hath the al desased. Euer the deper thou somtime wadest, the soner thou it founde: yf it had thee killed it had be litell wonder. But on that other side my trewe seruaunt not saynen ne disceiue conne, sothly their doing is open, my soundemẽt endureth, be the burthen neuer so greate, euer in one it lasteth: it yeueth lyke and blisfull goodnesse in the last endes, though the ginniges ben sharpe. Thus of two contraries, contrarie ben the effectes. And so thilke Margarite thou seruest, shal sene the by her seruice, out of perillous tribulacion delyuered, bycause of her seruice in to newe disease fallen, by hope of amendemente in the laste ende, with ioye to be gladded, wherfore of kinde pure, her mercy with grace of good helpe, shall she graunt, and elles I shal her so straine, that with pite shall she ben amaistred. Remembre in thine herte howe horrible somtyme to thine Margarite thou trespaset, and in a great wise ayenst her thou forfetest: clepe ayen thy minde, and knowe thine owne gyltes. What goodnes, what bountie, with mokell folowing pyte founde thou in that tyme? where thou not goodly accepted in to grace? By my plushynge was she to forgeuenesse enclined. And after I her stired to drawe the to house, and yet wendest thou vtterlie for euer haue ben refused. But wel thou wost, sithen that I in soche sharpe disease might so greately auayle, what thinkeste in thy wyt? Howe serre maye my witte stretch? And thou lach not on thy side I wol make the knotte: Certes in thy goodbering I woll accorde with the psauter. I haue founde Dauid in my seruice true, and with holy oyle of peace and of rest longe by him desired, vtterly he shal be anoynted. Truste wel to me, and I wol thee not faile. The lening of the first way wyth good hert of continuaunce, that I se in the grounded, this purpose to parfourme, draweth my by maner of constrainynge, that nedes must I ben thine helper: athough mirthe a whyle be taryed, it shal come at soche ceason, that thy thought shall been ioyed, and wolde neuer God, sithen thyne herte to my reasones arne allented, and openly haste confessed thyne amisse goynge, and nowe criest after mercy but yf mercy folowed: thy blisse shall ben redy ywis, thou ne wost how sone.

Nowe be a good chylde I rede. The kind of vertues in thy Margaryte rehersed, by strength of me in thy persone shul werche. Comfort the in thys, for thou mayst not miscarie. And these wordes said, she streight her on length and rested a while.

¶ Thus endeth the seconde booke, and here after folowyth the thide booke.

OF nombre saine these clerkes that it is naturel some of discret thinges, as in tellinge one two, thre, and so forth: but among all nombres thre is determined for moste certain. wherfore in nombre certaine this werke of my besye leudenesse, I thynke to ende and parfourme.

Ensample by this worlde in thre tymes is deuided: Of whiche the firste is cleped Demacian, that is to say, going out of trewaye, and all that tho dieden, in hell were thy punished for a mannes sinne, tyl grace and mercy sette hem thẽce, and there ended the first time. The second time lasteth from the comming of merciable grace, vntyl the ende of trasitorie time, in which is shewed the true way in forsoinge of the badde, and that is ycleped tyme of grace: & that thinge is not yeuen by deserte of yeldinge, one benefite for another, but onely through goodnesse of the yeuer of grace in thilke tyme. Who so can wel vnderstand, is shapen to be saued in soules blysse. The thirde tyme shal ginne whan transitorie thinges of worldes han made their ende, and that shal been in ioy, glory, and red both body and soule, that wel han deserued in the time of grace. And thus in that heuen togither shul they dwel perpetuelli, without any ymaginatife yuel many value. These times are figured by tho thre dayes, that our God was closed in yerthe, and in the thirde arose, shewinge our resurrectiō, to ioy and blisse of tho that it deseruen, by his merciable grace. So this leude booke in thre matters accordaunt to tho tymes, lightely by a good inseer maye been vnderstande, as in the firste erroure of mille going is shewed with sorowful pine, punished is cried after mercie. In the seconde is grace in good waye proued, which is failing without deserte, thilke first misse mending in correction of tho errours and euen waye to bringe with comforte of welfare, in to amendemente weringe. And in the thirde ioye and blisse, graunted to him that wel canne deserue it, and hath sauour of vnderstanding in the tyme of grace.

Thus in ioye of my thirde booke shall the matter be till it ende. But speciall cause I haue in my herte to make this processe of a Margarit perle, that is so precious a gēme with clere and liteli of whiche stones or iewel, the tonges of vs English people tourneth the right names, & clepeth hem Margeryte perles: thus varieth our speche from many other langages. For trewely Latin, frenche, & manye mo other langages cleapeth hem Margery perles, the name Margarite or Margrit peerles: wherfore in that denominacion I woll me accorde to other mens tonges, in that name cleping. These clerkes that treaten of kindes, & studien out the propertie ther of thinges, saine ỹ Margarit is a lytel white perle, throughout holow and rounde, & vertuous, and on the see sides in the more Britain in muskle shelles of the heuenly dewe the best ben engēdred: in which by experiēce ben founde thre faire vertues. One is it, yeueth comforte to the felynge spirites in bodily persones of reason. Another is good, it is profitable helth ayenst passions of sorie mens hertes. And the thirde it is nedefull and noble in staunchinge of bloode, there elles to moche wolde out ren. To which perle and vertues me list to liken at this tyme Philosop, bye with her thre speces, that is naturell and moral, and resonable: of which thinges bereth what sain these great clerkes. Philosophie is knowinge of deuinly and manly thinges ioyned with studie of good liuing, and this stante in two thinges, that is conninge and opinion: conninge is whan a thing by certaine reason is conceiued. But wretches, and fooles and leude men, many wil conceiue a thing and maintain it as for a sothe, though reason be in the contrarie. wherfore conninge is a straunger. Opiniō is while a thing is in non certaine, & hidde frome mens bery knowleginge, and by no parfite reason fully declared, as thus: if the sōne be so mokel as men wenen, or elsis it be more than the erthe. For in sothnes the certaine quantite of ỹ planet is vnknowen to erthly dwellers, and yet by opinion of some menne it is holden for more thā midde erth. The firste spece of Philosophye is naturel, which in kindely thingnes treaten, and sheweth causes of heuen, and strength of kindely course: as by arsmetrike, geometry, musike, and by astronomye, techeth waies and course of heuens, of planetes and of sterres aboute heuen and erthe, and other elementes. The seconde spece is moral, whiche in order of liuing maners techeth, and by resō proueth vertues of soule moste worthy in our liuing, whiche been Prudence, Justice, Temperaunce, and strength. Prudence is goodly wisedome in knowinge of thinges. Strength voydeth al aduersitees aliche euen. Temperaunce distroieth bestiall lyuing with easie bearing. And Justice right fully iudgeth, and iudginge departeth to euery wight that that is his owne. The thirde spece tourneth in to reason of vnderstanding, al thinges to be said soth and discussed, & that in two thinges is deuided: one is art, another is rhetorique, in which two al lawes of mans reason been grounded or els maintained. And for this booke is all of loue, and therafter beareth his name, & Philosophie a lawe must here to accordē by their clergial discripcions: as Philosophie for loue of wisedome is declared: Lawe for maintainaunce of peace is holde, and these with loue muste nedes acorden, therfore of hem in this place haue I touched. Orde of homly thinges and honest maner of liuing in vertue, with rightfull iudgemēt in causes, and profitable administracion in comunalties of realmes and cities, by euenhede profitably to raine, nat by singuler auauntage, ne by priuy enuy, ne by folein purpose in couetise of worship or of goodes, ben disposed in open rule shewed, by loue, Philosophie, and law, and yet loue tofore al other. Wherfore as lusterne in vnite they acorden and one ende that is peace & rest, they cause noysshinge, and in the ioye mainteinen to endure. Nowe than, as I haue declared: my boke acordeth with discripcio of thre thinges, & the Margarit in vertue is likened to Philosophie. & the three speces. In whiche matters euer twei dē acordaūt with bodily reson, and the thirde with the soule: But in conclusion of my booke & of this Margarit peerle, in knitting togider law by thre condry maners shalbe lyfened, that is to saye, lawe, right, & custome, which I wol declare al that is law, cometh of godds ordinaunce by kindely worching, & thilke thinges ordained by mās wittes arne icleped right, whiche is ordayned by many maners & in constitution writen: But custome is a thinge that is accepted for right or for law, ther as lawe and right failen, & ther is no differēce, whether it come of scripture or of reason. wherfore it shewth that law is kindly gouernaunce: right cometh out of mānes probable reason: and custome is of comē vsage by length of time vsed, & custome nat write is vsage, and if it bee writte constitution it is ywriten & ycleped: But lawe of kinde is comen to euery nation, as coniunction of man and woman in loue, succession of children in heritance, restitucion of thinge by strength taken or lent, and this lawe amōg al other halte the soueraineste gree in worship, whiche lawe began at the beginning of reasonable creature, it varyed yet neuer for no chaunging of time, cause for sothe in ordaining of lawe, was to constraine mens hardinesse in to peace, and withdrawinge his yuel wil, and turning malice in to good nesse, and ỳ innocence likerly withoute teneful anoy amonge shrewes, sakely might inhabyte by protercion of safe conducte, so that shrewes harme for harme by bridele of ferdenesse shulden restraine. But forsothe in kindly law nothinge is commended, but soche as goddes wil hath confirmed, ne nothinge denied but contrary ouste of goddes will in heauen: ete than all lawes or custome, or els constitution by vsage, or writing, that contrarien law of kinde, vtterly ben repugnaūt and aduersary to our goddes wil of heuen. Trewly law of kind for goddes own lusty will is verily to maintaine, vnder whiche lawe (and vnworthy) bothe prokesse & reguler arn obedicer an boundē to this Margarit perle, & by knotte of loues statutes and stablishement in kinde, which that goodly maye not been withsetten. Lo vnder this bonde am I constrained to abyde and man vnder lyuinge lawe ruled, by that lawe oweth after desertes to ben rewarded by pain or by mede, but if mercie weyue the paine: so than be parte, reasonfulli maye be sey, ỳ mercy both right and lawe passeth, thentent of al these matters, is the left clere vnderstanding, to weten at thende of this thirde booke ful knowinge thorow goddes grace, I thinke to mak neuerthelater, yet if these thinges hā a good and a sleght inter whiche that canne souke hony of the hard stone, oyle of the drie roche, may lyghty fele nobley of matter in my leude ymaginacion closed.

But for my booke shall be of ioye (as I said) and I so ferre set fro thylke place, fro whens gladnes should come, my corde is to short to let my boket ought catche of that water, and sewe menne bee abouten my corde to eche, and many in ful purpose ben redy it shorter to make, and to enclose thenter, that my boket of ioye nothinge shulde catch, but empty returne, my carefull sorowes to encrease, & if I die for pain, that wer gladnes at their hertes. Good lord send me water in to the cop of these mountaines, & I shall drinke therof my thrustes to stanch: & sey these be cōfortable welles in to helth of goodnes of my sautour am I holpē. And yet I say more, the house of ioy to me is not opened. How dare my sorowful goost than in any mater of gladnesse thynken to trete: for euer sobbynges and complaintes berdy refrete in his meditacions, as werbles in many solde stoundes comming about I not than. And therfore what maner of ioy coude endite, but yet at dore shal I knocke, if the key of Dauid wolde the loche vnshyt and he bring me in, whiche that childrens tonges bothe openeth and closeth. whose spirite, where he wel worcheth, departinge goodly goodly as him lyketh. Now to goddes laude & reuerence, profite of the reders, amendement of maners of the herers, encreling of worship among loues seruauntes, releuing of my herte in to grace of my iewel, & frendship plesaunce of this perle. I am stered in this making, & for nothing els: and yf any good thing to mennes liking in this scripture be foũde, thanketh the maister of grace which that of ẏ good & al other is authour, & principal doer. And if any thing be insufficiẽt or els myslyking, wiẽh ẏ that the leudnesse of myne vnable cõning, for body in disease anoyeth the vnderstãding in soule. Idelely habytatiõ leteth the wittes many thinges, & namely in sorow. The custome neuer the later of loue, be longe time of seruice in termes I thinke to pursue, whishe den liuely to yeue vnderstandinge in other thynges. But nowe to enlorme the of this Margarites goodnes, I may her not halse praise. wherfore not she for my booke, but this booke for her is worthy to be commẽded, tho my booke be leude: right as thinges nat for places, but places for thinges ought to be desired and praised.

NOw (ꝙ Loue) trewely thy wordes I haue well vnderstõde. Certes me thinketh hym ryght good, & me wondreth why ẏ so lightli passeth in the law. Sothlye (ꝙ I) my wyt is leude & I am right blind and that mater depe, how shuld I thã haue waded, lightly might I haue drenched and spilt ther my self. Yea (ꝙ she) I shal helpe the to swime. For right as lawe punisheth breders of preceptes, & the cõtrary doers of the writen constitucions: right so ayẽward, law rewardeth & yeueth mede to hem that law strenghten. By one law this rebel is punished, & this innocent is mede, ẏ thrawe is emprisoned & this right full is corowned. The same lawe ẏ ioyneth by wedloke wythout forsaking, ẏ same law yeueth libel of departiciõ bycause of deuorse, both demed & declared. Ye ye (ꝙ I) I finde in no lawe to mede & rewarde in goodnes, the giltie of desertes. Fole (ꝙ she) giltie cõuerted in your law, mybel merite deserueth. Also Pauly of Rome was corowned, that by him the maisteiners of Põpeus weren knowen & distroied: and yet fororn was this Paulin chefe of Põpeus counsaile. This lawe in Rome hath yet his name of meseuring in mede, the bewraying of the cõspiracy, ordained by the senatours the death. Julius Cesar is acõpted into Cotõs right wisnesse, for euer in trouthe florisheth his name amõge the knowers of reason. Perdicas was corowned in ẏ heritage of Alexãder ẏ great, for telling of a priuy hate ẏ king Porrus to Alexander hadde: wherfore euery wight by reason of law after his right wisenes apertly his mede maye chalenge: & so thou that maintainest law of kinde, & therfore disease hast suffred in the law, reward is worthy to be rewarded & ordained, and apertly thy mede might ẏ chalenge. Certes (ꝙ I) this haue I well lerned, and euer hẽsforward I shal draw me therafter in one hed of will to abide this lawe both maintain & kepe, and so hope I best entre in to your grace, wel deseruing in on ordship of a wight, without nedeful cõpulsion ought medefully to be rewarded. Truly (ꝙ Loue) that is soth, & tho by cõstitucion good seruice in to profites auauntage stretch, vterly many mẽ it demẽ to haue more desert of mede, thã good wil nat cõpelled. Se now (ꝙ I) how may men holden of this the cõtrary. And what is good seruice? O fyou wolde I here this question declared. I shal say the (ꝙ she) in a few wordes, resonable workinges in plesaunce & profite of thy souerayne. How shuld I this performe (ꝙ I) right well (ꝙ she) & here me nowe a lytell. It is hardely (ꝙ she to vnderstande) that right as mater by due ouerchaũginges soloweth his perfection & his forme: right so euery mã by rizful werkiges ought to solow ẏ lefull desires in his hert, & se toforne to what ende he deserueth, for many times he that loketh nat after the vdes, but vttery therof is vnknowen, befalleth oftẽ many yuels to dõ, wherthrough er he be ware thãfulli he is cõfounded, thend therof neden to be beforloked to euery desire of soch forsight in good seruice thre thiges specially nedeth to be rulers in his workes. First ẏ he do good, next that he do by election in his owne hert, & the thirde that he do godly withouten any surquedry in thoughtes. That your werkes shulden be good in seruice, or in any other actes, authorites many may be aleged, neuer the later, by resõ thus may it be shewed. Al your workes be cleped secõd & mouẽ in vertue of ẏ first wercher, which in good workes wrought you to procede, & right so your werkes mouen in to vertue of the last ende, & right in the firſt worthing wer nat, no man ſhuld in the ſecõd werche. Right ſo but ye telen to what ende, and ſen their goodnes cloſed, ye ſhulde no more retch what ye wrought but the ginning gan with good, and there ſhal it ceale in the laſt ende. if it be wel cõſidred. wherfore the mydle, if other wayes it drawe than acordaũt, to thendes, there ſtinteth the courſe of good, & another maner courſe entreth, & ſo it is a party by him ſelue, & euery part be nat accordant to his al, is foule and ought to be eſchewe. wherfore euery thing that is wrought & be nat good, is nat accordãt to thendes of his al hole, it is foule, and ought to be withdrawe. Thus the perſons that neither don good ne harme, shamen foule their making: wherfore without worthig of good actes in good ſeruice, may no mã been accepted. Trewly the like ye han might to do good, & done it not, ye crowne of worthyp ſhal be take frõ hem, & with ſhame ſhut they be anulled. And ſo to make one werke accordaut with his endes, euerye good ſeruaunt by reaſon of conſequẽce muſt do good nedes Certes it ſufficeth not alone to do good, but goodly withal folow, the thãke of goodnes els in nought he deſerueth. For right as al your being, come from the greateſt good, in whõ al goodnes is cloſed. Right ſo your endes ben directe to the ſame good. Triſtoteil determineth ye ende & good ben one, & cõuertible in vnderſtãding. & he that in wil doth away good, and he that loketh not to thend loketh not to good, but he that doth good & doth not goodlye, drawe thy dyrection of thende not goodly, muſt nedes bee bad. Lo badde is nothing els, but abſẽce or negatiue of good, as derkenes is abſence or negatiue of light. Thã he that doth goodly directeth thilke good into thende of badde. So muſt thing not good folow, the badnes to ſoch folk ofte foloweth. Thy contrariaũt worthers of thende that is good, ben worthy that contrary of thede that is good to haue How (q I) may any good dede be done, but if goodly it helpe. Yes (q Loue) ye deuill doth many good dedes, but goodly he leueth behinde. for euẽ badlyes in in deſceiuable wiſe he worketh. wherfore the cõtrary of thend hi foloweth. And do he neuer ſo many good dedes, bicauſe goodly is away, his goodnes is not rekened. Lo than tho a man do good, but he do good, but he do goodlye thende in goodneſſe wol not folowe, and thus in good ſeruice both good dede and goodly don muſten ioyne togider, and that it be done with free choiſe in hert: & els deſerueth he nat the merite in goodes, that wold I proue. For if ye do any thing good by chaũce or by happe in what thing art thou therof worthy to be commended: for nothing by reaſon of that, turneth in to thy praiſinge ne lacking. Lo thilke thinge done by hap by thy wil is nat cauſed, & therby ſhulde I thanke or lake deſerue: & ſithen ye fayleth, thende whiche that wel ſhuld reward, muſt nedes faile. Clerkes ſaine, no man but willing is bleſſed, a good dede that he hath done is not done of free choiſe willing, without whiche blillednes may nat folow. Ergo nether thãke of goodneſſe ne ſeruice in that is cõtrary of the good ende, ſo thã to good ſeruice lõgeth good dede goodly don, thorow fre choiſe in hert. Truely (q I) this haue I wel vnderſtand. wel (q ſhe) euery thig thus done ſufficiẽtly by law that is cleped iuſtice, after reward claime. For law & iuſtice was ordained in this wiſe ſoche deſertes in goodnes after quantite in doinge, by mede to reward, & of neceſſite of ſoch iuſtice, that is to ſay, rightwiſenes was fre choiſe in deſeruing of wel or of yuel graũted to reſonable creatures. Euery mã hath free arbitremẽt to chooſe good or yuel to performe. Nowe (q I) tho if I by my good wil deſerue this margarit perle, & am thertocõpelled, & haue free choiſe to do what me liketh: She is thã holdẽ as me thinketh to reward thentẽt of my good will. Goddes forbode els (q Loue) no wight meaneth other wiſe I trow, fre wil of good hert after mede deſerueth. Hath euery mã q I fre choiſe by neceſſary maner of wil in euery of his doinges, ye him liketh by godsproper puruetiaũce I wolde ſe that well declared to my leude vnderſtãding, for neceſſary & neceſſite been wordes of mokel intẽcion, cloſig (as to ſay) ſo mote it be nedes. & otherwiſe maye it nat betide. This ſhalt thou lerne (q ſhe) ſo thou take hede in my ſpech. If it wer nat in mãnes own liberte of fre wil to do good or bad but to the one teied by bonde of goodes preordinaũce: Than do he neuer ſo wel it were by nedeful compulcion of thilke bonde and nat by fre choiſe, wherby nothing he deſireth, & do he neuer ſo yuel it wer nat mã for to wite, but onelich to him that ſoch thing ordained hem to don. Wherfore he ne ought for bad be puniſhe, ne for no good deede be rewarded, but of neceſſite of rightwilnes was therfore

therefore free choice of arbitrement, put in mannes proper disposicion: truly if it were other wise, it contraried gods charitie, that badnes & goodnes, rewardeth after deserte of pain, or of mede. Me thinketh this wonder (q I) for god by necessitie forwot all thinges coming, and so mote it nedes be: & thilk things that been doen, be our free choice comen nothing of necessitie, but onely by wil: how maie this stande togider: & so me thinketh truly, that free choice fully repugneth Goddes forweting. Truly ladie, me semeth thei mowe not stande togither.

When gan loue nigh me nere, and with a noble countenaunce of visage and limmes, dressed her nigh me my sittyng place. Take forthe (q she) thy penne, and redily write these wordes, for if God woll, I shall hem so enforme to thee, that thy leudenesse, whiche I haue vnderstand in that matter, shall openly declered, and thy sight in full loking therin amended. First, if thou thinke that Goddes prescience, repugne libertie of arbetrie of arbitrement, it is impossible that thei should accord in onhed of sothe to vnderstandyng. Ye (q I) forsoth so I it conceiue. Well (q she) if thilke impossible were awaie, the repugnaunce that semeth to be therein, wer vterly remoued. Shew me thabsence of that impossibilitie (q I). So (q she I shall). Now I suppose that thei mowe stande togither, prescience of God, whō foloweth necessitie of things coming, and libertie of arbitremēt, through whiche thou beleuest many thynges, to bee without necessitie. Bothe these propocions be sothe (q I) and well mowe stande togider, wherefore this case as possible I admit. Truely (q she) and this case is impossible. How so (q I). For hereof (q she) foloweth and wereth an other impossible. Proue me that (q I). That I shall (q she) for some thing is comyng without necessitie, and God wote that tofore, for all thing comyng he before wot, & that he before wot of necessitie is coming: as he before wot, be the case by necessary maner then, or els thorowe necessitie, is somthing to be without necessitie, & whiderto euery wight that hath good vnderstandyng, is seen these thinges to be repugnaunt. Prescience of God, which that foloweth necessitie, and libertie of arbitrement, fro which is remoued necessitie, for truly it is necessarie, that God haue forweting of thinge, without en any necessitie comming. Ye (q I) but yet remeue ye not awaie fro mine vnderstanding, the necessitie following Goddes before weting, as thus. God before wote me in seruice of Loue, to bee bounden to this Margarite perle, and therefore by necessitie, thus to loue am I bound, and if I not had loued, through necessitie had I been kept from all loue dedes. Certes (q Loue) bicause this matter is good and necessary to declare, I thinke herein wel to abide, & not lightlie to passe. Thou shalt not (q she) saie all onely God before wote, me to be a louer, or no louer, but thus: God before wote me to be a louer, without necessitie. And so it followeth, whither thou loue, or not loue, euery of hem is and shalbe But now thou seest the impossibilitie of thy case, and the possibilitie of thilke that thou wendest had been impossible, wherefore the repugnaunce is adnulled. Ye (q I) and yet doe ye not awaie the strength of necessitie, when it is said, though necessitie it is me in loue to abide, or not to loue without necessitie, for God before wote it. This maner of necessitie forsothe, semeth to some men into coaccion, that is to saine, constrainyng, or els prohibicion that is defendyng, wherefore necessitie is me to loue of wil. I vnderstande me to be constrained, by some priuie strengthe, to the will of louyng, and if no loue to be defended from the will of louing, and so through necessitie me semeth to loue for I loue, or els not to loue, if I not loue, wherethrough neither thanke ne maugre, in tho thynges maie I deserue.

Now (q she) thou shalte well vnderstande that often wee saine thyng, through necessitie, to bee that by no strengthe, to bee neither is coarted, ne constrained, and thorowe necessitie not to bee, that with no defendyng is remoued, for wee saine, it is thorowe necessitie, GOD to bee immortalle nought dedliche, and it is necessitie, God to bee rightfull, but not that any strengthe of violente maner constraineth hym to be immortall, or defendeth hym to be vnrightfull for nothing maie make him dedly or vnrightfull. Right so if I saie through necessitie is the to be a louer or els none, only thorow will, as God before wete. It is not to vnderstāde, that any thing defendeth or forbit thee thy wil, which shal not be, or els cōstraineth it to be, which shalbe: that same thing forsoth God before wot, whiche he before me seeth, any thyng commende of onely wille, that wil neither is constrained ne defended through any other thinge. And so through libertie of arbitrement it is doe, ꝑ is doen of wil. And truely my good child, if these thynges be wel vnderstād, I wene that none inconuenient shalt thou finde, betwene Goddes forweting, and libertie of arbitrement, wherefore, I wote well thei maie stande togider. Also farthermore, who that vnderstandyng of prescience, properlithe considereth, through the same wise, that any thing be afore will, is saied for to be comyng, it is pronounced, there is nothing tofore me will, but thyng commyng, fore wetyng is but of trouth, doubt maie not be will: wherefore, whē I sey, that God tofore wot any thyng, through necessitie es thilke thing to be comming, all is one if I sey, it is shalbe, but this necessitie neither constraineth, ne defendeth any thing to be, or not to be. Therfore sothly if loue is put to be, it is saied of necessitie to be, or els for it is put not to be, it is affirmed not to be of necessitie: not for that necessitie constraineth or defendeth, loue to bee, or not to be. For when I saie, if loue shalbe of necessitie it shalbe, here foloweth necessitie. The thing tofore put, it is as moche to saie, as if it were thus pronounced, that thing shall bee: none other thyng signifieth this necessitie but onely thus, that shall bee maie not togider be and not bee. Euenliche also it is sothly, loue was and is, and shal be, not of necessitie, and nede is to haue be all ꝑ was, and nedefull is to bee all that is, and coming to all that shall be: and it is not the same to saie, loue to be passed, and loue passed to be passed, or loue present to be present and loue to be present, or els loue to be commyng, and loue comming to be commyng: diuersitie in setting of wordes, maketh diuersitie in vnderstanding, altho in the same sentence, thei accorden of signification, right as it is not all one: loue swete to be swete, ꝑ loue to be swete: for moch loue is bitter and forowfull ere hartes been eased, and yet it gladdeth thilk forowfull hart on soothe loue to thinke. Forsoth (ꝙ I) other while I haue had mohell blisse in hart of loue, that woodmele hath me sorily anoied: and certes lady for I see my self thus knit, with this Margarite perle, as by bonde of your seruice, ꝑ of no libertie of will, my hart will now not accorde this seruice to loue. I can demin in my self none other wise, but through necessitie am I constrained, in this seruice to abide. But alas then, if I through needefull compulsion, maugre me be with holde, litle thanke for all my great trauaile, haue I then deserued. Now (ꝙ this ladie) I saie as I saied: Me liketh this matter to declare at the full, and why: For many men haue had diuers fantasies and reasons, bothe on one side therof, and in the other: Of which right sone I trowe, if thou wilt vnderstand, thou shalt conceiue the sentence, to ꝑ partie more probable by reason, and in sothe knowing, by that I haue of this matter maked an ende. Certes (ꝙ I) of these things, long haue I had greate luste to bee learned, for yet I wene Goddes will and his prescience, accordeth with my seruice, in louynge of this precious Margarite perle. After whō euer in my harte, with thurstling desire weete I doe brenne, bn wastyng I langour and fade and ꝑ dais of my destinie, in death or in ioye I vnbide, but yet in the ende I am comforted bee my supposaile in blisse, and in ioye to determine after my desires. That thyng (ꝙ Loue) hastelie to thee neigh, God graunt of his grace and mercie, and this shalbe my praier, till thou be likened in harte at thine own will. But now to enforme thee in this matter (ꝙ this Ladie) thou woste where I left, ꝑ was loue to be swete, and loue swete to bee swete, is not all one for to saie: For a tree is not alwaie by necessitie white, somtime er it wer white, it might haue bee not white: and after time it is white, it maie be not white: but a white tree euermore nedefull is to be white: for neither tofore ne after it was white, might it be togider white and not white. Also loue by necessitie is not present as now in thee, for er it wer present it might haue be, ꝑ it should now not haue be, and yet it may be, that it shal not be present: but thy loue present, whiche to her margarite ꝑ hath bound, nedefull is to be present. Truly some doing of accio, not by necessitie is coming farre tofore it be, it maie be that it shal not be coming: thing forsoth coming nedefull is to be coming, for it maie not be that coming shall not be coming. And right as I haue saied of present and of future tymes, the same sentence in sothnesse is of the preterit, that is to say, time passed, for thing passed must nedes be passed, and er it were it might haue not be, wherefore it should not haue passed. Right so when Loue comyng, is saied of loue that is to come, needefull is to be that is said, for thing comming neuer is not commyng, and so oft the same thyng, we saine of the same, as when we saine euery man is a man, or euery louer is a louer, is must it bee nedes, in no waie maie he bee man, and no man togither. And if it be not by necessitie, that is to say, nedeful al thing comming to be comming, then some thyng comming is not comming, and that is impossible, right as these termes nedefull, necessitie, and necessarie, betoken and signifiyng nedes to be, & it maie not otherwise be. Right these termes, impossible signifieth, that thing is not, and by no waie maie it be then through perte necessite, all thing comming is comming, but that is by necessitie, followeth with nothing to bee constrained. Lo when that commyng is saied of thyng, not alwaie thinge through necessitie is, altho it bee comyng. For if I saie to morowe, loue is comyng in this Margarites harte, not therefore through necessitie shall thilke loue be, yet it maie be ỳ it shall not be, altho it were comyng. Neuerthelater, sometyme it is sothe, that some thyng be of necessitie, that is saied to come: an if I saie to morowe by commyng the risyng of the Sonne. If therfore with necessitie, I pronounce commyng of thyng to come, in this maner loue to morne commyng in thine Margarite, to thee warde by necessitie is commyng, or els the risyng of the Sonne to morn comming through necessitie is commyng. Loue sothlie, whiche maie not bee of necessitie alone followyng, through necessitee commyng it is made certain. For futur of future is saied, that is to saine, commyng of commyng is saied: as if to morowe commyng, is through necessitee coming it is. Arising of the sonne through twoo necessities in commyng, it is to vnderstande, that one is to forgoyng necessitee, whiche maketh thing to bee, therefore it shall be, for nedefull is that it be. An other is following necessitie, which nothing constraineth to bee, and so by necessitie it is to come, why: for it is to come.

Now then, when we saine, that God beforne, wote thyng commyng nedefull, is to be commyng, yet therefore make we not in certaine, euermore thyng to be through necessitie commyng. Sothly thing commyng maie not bee, not commyng by no waie, for it is the same sentence of vnderstandyng: as if wee saie thus. If God beforne wotte any thing, nedefull is that to be comming. But yet therfore followeth not that prescience of god, thing through necessitie to be coming: for altho God toforne wot all thinges comming, yet not therfore he beforn wot euery thing coming thorow necessitie. Sum thinges he beforn wot coming of frewill, out of reasonable creature. Certes (q I) these termes, nede and necessitie, haue a queint maner of vnderstandyng, thei woulden dullen many mênes wittes. Therfore (q she) I wol hem openly declare, and more clerely then I haue toforne er I depart hense. Here of this matter (q she) thou shalte vnderstande, that right as it is not nedeful, God to wiln that he wil, no more in many things is not nedefull, a man to wilne that he woll. And euer right as needefull is to bee, what that God woll, right so to bee it is nedefull, that man woll in tho thinges, whiche that God hath put into mannes subiection of willyng: as if a man wol loue, that he loue: and if he ne woll loue, that he loue not, and of sothe other things in mans dispolicion. For why: now then that God woll maie not be, when he woll the will of mã thorow no necessitie to be constrained, or els defended for to wiln and he woll effect to folowe the will, thã is it nedefull wil of man to be free, and also to be that he woll. In this maner it is soth that thorow necessitie is mans werke in louing, that he woll dooe altho he woll it not with necessitie. (q I thã) how shãt it in loue of thilke will, sithen men louen willyng of free choise in hart. Wherfore if it be thorow necessitie, I praie you Ladie of an answere this questiõ to assoile. I woll (q she) answer thee bliuely: right as men will not thorow necessitie, right so is not loue of wil thorowe necessitie, ne thorowe necessitie worcht the ilke same will, for if he would it not with good will, it should not haue been wrought, although that he doeth it is nedefull to bee doen. But if a mã do sinne, it is nothing els but to will, that he should not: right so syn of will, is not to be maner necessary dooen, no more then wil is necessary. Neuer the later this is soth, if a man woll sinne, it is necessary him to sinne, but though thilk necessitie, nothing is constrained ne defended in the will, right so thilk thing that frewill woll and maie, and not maie, not wiln, and nedefull is that to wilne he maie not wilne, but thilke to wilne nedefull is, for impossible to hym it is one thing, and the same to wilne.

he maie not wilne, but thilk to wilne nedefull is: for impossible to hym it is one thing and thesame to wilne, and not to wilne.

The werke forsothe of wille, to whom it is yeue, that it be that he hath in will, and that he woll not, voluntarie of spontanie it is, for by spontanie will it is dooe, that is to saie, with good wil, not constrained: then by will not constrained, it is constrained to bee, and that is it maie not togither bee. If this necessitie maketh libertie of will, whiche that aforne thei weren, thei might haue been eschued and shonned: God then, which that knoweth all truthe, and nothyng but truthe, all these thinges, as thei arne spontanie, or necessarie sight, and as he seeth so thei been: and so with these things well cõsidered, it is open at the fulle, that without all maner repugnaunce, God beforne wote al maner things been doen by frewill, whiche aforne thei weren, might haue been neuer thei should be, and yet been thei thorow a maner necessitie, from frewill discendeth.

Hereby maie (q she) lightly been knowe that not all thinges to bee is of necessitie, though God haue hem in his prescience, for somthinges to be, is of libertie of will: and to make thee to haue full knowyng, of goddes beforne weting, heare me (q she) what I shal saie. Blithly lady (q I) me lift this matter entirely to vnderstande. Thou shalte (q she) vnderstande, that in heauen is Goddes being, although he be ouer al by power, yet there is abiding of diuine persone, in which heauen is euerlastyng presence, withouten any mouable tyme there, foole haue I not saied toforne this, as tyme hurteth, right so ayenwarde, tyme healeth and rewardeth: and a tree oft failed, is holde more in deintie, when it fruict forthe bringeth.

A Marchaunte that for ones lesyng in the Sea, no more to auenture thinketh, he shall neuer with auenture come to richesse: so oft must menne on the Ore smite, till the happie dente haue entred, whiche with the Ores owne swaie, maketh it to come all at ones. So oft falleth the lethy water on the harde rocke, till it haue thorough perced it. The euen draught of the wier drawer, maketh the wier to been euen, and supplie werchyng, & if he stinted in his draught, ꝑ wier breaketh a sonder. Euery Tree well spryngeth, when it is well grounded, and not often remoued. What shall this fruicte bee (q I) now it ginneth ripe? Grace (q she) in parfite loye to endure, and therewith thou begon. Grace (q I) me thinketh, I should haue a rewarde for my long trauaile: I shall tell thee (q she) tribucion of thy good willes, to haue of thy Margarite perle, it beareth not the name of mede, but onely of good grace, and that cometh not of thy desert, but of thy Margarites goodnesse, and vertue alone. (Quod I) should all my long trauaile haue no rewarde, but through grace, and sometyme your selfen saied, right wisenesse euenliche rewardeth to quite one benefite for an other. That is sothe (q Loue) euer as I saied, as to hym that doeth good, whiche to doen he were neither holden, ne yet cõstrained. That is sothe (q I). Truely (q she) all that euer thou doest thyne Margarite perle of will, of loue, and of reason thou owest to doen it. yet is it nothyng els but yeldyng of thy debte, in quitting of thy grace, which she thee lente, when ye first mette. I wene (q I) right little grace to me she deliuered. Certes it was harde grace, it hath nigh me astrangled. That it was good grace I wotte well thou wilt it graunte, ere thou departe hence. If any man yeue to an other wight, to whõ that he ought not, and whiche that of himself nothyng maie haue, a garmente or a coate, though he weare the coate, or els thilke clothyng, it is not to put to him that was naked, the cause of his clothyng, but onelie to him that was yeuer of the garmẽt wherefore I saie, thou that were naked of loue, and of thy self none haue mightes, it is not to put to thyne owne persone, sithen thy loue came through thy Margarit perle Ergo she was yeuer of the loue, although thou it vse, and there sente she thee grace, thy seruice to beginne. She is worthie the thanke of this grace, for she was the yeuer.

All the thoughtes, busie dooynges, and pleasaunce in thy might, and in thy woordes, that thou canste deuise, been but righe little, in quityng of thy debte: had she not been, soche thyng had not been studied. So all these matters kindlie drawen homward to this Margarite peerle, for from thence were thei borowed, all is hollie her to witte the loue that thou haueste, and thus quitest thou thy debte, in ꝑ thou stedfastlie seruest. And kepe well that loue, I thee rede, that of her thou hast borowed, and vse it in her seruice, thy debte to quite, and then art thou able right sone to haue grace, wherefore after mede, in none value maiest thou looke.

Thus

Thus thy ginnyng and endyng, is but grace alone, and in thy good deseruyng, thy debte thou aquitesse: without grace is nothynge worthe, what so euer thou werche. Thanke thy Margarite of her greate grace that hetherto thee hath guided, and praie her of continuaunce, forthe in thy werkes hereafter, and that for no mishap thy grace ouerthwartlie tourne. Grace, glorie, and ioye, is comyng through good folkes deserts, and by gettyng of grace therein shullen ende. And what is more glorie, or more ioie then wisedome, and loue in perfite charitie whiche God hath graunted to all tho that well can deserue. And with that this Lady all at ones starte into myne harte: here wol I onbide (q she) for euer, and neuer woll I gone hence, and I woll kepe thee from medlynge, while me lifte here onbide: thyne entremetyng maners, into stedfastnes shullen be chaunged.

Soberliche tho threwe I by myne yen, and hugelie tho was I astonied of this sodain aduenture, and faine would I haue learned how vertues shuldē been knowē, in which thynges I hope to God, hereafter she shall me enformē, and namely sithen her resting place is now so nigh at my will: and anone all these thynges that this ladie saied, I remembred me by my self, and reuolued the liues of myne vnderstandyng wittes.

Tho found I fully all these matters, perfitelie there written, how misse rule by fained loue, both realmes and cities hath gouerned a greate throwe. Howe lightlie me might the fautes espie, howe rules in loue should been sted, howe sometyme with fained loue, foule I was begiled, how I should loue haue knowe, and howe I shall in loue with my seruice procede.

Also furthermore, I found of perdurable letters, wonderlie there grauen, these matters, whiche I shall nempne. Certes none age, ne other thing in yearth, maie the least sillable of this in no poinct deface, but clerlyas the Sonne, in myne vnderstandyng soule thei shinen. This maie neuer out of my minde, how I maie not my loue keepe, but through willyng in hart: wilne to loue maie I not, but I louyng haue. Loue haue I none, but through grace of this Margarite perle. It is no maner doubte, that will woll not loue, but for it is louyng, as wille woll not rightfully, but for it is rightfull it selue. Also will is not louyng for he woll loue, but he woll loue for he is louyng: it is all one to will to be louing, and louyngs in possession to haue. Right so will woll not loue, for of loue hath he no partie, and yet I denie not louyng, will wilne more loue to haue, which that he hath not, whē he wold more thā he hath, but I say he maie no loue wilne, if he no loue haue, through whiche thilk loue he should wilne: but to haue this louyng will, maie no manne of hym self, but onely through grace forthe gooyng: right so maie no man it kepe, but by grace folowing. Consider now euery man aright and lette seen if that any wight of himself, mowe this louing well get, and he thereof first nothing haue: for if it should of himself spryng, either it must be willing, or not willynge. Willyng by hymself maie he it not haue, sithen him faileth the matter þ should it forth bring, the matter him faileth: wherefore he maie thereof haue no knowing, till whē grace put it in his harte. Thus willyng by himself, maie he it not haue, & not willing maie he it not haue. Yarde euery conceipte of euery reasonable creature, other wise will not graūt: will in affirmatife with not willing by no waie mowe accord. And although this louing woll come in mine hart by frenesse of arbitrement, as in this boohe fullie is shewed, yet owe I not therfore as moche alowe my frewill, as grace of that Margarite, to me leaned, for neither might I without grace to forne goyng, and afterwarde folowing, thilk grace get ne kepe, & lese shal I it neuer but if frewill it make, as in willing otherwise then grace hath me graunted. For right as when any persone taketh, willing to be sober, & throweth that awaie willing to bee dronke, or els taketh will of drinking out of measure: which thing anō as it is doen, maketh through his own gilt by frewill, that leseth his grace. In which thing therefore, vpon the nobley of grace I mote trusten, and my busie cure set the ilke grace to kepe, þ my frewill other wise then by reason it should werche, cause not my grace to voide: for thus must I both be lokē to frewill and to grace. For right as naturell vsage, in engendering of children, maie not been without father, ne also but with the mother, for neither father ne mother, in begetting may it lache: right so grace and frewill will accorden, and without hem both maie not louyng, will in no partie been getten. But yet is not free will, in gettyng of that thyng, so mokell thãke worthie as is grace, ne in the keepyng thereof, so moche thanke deserueth, and yet in gettyng and keepyng bothe doen thei accorde. Truelie often time grace, free will helpeth in forbooyng of contrary thynges, that to willyng loue not accorden, & strengthy will aduersities to withsit, wherefore al together to grace oweth to been accepted, that my willyng deserueth: Free will to louyng in this wise is accorded. I remẽber me well how all this booke (who so heede taketh) considereth all thynges, to werchinges of mankinde euenly accordeth, as in turning of this word loue, into troth, or els right wisenesse, whether that it like. For what thing that falleth to man, in helpyng of free arbitrement, thilke right wisenesse to take, or els to kepe, through whiche a man shall bee saued, of whiche thyng all this booke mencion hath maked, in euerie poinct thereof, grace oweth to be thanked.

Wherefore I saie, euery wight hauynge this right wisenesse, rightfull is, and yet therefore I feele not in my conscience, that to all rightfull is behoten the blisse euerlasting, but to hem that been rightfull, withouten any vnrightfulnesse. Some man after some degree, maie rightfully been accõpted: as chaste men in luyng, and yet been thei iauglers, and full of enuie pressed: to hẽ shall this blisse neuer been deliuered. For right as very blesse, is wour al maner nede, right so to no man shall it bee yeuen, but to the rightfull, voide from al maner vnright fulnesse founde, so no man to her blisse shall been folowed, but he be rightfull, and with vnrightfulnesse not bounde, and in that degree fullie bee knowe. This rightfulnesse in as moche as in hymself is, of none euill it is cause, and of all maner goodnesse, truely it is mother. This helpeth the spirite, to withstitte the leude lustes of fleshlie likyng: this strengtheth and mainteineth the lawe of kind, and if that other while, me weneth harme of this precious thinge to followe, therethrough is nothyng the cause, of somwhat els cometh it aboute, who so taketh hede. By rightfulnesse forsoth, werne many holie sainctes, good sauour in swetenesse to God almightie, but that to some folkes, thei weren sauour of death into dedly ende, that come not of the sainctes right wisnesse, but of other wicked mennes badnesse hath proceded. Truely the like will, whiche that the ladie of Loue-me learned, affeccion of wille to nempne, whiche is in willing of profitable thinges, euill is it not, but whẽ to fleshly lustes it cõsenteth, ayenst reason of soule: but that this thing more clearely be vnderstande, it is for to knowe, whence, and how the like will is so vicious and so readie, euil deedes to performe.

Grace at the ginning, ordeined thilk wil in goodnesse, euer to haue endured, and neuer to badnesse haue assented: menne should not bileue, that God thilke wil maked to be vicious. Our firste father as Adã and Eue, for vicious appetites, and vicious wille to soche appetites consentyng, been not on thing in kinde, other thyng is dooen for the other. And how this will first into manne, first assented, I holde it profitable to shewe: but if the first condicion of reasonable creature, woll be considered and appertly loked, lightly the cause of soche wille maie been shewed. Intencion of God was, that rightfully and blessed, should reasonable nature been maked, himself for to kepe, but neither blissfull ne rightfull, might it not be, withouten will in them bothe. Will of rightfulnesse is the like same rightfulnesse, as here tofore is shewed: but wil of blisse is not the like blisse, for euery manne hath not thilke blisse, in whom the will thereof is abiding. In this blisse after euery vnderstandyng, is fulfisaunce of couenable comoditees, without any maner nede, whether it bee blisse of Angels or els the like, that grace first in paradise suffred Adam to haue. For although Angels blisse bee more then Adams was in paradise, yet maie it not be denied, that Adã in Paradise, ne had fulfisaunce of blisse: for right as greate harte is without al maner of coldnesse, and yet maie an other hart more heate haue right so nothing defended Adam in Paradise to been blessed, without all maner nede.

Although Angels blisse bee moche more, forsothe it folowth not lasse then an other to haue therefore hym needeth, but for to wante a thynge, whiche that behoueth to been had, that maie neede been cleaped, and that was not in Adam, at the first ginning God & the Margarite weten what I mean. Forsothe where as is neede, there is wretchednesse, good without cause to fornegoyng, made not reasonable creature wretched ched, for him to vnderstande and loue hadde he first maked. God made therfore mā blis-sed without all maner indigence, togi-ther and at ones toke reasonable creature bysse, and of wil of blisfedneſſe, and will of rightfulnes, whiche is rightfulnes it selue, and libertie of arbitrement, that is fre wil, with which thilke rightfulnes may he kepe and lese. So is in that wise ordained thilke two, that wil whiche that instrumente is cleaped, as here tofore mencion is maked, shulde vse thilke rightfulnes, by teachinge of his soule to good maner of gouernaūce, in thought and in wordes, & that it shoulde vse the blisse in obedient maner, withoutē anie incōmodite. Blisse forsothe in to mās profite, and rightwilnes in to his worship God deliuered at ones: but rightfulneſſe so was yeuen that man might it lese, whiche yf he not losse had not, but cōtinuelly haue it kept, he should haue deserued the auaun-cement in to the felowshippe of angels, in whiche thing if he that losse, neuer by him selfe forwarde shulde he it mow ayenward recouer: and as wel the blisse that he was in, as aungeles blisse that to him wardes was coming, shuld be nome at ones, and he depriued of them bothe. And thus fyl man into likeneſſe of vnreasonable beestes, and with hem to corrupcion and vnlustes ape-tites was he vnder throwne, but yet wil of blisse dwelleth, that by indigence of good, which that he lost through great wretched-nes, by right shulde he bē punished. And th' for he weiued rightfulnes, losse hath he his blisse: but faile of his desire in his owne commodite maye he not, and were commo-dites to his reasonable nature, whiche he hath losse may he not haue. To false lu-stes, whiche ben bestial appetites he is tur-ned: folye of vnconning hath him begiled, in wening that thilk bē the comodites that ben to ben desired. This affection of will by liberte of arbitremēt is enduced to wiln thus thing that he shulde not, and so is wil not maked fuel but vnrightful, by absence of rightfulnes, which thing by reason euer shulde he haue. And freneſſe of arbytremēt may he not wilne whā he it not haueth, for while he it had, thilke helpe it not to kepe: so that without grace may it not ben reco-uered. Wil of comodite, in as moche as vn-rightful it is maked, by willing of fuel lu-stes, willing of goodneſſe may he not wilne for wil of instrument to affection of wil is thralled, sithen that other thing may not it wilne, for wil of instrument to affectiō de-sireth, and yet ben bothe they wil cleped: for that instrument woll, through affection it wylneth, and affection desireth thilke thing wherto instrument him ledeth. And so fre-wel to vnlusty affection ful seruaunt is ma-ked, for vnrightfulnes maye he not relese, and without rightfulnes ful fredome may it neuer haue. For kindly liberty of arbitre-ment without it, veine and ydel is forsoth. Wherfore yet I say, as often haue I said the same, whan instrument of will losse hath rightfulnes, in no maner but by grace may he ayen retourne rightfulnes to wilne.

For sithen nothinge but rightfulnes alone shuld he wilne, what that euer he wilneth without rightfulnes, vnrightfully he it wil-neth. These than vnrightful appetites and vnthrifty lustes which the flies desireth, in as mokel as they ben in kinde, ben they not bad, but they ben vnrightful and badde, for they bē in reasonable creature, whet as they beynge in no way shuld ben suffred. In vn-reasonable beestes neither ben they fuel ne vnrightful, for there is their kinde beyng.

KNowen may it wel ben now, of these thinges tofore declared, that man hath not al-wai thilk rightfulnes, which by duete of right euermore ha-uen he shuld, and by not way by him self maye he it get ne kepe, and af-ter he it hath if he it lese, recouer shall he it neuer, without especial grace: wherfore the comune sentence of the people in opinion, that euerye thinge after destenie is ruled, false and wicked is to beleue: For thoughe predestinaciō be as wel of good as of badde, sithē ỳ it is said god badneſſ made, whiche he neuer ne wrought, but for he suffreth hē to be maked, as that he hardeth whan he nought misfaieth, or ledde into temptacion whan he not deliuereth, wherfore it is none inconuenient if in that maner be said, God tofore haue destenied both badde, ende her badde werkes, whan hem ne their fuel de-des neither amendeth, ne therto hem grace leueth. But specyallyche predestinacion of goodnes, alone is saide by these great cler kes, for in him God doth ỳ they ben, & that is goodnes they werchen. But the negatife herof in badneſſe is holden, as the lady of loue hath me lerned, who so aright in this booke loketh. And vtterly it is to weten, that predestinacion properly in God maye not been demed, no more than before me-ting. For in the chapitre of goddes before weting, as loue me reherled, al these maters apertely maye ben founde. Al thinges to God been nowe togither and in presence duringe. Crewly presence and predestinacion in nothing discorden, wherfore as I was lerned, howe goddes before wetyng & fre choice of will mowe stonden togither, me thinketh the same reason me leadeth, that destenie & frewil acorden, so that neither of hem both to other in nothinge contrarieth. And reasonabliche may it not ben demed, as ofte as any thing falleth frewil werching, as if a man another man wrong fully anoyeth, wherfore he him sleeth: that it bee constrained to that ende, as moneil folke crieth and saithe: Lo, as it was destenied of God tofore me know, so it is thorowe necessite fal, and other wise might it not be tide. Crewlye neither he that the wronge wrought, ne he that him selfe venged, none of thilke thinges thorow necessite wrought: for if ỳ with frewil they had it not willed, neither had wrought that he perfourmed: and so vtterly grace that frewil in goddnes brigeth and kepeth, and fro badnes it tourneth, in al thinge moste thanke deserueth. This grace maketh sentence in vertue to abyde, wherfore in body and in soule in full plentie of conninge, after their good deserving in the euerlastinge ioye, after the daye of dome shul they endles dwel, and they shul ben lerned that in kingdome with so moneil affecte of loue and of grace, that the lest ioy shal of the greatest in glorie reioyce & been gladded, as if he the same ioye had. What wonder sith God is the greatest loue, and thee ne ought to loke thinges with resonning to proue, and so is instrument of wil, will: and yet varieth he fro effecte & vsinge both. Affeccion of wil also for wil is cleped, but it varieth from instrument in this maner wise, by that name, liche whā it cometh in to minde, anon right it is in willing desired, and the negatife therof with willing my not acorde: this is closed in hert, though vsage and instrument slepe. This slepeth whan instrument & vs waken: and of loche maner affection trewelye, some man hath more, & some man lesse. Certes trewe louers wenen euer therof to litell to haue. False louers in litell wenen haue right moneil Lo instrumente of will in false and trewe bothe euenlich is proporcioned, but affection is more in some place than in some, by-cause of goodnes ỳ followeth & that I thinke hereafter to declare. Vse of this instrumēt is wil, but it taketh his name whā wilned thinge is in doinge. But vtterly grace to catch in thy blisse, desired to ben rewarded. Thou muste haue than affection of will at the full, and vse whan his tyme asketh wysely to ben governed. Sothly my discipie without feruent affection of will maye no man ben saued: this affectiō of good seruice in good loue, may not ben grounded, without feruent desire to the thinge in will coueited. But he that neuer retcheth to haue or not to haue, affecion of will in that hath no resting place. Why? for whan thinge cometh to minde and it bee not taken in hede to comin or not come, therfore in that place affection faileth: & for thilke affection is so litel, thorow whiche in goodnes he shoulde come to his grace, the litelnes wil it not sufre to auaile by no waye in to his helpes: Certes grace and reson thilke affection followeth. This affection with reason knitte, dureth in eueriche trewe herte, & euermore is encreasing, no serdnes, no strength may it remoue while truthe in herte abideth. Sothly whan falshed ginneth entre, truth draweth away, grace and ioy both, but thā thilke falshed that trouth hath ỳ voided hath vnknit the bonde of vnderstandinge reason, betwen wil & the hart. And who so that bonde vndoth, and vnknitteth wil to be in other purpole thā to the first accorde, knitteth him with contrary of reason, and that is vnreason. Lo, than will & vnreason bringeth a man fro the blisse of grace, whiche thing of pure kinde, euery mā ought to shonne & to eschew, and to the knot of wil & reason confirme. Methinketh (q she) by thy studient lokes, thou wenest in these wordes me to contrarien, from other sayinges here tofore in other place, as whan thou were somtime in affectiō of will, to thinges that now han brought the in disease, whiche I haue the counsailed to voide, & thin hert discouer, & there I made thy wil to ben chaunged, whiche now ỳ wenest I argue to withholde & to kepe. Shortlye I say ỳ reuers in these wordes may not bē founde: for though dronkenes be forboden, mē shull not alway ben drinkles. I trow right for thou thy wil out of reason shulde not tourne, thy will in one reason shuld not vnbinde, I say thy wil in thy

in thy firste purpose with vnreason was closed: Constrewe forth of the remnaunte what the good liketh. Trewly that wil and reason shuld be knit togither was trewil of reason, after time thine herte is assentaunt to them both, thou myght not chaūge, but if thou frō rule of reason varye, in whiche variaunce to come to thilke blisse desired, cō trariously thou wercheste: and nothing may know wil & reason but loue alone. Than if thou wolde loue, thā weuest the bonde, that knitteth, & so nedes or els right lightly, ꝑ other gon a sondry, wherfore thou sest apertly ꝑ loue holdeth this knot, and amaistreth hem to be bounde. These thinges, as a ring in circuit of wreth bē knit in thy soule with out departing. I let be, let be (quod I) it nedeth not of this no rehersaile to make, my soule is yet in parfite blisse, in thinkig of ꝑ knot.

Ow trewly lady I haue my grounde wel vnderstond, but what thinge is thilke spire that in to a tree shoulde were: Expowne me ꝑthing, what ye therof meane. That shal I (quod she) blithlie, and take good hede to ꝑ wordes I the rede. Continuaunce in thy good seruice, by long processe of tyme in full hope abiding, without any chaūge to wilne in thyn hert: this is ꝑ spire, whiche if it be well kept & gouerned, shal so hugely springe, til the fruit of grace is plētuously out sprōgen: For all though thy will be good, yet may not therfore thilke blisse desired, hastely on the discēden, it must abyde his seasonable tyme. And so by proces of growing, wt thy good traueile, it shall in to more & more were, til it be foūde so mighty, that windes of yuel speche, ne scornes of enuie, make nat the trauaile ouerthrow, ne stormes of mistrust, ne hailes of ielousy right litel might haue in harming of soch springes. Euery yong setling lightly with smal stormes is a peired, but whā it is woren sōdele in greatnes, thā han great blastes and wethers but litel might, any disauaūtage to hem for to werche. Mine owne soueram lady (quod I) & welth of mine hert, and it were lyking vnto your noble grace, therthrough nat to be displeased, I supose ye erren, now ye maken ielosy enuy, & disturbour to hem that ben your seruaūtes. I haue lerned ofte tofore this time, that in euery louers hert great plentie of ielousies greues ben sowe, wherfore me thinketh ye ought in no maner accompte, thilke thing amōge these other welked winers & venomous serpētes, as enuy, mistrust, & yuel speche. O foole (quod she) mistrust with folý, with yuel wil medled engendreth ꝑ welked padde. Trewely if they were distroied ielousy vndowne were for euer, & yet some maner of ielousy, I wot wel is euer redy in al the hertes of my trew seruaūtes, as thus: to be ielous ouer him self, lest he be cause of his owne disease.

This ielousye in ful thought, euer shuld be kept for ferdnes to lese his loue by mischepig throwe his owne doing in ieudnes, or els thus: Lest she that ꝑ seruest so feruently is beset ther her better lyketh, ꝑ of al thy good seruice she cōpteth nat a cresse. These ielousies in hert for acceptable qualitees ben demed: these oughtē euery trew louer by hindely, euermore hauen in his minde, til fully the grace & blisse of my seruice be on hi discended at wil. And he that than ielousy catcheth, or els by wening of his owne foliche wilfulnes mistrusteth, trewly with fantasy of venim, he is soule begiled. Yuel wil hath grouded thilke mater of sorow in his ieude soule, & yet nat for thā to euery wight shuld me not trust, ne euery wight fully misbeleue the meane of these thinges owen to be vsed. Sothly withoutē cauteful euidēce, mistrust in ielousye, shulde not be wened in no wise person comely, soch ieude wickednes shulde me nat finde. He that is wise & with yuell wil nat be a comered, cā abyde wel his time til grace & blisse of his seruice folowe haue him so mokel eased, as his abidinge tofore hande hath him diseased. Certes lady (quod I tho) of nothing me wondreth, sithen thilke blisse so precious is & kindly, good & wel is, & worthy in kind, whā it is medled vt loue & reason, as ye tofore haue declared. Why, anon as the one is sprōg, why springeth not the tother: & anone as the one cometh, why receiueth not the other? For euery thig that is out of his kindly place, by full appetite, euer cometh thyderward kindly todrawe, & his kindely being therto him constraineth. And the kindly stede of this blisse, is in soch wil medled to vnbide, & nedes in ꝑ it shuld haue his kindely beyng. Wherfore me thinketh anon as that wil to be shewed & kinde him profereth, thilke blisse shulde hym hye thilke wil to receyue, or els kind of goodnes worchē not in hem as they shuld. Lo, be the sonne neuer so ferre, euer it hath hys kynde werchig in erth: great weyȝt on hie on loft caried, stinteth neuer til it come to this resting place. Waters to the se ward euer ben they drawing, thing þ is light blythly will not sinke, but euer alcẽdeth & vpward draweth. Thus kind in euery thing his kindly course, & his being place shewech: wherfore be kinde on this good wil, anon as it were sprõg, this blisse should theron discende, her kinde wold they dwelledẽ togider, & so haue ye said your selfe. Certes (q̃ she) thyne hert sitteth wonder sore this blisse for to haue, thin herte is sore agreued that it tarieth so longe, & if thou durstest, as me thinketh by thine words, this blisse woldest thou blame But yet I say, thilke blisse is kindely good, & his kindely place in that will to vnbyde. Neuer the later, there cõming togider after kindes ordinaunce nat sodainly may betide it must avide time, as kind yeueth him leue, for if a man, as this wil medled gonne him shewe, and thilke blisse in haste folowed, so lightly cõning should lightly cause going, lõge time of thrusting, causeth drinke to be the more delicious whã it is atasted. Howe is it (q̃ I than) that so many blisses se I all day at mine eye, in the first momẽt of a light with soche wil accord. Ye, & yet other while with wil assenteth, singulerly by him selfe ther reason fasteth, trauaile was none, seruice had no time. This is a queint maner thinge, how soche doing cometh aboute. O (q̃ she) that is thus, the erthe kindely after seasons & times of the yere, bringeth forth innumerable herbes & trees bothe profitable & other, but soch as men might leaue though they were nought in nourishinge to mans kinde seruen, or els soche as tournen swone vnto mennes confusion, in case that there of they ataste, comen forthe out of the erthe by their owne kind, withouten any manes cure or any busynes in traueile: and the like herbes that to mennes liuelode necessarily seruen without, whiche goodly in this life creatures mowen not enduren, and nolle ben nourishen to mankind, without great traueile, great tilthe, and longe abiding time, comen not out of the erthe, & if with seed to sowne ordained soche herbes to make spring and forthe growe. Right so the patlite blisse, that we haue in meaning of duringe tyme to abide, maye nat come so lightly, but with great traueile & right besy tilth, & yet good seed to be sowe, for oft þ croppe failethe of badde sede, be it neuer so wel traueiled. And thilke blisse thou spoke of so lightly in cõminge, trewely is nat necessary ne abydinge: and but it the better bee stamped, and the venomous ieuse out wrongen, it is likely to enpoisonen all tho that there of tasten. Certes right bitter ben the herbes that the wen first the yere of her own kind. wel the more is the haruest þ yeldest many grainer, tho long and sore it hath ben traueyled. what woldest thou demen yf a man wolde yeue thre quarters of nobles of golde, that wer a precious gift: ye certes (q̃ I). And what (q̃ she) thre quarters ful of peeries? Certes (q̃ I) that were a riche gifte. And what (q̃ she) of as mokel azure? (q̃ I) a precious gyfte at ful. were not (q̃ she) a noble gifte of all these at ones? In good faith (q̃ I) for wãting of Englische naming of so noble a worde, I can not for preciousnesse yeue it a name: Rightfully (q̃ she) hast thou demed, and yet loue knitte in vertue, passeth al the golde in this erthe. Good wil accordãt to realõ, with no maner property may be counteruailed, all the azure in the world is not to accounte in respecte of reason, loue that with good wil and reason accordeth, with non erthely riches maye nat ben amended. This yeft hast thou yeuen I knowe it my self, and thy Margarite thilke gift hath receued, in which thing to reward she hath her self bounde. But thy gift as I said, by no maner riches maye be amended wherfore with thing that may nat be amẽded thou shalt of thy margarites right wisnesse be rewarded. Right suffred yet neuer but euery good deede somtyme to be yolde. Al wolde thy Margarite with no reward the quite. Right that neuer more dieth thy mede in merite wol purueye. Certes soch sodaine blisse as thou first mẽpnest, right wil hẽ reward as the wel is worthy, & though at thin eye it semeth the reward the desert to passe, right can after sende soch bitternes euenly it to reward: so the sodain blisse by always of reso̅ in great goodnes may not be acompted, but blisse long, both long it abydeth, & endelesse it woll last. See why thy wil is endelesse, for if thou louedest euer, thy will is euer ther tabide and neuer more to chaunge: euenhed of reward must ben done by right: than must nedes thy grace & this blisse rendelesse in ioy to vnbide. Euenliche disease asketh euenly the ioy, whiche hastly thou shalte heue. I (q̃ I) it sufficeth not than alone good will, be it neuer so well with reason medled, but if it be in good ser uice long trauailed. And so through seruice should men come to the ioye, and this me thinketh should be the wexing tre of which ye first meued.

with

VEry trouthe (q̄ she) hast thou now conceiued of these thinges in thin hert, hastely shalt thou be able herye ioye and parfite blisse to receiue. And now I wote well thou desyrest to knowe the maner of branches, that out of the tre should spring. Therof lady (q̄ I) hertely I you pray: for than leue I wol, that right soone after I shall astaste of the frute that I so longe haue desired. Thou haste herde (q̄ she) in what wise this tre toforme this haue I declared, as in ground & in stocke of wexing. First the ground should be thy frewil ful in thine herte, & the stocke (as I saide) shoud be continuaunce in good seruice, by long time in trauaile, til it were in greatnes right well woren. And whan this tree soche greatnes hath caught, as I haue rehersed, the braunches then that the frute should forth bringe, speche muste they be nedes in voice of prayer, in complaining wise vsed. Out alas (q̄ I tho) he is sore wully wounded that hideth his speche, and spareth his complaints to make, what shal I speke that care: but paine eue̅ lyke to hel, sore hath me assailed, & so fer forth in paine me throng, that I leue my tre is fer & neuer shal it frut forth bring. Certes he is greatly vsed, that dare his preuy mone discouer to a true felow, that conning hath and might wherthrough his pleint in any thing may be ame̅ded. And mokel more is he ioied that with hert of hardines, dare cōplaine to his ladye, what cares that she suffreth, by hope of mercy with grace to be auaūced. Truely I say for me, sithe I came this margarit to serue, durst I neuer me discouer of no maner disease, & wel the later hath min herte hardied soch thinges to done, for the great boū ties & worthy refreshements that she of her grace goodlye, without any deserte on my halue ofte hath me rekened, & nere her goodnes the more with grace & with mercy medled, which passe̅ al desertes, trauails, & ser uinges, that I in any degre might endite, I wold wen I shuld be without recouer in getting of this blisse for euer. Thus haue I killed my disease, thus haue I couered my care, that I bren in sorowful anoy, as gledes & coles waken a fire vnder deed ashen.

Wel the hoter is the fire, that with ashen it is ouerlein: right longe this wo haue I sufered. Lo (q̄ Loue) how ꝑ fare̅t: me thinketh the paise yuel hath acomered thy wittes, as fast as thou hiest forwarde, anon sodainly backwarde ꝑ moues̄t. Shall nat yet all thy leudnes out of thy braines? dul ben thy ſhil ful vnderstādinges, thy wil hath thy wit so amaistred. Wost thou not wel (q̄ she) but euery tree in his seasonable time of bourioning shewe his blomes fro within, in signe of what fruite shuld out of him spring, els the frute for that pere mē halt deliuered, be the grou̅d neuer so good. And though the stock be mighty at the ful, & the braūches seen̄ no burions shew, farwel the gardiner he may pipe with an yue leafe his fruite is failed. wherfore thy braunches must burionen in presence of thy lady. if thou desire any frute of thy ladies grace, but beware of thy lyse, that ꝑ no wo delay vse, as in asking of things that stretchen in to shame, for than might ꝑ not spede by no way that I can espie. Vertue wol not suffre villany out of him self to springe. Thy wordes may not be queint ne of subtel maner vnderstāding. Freel witted people suppose̅ in soch poesies to be begiled in op̄e vnderstāding must euery word be vsed. Voice without clere vnderstandinge of sētence, saith Aristotel, right nouzt printeth in hert. Thy wordes then to abide in hert & cleue in ful sentēce of trewe mening platly must thou shew & euer be obedīēt, her bestes & her willes to performe, & be ꝑ set in soche a wit to wete by a loke euermore what she meaneth. And he ꝑ list nat to speke, but stil ly his disease suffre: what wōder is it tho he neuer come to his blisse? who ꝑ trauaileth vnwist, & coueiteth thing vnknowe, vnweting he shal be quited, & with vnknow thig rewarded. Good lady (q̄ I than) it hath ofte be sene, ꝑ wethers & stormes so hugely haue fal in burioning tyme, & by perte duresse hā beatē of the springes so clene, wherthrough ꝑ frut of thilk yere hath failed. It is a great grace whā buriōs han good wethers, their frutes forth to bring. Alas than after soche stormes how harde is it to auoide, till efte wedrings yeres hā maked her circute cours al about, er any frute be able to be tasted he is shent for shame, that foole is reproued of his speche. He that is in fire brenning sore smarteth for disease. Him thinketh ful lōg er the water come that shuld the fire quen-

che. whil men gon after a leche, the body is buried. Lo howe semely this frute wereth, me thinketh that of tho frutes may no mā atast, for pure bitternes in sauour. In this wise both friut & the trewastes away togider, though mokel bely occupacion haue be spente to bringe it so serforthe, that it was able to sprig. A litel spech hath maked that al this labour is in ydel. I not (q she) wherof it serueth thy questiō to assoile, me thinketh the now duller in wittes, than whā I with the first mette, although amā be leude cōmenly for a foole he is not demed, but if he no good wol lerne, sottes & fooles let ligh tly out of minde, the good that mē teacheth hem. I said therfore thy flocke must be strōg, & in greatnes wel herted, the tre is ful feble that at the first dent faileth: and al though frute faileth one yere or two, yet shall soche a season come one time or other, that shall bring out frute that is nothing preterit, ne passed ther is nothing futur ne coming but al thinges togider in that place ben present euerlasting without any meuing, wherfore to god al thing is as now: & though a thing be nat in kindly nature of thinges as yet, & if it shoud be herafter, yet euermore we shul saye god it maketh be time present, & nowe for no futur ne preterit in him may be fosid. wherfore his wetinge & his before weting. is al one in vnderstanding. Than if weting & before wetinge of god putteth in necessite to al things which he wot or before wot ne thinge after eternite, or els after anye time he wol or doth of liberte, but al of necessite. which thing if thou wene it be ayenst reasō nat thorowe necessite, to be or nat to be, all thinge that god wot or before wot, to be or nat to be, & yet nothing destedeth any thing to be wist or to be before wist of him in our willes or our doinges to be done, or els com ming to be for fre arbitremēt. whan þ hast these declaracions well vnderstande, than shalte þ finde it resonable at proue, & that many thinges be nat thorowe necessite, but thorowe liberte of wil, saue necessite of free wil, as I tofore said: and as me thinketh al otterly declared. Me thinketh lady (q I) so I shoulde you nat displease, and euermore pour reuerence to kepe, that these thinges contrarien in any vnderstandynge. for ye sain somtyme is thorowe lybertye of wyll, and also thorowe necessite. Of this haue I yet no sauour, without better declara cion. What wonder (q she) is there in these thinges, sithen al day thou shalt se at thine eye, in manye thinges receiuen in hem selfe reuers, thorowe diuers reasons, as thus. I pray the (q she) whiche thinges ben more reuers than comen and gone: for if I bidde thee come to me, & thou come, after whē I bid the go & thou go, thou reuersest fro thy firste comminge. That is sothe (q I) and yet (q she) in thy firste alone by diuers reason was ful reuersinge to vnderstand. As how (q I) That shall I shewe the (q she) by en sample of thinges that haue kindly mouig. Is there any thing that meueth more kin dly than doth the heuens eye, which I clepe þ sōne. Sothely (q I) me semeth it most kin dely to moue. Thou saiest soth (q she). Than if thou loke to the sonne, in what parte he be vnderheuen, euermore he heigheth him in mouinge fro thilke place, and heigheth meuinge towarde the ilke same place, to thilke place from whiche he gothe he heig heth cōming, and without any ceasinge to that place he neigheth frō which he is chas ged & withdraw. But nowe in these thinges after diuersite of reasō, reuers in one thing may be sey without repugnaūce. wherfore in the same wise, without any repugnaūce by my reasones to fore maked, all is one to beleue, somthing to be thorow necessite cō minge for it is coming, and yet with no ne cessite constrained to be cōminge, but with necessite that comethe out of free will, as I haue said. Tho lift me a litel to speke, & gan stint my penne of my writing, & said in this wise. Trewly lady as me thinketh, I can al lege authorites great that cōtrarien your saynges. Job saith of mānes person, thou hast putte his terme, whiche thou might nat passe. Than saye I that no man maye shorte ne length the daye, ordained of his doing. al tho somtime to vs it semeth some man to do a thinge of free wil, wherthorowe his death he henteth. Nay forsothe (q she) it is nothing ayenst my saiyng for God is nat begiled, ne he seeth nothing wheder it shall come of liberte or elles of necessite, yet it is said to be ordained at god immouable, whi che at man or it be done maye be chaunged. Soch thing also is that Poule the apostel saith of hem that tofore werne purposed to be saintes, as thus, whiche that god before wist, & hath predestined, conformes of ymages of his sonne, that he shuld ben the firste begeten, that is to say, here amonges many brethern, & whom he hath predestined, hem

he

he hath cleped, & whom he hath cleped, hem he hath iustified, and whō he hath iustified, hem he hath magnified. This purpose after whiche thei been cleped sainctes, or holy in þ euerlasting present, where is neither time passed, ne time coming, but euer it is onely present, and now as mokell a moment, as vii. M. winter, and so ayen ward without any meuing, is nothing iche tempozell presence. for thyng that there is euer present: yet emonges you men, ere it be in your presence, it is mouable through libertie of arbitrement. And right as in the euerlasting present, no maner thing was, ne shalbe, but euely is, & now here in your tempozel time, some thing was and is, and shalbe, but moyng stoundes, and in this is no maner repugnaūce. Right so in the euerlasting presence, nothing maie be chaunged: & in your tempozel time, other while it is proued mouable, by libertie of will, or it be doe, without any inconuenience thereof to folow. In your tēpozell tyme is no soche presence, as in the other, for your presente is dooen, when passed & to come ginnen entre, which times here emongs you, euerich easily folowethother, but the prestē euerlastyng, dureth in onehed, withouten any imaginable chaunging, and euer is presente and nowe. Truly the course of the planettes, and ouerwhelminges of the Sonne, in daies & nightes, with a newe ginning of his circuite after it is ended, that is to sain, one yere to folowe an other. These maken your transitorie times, with chaūgyng of liues, and mutacion of people. But right as your tempozell presence, coueiteth euery place, and all thinges in euery of your times be cōtained, and as now both sey and wist to Gods very knowing. Thā (ꝙ I) me wōdreth why Poule spake these wordes, by voice of significaciō in time passed, that God his sainctes before will, hath predestined, hath cleped, hath iustified, and hath magnified: me thinketh he should haue said tho wordes in time prestē, and that had been more accordaunte, to the euerlasting presente, then to haue spoke in preterit voice of passed vnderstandyng. O (ꝙ loue) by these wordes, I se well thou hast litle vnderstanding of þ euerlasting presence, orels of my before spoken wordes, for neuer a thyng of tho thou haste nempned, was to fore other, or after other, but al atones cuēliche, at the God been, and al togider in the euerlasting presente, ber now to vnderstandyng, the eternall presence, as I sated, hath inclose togider in one, all tymes, in whiche close & one all thinges, that been in diuers times, and in diuers places tempozel, without posteriorite or priorite, been closed therin perpetuall nowe, and maked to dwell in present sight. But there thou saiest þ Poule should haue spoke thilke forsaid sentence be time present, & that moste should haue been accordaunt, to the euerlasting presence, why gabbest thou to thy wordes? Sothlie I saie Poule moued the wordes, by significaciō of time passed, to shewe fullie that thilke wordes, wer not put for tēpozell significacion, for al thilke time wer not thilk sentence tēporalliche borne, whiche þ Poule pronounced, God haue tofore know, and haue cleped then magnified, wherthrough it maie well be know, þ Poule vsed tho wordes of passed significacion, for nede and lacke of a worde in mans bodily speach, betokening the euerlasting presence. And therfore word is most semelich in likenesse to euerlasting prestē, he tooke his sentence for thinges, that here before been passed, vtterly be immouable, like to the euerlasting presence. As thilke þ been, there neuer mowe not been present, so thinges of time passed, ne mowe in no wise not been passed: but all thinges in your tempozall, presence that passen in a litle while, shullen been not present. So then in that it is more similitude to the euerlastyng presence, signification of tyme passed, that of time tempozall presente, and so more in accordaunce. In this maner what thynge of these that been dooen through free arbitrement, or els as necessarie, holy writ pronoūceth, after eternitie he speaketh, in whiche presence is euerlastyng soth, & nothing but soth immouable, that after tyme, in which naught al waie been your willes & your actes, and right as while thei be not, it is not nedefull hem to be: so oft it is not nedefull, that sometyme thei should be. As how (ꝙ I) for yet must I be lerned, by some ensample. Of loue (ꝙ she) wol I nowe ensample make, lithen I knowe the hed knot in that yelue. Lo, sometyme thou writest no arte, ne arte thennin no wil to write, and right as while thou writest not, or els wolt not write, it is not nedefull þ to write, or els wiln to write.

And for to make thee knowe vtterly, that thynges been otherwise in the euerlastyng presence, thā in tempozall time: se now my good child, for something is in þ euerlasting presence, then in tempozal tyme, it was not in eternitie tyme, in eterne presence shall it not be. Then no reason defedeth, that some thing ne maie be in tyme tẽpozell mouing, that in eterne is immouable. Foz lothe it is no moze contrary ne reuers, foz to be mouable in time tempozell, and mouable in eternitie, then not to be in any tyme, and to bee alwaie in eternitie, and haue to be, ozels to come in tyme tempozell, and not haue bee, ne nought commyng to be in eternitie. Yet neuer the later, I saie not somethyng to bee neuer in tyme tempozell, that euer is eternitie, but all onely in sometyme not to bee. Foz I saie not thy loue to moze me in no time to be, but to daie alone I deny ne it to bee, & yet neuer the later, it is alway in eternitie.

Also (q I) it semeth to me, that commyng thyng, oz els passed, here in your tempozall tyme to bee, in eternitie euer now, and present oweth not to be demed, & yet soloweth not thilke thing, that was oz els shall be, in no maner therto been passed, oz els coming: then vtterly shull wee deny, foz there without ceasing, it is in his present maner. O (q she) myne owne disciple, now ginnest thou able to haue the name of my seruaunt. Thy wit is clered, awaie is now errour of cloud in vnconnyng, awaie is blindnesse of loue, awaie is thoughtfull study, of medling maners, hastily shalte thou entre into the ioye of me, that am thine owne maistres.

Thou haste (q she) in a fewe wozdes, well and clerely concluded mokell of my matter. And right as there is no reuers, ne contrariousie in tho doinges, right so withouten any repugnaunce, it is saied, some thyng to be mouable in time tempozell, and foz it be, that in eternitie dwelleth immouable, not afoze it bee, oz after that it is, but without ceasing, foz right naught is there after time that same is there euerlasting, that temporaliche sometyme nis, and tofoze it bee, it maie not be, as I haue saied. Now lothly (q I) this haue I well vnderstãde, so that now me thinketh that prescience of God, and free arbitrement, withouten any repugnaunce accozden, & that maketh the stregth of eternitie, whiche encloseth by presence, duryng all tymes, and all thynges that been, han been, and shull been in any tyme.

I would now (q I) a little vnderstande, sithen that all thynge thus befoze wotte, whether thilke wetyng be of tho thynges, oz els thilke thynges been to been of Gods wetyng, and so of God nothyng is: and ikeuery thing bee through Gods weting, and thereof take his being, then should God bee maker and aucthour of badde werkes, and so he should not rightfully punishe euill doinges of mankinde. (q loue) I shall tel thee, this lesson to learne, myne owne true seruaunte, the noble Philosophicall Poete, in Englishe, whiche euermoze hym busieth & trauaileth right soze, my name to encrease, wherefoze all that willen me good, owe to doe him wozship and reuerence both, truly his better ne his pere, in schole of my rules coud I neuer finde: He (q she) in a treatise he made of my seruaunt Troilus, hath this matter touched, & at the full this question assoiled. Certainly his noble laiyngs, can I not amẽd: in goodnes of gẽtil mãlich speche, without any maner of nicitie of clarieres imagination, in wit and in good reason of sentence, he palleth al other makers. In the boke of Troilus, the answer to thy questiõ maiest thou lerne, neuer the later, yet maie lightly thine vnderstanding, somdeale been learned, if thou haue knowyng of these to foznsaid thinges, with that thou haue vnderstãding, of two the last chapiters of this second boke, that is to saie, good to be some thing, and bad to want al maner being, foz badde is nothyng els, but absence of good, and that GOD in good, maketh that good deedes been good, in euill he maketh þ thei been but naught, that thei been bad: foz to nothing is badnesse to bee. I haue (q I tho) inough knowing therein, me needeth of other thinges to heare, that is to saie, how I shall come to my blisse so long desired.

NO this matter to soze declared (q Loue) I haue wel shewed, that euery man hath free arbitrement of thinges in his power to doe, oz vndoe what him liketh. Out of this grond muste come the Spire, that by procesle of tyme, shall in greatnesse spzede, to haue bzãches and blosomes, of waxyng fruicte in grace, of whiche the taste and the sauour, is endelesse blisse in ioye euer to onbide.

Now Ladie (q I) that tree to sette faine would I learne. So thou shalte (q she) ere thou departe hence. The firste thynge thou must set thy werke on ground siker & good, accozdaunte to thy spzinges. Foz if thou desire grapes, thou goest not to the Hasell, ne foz to fetchen roses, thou seke st not on okes:

and if thou shalt haue Honie soukels, thou leuest the fruict of the soure Woche. Wherfore if thou desire this blisse in parfite ioye, thou must set thy purpose ther vertue folowethe, & not to loke after the bodily goodes, as I saied when thou were writyng in thy seconde booke. And for thou hast set thy self in so noble a place, & vtterly lowed in thine harte, the misgoyng of thy firste purpose, this settelesse is the easier to spring, and the more lighter thy soule in grace to bee lifted. And truely thy desire, that is to saie, thy will, algates mote been stedfast in this matter, without any chaunging. for if it be stedfaste, no man maie it voide. Yes parde (quod I) my will maie been tourned by frendes, and disease of manace, and threatning in lesing of my life, and of my limmes, and in many other wise, that now cometh not to minde. And also it mote ofte been out of thought for no remembraunce maie hold one thyng continuelly in harte, bee it neuer so lustie desired. Nowe see (quod she) thou thy will shall followe, thy frewill to bee grounded, continuelly to abide: It is thy frewill that thou louest and hatte loued, & yet shalt louen this Margarite perle, and in thy will thou thinkeste to holde it. Then is thy will knitte in loue, not to chaunge for no newe luste beside: This will teacheth thyne harte, from all maner variyng. But then althoughe thou be threatened in death, or els in otherwise, yet is it in thin arbitrement to chose, thy loue to voide, or els to holde: and thilke arbitremente is in a maner a iudgemente, betwene desire and thy harte. And if thou deme to loue, thy good wil faileth, then art thou worthy no blisse, that good will shuld deserue: and if thou chose continuaunce in thy good seruice, then thy will abideth, nedes blisse folowyng of thy good will, muste come by strengthe of thilke iudgemente: for thy firste will that taught thine harte to abide: and halt it from thechange, with thy reasō is accorded. Truly this maner of will thus shall abide, impossible it were to turne if thy hart be true, and if euery man diligētly, the meanynges of his will consider, he shall well vnderstande, that good will knit with reason, but in a false harte neuer is holded: for power and might of keping this good wil, is through libertie of arbitremēt in hart, but good wil to kepe maie not faile Eke then if it faile, it sheweth it self, þ good will in keping is not there. And thus false will that putteth out the good, anone constraineth the harte, to accorde in louyng of thy good will, and this accordaūce betwene false wille and thyne harte, in falsitie been likened togither. Yet a little woll I saie thee, in good wille, thy good willes to raise and strength. Take hede to me (quod she) howe thy willes thou shalte vnderstande. Right as ye han in your bodie diuers members, and fiue sondrie wittes, eueriche aparte to his owne doyng, whiche thynges as instrumentes ye vsen, as your handes apart to hādle, feete to goe, tongue to speake, ye to see: right so the soule, hath in hym certaine sterynges and strengthes, whiche he vseth as instrumentes, to his certain doynges. Reason is in the soule, whiche he vseth thinges to knowe and to proue, and will, whiche he vseth to wilne: And yet is neither wille ne reason all the soule, but eueriche of hem is a thing by hymself in the soule. And right as euerich hath thus singuler instruments by hem self, thei han as well diuers aptes, and diuers maner dsynges, and thilk aptes mowen in will been cleped affeccions. Affeccion is an instrumēt of willyng in his apetites. Wherefore mokell folke saine, if a reasonable creatures soule, any thing feruently wilneth, affectuously he wilneth, & thus maie wille by terme of equiuocas, in three waies been vnderstande: one is instrument of willyng, an other is affeccion of this instrumēt: and the third is vse, that setteth it a werke. Instrumente of willing is the ilke strength of the soul, which ther cōstraineth to wiln, right as reason is instrumēt of reasons, which ye vsen when ye loken. Affeccīō of this instrument is a thing, by whiche ye be drawe desirously any thing, to wilne in coueitous maner, all bee it for the time out of your mind: as if it come in your thought thilk thing to remember, anon ye been willing thilke to doen, or els to haue. And thus is instrument will, and affeccion is will also, to wilne thing as I saied: as for to wilne helth, when will nothyng theron thinketh for anone as it cometh to memorie, it is in wil, and so is affeccion to wiln slepe, whē it is out of minde, but anon as it is remēbred wil wilneth slepe, when his time cometh of the doing. For affeccion of wil, neuer accordeth to sicknelle, ne alwaie to wake. Right so in a true louers affeccīō of willing instrument, is to wilne truthe in his seruice, and this affeccīō alway abideth, although he be slepyng

sleping or thretned, or els not thereon thinkyng, but anone as it cometh to minde, anone he is stedfast in that will to abide. Vse of this instrumēt forsoth is an other thing, by hymself, and that haue ye not but when ye be doyng, in willed thing by affecte or instrument of will, purposed or desired, & this maner of vsage in my seruice, wisely nedeth to be ruled, from waiters with enuie closed from speakers full of iangeling wordes, frō proude folke and hautain, that lambes and innocētes both scornen and dispisen. Thus in doyng, varieth the actes of willing euericche from other, & yet been thei cleped wil, and the name of will vtterly owen thei to haue, as instrument of wil is will, when ye turne into purpose of any thing to doen, be it to sit or to stande, or any soche thing els. This instrument maie been had, although affecte and vsage be left out of doyng, right as ye haue sight and reason, and yet alway vse ye greatest wisedome in hem shall be be, and thei in God. Nowe then when all false folke be ashamed, which wenen al bestialtie and yerthly thing, be swetter and better to the body, then heauenly is to the soule: this is the grace and the fruict that I long haue desired, it doth me good the sauour to smel. Christe now to thee I crie of mercie and of grace, and graunte of thy goodnes to euery maner reder, full vnderstādyng in this leud pamflet to haue, and let no man wene other cause in this werke, then is verily the soth: for enuy is euer redy all innocentes to shēd, wherfore I would ȳ good speach enuie euermore hinder. But no man wene this werke be sufficiently maked, for Gods werke passeth mans, no mannes wit to parfit werke maie by no waie puruaie thende: how shold I then so leude, aught wene of perfeccion any ende to get? Neuerthelater grace, glorie, and laude, I yelde and put with worshipful reuerenced, to the sothfast God in thre, with vnitie closed, whiche that the heuie langor of my sicknesse, hath tourned into mirth of health to recouer: for right as I was sorowed, through the gloton cloud of manifold sickly sorowe, so mirth ayen coming health hath me gladed and greatly comforted. I beseche and praie therfore, and I crie on Gods greate pitie, and on his mokell mercie, that this present scorges of my flesh, mow make medicine, and leche craft of my inner mans health, so that my passed trespas and tenes through wepyng of myne yes been washe, and I voided from al maner disease, and no more to wepe hereafter, I now be kept thorow Gods grace: so that Gods hand which thee merciably me hath scorged, hereafter in good plite, frō thence merciably me kepe and defende. In this booke be many priuie thinges wimpled & fold, vnneth shull leude men the plites vnwinde, wherefore I praie to the holy ghoste, lene of his ointmentes, mens wittes to clere, and for Gods loue no man wōder, why or how this question cum to my minde, for my great lustie desire was of this ladie to been enformed, my leudnesse to amende. Certes I know not other mens wittes, what I should aske, or in answert, what I should saie, I am so leude my self, ȳ mokell more learnyng yet me behoueth. I haue made therfore as I could, but not sufficiētly as I would, and as matter yaue me sentence, for my dul wit is hindred, by stepmother of forgetyng, and with cloude of vnconning, ȳ stoppeth the light of my margatite perle, wherfore it maie not shine on me as it should. I desire not onely a good reader, but also I coueite & praie a good booke amender, in correcciō of wordes, and of sentence: and onely this mede I coueite for my trauaile, that euery inseer and herer of this leude fantasie, deuoute horisons & praiers, to God the greate iudge yelden, and praien for me, in that wise that in his dome, my sinnes mow been released and forgeuen: he that praieth for other, for hymself trauaileth. Also I praie that euery man parfitelie mowe knowe, through what intencion of hart, this treatise haue I drawe. How was it the sightfull Manna in desert, to childri of Israel was spirituell meate: bodily also it was, for mennes bodies it norisheth. And yet neuer ȳ later, Christe it signified. Right so a iewell betoheneth a gemme, and that is a stone vertuous, or els a perle. Margarite a woman betoheneth grace, learnyng, or wisedome of GOD, or els holie Churche. If bread through vertue is made holie flesche, what is that our God saith? It is the spirit that yeueth life, the flesche of nothyng it profiteth. Flesche is fleshly vnderstanding: Flesche without grace and loue naughte is worthe. The letter sleeth, the spirite yeueth lifelich vnderstandyng. Charitie is loue, and loue is Charitie, God graunte vs all therein to be frended. And thus the Testamēt of loue is ended.

Here endeth the testament of Loue.

The

The lamentacion

of Marie Magdaleine.

Longed in the wawe of mortall distresse
Alas for wo, to whom shal
I complein
Or who shall devoide this greate heuinesse
Fro me wofull Marie, wo-full Magdalein
My lord is gon, alas who wrought this trein
This sodain chaunce perseth my hart so depe
That nothing can I do, but waile and wepe.

My lorde is gone, ỹ here in graue was laied
After his greate passion, and death cruell who hath hym thus again betraied?
Or what man here about can me tell where he is become, the Prince of Israell
Jesus of Nazareth, my ghostly succour
My parfite loue, and hope of all honour.

what creature hath hym hence caried?
Or how might this so sodainly befall?
I would I had here with hym taried
And so should I haue had my purpose all
I bought ointmentes full precious and roial where with I hoped his corps to anointed
But he thus gone, my minde is dispointed.

whyle I therefore aduertise and beholde
This pitous chaunce, here in my presence full little maruaile though my hart be colde Considring lo, my Lordes absence
Alas that I so full of negligence
Should be founde bicause I come so late
All men maie saie I am infortunate.

Cause of my sorowe you maie vnderstande
(Quia tulerunt dominum meum.)
In other is, that I ne maie sonde
I wote nere, Vbi posuerunt eum
Thus I must be waile, Dolorem meum with hartie weping, I can no better deserue
Till death approche, my harte for to herue.

My harte oppress with sodaine auenture
By feruent anguishe is be wrapped so
That long this life I maie not endure
Soche is my pain, soche is my mortall wo
Neuerthelesse, to what partie shall I go
In hope to finde myne owne Turtill true
My liues ioye, my souerain Lorde Jesu.

Sith all my ioye, that I call his presence
Is thus remoued, now I am full of mone
Alas the while, I made no prouidence
For this mishap, wherefore I sigh and grone
Succour to finde, to what place might I gon
Fain I would to some man my harte breake
I not to whom I maie complain or speake.

Alone here I stande, full sorie and full sad which hoped to haue seen my lorde and kyng Small cause haue I to be merie or glad Remembring this bitterfull departyng
In this worlde is no creature liuyng
That was to me so good and gracious
His loue also then golde more precious.

Full sore I sigh, without comfort again
There is no cure to my saluacion
His brenning loue, my hart so doth constrain
Alas here is a wofull permutacion whereof I finde no ioye nor consolacion
Therefore my pain all onely to confesse
With death I feare woll ende my heuinesse.

This wo and anguishe is intollerable
If I bide here, like can I not sustain
If I go hence my paines be vncurable where him to finde, I knowe no place certain And thus I not of these thynges twain whiche I maie take, & whiche I maie refuse
My hart is wounded heron to thinke or muse

A while I shall stande in this mourning
In hope if any vision would appere
That of my loue might tell some good tidyng whiche into ioy, might chaunge my wepyng
I trust in his grace and his mercie dere (chere
But at the least, though I there with me kill
I shall not spare to waile and wepe my till.

And if that I die in soche auenture
I can no more, but welcome as my chaunce
My bones shall rest here in this sepulture
My life, my death, is at his ordinaunce
It shalbe tolde in euerlasting remembraunce
Thus to departe, is to me no shame
And also thereof I am nothyng to blame.

Hope against me hath her course itake
There is no more, but thus shall I die
I see right well my Lorde hath me forsake
But in my conceipt, cause know I none why
Though he be farre hence, and nothing nye

See

yet my wofull harte after hym doeth seke
And causeth teares to ren doun by my cheke.

Thinking alas, I haue lost his presence
Which in this worlde was all my sustenance
I crie and call with hartie diligence
But there is no wight giueth attendance
Me to certifie of myne enquirance
Wherefore I will to all this worlde bewraie
How that my lorde is slain and borne awaie.

Though I mourne it is no greate wonder
Sithe he is all my ioye in speciall
And now I thinke we be so farre a sonder
That hym to see I feare neuer I shall
It helpeth no more after hym to call
Ne after hym to enquire in any coste
Alas how is he thus gone and loste?

The Iewes I thinke full of miserie
Set in malice, by their bustie cure
With force and might of gilefull trecherie
Hath entermined my Lordes sepulture
And borne awaie that precious figure
Leauyng of it nothyng, if thei haue doen so Marred I am, alas what shall I do.

With their vengeaunce insaciable
Now haue thei hym entreated so
That to reporte it is to lamentable
Thei beate his bodie from toppe to the toe
Neuer man was borne that felte soche woe
Thei wounded hym alas with all greuaunce
The blood doun reiled in most habundaunce

The bloodie rowes stremed doune ouer all
Thei hym assailed so maliciouslie
With their scourges and strokes beastiall
Thei spared not, but smote incessauntlie
To satisfie their malice thei were full busie
Thei spit in his face, thei smote here and ther
He groned full sore, and sweate many a tere.

Thei crouned hym w̄ thornes sharpe & kene
The vaines rent, the blood ran doun a pace
With blood ouercome were bothe his iyen
And boine with strokes was his blessed face
Thei hym entreated, as men without grace
Thei kneled to hym, and made many a scorne
Like helhoundes thei haue hym all to torne

Upon a mightie crosse in length and brede
These turmentours shewed their cursednesse
Thei nailed hym without pitie or drede
His precious blood braste out in largenesse
Thei strained hym a long, as men merciless
The verie iointes all to myne apparence
Riued a sonder, for their greate violence.

All this I beholding with mine iyen twain
Stode there beside, with rufull attendaunce
And euer me thought, he beyng in that pain
Loked on me, with dedly countenaunce
As he had said in his speciall remembraunce
Farwell Magdalen, depart must I nedes hēs
My harte is Tanquam cera liquescens.

Whiche rufull sight when I gan beholde
Out of my witte I almoste distraught
Tare my heere, my handes wrang and folde
And of ẏ sight my hart drāke soche a draught
That many a fall swounyng there I caught
I bruled my bodie, fallyng on the grounde
Whereof I fele many a greuous wounde.

Then these wretches, full of all frowardnesse
Gaue hym to drinke Eisell tempred w̄ Gall
Alas, that poison full of bitternesse
My loues chere caused then to appall
And yet thereof might he not drinke at all
But spake these wordes, as him thought best
Father of heauen, Consummatum est.

Then kneled I doune, in paines outrage
Clipping ẏ crosse within myne armes twain
His blood distilled doune on my visage
My clothes ehe the droppes did distain
To haue died for hym I would full fain
But what should it auaile if I did so
Sithe he is, Suspensus in patibulo.

Thus my Lorde full dere was all disgised
With blood, pain and woundes many one
His veines braste, his iointes all to riued
Partyng a sonder the flesche fro the bone
But I sawe he hing not there alone
For Cum iniquis deputatus est
Not like a man, but like a leprus beest.

A blinde knight men called Longias
With a speare aproched vnto my souerain
Launsyng his side full pitouslie alas
That his precious harte he claue in twain
The purple blood ehe fro the hartes vain
Doune rasled right fast, in molte rufull wise
With christal water brought out of Paradise

When I behelde this wofull passion
I wote not how, by sodain auenture
My hart was peersed with very compassion
That

That in me remained no life of nature
Strokes of deathe I felte without measure
My deathes wounde I caught, & wo oppreſt
And drought to point as my hert ſhuld breſt

The wounde, hert, and blood of my darling
Shal neuer ſlide fro my remorial
The bytter paines alſo of tourmenting
Within my ſoule be grauen principal
The ſpeare alas, that was ſo ſharpe withall
So thrilled my herte, as to my feling
That body and ſoule were at departing

As ſoone as I might I releued vp againe
My brethe I coude not verey wel reſtore
Feling my ſelfe drowned in ſo great paine
Both body & ſoule me thought wer al to tore Violent falles greued me right ſore
I wept, I bledde, and with my ſelfe I fared
As one that for his life nothing had cared

I lokinge vp to that rufull Roode
Sawe firſt the vilage pale of that figure
But ſo pitous a ſight ſpotted with bloode
Sawe neuer yet no liuing creature
So it exceded the boundes of meaſure
That mānes minde with al his wittes fiue
Is nothing able, that paine for to diſcriue

Than gan I there min armes to vnbrace
Vp lifting my handes ful mourningly
I ſighed and ſore ſobbed in that place
Both heuen & erth might haue herde me crie
Weping, and ſayd alas inceſſauntly
Thy my ſwete herte, my goſtly paramour
Alas I may nat thy body ſocour

O bleſſed lorde, howe fierſe and howe cruel
Theſe curſed wightes nowe hath the ſlaine
Keruing alas thy body euerydel
Woūde within woūde, ful bytter, is thy pain
Nowe wolde that I might to the attaine
To naile my body faſt vnto thy tree
So that of this paine thou might go free

I can nat reporte ne make no reherſaile
Of my demening, with the circumſtaunce
But wel I wot the ſpeare with euery naile
Thirled my ſoule by inwarde reſemblaunce
Whiche neuer ſhall out of my remembraunce
During my life it wol cauſe me to waile
As ofte as I remembre that bataile

Thy ye Jewes, worſe than dogges rabiate
What moued you thus cruelly him to aray
He neuer diſpleaſed you nor cauſed debate
Your loue and true hertes he coueyted aye
He preched, he teched, he ſhewed ỹ right way
Wherfore ye lyke tyrātes wode & way warde
Nowe haue him thus ſlaine for his rewarde

Ye ought to haue remēbred one thing ſpecial
His fauour, his grace, and his magnificence
He was your prince borne, and lorde ouer all
Howe be it ye toke him in ſmal reuerence
He was ful mek in ſuffring your offence
Neuertheles ye deuoured him with one aſſēt
As hungry wolues doth the lambe innocent

Where was your pite, o people mercileſſe
Irming your ſelfe with falſhed and treaſon
On my lorde ye haue ſhewed your woodneſſe
Like no men, but beſtes without reaſon
Your malyce he ſuffred al for the ſeaſon
Your paine wol come, thinke it nat to ſlacke
Man without mercy of mercy ſhal lacke

Ye traitours & maintainers of madneſſe
Vnto your folye I aſcribe al my paine
Ye haue me depriued of ioye and gladneſſe
So dealing with my lorde and ſoueraine
Nothing ſhulde I nede thus to complaine
If he had liued in peace and tranquillite
Whom ye haue ſlaine through your iniquite

Farewel your nobleneſſe ỹ cōtime dyd raine
Farewel your worſhip glory and fame
Hereafter to lyue in hate and diſdaine
Warnaſſe ye not, for your treſpace & blame
Vnto ſhame is tourned al your good name
Vpon you nowe wol wonder euery nation
As people of moſte vile reputation

Theſe wicked wretches, theſe hounds of hel
As I haue tolde plaine here in this ſentence
Were not content my dere loue thus to quel
But yet they muſt embeſile his preſence
As I perceiue by couert violence
They haue him conueied to my diſpleſure
For here is lake but naked ſepulture

Wherfore of trouth and right full iudgement
That their malice againe maye be acquited
After my verdite and auiſement
Of falſe murdre they ſhal be endited
Of theft alſo, whiche ſhal not be reſpited
And in al haſte they ſhall be hanged & drawe
I wol my ſelfe plede this cauſe in the lawe

Alas yf I with trewe attendaunce

The lamentacion of

Had styl abidden with my lordes corse
And kept it stil with trewe perseueraunce
Than had nat befal this woful deuorse
But as for my paine welcome and no force
This shal be my songe where so euer I go
Departing is grounde of al my wo

I se right wel now in my paines smerte
There is no wounde of so greuous dolour
Is is the wounde of my carefull herte
Sithe I haue loste thus my paramour
Al swetnesse is tourned in to sour
Wirthe to my herte nothing may conuey
But he that beareth therof bothe locke & key

The ioye excellent of blissed paradise
Waye me alas in no wise comforte
Songe of angel nothing may me suffise
Is in min hert nowe to make disporte
Al I refuse, but that I might resorte
Unto my loue, the wel of goodlihed
For whose longing I trowe I shal be deed

Of painful labour and tourment corporal
I make therof none exception
Paines of hel I wol passe ouer al
My loue to finde in myne affection
So great to him is my delectacion
A thousande times martred wolde I be His blessed body ones if I might se

About this worlde so large in all compace
I shal not spare to renne my life during My fete also shal not rest in one place
Tyl of my loue I may here some tiding
For whose absence my hades nowe I wring
To thinke on him, ceasle shal neuer my minde
O gentil Jesu where shal I the finde

Jerusalem I wol serche place fro place
Sion, the vale of Josaphath also
And if I finde him not in al this space
By mount Oliuet to Bethany wol I go
These waies wol I wander and many mo
Nazareth, Bethleem, Mountana, Jude
No trauaile shal me paine him for to se

His blissed face if I might se and finde
Serche I wolde euery coste and countrey
The fardest parte of Egipt or hote Jnd
Sulde be to me but a litel iourney
Nowe is he thus gone or taken away
If I knewe the ful trouth and certente
Yet from this care released might I be

In to wildernesse I thinke best to go
Sithe I can no more tidinges of him here
There may I my lyfe lede to and fro
There may I dwel, and to no man apere
To towne ne billage woll I come nere
Alone in woodes, in roches, & in caues depe
I may at mine owne will both waile & wepe

Myne eyen twaine withouten variaunce
Shal neuer ceasle, I promise faithfully
There to wepe with great aboundaunce
Bytter teares renning incessauntly
The whiche teares medled ful petously
With the very blode euer shal renne also Expressing in mine hert the greuous wo

Worldely fode and sustenaunce I desire none
Soche liuing as I finde, soche wol I take Rootes that growen on the graggy stone
Shal me suffise with water of the lake
Than thus may I say for my lordes sake
Fuerunt mihi lachrime mee
In deserto panes, die ac nocte

My body to clothe it maketh no force
A mourning mantel shalbe sufficient
The greuous woundes of his pitous corse
Shal be to me a ful royal garnement
He departed thus I am best content
His crosse with nailes and scourges withal
Shal be my thought and paine special

Thus wol I liue, as I haue here tolde
If I may any longe time endure
But I fere death is ouer me so bolde
That of my purpose I can not be sure
My paines encrease with out measure
For of longe lyfe who can lay any reason
Al thing is mortal and hath but a season

I sigh ful sore, and it is ferre ylet
Myne hert I fele nowe bledeth inwardly
The blody teares I may in no wise let Sithe of my paine I finde no remedye
I thanke God of al if I nowe dye
His will performed I holde me content
My soule let him that hath it me lent

For lenger to endure it is intollerable
My woful herte is inflamed so huge
That no sorow to myne is comparable
Sithe of my minde I finde no refuge
Yet I him require as rightful iuge
To deuoide fro me the inwarde sorowe Lest I liue not to the nexte morowe

within

Within mine hert is impressed sul sore
His royal forme, his shappe, his semelines
His porte, his chere, his goodnes euermore
His noble persone with al gentilnes
He is the welle of al parfitnes
The very redemer of al mankinde
Him loue I best with herte, soule and minde

In his absence my paines sul bitter be Right wel I may it sele nowe in wardely
No wonder is though they hurte or slee me
They cause me to crie so rufully
Myne herte oppressed is so wonderfully
Onely for him, which so is bright of blee
Alas I trowe I shal him neuer se

My ioye is translate sul farre in exile
My myrthe is chaunged in to paynes colde
My lyfe I thinke endureth but a while Anguishe and paine is that I beholde
Wherfore my handes thus I wringe & folde
In to this graue I loke, I cal, I pray
Death remaineth, and life is borne away

Now must I walke and wander here & there
God wot to what partes I shal me dresse
With quaking hert wepinge many a tere
To seke out my loue and al my swetnes
I wolde he wyst what mortal heuines
About min herte reneweth more and more Than wolde he nat kepe pite longe in store

Without him I may not longe endure
His loue so sore worketh within my brest
And euer I wepe be fore this sepulture
Sighing sul sore, as mine herte shulde brest
During my lyfe I shal obtaine no rest
But mourne and wepe, where that euer I go
Making complaint of al my mortal wo

Fast I crie, but there is no audience
My cōming hider was him for to please
My soule oppressed is here with his absence
Alas he list not to set mine herte in ease
Wherfore to paine my selfe withal disease
I shal not spare tyl he take me to grace
Or els I shal sterue here in this place

Ones if I might with him speake
It were al my ioy, with parfite pleasaunce
So that I might to him myne herte breke
I shulde anone deuoide al my greuaunce
For he is the welle of verie recreaunce
But now alas, I can nothing do so
For in stede of ioy naught haue I but wo

His noble corse within min hertes rote
Depe is graued, whiche shal neuer slake
Nowe is he gone to what place I ne wote
I mourne, I wepe, and al is for his sake
Sith he is paste, here anowe I make
With hertely promise, & therto I me binde
Neuer to cease til I may him finde

Vnto his mother I thinke for to go
Of her haply some comforte may I take
But one thinge yet me feareth and no mo
Yf I any mencion of him make
Of my wordes she wolde trimble and quake
And who coude her blame, she hauig but one
The sone borne away, the mother wol mone

Sorowes many hath she suffred trewly
Sith that she first conceiued him and bare
And seuen thinges there be most specially
That drowneth her hert in sorowe and care
Yet so, in no wise may they compare
With this one now, the whiche if she knew
She wolde her paines euerichone renewe

Great was her sorowe by mennes saiyng
Whan in the temple Simeon Iustus
Shewing to her, these wordes prophesiyng
Tuam animam pertansibit gladius
Also whan Herode that tyraunt furious
Her childe pursued in euery place
For his life went neither mercy ne grace

She mourned whan she knewe him gone
Full longe she sought or she him founde ayen
Whan he went to death his crosse him vpon
It was to her sight a rewful paine
Whan he hōg therō, bet wene theues twaine
And the speare vnto his herte thrust right
She swouned, & to the grounde there pight

Whā deed and blody in her lappe lay
His blissed body, bothe handes & fete al tore
She cried out and said, now wela way
Thus araide was neuer man before
Whan hast was made his body to be bore
Vnto sepulture here to remaine
Vnnethes for wo she coude her sustaine

The sorowes seuen, like swerdes euery one
His mothers herte wounded fro syde to syde
But if she knewe her sonne thus gone
Out of this worlde she shuld with death ride
For care she coude no lenger here abide Hauing no more ioy nor consolacioun
Than I here standing in this stacioun

Wherfore her to se I dare nat presume
Fro her presence I wol my selfe refraine
Yet had I leuer to dye and consume
Thā his mother shulde haue any more paine
Neuertheles her sonne I wolde se ful faine
His presence was very ioye and swetnes
His absence is but sorowe and heuinesse

There is no more, sith I may him nat mete
Whom I desire aboue al other thing
Nede I must take the sour with the swete
For of his noble corse I here notiding
Ful ofte I crie, and my handes wring
Myne herte alas relenteth al in paine
Whiche wol brast bothe senewe and vaine

Alas howe vnhappy was this woful hour
Wherin is thus mispended my seruice
For min entent and eke my true labour
To none effecte may come in any wise
Alas I thinke if he do me dispise
And list not to take my simple obseruaunce
There is no more, but death is my finaunce

I haue him called, Sed non respondet mihi
Wherfore my mirth is tourned to mourning
O dere lord Quid mali feci tibi
That me to colore I finde no erthely thing
Alas, haue compassion of my cryng
Yf fro me, Faciem tuam abscondis
There is no more, but Consumere me vis

Within myne hert is grounded thy figure
That al this worldes horrible tourment
May it not aswage, it is so without measure
It is so brenning, it is so feruent
Remember lorde I haue ben diligent Euer the to please onely and no mo
Myne herte is with the where so euer I go

Therfore my dere darling. Trahe me post te
And lette me not stande thus desolate
Quia non est, qui consoletur me
Myne herte for the is disconsolate
My paines also nothing me moderate
Howe if it list the to speake with me a lyue
Come in hast, for my herte a sonder will riue

To the I proffer lo my poore seruice
Thee for to please after mine owne entent
I offre here, as in deuout sacrifice
My bore replete with precious oyntment
Myne eyen twayne, weping sufficient
Myne herte with anguishe fulfilled is alas
My soule the redy for loue aboute to pas.

Naught is haue I the to please or pay
For if min harte were golde or precious stone
It shulde be thine without any delay
With hertely chere thou shulde haue it anone
Why suffrest thou me than stande alone
Thou hast I trowe my weping in disdaine
Or els thou knowest nat what is my paine

If thou withdrawe thy noble daliaunce
For ought that euer I displeased the Thou knowest right wel it is but ignorance
And of no knowlege for certainte
If I haue offended lorde forgiue it me
Gladde I am for to make ful repentaunce
Of all thing that hath ben to thy greuaunce

Myne herte alas swelleth within my brest
So sore oppressed with anguishe & with payne
That al to peces forsothe it wol brest
But if I se thy blysful corse againe
For lyke ne death I can nat me refraine
If thou make delay thou maist be sure
Myne hert wol lepe in to this sepulture

Alas my lorde, why farest thou thus with me
My tribulacion yet haue in minde
Where is thy mercy? where is thy pite?
Whiche euer I trusted in the to finde
Sōtime thou were to me both good & kinde
Lette it please the my prayer to accept
Whiche with teares I haue there bewept

On me thou oughtest to haue very routh
Sith for the is al this mourning
For sith I to the yplighted firste my trouthe
I neuer varied with discording
That knowest thou best my owne darling
Why constrainest thou me thus to wayle?
My wo forsothe can the nothing auaile

I haue endured without variaunce
Right as thou knowest, thy louer iust & trew
With hert & thought aye, at thyn ordinaunce
Lyke to the saphire alwaye in one hewe
I neuer chaunged the for no newe
Why withdrawest thou my presence
Sith al my thought is for thine absence

With hert intier, swete Lorde I crie to the Encline thine eares to my peticion
And come, Velociter exaudi me
Remembre mine hertes disposicioun
It may not endure in this condicioun
Therfore out of these paines, Libera me
And where thou arte, Pone me iuxta te

Let me beholde, O Jesu thy blessed face
Thy faire glorious angelike visage
Bowe thine eares to my complaint, alas
For to conuey me out of this rage
Alas my lorde, take fro me this dommage
And to my desire for mercy condiscende
For non but thou, may my greuaūce amende

Nowe yet good lorde, I the beseech and pray
As thou raised my brother Lazarous
From death to life the fourth day
Came ayen in body and soule precious
As great a thing maist thou shewe vnto vs
Of thy selfe, by power of thy godheed
As thou dyd of him, liynge in graue deed.

Myne hert is wounded with thy charite
It brenneth, it flamet h incessauntly
Come my dere lorde, Adadiuuandum me
Nowe be not longe my paine to multiplie
Lest in the meane time I departe and die
In thy grace I put bothe hope and confidēce
To do as it pleaseth thy hie magnificence

Floodes of deathe, and tribulacioun
In to my soule I fele entred ful depe
Alas that here is no consolacioun
Euer I waile, euer I mourne and wepe
And sorow hath wounded myn hert ful depe
O dere loue, no maruaile though I die
Sagite tue infixe sunt mihi

Wandringe in this place, as in wildernesse
No comforte haue I ne yet assuraunce
Desolate of ioye, replete with faintnesse
No answere receiuing of mine enquiraunce
Myne herte also greued with displesaunce
Wherfore I may saye, O deus deus
Non est dolor sicut dolor meus

Myne hert erpresseth. Quod dilexi multum
I may not endure though I wolde faine
For now Solum supereſt ſepulchrum
I know it right wel by my huge paine
Thus for loue I may not life sustaine
But o God, I muse what apieth the Quod ſic repente precipitas me

Alas, I se it wil none otherwise be Nowe must I take my leaue for euermore
This bitter paine hath almost discomfite me
My loues corse I can in no wise restore
Alas to this wo that euer I was bore
Here at this stombe nowe must I die & starue
Death is aboute my hert for to carue

My testament I wol begin to make
To God the father, my soule I commende
To Jesu my loue, that died for my sake
My herte and al bothe I giue and sende
In whose loue my lyfe maketh ende
My body also to this monument
I here bequeth, bothe bore and oyntmēt

Of al my willes, lo nowe I make the last Right in this place within this sepulture
I wol be buried whan I am deed and past
And vpō my graue I wol haue this scripture
Here within resteth a goodly creature
Christes true louer Mary Magdalaine
Whose hert for loue, bracke in peces twaine

Ye vertuous women, tender of nature
Ful of pite and of compassion
Resorte I pray you vnto my sepulture
To singe my dirige with great deuocion
Shewe your charite in this condicion
Sing with pite and let your hertes wepe
Remembring I am deed am layed to slepe

Than whan ye begin to parte me fro
And ended haue your mourning obseruaūce
Remembre where so euer that ye go
Alway to serche and make due enquerraunce
After my loue, mine hertes sustenaunce
In euery towne and in euery village
If ye may here of this noble ymage

And if it happe by any grace at lasse
That ye my trew loue finde in any coste
Say that his Magdaleine is deed and paste
For his pure loue hath yelded vp the goost
Say that of al thing I loued him most
And that I might not this death eschewe
My paines so sore dyd euer renewe

And in token of loue perpetual
Whan I am buried in this place present
Take out myne hert, the very rote and al
And close it within this bore of oyntment
To my dere loue make therof a present
Kneling downe with wordes lamentable
Do your message, speake faire and tretable

Say that to him my selfe I commende
A thousande times with herte so fre
This pore token say to him I sende
Pleaseth his goodnesse to take it in gre
It is his owne of right, it is his fee
Whiche he asked, whan he said longe before Giue me thy hert, and I desire no more

The remedie of Loue.

I due my lorde, my loue for faire of face
I due my turtle doue so freshe of hue
I due my mirthe, a due al my solace
I due alas, my sauiour lorde Jesu
I due the gentellest that euer I knewe
I due my most excellent paramour
Fairer than rose, sweter than lylly flour

I due my hope of al pleasure eternal
My lyfe, my welth, and my prosperite
Mine herte of golde, my peerle oriental Myne adamant of parfite charite
My cheefe refuge and my felycite
My comforte, and al my recreacioun
Fare wel my parpetual saluacioun

Farewel mine Emperour Celestial
Most beautiful prince of al mankinde
I due my lord, of hert moste lyberal
Farwel my sweetest, dothe soule and minde
So louing a spouse shall I neuer finde
I due my soueraine, and very gentilman Farewel dere herte, as herely as I can

Thy wordes eloquent flowinge in swetnesse Shal no more alas, my minde recomforte wherfore my life must ende in bitternesse
For in this worlde shal I neuer resorte
To the, whiche was mine heuenly disporte
I se alas it wol none other be Nowe farewel the grounde of al dignite

I due the fairest that euer was bore
Alas I may nat se your blessed face
Nowe welaway that I shal se no more Thy blessed vilage, so replete with grace wherin is printed my parfite solace
I due mine hertes roote and al for euer
Nowe farewel, I must from the disseuer

My soule for anguishe is nowe ful thrussy
I faint right sore for heuinesse
My lorde, my spouse: Cur me dereliquisti?
Sith I for the suffre al this distresse what causeth the to seme thus mercilesse
Sith it the pleseth of me to make an ende
(In manus tuas) my spirite I commende.

Finis.

The remedie of Loue.

Eyng the manfolde inconuenience
Falling by vndyrded prosperite
Whiche is not tempred with moral prudēce
Nothinge more welthie than youthes frelte
Moued I am, bothe of right and equite
To youthes wele somwhat to write wherby he may him selfe safecondite

First I note, as thing moste noyous
Unto youthe a greuous malady
Amonge vs called loue encombrous
Veryng yonge people straungely
Ofte by force causeth hem to dye
Age is ehe turmented by loue
Vineth the girdle, and not aboue wherfore this werke, whiche is right laborous

For age me nede nat in honde to take
To youthe me oweth to be obsequious Nowe I begin thus to worke for his sake whiche may the feruence of loue aslake
To the louer, as a mitigatiue
To him that is none a preseruatiue

That mighty lorde whiche me gouerneth youthe I meane, measure if I pace
In euery mater whiche him concerneth
First as is behoueful, I wol aske grace
And forthwithal in this same place
Er I begin, I wol knele and saye
These fewe wordes, and him of helpe praye

Flouring youth, whiche haste auauntage
In strength of body in luste and beaute
Also a precelling haste aboue age
In many a singuler commodite
Nowe be it one thing he hath beyonde the
To thy most profite and greatest auaile whiche shuld the cōduit, I mean sad cōsaile

And yet good lorde, of a presumption
I nil depraue thy might and deite
I lyue but vnder thy protection
I am thy subiecte, I weare thy lyuerie
For thou arte grounde of my prosperite
And freshest floure of al my garlande

My

By singuler aide, as I well vnderstande.

But as he that oweth his lorde best seruice
And entire faithe, his honour to supporte
Right so I speake, and in none other wise
I knowlege my self one of the least sorte
Of thy seruauntes, to our elders comforte
Drawe sadde counsaile to thee of thou liste
Thee and thy power, who maie them resiste.

Fie on age, vnder wordes fewe
And his erronious opinion
What speketh of him, whiche saieth moste vn-
Ill youth to be of ill disposicion (true
Dampneth vs all without exception
And for a colerable auauntage
He saieth in hym resteth counsaill sage.

Well maie sadde counsaile in him rest
But yet his deedes been ferre therefro
He maie saie with our parishe prest
Doe as I saie, and not as I do
For I my self knowe one or two Well striken in age, for neighbourhedde
Woll to their neighbours wiues bedde.

He will in presence of the yong man
Her clippe and kisse, ye and doune laie
To bleare his eye, thus he saieth than O suffre yet olde Wozell to plaie
Now haue I doen that I can or maie
Thus he saieth her husbande to queme
That he nor no man should not misdeme.

In worde nor deede, nedeth him not be coie
It is impossible that he doe amisse
If the yong man speake, anon he saieth boie
To rebuke age, besemeth thee not iwis
Thus his olde face aye his warrant is
All is in hym, sleight and subtiltee
And ferre from reason I tell thee.

And shortly age is not aboue me
Age is impotent, and of no resistence
Age vnweldie maie not fight nor flee
What were age without my defence
Sad counsaile saiest giueth hym assistence
Reason is freshest where that I ame
Wherefore in thy saiyng thou art to blame.

Sith reason to me is rather accompanied Then vnto age, whiche is the opinion
Of euery wise man not to be denied
And sith sad counsaile proceedeth of reason
Sad counsaile in me hath his chief mansion
This is no naie, but what is the ende
Of this thy suasion what doest entende.

Age to compare vnto thyne excellence
I will presume hym so to dignifie
Ye be not egall, how be it experience
Hym auauntageth, for she moste certainly Hym teacheth what thing to hym is cõtrary
And ofte to fore see it, and warely eschewe
Whiche thou neuer assaidest yet nor knewe.

Experience maketh a man moste certain
Of any thing hearthly, and of necessitee
Sad counsaile requireth certaintie plain
So ferre to moue thus whereto nede we
But to my purpose, as thou commaundest me
Shortly mine entent is thus, and none other
Under thy licence to counsaile my brother.

How shouldest giue any counsaile so yong
Lacking experience vnto thyne owne spache
I report me, I wote well as for thy tong
Will serue thee right wel, but that for to teach
I doubte me lest that thy wit woll not reach
Youth & experience thou saist be not conuert
How shouldest then teache well vnexpert.

Scripture witnesseth ỳ God will oft shitte
Fro the wise witted man, & shewe it to the child
To hym I meane that of his owne witte
Presumeth not, but is debonaire and milde
By counsaile I entend vertue for to bilde
Whiche of myne elders part haue I borowed
And part of experiẽce, which I haue forowed

Well than, if it be as thou lettest fare
Shewe forthe thy doctrine be not agaste
I woll thee suppoze, looke thou not spare
Maugre age, though he frete or gnaste
To all the age counsaill herein were but waste
Boldely begin, go forthe to the processe
Feare not sith thou art of soche sureneste.

Graunt mercie lorde sith it thee doeth like
To licence me, now I woll and dare boldly
Assaile my purpose, wt scriptures autentike
Wyth werke woll I ground, vnderset, & fortefie
I spire my beginnyng, O thou woode furie
Alecto with thy sisters, and in especiall
To the mother of ielousie Inno I call.

Explicit Prologus.

The remedie of Loue.

His werke who so shall se or rede
Of any incongruitie doe me not impeche
Ordinatelie behoueth me first to procede
In deduccion thereof, in maner as the leche
His pacientes sickness oweth first for to seche
The which knowen, medicin he should aplie
And shortly as he can, then shape a remedie.

Right so by counsail, willing the to exhort
O yong man prosperous, which doth abounde
In thy floures of luste belongeth on thee sort
We first to consider what is roote and grounde
Of thy mischief, whiche is plainlie found
Woman farced with fraude and disceipt
To thy confusion moste allective baite.

Flie the mis woman, lest she thee disceiue
Thus saith Salomõ, which tauzt was fullie
The salshed of women in his daies to cõceine
The lips of a strumpet been sweter thã honie
Her throte he saieth soupled w oile of flaterie
How be it the ende and effecte of all
Bitter is then any wormwode or gall.

Flie the mis woman, louyng thy life
Ware the straungers blande eloquence
Straunge I call her that is not thy wife
Of her beautie haue no concupisence
Her countenaunce, pretendyng beneuolence
Be ware her signes and ye so amiable
Holde it for ferme, thei been disceiuable.

Lo an ensample what women be
In their signes and countenaunce shortlie
I will shewe thee how louers three Loued one woman right entirelie
Eche of them knewe others maladie
Wherefore was all their daily labour
Who coud approche nert in her fauour.

At sondrie seasons, as fortune requireth
Seuerallie thei came to see her welfare
But ones it happened, loue them so fireth
To see their Ladie thei all would not spare
Of others comyng none of them were ware
Till all thei mette, where as thei in place
Of her Ladie sawe the desired face.

To supper set, full smallie thei eate
Full sober and demure in countenaunce
For there taried none of hem for any meate
But on his Ladie to giue attendaunce
And in secrete wise some significaunce
Of loue to haue, whiche parceiuyng she Frelie executed thus her propertee.

In due season, as she alwaie aspied
Euery thyng to execute conuenientlie
Her one louer first frendlie she ived
The seconde she offred the cuppe curteslie
The thirde she gaue token secretlie
Underneth the borde she trade on his foote
Through his entrailes tikled the hart roote.

By your leaue, might I here aske a questiõ
Of you my maisters that sewe loues trace
To you libely belongeth the solucion
Whiche of these three stood now in grace
Clerely to answere ye would aske long space
The matter is doubtfull and opinable
To a certain you I will my self enable.

Of the forsaied three my self was one
No man can answere it better then I
Hartely of vs biloued was there none
But wattes packe we bare all by and by Whiche at last I my self gan aspie
And time as me thought, then I left ỹ daunce
O thoughtfull harte, great is thy greuaunce

Hence fro me hence, that me for to endite
Halpe aie here afore, o ye muses nine
Whilom ye were wont to be mine aide & light
My penne to direct, my brain to illumine
No lenger alas maie I sewe your doctrine
The freshe lustie meters, that I wont to make Haue been here afore, I vtterlie forsake.

Come hither thou Hermes, & ye furies all
Which ber been vnder vs, nigh the nether pole
Where Pluto reigneth, o kyng infernall
Sende out thine arpies, send anguishe & dole Miserie and wo, leaue ye me not sole
Of right be present must pain & eke turment
The pale death beseemeth not to be absent.

To me now I call all this lothsome sort
My paines encrease, my sorowes to augmẽt
For worthie I am to be bare of all comfort
Thus sith I haue consumed and mispent
Not onely my daies, but my fiuefolde talent
That my lorde cõmitted me, I cã not recõpẽce
I maie not to derely abye my negligence.

By the path of penaunce yet will I reuert
To the well of grace, mercie there to fetche

Dispise

Dispise not God the meke contrite harte
Of the coche crowe, alas ȳ I would not retche
And yet it is not late in the seconde wetche
Mercie shall I purchace by incessaunt cryng
The mercies of our lorde euer shall I syng

But well maiest thou waile wicked womā
That thou shuldest disceiue thus any innocēt
And in recompence of my synne, so as I can
To al men wol I make & leue this monumēt
In shewing part of thy falshed is myne entēt
For all were to moche, I cannot well I wote
The cause sheweth plainly he ȳ thus wrote.

If al the yearth wer parchment scribable
Spedie for the hande, and all maner wood
Wer hewed and proporcioned to pennes able
All water ynke, in damme or in flood
Euery man being a parfite Scribe and good
The curstednesse yet and deseipt of women
Could not be shewed by the meane of penne.

I flie all odious resemblaunces
The Deuils bronde call women I might Whereby man is encensed to mischaunces
Or a stinkyng rose that faire is in sight
Or dedly empoyson, like the suger white
Whiche by his swetnesse causeth man to tast
And sodainly sleeth & bringeth him to his last

It is not my maner to vse soche language
But this my doctrine, as I maie lawfullie
I woll holly grounde with auctoritie sage Willing bothe wisedome, and vertue edelie
Wine and women into apostasie
Cause wisemen to fall, what is that to saie
Of wisedome cause them to forget the waie.

Wherefore the wiseman doeth thee aduise
In whose wordes can be founde no lesyng
With the straunger to sit in no wise
Whiche is not thy wife, fall not in clippyng
With her, but beware ehe of her hissyng
Kepe with her in wine no altercacion
Lest that thyne harte fall by inclinacion.

Maie a man thinkest hide and safe laie
Fire in his bosome, without empairement
And brēning of his clothes, or whider he may Walke on hotte coles, his feete not brente
Is who saieth naie, and whereby is mente
This forsaied prouerbe and similitude
But that thou ridde thee plainly to denude.

From the flatterers forgettyng her gide
The gide of her youth, I meane shamfastnes Whiche should cause her maidenhed to abide
Her Goddes beheste ehe she full recheleste
Not retching, committeth it to forgetfulnes
Neither God ne shame in her hauyng place
Nedes must soche a woman lacke grace.

And all that neigh her in waie of sin
To tourne of grace shall lacke the influence
The pathes of life no more to come in Wherefore first fremde thee with Sapience
Remembryng God, and after with Prudence
To thyne owne weale that thei thee kepe
Unto thyne harte, least her wordes crepe.

In his booke where I take my moste ground
And in his prouerbes sage Salomon
Telleth a tale, whiche is plainly found
In the liueth chaptter, wheder in deede don
Or mehely feined to our instruccion
Let clerkes determine, but this am I sure
Moche like thyng I haue had in vre.

At my windowe saieth he I looked out Faire yong people, where I sawe many Emong hem all, as I looked about
To a yong man fortuned I lent myne ire
Estraunged from his minde it was likely
By the streate at a corner, nigh his owne hous
He went about with ire right curious.

When that the daie his light gan withdrawe
And the night approched in the twinlight
How a woman came and met hym I sawe
Talking with him vnder shade of the night
Now blessed be God ȳ the lok his might Whiche hath fulfilled myne hartes desire
I slaked my paines, whiche were hote as fire.

And yet myne auctour, as it is skill
To folowe, I must tell her araiment
She was full nice, soules like to spill
As nice in countenaunce yet as in garmente
For iangling she was of rest impaciente
Wandryng still in no place she stode
But restlesse now, and nowout she yode.

Now in the hous, now in the strete
Now at a corner she standeth in a waite
Incessauntly busie her praie for to gete
To bryng to the lure whom she doeth laite
Now where I left, vnto my matter straite
I woll tourne again, how she hym met
Sweetely lisked, and frendly hym grette.

With

With wordes of curtesie many and diuerse
Right as in part I haue before tolde
Now as I can I purpose to reherse
How she flattering saied with visage bolde
I haue made bowes and offringes manifolde
For thy sake, O myne harte, O my loue dere
This daie I thanke God all performed were.

Therefore I came out, & made thus affarte
Verie delirous your welfare to se
Now I haue seen you, pleased is myne harte
In faith he shall none haue my loue but ye
As true as I am to you be to me
I praie you hartely dere harte come home
No man should be to me so welcome.

And in good faithe, the sothe for to saie
Your comyng to me ran in my thought
Harke in your eare, my bedde freshe and gaie
I haue behanged with tapettes new bought
From Egipte, and frō far countries brought Steined with many a lustie freshe hue
Excedyng golde or Jasper in value.

My chāber is strowed with Mirre & incence
With sote sauoring Aloes, & with cinamome
Breathyng an Aromatike redolence
Surmountyng Olibane, in any mans dome
Ye shall bitwene my breastes rest if ye come
Let vs haue our desired hallyng
For we maie safe be till in the mornyng.

Myne husband is not at home, he is went Forthe in his iourney, a farre waie hence
I bagge with money he hath with hym hent
As hym thought nedefull for his expence
Unto my worde giue faithe and credence
Now is the Moone yong, and of light dulle
Ere he come home it woll be at the fulle

Thus craftely hath she hym besette
With her lime roddes, panter, and snare
The selie soule caught in her nette
Of her sugred mouthe, alas nothyng ware
Thus is he left graceles and bare
Of helpe, comfort, and ghostlie succour
And furthermore, as saieth myne aucthour.

As a beast ledde to his death doeth pante
This yong man soloweth her in that stounde
And as a wanton Lambe full ignorante
How he is pulled and drawen to be bounde
Unto the tyme he hath his deathes wounde
And like a birde that hasteth to the grin
Not knowyng the perill of his like therein.

Now gentle sonne saith Salomon take hede
My wordes in thy breast kepe and make safe
Let her not thy mynde in her waies mislede
Be not deceiued, lese not thy safe
Many hath she wounded, many doune caste
Many strong by her hath loste their breath
Her waies, waies of hell ledyng to death.

And in this little naracion precidente
The womannes manifolde gile I attende
The yong man alas how she hath shent
Disceiued her husbande, her own next frend
In these bothe her God she doeth offende
To breake her spousail, to her is of no weight
Furdermore to shew womans craft & sleight.

A woman at her dooze sate on a stall
To see folke passe by streates of the citee
With eye and countenaunce eke she gan call
If there be any pretie one, come nere to me
Come hither ye pigges nye, ye little babe
At last she saied to a yong man hartlesse
Of her disceipt vnware and defenceles

Moche swetter she saith, & more acceptable
Is drinke when it is stollen priuely
Then when it is taken in forme auowable
Bread hid and gotten ieoperdously
Must nedes be swete, and semblablie
Uenison stolne is aie the swetter
The ferther the narower set the better.

And who this woman saith Salomon lesses
The yong man weteth not who she doth lede
Of the darke depenesse of hell been her gesses
Beware yong man therefore I thee rede
And how be it chiefly for thy good spede
This werke to cōpile, I haue take in charge
I must of pitie my charitie enlarge.

With the selie man whiche is thus begiled
Her husband I mean, I wol wepe and waile
His painfull infortune, whereby reuiled
Causeles he is, neuer to conuaile
Euery man yong and olde woll him assaile
With wordes of occasion, with the loth name
And alas good soule, he nothyng to blame.

But she that could so ill doe and wolde
Hers be the blame for her demerite
And leaue that opprobrous name cokolde
To apyoper to hym as in dispite
Ranfake yet we would if we might
Of this worde the true ortographie
The very discent and ethimologie.

The

The well and grounde of the firſt inuenciō
To knowe the ortographie we muſt deriue
Whiche is cohe and cold, in compoſicion
Byreaſon, as nigh as I can contriue
Then how it is written we knowe beliue
But yet lo, by what reaſon and grounde
Was it of theſe twoo wordes compounde.

As of one cauſe to giue very iudgement
Themilogie let vs firſt beholde
Eche letter an hole worde doeth repreſent
As C, put for colde, and O, for olde
B, is for knaue, thus diuers men holde
The firſt parte of this name we haue founde
Let vs ethimologiſe the ſeconde.

As the firſt finder mente I am ſure
C, for calot, for ol, we haue O
L, for leude, M, for demeanure
The craft of the enuentour ye maie ſe lo
How one name ſignifieth perſones two Icolde olde knaue, cokolde himſelf wenyng
And eke a calot of leude demeanyng.

The ſeconde cauſe of thimpoſicion
Of this forſaied name was ielouſie
To be ielouſe is greateſt occaſion
To be cokolde, that men can aſpie
And though the paſſion be very ſirie
And of continuell feruence and heete
The pacient aye ſuffreth cold on his feete.

And who that is ielous, and aye in a drede
Is full of Melancolie and gallie ire
His wiues noſe if ſhe miſſe trede
He woll cutte of, ye and conſpire
His death who that woll her deſire
Whiche ſhe perceiuyng braſteth his gall
And anone his greate wodeneſſe doeth fall.

As ſone as ſhe hath knit hym that knot
Now is he tame that was ſo ramagious
Mekely ſitteth he doune and taketh his lot
Laied been now his lokes ſo furious
And he but late as a cocke batailous
Bote in his quarell, to auenge hym bolde
Now is he called bothe coke and colde.

This ſaiyng, to all curteſie diſſonant
Whiche ſemeth that it of malice grewe
In this rude treatiſe I woll not plant
As parcell thereof, but onely to ſhewe
The opinion of the talcatike drewe
Whiche in ill ſaiyng is euer merie
No man as I thereof ſo werie.

But I as parcell of this my booke
Woll graffe in ſome ſadde counſaill wherby
The wedded man, if he daigne to looke
In it, the better ſhall mowe hym gie
And prouide for his ſaied infortunie
Whiche as I haue ſaied, with him complaine
I woll, as partener of his greate paine.

As moſte erpedient to his weale
I would all ielouſie were abiecte
If he be ielous, that heit conceale
And in his labour be circumſpecte
To knowe her waies, if thei ſeme ſuſpecte
And not for to breake, for one worde broken
She woll not miſſe but ſhe woll be wroken.

Forbid her not, that thou noldeſt haue don
For looke what thyng ſhe is forbod
To that of all thynges ſhe is moſte prone Namely if it be ill and no good
Till it be executed ſhe is nigh wood
Soche is woman, and ſoche is her feate
Her craft by craft, labour to defeate.

If thou hereafter, now a ſingle man
Shouldeſt be ielous if thou haddeſt a wife
Wedde not but if thou can truſt woman
For elſ ſhouldeſt lede a carefull life
That thou moſte lotheſt ſhould be full rife
Yet I nill gainſaie Matrimonie
But Melius eſt nubere quam vri.

That is to ſaie, better is in Wedlocke
A wife to take, as the churche doeth kenne
Then to been vnder the fleſhes yoke
In fleſhlie luſt alwaie for to brenne
But as I ſaied, for all ielous menne
So thei liue chaſte, I holde it laſſe ill
That thei wedde not, than them ſelf ſpill

The ſingle man whiche is yet to wedde
And not the wedded man, thus I rede
To warne hym now he is to larre ſpedde
It is to late hym for to forbedde
But let hym take as for his owne nede
Soche counſaile as is hym before tolde
Theſe wordes folowyng eke ſhe beholde.

Thy water to kepe the wiſeman doeth teache
That thou in no wiſe let it haue iſſue
At a narowe rifte, wate it woll leche
And reſemblablie the woman vntrue
To giue her fre walke in all wiſe eſchue
If ſhe at large, not at thine hande walke
She woll thee ſhame, thou ſhalt it not balke.

Wedded

wedded or single, thus saith the wiseman
Her that bothe daie and night euermore
Lithe in thy bosome, wife or yet lemman
Loue not to hote, least thou repent sore
Lest she thee bring into some ill lore
Thy wife not to loue yet I will support
But that thou dote not, thus I thee exhort.

Lo if thou loue her, loue ebe thine honestie
Be she not idell, for what woll betide
If she sit idle, of very necessitie
Her minde woll searche terre and ebe wide
Namelie if she be not accompanide
How accompanied, not with yong men
But with maidens I meane or women.

Maiden seruauntes be right conuenient
In house to helpe to doe her seruice
In whom she maie vse her commaundement
In the season at her owne deuice
To teache hem good, yeue her thine aduice
To make them huswiues, thus businesse
Maie yet refrain her from idlenesse.

But bide not her that thou wolt haue do
Of thine entent that might be lettyng
But craftely encourage her therto
By other meanes, as by commendyng
And not to moche, but duely mengyng
Bothe praise and blame, and in thy reason
First praise wisely the place and season.

Of faithfull will, and harte full tender
One thing I call into remembraunce
Again, whiche though my wit be slender
After my power and sufficiaunce
I purpose to make a puruiaunce
Sith women of nature been chaungeable
Freale not ware also disceiuable.

Be it that thy wife be excellently good
That none be better of dispolicion
In processe of time she might turne her mode
By some misse liuers instigacion
Diuers men to thilke occupacion
Aplien daily, mynde and ebe harte
From her goodnesse women to peruarte.

If thou aspie any suspect person
Draw to thy wife, beware in all wise
To hym nor her of thy suspeccion
Breake not one worde, though thin harte a-Kindle no fire, no smoke woll arise (grise
Though he be of a corrupt entent
She peraventure is not of assent.

Explicit.

The complaint

of Mars and Venas.

Ladeth ye louers in the morowe graie
Lo Uenus risen emong yon Rowes rede
And floures freshe honour ye this daie
For whē the sonne, vprist, then would thei spredе
But ye louers that lie in any drede
Flieth lesse wicked tongues you aspie
Lo yonde the Sonne, the candell of ielousie.

With teares blewe, & with a wounded hart
Taketh your leue, and wt sainct Jhō to borow
Apeseth somwhat of your paines smart
Time cometh eft, ỹ cessen shall your sorow
The glad night is worth an heauie morowe
Sainct Ualentine a soule thus heard I sing
Upon thy daie or Sonne gan vp spring.

Yet sang this soule I rede you all awake
And ye that haue not chosen in humble wise
Without repentyng cheseth your make Yet at the least, renoueleth your seruice
And ye that haue full chosen as I deuise
Confermeth it perpetually to dure
And pacientlie taketh your auenture

And for the worship of this high feaste
Yet woll I in my briddes wise syng
The sentence of the complaint at the leaste
That wofull Mars made at the departyng
Fro freshe Uenus in a morowning
When Phebus with his firie torches rede
Ransaked hath euery louer in his drede.

Whilome the three heauens lorde aboue
As well by heauenliche reuolucion
As by deserte hath wonne Uenus his loue
And she hath take hym in subieccion
And as a maistresse taught him his lession
Commaundyng hym neuer in her seruice
He were so bolde no louer to dispise.

For she forbade hym ielousie at all
And cruelte and boste, and tirannie
She made him at her lusse so humble and tal
That when she dained to cast on him her ye
He toolke in pacience to liue or die
And thus she bridleth him in her maner

with

with nothing, but with scornig of her chere

Who reigneth nowe in blisse but Uenus
That hath this worthi knight in gouernaūce
Who singeth nowe but Mars ꝑ serueth thus
The layze Uenus, causer of plesaunce
He bint him to perpetuel obeissaunce
And she bint her to loue him forever
But so be that his trespace it discouer

Thus be they knitte, and reignen as in heuē
By loking most, as it fel on a tide
That by her bothe assent was set a steuene
That Mars shal entre as fast as he may glyde
In to her derte palays to abyde
Walking his course til she had him ytake
And he prayed her to haste her for his sake

Than saide he thus, myne hertes lady swete
Ye knowe wel my myschefe in that place
For sikerly tyl that I with you mete
My lyfe stante there in auenture and grace
But whan I se the beaute of your face
There is no drede of death may do me smerte
For al your luste is ease to mine herte

She hath so great compassion of her knight
That dwelleth in solitude til she come
For it stode so, that yike time no wight
Counsailed him, ne saide to him welcome
That nigh her wit for sorow was ouercome
Wherfore she spedde as fast in her way
Almoste in one daye as he dyd in tway

The great ioye that was betwixe hem two Whan they be mette, there maye no tonge tel
There is no more but vnto bedde they go
And thus in ioye and blisse I lette hem dwel
This worthy Mars ꝑ is of knighthode wel
The floure of fairnesse happeth in his armes
And Uenus kysseth Mars the god of armes

Soiourned hath this Mars, of which I rede
In chambre amydde the palais priuely
I certaine time, til him fela drede
Through Phebus that was comen hastely
Within the palais yates sturdely
With torch in honde, of which ꝑ stremes brist
On Uenus chambre, knocheden ful light

The chambre there as laye this freshe quene
Depainted was with white boles grete
And by the light she knew that shon so shene
That Phebus came to bren hem wt his hete
This lilly Uenus ny dreint in teares wete
Embraseth Mars, and said alas I die
The torch is come, ꝑ al this worlde wol wite

Up sterte Mars, him liste not to slepe
Whan he his lady herde so complaine
But for his nature was not for to wepe
In stede of teares from his eyen twaine
The fiers sparcles sprongen out for paine
And hente his hauberke that lay him beside Flye wold he nought, ne might him self hide

He throweth on his helme of huge weight
And girt him with his swerde, ꝑ in his honde
His mighty speare, as he was wont to feight
He shaketh so, that it almost to wonde
Ful heuy was he to walken ouer londe
He may not holde with Uenus company
But badde her flye leste Phebus her espy

O wofal Mars alas, what maist thou fain
That in the palais of thy disturbaunce
Irte leste behinde in peril to be slaine
And yet there to his double thy penaunce
For she that hath thine hert in gouernaunce
Is passed halfe the stremes of thine eyen
That ꝑ nere swift, wel maist ꝑ wepe ꝑ crien

Nowe flyeth Uenus in to Cilinius tour
With voide corse, for feare of Phebus light
Alas and there hath she no socour
For she ne founde ne sey no maner wight
And eke as there she had but litel might Wherfore her selfen for to hide and saue
Within the gate she fledde in to a caue

Darke was this caue, ꝑ smoking as the hel
Nat but two paas within the yate it stode
A naturel day in darke I let her dwel
Now wol I speake of Mars furious ꝑ wode
For sorowe he wolde haue seen his hert blod
Sith ꝑ he might haue done her no companie
He ne rought not a mite for to die

So feble he wert for hete and for his wo
That nigh he swelt, he might vnneth endure
He passeth but a sterre in dayes two
But neuertheles, for al his heuy armure
He soloweth her that is his liues cure
For whose departing he tobe greater yze
Than for al his brenning in the fire

After he walketh softely a paas
Complaining that it pite was to here
He saide, O lady bright Uenus alas
That euer so wide a compas is my sphere

The complaint of Mars.

Alas, whan shal I mete you herte dere
This twelue dayes of April I endure
Through ielous Phebus this misauenture

Now God helpe sely Venus alone
But as God wolde it happed for to be
That while ỳ weping Venus made her mone
Ciclinius riding in his chyuanche
Fro Venus valanus might this palais se
And Venus he saluet, and maketh chere
And her receiueth as his frende ful dere

Mars dwelleth forth in his aduerlite
Complaining euer in her departing
And what his cõplaint was remẽbreth me
And therfore in this lustie morowning
As I best can, I wol it saine and sing
And after that I wol my leaue take
And God yeue euery wight ioy of his make.

The complaint

of Mars.

THe order of complaynt requireth shilfully
That if a wight shall plaine pitously
Ther mote be cause wherfore that men plaine
Or men may deme he playneth folyly
And causeles alas that am not I
Wherfore the groũde & cause of all my paine
So as my troubled witte may it attaine
I wol reherse, not for to haue redresse
But to declare my grounde of heuinesse

The first time alas, that I was wrought
And for certaine effectes hider brought
By him that lordeth eche intelligence
I yaue my trewe seruice and my thought
For euermo, how dere I haue it bought
To her that is of so great excellence
That what wight ỳ sheweth first her offence
Whan she is worthe & taketh of him no cure
He may not longe in ioye of loue endure

This is no fained mater that I tel
My lady is the very sours and wel
Of beaute, lustie, fredome, and gentilnesse
Of riche array howe dere men it sel
Of al dispozte in whiche men frendly dwel
Of loue and play, and of beninge humblesse
Of sowne of instrumentes of al swetnesse
And thereto so wel fortuned and shewed
That through ỳ world her goodnes is shewed

What wonder is than though that I be sette
My seruice on soche one that may me lnette
To wele or wo, sithe it lithe in her might Therfore myne herte for euer I to her hette
Ne trewly for my deth shall I not lette
To ben her trewest seruant and her knight
I flatter nat, that may wete euery wight
For this day in her seruice shal I dye
But grace be, I se her neuer with eye

To whom shal I plaine of my distresse
Who may me help, who may my hert redresse
Shal I complaine vnto my lady free
Nay certes, for she hath soche heuynesse
For feare and eke for wo, that as I gesse
In litel time it would her bane be
But were she safe, it were no force of me
Alas that euer louers mote endure
For loue so many perilous auenture

For though so be that louers bee as trewe
As any metal that is forged newe
In many a case hem tideth oft sorowe
Somtime her ladies wol nat on hem rewe
Somtime if that ielousy it knewe
They might lightly lay her heed to borowe
Somtime enuions folke wtonges horowe
Deprauen hem alas, whom may they please
But he be false, no louer hath his ease

But what auaileth soch a longe sermoun
Of auentures of loue vp and doun
I wol retourne and speaken of my paine
The point is this of my distructioun
My right lady, my saluacioun
Is in affray, and not to whom to plaine
O herte swete, o lady soucrayne
For your disease I ought wel swoun & swelt
Though I none other harme ne drede felt

To what fine made the God that sytte so hie
Beneth him loue other companye
And straineth folke to loue maugre her heed
And than her ioye for aught I can espie
Ne lasteth not the twinkeling of an eye
And some haue neuer ioye til they be deed
What meaneth this, what is this mistiheed
Wherto constraineth he his folke so fast
Thing to desire but it should last

And

And though he made a louer loue a thing
And maketh it seme stedfast and during yet putteth he in it soche misauenture
That rest nis there in his yeuing
And that is wonder that so iuste a king
Dothe soche hardnesse to his creature
Thus whether loue breke or els dure
Algates he that hath with loue to done
Hath after wo, than chaunged is ỳ Moone

It semeth he hath to louers enmyte
And lyke a fisher, as men may al day se
Baiteth his angle hoke with some plesaunce
Til many a fisshe is wode to that he be Ceased therwith, and than at erst hath he Al his desire, and therwith al mischaunce
And though the line breke he hath penaunce
For with that hoke he wounded is so sore
That he his wages hath for euermore

The broche of Thebes was of soche kinde
So ful of rubyes and of stones of Inde
That euery wight that sette on it an eye
He wende anone to worthe out of his mynde
So sore the beaute would his hert bynde
Til it be had, him thought he must die
And whē that it was his than should he drie Soche wo for drede aye while that he it had
That welnigh for the feare he should mad

And whan it was fro his possession
Than had he double wo and passion
That he so faire a iewel hath forgo
But yet this broche, as in conclusion
Was not the cause of his confusion
But he that wrought it enfortuned it so
That euery wight ỳ had it should haue wo
And therfore in the worcher was the vice
And in the coueitour that was so nice

So fareth it by lours, and by me
For though my lady haue so greate beaute
That I was made to, I had gette her grace
She wasnot cause of mine aduersite
But he that wrought her, as mote I thee
That put soche a beaute in her face
That made me coueiten and purchace
Myne owne death him wite I that I die
And mine vnwit that euer I clambe so hie

But to you hardy knightes of renowne
Sithe that ye be of my deuis yowne
Al be I not worthy to so great a name yet saine these clerkes I am your patrone
Therfore ye ought haue some compassione
Of my disease, and take it nat a game
The proudest of you may be made ful tame
Wherfore I pray you of your gentillesse
That ye complaine for mine heuinesse

And ye my ladyes that ben trew and stable
By way of kinde ye ought to ben able To haue pite of folke that ben in paine
Nowe haue ye cause to clothe you in sable Sith that your empyres the honorable
Is desolate, wel ought ye to plaine
Nowe shoude your holy teares fal and raine
Alas your honour and your empyre
Nigh deed for drede, ne can her not cheuice

Complaineth eke ye louers al in fere
For her that with vnfained humble chere
Was euer redy to do you socour
Complaineth her that euer hath be you dere
Complaineth beaute, fredome, and manere
Complaineth her that endeth your labour
Complaineth thilke ensample of al honour
That neuer dyd but gentilnesse
Kytheth therfore in her some kindnesse

¶ The complaint of Venus.

THere nys so high comfort to my plesaunce
Whan that I am in any heuinesse
Is for to haue layser of remembraunce
Upon the manhode and the worthynesse
Upon the trouthe, and on the stedfastnes
Of him whose I am al while I maye dure
There ought to blame ne no creature
For euery wight praiseth his gentillesse

In him is boute, wisedome, a gouernaunce
Well more than any mannes witte can gesse
For grace hath wolde so ferforth him auaūce
That of knighthod he his parfite richesse
Honour honoureth him for his noblesse
Therto so wel hath fourmed him nature
That I am his for euer I him ensure
For euery wight praiseth his gentillesse

And nat withstanding all his suffisaunce
His gentil herte is of so great humblesse
To me in worde, in werke, & in countenaūce

And me to serue is al his besinesse
That I am sette in very sykernesse
Thus ought I blisse wel mine auentur
Sith that him liste me seruen and honour
For euery wight praiseth his gentillesse

Nowe certes loue it is right couenable
That men ful dere abye thy noble thinges
As wake a bedde, and fasten at the table
Weping to laugh & singe in complaynynges
And downe to cast visage and lokinges
Often to chaunge visage and countenaunce
Playe in slepinge and dremen at the daunce
Al the reuers of any gladde feling

Ielousy he hanged by a cable
She wolde al knowe through her espiyng
There dothe no wight nothing so resonable
That al nis harme in her ymagining
Thus dere abought is loue in yeuing
Whiche ofte he yeueth without ordinaunce
Is sorowe ynough, and litel of plesaunce
Al the reuers of any glade feling

A litel tyme his yeft is agreable
But ful accombrous is the vsinge
For subtel ielousy the disceiuable
Ful often tyme causeth disturbinge
Thus ben we euer in drede and suffring
In no certaine, we languishen in penaunce
And haue wel ofte many an harde mischaūce
Al the reuers of any gladde feling

But certes loue, I saye not in suche wise
That for to scape out of your lace I ment
For I so longe haue ben in your seruice
That for to lete of wil I neuer assent
No force though ielousye me tourment
Suffiseth me to se him whan I may
And therfore certes to mine ending day
To loue him best, shal me neuer repent

And certes loue, whan I me wel aduise
Of any estate that man may represent
Thā haue ye made me through your frāchise Chese the best that euer in erthe went Nowe loue well hert, & lohe thou neuer stent
And lette the ielous putte it in assaye
That for no paine wol I not saye naye
To loue him best, shal I neuer repent

Herte to the it ought ynoughe suffice
That loue so highe a grace to you sent
To chose the worthiest in all wise
And most agreable vnto mine entent
Seke no ferther, neither wayne went Sith ye haue suffisaunce vnto my paye
Thus wol I ende this cōplaining or this lay
To loue him best, shal I neuer repent.

Lenuoye.

Princes receiueth this cōplainynge in gree
Vnto your excellent benignite
Directe after my litel suffisaunce
For elde, that in my spirite dulleth me
Hath of enditing al the subtelte
Welnigh beraft out of my remembraunce
And eke to me it is a great penaunce
Sith rime in Englishe hath suche scarcite
To folowe worde by worde the curiosite
Of Granson flour, of hem þ make in Fraūce.

Explicit.

Here after foloweth the letter of Cupide.

Cupide, vnto whose commaundement
The gentill kinrede of goddes on hie
And people infernall ben obedient
And al mortal folke seruē busely
Of the goddesse sonne Cytheraonely
To al tho that to our deite
Ben subiectes, hertely greting sende we

In general we wol that ye knowe
That ladies of honour and of reuerence
And other gentil women hauen sowe Suche seede of complaint in our audience
Of men that do hem outrage and offence
That it our eares greueth for to here
So pitous is the effecte of this matere

Passing al londes, on the lytel yle
That cleped is Albion, they muste complaine
They say that ther is croppe and rote of gile
So con tho men dissimule and faine
With standing dropes in her eyen twaine whan that her hertes feleth no distresse
To blinden women with her doublenesse

Her wordes spoken be so sighingly
With so pitous chere and countenaunce
That euery wight that meaneth trewly
Demeth they in herte haue suche greuaunce
They say so importable is her penaunce

That

That but her lady luſt to ſhewe hem grace
They right anone muſte ſterue in the place

Ah lady myne they ſay, I you enſure
Is dothe me grace, and I ſhal euer be While ye that my lyfe may laſt and endure
To you as humble and lowe in eche degre
Is poſſible, is and kepe al thinges in as ſecre
Right as your ſelfe liſte that I do
And els myne herte mote braſt in two

Ful harde it is to knowe a mannes herte
For outwarde may no man the trouth deme
Whan word out of mouth may none ſterte
But it by reſon ſemed euery wight to queme
So it is ſaid of herte as it would ſeme
O faithful woman ful of innocence
Thou art diſceiued by falſe apparence

By proceſſe moueth ofte womans pite
Wening al thing were as theſe men ſey
They graunt hem grace of her benignite
For that men ſhould not for her ſake dey
And with good hert ſette hem in the wey
Of blikful loue kepe it if they conne
And thus other while women bethe ywonne

And whan this man the pan hath by ꝑ ſtele
And fully is in his poſſeſſion
With that women kepeth he no more to dele
After yt he may finde in the toun
Any women his blinde affection
Unto beſtowe, yuel mote he preue
A man for al his othes is harde to beleue

And for that euery falſe man hath a make
Is vnto euery wight is light to know
Whan this traitour this womā hath forſake
He faſt ſpedeth him vnto his felowe
Til he be there his herte is on a lowe
His falſe diſceite may him not ſuffiſe
But of his trayſon telleth al the wiſe

In this a faire auaunt, is this honour
A man him ſelfe accuſe thus and diſtame
Is it good to confeſſe him ſelfe a traitour
And bring a woman to ſclaunderous name
And tel howe he her body hath do ſhame
No worſhippe may he thus to him conquer
But great diſclaunder vnto him and her

To her nay, yet was it no repreſe
For al for vertue was that ſhe wrought
But he that brewed hath al this miſcheſe
That ſpake ſo faire, & falſely in warde thought His be the ſclaunder, as it by reſon ought
And vnto her thanke perpetuell
That in ſoche a nede helpe can ſo wel

Although through mens ſleght and ſubtilte
A ſely ſimple and innocent woman
Betraied is, no wonder ſithe the cite
Of Troye, as the ſtorie tel can Betrayed was through the diſceite of man
And ſet on fyre, and al downe ouerthrowne
And finally deſtroied as men knowe

Betray nat men cites great and kinges
What wight is it that can ſhape remedy
Ayenſt theſe falſely purpoſed thinges
Who can the crafte ſoche craftes eſpy
But man, whoſe witte is euer redy taply
To thing that ſowning in to falſehede
Women bethe ware of falſe men I rede

And farthermore haue theſe men in vſage
That where they nat lykely ben to ſpede
Soche as they ben, with a double viſage
They procuren for to purſewe her nede
He prayeth him in his cauſe to procede
And largely guerdoneth he his trauayle
Litel wote women howe men hem aſſaile

Another wretche vnto his felowe ſaith
Thou fiſcheſt faire, ſhe that the hath fired
Is falſe, inconſtaunt, and hath no faith
She for the rode of folke is ſo deſired
And as an horſe fro daie to daie ſhe is hired
That when thou t'winneſt fro her companie
Cometh an other, and blered is thyne ye.

Now pricke on faſt, and ride thy iourney
While thou art there, for ſhe behind thy backe
So liberall is, ſhe woll nothyng withſey
But ſmartly of an other take a ſmacke
Thus fare theſe women all the packe
Who ſo hem truſteth hanged mote he be Euer thei deſire chaunge and noueltee.

Whereof procedeth this but of enuie
For he hymſelf her ne winne maie
He ſpeaketh her repreſe and villanie
As mannes blabbyng tong is wont alwaie
Thus diuers men full oft make aſſaie
For to diſtourbe folke in ſondrie wiſe
For thei maie not eſchue her empriſe.

Many one ehe would for no good
That hath in loue his tyme ſpent and bled
Yᵉ wiſt that his ladie his aſkyng withſtode

The letter of Cupide,

Ere that he were of her plainly refused
Or waste and vaine al that he had mused
Wherfore he can none other remedy
But on his lady shapeth him to lye

Euery woman he saithe is light to gete
Can none say nay, yf she be wel ysought
Who so may leiser haue with her to trete
Of his purpose shal he fayle nought
But he on madnesse be so depe brought
That he shende al with open homlynesse
That louen women, they doten as I gesse

To sclaūder women thus what may profite
To gentillesse namely that hem arme should
In defence of women, and hem delite
Is that the ordre of gentillesse wolde
If that a man list gentill to be holde
He must al eschewe that therto is contrary
A sclaundrous tonge is his great aduersarye

A foul vice is of tonge to be light
For who so moche clappeth gabbeth oute
The tonge of man so swifte is and so wight
That whan it is reised vp on lofte
Reason is shewed so slowly and softe
That it him neuer ouertake may Lorde so these men ben trusty in assay

Al be it that men finde one woman nice
Inconstaunt, recheleſſe, and variable,
Deignous, proude, fulfilled, of malyce
Without faithe or loue and disceiuable
Slye, queint, false, in al vntrust coulpable
Wicked, keirse, or ful of cruelte
Yet soloweth it not that soche all women be

Whan the high God aungels fourmed had Amonge hem al, were there none
That founden was malicious and bad:
Yes al men wote ther were many one
That for her pride fill fro heuen anone
Shuld me for thy peue all angels proude na-
Nay, he that ȳ sustaineth is to blame (me

Of twelue Apostels, one a traitour was
The remenante yet good were and trewe
So yf it happe men finde percas
O woman false, soche good is to eschewe
And deme not al ȳ they therfore be vntrewe
I se wel mennes owne falsenes
Hem causeth woman to trust the lesse

O euery man ought haue an herte tendre
Vnto a woman, and deme her honorable
Where his shape be thicke or slendre
Or he be good or badde, it is no fable
Euery wight wote ȳ witte hath resonable
That of a woman he discended is Than is it shame of her to speke amysse

A wicked tre good frute may non forth bring
For soche the frute is as is the tre
Take hede of whō thou toke thy beginning
Let thy mother be mirrour vnto the Honour her, yf thou wolte honoured be Dispise her than not in no manere
Lest that therby thy wickednesse apere

An olde prouerbe said is in Englishe
That birde or foule is fuldishonest
What that he be, and holde ful churlishe
That vseth to defoule his owne nest
Men to say wel of women it is the best
And naught to dispise hem ne depraue
If they wol her honour kepe or saue

The ladies euer complaine hem on clerkes
That they haue made bokes of her diffame
In whiche thy dispise women & her werkes
And speake of hem great reprofe and shame
And causeleſſe yeue hem a wicked name
Thus they dispised be on euery side
Disclaundred an blowen on ful wyde

Tho forby bokes maken mencion
Howe women betraide in especial
Adam, Dauid, Sampson, and Salomon
And many one mo, who maye reherse hem al
The treison that they haue do and shal
The worlde her malice may not cōprehende
As clerkes saine, for it hath none ende

Ouide in his boke called Remedie
Of loue, great reprofe of women writeth
Wherin I trowe he dyd great folie
And euery wight ȳ in soche case him delyteth
A clerkes collome is whan he enditeth
Of women, be it prose, rime, or vers
Say they be wicked, al know he the reuers

And ȳ boke scholers lerned in her childehede
For they of women beware should in age
And to loue hem euer be in dred
Sithe to disceiue is set al her corage
They say of perel mē should cast thauantage
Namely of soche as men haue in bewrapped
For many a man by women hath mishapped

No charge is what so these clerkes saine

Of

Of all her writing I doe no cure
Ill her labour and trauaile is in vain
For betwene me and my ladie nature
Shal not be suffred, while ỹ world maie dure
Thus these clerkes by her cruell tirannie
On selie women kithen her maistrie.

whilom for many of hem wer in my cheine
Tied, and now for vnweldie age
And vnlust, maie not to loue atteine
And saine now that loue is but verie dotage
Thus for thei hem self lacken courage
Thei folke excite by her wicked sawes
For to rebell ayenst me and my lawes.

But maugre hem that blame women moste
Soche is the force of myne impression
That sodainlie I can kell her boste
And all her wrong imaginacion
It shall not be in her election
The foulest slutte in all the toune to refuse
If that me luste, for all that thei conne muse

But her in harte as brennyngly desire
As though she were a duchesse or a quene
So can I folkes hartes set on fire
And as me list sende hem ioye or tene
Thei that to women be whet so kene
Wy sharpe persyng strokes how thei smite
Shull sele and knowe, how thei herue ỹ bite

Parde this clerke, this subtill Ouide
And many an other disceiued haue be
Of women, as it is knowe full wide
What no men more, and that is great deintee
So excellent a clerke as was he
And other mo that couden full well preache
Betrapped wer, for aught ỹ thei coud teache.

And trusteth well that it is no maruaile
For women knowen plainly her entent
Thei wist how softlie thei coud assaile
Hem, and what falshede thei in harte mente,
And thus thei clerkes in her daunger hente
With o benime an other is destroied
And thus these clerkes oft were anoied.

These ladies, ne these gentiles neuertheless
Were none of tho that wrought in this wise
But soche as were vertulesse
Thei quitten thus these old clerkes wise
To clerkes lesse ought suffice
Then to dispraue women generally
For worship shull thei none gette thereby.

If that these men, that louers hem preted
To women were faithfull, good, and true
And dredde hem to disceiue, or to offende
Women to loue hem would not eschue
But euery daie hath man an harte newe
If on one abide can no while
What forse is it soche a wight to begile.

Men beare eke women vpon hond
That lightly and without any pain
Thei womẽ be, thei can no wight withstond
That his disease list to hem complain
Thei be so freele, thei maie hem not refrain
But who so liketh hem maie lightly haue
So be her hartes easie into graue.

To maister Johan de Moone, as I suppose
Then it was a leude occupacioun
In makyng of the Romante of the rose
So many a sligh imaginacioun
And perilles for to rollen vp and doun
The long procesle, so many a slight cautell
For to disceiue a selie damosell.

Nought can I saie, ne my wit comprehende
That art, pain, and subtiltie should faile
For to conquere, and sone make an ende
When men a feble place shall assaile
And sone also to venquishe a battaile
Of whiche no wight maie make resistence
Ne harte hath none to make any defence.

Then mote folowe of necessitie
Sith art asketh so greate engine and pain
A woman to disceiue what so she be
Of constaunce be thei not so barain
Is that some of these clerkes sain
But thei be as women ought to be Sadde, constante, and fulfilled of pitee.

How frendly was Medea to Jason
In conqueryng of the Flece of gold
How kindly quit he her true affeccion
By whom victorie he gate as he would
How maie this man for shame be so bolde
To falsen her, that fro his death and shame
Him kept, and gate him so great prise ỹ name

Of Troie also the traitour Eneas
The faithlesse wretche, how he him forswore
To Dido, that quene of Cartage was That hym releued of his smertes sore
What gentillesse might she haue doe more
Then she with harte vnfained to hym kidde
And what mischief to her therof after betide.

The letter of Lupide.

In my legende of natures maie men finde
Who so liketh therein for to rede
That othe ne beheft maie man binde
Of reprouable shame haue thei no drede
In mannes harte trouthe hath no stede
The sotle is nauzt, there maie no troth grow
To women namely it is not vnknowe.

Clerkes saine also there is no malice
Unto womans wicked crabbidnesse
O woman, how shalt thou thy self cheuice
Sith men of thee soche harme witnesse
Beth ware women of her sikelnesse
Kepe thyne owne, what men clappe or crake
And some of hem shall smarte I vndertake

Malice of women what is it to drede
Thei slea no man, destroye no citees
Ne oppresse folke, ne ouerlede
Betraie Empires, Realmes, or Duchees
Ne bireuen men her landes ne her mees
Enpoyson folke, ne houses set on fire
Ne falle contractes make for no hire.

Trust, parfite loue, entire charitee
Feruent will, and entalented corage
All thewes good, as sitteth well to be Haue women euer of custome and vsage
And well thei conne mannes ire aswage
With soft wordes, discrete and benigne
What thei be inward thei shewe outward by (signe.

Womans harte vnto no cruelte
Enclined is, but thei be charitable Pitous, deuote, full of humilitie
Shamefaste, debonaire, and amiable
Dredefull, and of wordes measurable
What women these haue not parauenture
Foloweth not the waie of her nature.

Men saine our first mother nathelesse
Made all mankinde lese his libertie
And naked it of ioye doubtlesse
For Goddes beste disobeyed she
When she presumed to taste of the tree
That God forbade, that she eate therof should
And ne had the deuill be, no more she would

The enuious swelling, that the fende our foe
Had vnto man in harte for his wealth
Sent a serpent, and made her for to goe
To disceiue Eue, thus was mans wealth
Biraste hym by the fende in a stealth
The woman not knowyng of that disceipt
God wote full ferre was it from her conceipt

Wherefore I saie, this good woman Eue
Our father Adam disceiued nought
There maie no man for disceipt it preue
Properly, but that she in harte and thought
Had it compassed first or she it wrought
And for soche was not her impression
Men maie it call no deceipte of her by reason

Ne no wight disceiueth, but he purpose
The fende this disceipt caste, and nothyng she Then is it wrong to deme or suppose
That of his harme she should the cause be Wyte the fende, and his be the maugre
And excused haue her innocence
Saue onely that she brake obedience.

And touchyng this, full fewe men there be Unnethes any dare I sakely saie
Fro daie to daie, as men maie all daie se
But that the beste of God thei disobaie
Haue this in minde sirs I you praie
If that ye be discrete and reasonable
Ye woll her holde the more excusable.

And wher men saie in man is stedfastnesse
And woman is of her courage vnstable
Who maie of Adam beare soche a witnesse
Telleth me this, was he not chaungeable
Thei bothe weren in o case semblable
Saue willyng the fende disceiued Eue
And so did she not Adam by your leue.

Yet was this sinne happie to mankinde
The fende disceiued was for all his sleight
For aught he coud him in his sleightes winde
For his trespace came fro heauen on height
God, to discharge man of his weight
Flesshe and blood tooke of a virgine
And suffred death, hym to deliuer of pine.

And God, to whō there maie nothyng hid be
If he in woman knowen had soche malice
As men recorde of hem in generaltee
Of our Ladie of life reperatrice
Nolde haue be borne, but that she of vice
Was voide, and full of vertue well he wiste
Endowed, of her to be borne hym liste.

Her heaped vertue hath soche excellence
That all to leaue is mannes faculte
To declare it, and therefore in suspence
Her due prailyng put nedes must be But thus I saie, verely that she Next God, best frende is that to man longeth
The heye of mercie by her girdle hongeth.

And

And of mercie hath euery man soche nede
That relyng that, farwell the ioye of man
And of her power now taketh right good hede
She mercie maie well, and purchace can Displeaseth her not, honoureth that woman
And other women all for her sake
And but ye doe, your sorowe shall awake.

In any booke also where can ye finde
That of the werkes of death or of life
Of Jesu, spelleth or maketh any minde
That women hym forsoke for wo or strife
Where was there any wight so ententife
About hym as woman, proued none
The Apostles hym forsoken euerichone.

Women forsoke hym not for all the faieth
Of holie churche in woman left onely
This is no lees, for thus holy writte saieth
Looke and ye shall so finde it hardely
And therefore I maie well preue thereby
That in woman reigneth stable constaunce
And in men is the chaunge of variaunce.

Thus precious gẽme of martirs Margarite
That of thy blood dredest none effusion
Thou louer true, thou maiden mansuete
Thou constante woman in thy passion
Ouercame the fendes temptacion
And many a wight conuerted thy doctrine
Unto the faithe of holy God thou virgine.

But vnderstandeth this, I onely cõmend her
By enchelon of her virginitie (nought
Trusteth it came neuer in thought
For euer werre I yenst chastitie
And euer shall, but lo this meueth me
Her louyng harte, and constante to her laie
Driue out of remembraunce I ne maie.

Now holdeth this for ferme, and for no lie
That this true and iuste commendacion
Of women tell I for no flatterie
Ne bicause of pride or elacion
But onely lo, for this entencion
To yeue hem courage of perseueraunce
In vertue, and her honour to auaunce.

The more vertue, the lasse is the pride
Uertue so digne is and so noble in kinde
That vice and he woll not infere abide
He putteth vices cleane out of his minde
He flieth fro hem, he leaueth hem behinde
O woman that of vertue art hostresse
Greate is thy honour and thy worthinesse.

Then woll I thus conclude and define
We you commaunde our ministers echone
That redie ye be our hestes to encline
That of these false men our rebell tone ye doe punishement and that anone
Voide hem our court, & banishe hem for euer
So that therein more come thei neuer.

Fulfilled be it, ceasyng all delaie
Looke there be none excusacion
Written in the lustie moneth of Maie
In our paleis where many a million
Of louers true haue habitacion
The yere of grace ioyfull and ioconde
A thousande foure hundred and seconde.

¶Thus endeth the letter of Cupide.

¶A Ballade in commendacion of our Ladie.

A Thousande stories could I no rehearce
Of olde Poetes, touching this matter
How that Cupide the hartes gan so pearce
Of his seruantes settyng hem in fere
Lo here the fine of therrour and the fere
Lo here of loue the guerdone and greuaunce
That euer vnto her seruauntes doe auaunce

Wherfore now plainly I woll my stile dresse
Of one to speake, at nede that woll not faile
Alas for dole I ne can ne maie expresse
Her passyng prise, and that is no meruaile
O winde of grace, now blowe vnto my saile
O auriate licour of Cleo for to write
My penne enspire of that I woll endite.

Alas, vnworthie I am an vnable
To loue soche one, all women surmountyng
But she be benigne to me and merciable
That is of pitie the welle and eke the spryng
Wherefore of her in laude and in prailyng
So as I can, supported by her grace
Right thus I saie, knelyng before her face.

A ballade of our Ladie.

O sterre of sterres with thy streames clere
Sterre of the sea, to shipment light and gide
O lustie liuyng mosse pleasaunt to appere whose bryst beames ꝑ cloudes maie not hide
O waie of life to hem that go or ride
Hauen after tempest surest vp to riue
On me haue merce for thy ioyes liue.

O mirthe of martyrs, sweter then Sitole
Of Confessours also richest donatise
Unto virgines eternall Lauriole
Afore all woman hauyng prerogatike
Mother and maide, bothe widowe and wife
Of all the worlde is none but thou alone
Now sith thou maie, be succour to my mone.

O rightfull rule, O bote of holinesse
And lightsome line of pitie for to plain
Originall beginning of grace & all goodnesse
And clenest conduct of vertue moste souerain
Mother of mercie, our trouble to restrain Chamber and closet clennest of chastitie
And named herbrough of the deitie.

O trustie turtle true lastest of all true
O curteisie columbe, replete of all meknesse
O Nightingale with thy notes newe
O Popiniaie pured with all clennesse
O lauerok of loue, singyng with swetnesse
Phebus awaityng till on thy brest he light
Under thy wing at domesdaie vs dight.

O closet garden all voide of weedes wicke
Cristallin welle, of clerenesse clere consigned Fructified oliue of foiles faire and thicke
And redolent Cedre most dere worthy digned
Remember on sinners that to the be assigned
Or wicked fendes her wrathe on hem wreche
Lanterne of light thou her liues leche.

O rubie rubified in the passion
Of thy sonne, vs haue emong in minde
O stedfast diametre of duracion
That sewe feres any time might thou finde
For none to hym was founden halfe so kinde
O hardie harte, O louyng creature what was it but loue that made ꝑ so endure.

Paradise of pleasaunce, gladsome to all good
Benigne braunchelet of the Pine tree
Uinarie enuermailed, refresher of our bood
Licour ayen al langour ꝑ palled maie not be Blisfull blomie blosome, bidyng in bountee
Thy mantell of mercie on our miserie sprede
And er wo awaie wrappe vs vnder thy wede

Semely saphre, depe loupe and blewe ewage
Stable as the loupe ewage of pitie
This is to saie the freshest of visage
Thou louest vnchaunged hem ꝑ seruen thee
And if offence or variyng in hem be Thou art aie redie vpon her wo to rue
And hem receiuest with harte full true.

O rodie rosier, flouring without spine
Fountain al filthlesse, as birell currant clere
Sum drop of thy gracefull bewe to vs propine
O light wout nebule, shinyng in thy sphere
Medecine to mischeues, pucell without pere
Stabe doun the dolefull light of thin influence
Remembring thy seruates for thy magnificence

O goodlie gladded when that Gabriel with ioy thee grette, that maie not be nombred
Or halse the blisse who coud write or tell
When the holy ghoste to thee was obumbred
Wherthrough fendes were bitterly encombred
O wemlesse maide embelished in bis birthe
That man and angell thereof hadden mirthe

Of all christen protectrice and tutele
Retourne of exiled put in the prescripcion
To hem that erren in the pathe of her sequele
To werie forwandred tent and pauilion
To faint and to freshe the pausacion
Unto vnrestie, bothe rest and remedie
Fructfull to all tho that in her affie.

Lo here the blosme and the budde of glorie
Of whiche the prophet so long spake before
Lo here the fame that was in memorie
Of Esaie, so long or she was borne
Lo here of Dauid the delicious corne
Lo here the grounde of life into bilde
Becomyng man our raunsome for to yelde.

To hem that rennen thou art itinerarie
O bitfull brauie to knightes of thy warre
To werie werkmen she is diourne denarie
Mede vnto mariners that haue sailed farre
Laureate croune stremyng as a starre
To hem that put hem in palastre for thy sake
Cours of her cõquest, thou white as any lake

O glorious viole and vite inuiolate
O sirie Titan, persyng with thy bemes
Whose vertuous brightnes was in brest vbrat
That al the world embelished with the lemes
Conseruatrice of kinges, dukes, and realmes
Of Jsaies seede swete sunamite
Releue my mourning mine own Margarite

O

O ſoueraigneſt ſought out of Syon
Cochle with gold dewe from aboue berained Dewe buſhe vnbrent, fireleſſe fire ſet on Flambing with ſeruẽce, not wheate pained
Duryng daiſie that no weather ſtained
Fleece vndefouled of gentileſt Gedion
And fruictifiyng faireſt the yerde of Aaron.

The mightie arche, probatike piſcine
Laughyng auroze, and of peace oliue
Columpne & baſe, vp bearyng from abime
Why nere I connyng here to diſcriue
Choſen of Joſeph, whom he tooke to wiue
Unknowyng hym, childyng by miracle
And of our manly figure the tabernacle.

I haue none Engliſhe conuenient and digne
Myne hartes heale lady thee with to honour
Quoze cleane, therefoze I woll reſigne
Into thyne hande, till thou liſt ſuccour
To helpe my makyng both floziſhe and flour
Then ſhould I ſhewe in loue how I brende
In ſonges makyng, thy name to commende.

For if I coud befoze thyne excellence
Syngen in loue I would what I kele
And euer ſtanden Ladie in thy preſence
To ſhewe in open how I loue you wele
And ſith although your hart be made of ſtele
To you withouten any diſceueraunce
I'ay en vous toute ma fiance

Where might I loue euer better beſet
Then in this Lilie libyng to beholde
That lace of loue, the bonde ſo well thou knit
That I maie ſee thee oz myne harte colde
And oz I paſſe out of my daies olde
Coloze ſyngying euermoze vtterly
Your yen twoo woll ſlea me ſodainly.

For loue I langour, bliſſed be ſoch ſickneſſe
With it is for you my hartely ſuffiſaunce
I can not els ſaie in my diſtreſſe
So faire one hath myne hart in gouernaſice
And after that I begin on eſperaunce
With feble entune, though it thine hart perce
Yet for thy ſake this letter I doe reherſe.

God wote on muſike I can not, but I geſſe
Alas why ſo, that I might ſaie oz ſyng
So loue I you my owne ſouerain maiſtreſſe
And euer ſhall without departyng
Mirrour of beautie, for you out ſhould I ring
In remembraunce ehe of your yen clere
Thus ferre from you my ſouerain Ladie dere

So would God your loue would me ſo
With for your ſake I ſing daie by daie
Harte why nilte thou breake a two Sith with my Ladie dwell I ne maie
Thus many a roundell and many a virelaie
In freſhe Engliſhe, when I me laiſer finde
I doe recorde, on you to haue mynde.

Now ladie mine, ſith I you loue and drede
And you vnchaunged euer finde in o degre
Whoſe grace ne maie flie fro your womãhede
Diſdaineth not for to remembre on me
Myne harte bledeth for I maie not you ſe
And ſith ye wotte my meanyng deſirous
Plores pour moy s'il vous plaiſt amoureus.

What marueile is though I in pain be
I am departed from you my ſouerain
Foztune alas, dont vient la deſtenie
That in no wiſe I can ne maie attain
To ſee the beautie of your yen twain
Wherefoze I faie, for triſteſſe doeth me grame
Tant me fait mal departir de ma dame.

Why nere my willing brouzt to foche eſploit
That I might faie for ioye of your preſence
Or amon cœur ce qui voulloit
Or amon cœur, the higheſt excellence
That euer had wight, & ſith mine aduertence
Is in you, reweth on my paines ſmarte
I am ſo ſoze wounded to the harte.

To liue well merie twoo louers were ifere
So maie I faie withouten any blame
If any man to wilde were
I coud hym teache for to be tame
Let hym go loue and ſe where it be game
For I am bridled vnto ſoberneſſe
For her that is of women chief princeſſe.

But euerwhẽ thought my hart ſhuld enbrace
Then vnto me is beſt remedie
When I looke on your goodly freſhe face
So merie a merrour coud I neuer eſpie
And if I coud I would it magnifie
For neuer none was ſo faire ifounde
To rehen hem all, and alſo Roſamounde.

And finally with mouthe and will preſent
Of double ye without repentaunce
Myne hart I yeue you Ladie in this entent
That ye ſhall holly therof haue gouernaunce
Taking my leaue with hartes obeiſaunce (Salue regina) ſyngyng laſt of all
To be our helpe when we to thee call.

A ballade to

All our loue is but idleneſſe (tain
Saue your loue alone, who might therto at-
Who ſo woll haue a name of gentilleſſe
I counſaile hym in loue that he not fain
Thou ſwete Ladie, refute in euery pain
Whole mercie moſte to me auaileth
To gie by grace, when that fortune faileth.

Nought maie be told withouten any fable
Your high renome your womanly beautee
Your gouernaunce to all worſhip able Putteth euery harte in eaſe in his degree
O violet, O floure deliree
Sith I am for you ſo amerous
Eſtreignes moy de cœur ioyeus

With feruent hart my breſt hath broſt on fire
L'ardant eſpoer que mon cœur point eſt mort
D'auoir l'amour de celle que ie deſire
I meane you ſwete moſte pleaſaunt of porte
Et ie ſay bien que ce n'eſt pas mon tort
That for you ſyng, ſo as I maie for mone
For your departyng, alone I liue alone.

Though I might I would none other cheſe
In your ſeruice I would been founden ſadde
Therefore I loue no labour that ye leſe
When in longyng foreſt ye be ſtadde
Loothe vp you louers and be right gladde
Ayenſt ſainct Valentines daie
For I haue cheſe that neuer forſake I maie.

Explicit.

C Jhon Gower, vn-

to the noble King Henry the iiij.

Noble worthie kyng Henrie the fearth
In whom the gladde fortune is befall
The people to gouerne here vpon yearth
God hath thee cholen in comfort of vs all
The worſhip of this lād which was doun fal
Now ſtāt vpright through grace of thy good-
Which euery man is hold for to bleſſe (neſſe

The high God of his iuſtice alone
The right whiche longeth to thy regalie
Declared hath to ſtande in thy perſone
And more then God maie no man iuſtifie
Thy title is knowe vpon thyne aunceſtrie
The landes folk hath eke thy right affirmed
So ſtant thy reigne, of God & man confirmed

There is no man maie ſaie in otherwiſe
That God hymſelf ne hath the right declared
Whereof the lande is bounde to thy ſeruice Whiche for defaute of helpe hath long cared
But now there is no mannes harte ſpared
To loue and ſerue, and worche thy pleaſaūce
And all this is through Gods puruetaunce.

In all thing whiche is of God begonne
There foloweth grace if it be well gouerned
Thus tellen thei whiche olde bookes conne
Wherof my lorde I wote well thou art lerned
Aſke of thy God, ſo ſhalt thou not be warned
Of no requeſt whiche is reaſonable
For God vnto the good is fauourable.

King Salomon whiche had at his aſkyng
Of God, what thing hym was leueſt craue
He chaſe wiſedome vnto gouernyng
Of Gods folke, the whiche he would ſaue
And as he chaſe it fill hym for haue
For through his wit while that his reign laſt
He gate hym peace and reſt into his laſt.

But Alexander as telleth his ſtorie
Vnto the God beſought in other waie
Of all the worlde to win the victorie
So that vnder his ſwerde it might obaie
In warre he had all that he would praie
The mightie God bedight hym that beheſte
The worlde wanne, and had it of conqueſte.

But though it fill at thilke tyme ſo
That Alexander his aſkyng hath atchiued
This ſinfull worlde was all Panem tho
Was none whiche hath the high God beleued
No wōder was though thilk worlde was gre-
Though a tyrant his purpoſe mizt win (ued
All was vengeaunce and infortune of ſin.

But now the faith of Chriſt is come a place
Emong the princes in this yearth here
It ſitte hem well to doe pitie and grace
But yet it muſt be tempored in manere
For thei finden cauſe in the mattere
Vpon the point, what afterward betide
The lawe of right ſhall not be laied a ſide.

So maie a king of waire the voyage
Ordain and take, as he thereto is holde
To claime and aſke his right full heritage

In

In al places where it is witholde
But otherwise if god him selfe would
I affirme loue and peace betwene the kinges
Peace is the best aboue al erthely thinges

Good is to eschewe warre, and natheles
A king may make warre vpon his right
For of bataile the final ende is pees
Thus stant the lawe that a worthy knight
Upon his trouth may go to the fight
But if so were that he might chese
Better is the peace of which may no mã lese

To stere peace ought euerych on lyue
First for to sette his liege lorde in rest
And eke these other men that they ne striue
For so this lande may stande at best
What king that wolde be the worthyest
The more he might our deedly warre cease
The more he should his worthinesse encrease

Peace is the chefe of al the worldes welth
And to the heuen it ledeth eke the way
Peace is of soule and life the mannes helth,
Of pestilence, and doth the warre away
My liege lorde take hede of that I say
If warre may be lefte, take peace on hande
Whiche may not be without goddes sande

With peace stant euery creature in rest
Without peace there may no lyfe be gladde
Aboue al other good peace is the best
Peace hath him self whã werre is al beskadde
The peace is safe, the warre is euer dradde
Peace is of al charite the kay
Whiche hath the life and soule for to way

My liege lorde if that the lyste to seche
The soth enſãples what ꝑ war hath wrouzt
Thou shalt wel here of wise mẽnes speche
That deedly warre turneth in to nought
For if these old bookes be wel ysought
There mizt thou se what thig ꝑ war hath do Bothe of conquest and conquerour also

For vaine honour, or for the worldes good
They that whilom the stronge warres made
Wher be they now, bethinke wel in thy mood
The day is gone, the night is derke and sade
Her cruelte whiche made hem than glade
They sorowẽ now, & yet haue nauzt ꝑ more
The blode is shad, which no man may restore

The warre is mother of the wronges al
It sleeth the preest in holy churche at masse
For lith the maide, and doth her flour to fal
The warre maketh the great cite lasse
And dothe the lawe his rules ouerpasses
Ther is nothig wherof mischefe may growe
Whiche is not caused of the warre I trowe

The warre bringeth in pouertie at his heles
Wherof the comen people is sore greued
The war hath set his cart on thilke wheles
Where that fortune may nat be beleued
For whan men wene best to haue achieued
Ful ofte it is al newe to begin
The warre hath nothing siker tho he win

For thy my worthy prince in Christes halue
As for a parte whose faith thou hast be gide
Ley to this olde sore a newe salue
And do the warre away what so betide
Purchace peace and set it by thy syde
And suffre nat thy people be deuoured
So shal thy name euer after stand honoured

If any man be nowe or euer was Iyen the peace thy preuy counsailour
Lette god be of thy counsaile in this caas
And put away the cruel warryour
For God whiche is of man the creatour
He wolde not men slough his creature
Without cause of deedly forfaiture

Where nedeth most, behoueth most to loke
My lorde, howe so thy warres be without
Of time passed, who that bede toke
Good were at home to se right wel about
For euermore the worste is for to dout
But if thou mightest partite peace attaine
There should be no cause for to plaine

About a king good counsaile is to preise
Aboue al other thinges most vailable
But yet a king within him selfe shal peise
And seen the thinges that be resonable
And therupon he shal his wittes stable
Among the men to sette peace in euin
For loue of him whiche is the king of heuyn

A, wel is him that shedde neuer blode
But if it were in cause of right wysenes
For yf a kynge the peril vnderstode
What is to se the people, than I gesse
The deedly warres and the heuines
Wherof peace disturbed is ful ofte
Shuld at some time cesse and were soft:

O kinge fulfilled of grace and knighthode

A balade to king Henri the.iiij.

Remẽbre vpon this pointe for Christes sake
If peace be profered vnto thy manhode
Thine honour saue, let it not be forsake
Though thou ꝑ warres darst wel vndertake
After reason yet tempre thy courage
For lythe to peace there is none auauntage

By worthy lorde, thinke wel howe so befall
Of thilke lore, as holy bokes saine
Christ is the heed, and we be membres al
Is wel the subiecte as the soueraine
So sitte it wel that charite be plaine
Whiche vnto God him selfe most accordeth
So as the lore of Christes worde recordeth

In tholde lawe or Christ him selfe was bore
Amonge the.x. commaundementes I rede
Howe that manslaughter shoulde be forbore
Soche was the wil that tyme of the godhede
But afterward whã Christ toke his mãhede
Peace was the first thing he let do crie
Ayenst the worldes rancour and enuie

And or Christ went out of this erthe here
And stighed to heuin, he made his testament
Where he bequath to his disciples there
And yaue his peace, whiche is the fondement
Of charite, without whose assent
The worldes peace may neuer wel be tried Ne loue kept, ne lawe iustified

The Iewes with ꝑ painims hadden werre
But they among hem selfe stode euer i peace
Why should than our peace stande out of erre
Which Christ hath chose vnto his own encrese
For Christ is more than was Moyses
And Christ hath sette the parfite of the lawe
The whiche should in no wise be withdrawe

To yeue vs peace was cause why Christ dide
Without peace may nothing stonde auailed
But nowe a man may se on euery side
Howe Christes faith is euery day assailed
With painims distroied ꝛ so batailed
That for defaute of helpe and of defence
Unneth hath Christ his dewe reuerence

The right faith to kepe of holy churche
The first point is named of knighthode
And euery man is holde for to worche
Upon the point that stante to his manhode
But now alas, the fame is spred so brode
That euery man this thing complaineth
And yet is there no man that helpe ordaineth

The worldes cause is waited ouer al
There be the warres redy to the ful
But Christes owne cause in special
There ben the swerdes and the speares dul
And with the sentence of the Popes bul
As for to done the folke paine obey
The churche is tourned al another wey

It is wonder aboue any mannes wit
Without war how Christes faith was won
And we that be vpon this erthe yet
Ne kepe it not as it was first begon
To euery creature vnder the sonne
Christ bad him selfe that we shoulde preche
And to the folke his Euangely teche

More light it is to kepe than to make
But that we founden made tofore honde
We kepe not, but let it lightly slake
The peace of Christ hath al to broke his bõde
We rest o ur selfe, and suffren euery lond
To flee eche other, as thinge vndefended
So stant the warre, ꝑ peace is not amended

But though the heed of holy churche aboue
Ne do not al his hole businesse
Amonge the people to set peace and loue
These kinges oughten of her right wyfenesse
Her owne cause amonge hem selfe redresse
Tho Peters ship as now hath lofte his stere
It lythe in hem the barge for to stere

If holy churche after the dewte
Of Christes worde ne be nat al auised
To make peace, accorde, and vnite
Amonge the kinges that be now deuised
Yet natheles the lawe stand assised
Of mannes witte to be so resonable
Without that to stande him selfe stable

Of holy churche we ben children al
And euery childe is holde for to bowe
Unto the mother, how that euer it fal
Or els he must reason disalowe
And for that cause a knight shall first auowe
The right of holy churche to defende
That no man shal the priuilege offende

Thus were it good to sette al in euyn
The worldes princes and the prelats bothe
For loue of him whiche is the king of heuyn
And if men should algate wexen wrothe
The sarazins, whiche vnto Christ been lothe
Let men be armed ayenst hem so light
So mayn the knight his dede of armes right upon

vpon.iij.pointes stant Christs peace oppres-
First holy churche in her selfe deuided (sed
Whiche ought of reason first to be redressed
But yet so highe a cause is not desided
And thus whan humble pacience is prided
The remenaunt whiche that they shuld rule
No wonder is though it stande out of rule

Of that the heed is sicke the lymmes aken
These reignes that to Christes peace belõgen
For worldes good these deedly warres makẽ
Whiche helpelesse, as in balaunce hongen
The heed aboue hem hath nat vnderfongen
To set peace, but euery man fleeth other
And in this wise hath charite no brother

The two defautes bringen in the thirde
Of myscreantes that seen how we debate
Betwene the two, they fallen in a mydde
Where now al day they finde an open gate
Lo, thus the deedly warre stant algate
But euer I hope of king Henries grace
That he it is which shal the peace embrace

My worthy noble prince and king anoynt
Whome God hath of his grace so preserued
Beholde and se the world vpon this point
Is for thy part, that Christes peace be serued
So shal thy high mede be deserued
To him whiche al shal quite at lasse
For this life here may no while lasse

Se Alexander, Hector, and Julius
Se Machabeus, Dauid, and Josue
Se Charlemaine, Godefray, and Arthus
Fulfilled of warre and of mortalyte
Her fame abytte, but al is but vanite
For death, which hath the warres vnder fote
Hath made an ende, of which ther is no bote

So many a man the soth wete and knowe
That peace is good for euery kinge to haue
The fortune of the warre is euer vnknowe
But wher peace is, ther is the marches saue
That now is vp, to morow is vnder graue
The myghtye God hath al grace in hande
Without him men may not longe stande

Of the tennes to winne or lese a chace
May no life wete or that the bal be ronne
Al stant in god what thing mẽ shal purchace
Thende is in hym or that it be begonne
Men saine the wolle when it is well sponne
Doth that the cloth is stronge and profitable
And els it maye neuer be durable

The worldes chaunces vpon auenture
Ben euer sette, but thilke chaunce of pees
Is so behouely to the creature
That is aboue al other peeries
But it may not beget natheles Amonge the men to lasse any while
But where the herte is plaine without gile

The peace is as it were a sacrament
Tofore the God, & shal with wordes plaine
Without any double entendement
Be treated, for the trouth can not faine
But yf the men within hem selfe ben vaine
The substaũce of the peace may not be trewe
But euery day it chaungeth vpon newe

But who that is of charite parfite
He voideth al sleightes ferre awaye
And sette his worde vpon the same plyte
Where that his hert hath foũde a siker waye
And thus when conscience is trewly waye
And that these ben handled with the wise
It shal abyde, and stande in al wise

The Apostle saith, ther may no life be good Whiche is not grounded vpon charite
For charite ne shedde neuer blood
So hath the warre as there no properte
For thilke vertue whche is sayd pite
With charite so ferforthe is acquainted
That in her may no false sẽblant be paynted

Cassodore, whose writinge is authorised
Saithe: where that pite reigneth is grace
Thrugh which ỹ peace hath al his welth as-(syled
So ỹ al warre he dredeth no manace
Where pyte dwelleth in the same place
There maye no deedly cruelte sojourne
Wherof that mercy shoulde his way tourne

To se what pite forth with mercy doth
The cronique is at Rome in thilke empire
Of Constantine, wiche is a tale sothe
When him was liuer his owne death desire
Then do the yonge children to martire
Of cruelte he lefte the quarele
Pyte he wrought, and pite was his hele

For thilke mannes pite whiche he dede
God was pitous, and made him hole at al
Siluester came, and in the same stede
Yaue him baptisme first in spacial

Whiche did awaye the sinne originall
And al his lepre it hath so purified
That his pite for euer is magnified

Pite was cause why this Emperour
Was hole in body and in soule bothe
And Rome also was sette in thilke honour
Of Christes faith, so that the leue of loth
Whiche hadden be with Christ tofore wroth
Receiued were vnto Christes loze
Thus shal pite be praised euermoze

My worthy liege lozde Henry by name
Whiche Englande haste to gouerne and right
Men ought wel thy pite to proclame
Whiche openliche in al the worldes sight
It sheweth, with the helpe of God almight
To yeue vs peace which lōg hath be debated
Wherof thy prise shal neuer be abated

My lozde, in whom hath euer yet be founde
Pite, without spotte of violence
Kepe thilke peace alwaye within bounde
Whiche God hath planted in thy conscience
So shal the cronique of thy pacience
Amonge the saintes be taken into memozie
To the legende of perdurable glozie

And to thin erthely prise, so as I can Whiche euery man is holde to commende
I Gower, whiche am al thy liege man
This letter vnto thine excellence I sende
As I whiche euer vnto my liues ende
Wol pray for the state of thy persone
In worshippe of thi sceptre and thy throne

Not onely to my kinge of peace I write
But to these other princes Christen al
That eche of hem his owne herte endite
And seale the warre or moze mischefe fal
Sette eke the rightful puppe vpon his stall
Kepe charite, and drawe pite to hande
Maintain lawe, and so the peace shall stande

Explicit carmen, de pacis commendacione quod ad laudem & memoriam serenissimi principis domini regis Henrici Quarti, suus humilis orator Iohannes Gower composuit.

Electus Christi, pie rex Henrice fuisti
Qui bene venisti, cum propria regna petisti
Tu mala vicistique bonis bona restituisti
Et populo tristi, noua gaudia contribuisti
Est mihi spes lata, quod aduc per te renouata
Succedent fata veteri probitate beata
Est tibi nam grata, gratia sponte data
Henrici quarti, primus regni fuit annus
Quo mihi defecit visus ad acta mea
Omnia tēpus habent finem natura ministrat
Quem virtute sua frangere nemo potest
Vltra posse nihil quamuis mihi velle remansit
Amplius vt scribam non mihi posse manet
Dū potui scripsi, sed nūc quia curua senectus
Turbauit sensus scripta relinquo scolis
Scribat qui veniet post me discretior alter
Ammodo namque manus & mea penna silēt
Hoc tamen in fine verborum queso meorum
Prospera quod statuat regna futura Deus.

Explicit.

A saiyng of dan Ihon.

Ther bethe foure thinges that maketh man a foole
Honour first putteth him in outrage
And alder next solitarie and soole
The second is vnweldy croked age
Women also bring men in dotage
And mighty wine in many diuers wise
Distempren folke whiche bene holden wise
Yet of the same.

Ther bene foure thinges causing gret folye
Honour first and vnwildy age
Women and wine I dare eke specify
Make wise men fallen in dotage
Wherfore by counseil of Philosophers sage
In gret honour learne this of me
With thine estate haue humilite

Balade de bon consail.

If it be fall that God the list visite
With any tourment or aduersite Thanke first the lozde, and thy selfe to quite Vpon sufferaunce and humilite
Founde thou thy quarel what euer that it be Make thy defence & thou shalt haue no losse
The remembraunce of Christ and of his crosse

Explicit.

Of the Cuckowe

and the Nightingale.

THe God of loue, and benedicite
Howe mighty and howe great a lorde is he
For he can make of lowe hertes hie
And of hye lowe, and lyke for to die
And harde hertes he can make free

He can make within a litle stounde
Of sicke folke hole, freshe and sounde
And of hole he can make sicke
He can binde and vnbinden whe
That he wol haue bounden or vnbounde

To tel his might my wit may not suffise
For he can make of wise folke ful nice
For he may do al that he woll deuice
And lithy folke to destroyen vice
And proude hertes he can make agrise

Shortly al that euer he wol he may Against him dare no wight say naye
For he can glad and greue whom him lyketh
And who that he wol he loweth or liketh
And most he might his thedeth euer in May

For euery true gentle herte free
That with him is or thinketh for to be Again May nowe shal haue some sheringe
Or to ioye or els to some mourning
In no season, so moche as thinketh me

For when they haye here the birdes singe
And se the floures and the leues springe
That bringeth into her remembraunce
A maner ease medled with greuaunce
And lusty thoughtes ful of great longing

And of that longing cometh heuinesse
And therof groweth oft great sikenesse
And for lacke of that that they desire
And thus in May ben hertes set on fire
So that they brennen forth in gret distresse

I speke this of feling trewly
For I be olde and vnlusty
Yet I haue felte of ꝑ sickenesse through May Both hote and cold, and axes euery day
How sore I wis there wote no wight but I

I am so shaken with the feuers white
Of al this May slepe I but a lite
And also it is not lyke to me
That any herte shoulde slepy be
In whom that loue his fery darte wol smite

But as I lay this other night waking
I thought how louers had a tokening
And amonge hem it was a commune tale
That it were good to here the Nightingale
Rather than the leude Cuckowe singe

And than I thought anon as it was day
I wolde go somewhere to assay
If that I might a Nightingale here
For yet had I nought herde of al that yere
And it was tho the thirde night of May

And anon as I the day aspide
No lenger would I in my beedde abide But vnto a wodde that was fast by
I went forth alone boldely
And helde the way downe by a broke side

Tyl I came to a launde of white and grene
So faire one had I neuer in bene
The ground was grene, ypouldred with daisye
The floures and the greues like hie
Al grene and white, was nothing els sene

There sate I downe among the faire floures
And saw ye birdes trippe out of her bowres
There as they rested hem al the nighe
They were so ioyful of the dayes lyghe
They began of Maye for to done houres

They conde that seruice al by rote
There was many a louely note
Some songe loude as they had plained
And some in other maner voice yfained
And some al out with the ful throte

They proyned hem, & made hem right gay
And daunseden and lepten on the spray
And euermore two and two in fere
Right so as they had chosen hem to yere
In Feuerere vpon saint Valentines day

And the riuer that I sat vpon
It made soche a noise as it ron Accordaunt with the birdes armony
Me thought it was the best melody
That might ben yherde of any mon

And for delyte, I wotte neuer howe

I kel in sothe a slombre and a swowe
Nat al a slepe ne fully waking
And in that swowe me thought I herde singe
The sowy birde the leude cuckowe

And that was on a tree right fast by
But who was than evil apaide but I
Now God (q I) that wied on the crois
Yeue sorowe on the, and on thy leude vois
Full ylle ioye have I now of thy crie

And as I with the cuckow thus gan chide
I herde in the next bush beside
A nyghtingale so lustely singe
That with her clere voce the wode ringe
Thorough all the grene wood wide

Ah, good nightingale (q I) then
A litle hast thou ben to longe hen
For here hath ben the leude cuckow
And songen songes rather than hast thou
I pray to God evil fire her bynt

But now I wol you tel a wondre thing
As longe as ylay in that swe swning
Me thought I wist what the birdes ment
And what they seyd, & what was her entent
And of her speche I vnd good knowinge

There herde I the nightingale say
Now good cuckow go some where away
And let us that can singen & wellen here
For every wight eschueth the to here
Thy songes bene elenge in good fay

What (q she) what may the ayken nowe
It thinketh me, I singe as wel as thou
For my songe is both true and plaine
And though I can not crakel so in vaine
As thou dost in thy throte, I wot never how

And every wight may vnderstand me
But nightingale so may they not done the
For thou hast many a nice queint crie
I have the herde saine, ocy ocy Nowe might I know what that should be

Thy foole (q she) wost thou not what it is When that I say, ocy ocy ywys
Than meane I that I wolde wondre faine
That al they were shamfully yslaine
That meanen ought againe loue amis

And also I would that al tho had the dede
That thinke not in loue her life to lede
For who so wol not the God of loue serue
I dare wel say he is worthy to sterue
And for that skil, ocy ocy I grede

Eye (q the cuckow) this is a queint lawe
That every wight shal loue or be to drawe
But I forsake al suche company
For myne entent is not for to die
Ne never while I liue on loues yoke to draw

For louers ben the folke that ben on lyve
That most disease have, & most unthryve
And most endure sorow, wo and care
And lest selen of welfare
What nedeth it ayen? trouth to strive

What (q she) thou art out of thy minde
How might thou in thy churlenesse fynde
To speake of loues seruauntes in this wise,
For in this world is none so good seruice
To every wight that gentle is of kinde

For therof truly commeth al goodnesse
Al honour and al gentlenesse
Worship, ease, and al hertes lust
Parfite ioye, and ful assured trust
Jolytie, plesaunce and freshenesse

Lowlyhed, largesse, and curtesye
Semelyhed, and trew company
Drede of shame for to done amys
For he that truly loues seruaunt is Were lother be shamed than to die

And that thys is sothe that I sey
In that beleue I wil liue and dey
And cuckow so I rede that thou do ywis
Than (q he) let me never have blisse
If ever I unto that counsaile obey

Nyghtingale thou speken wondre faire
But for al that is the soth contrayre
For loue is in yonge folke but rage
And in olde folke a great dotage
Who most it vseth most shal empaire

For therof commeth disease and heurinesse
So sorowe & care and many a great sikenesse
Despite, debate, angre and envy
Despayring, shame, untrust and ielousie
Pryde, mischefe, pouertie and wodnesse

Loving is an office of dispaire
And one thing is therin that is not faire
For who that getteth of loue a litle blisse

But

But if he be alwaie therewith iwis
He maie full sone of age haue his haire.

And Nightingale therefore hold thee nie
For leue me well, for all thy queint crie
If thou be ferre or long fro thy make Thou shalt be as other that been forsake
And then thou shalt hoten as doe I.

Fie (q she) on thy name and on thee
The God of Loue me let thee neuer ithee
For thou art worse a thousandfold thā wood
For many one is full worthie and full good
That had he naught ne had lous ibee.

For euermore loue his seruauntes amendeth
And from all euill taches hem defendeth
And maketh hem to brenne right in a fire
In trouthe and in worshipfull desire
And whē him liketh, ioy inough hem sendeth

Thou Nightingale he saied, be still For loue haue no reason, but it is will
For all tyme vntrue folke he easeth
And true folke so bitterly he displeaseth
That for default of courage he let hem spill.

Then tooke I of the Nightingale kepe
How she cast a sigh out of her depe
And saied, alas that euer I was boze
I can forbere not saie one worde more
And right with ꝑ worde she brast out to wepe

Alas (q she) my harte woll to breake
To hearen thus this leude birde speake
Of loue, and of his worshipfull seruice
Now God of loue thou helpe me in some wise
That I maie on this Cuckowe been awreke

Me thought then he sterte vp anon
And glad was I that he was agon
And euermore the Cuckowe as he flaie
Saied farre well, farre well Popingaie
As though he had scorned me alone.

And then came the Nightingale to me
And saied, frende forsoth I thanke thee
That thou hast liked me to rescowe
And one auowe to loue make I nowe
That all this Maie I woll thy singer be

I thanked her, and was right well apaied
Quod she) and be thou not dismaied
Tho thou haue heard the Cuckowe erst thā me
For if I liue it shall amended be
The next Maie, if I be not affraied.

And one thing I woll rede thee also Ne leue thou not the Cuckowe ne his loues so
For all that he hath saied is strong leasyng Maie (q I) thereto shall nothing me bring
For loue and it hath doe me moche wo.

Ye, doe (q she) this medicine
Euery daie this Maie or thou dine
Go looke vpon the fresshe Daisie
And though thou be for wo in poinct to die
That shall full greatly lessen thee of thy pine

And loke alwaie that thou be good and true
And I woll sing one of the longes newe
For loue of thee, as loude as I maie crie
And then she began this song full hie
I pray we all hem that been of loue vntrue.

And when she had song it to the ende
Now fare well (q she) for I mote wende
And god of loue, that can right well and may
As moche ioye sende thee this daie
As any yet louer he euer sende.

Thus taketh ꝑ Nightingale her leaue of me
I praie to God alwaie with her be
And ioye of loue he sende her euermore
And chilide vs fro the Cuckowe and his lore
For there is not so false a birde as he.

Forthe then flewe the gentill Nightingale
To all the birdes that were in that dale
And gate hem all into a place in fere
And beseeched hem that they would here
Her disease, and thus began her tale.

The Cuckowe, well it is not for to hide
How the Cuckowe and I haue chide
Euer sithen it was daie light
I praie you all that ye doe me right
Of that foule false vnkinde bride

Then speake o birde for all by one assent
This matter asketh good auisement
For we been birdes here in fere
And sothe it is, the Cuckowe is not here
And therefore we woll haue a parliment.

And thereat shall the Egle be our Lorde
And other peres that been of recorde
And the Cuckowe shall be after sent
There shall be yeue the iudgement
Or els we shall finally make accorde.

And this shall be without naie
The morowe after sainct valentines daie vnder a Mayle that is faire and grene
Before the chamber windowe of the quene
Ut wodstocke vpon the grene laie.

She thanked hem, and then her leaue toke
And into an Hauthorne by that broke
And there she sate and long vpon that tree
Terme of life loue hath with holde me
So loude that I with that song awoke.

Scogan, vnto

the Lordes and Gentilmen of the Kinges house.

Y noble soonnes and the my lordes dere
I pour father called vnworthelie
Sende vnto you this lite treatise here
Written with mine owne hande full rudelie
Although it be that I not reuerentelie
Haue written to youre estates, I you praie
Myne vnconnyng gentelly denighte
For Goddes sake, and perdien what I saie.

I complain me sore when I remembre me
The sodain age that is vpon me fall
But more I complain my mispent iuuentute
The whiche is impossible ayen for to call
But certainly the moste complaint of all
Is to thinke that I haue be so nice
That I ne would vertues to me call
In all my youth, but vices ale cherice.

Of whiche I aske mercie of the Lorde
That art almightie God in maiestie
Beseking to make so euen accorde
Betwirt thee and my soule that vanitie
Worldlie lust, ne blinde prosperitie
Haue no lordship ouer my flesche to frele
Thou Lorde of reste and perfite vnitie
Put fro me vice, and kepe my soule hele.

And yeue me might while I haue like space
Me to confirme fully to thy pleasaunce
Shewe to me habundaunce of thy grace
And in good werkes graunt me perseueraūce
Of all my youth forget the ignorraunce
Yeue me good will to serue thee ale to queme
Set all my life after thyne ordinaunce
And able me to mercie or thou deme.

My lordes dere, why I this complaint write
To you whom I loue moste entirely
Is for to warne you as I can endite
That tyme lost in youth folily
Greueth a wight bodily and ghostly
I meane hym that to lust and vice entende wherefore lordes I praie you specially
Your youth in vertue shapeth to dispende.

Plante

Plante the roote of youth in soche a wise
That in vertue your growyng be alwaie
Looke alwaie goodnesse be in your exercise
That shall you mightie make at eche assaie
The fende to withstande at eche assraie
Passeth wisely this perillous pilgrimage
Thinke on this worde, & worke it euery daie
That shall you yeue a parfite floured age.

Taketh also hede how ỹ these noble clerkes
Writen in her bookes of greate sapience
Saiyng that faith is ded withouten werkes
Ind right so is estate with negligence
Of vertue, and therefore with diligence
Shapeth of vertue so to plante the roote
That ye there of haue full experience
To worship of your life and soules boote.

Taketh also hede that lordship ne estate
Without vertue maie not long endure
Thinketh eke how vices and vertue at debate
Haue been & shal while the worlde maie dure
Ind euer the vicious by auenture
Is ouerthrowe, and thinketh euermore
That God is Lorde of all vertue, and figure
Of all goodnesse, and therefore folowe his lore

My maister Chaucer, God his soule saue
That in his langage was so curious
He said that the father whiche is ded & graue
Biqueth nothing his vertue with his hous
Unto his children, and therefore labourous
Ought ye be, beseehyng God of grace
To yeue you might for to be vertuous
Through whiche ye might haue parte of his (place

Here maie ye see that vertuous noblesse
Cometh not to you by waie of auncestrie
But it cometh by lefull businesse
Of honest life, and not by slogardrie
Wherefore in youth I rede you edifie
The house of vertue in soche a manere
That in your age maie you kepe and gio
Fro the tempest of worldes wawes here.

Thinketh how betwire vertue and estate
There is a parfite blessed Mariage
Uertue is cause of peace, vice of debate
In mannes soule, the which bē full of corage
Cherisheth then vertue, vices to outrage
Driueth hem away, let hem haue no wōning
In your soules, leseth not the heritage
Whiche God hath yeue to vertuous liuyng.

Take hede also how men of poore degre
Through vertue haue be set in great honour
Ind euer haue liued in greate prosperite
Through cherishyng of vertuous labour
Thinketh also how many a gouernour
Called to estate hath be set full lowe
Through misusyng of right and of errour
Ind therfore I counsaile you vertue to know

Thus by your aūcesters ye maie nothing clai-
Is ỹ my maister Chaucer saieth expresse (me
But tēporal thing, ỹ men may hurt or maime
Then is God flocke of vertuous noblesse
Ind sithe that he is lorde of blisfulnesse
Ind made vs all, and for vs all deide
Followeth hym in vertue with full busines
Ind of this thing herke how my maister seide

The first flocke father of gentilnesse
What man that claimeth gentill for to be
Must folowe his trace, & all his wittes dresse
Uertue to looke, and vices for to flie
For vnto vertue longeth dignitie
Ind not the reuers sikely dare I deme
All weare he mitre, corowne, or Diademe.

The first flocke was full of right wisenesse
True of his worde, sobre, pitous, and free
Cleane of his ghost, and loued businesse
Ayenst the vice of slothe in honestee Ind but his heire loue vertue as did he
He is not gentill though he riche seme
All weare he mitre, croune, or Diademe.

Uice maie be an heire to olde richesse
But there maie no man, all men maie see
Biqueth his heire his vertuous noblesse
That is appropried vnto no degree
But to the first father of Maiestie
That maketh his heires hem ỹ cā him queme
All weare he mitre, croune, or Diademe.

Lo heare this noble Poete of Bretaine
How lightlie in vertuous sentence
The losse on youth of vertue can complain
Therefore I praie you with your diligence
For your profite and Goddes reuerence
Tempereth fully vertue in your mynde
That when ye come to your iudges presence
Ye be not vertuelesse then behinde.

Many lordes haue a maner now a daies
Though one shewe hym a vertuous mattere
Her feruent youth is of so falle alaies
That of that arte thei haue no ioye to here
But as a ship that is without a stere

Driueth

To the lordes and gentilmen.

Driueth vp and doun without gouernaunce
Denyng that calme would lasse yere by yere
Right so fare thei for very ignoraunce.

For verie shame knowe thei not by reason that after an eb there cometh a flood ful rage
In thesame wise whē youth passeth his seasō
Cometh croked and vnweldie palled age
And sone after comen the Kalendes of dotage
And if ẏ her youth haue no vertue prouided
All men woll saie fie on her vassalage
Thus hath her sloth fro worship hem deuided

Boecius the clerk, as men maie rede and se Saieth in his booke of Consolacion what man desireth of vine or tree
Plenteous fruict in reapyng season
Must euer escue to doe oppression
Unto the roote while it is yong and grene
Thus maie ye see well by that inclusion
That youth vertuelesse doeth moche tene.
(nesse
Now seeth there ayenst how vertuous nobleRooted in youth with good parseueraunce
Driueth awaie all vices and wretchednesse
Is slogardie, riote, and distaunce
Seeth eke how vertue causeth suffisaunce
Seeth eke how vertue voideth all vice
And who so hath vertue, hath al habundaūce
Of wele, as ferre as reason can deuise.

Taketh hede of Tullius Hostilius
That fro pouert came to high degree
Thrcough vertue, redeth eke of Julius
The conquerour, how poore a man was he Yet through his vertue and his humilitee
Of many countrey had he in gouernaunce
Thus vertue bringeth a man to great degree
Eche wight that lust to do hym entendaunce

Rede here ayenst now of Nero vertulees
Taketh hede also of proude Balthasare
Thei hated vertue, equitie and pees
And looke how Antiochus fill fro his chare
That he his shin and bones all to tare
Loke what mischaunce thei had for her vices
Who so woll not by these signes beware
I dare well saie infortunate and nice is.

I can no more now saie, but hereby maie ye se
How vertue causeth perfite sikernesse
And vices exilen all prosperitee
The best is eche man to chose as I gesse
Doeth as you list, I me excuse expresse
I would be right sorie if that ye mischese
God confirme you in vertuous noblesse
So that through negligence ye not it lese.

Explicit.

Somtyme the worlde so stedfast was and stable
That mannes woorde was an Obligacioun
And now it is so false and disceiuable
That worde and deede as in conclusioun
Is nothyng like, for tourned is vp so doun
All the worlde, through mede and sikelnesse
That all is loste for lacke of stedfastnesse.

what maketh the worlde to be so variable
But lust that men haue in discension
For emong vs a man is holde vnable
But if he can by some collusion
Doe his neighbour wrong and oppression what causeth this but wilfull wretchednesse
That all is loste for lacke of stedfastnesse.

Trouthe is put doune, reason is holde fable
Vertue hath now no dominacion
Pitie is exiled, no man is mercyable
Through couetise is blente discrecion
The worlde hath made a permutacion
Fro right to wrong, fro trouthe to sikelnesse
That is all loste for lacke of stedfastnesse.

Suffre nothyng that maie be reprouable

And wedde thy folke ayen to stedfastnesse.

Explicit.

Good counsaile of Chaucer.

Lie fro the preasse and dwell with sothfastnesse Suffise vnto thy good though it bee small
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikelnesse
Preace hath enuie, & wele it blent ouerall Sauour no more then thee behoue shall Rede well thy self that other folke canst rede
And

And trouthe thee shall deliuer it is no drede.

Paine thee not eche croked to redresse
In trust of her that tourneth as a balle
Greate rest standeth in little busines
Beware also to spurne again a nalle
Strive not as doeth a croche with a walle
Deme thy self that demest others dede
And trouthe thee shall deliuer it is no drede.

That thee is sent receive in duromnesse
The wrastlyng of this worlde asketh a fall
Here is no home, here is but wildernesse
Forthe pilgrim, forthe beast out of thy stall
Looke vp on high and thanke God of all
Weive thy luste and let thy ghost thee lede
And trouthe thee shall deliuer it is no drede.

A Balade of the village without paintyng.

Plaintife to Fortune.

THis wretched worldes transmutacion
As weale and wo, nowe poore and nowe honour
Without order or due discrecion
Governed is by fortunes errour
But natheles the lache of her fauour
Ne maie not doe me synge though that I die
Ray tout pardu mon temps & labour
For finally fortune I defie.

Yet is me left the sight of my reason
To knowe frende fro foe in thy mirrour
So moche hath yet thy tournyng vp & doun
Itaught me to knowen in an hour
But truly no force of thy reddour
To hym that ouer hymself hath maistrie
My suffisaunce shal be my succour
For finally fortune I defie

O Socrates thou stedfast champion
Whe might neuer be thy turmentour
Thou neuer dreddest her oppression
Ne in her chere founde thou no fauour
Thou knewe the disceipt of her colour
And that her moste worship is for to lie
I knowe her eke a false dissimulour
For finally fortune I defie

The answere of Fortune.

No man is wretched but hymself it wene
He that hath hymself hath sufficiaunce
Why saiest thou then I am to thee so kene
That hast thy self out of my gouernaunce
Saie thus, grauntmercie of thin habundance
That ꝑ hast lent or this, thou shalt not striue
What wolt thou yet how I thee woll auance
And eke thou hast thy best frende a liue.

I haue thee taught deuision betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countenaunce
Thee nedeth not the galle of an Hine
That cureth iyen darke for her penaunce
Now seest thou clere that wer in ignoraunce
Yet holt thine anker, & yet thou maiest ariue
There bountie beareth ꝑ key of my substaūce
And eke thou hast thy best frende a liue.

How many haue I refused to sustene
Sith I haue thee fostred in thy pleasaunce
Wolt thou then make a statute on thy quene
That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce
Thou borne art in my reigne of variaunce
About the whele with other must thou drive
My lore is bet, then wiche is thy greuaunce
And eke thou hast thy best frende a liue.

The answere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is aduersitie
My frend maist thou not reue blind goddesse
That I thy frendes knowe I thanke it thee
Take hem again, let hem go lie a presse
The nigardes in kepyng her richesse
Pronostike is thou wolt her toure assaile
Wiche appetite cometh ate before sickenesse
In generall this rule maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchest at my mutabilitie
For I thee lent a droppe of my richesse
And nowe my liketh to withdrawe me
Why shouldest thou my roialtie oppresse
The sea maie ebbe and flowe more and lesse
The welkē hath mist to shene, rain, and hail
Right so must I kithe my brotilnesse
In generall this rule maie not faile.

The plaintife.

Lo, the execucion of the maieſtie
That all purueigheth of his righte wiſeneſſe
That ſame thyng fortune clepen ye
Ye blinde beaſtes full of leudneſſe
The heauen hath propertie of ſiherneſſe
This worlde hath euer reſtleſſe trauaile
The laſt daie is ende of myne entreſſe
In generall this rule maie not faile

The nuoie of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain
And I ſhall quite you this buſineſſe
And if ye liſte releue hym of his pain
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleſſe
That to ſome better ſtate he maie attain.

Lenuoye.

O broken been the ſtatutes hie in heauen
That create were eternally tendure
Sith that I ſee the bright Goddes ſeuen
Mowe wepe and waile, and paſſion endure
In maie in yearth a mortall creature
Alas, fro whens maie this thyng procede
Of whiche errour I die almoſte for drede.

By worde eterne whilom was it ſhape
That fro the fifth cercle in no manere
Ne might of teares doune eſcape
But now ſo wepeth Venus in her ſphere
That with her teares ſhe woll drench vs here
Alas Scogan this is for thine offence
Thou cauſeſt this deluge of peſtilence.

Haſt thou not ſaied in blaſpheme of ỹ goddis
Through pride, or through gret thy rebelnes Soche thinges as in ỹ law of loue forbode is That for thy ladie ſawe not thy diſtreſſe
Therefore thou yaue her vp at Weſtmeſſe
Alas Scogan of olde folke ne yong
Was neuer erſt Scogan blamed for his tong

Thou drewe in ſcorne Cupide ehe to recorde
Of thilke rebell worde that thou haſt ſpoken
For whiche he wol no lenger be thy Lorde
And Scogan, though his bowe be not broken
He woll not with his arowes be i wroken
On thee ne me, ne none of our figure
We ſhall of hym haue neither hurte ne cure.

Now certes frende I drede of thine vnhappe
Leſt for thy gilte the wreche of loue procede
On all hem that been hore and round of chap
That bee ſo likely folke to ſpede
Then we ſhall of our labour haue our mede
But well I wot thou wolt anſwere and ſaie
Lo olde Griſell liſt to renne and plaie

Naie Scogan ſaie not ſo, for I me excuſe
God helpe me ſo, in no rime doubtleſs
Ne thinke I neuer of ſlepe wake my muſe
That ruſteth in my ſheath ſtill in pees
While I was yong I put her forthe in prees
But al ſhall paſſe that men proſe or rime
That euery man his tourne as for his tyme.

Scogan thou kneleſt at the ſtremes hedde
Of grace, of all honour, and of worthineſſe
In thende of whiche I am dull as dedde
Forgotten in ſolitarie wildernеſſe
Yet Scogan thinke on Tullius kindeneſſe
Myne thy frende there it maie fructifie
Farwell, and lobe thou neuer eft ioue defie.

Chaucer to his emptie purſe.

O you my purſe and to none other wight
Complain I, for ye be my ladie dere
I am ſorie now that ye be light
For certes ye now make me heauie chere

Me

We were as lefe be laide vpon a bere
For whiche vnto your mercy thus I crie
Be heuy againe or els mote I die

Nowe vouchsafe this day or it be night
That I of you the blisful sowne may here
Or se your colour lyke the sonne bright
That of pelonelle had neuer pere ye be my life, ye be my hertes stere
Quene of comfort and of good companye
Be heuy againe, or els mote I die

Nowe purse that art to me my lyues light
And sauyour, as downe in this worde here
Out of this towne helpe me by your might Sithe that you wol not be my treasoure
For I am shaue as nighe as any frere
But I pray vnto your curtesye
Be heuy againe, or els mote I die.

Explicit.

¶ Chaucer vnto the kinge.

And ye that may al harmes amende

¶ A balade of good

counseile translated out of Latin verses in to Englishe, by dan Ihon lidgat cleped the monke of Bury.

COnsyder well euery circumstance
Of what estate euer thou bee
Riche, stronge, or myghty of puissaunce
Prudent or wyse, discret or besy
The dome of folkes in soth thou may nat flie
What euer thou dost trust wel this
I wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

For in thy porte or in thine apparaile
If thou be cladde and honestly be saine
Anone the people of malice wol not faile
Without aduice or reason for to saine
That thin array is made or wrought in vain
Suffre hem speake, and trust right wel this
I wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Thou wil to kinges be equipolent
With great lordes ruin and peregal
And if thou be to borne and al to rent
Than wol they say, and iangle ouer al
Thou art a slongarde that neuer thryue shal Suffre hem speke, and trust right wel this
I wycked tonge wol alway deme amis

If it befal that thou take a wife
They wol falsly say in their entent
Thou art likely euer to lyue in strife
Voide of al rest, without aledgemente
Wiues ben maistres, this is their iudgement Suffren al their speche, & trust right wel this
I wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

If thou be faire and excellent of beaute yet wol they say that thou art amourous
If thou be foule and vglie on to se
They wol affirme that thou art vicious
The people of langage is so dispitous
Suffre al their speche, & truste right wel this
I wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

If so be that of parfitenesse
Thou hast vowed to liue in chastite
Than wol folke, of thy persone exprese
Thou art impotent tengendre in thy degre
And thus wher thou be chaste or dessaute Suffre hem speake, and trust right well this
I wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

If thou be fatte other corpulent
Than wol thein say thou arte a great gloten
A deuourer, or els vinolent yf thou be leane or megre of fashion
Cal the a nygarde in their opinion
Suffre them speke, and trust right wel this
I wicked tonge wol alway dem amis

If thou be riche, some wol yeue the laude
And say it cometh of prudent gouernaunce
And some wol sain it cometh of fraude
Other by sleght, or falle chenisaunce
To sain the worst, folke haue so gret plesaunce
What suffre hem say, and trust right wel this
I wycked tonge wol alway deme amis

If thou be sadde or sobre of countenaunce

Certaine Balades,

Men woll sayn thou thinkest some treason
And if thou be gladde of dalliaunce
Men wol deme it desolucion
And call faire speche adulacion
Yet let him speake, and trust right well this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Who that is holy by perfection
Men of malice wol clip him ypocrite
And who is mery of clene entention
Men sain in riot he doth hym delite (white
Some mourne in black, some loue in clothes
Suffre men speke, & trust right wel this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Honest araie men deme it pompe and pride
And who goeth poore, men cal him a waster
And who goeth stil men marke him on ỹ syde
Seine that he is a spie or agiler
Who watteth not men sain he hath treasoure
Wherof conclude and trust right wel this
A wycked tonge wol alway deme amis

Who speketh moche men clepeth him prudēt
Who that debateth, men sain that he is hardi
And who saith litel with great sentement
Some folke yet wol wite him of folie
Trouth is put downe, and vp goth flattery
And who ỹ list plainly knowe ỹ cause of this
A wycked tonge wol alway deme amis

For though a man were as pacient
As was Dauid throw his humilite
Or with Salomon in wisdome as prudent
Or in knighode egale with Josue
Or manly proued, as Judas Machabe
Yet for al that, trust right wel this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

And though a man had the prowesse
Of worthy Hector, Troies champion
The loue of Troylus, or the kindnesse
Or of Cesar the famous high renoun
With al Alixaunders dominacioun
Yet for al that trust right wel this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Or thoughe a man of high or lowe degre
Of Julius had the sugred eloquence
Or of Seneca the moralite
Or of Caton forsight and prouidence
The cōquest of Charles, Artures magnificēce
Yet for al that trust right wel this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Touching of women, the parfit Innocence
Thoughe that they hade, of Hester ỹ noblesse
Or of Grisilde, the humble pacience
Or of Judith, the preuid stabelnesse
Or Polixenes virginal clennesse
Yet dare I seine, and trust right wel this
Some wiked tong, wold deme of them amis

The wifely trouth of Penelope
Though they it had in her possession
Helenes beautie, the kindnesse of Medee
The loue vnfained of Martia Caton
Or Alcestes trewe affection
Yet dare I sain and trust right wel this
A wicked tonge wol alway deme amis

Than seuth it that no man maye eschewe
The swerde of tonges, but it wil kerue & bite
Ful harde it is a man for to remewe
Out of their daunger him for to aquite
Wo to the tonges that hem selfe delite
To hinder or sclaūder, & set their study in this
And their plesaunces to deme alwaye amis

Moste noble princes, cherishers of vertue
Remembreth you of high discretion
The first vertue moste pleasing to Jesu
(By the writing and sentence of Caton)
Is a good tonge in his opinion
Chastice the reuerse of wisdome do this Woideth your hearinge frō al that deme amis

Praise and commendacion of maister Geffray Chauser for his golden eloquence.

MAister Geffray chauser, that

The noble Rhetoricion, and Poet of great Bretaine
That worthy was, the laurer

For this his labour, and the palme to atteine

A balade made by Chaucer, teching what is gentilnes, oꝛ whom is woꝛthy to be caled gentil.

THe firſte ſtoke father of gentilnes
What man deſireth gentill foꝛ to be Muſt folowe his trace, & all his wittes dꝛeis
Vertue to loue, and vicis foꝛ to flee
Foꝛ vnto vertue longeth dignitee
And not the reuers ſaſly dare I deme
Al were he miter crowne oꝛ diademe

This firſt ſtoke was full of right wilnes
Crew of his woꝛde, ſober pitous and free
Clene of his goſte and loued buſineſſe
Againſt the vice of ſlouth in honeſte
And but his eyze loue vertue as did he
He is not gentyl though he riche ſeme
Al weare he miter, crowne oꝛ diademe

Vicelle may wel be eyze to olde richeſſe
But ther may no man, as men may well ſee
By quethe his eire his vertues nobleſſe
That is appꝛoꝛied vnto no degree
But to the firſt father in maieſtee
That maketh his eyzes them that is queme
Al were he miter, crowne oꝛ diademe.

women vnconſtaunt

MIdame foꝛ your newfanglenelle
Many a ſeruaunt haue ye put out of your grace
I take my leue of youre vnſtedfaſtnelle
Foꝛ well I wote, while ye to liue haue ſpace
Ye can not loue full halfe yere in a place
To new thinges, your luſte is eure kene
In ſtede of blew, thus may ye weare al grene

Ryght as a mirour ꝑ nothing may enpꝛeſſe
But lightly as it cometh, ſo mo it paſſe (nes
So fareth your loue, your woꝛkes beꝛith wit-
Ther is no faithe, may youre herte enbꝛace
But as a wedercok, that turneth his face
With euery winde, ye fare and that is ſene
In ſtede of blew, thus may ye weare al grene

Ye might be chꝛined, foꝛ your bꝛotilneſſe
Better than Dalyda, Creſſeide, oꝛ Candace
Foꝛ euer in chaũging ſtondeth your ſtaernes
That tatche may no wight, from your hert a
If ye loſe one, can wel tweine purchace (race
Al light foꝛ ſomar, ye wot wel what I mene
In ſtede of blewe, thus may ye were al grene

Here foloweth a balade whiche Chaucer made in ꝑ praiſe oꝛ rather diſpꝛaiſe, of women foꝛ ther doublenes.

THis woꝛld is full of variaunce
In euerye thinge who taketh hede
That faithe and truſte, and all conſtance
Exiled ben this is no dꝛede
And ſaue only, in womanhed
I can ſee, no ſtabernes
But foꝛ al that, yet as I rede
Be ware alwaye, of doublenes

Alſo that freſhe, ſomer floures
White and rede, blewe and grene
Ben ſodenly, with winter ſhoures

Certein Balades,

Made feinte and fadt, without wene
That truft is none as ye may fene
In no thing, nor no ftedfaftenes
Except in women, thus I mene
Yet aye beware, of doublenes

The croked Mone, this is no tale
Some while ichene, and bright of hewe
And after that, ful derke and pale
And euery moneth, chaungeth newe
That who the verap, fothe knew
Allthinge is bilt, on brotlenes
Saue that women, aye be trewe
Yet aye beware of doublenes

The lufty freche, fommers daye
And Phebus, with his beames clere
Towardes night, they drawe awaye
And non lenger, like appere
That in this preſente, like now here
Nothinge abieth, in his fairenes
Saue women aye, be found intere
And deuoide of doublenes

The fee eke, with his ſterne wawes
Eche daye floweth new againe
And by concours, of his lawes
The ebbe floweth in certeine
After grete drought, ther cometh a raine
That farewel here al ſtabelnes
Saue that women, be hole and pleine
Yet aye beware, of doblenes

Fortunes whele, goeth round aboute
A thouſand times, daye and nighte
Whoſe cours ſtandeth, euer in doute
For to tranſmew, ſhe is ſo lighte
For whiche aduerteth in your ſighe
The vntruſt, of worldely likelnes
Saue women, whiche of kindely right
Ne hath now teche of doublenes

What man may, the wind reſtreine
Or hold a ſnake, by the taile
Or aſlipper elle conſtreine
That it will voide, with out faile
Or who can driue ſo auaile
To make fuere new longelnes
Saue women that can gie their faile
To row their, boote with doublenes

At euery hauene, they can ariue
Wher as they wote, is good paſſage
Of innocence they can not ſtriue
With wawes, nor no rockes rage
So happy is their lodemanage
With nedle and ſtone, their cours to dreſſe
That Salomon, was not ſo ſage
To finde in them, no doublenes

Therfore who ſo them accuſe
Of any double entencion
To ſpeake rowme, other to muſe
To pinch at their condicion
All is but falſe colluſion
I dare right wel, the ſothe expreſſe
They haue no better protection
But ſhroud them, vnder doublenes

So wel fortuned is their chaunce
The dice to turne, vppe ſo doune
With ſiſe and ſincke, they can auaunce
And than, by reuolucion
They ſet a fel concluſion
Of lombes, as in ſothfaſtenes
Though clerkes make mencion
Their kinde is fret with doublenes

Sampſon had experience
That women were ful trew ifound
Whan Dalyda, of innocence
With cheeres, gan his heere to round
To ſpeake alſo of Roſamounde
And Cleopatris, feithfulnes
The ſtories plainly, wil confounde
Men that apeche their doublenes

Sengle thinge, ne is not praiſed
Nor olde is of no renoun
In balaunce whan they be peiſed
For lacke of waighte they be bore doune
And for this cauſe of iuſte reaſon
Theſe women al of right wilnes
Of choiſe and free election
Moſt loue eſchaunge & doublenes

Lenuoye.

Ye women whiche been enclined
By influence of your nature
To been as pure, as golde y-fined
In your truth, for to endure
Arme your ſelfe, in ſtrong armure
Leſt men aſſaile, your likernes
Set on your breſt, your ſelf to aſſure
A mightie ſhelde of doublenes

Certaine Balades,

I haue sought true loue of yeres gret proces
Yet fond I neuer loue but for a season
Some men be diuerse & know no gentilnes
And some lacke both wisdome and reson
In som men is trust and som men is treason
Wherfore I wil conclude by auysemente
And euer beware for drede that I be shente

The rectour Tulius so gay of eloquence
And Ouide ỳ sheweth the craft of loue expres
With habundaunce of Salomons prudence
And pulcritude of Absalons fairenesse
And I wer possessed with Jobs great richesse

Yet shuld I submit me in your remēbraunce

Now sir yf that it please your nobelnesse
To gyue aduertence to my question

Or what thinge geueth man occasion

My soueraigne lady, Ouide in his writinge
Saith that desire of worldly concupiscence
As for a time is swete in his worchinge
And in his ende he causeth greate offēce
Notwithstandinge my lady dame Prudence
Grene flowring age & manly countenaunce
Causeth ladies to haue it in remembraunce

Your goodly answer so notable in substaūce
Wold cause the hert of womanhede conuerte
Vnto delyte of natural pleasaunce
But of one thinge I wold faine be experte
Why mennes lāgage wol procure & trāsuerte
The wil of women & virgines innocente
Wherfore I am aferd or I be shente

Let neuer the loue of true loue be losed
My soueraine lady in no maner wise
In your confidēce my wordes I haue closed
My amyable loue to you I doe promise
So that ye knit the knot of exercyse
Both locke and key ye haue in gouernaunce
Emprint my loue in your remembraunce

O bery trust and I were certefied
The plain entention of your hartes cordial
Me semeth in blisse than were I glorified
Vnto your plesure I would be at your call
But euer I feare of chaunces casual
Of fraude, disceipte, and langage insolente
Then were I sure madenhed should be shent

Ther was neuer tresour of terrestriall richesse
Nor precious stones rehersed innumerabell
To be of cōparison vnto your hight goodnes
I proue al creatures to me most amiable
Trust not ỳ cōtrary I was neuer disceuabell
Kepe wel true loue forge no dissemblaunce
And graciously take me to your remēbraūce

Me semeth by leiture of womanly properte
Ye shuld be trusty and trewe of comprimis
I finde in your no falce duplicite
Wherfore true loue ye haue my her I wis
And euermore shal endure so haue I blis
The federaly made with good auisement

A Balade.

Of their nature they greatly thē delite
With holy face feined for the nones
In saint warie their frendes to visite
More for reliques than for saintes bones
Though they be closed vnder precious stones
To gete them pardon lyke their olde vsages
To kisse no shrines but lusty quike Images

Whā maidēs ar wedded & houshold haue take Al their humility is exiled awaye
And the cruel hartes beginneth to awake
They do al the bely cure ỳ they can or maye
To ver ther husholdes maisters ỳ soth for to Wherfore ye yōg men I rede you for thy saye
Beware alwaye the blind cateth many flye

Of this mater I dare make no lenger relatiō
For in defaut of slepe my spirites were faint
In my studie I haue had so lōg an habitaciō
That my body & my gost are greuously attait
And therfore of this proces I mak no lēger cō
But whether ỳ ỳ blind cate flesh or fish (plait
I pray God kepe the fly out of my dishe.

Now

Now I make an ende, & laie me doune to rest
For I knowe by experience veramente
Jl maidens and wiues knewe and wist
Who made the matter he should be shent
Wherefore I praie God omnipotente
Hym saue and kepe bothe night and daie
Writen in the lustie season of Maie.

Explicit.

The.x. Commaundementes of Loue.

Certes terre extendeth yet my reason
This matter as yet should be to discriue
But I truste your grace will in this season
Consider howe with conning that I striue
For in his fauour coud I neuer arriue Eloquence this Balade hath in great despite
The maker lacketh maner to endite.

Of Loues cõmaundemetes. x. is the nomber
Is afterward shall rudely be rehearsed
And louers in no wise departe a sunder
Where as thei be obserued and redressed
Daunger and vnkindnes been oppressed
And that is commaunded this to make
Is your owne all other to forsake.

Faithe.

Faithe is the first and principally to tell
Eerie loue requireth sothe credence
That eche beleue other as true as the Gospel
Without adlaucion or flatterying audience
In true demeanyng and trustie confidence
Paint not your cõnyng with colour ne fable
For then your loue must nedes be vnstable.

Entencion.

In the seconde to treate of Entencion
Your louer to please doe your busie cure
For as myn auctor Romance maketh mẽciõ
Without entent your loue maie not endure
As women will thereof I am right sure
Endeuour with harte, will, and thought
To please hym onely ỹ her loue hath sought.

Discrecion.

In your dealyng euer be discrete
Set not your loue there as it shall be losed
Aduertise in your minde whether he be mete
That vnto hym your harte maie be disclosed
And after as you finde hym then disposed Point by discresion your hour, time, & place
Conueniently methyng armes to embrace.

Pacience.

Of these cõmaundements, the. iiii. is pacience
Though by irous corage your louer be meued
With soft wordes and humble obedience
His wrathe maie sone be swaged and releued
And thus his loue obteined and acheued
Will in you roote, with greater diligence
Bicause of your mekenesse and womanly pacience.

Secretnesse.

Secretlie behaue you in your werkes
In shewing coũtenãce or meuyng of your eye
Though soche behauor to some folk be darke
He that hath loued will it sone aspie
Thus your self your counsaill maie descrie
Make priuy to your deling as few as ye maie
For. iii. may kepe a counsel if twain be awaie

Prudence.

Let prudẽce be gouernor of your bridel reine
Set not your loue in so feruent wise
But that in goodly hast ye maie refreine
If your louer list you to dispise
Romaũce min auctour wold you this aduise
Ty slacke your loue for if ye doe not so
That wanton list will tourne you into wo.

Perseueraunce.

Stablishe your loue in so stedfast wise
If that ye thinke your louer will be true
As entirely as you can deuise
Loue hym onely, and refuse all newe
Then shall not your worship chaũge his hew
For certes malkeres, then is he to blame
But if that he will quite you with the same.

Pitie.

Be piteous to hym as womãdhod requireth
That for your loue endureth paines smarte
Whom so sore your pleasaunt looke enfireth
That printed is your beautie in his harte
And wounded lieth without knife or darte

There let your pitie spred without restreinte
For lacke of pitie, let not your seruaunt feint

Measure.

Take mesure in your talkyng be not outrage
For this reheatseth Romance de la Rose
A man endued with plenteous langage
Oft tyme is denied his purpose
Take measure in langage wisedome in grose
For measure as right wel proued is by reason
Thynges vnseasonable setteth in season.

Mercie.

Soche daunger exile hym vtterly
Ouer all mercie to occupie his place
To piteous complaintes your eares applie
And receiue your seruaunte in grace
To hym that bounde is in loues lace
Shewe fauour ladie and be not merciles
Lest ye be called a common murderes.

Lenuoye.

When ye vnto this balade haue inspeccion
In my makyng holde me excusable
It is submitted vnto your correccion
Consider that my connyng is disable
To write to you the figure vniable
All deuoide of connyng and experience
Maner of inditynge, reason and eloquence.

Trust it well the maker your owne
You to obeie while his life maie endure
To doe you seruice as a man vnknowne
No guerdone desiryng of yearthly treasure
But if it might accorde with your pleasure
For true seruice hym to auaunce
And call hym into your remembraunce.

Of this processe, now forth will I procede Whiche happeth me with greate disdain As for the time thereof I take lest hede For vnto me was brought the sore paine Therfore my cause was the more to cõplaine yet vnto me my greuaunce was the lesse That I was so nigh my ladie and maistresse.

To whom mercie is giuen of propertie
On thy seruaunt that lieth in prison bounde
Haue thou mercie or that his harte wounde.

And ꝑ thou wilt graunt to him thy prisoner
Free libertie, and lose hym out of pain
All his desires, and all his beaute chere
To all gladnesse thei were restored again
Thy high vēgeance, why should ꝑ not refrain
And shewe mercie, sith he is penitent
Now helpe hym lorde, and let him not be shēt

But sith it is so, there is a trespas done
Unto mercie let yelde the trespassour
It is her office to redresse it sone
For trespasse to mercie is a merrour
And like as the swete, hath the price by soure
So by trespasse, mercie hath all her might Without trespasse, mercie hath lacke of light

What should Philike doe but if sikenes were What nedeth salue, but if there were sore
What nedeth drink, wher thirst hath no power
What should mercie doe, but trespas goe afore
But trespas be, mercie woll be little store
Without trespas neuer execution
Haie mercie haue ne chief perfection.

The cause at this tyme of my writyng
And touchyng mercie to whom I make mone
Is for feare lest my soueraigne and swetyng,
I meane her that louelier is none
With me is displeased for causes more thā one
What causes thei be that knoweth God & she
But so do not I alas it forthinketh me.

What se she in me, what defaute or offence
What haue I doe that she on me disdaine
How might I doe come to her presence
To tell my complaint whereof I were faine
I dreede to looke, to speake, or to complaine
To her that hath my harte euery deale
So help me God I would al thing wer weale

For in this case came I neuer or now
In loues daunce so ferre in the trace
For with myne ease, scape I ne mow
Out of this daunger except her good grace
For though my countenaunce be mery in her
As semeth to her by worde or by chere (face
Yet her good grace setteth myne harte nere.

And if that my souerain haue any meruaile
Why I to her now and afore wrote
She maie well thinke it is no great trauaile
To him that is in loue brought so hote
It is a simple tree, ꝑ falleth with one strok
That meane I, though ꝑ my souerain tolorn Me hath denied, yet grace may come to morn (ought

But maistres for ꝑ good will ꝑ I haue you
And euermore shall as long as my life dureth
Pitie your seruant & kepe him in your thought
And giue him som cōfort or medicin & cureth
His seruent ague, that encreaseth ꝑ renueth
So greuous ben his paines & his sighes sore
That wout your mercy, his dais be al for lore

Go little bill, go forth and hie thee fast
And recommande me, and excuse me as ꝑ can
For very feblenesse, thus am I at the last
My pen is worn, my hew is pale and wan
My eyen been sonken, disfigured like no man Till death his dart, that causeth for to smart my corps haue cōsumed, thy farwel swet hart

O doughter of Phebus in vertuous apparēce
By loue elect in my remembraunce
By carefull harte distreined cause of absence
Till ye meinprise me release my greuaunce
Upon you is set my life and myne attendance
Without recure I wis dayly
Ye graunt true harte to haue his will.

Thus my dere swetyng in atraunce I doe lye
And shal til sum drops of pitie frō you spring
I meane your mercie that lieth my harte nye
That me maie reioice, & cause me for to syng
These ternes of loue, lo I haue won the ring
By goodly maistres thus of her good grace
God graūt his blisse in heauē to haue a place.

Here foloweth how Mercurie with Pallas, Venus and Minarua, appered to Paris of Troie, he slepyng by a fountain.

Pallas loquitur ad Parisum de Troie.

SOnne of Priamus gentill Paris of Troie
Wake of thy slepe, beholde vs Goddesses three Wee haue brought to thee encrease of ioye
To thy discrecion reportyng our beautie
Take here this Appell and well aduise thee
Whiche of vs is fairest in thy sight
And giue thou it, we praie thee gentil knight

Pallas loquitur primo.

If so be thou giue it vnto me Paris
This shall I giue vnto thy worthines
Honour, conquest, nobley, loue and prise
Victorie, courage, force and hardines
Good auenture, and famous manlines
For that apple all this giue I to thee
Consider this Paris, and giue it vnto me.

Venus loquitur ad Parisum.

Naie giue it me, and this I shall you giue
Glad aspecte with fauour and fairnes
And loue of ladies also while that ye liue
Famous stature, and princely semelines
Accordyng to your natife gentilnes
Understande this gift well I you aduise
And giue it me hardy Paris.

Minerua loquitur ad Parisum.

And for to rule thy royall dignitee
I shall thee giue first in tendemente
Discrecion, prudence in right iudgemente

Explicit.

A balade pleasaunte.

I Haue a Ladie where so ye bee
That seldome is the soueraine of my thought
On whose beautie, when I beholde and see Me thinketh me how well she is wrought
I thanke fortune that to her grace me brought
So faire is she but nothyng angelike
Her beautie is to none other like.

For hardely and she were made of brasse
Face and all, she hath enough fairnesse
Her yen been holow, and grene as any grasse
And Rauinish yelowe is her sourritresse
Thereto she hath of euery comelinesse
Soche quantitie giuen her by nature
That with the least she is of her stature.

And as a bolt her browes been bent
And betill browed she is also withall
And of her witte as simple and innocent
As is a childe that can no good at all
She is not thicke, her stature is but small
Her fingers been little, and nothyng long
Her skin is smothe as any Orestong.

Thereto she is so wise in daliaunce
And beset her wordes so womanly
That her to here it doeth me displeasaunce
For that she saieth, is saied so conningly
That when there be mo then she and I
I had leuer she were of talkyng still
Then that she should so goodly speache spill

And clothe none shall haue in her entresse
So diligent is she and vertuelesse
And so busie aie all good to bisnesse
That as a she Ape she is harmelesse
And as an Hornet meke and pitieselesse with that she is so wise and circumspecte

That prudence none her folie can infecte.

Is it not ioye that soche one of her age
Within the bounder of so greate tendernelle
Should in her werke be so sadde and sage
That of the weddyng sawe all the noblelle
Of quene Jane, and was tho as I gesse
But of the age of yeres ten and siue
I trowe there are not many soche aliue.

For as Jesu my sinfull soule saue
There nis creature in all this worlde liuyng
Like vnto her that I would gladly haue
So pleaseth mine hart ỳ goodly swete thyng
Whose soule in haste vnto his blis bryng
That first her formed, to be a creature
For were she well, of me I did no cure.

To trust on them it is but fantasie
Beware therfore the blind eateth many a flie

Now certes, and ye let me thus ſtarue
Yet haue ye wonne theron but ſmall

And thus I wilbe leche you hartely
That euer ye kinde whiles ye liue
A truer ſeruaunte to you than am I
Leueth than and leath me hardely
And I my death to you wil al forgiue
And yf ye kinde no trewer verely

And for no maner gilt but my good will
As good were than vntrue as true to be.

The holy bed, defoiled of mariage
For ones defoiled, may not recouered be
The vice goth forth, & the froward langage
By many a realme, and many a greate cite
Slaunder hath a cuſtome, and that is greate pite
True or fals, by a contrarious ſoune
Ones areiſed it goth not lyghtly downe

For when a lechour by force or by maiſtry
Defouled hath, of virgins the clennes
Widous oppreſſed, and lye in aduoutry
Aſſailed wiues that ſtode in ſtablenes (dreſſe
Who may then, their ſlaunderous harme re-
When their good name, is hurt by ſoch repoꝛt
For ſame loſt ones, can neuer haue his reſoꝛt

A thefe may robbe a man of this richeſſe
And by ſome meane, make reſtitucion
And ſome man maye, dyſherit and oppreſſe
A poore man, from his poſſeſſion
And after make againe ſatiſfaccion
But no man may reſtoꝛe, in no degree
A maide robbed, of her virginite

A man may alſo, bete I caſtel doune
And bilde it after moꝛe freſche to the ſight
Exile a man, out of his regionne
And him reuoke whether it be wrōg or right
But no man hath the pour, ne the might
For to reſtoꝛe, the palace virginal
Of chaſtite, when broken is the wal.

Men may alſo, put out of ſeruice
And officers remeue, out of their place
And at a day, when foꝛtune liſt deuiſe
They may again, reſtoꝛed be to grace
But their nis time, nother let me ſpace
Noꝛ neuer in ſtoꝛy, neither rad me ſain
That maydenhode loſt, recouered was again

For whiche men ſhould, haue a conſcience
Rewe in their hert, and repent ſoꝛe
And haue remoꝛce of great offence
To rauiſhe thing, which they may not reſtoꝛe
For it is ſaid, and hath be ſaide ful yoꝛe
The emerand grene, of parfite chaſtite
Stole ones away, may not recouered be

And hard it is, to rauiſhe A treſoure
Whiche of nature, it is not recuparable
Lordſhip may not of Kinge noꝛ Emperour
Reſoꝛme a thinge, whiche is nat reſoꝛmable
Ruſt of defame is inſeperable
And maidenhode loſt of newe or yoꝛe
No man of liue may it again reſtoꝛe

Romans olde thoꝛough their pacience
Suffered tyrauntes in their tyrannyes
And their cites, to do great violence
The people to oppreſſe, with their roberies
But to puniſhe, they ſet great eſpies

On

On false aduouterers as it is wel couth
Widowes to rauish, & maidens in their youth

Explicit.

The Court of Loue.

Ith temerous herte, and trẽbling hand of drede
Of cũning naked, bare of eloquence
Unto the flour of poort in womanhede
I write as he that none intelligence
Of metres hath, ne floures of sentence
Saule that me lift my writing to conuey
In that I can to please her heigh nobley

The blosomes fresh, of Tulius gardein soote
Present then not, my matter for to borne
Poemes of Virgile taken here no roote
Ne craste of Galfride may not her sojourne
Why nam I cunning o wel maie I morne
For lache of science, that I can nat write Unto the princes of my lyfe a right

No termes digne vnto her excellence
So is she spronge of noble stripe and high
I world of honour and of reuerence
There is in her, this wil I testifie
Caliope thou sisser wise and sly
And thou Minerua guide me with thy grace
That langage rude, my matter not deface

Thy suger dropes swete of elicon
Distil in me thou gentle muse I praye
And the Melpomene I cal anone
Of ignorauunce the miste to chace awaye
And geue me gace so for to write and saie
That she my lady of her worthinesse
Accept in gree this litel short tretesse

That is entittled thus the Courte of Loue
In ye that ben Metriciens me excuse
I you beseche for Uenus sake aboue
For what I meane in this ye nede not muse
And if so be my lady it refuse
For lake of ornate speche I wolde be wo
That I presume to her to writen so

But my entente and al my busie cure
Is for to to write this tretesse as I can Unto my lady stable true and sure
Faithful and kind sith firste that she began
We to accept in seruice as her man
To her be al the pleasure of this booke
That when her like she may it rede and looke

Hen I was yong at .xviii. yere of age
Lusty and light, desirous of pleasaunce
Approching on full sadde and ripe corage
Loue arted me to do my obseruaunce
To his estate and done him obeisaunce
Commaundinge me the Court of Loue to see
Ilite beside the mounte of Citharee

Their Citherea goddesse was and quene
Honoured highly for her maieste
And eke her sonne the mighty God I wene
Cupide the blind that for his dignite
I. W. louers worshipp on their kne
There was I bid in paine of death to pere
By Mercury the winged messengere

So than I went by strange & ferre countrees
Enquiringe aye what coastes that it drewe
The Court of Loue and thider ward as bees
At last I se the people gan pursue (knew Inō me thought some wight was ther that Where that the court was holden ferre or nie
And after than ful faste I gan me hie

Anon as I them ouer toke I said
Heile frendes whether purpose ye to wend
For soch (q one) that answered lyche amaid
To Loues Courte, now goo we gentel frend
Where is that place (q I) my felowe hend
At Citheron sir said he withoute doute
The hinge of Loue and al his noble route

Dwelling within a castel rially
So than a pace I iourned forth amonge
And as he saide, so fond I there truly
For I beheld the toures high and stronge
And high pinacles large of hight and longe
With plate of golde be spred on euery side
And precious stones, ỹ stone werke for to hide

No Saphire I nde no Rube riche of price
There lacked than nor Emeraude so grene
Bales Turkes, ne thinge to my deuise
That may the castel maken forto shene
All was as bright as sterres in Winter bene
And Phebus shone to make his peace ageine

For trespas done to high estates tweine

Venus and Mars the God & goddesse clere
When he them founde in armes cheined faste
Venus was than ful sad of harte and chere
But Phebus beames streight as is the maste
Upon the castle ginneth he to cast
To please the lady princes of that place
In signe he looketh after loues grace

For ther nis God in heuen or hel I wys
But he hath ben right soget vnto loue
Joue Pluto or what so euer he is Ne creature in erth or yet aboue
Of these the reuers may no wight approue
But furthermore the castell to descrie
Yet sawe I neuer none so large and hie.

For vnto heuen it stretcheth I suppose
With in and oute depeinted wonderly
With many a thousand daisy rede as rose
And white also this sawe I verely
But what tho deises might do signifye
Can I not tel sauf that the quenes floure
Alceste it was that kept ther her soioure

Which vnder Venus lady was and quene
And Admete kyng and souerain of that place
To whom obeied the ladies good.xix.
With many a thousand other bright of face
And yong men fele came forthwith lusti pace
And aged eke their homage to dispose
But what they were I coud not well disclose

Yet nere and nere forth in I gan me dresse
Into an halle of noble apparaile
With arras spred and cloth of gold I gesse
And other like of eyer auaile
Under the cloth of their estate sauns faile
The king and quene there sat as I beheld
It passed ioye of speche the feld

Their saintes haue their cominge & reioyse
To seen the kinge so rially be seen
In purple clad and eke the quene in soyte
And on their heddes sawe I crounes tweine
With flones fret so that it was no paine
Without en meate and drinke to stand and se
The kinges honor and the rialtee

And for to treate of states with the king
That ben of counsell chefe & with the quene
The king had Daunger nere to him standing
The quene of loue Disdain and that was sen
For by the faith I shal to God I wene
Was neuer straunger in her degre
Than was the quene in castinge of her eye

And as I stode perceiuing her aparte
And eke the beames shininge of her eyen
Me thought they were shapen lyche a darte
Sharpe and persinge smale & streight as line
And al her haere it shone as gold so fine
Disshiuil crispe doune hanging at her backe
Yard in length and southely than I spak.

O bright regina who made the so faire
Who made thy colour vermelet and white
Wher woneth ỳ God, how far aboue the eyre
Greate was his crafte & great was his delite
Now maruel I nothing that ye do bight
The quene of loue and occupie the place
Of Cithare now swete lady thy grace

In mewet spake I so that nought astarte
By no condicion word that might be hard
But in my inward thought I gan aduerte
And oft I said my wit is dul and hard
For with her beautie thus God wot I ferde
As doeth the man yrauished with sight
When I beheld her cristal yen so bright

No respecte hauyng what was beste to done
Till right anone beholding here and there
I spied a frend of myne and that ful sone
A gentel woman was the chamberere
Unto the quene that hote as ye shall here
Philobone that loued al her life
When she me sey she led me forth as blife

And me demaunded how and in what wise
I thither come, and what my erand was
To seue the Courte (ỳ) and al the guise
And eke to sue for pardon and for grace
And mercy aske for al my great trespasse
That I none erste come to the courte of loue
For yeue me this ye goddes al aboue

That is wel said (ỳ) Philobone in dede
But were ye not allomoned to appere
By Mercurius for that is al my drede
Yes gentill feire (ỳ) I now am I here
Ye yet what tho though that be true my dere
Of your fre wil ye shuld haue come vnsent
For ye did not I deme ye will be shente

For ye that reigne in youth and iustines
Dampned with ese and ialous in your age
Your bueire is as far as I can gesse
To loues courte to purchas your viage

Alas

Allone as nature maketh you so sage
That ye may know a woman from a swan
Or whan your foote is growen halfe a span

But lithe that ye be wilful negligence
This xviii. yere hath kept your selfe at large
The greater is your trespas and offence
And in your necke you mote bere all ỹ charge
For better wer ye ben withouten barge
Amidde the sea in tempest and in rayne
Then biden here receiuing wo and payn

That ordeined is for suche as them absente
Fro loues courte by yeres long and sele
I ley my life ye shal ful sone repente
For loue wil reiue youre coloure lufl and hele
Ehe ye muste baite an many on heuy mele
No force I wis I stired you longe a gon
To drawe to courte (ỹ I tell) Philobon

Ye shal wel se how rough and angry face
The king of Loue wil shewe when ye him se
By myn aduise kneele down & aske him grace
Eschewing perel and aduersite
For wel I wot it wolle none other be Comforte is none ne councel to youre eale
Why wil ye then the king of Loue displease

O mercie God (ỹ iche) I me repent
Caitif and wretche in hert, in wil & thought
And after this shal be mine hole entent
To serue & please howe dere ỹ loue be bought
Yet sith I haue mine owne penaūce sought
With humble spyte shal I it receiue
Though that ỹ king of Loue my lyfe bereiue

And though that seruent loues qualite
In me did neuer worche truly yet I
With al obeisaunce and humilite
And benigne harte shal serue him til I die
And he that lord of mightes greate and hie
Right as him lift me chastice and correcte
And punishe me with trespace thus enfecte

These wordes said, she caught me by the lap
And led me furth in til a temple round
Large and wide and as my bielfed hap
And good auenture was right sone I founde
A tabernacle reised from the grounde
Where venus sat and Cupide by her side
Yet hath for drede I can my bilage hide

And eft againe I loked and beheld
Seeing ful sundry people in the place
And miller folke & some that might not welde
Their limes wele me thought a wonder case
The temple shone with windowes al of glasse
Bright as the day with manie a faire ymage
And there I see the freshe quene of Carthage

Dido that brent her beautie for the loue
Of fals Eneas and the wetmenting
Of her Ineida true as Turtil doue
To Aeute fals and there was inpeinting
Of many a prince and many a doughty king
Whose martirdō was shewed about ỹ walles
And how that fele for loue had suffred falles

But sore I was adasshed and astouned
Of al tho folke that there were in that tide
And than I asked where they had woned
In diuers courtes (ỹ she) here beside
In sondry clothing mantilwise full wide
They were arraied and did their sacrifice
Vnto the God and goddesse in their guise

To yonder folke (ỹ she) that kneele in blewe
They weare the colour ay and euer shal
In signe they were and euer wil be true
Withouten chaunge and southely yonder all
That ben in blak with mourning crie & call
Vnto the goddes for their loues bene
Some serre, som dede, som al to sherpe ỹ bene

Yea than (ỹ I) what done these prestes here
Nonnes and Hermites Freres and all tho
That sit in white in russet and in grene
For sothe (ỹ she) they wailen of their wo
O mercy lord may they so come and go
Freely to court and haue suche libertie
Yea men of eche condicion and degree

And women eke for truly there is none Exception made ne neuer was ne may
This courte is ope and free for euerichone
The king of loue he wil not say them nay
He taketh al, in poore or riche array
That meekely sewe vnto his excellence
With al their harte and al their reuerence

And walking thus aboute with Philobone
I se where come a messengere in hie (anone
Streight from the king whiche let cōmaūde
Throughout the courte to make an hō crie
I new come folke abide, and wote ye why
The kinges lufl is for to seen youre fone
Come nere let se his wil mote nede be don

Than gan I me present to fore the king
Trembling for fere with visage pale of hewe
And many aloute with me was knéling Abashed fast til vnto the tyme they

The [illegible] yere of [illegible]
And at the last me thought beheld
Mercy sterne visage & seid what doth this olde

Thus ferre I hope in yerys come so late
Unto the courte for sothe my liege (quod I)
In hundred tyme I haue ben at the gate
I fore thus tyme yet coude I neuer espie
Or myne acqueintaunce eny is mine ye
And shamefastenes away me ganne to chace
But now I me submitte vnto your grace

Wel, al is perdoned with condicion
That thou be trewfrō henforth to thy might
And seruen loue in thine entencion
Swere this, and than as ferre as it is right Thou shalte haue grace here in my quenes yes by ꝑ faith I owe your crown I swer (sight Thought death therfore me thirlith with his (spere
And whan the kinge had sene vs euerychone
He let commaunde an Officer in hie
To take oure faith and shew vs one by one
The statutes of the courte ful besily
Anon the booke was leide before their iye
To rede and se whate thing we muste obserue
In Loues Courte, till that we dye ꝑ sterue.

And for that I was lettred their I red
The statutes hole of loues
Courte and hall
The firste statute that on the booke was syzed was to be true in thought and dedes al
vnto the king of loue the lorde ryall
And to the quene as faithful and as kinde
As I coude thinke w harte will and minde

The Seconde statute secretly to kepe
Councel of loue not blowing euery where Al that I know and let it sinke and flete
It may not sowne in euery wightes ere Sriling slaunder ay forbed and fere
And to my lady whiche I loue and serue
Be true and kinde her grace for to deserue

The Thirde statute was clerely write also Withouten chaunge to liue and die the same
None other loue to take for wel ne woo
For bynde delite for ernest nor for game
Without repent for laughing or for grame
To biden stil in ful perseueraunce
Al this was hole the kinges ordinaunce

The fourth statute to purchace euer to here
And stirem folke to loue and beten fire
On trewus auter here aboute and there
And preache to them of loue and hote desire
And tel how loue will quiten wel there here
This muste be kept and loth me to displease
If loue be wroth, passe for there by is an ease

The.v. statute not to be daungerous
If that a thought would reue me of my slepe
Nor of a sighte to be ouer squmous
And so verely this statute was to kepe
To turne and wallowe in my bed and wepe
When that my lady of her crueltie
Would from her harte exilin al pite

The.vi. statute it was for me to dise
Alone to wander boide of company
And on my ladis beautie for to muse
And to thinke no force to liue or die
And eft again to thinke the remedy
How to her grace I might anon attain
And tel my wo vnto my soueraine

The.vii. statute was to be pacient
Whether my lady ioyful were or wroth
For wordes glad or heauy diligent Wheder that she me helden iese or loth
And herupon I put was to mine othe
Her for to serue and lowely to obey
And shewing my chere ye.xx. sith a day

The.viii. statute to my remembraunce
Was to speake and pray my lady dere
With hourely labour and great entēdaunce
Me for to loue with al her harte entere
And me desire and make me ioyful chere
Right as she is surmounting euery faire
Of beautie wel and gentil debonaire

The.ix. statute with lettrs writ of golde
This was the sentence how that I and al
Shulde euer dred to be to ouer bolde
Her to displease and truly so I shal
But ben content for thing that may fale
And meekely take her chastisement, and yerde
And to offende her euer benaferde

The.x. statute was egally to discerne
Betwne the lady, and thine abilite
And thinke thy selfe arte neuer like to yerne
By right her mercy nor of equite
But of her grace, and womanly pitee
For though thy selfe be noble in thy strene
A thousande folde more nobilise thy quene

Thy

Thy liues lady, and thy soueraine
That hath thin harte all hole in gouernaūce
Thou maiest no wilde, it taken to disdaine
To put the humblie at her ordinaunce
And giue her free the prime of her Plesaunce
For libertie is thyng that women loke
And truely els the matter is a croke.

The.xi. statute thy signes for to knowe
With eye and finger and with smiles sotte
And lowe to couche and alwaie for to showe
For drede of spies, for to winken otte
But secretly to bryng vp a sigh a lotte
And eke beware of ouer mocke resorte
For that parauenture spitteth all thy sporte.

The.xii. statute remember to obserue
For all the paine thou hast for loue and wo
All is to lite her mercie to deserue
Thou muste thē thinke wher euer ỹ ride or go
And mortall woundes suffre thou also
All for her sake, and thinke it well be sette
Upon thy loue, for it maie not be bette.

The.xiii. statute, whilome is to thinke
What thing maie best thy ladie like & please
And in thine hartes botome let it sinke
Some thing deuise, and take for thyne ease
And sente it her, that maie her harte pease
Some harte or ryng, or letter or deuise
Or precious stone, but spare not for no price.

The.xiiii. statute eke thou shalt assaie
Formely to kepe the moste parte of thy life
Wiche that thy Ladie, in thine armes laie
And nightly drene, ỹ hast thy nightes hartes Swetly ī armes, straineyng her as blithe (wife
And when thou seest it is but fantasie
Be that thou lyng not ouer merely.

For to moche loye, hath ofte a wofull ende
It longeth eke, this statute for to holde
To deme thy ladie euermore thy frende
And thinke thy self in no wise a cocolde
In euery thyng she doeth, but as she should Construe the beste beleue no tales newe
For many a lye is tolde, that semth full true

But thinke that she is bounteous and faire
Could not be false imagine this algate
And thinke ỹ tōges wicked would her appaire
Sklanderyng her name, & worshipfull estate
And louers true to letten at debate
And though ỹ seest a faute, right at thine eye
Excuse it blithe, and glose it prettilie.

The.xb. statute, bie to sweare and stare
And counterfeite a lesyng hardely
To saue thy ladies honour euery whare
And put thy trist to fighte boldely
Saie she is good, vertuous, and gloristy Clere of entent, and harte thought and will
And argue not for reason, ne for skill.

Againe thy ladies pleasure ne entent
For loue will not be counterpleted in deede
Saie as she saieth, then shalt thou not be shēt
The Crowe is white, ye truly so I rede
And aye what thing ỹ she ther will for bede
Eschue all that, and giue her soueraintes
Her appetite folowe in all degre.

The.xbi. statute, kepe it if thou maie
Seuen sith at night, thy ladie for to please
And seuen at midnight, seuen at morow daie
And drinke a caudell, earely for thine ease
Doe this, and kepe thine hedde frō all disease
And winne the garlande, here of lōuers all
That euer came in court, or euer shall.

Full fewe thinke I, this statute hold & kepe
But truely this my reason giueth me sele
That some louers, should rather fall a slepe
Then take on hande, to please so oft and wele
There laie none othe, to this statute a dele
But kepe who might, as gaue him his corage
Now get this garlande, lustie folke of age

Now win who maie, ye lustie folke of youth
This garlande fresh, of floures red and white
Purple and blewe, and colours fell vncouth
And I shall croune hym, kyng of all delite
In all the courte, there was not to my sight
A louer true, that he ne was a drede
When he erpresse, hath heard the statute rede.

The.xbii. statute, when age approcheth on
And lust is laied, and all the fire is queint
As freshly then, thou shalt begin to sonne
And dote in loue, and all her image paint
In the remēbraunce, till thou begin to faint
And in the first season, thyne harte began
And her delire, though thou ne maie ne can.

Performe thy liuyng, actuell and lust
Regester this in thyne remembraunce
Eke when ỹ maist not kepe thy thing frō rust
It speake and talke, of pleasaunt daliaunce
For ỹ shall make thyne hart reioyce & daunce
And when ỹ maiest no more the game assaie
The statute bidde thee, praie for them ỹ maie.

The .xviii. statute, holy to commende
To please thy ladie, is that thou eschewe
With slutishenesse, thy self to offende
Be toilike, freshe, and sete with thinges newe
Courtlie with maner, this is all thy due
Gentill of porte, and louyng cleanlinesse
This is the thirde, that liketh thy maistresse.

And not to wander, liche a dulled Asse
Ragged and torne, disguised in a raie
Ribaude in speche, or out of measure passe
Thy bounde exceedyng, thinke on this waie
For women, but of tender hartes aie
And lightly set their pleasure in a place
When thei misthinke, thei lightly let it passe

The .xix. statute, meate and drinke forgete
Eche other daie, see that thou fast for loue
For in the courte, thei liue withouten mete
Saue soche as cometh from Venus al aboue
Thei take none hede in pain of great reproue
Of meate and drinke, for that is all in vaine
Onely thei liue, by light of their soueraine.

The .xx. statute, last of euerichone
Enrolle it in thyne hartes priuitee
To wring & waile, to turne, & sigh and grone
When that thy ladie, absent is from thee
And eke renewe the wordes that she Betwene you twain, hath said & al the chere
That thee hath made, thy liues lady dere.

And se thyne harte in quiete, ne in rest
Soiourne to tyme, thou seen thy Ladie este
But where she won, by South, or east or west
With all thy force, now se it be not leste
Be diligent, till tyme thy life be reste
In that thou maiest, thy ladie for to see
This statute was of old antiquitee.

An officer of high auctoritee
Cleped Rigour, made vs swere anone
He was corrupte with parcialitee
Fauour, prayer, ne gold that clerely shone
Ye shall (quod he) now sweren here echone
Yong and old, to kepe in that thei maie
The statutes truely, all after this daie.

O God thought I, hard is to make this othe
But to my power, shall I them observe
In all this worlde, nas matter halfe so lothe
To sweare for all, for though my body sterue
I haue no might, the hole to reserue
But herken now, the cace how it befell
After my othe was made, the trothe to tell.

I tourned leaues, looking on this booke
Where other statutes were of women shene
And right forth with rigour, on me gan looke
Full angerly, and saied vnto the quene
I traitour was, and charged me let been There maie no man (quod he) the statute knowe
That long to woman, hie degree ne lowe.

In secrete wise, thei kepten been full close
Thei soune echone, to libertie my frende
Pleasaunt thei be, and to their own purpose
There wote no wight of the, but God & kende
Ne naught shal witte, vnto the worldes ende
The quene hath yeue me charge, i pain to die
Neuer to rede ne seen them with myne ye.

For men shall not so nere of counsaill been
With womanhode, ne known of her guise
Ne what thei think, ne of their wit thengine
I me repose to Salomon the wise
And mightie Sampson, which begiled thrise
With Dalida was, he wot that in a throwe
There maie no man statute of women knowe

For it peraventure maie right so be fall
That thei be bounde be nature to deceiue
And spinne and wepe, and sugre shrew on gal
The harte of man, to rauishe and to reiue
And whet their tonge, as sharpe as swerde or
It maiebe tide, this is their ordinaūce gleue
So must thei lowlie doen their obseruaunce.

And kepe the statute, yeuen them of kinde
Of soche as loue hath yeue hem in their life
Me maie not wete, why turneth euery wind
Nor waren wise, nor been inquisitife
To knowe secrete of maide, widowe, or wife
For thei their statutes, haue to them reserued
And neuer man, to knowe the hath deserued.

Now dresse you forth, & God of loue you guide (quod Rigour) then and seke the temple bright
Of Cithera, Goddes here beside Beseche her by influence and might
Of all her vertue, you to teache a right
How for to serue your ladies, and to please
Ye that been sped, and set your harte in ease.

And ye that been vnpurueied praier eke
Comfort you sone, with grace and destinie
That ye maie set your hart, there ye maie like
In soche a place, that it to loue maie be Honour and worship and felicitie
To you for aie, now goeth by one assent
Graunt mercie sir (quod we) and forth we went.

Deuoutly

Deuoutly soft and easie pace to se
Uenus the Goddes, Image all of golde
And there we found a thousand on their kne
Some freshe and faire, some dedly to beholde
In sondrie Mantils new, and some wer olde
Some painted were, with flames red as fire
Outward to shewe, their inward hote desire.

With dolefull chere, full sele in their cõplaint
Cried Ladie Uenus, rewe vpon our sore
Receiue our billes, with teares all be dreint
We maie not wepe, there is no more in store
But wo and pain, vs fretteth more and more
Thou blissedful Planet, louers sterre so shene Haue routh on vs, that sigh and careful been

And punishe Ladie, greuously we praie
The false vntrue, with counterfeite plesaūce
That made their othe, be true to liue or deie
With chere allured, and with countenaunce
And falsly now thei sooten loues daunce
Barain of routh, vntrue of that thei saied
Now that their lust, and pleasure is alaied.

Yet efte againe a thousande milion
Reioysyng loue, leadyng their life in blisse
Thei saied Uenus, redresse of all diuision Goddes eternell, thy name I hired is
By louers bonde is knit, all thing i wis
Beast vnto beast, the yearth to water wanne
Birde vnto birde, and woman vnto man.

This is the like of ioye, that we been in Resemblyng life, of heauenly paradise
Loue is eriler aie, of vice and sinne
Loue maketh hartes, lustie to deuise
Honour and grace, haue thei in euery wise
That been to loues lawe obedient Loue maketh folke, benigne and diligent

Aie sterying them, to drede vice and shame
In their degree, it maketh them honourable And swete it is, of loue beare the name
So that his loue be faithfull, true and stable
Loue prouoketh hym, to semen amiable
Loue hath no saute, there it is exercised
But sole with thē, that haue all loue dispised

Honour to the celestiall and clere
Goddes of Loue, and to thy celicitude
That yeuest vs light, so ferre doune from thy Perlyng our hartes, vnto thy pulcritude (sphere
Comparison none of similitude
Maie to thy grace be made in no degree
That hast vs set with Loue in vnitie.

Greate cause haue we, to praise thy name & þ
For through thee, we liue in ioye and blisse
Blessed be thou, moste soueraine to see
Thy holy courte of gladnesse, maie not misse
A thousande sith, we maie reioyce in this
That we been thine, with harte and all I fere
Enflamed with thy grace, and heauenly fere.

Musyng of tho, that spaken in this wise
I me bethought, in my remembraunce
Myne orison right godlie to deuise
And pleasauntly, with hartes obeisaunce
Beseche thee Goddes, boiden my greuaunce
For I loued ehe, saufe that I wist not where Yet doune I set, and saied as ye shall here.

Fairest of all, that euer were or dee
Licour and light, to pensife creature
Myne hole affiaunce, and my ladie free
My Goddes bright, my fortune and my bre
I yeue and yelde my harte, to thee full sure Humbly beseching, ladie of thy grace
Me to bestowe, in some blessed place.

And here I bowe me, faithfull, true and kind
Without offence of mutabilitie
Humbly to serue, while I haue wit and mind
Myne hole affiaunce, and my ladie free
In thilke place, there ye me signe to be
And sith this thyng, of newe is yeue me aie
To loue and serue, and nedely must I obeie.

Be merciable with thy fire of grace
And fire myne harte, there beautie is & routh
For hote I loue, determine in no place
Sauke onely this, be God and by my trouth
Troubled I was, with slomber, slepe & slouth
This other night, and in a vision
I see a woman romen vp and doune.

Of meane stature, and semely to beholde
Lustie and freshe, demure of countenaunce
Yong and well shap, with heer shone as golde
With yen as cristall, serced with pleasaunce
And she gan stirre mine harte alite to daunce
But sodainly she banishe gan right there
Thus I maie saie, I loue & wote not where.

For what she is, ne her dwellyng I not
And yet I sele, that loue distreineth me Might ichc her knowe, þ would I faine God (wot
Serue and obeye, with all benignitie
And if that other be my destinie
So that no wise, I shall her neuer se
Then graunt me her, that best maie liken me

With

With glad reioyce to liue in perfite hele
Wellside of wrathe, repent or variaunce
And able me to doe, that maie be wele
Unto my ladie, with hartes hie pleasaunce
And mightie goddes, through thy puruiaunce
My wit my thought, my lust & loue so guide
That to thine honour, I maie me prouide.

To set mine hart, in place there I maie lithe
And gladly serue, with all affeccion
Greate is the pain, whiche at mine hart doth Till I be sped by thyne eleccion (kithe
Helpe Ladie Goddes, that possession
I might of her haue, that in all my life
I clepen shall my quene, and hartes wife.

And in the courte of Loue, to dwell for aie
My will it is, and doen thee Sacrifice
Daily with Diane, ehe for to fight and fraie
And holden werre, as might will me suffice
That Goddes chaste, I kepen in no wise
To serue, a figge for all her chastite
Her lawe is for Religiousite.

And thus gan finishe praier, laude, & preice
Whiche that I youe to Uenus on my knee
And in myne harte, to ponder and to peice
I gaue a none her Image freshe beautie
Heile to that figure swete, and heile to thee
Cupide (q I) and rose, and yede my weie
And in the temple, as I yede I seie

A shrine surmountyng, all in stones riche
Of whiche the forze, was pleasaunce to mine
With Diamonde or Saphire, neuer liche (iye
I haue none seen, ne wrought so wonderlie
So when I met with Philobone in hie
I gan demaunde, who is this sepulture
For lothe (q she) a tender creature.

Is shrined there, and Pitie is her name
She sawe an Egle, wreke hym on a flie
And plucke his wing, & eke him in his game
And tender harte of that, hath made her die
Eke she would wepe & mourne, right pitously
To seen a louer suffre greate destresse
In all the courte nas none, that as I gesse.

That coud a louer haue so well auasle
Ne of his wo, the torment or the rage
Alken for he was sure withouten faile
That of his grief, she coud the heate aswage
In stede of Pitie, spedeth hote corage
The matters all of courte, now she is dedde
I me report in this to womanhedde

For weile and wepe, and crie, & speake, & praie
Women would not haue pitie on thy plaint
Ne by that mean, to eake thine harte conuaie
But thee receiuen, for their owne talent
And sate that pitie, causeth thee in content
Of reueth to take, thy seruice and thy paine
In that thou maiest, to please thy soueraine.

But this is counsaill, kepe it secretly
(q she) I nolde for all the worlde about
The quene of Loue it wist, and witte ye why
For if by me, this matter springen out
In courte no lenger should I out of doubt
Dwellen, but shame in all my life endry
Now kepe it close, q she) this hardely.

Well, all is well, now shall ye seen the saied
The fairest ladie vnder Sonne that is Come on with me, demeane you lich a maide
With shamefast drede, for ye shall speke I wis
With her that is the mirrour ioye and blisse
But somwhat straunge, & sad of her demeane
She is, beware your countenaunce be seen.

Nor ouer light, ne recheleſſe, ne to bolde
Ne malapert, ne rennyng with your tong
For she will you, obeisen and beholde
And you demaunde, why ye wer hens so long
Out of this courte, withouten resort emong
In Rosiall her name is hote a right
Whose harte is yet, yeuen to no wight.

And ye also been, as I vnderstonde
With loue but light, auaunced by your worde
Might ye by hap, your fredome maken bond
And fall in grace with her, and wele accorde
Well might ye thanke, the God of Loue & lord
For she that ye sawe, in your dreame appere
To loue soche one, what are thei then ỹ nere.

Yet wote ye what, as my remembraunce
Me reueth now, ye saine where that ye saie
That ye with loue, had neuer acquaintaunce
Saue in your dreame, right late this other daie
Why yes parde, my life that durst I laie
That ye were caught vpon an heath, when I
Sawe you complain, and sigh full pitously.

Within an herber, and a gardein faire
Where flowers growe, and herbes vertuous
Of whiche the sauour swete was & the heire
There were your self, full hote and amorous
I wis ye been to nice and daungerous
I would ye now repent, and loue some newe
Naie by my trothe, I saied I neuer knewe.

The

The goodly wight, whose I shal be for ave
Guide me the lorde, that loue hath made a me
But forthe we went, into a chambre gaie
There was Roliall, womanly to se
Whose streames, fotell persyng of her eye
Mine hart gan thrill, for beautie in ꝑ stounde
Alas (ꝙ I) who hath me yeue this wounde.

And then I drede to speake till at the laste
I grete thee lapie, reuerently and wele
When that my sigh, was gone and ouer paste
And doune on knees, full humbly gan I knele
Beseechyng her, my seruent wo to hele
For there I tooke full purpose in my mynde
Unto her grace, my painfull harte to bynde.

For if I shall all fully her discriue
Her hed as rounde, by compasse of nature
Her heere as golde, she passed all on liue
And Lillie forehed had this creature
With liueliche browes, flawe of colour pure
Betwene ꝑ which, was meane disseueraunce
From euery browe, to shewe a distaunce.

Her nose directed streight, and euen as line,
With forme and shape, thereto conuenient
In which ꝑ gods milke white path doth shine
And eke her eyen been bright and orient
As is the Smaragde, vnto my iudgement
Or yet these sterres heauenly small & bright
Her visage is of louely rede and white

Her mouthe is short, & shitte in little space
Flamyng somedele, not ouer redde I meane
With pregnaunt lips, & thicke to kisse percace
For lippes thinne not fat, but euer lene
They serue of naught, they bee not worth a
For if the balle been full, there is delite (beane
Maximian truely thus doeth he write,

But to my purpose, I saie white as snowe
Been all her tethe, and in order thei stonde
Of one stature, and eke her breth I trowe
Surmounteth all odours, that euer I founde
In sweteneſſe, and her body, face and honde
Been sharply slender, so that from the hedde
Unto the foote, all is but womanhedde.

I holde my peace, of other thinges hidde
Here shal my soule, and not my tong bewraie
But how she was arraied, if ye me bidde
That shall I well discouer you and saie
A bende of golde and silke, full freshe and gaie
With her intresse, broudered full wele
Right smothly kept, and shinyng euery dele.

About her neche, a flower of freshe beautie
With Rubies set, that iustie were to sene
And she in goune, was light and somer wise
Shapen full wele, the colour was of grene
With aureat sent about her sides clene
With diuers stones, precious and riche
Thy was she raied, yet sawe I neuer her liche

For if that Ioue had this ladie seine
Tho Calixto ne Alcenia
Thei neuer hadden in his armes leine
Ne he had loued the faire Europa
Ye ne yet Dane ne Antiopa
For all their beutie stoode in rofiall
She semed lich a thyng celestiall

In bountie, fauour, porte and similitude
Pleasaunt of figure, mirrour of delite
Gracious to seen, and roote of all gentilneſſe
With angell visage, lustie redde and white
There was not lack, sauſe daunger had alite
This goodly freshe, in rule and gouernaunce
And somdele straunge, she was for her pleasaunce

And truly sone, I toke my leaue and went When she had me enquired, what I was
For more and more, impressen gan the dent
Of loues darte, while I beheilde her face
And eke againe I come, to seken grace
And by I put my bill, with sentence clere
That followeth after, rede and ye shall here.

O ye freshe, of beautie the roote
That nature hath formed so wele and made
Princes and quene, and ye that maie do boote
Of all my langoure, with your wordes glad Ye wounded me, ye made me wo bestad
Of grace redresse my mortall giue as ye
Of all my harte the very cauſer be.

Now am I caught, and vnware sodainly
With persaunt streames, of your eye clere
Subiecte to been, and seruen you meheiy
And all your man, I wis my ladie dere
Abidyng grace, of whiche I you require
That mercileſſe, ye cause me not to sterue
But guerdon me, liche as I maie deserue

For by my trothe, the daies of my breath
I am and will be your, in will and harte
Pacient and meke, for you to suffer death
If it require now, rue vpon my smarte
And this I swere, I neuer shall out starte
From loues courte, for none aduerſitie
So ye would rue, on my distreſſe and me.

My delenie me late and houre I bille
That haue me set to been obedient Onely to you the floure of all I wis
I truft to Uenus neuer to repent
For euer redy glad and diligent
Ye fhall me finde in feruice to your grace
Till death my life out of my bodie rafe.

Humble vnto your excellence fo digne
Enforcyng aye my wittes and delite
To ferue & pleafe with glad harte & benigne
And been as Troilus Troies knight
Or Antonie for Cleopatre bright
And neuer you me thinkes, to renay
Thus fhall I kepe vnto myne endyng day.

Enprint my fpeache in your memoriall
Sadly my princes falue of all my fore
And thinke that for I would becomen thrall
And been your owne, as I haue fated before
Ye muffe of pitie cherifhe more and more
Your man and tender after his deferte
And giue hym corage for to been experte.

For where ỹ one hath fet his harte on fire
And findeth neither refute ne pleafaunce
Ne worde of cõfort, death will quite his hire
Alas that there is none allegaunce
Of all their wo, alas the greate greuaunce
To loue vnloued, but ye my ladie dere
In other wife maie gouerne this matere.

Truly gramercie frende of your good will
And of your proler in your humble wife
But for your feruice, take and kepe it ftill
And wher ye faie I ought you well to cherifh
And of your griefe the remedie deuife
I knowe not why I nam acquainted well
With you ne wote not fothly where ye dwell

In art of loue and wit and fonges make
That maie be fong in honour of the kyng
And quene of Loue, and then I vndertake
Ye that is fadde, fhall then full merry fyng
And daungerous, not been in euery thyng
Befeche I you, but feen my will and rede
And let your anfwere put me out of drede

What is your name, reherfe it here I praie
Of whens and where, of what condicion
That ye been of, let fee come of and faie
Faine would I knowe your difpocion
Ye haue put vpon your old entencion
But whate ye meane, to ferue me I ne wote
Sauffe that ye faie, ye loue me wounder hote

My name alas, my harte why
Philogenet I cald am ferre and nere
Of Cãbrige clerke, ỹ neuer thinke to chaunge
Fro you ỹ with your heauenly ftremes clere
Rauifhe myne harte and ghoft, and all in fere
This is the firft I write my bill for grace
Me thinke I fee, fome mercie in your face.

And whate I mene, by gods ỹ al hath wrouȝt
My bille that maketh finall mencion
That ye been ladie in myne inward thought
Of all myne harte withouten offencion
That I beſte loue, and haue fith I begon
To drawe to courte, fo then what miȝt I faie
I yelde me here, vnto your nobleye.

And if that I offende or wilfully
Be pompe of harte, your precept difobaie
Or doen again your wille vnskilfully
Or greuen you for earneſt or for plaie
Correcte ye me right harply then I praie
As it is feen vnto your womanhede
And rewe on me, or els I nam but dede.

Maie God forbede to fette you fo with grace
And for a worde of fugred eloquence
To haue compaffion in fo little fpace
Then were it tyme that fome of vs wer hens
Ye fhall not finde in me foche infolence
Aye what is this, maie ye not fuffre light
How maie ye loofhe vpon the candell light.

That clere is and hotter then myne ye
And yet ye faied the beames perfe and frete
How fhall ye then the candell light endȝie
For well wotte ye that hath the harper bete
And there ye bidde me, you correct and bete
If ye offende, naie that maie not be doen
There come but few, that fpeden here fo fone

Withdrawe your ye, withdrawe for pitee the Hurte not your felf, through foly with a loke
I would be forry, fo to make you ficke
A woman fhould beware the whom fhe toke
Ye beth a clerke go ferchen my boke
If any women been fo light to winne
Naie abide a while, tho ye were all my binne.

So fone ye maie not win myne hart in truth
The guife of court will feen your ftedfaftneffe
And as you doen to haue vpon you reuth
Your owne deferte, and fo wly gentilneffe
That will reward you, fope for beauineffe
And tho ye waren pale, and grene and dede
Ye moffe it vfe, a while withouten drede.

And

And it accept and grutchen in no wise
But where as ye me hastely desire
To bene to loue me thinke ye be not wise
Cease of youre language cease I you require
For he that hath this.xx.yere bene here
May not optaine, than marualle I that ye
Be now so bold of loue to trete with me

A mercy hart my lady and my loue
My right wise princesse and my lyues guide
Nowe may I plein to venus al aboue
That re wthies ye may gise this wonder wide what haue I done why may it not betide
That for my trouthe I may receiued be Alas than your daūger and your crueltie

In wofull houre I gote was welawey
In wofull hour fostered and I fedde
In wofull hour I borne that I ne may
My supplicacion sweetely haue I spedde
The frosty graue and cold mulle be my bedde
Withoute ye list your grace and mercy shewe
Death with his axe so faste on me doth hewe

So great disease and in so litel while
So litel ioy that felte I neuer yet
And at my wo fortune ginneth to smyle
That neuer arst I felte so harde a fitte
Confounded ben my spirites and my witte
Til that my lady take me to her cure
Whiche I loue beste of erthely creature

But that I lithe that may I not come by
Of that I plain that haue I habondaunce
Sorowe and thought they fil me wōder nye
Me is withhold that might be my pleasaunce yet turne again my worthy suffisaunce
O lady bright and saufe your faithful true
And for I die yet ones vpon me rewe with that I fell in sounde and bede as stone with colour flaine and wanne as asshe pale

And by the hande she caught me by anon
Arise anon (q she) what haue ye dronken dwale why slepen ye it is no nitertale
Now mercy I wete (q I) I wis affraied what thig (q she) hath made you so dismaied

Now wote I wel that ye a louer be your hew is witnesse in this thing she said yf ye were secret might I knowe (q she)
Curteise and kinde all this shuld be aleide
And now myne harte al that I haue misseid
I shal amend and set your harte in ease
That worde it is (q I) that doth me please

But this I charge that ye the stentes kepe
And breke them not for sloth nor ignorāce with that she gan to smile and laughen depe
I wis (q I) I wil do your pleasaunce
The.xvi. statute doth me great greuaunce
But ye must that release or modifie
I graunte (q she) and so I wil truly

And softely than her coloure gan appeire
As rose so red throughout her visage al wherfore me thinke that it is according here
That she of right be cleped rosial
Thus haue I wonne wt wordes great & smal
Some goodly worde of her that I loue best
And trust she shall yet sette mine harte in rest

Othon she said to Philobone and take This man with you and lede him al aboute within the courte & shewe him for my sake what louers dwel within and al ye route
Of officers him shewe, for he is oute of doute
I straunger yet come on (q Philobone)
Philogenet with me nowe must ye gon

And stalking forte with easy pace I sawe
Aboute the king stonden enuiron
Attendaunce Diligence and their felow
Fortherer Asperaunce and many one
Died to offende there stode and not alone
For there was she the cruel aduersarye
The louers foo that cleped is Displesure

Whiche vnto me spake angrely and felle
And said my lady me discreue ne shall Crowell thou (q she) that al that she did tell
Is true nay nay but vnder hony gal
Thy birth and his be not thing egal
Caste of thine harte, for all her wordes white
For good faith she loueth the but alite

And eke remembre thine habilite
May not cōpare with her this wel thou wot ye than came Hope and said my frende let be Beleue him not Dispaire he ginneth dote
Alas (q I) here is both cold and hote
The tone me biddeth loue the toder nay
Thus wote I not what me is best to say

But wel wote I my lady graunted me
Truly to be my woundes remedy
Her gentilnesse may not infected be with doblenesse thus truste I til I die

So call I boide dispaires company
And taken hope to councel and to frende yea kepe that wel (q Philobone) in minde

And there beside within a bay windowe
Stod one in grene ful large of breades length
His beard as black as fethers of the Crowe
His name was lust of woūder mights strēgth
And with Delite to argue there he thinkth
For this was al his opinion
That loue was sinne and so he hath begonne

To reason false and ledge auctorite
Nay (q delite) loue is a vertue clere
And from the soule his progresse holdeth he Blinde apitite of lyste doth often stere
And that is sinne for reason lacketh there
For thou thinke thy neighbours wife do win
Yet thinke it wel that loue may not be sinne

For God and seint they loue right verely
Voide of al synne and vile, this know I well
Affeccion of flesche is sinne truly
But verray loue is vertue as I fele
For verray loue maye not thy frelll desire
For lowe is loue withouten sinne (achele Nowe sint (q Luke) thou speke not worth a pinne

And there I lefte them in their arguing
Roming ferther in the castel wide
And in a corner Lier stode talking
Of lelings fast with Flatery there beside
He said thou woman wear attire of pride
And men were founde of nature barlaunte
And coulde be false & shewen beaw sēblaunt

Than flatery bespake and said swis
Se so the goth on patens faire and fete
It doth right well what pryety man is this
That rometh here now truly drink ne mete
Nede I not haue mine harte for ioy doth bete
Him to beholde so is he goodly freshe
It semeth for loue his harte is tender neshe

This is the courte of lusty folke and glad
And welbecometh their abite and arraye
O why be som so sory and so sadde
Complaining thus in blak and white & gray
Freres they ben and Monkes in good fay
Alas for rouwth great dole it is to sene
To se them thus bewaile and sory bene

Se how they crie & wring their handes whit
For they so sone went to religion
And eke the Nonnes wt vail & wimple plight
Their thought that they ben in confusion
Alas they sain we fain perfection
In clothes wide and lache our libertie
But al the sinne mote on our frendes be

For venus wote we wold as faine as ye
That bene attired here and weldesene
Delyren man and loue in our degree
Ferme and faithful right as wold the quene
Oure frendes wicke in tender youth & grene Fenst our will made vs religious
That is the cause we mourne & waslen thus

Than said the Monke and Freres in the tide
Wel may we curse our Abbes and our place
Our statutes sharpe to sing in copes wide
Chastely to kepe vs oute of loues grace
And neuer to fele comforte ne solace yet suffre we the hete of loues fire
And after than other happly we desire

O Fortune courled why nowe and wherfore
Hast thou they said berafte vs libartie
Sithe nature yaue vs instrument in store
And appetide to loue and louers be
Why mot we suffer soche aduerslite
Diane to serue and venus to refuse
Ful often sythe this matiers doth vs muse

We serue and honour sore ayenste our will
Of chastite the goddes and the quene
Vs leefer were with venus biden stil
And haue reward for loue and soget bene
Vnto these women courtely freshe and shene
Fortune we curse thy wheele of barlaunce
Ther we were wel thou reuist our plelaunce

Thus leaue I them wt voice of plait and care
In raging wo criyng ful petiously
And as I yede ful naked and ful bare
Some I beholde loking dispiteously
On pouerte that dedly cast their iye
And welaway they cried and were not faine
For they ne might their glad delire attaine

For lacke of richesse worldly and of gold
They banne and curse and wepe & sain alas
That pouerte hath vs hent that whilom stod
In hartes eas and fre and in good case
But nowe we dare not shewn for self in place
Ne vs emboldē to dwel in compan[illegible]
There as our hart wold loue right faithfully

And yet againewarde shriked euery nonne
The prange of loue so straineth theim to crie
Now

Now wo the time (q they) that we be boun
This hateful ordenaile wil doen vs die.
We sigh and sobbe and bleden inwardly
Fretting our selfe wthought & hard complaie
That nye for loue we waxen wode and faint

And as I stode beholding here and there
I was ware of a sorte ful languisshing
Sauage and wilde of loking and of chere
Their mantelles and their clothes ey tering
And ofte they were of nature complaining
For they their members lacked fote and hand
With vilage wry and blinde I vnderstand

They lacked shap and beautie to preseure
Them self in loue and said that god and kind
Hath forged them to worshippen the sterre
Uenus the bright and leften al behinde
His other werkes clene and oute of minde
For other haue their full shappe and beautie
And we (q they) ben in deformite

And nye to them there was a company
That haue the suffers waried and misiaide
I meane the thre of fatall destine
That be our wordes and sone abraide
Oute gan they crie as they had ben affraied
We curse (q they) that euer hath nature
Iformed vs this woful life to endure

And there he was contrite and gan repent
Confessing hole the wounde that Cithere
Hath with the darte of hote desire him sent
And howe that he to loue muste subiect be Than held he al his shornes vanite
And said that louers lede abilled ful life
Yong mē and olde & wido we maide and wife

Berene my goddesse (q he) thy might
My shornes al and shoftes that I haue
No power for to macken any wight
That in thy seruice dwel for I ded raue
This knowe I wel right now so god me saue
And I shalbe the chief post of thy faith
And loue vphold the reuers who so faith

Dissemble stode not ferre frō him in trouth
With party mantil party hode and hose
And said he had vpon his lady routh
And thus he wound him in and gan to glose
Of his entent ful double I suppose
And al the worlde he said he loued it wele
But ay me thought he loued her nere adele

The shamefastenesse was there as I toke hede
That blasshed rede and darst nat ben a knowe
She louer was for therof had shr drede
She stode and hing her vilage downe alowe
But sothe a sight it was to sene I trowe
And of these roses rody on their stalke
Their could no wight her spr to spekē or talke

In loues harte so gan she to abasshe
He durst not vtter al her previte
Many a stripe and many a greuoule lasshe
She gauen to them that wolden louers be
And hindered sore the simple cominaltie
That in no wise durst grace and mercie craue
For were not she they nede but alle and haue

Where yt they now aprochin for to speke
Than shamefastnesse returneth them again
They thinke if they our secrets counsel breke
Our ladies wil haue scorne on vs certein
And auenture thinken greate disdain
Thus shamefastnesse may bringen in dispeire
When she is dede the toder will be heire

Comforth a maunter now I ring thy Bel
I spied him sone to God I make a vowe
He loked black as sendes doth in hell
The firste (q he) that euer did vowe Within a worde he come I wotte not how
So that in armes was my lady fre
And so hath ben a thousand mo than she

In England Bretain Spain and Picardie
Artois and Fraūce and vpin hie Holande
In Burgoine Naples and Italye
Nauerne and Grece, and vp in Bethen lond
Was neuer woman yet that wolde withstōd
To ben at commaundement whan I wolde
I lacked neither siluer coigne ne gold

And there I met with this estate and that
And here I broched her and here I trowe Lo there goeth one of myne & wotte ye what Yon freshe attired haue I leide ful lowe
And sothe one yonder ese right wel I knowe
I kepte the statute whan we lay ifere
And yet yon same hath made me right goode (there

Thus hath a maunter blowen euery where Al that he knoweth and more a thousand fold
His auncestrie of kinne was to lier
For firste he maketh promise for to hold
His ladis councel and it not vnfolde
Wherfore the secrete when he dothe vnwitte
Than lieth he that al the worlde maye witte

For falling so his promise and beheste
I wounder sore he hath soche fantasie
He lacheth witte I trowe or is a beste
That can no bette him selfe with reason guy
Be mine aduice lone shalbe contrarie
To his auaile and him ehe dishonoure
So that in courte he shall no more soioure

Take hede (q she) this litil Philodone
Where enuie rocketh in the cornor yonde
And sitteth dirke and ye shall se anone
His lene bodie fading face and honde
Him selfe he fretteth as I vnderstonde
Witnesse of Ouide Methamorphosose
The louers to be is I wil not glose

For where alouer thinketh him promote Enuie wil grutche repining at his wele
It swelleth sore aboute his hartes rote
That in no wise he canne not liue in hele
And if the faithful to his lady stele
Enuie will noise and ringe it rounde aboute
And sey moch worse thã done is out of doute

And prenie thought reioysing of him selfe
Stode not ferre thens in abite merueilous
Pon is thought some spyte or some elfe
His sotil Image is so curious
How is (q I) that he is shaded thus
With yonder cloth I not of whate coloure
And nere I went and gan to lere and pore

And trained him question ful harde
Whate is (q I) the thing thou loueste beste
Or what is bote vnto thy paines harde
We thinke thou liueste here in great vnrest
Thou wandrest aye from south to est & west
And est to north as ferre as I canne see
There is no place in Court may holden thee

Whom soloweste thou wher is thy hart iset
But my demaunde aloile I the require We thought (q he) no creature may let Nowe to ben here and where as I desire
For where as absence hath done out the fire
My mery thought it kindeleth yet againe
That bodely me thinke with my soueraine

I stand and speake & laugh and kisse & halse
So that my thought comforteth me ful soft
I think god wote though al þ world be falle
I wil be true I thinke also howe sofe
My lady is in speche and this on loft
Bringeth mine harte from ioy and gladnesse
This preney thought alaieth mine heuinesse

And whate I thinke or where to be no man
In al this erthe can tel I wis but I
And ehe there nis no swalow swift ne swan
So wight of wing ne halse so yerne can flie
For I canne ben and that right sodenly
In heuen in hell in Paradise and here
And with my lady whan I wil desire

I am of counsel ferre and wide I wote
With lorde and lady and their preuite
I wotte it al, and be it hoote or colde
They shall not speake wouten licence of me
I myne in soche as seasonable be
For sirste the thing is thought within þ hart
Er any worde oute from the mouth astarte

And w that word thought bad fare wel & yede
Ehe furthe went I to sene the courtes guise
And at the doore came in so God me spede
Twenty courteours of age and of assise
Liche high and brode and as I me aduise
The golden loue and leden loue they hight
The tone was sad the toder glad and light yes draw your hart w all your force & might

To lustinesse and bene as ye haue seid
And thinke that I no drope of fauour hight
Ne neuer had vnto your desire obeide
Til sodenly me thought me was afraied
To sene you ware so dede of countenaunce
And pite bade me done you some plesaunce

Oute of her shrine she rose from death to liue
And in mine eare ful priuely she spake
Doth not your seruaũt hens away to drive
Rosial (q she) and than mine harte brake
For tenderiche & where I sounde moch lacke
In your persone and I me bethought
And saide this is the man myne harte hath (sought

Gramercy Pite might I not suffice
To yeue the laude vnto thy shrine of golde
God wotte I wold for sith that she did rise
From death to liue for me I am beholde
To thanken you a thousande tymes tolde
And ehe my lady Rosial the shene
Whiche hath in cõforte set mine harte i wene

And here I make myne protestacion
And depely swere as mine power to bene
Faithful deuoide of variacion
And here forbere in anger or in tene
And seruiceable to my worldes quene
With al my reason and intelligence
To done her honour high and reuerence

I had

I had not spoke so sone the worde but the
My souerain did thanke me hartely
And said abide ye shal dwelle still with me
Till season come of May forthan truly
The king of loue and al his company
Shall holde his feste ful ryally and welle
And there I bode til that the season felle

¶ Here beginneth

the Prologue, of the Storie of Thebes.

When bright Phebus, passed was the Ram
Wode of April, and into the Bulle cam
And Saturne olde, with his frostie face
In Virgine, taken had his place
Malencolike, and slough of mocion
And was also, in thoppolicion
Of Lucina the Moone, moiste and pale
That many shoure, fro heauen made auaile
When Iuroza, was in the mozowe redde
And Jupiter, in the Crabbes hedde
Hath take his paleis, and his mansion
The lustie tyme, and soly freshe season
When that Floza, the noble mightie quene
The soile hath clad, in newe tender grene
With her floures, crastely meint
Braunche & bough, with red & white depeint
Fletyng the Baume, on hilles and on dales
The tyme in soth, when Canterburie tales
Complet and tolde, at many sondzie stage
Of estates, in the pilgrimage
Eueriche man, like to his degree
Some of disporte, some of moralitee
Some of knightbode, lotte and gentillesse
And some also, of parfite holinesse
And some also, in soth, of ribaudzie
To make laughter, in the companie
Eche admitted, for none would other greue
Like as the Coke, the Miller and the Reue Aquite hem self, shortly to conclude Boistoustie in her termes rude
When thei hadden, well dronken of the bolle
And eke also, with his pilled nolle
The Pardoner, beerdles all his chin
Glasie yes, and face of Cherubin
Tellyng a tale, to anger with the frere
As openly, the storie can you lere
Worde by worde, with euery circumstance
Echone iwzite, and put in remembzance
By hym that was, if I shall not faine
Floure of Poetes, throughout all Bretaine
Whiche sothly had, moste of excellence
In Rhetozike, and in eloquence
Rede his makyng, who liste the trouthe finde
Whiche neuer shall, appallen in my minde
But al waie freshe, been in myne memozie
To whom be youe, prise, honour and glozie
Of well seyng, first in our language
Chief Registrer, in this pilgrimage
All that was tolde, forzetyng nought at all
Feined tales, nor thing historiall
With many Prouerbes, diuers and vncouthe
By rehearsaile, of his sugred mouthe
Of eche thyng, keppyng in substaunce
The sentence hole, without variaunce
Uoidyng the chaffe, sothly for to saine
Enluminyng, the true piked greine
By crastie writyng, of his sawes swete
Fro the tyme, that thei did mete
First the pilgrimes, sothly euerichone
At Tabarde, assembled one by one
And fro Southwerke, sothly for to seye
To Canterburie, ridyng on her weye Tellyng a tale, as I rehearse can Lich as the holle, assigned euery man
None so hardie, his biddyng disobeie
And this while, that the pilgrimes leie
At Canterburie, well lodged one and all
I not in sothe, what I maie it call
Hap or Fortune, in conclusion
That me befill, to entre into the toun
The holy sainct plainly to bilite
After my sickenesse, bowes to acquite
In a Cope of blacke, and not of grene
On a palfray, slender, long and lene
With rustie bzidell, made not for the sale
My man tolorne, with a bolde male
That of Fortune, tooke myne Inne anone
Where the pilgrimes, wer lodged euerichone
The same tyme, her gouernour the hoste
Stondyng in halle, full of winde and boste
Lich to a man, wonders sterne and fers
Which spake to me, and saied anon dan Pers
Dan Dominike, dan Godfray or Clement
Ye be welcome, newly into Kent
Though your bzidle, haue nother boos ne bel Beseechyng you, that ye will tell
First of your name, and what countre
Without more, shortly that ye be
That loke so pale, all deuoide of blood
Upon your hedde, a wonder threedbare hood
Well arraied, for to ride late
I answered, myne name was Lidgate,
Monke of Burie, nie fiftie yere of age
Come to this toune, to doe my pilgrimage
As I haue hight, I haue thereof no shame
Dan Jhon (q he) well brouke ye your name
Though ye be sole, bith right glad and light
Praiyng you to Supe, with vs this night
And ye shall haue made, at your deuis

The Prologue.

I greate puddyng, or a rounde hagis
A tranche moile, a tause or a froise
To been a Monke, slender is your coise
Ye haue been licke, I dare myne hed assure
Or lette lede, in a saint pasture
Lest vp your hedde, be glad take no sorowe
And ye should home ride, with vs to morowe
I saie when ye rested haue your fill
After soper, slepe will doen none ill
Wrap well your hedde, clothes round aboute
Strong nottie ale, will make you to route
Take a pilowe, that ye lye not lowe
If nede be, spare not to blowe
To holde winde, be myne oppinion
Will engendre, Colles passion
And make men to greuen on her roppes
When thei haue filled, her mawes & her crops
But toward night, eate some Fenell rede
Annis, Comin, or Coriander sede
And like as I power haue and might
I charge you, rise not at midnight
Though it so be, the Moone shine clere
I will my self, be your Orologere
To morowe early, when I se my tyme
For we will sorthe, parcell aforе prime Accompanie parde, shall doe you good
What looke vp Monke, for by Cockes blood
Thou shalt be merie, who so that say naie
For to morowe, anon as it is daie
And that it ginne, in the East dawe
Thou shalt be bounde, to a newe lawe
At goyng out, of Canterburie toun
And lien a side, thy profession
Thou shalt not chese, nor thy self withdrawe
If any mirthe, be founde in thy mawe
Like the custome of, this companie
For none so proude, that dare me denie
Knight nor knaue, Chanon, Priest ne Nonne
To tell a tale, plainly as thei konne
When I assigne, and se tyme oportune
And for that we, our purpose wol contune
We will homeward, thesame custome vse
And thou shalt not, pleinly thee excuse
Be now well ware, studie well to night
But for all this, be of harte light
Thy witte shall be, the sharper and the bet
And we anon were, to soper set
And serued well, vnto our pleasance
And sone after, by good gouernance
Vnto bedde goeth, euery maner wight
And toward morowe, as sone as it was light
Euery pilgrime, bothe bet and worse
As bad our hoste, tooke anon his horse
When the Sonne, rose in the East full clere
Fully in purpose, to come to diner
Vnto Ospring, and breake there our faste
And when we wern, fro Canterburie paste
Nought the space, of a bowe draught
Our hoste in haste, hath my bridell raught
And to me saied, as it were in game
Come forth dan Jhon, by your christen name
And let vs make, some maner mirth or play
Shete your portes, at wentie deuill waie
Is no disporte, so to patere and saie
It woll make your lippes wonder draie
Tell some tale, and make thereof a iape
For by my Rouncie, thou shalt it not escape
But preache not, of none holinesse
Ginne some tale, of mirthe or of gladnesse
And nodde not, with thine heuie becke
Tell vs some thing, that draweth to effecte Onely of ioye, make no lenger let
And when I sawe, it would be no det
I obeied, vnto his biddyng
So as the lawe, me bounde in all thing
And as I coud, with a pale chere
My tale I gan anone, as ye shall here.

Finitur Prologus de Thebes.

Et sequitur quoq; pars prima libri.

Here beginneth

the hiſtorie of the deſtruction of the Citee of Thebes.

Sirs ye I, lith of your curteſie
I entred am, into your companie
And admitted, a tale for to tell
By him that hath, power to compell
I meane our hoſte, gouernour and guide
Of you echone ridyng here beſide
Though that my witte, barein be and dull
I will rehearſe, a ſtorie wounderfull
Touchyng the ſiege and deſtruccion
Of worthie Thebes, the mightie roiall toun
Built and begonne, of olde antiquitee
Upon the tyme, of worthie Ioſue
By diligence, of kyng Amphion
Chiefe cauſe firſt, of his foundacion
For which his fame, which neuer ſhal awaie
In honour floureth, yet vnto this daie
And in ſtorie remembred, is and preiſed
But how the walles, were on height reiſed
Yet is wonder, and marueile for to here
But if you liſt, I ſhall you plainly lere
The maner hole, plainly in ſentence
Under ſuppoſe, of your pacience
As write myne auctor, Bochas bothe two Rede her bookes, and ye ſhall finde it ſo
How this kyng, this prudent Amphion
With his ſweteneſſe, and melodious ſoun
The citee built, that whilom was ſo ſtrong
And Armonie, of his ſwete ſong
By vertue onely, of the weridies harpe
That he made, in Mercuries harpe
Of whiche the ſtrēges, wer not touched ſofte
Whereby the walles, reiſed were a lofte
Without craft, of any mannes hande
Full yore ago, midde of Grekes lande
Whiche is a thyng, of Poetes told Neuer ifeln, nother of yong nor old
But as Bochas, liſte to ſpecifie
Clere expounyng, this darke Poeſie
Saith Marcurie, God of eloquence
Yafe by the might, of heauenly influence
Unto this kyng, at his natiuite
Through glad aſpectes, that he ſhould be Moſte excellent, by craft of Rhetorike
That in this worlde, was none to him like Whiche ſignifieth to hem that ben prudent
The Muſicall, the luſtie inſtrument
I meane the Harpe, moſte melodious
Youe to this kyng, by Marcurius
And his ſong, this auctour can you teache
Was nothyng, but the craftie ſpeache
Of this kyng, icalled Amphion
Whereby he made, the countrees enuiron
To haue ſoche luſte, in his wordes ſwete
That were ſo pleaſaunt, fauourable & mete
In her eares, that ſhortly there was none
Diſobeiſant, with the kyng to gone
Where ſo euer, that him liſte to aſſigne
His chere, his porte, was eſte ſo benigne
That through his ſteryng, and exhortacion
With him thei went, firſt to builde this toun
And forſoke, eche man his countree
By one aſſent, to make this citee
Royall and riche, that liche was none
And thus the walles, made of lime and ſtone
Were reiſed firſt, by ſingyng of this kyng
Liche as Poetes, feine in her writyng
Paſſyng riche, and roiall of entaile
Here maie ye ſee, how moche maie auaile
The goodlihede, and the lowlineſſe of a kyng
And ſpecially, in chere and in ſpeakyng
To his lieges, and to beareu him faire
In his appoſte, and ſhewe him debonaire
And not to been, to ſtrange ne ſolein,
In contenaunce outward, be diſdein
Whiche cauſeth oft, who that can aduerte
Greate hatred, in the peoples harte
And there vpon, priuely woll rowne
When a Prince, doeth vpon hem frowne
Shortly deme, for all his excellence
Emong hem ſelf, out of his preſence
Euerich conclude, lich his fantaſie
And thus full oft, gendred is enuie
In ſolkes hartes, of ſoleinte and pride
For ſoche as liſt not, ones to looke a ſide
To reward hem when thei lowe loute
And again minde, it is out of doubte
That any hede, by recorde of the wiſe
Should the foote of diſdain deſpiſe
Which beareth him vp, who ſo can take hede
And ſuſteineth, in his moſte nede
As his piller, and his ſuppoaſle
For finally, ne were the poorſaile
Her bearer vp, and ſupportacion
Farewell Lordſhip, and denominacion
Throughout the lande, of euery high eſtate
Wherefore me ſemeth, more is fortunate
Of Mercurie, the ſwote ſugred Harpe
Then Mars ſweard, whetted kene and harpe
More accepted, with aſpectes good
Then is this God, with his lookes wood

For

What the goodlihed of a prince auaileth to winne the hartes of his people.

For humble ſpeache, with glad contenance
Waie a Prince, ſothly auance
Emong his people, hartes for to winne
Of inward loue, whiche will not twinne
Then golde, richeſſe, pride or tyrannie
Other diſdaine, daunger or ſurquedie
For of Lordes, clerkes can reporte
But that loue, her croune doe ſuppoꝛte
The line is not, in concluſion
I take recorde, of kyng Amphion.

Example good of kyng Amphion.

That built Thebes, by his eloquence
More then of pride, or of violence
Noble and riche, that like was no wher nome
And thus the walles, made of lime and ſtone
Were reiled firſt, by ſingyng of this kyng
Like as Poetes ſeinen, in her writyng

How after thopinion of ſome authours, king Cadmus builte firſt the citee of Thebes.

But ſothly yet, ſome expoſitours
Groundyng hem, vpon old auctheurs
Sain that Cadmus, the famous old man
Full long afore, the citee firſt began
And the grounde, of buildyng ſette
And the boundes, by compas out mette
With thonges out kerue, of a Bulles ſide
Whiche enuiron, ſtretche might wide
To get in lande, a full large ſpace
Where vpon to builde, a dwellyng place

How the countree of Boece, tooke firſt his name of a Bulles ſkinne, and after called Thebes. And how king Cadmus was exiled out of Thebes, by proweſſe of kynge Amphion.

And called was the ſoile, thus getten in Whilom Boece, of the Bulles ſkin
The name after, into Thebes tourned
But Cadmus, hath not there long ſoiourned
Like in ſtorie, as it is compiled
For ſhortly, he fro thens was exiled
Neuer after, for to dwell in the toun
By the knighthode, of this Amphion
Whiche vp performeth, riche for the nones
The citee Thebes, of mightie ſquare ſtones
As I you told, alite here toforne
And Cadmus, thus his kingdome hath lorne
Sceptre and croune, and his power roiall
Now haue I tolde, vnto you ground of all
That ye well knowe, by informacion
Clerely the pith, and therpoſicion
Of this matter, as clerkes can you tell
It were but vain, lenger for to dwell
To tary you on this mattere
With my tale, whiche that ye ſhall here
Vpon our waie, will laſte a long while
The ſpace in ſoth, as I ſuppoſe of. vii. mile
And now ye knowe, firſt how Amphion
Builte and began, this citee and this toun
Reignyng there, long after as I rede
Of hym no more, for I will proceede
To my purpoſe, that I firſt began
Not tellyng here, how the line ran

How the line of Amphion by diſcente, was conueighed to kyng Laius.

Fro kyng to kyng, by ſucceſſion
Comeſyng downe, by the ſtocke of Amphion
Certainly by line, all the diſcent
But leue all this, plainly of entent
To tell forthe, in bookes as I rede
How Laius, by proceſſe gan ſucceede

Here beginneth the ſtorie of Thebes.

NOw beare the Croune, in this mightie lande
Holdyng the Scepter, of Thebes in his hande
Manly and wiſe, duryng all his life
And Iocaſta, called was his wife

How ſhall ye here of kyng Laius, and Iocaſta his wife.

Full womanly, the ſtorie ſaith certein
For a tyme, though ſhe were barein
Till Laius, in full humble wiſe
To haue a childe, did Sacrifice
Firſt Cappollo, in his chaire ſo bright
And Iupiter, that hath ſo greate a might Beſeechyng hem, with deuoute reuerence
To graunt onely, through her influence
That his requeſt, executed maie be
And ſpecially, to Goddeſſes three
He beſought, Pallas and Iuno
And Diane, for to helpe alſo
That he be not defrauded, of his boone
And his praier, accepted was full ſone
That finally, through his Rites old Euen like, as his harte would
The Quene Iocaſta, hath anone conceiued
Whiche when the kyng, fully hath perceiued
He made in haſte, hym lift not to abide Through his kyngdome, meſſengers ride
Fro coaſt to coaſt, the ſtorie can deuiſe
For Diuinours, and Philoſophers wiſe
For ſoothe as were famous Phiſicions

And

Ind well expert, Aſtronomiens
To come in haſt, vnto his preſens
To finde out, ſhortly in ſentence
By craft onely, of calculacion
The childes fate, and diſpoſicion
Ind therupon, to yeue a iudgement

How the Aſtronomiens, and Philoſophers of Thebes, caſted out the fate of Edippus

The roote I take, at the aſcendent
Truely ſought out, by minute and degre
The ſelf houre, of his natiuite
Not forget, the heauenly manſions
Clerely ſearched, by ſmale fraccions
Firſt by ſecondes, terces, and the quartes
On Iugrime ſtones, and on white cartes
Ipriued out, by diligent labour
In tables correct, deuoide of all errour
Iuſtly ſought, and founde out of bothe two
The peres collecte, and expanſe alſo
Conſidred eke, by good inſpection
Euery houre, and conſtellacion
Ind eche aſpecte, and looke eke diuers
Whiche were good, and whiche alſo peruers
Where thei were toward, or at debate
Happie, wilfull, or infortunate

The curſed conſtellacion, and diſpoſicion of the heauen, and the natiuitie of Edippus.

Ind finally, in concluſion
Thei founde Saturne, in the Scorpion
Beauie chered, Malencolike and loth
Ind wood Mars, furious and wroth
Holdyng his ſceptre, in the Capricorne
The ſame houre, when this childe was borne
Uenus directe, and contrarious
Ind depreſſed in Mercurious hous
That the dome, and iudgement finall
Of theſe clerkes, to ſpeake in ſpeciall
By fatall forte, that maie not be withdrawe
That with his ſwerde, his fader ſhalbe ſlawe

How the fate of Edippus diſpoſed, that he ſhould ſlea his owne father.

There maie no man, helpe it ne excuſe
On whiche thing, the kyng gan ſore muſe
Ind caſte he would, on that other ſide
Igain her dome, for hymſelf prouide
Shape awaie, and remedie to ſome
Bidding the quene, whē the childe wer borne
Without mercie, or moderly pitee
That he be dedde, it maie none other be Ind in all haſt, like as he hath ſent
She obeied, his commaundement
With wofull harte, and pitous looke
Ind face pale, her yong ſonne ſhe tooke
Tender and grene, bothe of fleſhe and bones
To certain men, ordeined for the nones
Fro poinct to poinct, in all maner thyng
To execute, the biddyng of the kyng
Thei durſt not, delaie it nor abide
But to a foreſt, that ſtoode there beſide
Thei token her waie, and faſt gan hem ſpede
The kynges will, to performe in dede
Hauyng therof, paſſyng heuinneſſe
But when that, thei beheld the fairenеſſe
Of the childe, and excellent beautie
In her harte, thei had greate pitie
Ind plainly caſte, emong hem was no ſtriſe
That the child, ſhould haue his life
Ind anone high vpon a tree
In place, that no man might it ſee
Thei heng hym vp, the ſtorie can reherce
But firſt his feete, thei gan through perce
Ind on bowes, tender tough and ſmale
Thei knitte hym vp, ſhortely this is no tale
Him to preſerue, from beaſtes wilde and rage
Ind after that, thei token her viage
Toward Thebes, in all the haſt thei maie
But of fortune, thilke ſame daie
With her houndes, ſearchyng vp and doun
The huntes went, of kyng Polibon
Through the foreſt, gan for to finde
Some aforn, and ſome come behinde
Ind gan ſearche, and ſeke wondre fore
Emong the hilles, and the holtes hore
Ind as thei rengen, the trenches by and by Thei heard a noiſe, and a pitous crie

How the huntes of kyng Polibon, founde the childe in the foreſte, and preſented hym vnto the kyng.

Of this childe, hongyng on a tree
Ind all at ones, drough hem for to ſee
Ind lette not, till thei haue him founde
Ind tooke him doune, and his feete vnbound
Ind bare hym home, vnto Polibon
Kyng of Archadie, the famous region
Ind when that he, the childe firſt can ſee
Of his woundes, he had greate pitee
To beholde, his tendre feete ſo biede
Ind called hym Edippus, as I rede
Whiche is to ſain plainly, this is no ſage
Boxed the feete, as in that langage
Ind firſt the kyng, in his riall halle
Made his men, a norice for to call
This yong childe, to foſtre and to kepe
With her milke, that he nought ne wepe
Ind his Leches, he charged eke alſo
Till he were holl, her deuour for to do
Fully in purpoſe, for this childe was feire
Ifter his daie, to maken hym his heire
For cauſe onely, who ſo taketh hede
Sonne had he none, by line to ſuccede

Ind

And that he had a wife or non
I finde not, and therefore I let it gon
But by proceſſe, of daies and of yeres
This Edippus, emong his playyng feres
Was in porte paſſyng full of pride
That none with hym might in peace abide
In harte he was kainly ſurquidous
Malencolike and contrarious
Full of deſpite, and of high deſdain
That no wight durſt, ſhortly hym withſtain
Till on a daie, he gan with one debate
To whom he had ſpecially greate hate
Whiche of rancour, and of hatie tene
As he that might, his pride not ſeſteine
Gan vpon hym cruelly to braide
And vnto hym ſeid y thus he ſaide
Whereto y he art thou ſo proude of porte
Contraire alſo, euery in any diſporte
Froward and feil, laſtyng euery in one
As thou were Lorde, of vs cuerichone
And preſumeſt fully in werkyng
Like as thou were ſonne vnto the kyng
And deſcended of his riall blood
But whether ſo thou, be wroth or wood
Thou at nothyng, yiſe thee liſt take hede
Ipperteinyng vnto his kinrede
But in a forest founden and vnknowe whē thou wer yong, therfore beare thee low
And vtterly remember thee yiſe thee liſt
Thy birthe and blood, are bothe two vnwiſt
This the fine, ſhortly of my tale
Wherewith Edippus gan to were pale
And chaunge alſo, chiere and countenaunce
And gan apeinte in his remembraunce
Worde by worde, and forgat right nought
And ſelly muſed in this, and aboue thought
And caſte he would, without more tariyng
The trouthe enquire of Polibon the kyng
And when he ſawe opportune ſpace
And the kyng, in a ſecree place
He hym beſought, lowly on his knee
To his requeſte, benignely to ſe

The requeſte of Edippus, vnto the kyng Polibon.

And that he would plainly, and not ſpare
Of his birthe, the true grounde declare
And make hym ſure, of this thyng anon Yiſe he were, his very ſonne or non
And Polibon onely of gentilleſſe
When he beheelde, the greate heuineſſe
Of Edippus, and the wokull peine
He gan diſſimule, and in a manere feigne
Liche as he had been, verily his heire
But more and more, he falleth in deſpeire
And downe apen, on knees gan fall
Hym coniuryng, by the Goddes all
To tell trouthe, and nothyng to hide
Affirmyng ebe, he will not abide Lenger with hym, but riden and enquere
Till tyme, he maie the verie ſothe lere
In any parte of happe, or of fortune
And for that he was ſo importune
In his deſire, the kyng without abode
Curiouſly tolde hym, how it rode

The anſwere of the kyng, vnto Edippus.

In a forest firſt, how he was founde
Vpon a tree, by the feete ibounde
And how he caſt in concluſion
To make hym kyng of that region
After his daie, ſhortly for to tell
But Edippus, would no lenger dwell
But tooke leaue, and in haſt gan ride
To a temple faſte there beſide
Of Apollo, in forie as is tolde
Whoſe ſtatue ſtoode, in a chaire of golde
On wheles foure, burned bright and ſhene
And within, a Spirite full vncleene
By fraude onely, and falſe illuſion
Anſwere yaf to euery queſtion
Bringyng the people, in full greate errour
Soche as to hym did falſe honour
By rites vſed, in the olde dawes
After the cuſtome of Paganimes lawes
And Edippus, with full humble chiere
To Apollo made his preiere
Beſechyng hym, on his knees lowe
By ſome ſigne, that he might knowe
Through euidence, ſhortly comprehended
Of what kinrede, that he was deſcended
And when Edippus, by greate deuocion
Finiſhed hath fully his oriſon
The ſende anone, within inuiſible
With a voice, dredful and horrible
Bad hym in haſte, take his viage
Toward Thebes, where of his linage
He heren ſhall, and be certified
And on his waie, anon he hath hym hied
By hatie iourney, ſo is his hors conſtreined
Daie by daie, till he hath atteigned
Unto a caſtell, Pilotes icalled
Riche and ſtrong, and wele aboue iwalled
Adiacent by ſight of the countree
And apperteinent, to Thebes the citee
Kyng Laius beyng there preſent
For to holde a maner of turnement
With his knightes, yong and corageous
And other folke, that were deſirous
To preue hem ſelf, ſhortly for to tell
Who that by force, other might excell
Or get a name, through his proweſſe

Eueriche

Euerichе of hem, did his beſtineſſe
On horſebacke, and eke on foote
All be that ſome, founde it full vnſoote
Rather a plaie, of warre then of peace
Where Edippus put hymſelf in preace
As he that was aie ready to debate
Enforſyng hym, to entre in at gate
Maugre all tho, that hym would lette
And in the preace, of auenture he mette

How Edippus ſlough his Fader by ignorannce, at the Caſtell of Pilotes.

Kyng Laius, and cruelly hym ſlough
Though the ſtorie, telleth not hough
Ne no wight can, of all the companie
By no ſigne, it verely eſpie
By whoſe honde, the kyng was ſlawe
For Edippus, gan hym in haſt withdrawe
And kept hym cope, of entencion
Greate was the noiſe, and pitous ſoun
In the caſtell, for ſlaughter of the kyng
Dolle and complaint, ſorowe and wepyng
But for thei ſawe, that heuineſſe thought
Ayenſt death, auaileth lite or nought
Thei ordeine, with rites full riall
For the feaſt, called Funerall
And eke the cuſtome, of the daies olde
The corps thei brent, into aſhes colde
And in a veſſell, rounde made as a ball
Thei cloſed hym, in golde and metall
And after that, did her beſie cure
In Thebes, to make a Sepulture
And richely, hem liſt no lenger let
The aſhes, thei did encloſe and ſhet
Of this mattere, there is no more to ſain
But to Edippus, I will retourne ayen
Whiche hym enhaſteth aie, from daie to daie
Toward Thebes, in all that euer he maie
Brennyng in harte, as hote as any fire
The fine to knowe, of his fatall deſire
But for that he, failed of a guide
Out of his waie, he went ferre a ſide
Through a wilde, and a waſte countre
By a mounteigne, that ſtoode vpon the ſee

How Edippus paſſed by the hill, where the Monſtre laie, that was called Spinx.

Where that Monſtres, of many diuers kinde
Were conuerſaunt, in ſtorie as I finde
Emong whiche, ſothly there was one
So inly cruell, that no man durſte gone
For drede of death, forthe by that paſſage
This Monſter was, ſo mortall in his rage
Whiche had alſo, by deſcripcion
Bodie and foote, of a feers Lion
And like a maide, in ſothe was hed and face

The deſtruccion of the foule Monſter.

Fell of his looke, and cruell to manace
And odious of contenaunce and ſight
And as I rede, Spinx that Monſter hight
Worſe then Tigre, Dragon or Serpent
And I ſuppoſe, by Enchantement
He was ordeigned, on the hill tabide
To ſlea all tho, that paſſeden beſide
And ſpecially all, that did faile
To expoune, his miſtie diuinaile
His probleme eke, in wordes plain and bare Without auiſe, fully to declare
Or with the life, he might not eſcape
This is verie ſothe, plainly and no iape
And yit that he, by declaracion
Yaue there vpon, clere expoſicion
He ſhould in haſt, there was none other mene
Slaen this Monſtre, for all his cruell tene
There maie of mercie, be none other graunte
But of all this, Edippus ignoraunte
This dredfull hill, ſtondyng a roche
Or he was ware, full nigh gan approche
More perilous platly, that he wende
And ſodeinly, the Monſter gan deſcende
To ſtoppen his waie, and letten his paſſage
Thus abredyng, with a full courage

The wordes of the foule monſter.

Saied, I haue in harte inly greate diſporte
That fortune hath, brought thee to my porte
To make a prife, yif thou maie endure
The fatall ende, of this auenture
Set at a fine, ſothely by daies olde
And by and by, all the caas hym tolde
Chargyng hym, to be wele ware and wiſe
Get the palme, and beare awaie the price
Touchyng this thyng, ſet atwene vs tweine
Of life or death, whiche we ſhall dreine
And this Monſter, with a diſpitous chere
His probleme gan, thus as ye ſhull here.

The probleme that Spinx put to Edippus.

There is a beaſte, meruetious to ſee
The whiche in ſothe, at his natiuitee
Is of his might, ſo tender and ſo grene
That he maie, hymſelf not ſuſteine
Upon his feete, though he had it ſworne
But yit that he, be of his moder borne
And after ward, by proceſſe of age
On fower feete, he maketh his paſſage
And then vpon three, yit I ſhall not feine
And alderlaſte, he goeth vpright on tweine
Diuerſe of porte, and wonderfull of cheres
Till by length, of many londrie yeres
Naturally, he goeth ayein on three
And ſithen on fower, it maie none other be
And finally, this is the trouthe plein

He recouereth kindely ayen
To the matter, whiche that he came fro
Lo here my probleme, is all ido
Muſe herebpon, without warre of ſtrife
Jt to declare, or els leſe thy life
And when Edippus, can this thing aduerte
Well aſſured, in his manly harte
Gan in his harte, ſerche vp and doun
And of prudence, caſt in his reaſon
By greate auiſe, what thing this maie be Seyng alſo, that he maie not flee
And how there was, counſaill nonne rede
To tell trouthe, or els to be dede
And by full good deliberacion
Thus he anſwered, in concluſion
Thou Spinx (q he) falſe and fraudolent
Thou foule Monſtre, thou dragō, thou ſerpēt
That on this hill, like as J conceiue
Lieſt in a waite, folkes to deceiue
But truſt well, for all thy ſleghtie witte
Thy falſe fraude, ſhall anon be quitte
Me liſte not to whiſpre, neither roune
But thy probleme, J ſhall anon erpoune
So openly, thou ſhalt not go there fro
Lo this it is, take good heede thereto

How Edippus erpouned the probleme, that Spinx put vnto hym.

Thilke beaſt, thou ſpake of her tofore
Js euery man, in this worlde ibore
Whiche maie not go, his limmes be ſo ſoft
But as his moder, beareth hym a loft
Jn her armes, when he doeth crie or wepe
And after that, he ginneth for to crepe
On lower feete, in his tender youth
By experience, as it is ofte couth
Jtorne irehened, his handes bothe two
And by proceſſe, thou maieſt conſider alſo
With his two feete, for all thy fell tene
He hath a ſtaffe, hymſelf to ſuſteine
And then he goeth, ſhortly vpon three
And alderlaſte, as it muſt nedes be Holdyng his ſtaffe, he walketh vpon t'weine
Till it ſo be, through age he atteine
That luſte of youth, waſted be and ſpent
Then in his honde, he taketh a potent
And on three feete, thus he goeth ayen
J dare afferme, thou maieſt it not withſein
And ſone after, through his vnweldie might
By influence, of natures right
And by experience, as euery man maie know
Like a childe, on lower he crepeth lowe
And for he maie here, no while ſoiourne
To yearth ayen, he muſt in haſte retourne
Whiche he came fro, he maie it not remewe
For in this worlde, no man maie eſchewe
This verie ſothe, ſhortly and no doubt
When the whele of kinde, cometh about
And naturally hath, his cours tronne
By circuite, as doeth the ſhere ſonne
That man and child, of high and lowe eſtate
Jt gaineth not, to make more debate
His tyme iſette, that he muſt fine
When Atropos, of malice doeth vntwine
His liues thred, by Cloto firſt compouned
Lo here thy probleme, fully is expouned
At euery metyng, as J tooke on honde
To the lawe, that thou muſt nedes ſtonde
And in all haſte, of myne hondes deie
For of reaſon, thou canſt it not withſeie
And this Spinx, awaped and amate
Stoode all diſmaied, and diſconſolate
With chere doun caſte, heauie as any ledde
And Edippus anone, ſmote of the hedde
Of this fende, ſtinkyng and vnſwete
And the countre, ſet holly in quiete
Whereby he hath, ſoche a price wonne
That his fame, in euery coaſt is ronne
Through al the lond, ẏ this mōſtre was ſlawe
And line right, to Thebes he gan drawe
Well receiued, for his worthineſſe
For his manhode, and his proweſſe
And for thei ſeigh, he was a ſemely knight
Well fauoured, in euery mannes ſight
And ſlawe alſo, Thebes, the mightie toun
Not onely thei, but all the region
Were deſtitute, of a gouernour
Ayen her foon, hauyng no ſuccour
Hem to defende, but the Quene a lone Emong hem ſelf, makyng full greate mone
For there was none, as bookes ſpecifie
The Sceptre and croune to occupie
For whiche the Lordes, all by one aſſent
Within the toune, ſet a parlement
Shortly concludyng, yif it might been Prudently to treate with the Queen
Namely thei, that helde hem ſelf moſte ſage
To condeſcende, by weie of mariage
She to be ioyned, to this manly knight Paſſyng prudent, and famous eke of might Moſte holle man, as thei can diſcerne
The worthie citee, to kepe and gouerne
And through counſaill, of the lordes all
To her deſire, plainly ſhe is fall
And accorded, without more tariyng
That of Thebes, Edippus ſhall be kyng
By full aſſent, was none that ſaied naie
And tyme ſet, ayein a certain daie
Emong hem ſelf, and finally deuiſed
The weddyng was, in Thebes ſolempnized
Full rially, that nedes muſt vnthriue

Onely

Onely for he, his moder tooke to wiue
Un wist of bothe, he was of her blood
And ignorannt, shortely how it stood
That he tofore, had his fader slawe
For which this wedding, was ayeinst ỹ lawe
And tofore God, is neither faire ne good
Nor acceptable, blood to touche blood
Whiche cause hath be, of greate confusion
In many a londe, and many a region
Ground and roote, of vnhap and mischaunce
The fine concludyng, alwaie w vengeaunce
As men haue sein, by clere experience
And holy writte, recordeth in sentence
How Herode falsly, in his life
By violence tooke, his brothers wife
For she was faire, and pleasant to his sighe
And kept her still, by force through his might Although to her, title had he non
And for her sake, the holy man sainct Jhon
For his trouthe, in prison loste his hedde
Wherefore I rede, euery man take hede
Whether so he be Lorde, Prince or kyng
That he beware, to eschue soche weddyng
Ere ỹ the swerde of vengeance, him manace
Lest he lese happe, fortune and grace
Takyng ensample, in all maner thyng
Of Edippus, in Thebes crowned kyng
All be that he, wrought of ignorannce
Full derke and blinde, of his wofull chaunce
And yll vn will, that he of innocence
As ye haue herde, fell in soche offence
For whiche he was punished, & brought lowe
What ar thei worthie, that her errour know
And from the knotte, list not to abstreine
Of soche spousaile, to God and man vncleine
I can not sein, ne more thereof deuise
Demeth your self, that prudent been & wise
And ehe Edippus, haueth emong in minde
Of whom the weddyng, like as ye maie finde vnhappie was, and passyng odious
Infortunate, and ehe vngracious
I am werie, more thereof to write
The hatefull processe, also to endite
I passe ouer, fully of entent
For Jmeneus, was not there present
Nor Lucina, list not there to shine
Ne there was none, of the Muses nine
But one accorde, to maken melodie
For there song not, by heauenly armonie
Neither Clio, ner Caliope
None of the sustren, in nomber thrise three
As thei did, when Philolaie
Ascended vp hegh, aboue the skie
To be wedded, this Ladie vertuous
Unto her Lorde, the God Mercurius
And as Patrician, inamed de Copelle
In his booke of weddyng, can you telle
There concludyng, in his mariage
The Poete, that whilom was so sage
That this Ladie, called Sapience
Iwedded was, vnto Eloquence
As it sat well, by heauenly purueiaunce
Hem to be ioyned, by knot of alliaunce
But bothe two, sothly of entent
At weddyng, in Thebes were absent
That caused after, greate aduersitie
For finall ende, of that solempnitie was sorowe and wo, and destruccion
Utter ruine, of this roiall toun
There maie no man, helpe it ne succour
For a tyme in ioye, though thei floure.

The names of the people, being at the wedyng of the kyng Edippus, and of Jocasta the Quene.

But at his weddyng, plainly for to tell was Cerberus, chief porter of hell And Herebus, fader to Hatred was there present, with his holle kinred
His wife also, with her two wes blacke
And her doughters, sorowe for to make Hidously chered, and vgly for to see Megera, and Theliphonee
Alecto ehe, with Labour and Enuie
Drede, Fraude, and false Tretcherie
Treason, Pouert, Indigence and Nede
And cruell death, in his rent wede
Wretchednesse, Compleint, and ehe Rage
Fearfull, Pale, Dronkenesse, crohed Age
Cruell Wars, and many a Tigre wood
Brennyng Ire, and vnkinde blood
Fraternall hate, depe set in the roote
Sauf onely Death, that there nas no boote Allured othes, at time vntre we
All these folke, were at weddyng newe
To make the toune, desolate and bare
As the storie, after shall declare
But aie in Thebes, with his walles strong Edippus reigneth, many a daie and long
And as myne auctor, write in wordes plain
By Jocasta, he had sonnes twain
Ethiocles, and also Polimite
And in bookes, as sondrie clerkes write Doughters two, full goodly on to see
Of whiche that one, hight Intigonee
And that other, called was Jmein
Of her beautie, inly souerein
Edippus aie, deuoide of warre and strife
With Jocasta, ledde a merie life
Till fortune, of her iniquitie
Had enuie, of his prosperitie

For when he ſhone, moſte riche in his renoun
From her whele, ſhe plunged hym adoun
Out of his ioye, into ſodein wo
As ſhe is wonte, frowardly to do
And namely hem, that ſetten her affiaunce
Of hartely truſt, in her variaunce
For when the kyng, paſſyng of greate might Sat with the quene, vpon a certain night
Caſuelly, when his folke echone
Out of chamber, ſodeinly were gone
Ere he was ware, Jocaſta gan beholde
The carectes of his woundes old
Upon his feete, emprented wonder depe,
Tournyng her face, breſte out for to wepe
So ſecretly, he might it not eſpie
And ſhe anon, fell into a fantaſie
Aie on this thing, muſyng more and more
And in her bedde, gan to ſighen ſore
And when the kyng, conceiueth her diſtreſſe
He gan enquere, of her heuineſſe
Fully the cauſe, and thoccaſion
For he will wite, in concluſion
What her eſleth, and why ſhe ſerde ſo
My Lorde (q ſhe) without wordes mo
Percell cauſe of this ſodein rage
Is for that I, in my tender age
Had a Lorde, inamed Laius
Kyng of this toune, a man right vertuous
By whom I had a ſonne, right wonder feire
Likely to been, his ſucceſſour and heire
But bicauſe his Diuinours tolde
At his birthe, ſothlie that he ſhould
Yif he had life, by fatall deſtinee
Slaen his fader, it might none other be
For whiche the kyng, his fate to eſchue
Bad men in haſte, as hym thought due
To ſlea the childe, and haue therof no rothe
And I anon, bad without ſlothe
To certain men, vp pein of iudgement
To execute, the commaundement
Of the kyng, as I paue hem in charge
And forthe thei goon, to a foreſt large Adiacent, vnto this countree
Perlyng his feete, and henge hym on a tree
Not performyng, therecucion
On hym thei had, ſoche compaſſion
Lefte hym there, and reſorted home ayen
Beyng in doubt, and vncertein
At their repeire, as thei tolden all
Of this childe, what afterward is befall
Sauſe thei ſaid, hunters had hym founde
Which ladden him forth, & his feete vnbounde
But to what coaſte, thei coud not declare
Whiche percell is, of myne euill fare
Grounde and cauſe, of myne heuie chere
Conſidered ehe, the woundes that appere
Upon your feete, & wot not what thei mene
And o thyng aie, is at myne harte grene
My Lorde alas, but of newe date
Kyng Laius ſlaine, was but late
At a Caſtell, nigh this countree
Upon your comyng, into this citee
All this I weied, and rekened into one
Maketh myne harte, as heauie as a ſtone
So that I can, counſeill none ne red
And with that word, the kyng lift vp his hed
And abreide, with harpe ſighes ſmerte
And all this thing, by order can aduerte
Curiouſly by good auiſement
And by ſignes, clere and euident
Conceiueth well, and ſore gan repent
It was hymſelf, that Jocaſta ments
And when the kyng, ſigh in maners pleine
By her Goddes, ſhe gan hym conſtreine
To ſhewe out the cauſe, of his affraie
And it expoune, and make no delaie Croppe and roote, ſhortly why that he Entred firſt, into that countre
From whēs he came, and from what region
But he her put, in deluſion
As he had doen it, for the nones
Till at laſte, he braſt out at ones
Unto the Quene, and gan a proceſſe make Firſt how he was, in the foreſt take Wounded the feete, and ſo forthe euery thing
Of his cherilkyng, with Polibon the king
And holle the cauſe, why he hym forſooke
And in what wiſe, he the waie tooke
Toward Thebes, as Apollo bad
And of fortune, how that he was lad
Where that Spinx, kept the mounteine
And how that he alſo, ſlowe in certeine
Kyng Laius, at caſtell gate
Toward night, when it was full late
And how to Thebes, that he gan hym ſpede
To finde out the ſtocke, of his kinrede
Whiche vnto hym, gan were couth
For by proceſſe, of his grene youth
He founde out wele, by rehenyng of his life
That he was bothe, his moder and his wife
So that all night, and ſtyng on the morowe
Bet wene hem two, began a newe ſorowe
Whiche vnto me, were pitous for to tell
For therevpon, yif I ſhould dwell
A long ſpace, it would you occupie
But ye maie rede, in a Tregedie

Tragediæ Seneca de Ægipto Reg. Thebar.

Of Morall Seneck, fully his endyng
His dooll, his miſchief, and his compleinyng

How

How with sorowe, and vnweldie age
This Edippus, fell in dotage
Loste his witte, and his worldly delite
And how his sonnes, had hym in despite
And of disdaine, tooke of hym no kepe
And eke bookes saine, his yen out he wepe
And as myne auctour, liketh to deuise
As his sonnes, rebuke hym and despise
Upon a daie, in a certaine place
Out of his hedde, his yen he gan race
And caste at hem, he can none other boote
And of malice, thei trade hym vnder foote
Fully deuoide, bothe of loue and drede
And whē Edippus, for mischiefe was thus ded
Within a pitte, made in the yearth lowe
Of crueltie, his sonnes gan hym throwe
Worse then Serpent, or any Tigre wood
But of cursed flocke, cometh vnkinde blood
As in storie, ye maie rede here tofore
All by though the Rose, grow out of the thorn
Thus of Edippus, whē he was blind and old
The wretched ende, I haue you plainly told
For whiche shortly, to man and childe I rede
To be wele ware, and take hede
Of kindely right, and of conscience
To doe honour, and due reuerence.

How euery man ought of duetie, to doe reuerence to his Fader and Moder, or elles there will fall vengeaunce.

To fader and moder, of what estate thei bee
Or certain els, thei shull neuer thee
For who that is not, to hem debonaire
In speache, in porte, for to treate hem faire
Hem to obeie, in honestie and drede
And hem to cherishe, of what thei haue nede
I dare affermē, excepting none estate
That he shall firste, be infortunate
In all his werke, bothe on Sea and londe
And of what thyng, that he take on honde
For the tyme forward, to hym and contraire
Waste of his goodes, plainly and appaire
Finde plentie of contek, warre and strife
Unhappie ende, and shortnesse of life
And gracelesse, of what he hath to do
Hatred of God, and man also Therefore no man, be thereof reckeles
But make your mirrour, of Ethiocles
And his brother, called Polimite
Whiche in soche thinges, greatly wer to wite
As ye shall here, of hem how it fill
And when we been descended, doun this hill
As I passed here, the lowe vaile
I shall begin, the remnaunt of my tale.

Explicit prima pars istius Codialli.

Immediate sequitur secunda pars eiusdem.

PAssed ỹ Thrope, of Brough ton on the blee
By my Kalender, I gan a non to see
Through the Sonne, that full clere gan shine
Of the clocke, that it drew to nine
And sawe also, as siluer droppes shene
Of the dewe, like perles on the grene
Uapoured vp, into the aire a lofte
When Zepherus, with his blowyng softe
The weder made lustie, smothe and faire
And right attempre, was the holsome aire
The same houre, all the holle route
Of the pilgrimes, ridyng round aboute
In my tale, when I gan procede
Rehearsyng forthe, as it was in dede
When Edippus, buried was and graue
How his sonnes, the kyngdome for to haue

How the soonnes of Edippus, debated for the croune.

Emong hem self, by full mortall hate
For the croune, gonne for to debate
Whiche of hem, iustly shall succede
And the Scepter, of the toune possede
Auertyng nought, neither to right ne wrong
But eche of hem, to make his partie strong
And his querele, proudly to sustein
From whose hartes, was deuouided clene
Of brotherhode, the faithfull aliaunce
False couetise, so made hem at distaunce
Fully werchyng, into destruccion
And ruine of this noble toun
So hote brente, of hatered and enuie
Of bothe twoo, through pompous surquedie
That neither would, pleinly in a poincte
Other forbeare, thei stode in soche distoinct
Like as thei had, of birthe been forein
Till of the toune, the noble citezeins
Knightes, Barōs, with many a worthy lorde
Shope a waie, to make hem of accorde
And to set hem, in quiete and in pees
But for his parte, this Ethiocles
Alledge gan, that he was first borne
For whiche he ought of reason, go tofore
In the citee, to be crouned kyng
Sith by lawe, there was no letteyng
For vnto hym, longeth the heritage
By descente, and by title of age

The controuersie of the twoo brethren.

But Polimite, of full high disdaine

All openly, gan replie againe
And for his parte, saied in especiall
Reason was none, that he should haue all Bothe Regalie, and domination
And the lordship, holly of the toun
And he right nought, out of the citee
But liue in lile, and in pouertee
Concludyng, without fere or drede
Rather then it suffre, he would be dede
And thus Alas, through her enuious strife
At ende, eueriche loste his life
At greate mischief, as ye shall after here
But thilke tyme, the Lordes all in fere
Full besily did, her diligence
By greate auise, and full high prudence
To set hem in quiete, and in reste
Counsaillyng hem, plainly for the beste
To leue her strief, of wisedome and of reason
And condescende, to some composition
Whiche to bothe, might moste auaile
And finally, through her gouernaile

The common vnion, betwene these twoo brethren.

The Lordes all, tho beyng present
Haue hem brought, to been of one assent
Of one harte, as brother vnto brother
Eueriche of hem, to reigne after other Yere by yere, as it cometh about
So that the toun, shall absent hym out
Fully that yere, and hymself gie
By his manhode, and his chiualrie
Haunte hymself, in deedes Marciall
While his brother, in his Se riall
Holdeth his Sceptre, the citee to gouerne
And when the yere, his cours hath run yerne
And is come out, he shall haue repeire
To reigne in Thebes, like as Lorde and heire
There to receiue, fully his dignitee
While that other, poldeth the citee
Pacientiy, tahyng his auenture
Till he ayen, his honour maie recure
Thus enterchaunge, euery yere thei shall
That one ascendeth, that other hath a fall
Thei muste obeie, of harte and take it well
Like as that one, reforteth of the wele
For this was holle, the compolicion
Betwene the brethren, and conuencion
Fully knitte vp, by greate auisement
Tofore the Goddes, by othe of Sacrament
Neuer after to grutche, ne to varie
But accomplithe, shortely and not tarie
Like as thaccorde, enrolled in the toun
From poinct to poinct, made mencion.
But alderfirst, by reason of his age
Ethiocles had the auauntage
To reigne alone, and weare the crowne
Polimite, hym hastyng out of toune Duryng that yere, it maie none other be Whiles his brother, satte in his rialte
Full richely, vpon Fortunes whele
And rode hym forthe, armed bright in stele
This Polimite, sothly as I rede
Hymself alone, on a riall stede
Without guide, all the long daie
Beyng alerde, to kepe the high waie
In his harte, hauyng suspecion
To his brother, of malice and treason
Leste he pursue, through fals vnkind blood
To haue hym dedde, for couetise of good
That he alone, might haue possession
Duryng his life, fully of the toune
For whiche in haste, hauing no reslaw
Polimite a side, gan him withdrawe
By a forestе, ioyning to the See
Knowing right nought, the site of the countre
Full of hilles, and of high Monteines
Craggie Roches, and but fewe pleines
Wondre dredfull, and lothsome of passage
And there withall, full of beastes rage
Holding his way, of hert nothing light
Mate and wery, til it draweth to night
And al the day, beholding environ
He neither sawe, Castel Toure ne toun
The whiche thing, greueth him ful sore
And sodenly the see, began to rore
Winde and tempeste, hidously tarysle
The raine doun bete, in full grilly wise
That many a beste, therof was adrad
And nigh for fere, gan to were made
As it sempte, be the wofull sownes
Of Tygres, Beres, Bores, and Liones
Whiche for rekute, hem selfe for to saue
Euerich in haste, draweth vnto his Caue
But Polymite, in this tempest huge
Alas the while, findeth no refuge
Ne him to throwde, saw nowhere no soccoure
Til it was passed, almoste midnight houre
A large space, that the sterres clere
The cloudes voided, in heuen did appere
So that this knight, out of the Forest large Gan approche, in to the londe of Arge

How Polimite first cam in to the londe of Arge

Seyng a palaice mighti of building
Of whiche Adrastus, called was the king
A lusty man, riche and wondre sage
And yronne was, somdel in to age
Borne of the Ile, that called is Chilon
And somtime Sone, of the king Cholon
And for his witte, in storey as is couthe
He chosen was, in his tendre youthe

Of

Of Argo to be, crouned king
Chief of al Grece, be recorde of writing
Not be descente, nor succession
And but alonely, of free election
He helde of Argo, the Sceptre in his hande
As moste worthy, of al Grekes lande
Loued and drad, for wisdom and Justice
And as the story, pleinly can deuise
This worthy king, had doughtres two Passing faire, and right good also
It were to longe, her beaute to descriue

Argiue and Deiphile the Doughtres tweine of king Adrastus

And the eldest, called was Argiue
Deiphile, ynamed the seconde
And Adrastus, like at it is founde
This worthy, king hadde sonne none
To succede, astre he begone
For whiche he was, during al his life
Trist in herte, and passingly penslife
But holy his truste, and his hope stood
Be alliance, of som worthy blood
Brought in be mene, of his Doghtres twein
That he shalbe, relelled of his peine
Through recomfort, of som high Mariage
And sothely yet, ful ofte in his corage
He troubled was, be occasion
Of a sweuene, and of a vision

The dreame of king Adrastus of a wilde Boor and a fers Lion

Shewed to him, vpon a certein night
For as him throught, his inward sight
While he slepte, by clere inspection
A wilde Boor, and a fers Lion
Possede shul, these bestes in her rage
His doughtres two, be bonde of Mariage
In short tyme, within a certein day
Whiche brought his herte, in ful great affray
But thinge in soth, that destine hath shape
Here in this worlde, ful harde it is teschape
And merueilous, a man to eschue his fate
And polimite, of whom I spake late
With the tempest bete, and all be reined
Be grace onely, the Citie hath atteigned
Where Adrastus, ful stately of degree
Thilke time helde, his riall se
The trouble night, merke and obscure
Hath brought this knight, onely be auenture
Through the Citie, enclosed with a wal
Unto the palaice, chief and principal
Where as the king, in his chambre aloste
Lay in his bed, and slepte wonder soste
Che al his folke, hadde her chambres take Like as Fortune, parauenture had shape
The silse tyme, because it was so late
And casuely, the porter at gate
As it hadde be, right for the nones
And in a porche, bilte of square stones
Ful mightely, enarched enuiroun
Where the domes, and ples of the toun
Were executed, and lawes of the king
And ther this knight, without more taryng
Wery and mate, from his stede a light Hanging the reine, in al the haste he might Upon his arme, sure him for to kepe
And leide him doun, and gan anon to slepe
As him semed, that tyme for the beste
And while that he, lay thus for to reste
Of auenture, ther cam a knight riding
One the worthiest, of the world liuing
Curteis, lowely, and right vertuous
As faith min Iuctour, called Tideus
Wrous in armes, and manly in werking
Of his birthe, Sonne vnto the king
Of Calidoine, a londe of great renoun
As he alas, out of that region
Exiled was, for he his brothre slow
As the stage of Thebes, writ the manere how Al be that he, to him no malicement
For on a day, as they on hunting went
In a forest, for herte and for hinde
So as he stood, vndre a great linde
And casuely lete, his Irwe slippe
He slough his brothre, called Wentlippe
Through mortal sorte, his hand was begiled
For whiche he was, banished and exiled
As the lawe narowe, sette his charge
As for this cas, he cam firste to Argo
Into the porche, where polimite dyd slepe
Of auenture, er he toke any kepe
The same night, hidously belein
With the tempest, of thondre and of rein
And felt also, anoy and great damage
Through the forest, holding his passage
As polimyte, had do to forne
In percel ofte, likly to be lorne
With bestes rage, sette on euery side
Til of grace, without any guide
He Rode Through Argo, the gret mighty toun
Streght vn to the palaice, & to the chief don-Like as I tolde, wher polimite lay (geon
And at his coming, made a great affray
For he was blinde, Through derkenesse of the And him to guie, he ne fonde no light (night
When he cam in, of priuet ne of torche
Til he vnwarely, entred in to the porche
And wolde haue take, there his herbergage
But polimite, sterte vp in a rage
Sodenly awaked, as I rede
With the tryng, of his proude stede

And firſte of al, whan that he beheld
A knight iarmed and on his breſt achelde
And gan the manere, of this ray aduerte
Of verray ire, vpon his hors he ſterte
And cruelly gan, Tideus enquere
Whens he come, and what he did there
And bad in haſte, his anſwere to deuiſe
And Tideus, in ful humble wiſe
Anſwered ayen, of verray gentilleſſe
And ſaide in ſoth, of high diſtreſſe
Of the tempeſte, and the derke nighe
He driuen was, like an arrant knight
Of nede onely, and great neceſſite
And him conſtrained, of great aduerſite
To take lodging, where ſo that he might
And in that Court, therfore he alight
Without more, thinking none outrage
Ne to no wight, meaning no damage
Thanne Polimite, of malice and of pride
Tolde him ſhortely, he ſhulde not abide Ne lodge there, though he hadde it ſworne
For I (q he) toke it vp before
And wil it kepe, duringal this night
I ſey the platly, maugre al thy might (q Tideus than, it is no curteſie
Me to deuoide, but rather vilenie
Yet ye take hede, that ſeme a gentil knight
And as I ſuppoſe, ye haue no title of right
To this lodging, be waye of heritage
More than haue I, for al your fel rage
And parde yet, it ſhal be no diſeaſe
Eil to morwe, though ye do me eaſe
Of gentilleſſe, onely with youre leue
To ſuffre me, it ſhal but litel greue
But aye the more, Tideus ſpeake faire
Polimyte was froward, and contraire
And ſhortely ſaith, it geineth not to ſtriue
That of force, he ſhal deuoide bliue
Or vtterly atwene hem bothe two
This thing to trie, he muſte haue do
And Tideus ſeing, no bettre mene
Ful like a knight, in ſtele armed clene
Without abode, laſte gan him ſpede
Wondre lyuely, for to ſtride his ſtede
And thus theſe knightes, pompous and elate
For litel cauſe, fellen at debate

How Tideus & Polimite ſtriuen for her lodging

And as they ronne, togider on horſbacke
Either on other, firſt his ſpere brake
And after that, ful furquedous of pride
With ſharpe ſwerdes, they togider ride
Full trouſly, theſe mighty Champions
In her furie, like Tegres or Lions
As they hurtel, that al the palaice ſhooke
And king Adrastus, out of his ſlepe wooke
And made in haſte, his Chambreleins calle
And throughout the Courte, his worthy knightes Commanding hem, to deſcende and ſee (all
And reporte, what it might be
This wondreful noice, in his Court be night
And whan hey ſegh, twoo ſtraunge knightes
In plates thicke, and in brigh tmaill (ſight
Without Judge, they hadde great meruaill
And were diſmated, of this vncouth thing
And as they ſounde, tolde to the king
And Adrastus, for derkenelle of the night
From his chambre, with many torches light
In to the Courte, is deſcended doun
Al his meine ſtonding enuiron
Of theſe knightes hauing great wondre
And of manhode, he put hem firſt a ſondre
Hem commanding, like a gentil king
To leuen her ſtrif, and ceſſen of fighting
And entred in, with a knightely looke
And firſt frō hem, her ſwerdes bothe he tooke
Affermingeke, as to his fantaſie
It was a rage, and a great folie
So wilfully, her liues to iuparte.
Without Judge, her querel to departe
And ſpecially, in the derke night
Whan neither might, of other haue light
Charging hem, vp peine of her life
So diſſeuere, and ſtynten of her ſtrife
And tho Tideus, in al the haſte he might Ful humbly from his ſtede alight
And right mekely, with cher and contenaūce
Putte him holly, in the gouernaunce
Of Adrastus, in al manere thing
And Polimite eke, made no taryng
To highe him alſo, and wolde not with ſeye
The kinges bidding, lowly to obeye
So as him oughte, with due reuerence
And as they ſtoode, bothe in his preſence
He gan enquere, firſt of her eſtate
The cauſe alſo, why they were at debate
Of her Countrees, ſothely and her age
And aſked hem eke, touching her linage
Be deſcente, of what ſtocke they were borne
And Tideus, his anſwere yaue beforn
Tolde pleinly, and made no leſing
How he was ſone, vnto the king
Of Calcidoine, and rightful heire therto
And of his exile, the cauſe he tolde alſo
As ye haue herd in the ſtorie rad
And Polimite, with chere and face ſad
Vnto the king, touching his Countree
Said he was born, in Thebes the Citee
And Jocaſte, the great famous quene
His modre was, without any wene
But of his fader, whilom king and lorde

For

For veray shame, he spake neuer a worde
Onely, for yil I shal not feine
His fadre was, and brother, bothe tweine
The which in soth, he was full loth to telle
And ele the king, wolde him not compele
Of gentillesse, but bad withoute blame
Of his birthe, for to haue no shame
For holly the caas, he knew euery dele
Touching his kinne, he knew ꝑ grounde full Like as it was, be ful cleere reporte (wele
Enforsing him, for to doe comforte
With al his might, and al his bely peine
This manly king, to thele knightes tweine
And to hem said, before him as they stood
He wiste wel, that of ful worthy blood
They were descended, touching her kinred
And made in hafte, his officers lede
The straunge knightes, being at debate
Through his palaice, to chambre of estate
Eche be him self, for to take his ease
And euery thing, in soth ꝑ might hem pleafe
Was offred hem, like to her estates
And whan they were disarmed of her plates
Cuishens, Greues, and her Sabatons
Her Harneis voided, and her Habergeons
Two mantels, vnto hem were brought Frette with perle, and riche stones wrought
Of clothe of golde, and violet crimsin
Ful richely furred with Ermin
To lappe hem in, ayens the colde morowe
After the rage, of her nightes sorowe
To take her reste, til the sonne arise
And whan the king in ful prudent wise
First of al, he was not rekeles
The knightes hertes, for to sette in pees
That euer after, I dare afferme it wele
Eche was to other, trew as any stele
During her life, bothe in worde and dede
Vndre a knotte, bounde of brotherhede
And Idraftus the worthy king famous A feste made, riche and plenteous
To these knightes, him self therat present
And after mete, full goodly he hath sent
This noble king, for his doughtres dere
Of gentillesse, for to make chere
To the knightes, come fro so ferre
And like in soth, as Lucifer the sterre
Gladeth the morowe, at his vprising
So the ladies, at her in coming
With the stremes, of her eyen clere
Goodly apporte, and womanly manere
Contenaunces, and excellent faireneffe
To al the Courte, broughten in gladneffe
For the freschenesse, of her heuenly cheres
So agreable was, vnto the straungeres
At her entree, that in especial
Hem thought it like a thing celestial
Enhasting hem, in full knightly wise
Ayenst hem goodly to arise
And as they mette, with humble contenaūce
Ful conningly did her obseruaunce
Hem conueying, in to her sitting place
But sothely, I haue leiser none ne space
To reherse, and putte in remembraunce
Holly the manere, of her daliaunce
It were to longe, for you to abide
But wel I wot, that the god Cupide
Be influence, of his mighty honde
And the feruence, of his firy bronde
Her meeting first, fortuned hath so wele
That his arowes of golde, and not of stele
Yperced han, the knightes hertes tweine
Through the breste, with soche a lusty peine
That ther abode, sharpe as spere or launce
Depe yticched the point at remembraunce
Whiche may not lightly rased be away
And thus in ioye, they drive forth the day
In pley and reuel, for the knightes sake
And toward night they her chambre take
At due time, as her fadre bad
And on her weie, the knightes hem lade
Reuerently, vp be many a staire
Taking leue, gan anon repaire
To her lodging, in ful stately a Tour
Assigned to hem, by the herbeiour
And after spices, pleinly, and the wine
In Cuppes great, wrought of golde ful fine
Without tariyng, to bedde straight they gon Touching her reste, whether they slepe or non Demeth ye louers, that in soch maner thing
By experience, haue fully knowleching
For it is not declared, in my booke
But as I finde, the king al night wooke
Thoughtful in herte, the flories specifies
Musing fore, and ful of fantasies
First aduerting, the great worthinesse
Of these knightes, and the semelinesse
Her lusty youthe, her force, and her manhode
And how they were, come of rial blode
And this he gan, to reuolue aboute
And in his hert, hauing a manere of doubte
Atwene two, hanging in a balance
Whether he should make, an aliance
Atwen his doughtres, & the knightes tweine
For one thing ay, his herte gan constreigne
The remembraunce, of his auision
Of whiche tofore, made is a mencion
Touching the Lion, and the wilde Boore
It nedeth not, to reherse it no more Casting al way, in his fantasie

what

What it might clerely signifie
This derke dreame, that was hid and clos
But on the morowe, Arcytus vp aros
And to the Temple, the right weye he toke
And gan praie, deuoutely on his booke
To the goddes, of his dreme to specifie
And they him bede, homwarde for to hie
And to beholde in the knightes sheeldes
The fel beestes, peinted in the feeldes
Whiche shal to him, be cleer inspeccion
Ful pleinly make declaracion
Of his dreme, whiche he hadde on the night
And Arcytus, enhaked him ful right
In her sheldes, wisely to beholde
Wher that he sawe, as the goddes tolde
In the sheeldes, hanging vpon hookes
The beestes rage, with her mortal crokes
And to purpos, like as writte Bochas Polimyte ful streite enbraced was In the hide, of a fers Lioun
And Tideus, aboue his Habergeoun
A gipoun hadde, hidous scharper and hoor
Wrought of the bristeles, of a wilde Boor
The whiche beestes, as the storyleres
Where wrought, and bete vpon her baneres
Displaide brode, whan they should fight
Wherfore the king, whan he hadde a sight
At his repaire, in hert was ful glad
And with a face, ful demure and sad
With his lordes, that he aboute him hadde
To the temple he the knightes ladde
And whan they hadde, with al circumstaunces
Of Rites olde, doon her obseruaunces
Home to the Courte, they retourne ayein
And in hall, riche and wel besein
This worthy king, of herte liberal
Made a feste, solempne and rial
Whiche in deintees, surely did excelle
But it were dein, euery cours to telle
Her straunge sewes, and other sotilites
Ne how they sat, like her degrees
For lacke of tyme, I let ouer slide
And aftre mete, Arcytus toke a side
The knightes two, and like a prudent man
In secree wise, thus his tale he gan

How Arcytus spake to the two knightes in secret touching the mariage of his doughtres

Sirs (q he) I ne doubte it nought
That it is trewe a grene, ay in your thought
How that first, by goddes ordinaunce
And aftre nert, through fates purueiance
And be werking, of fortunes honde
Howe ye were brought, in to this londe
Both tweine, but now this laste night
Of whos comming, I am full glad and light
First in my selfe, shortly to expresse
Whan I consider, and see the likynesse
Of youre persones, with the circumstances
And holle the manere, of your gouernances
Seyng ful wel, wherto should I feigne
Ye ben likely, herafter to atteinge
To great estate, and habundance of good
Through your birthe, and your rial blood
Ye may not faile, but ye haue wrong
For ye are bothe manly, and right strong
And for to sette your hertes more at reste
My purpos, is I hope for the beste
So that in you, be no variance
To make a knotte, as be alliance
Itwene you, and my doughtres two Yif your hertes, accorde wele therto
And for I am fully in despeire
To succede, for to haue an heire
Therfore ye shal haue possession
During my life, of halfe my region
Forth with in honde, and al aftre my day
Ther is no man, that therto shal say nay
And sothely aftre, whan that I am graue
Eche of you, shal his part haue
Of this kingdom, as I haue prouided
This is to say, it shal be diuided
Itwene you two, euerich to be crouned
Your proparties, be equite compouned
So egaly, in euery mannes sight
That eche of you, reioce shal his right
And in youre witte, ye shall the lond amende
And of manhod, knightly it defende
Ayens oure enemies, and our mortal foon
And for the dayes, passed ben and goon
Of my desires, and my lusty youthe
I am ful sette, for to make it couthe
That ye shal haue, like min opinioun
The gouernaunce, of al this Regioun
To this entent, me semeth for the beste
Ye to gouerne, and I to liue in reste
Fully to folowe, the lust of my desires
Hunte and hauke, in wodes and riuers
Whan so euer, I haue therto plesance
And for to haue, non other entendance
Vnto nothing, but to mine ease
For whiche shortly, yif it agree and please
That I haue said, to you that ben so wise
And be according, vnto your auyse
Delaieth not, but in wordes plein
That you semeth, yeue answere ayen

And whan Arcytus, hadde his tale fined
Tideus with hed, ful lowe enclined
As he that was, a verray gentil knight
With his power, and his ful might Ful humbly, thanked the king

Touching

Touching his prokre, and so hegh a thing
And for his partie, saide he wolde assente
Fully of herte, neuer to repente
To al that euer, the king hath saide
And Polimyte, was also appaide
In the story, as it is comprehended
On euery parte fully, is holle descended
The kinges wille, to fulfille in dede
From point to point, and ther vpon procede
Whether so that euer, they winne or lese
And Tideus, made his brother chese
Of gentillesse, and of curtesie
Which that was most, to his fantasie
Of the Sistres, for to haue to wiue
And he in soth chosen hath Argyue
Whiche eldest was, ful womanly to se
And Tideus toke Deiphile
Of her beaute most souereigne excellent
Adrastus throughout, his lond hath sent
For his lordes, and his Bazonage
To be present at the mariage
Of the knightes, and make no letting
And they echone, come at his bidding
In goodly wise, meke and ful benigne
Ayein the day that he did assigne.
And thider come, ful many a lusty knight
Ful wele desein, and many a lady bright
From euery coste, and many a freshe squier
The storye seith, and many a communer
To beholde, the great rialte
And the manere, of this solempnite
But to telle al the circumstaunces
Of iustes reuel, and the diuerse daunces
The festes riche, and the yeftes greate
The peineful sighes, and the feruent hete
Of loues folke, brenning is the glede
And deuise of many a solein wede
The touches stole, and the amorous lokes
By sotel crafte, leide out lines and hokes
The Jelous folke, to traien and begile
In their a waites, with many a sondry wile
Al this in soth descryuen I ne can
But wele I, the new fame ranne
This mene while, with ful swifte passage
Vnto the Thebes, of this mariage
And be reporte trewe, and not feigned
Tho whan therof, the eares hath atteigned
Mine Auctour writte, of Ethiocles
Touching the honoure, and the great encres
Of Polymite highly magnified
And that he newly, was allied
With Adrastus, in the londe of Arge
The whiche thing, he gretly gan to charge
Dreding inly, that this Mariage
Shal after time, tourne to his damage
Sore musing, and casting vp and doun
The great power, and the hight renoun
Of Adrastus, the whiche of Grekes lond
Hadde al the power, soget to his hond
Lest that he, for Polymytes sake
Wolde vpon him, a new werre make
But yit that he, like the conuencioun
At time sette deliuer vp the toun
To his brother, be bonde of othe sworn
And by couenaunt, assured here toforn
Yit ye remembre, late as I you tolde
Whiche he was not in purpos for to holde
But for his beste, caste him for to varie
And therupon, liste no lenger tarie
Liche his desires, to shape remedies
And firste he sent, for his next allies
In whom he hadde, his most affiaunce
For his lordes, that hadde gouernaunce
Of his kingdom, to come to him anon
And whan they weren, present euerychon
He saide pleinly, wening for the beste
That is herte, shal neuer be in reste
But in sorowe, and in a manere of dred
Til is brother vtterly be ded
That he in Thebes, in his rial sete
Might alone regne in quiete
He ment him self, shortely and none other Unpertourbed, of Polimite his brother
And at his conseil diuerse of entent
I finde writen, thre folkes were present
Some in soth that faithful were and trew
And some also, that can change of new
And other ehe that betwene tweine
Couertly coude vndre coloure feigne

Commendacion of trouth.

The first seide, aboue al thing
Trouth should longe vnto a king
Of his worde, not be variable
But plein & hool, as a contre stable

How trouth is preferred in the book of Eldre aforn, kinges, women, and wine

For trouth first, withoute any wene
Is chief piller, that may a king susteine
In ioye and honoure, for to lede his life
For trouthe somtyme, hadde a prerogatife
As of Eldre, the booke can specifie
Recorde I take, of prudent Neemye
That worthy kinges, for al her great pride
Wine, and woman, ben ehe lette aside
With al power, and dominacion
Hauing reward, in comparison
To trouthes might, and trouthes worthines
For as Eldre, pleinly doth expresse
Who so taketh hede, in the same place
The influence sothely, and the grace

Of

Of trouth alone, this olde Neemye
Gatte him licence, to redifie
The wales newe, of Hierusalem
Whiche is treasure chief of euery Realme
For Salomon write, howe ỳ thinges tweine
Crouth and mercy, linked in a Cheine

Crouth and mercy preseruen a king from al aduersite.

Preserue a king, like to his degre
From al mischief, and al aduersite
Alas therfore, that any doublenesse
Uariaunce, or elles vnstidernesse

Chaunge nor doublenesse shoulde not be in a king.

Change of worde, or mutabilite
Fraunde or disceipte, or instabilite
Soulde in a king, haue domination
To causen after, his destruction
Of kinges redeth the storie doun by rowe
And seeth how many, haue ben ouerthrowe
Through her falsched, from fortunes whele
For vnto God, it pleseth neuer adele
A king to be double, of entent
For it may happe, that the worlde is went Ful ofte sithe, by sleight of her werking
But thus the trouth, God seeth in euery thig
Right as it is, for ther may be no cloude
Tofore his sight, trouth for to shroude
It may be clipsed, and derked be deceipte
By false engine, ligging in a weite
As a serpent, for to vndermine
But at last, it wil cleery shine
Who ỳ saith nay, and shew his bright bemes
For it in soth, of kingdomes and of realmes
Is bearer vp, and conseruatrice
From al mischief, and sothfast mediatrice
To God aboue, who so list to se
To kepe a king, in prosperite
On euery side, as I afferme dar
For whiche ye kinges and lordes, beeth wele
Your beheftes, iustely for to holde (war
And thenketh how Thebes, with his walles
Destroied was platly, this is no les (olde
For the doublenesses, of Ethiocles
That with his people, sore after bought
Onely for that he, nat by conseil wrought
Of hem that were, both trew and wise
Him list not werke, by her auise
But lefte trouth, and sette his fantasie
To be gouerned, be fals flaterie

The conseil of fals flatereres.

That bad him thinke, how he was a knight
And to holde of force, more than of right
During his life, the lordship of the toun
And not to lese, his possession
For no bonde, nor hestes made tofore
But let his brother, blowe in an horn
Where that him liste or pipe in a rede
This was the conseil, platly and the rede
Of soche as liste not, to say the sothe
But falsely flatre, with her wordes smothe
And whan they hadde holle, her tale tined
Ethiocles fully, is enclined
Whose euer theratte, laughe or wepe
Like her conseil, possession to kepe
Who that saith nay, grutcheth ther ayein
Him to contraire, him thought was but vein

How the pere was come out that Ethiocles regned in Thebes.

But in this wile, that the sheene sonne
The .xii. signes, rounde aboute ronne
With Ethiocles, by iuste rehening
In Thebes was crouned, lord and king
Holding the Sceptre, and the Diademe
That by reson, as it wolde seme
The time was ful complete, and the space
Of couenante, he should voide is place
And Polymite eke, his tourney make Toward Thebes possession to take
Of due title, but he hadde wrong
Whiche thought in sothe, ỳ pere thas wondre long
Of his exile, or that it come aboute
And for he hadde in hert, a maner of doubte
Left in his brother, were falsehed founde
To aquite him self like as he was bounde
To Adrastus, he gan declare his herte,
Beseching him, this matere to aduerte
And therupon, to yeue conseill sone
Touching his right, what was best to done
Whether it were best, to go or to abide Or like a knight, manly to ride
Hym self alone, and make no message
For to chalenge his rightful heritage
Withinne Thebes, either be pees or strife
And therupon, to ieoperde his life
Thus was he sette, for al his fers brother
But Adrastus, sothely thought another
Bet was to sende, then him self to gon
Left he were trapped, among his mortal foon
Hauing his brother, suspect in this caas
That by fraude, or be some fallas
He wolde werke, to his destruction
Yif he were hardy, to entre in to the toun
For whiche he bad him, prudently take hede
Fully concluding, how it were more spede
That some other, be to Thebes sent
To perceiue, fully thentent
Of Ethiolus inward by some signe
And yif that he, his croune wil resigne
For thilke yere, like as he made his oth
And whan he knew, how his purpos goth

Ther

Thereupon to werken, and procede
And thus Adrastus, wisely gan hym rede,

How Tideus tooke upon hym, to doe the message of Polimite his brother.

And while thei treate, upon this matere
Tideus with a manly chere
Saied utterly, for his brothers sake
This message, he would undertake
With holle thempryse, of thenballiate
Were it welefull, or infortunate
He will not spare, what soeuer betide
But Adrastus, on that other side
And Polimite in conclusion
Were contraire, to that opinion
And saied sothly, as hem thought right
Sith that he was, so well a prised knight
And defended, of so worthie blood
That thei nolde, for none yearthly good
For all Thebes, with the regalitie
Put his bodie, in soche ieopardie
But al this thing, auaileth him right nought
For he will forthe, how dere that it bought Takyng leaue, first of all the estates
And armed hym in maill, and sure plates
And shope hym foorthe, upon his iournie
Who made then sorowe, but Deiphile.

The sorowe of Deiphile, when Tideus went, toward Thebes the citee.

With bitter teares, dewed all her face
Full ofte sithes, swounyng in the place
Trist and mournyng, in her blache wede
And when she sawe, that he tooke his stede
So inwardly, encrease gan her mone
Seyng her Lorde, so ridyng forthe alone
Upon his waie, this worthie Tideus
And in all haste, the storie telleth vs
He spedeth hym so, makyng no delaies
That in the space, of fewe daies
The high toures of Thebes, he gan see
And entred is into that citee
Wisely enquiring, where the palaice stoode
And like a knight, thider streight he rode Marked full well, in many a mannes sight
Like Mars hymself, in stele armed bright
Till he atteined hath, the chief dongeon
Where as the kyng, belde his mansion
And through the palaice, w a knightly looke
Into the hall, the right waie he tooke
From his stede, when he light a doun
Not aferde, but hardie as Lion
Where as the kyng, with lordes a great route
In the hall sittyng, rounde aboute
He entred in, moste manfull of courage
To execute the fine, of his message
And as hym thought, conuenient and due
Full connyngly, he gan the king salue
Requiryng hym, of kyngly excellence
In goodly wise, to yeue hym audience
And not desdaine, neither in porte ne chere
Sith he was come, as a messagere
From Polimite, his owne brother dere
Ginnyng his tale, thus as ye shall here.

How wisely and how knightly Tideus did his message.

Quod he, unto your worthinesse
My purpose is, briefly to expresse
The effecte holly, as in sentement
Of the message, why that I am sent
It were in vein, long proces to make
But of my mattere, the verie grounde to take
In eschuyng, of prolixitie
And voide awaie, all superfluitie
Sith your self, best ought to understonde
The cause fully, that we haue on honde
And eke conceiue, thentent of my meanyng
Of right wilenesse, longyng to a kyng
First considred, if that ye take hede
When Edippus, the olde kyng was dede
How that your self, and your brother blyue
For the croune, contagiously gan striue
As mortall foen, by full greate hatrede
Whiche of you twoo, should first succede
Till that ye were, by meanes reconsiled
Ye to reigne, and he to been exiled
Out of this toune, for a yeres space
And then ayein, resorte into his place
To reigne as kyng, and ye to voiden out
So as your tourne, by processe cometh about Eueriche of you, patiently tendure
Thentrechaungyng, of his auenture
Who were put out, or stoode in his estate
Therevpon, to make no debate
Liche the couenaunt, and conuencion
Enrolled vp, by lordes of the toun
Whiche of reason, mate not be denied
Sithen ye haue, a yere occupied

The requeste that Tideus made, in the name of Polimite, under the title of conuencion.

Polimite requireth, you of right
To acquite you, as a true knight
In eschuyng, of mortall warre and strife
Sith ye had, a prerogatife
As eldest brother, for to reigne aforne
And thinketh how, that ye arn sworne
Your othe to kepe, and make no tariyng
Holly aduertyng, liche a prudent kyng
That trouth is more, in comparison
Then all the treasour, of your region
More acceptable, unto God and man

Then all the richesse, that ye reken can Wherefore in haste, and let there be no slouth
Quiteth your self, iustely in your trouth
Vnto your brother, auoidyng this citee
And let hym reigne, in his roiall see
The croune of Thebes, a yere to occupie
Then will all Grece, preise and magnifie
Your high renoun, and maie saie none other
But ye acquite you, iustely to your brother
This holle thessecte, of all that I will sain
Answere expectant, what ye will send ayain
When Tideus, had tolde his tale
Ethiocles trisse, and wonder pale
His concepte first, in maner hath refreigned
Dissimulyng, vnder colour feigned
Shewyng a chere, in maner debonaire
To his entente, wonderly contraire
Inward in harte, wood and furious
Tournyng his face, toward Tideus
He gan abreide, and at laste out spake
And euen thus, vnto hym he spake.

The answere of kyng Ethiocles.

I haue greate merueile (q he) in my thouzt
Of the message, whiche that thou hast brouzt
That my brother, as thou hast expouned
Desireth so, in Thebes to be crouned
Hauyng reward, to thabundance
The greate plentie, and the sustisance
That he hath now, with the kyng of Arge
That me semeth, he should little charge
To haue Lordship, or dominion
In the boundes, of this little toun
Sith he reigneth, so freshly in his floures
Surmountyng, all his predecessours
By newe encreace, through fortunes might Wherefore in harte, I am right glad & light
Fully trustyng, if I had nede
To his helpe, that without drede
Like a brother, that I should hym finde
To me ward faithfull, true and kinde
Supposyng plainly, euermore
Of this reigne, he set but little store
Nor casteth hym not, for so short a while
As for a yere, his brother to exile
To liue in pouertee, and in greate distresse
He will not suffer it, of his hegh noblesse
It were no token, of no brotherhede
But a signe rather, of hatrede
To interrupte my possession
Of this little poore Region
All that he spake, who so coud aduarte
Of verie storme, rooted in his harte
As hem sempte, the store can you teache
By the surplus, sothly of his speache
He might no lenger, hym restreine
But plainly saied, as betwene vs twene
I meane thus, Polimite and me
There is no bonde, nor surete
Ne saith imade, that maie hem availe
As he claimeth, to yeue the gouernaile
Of this citee, neither yere ne daie
For I shall let hym, sothly if I maie
That he shall not, by title of his bonde
Reioyle in Thebes, half a foote of londe
Let hym kepe, that he hath wonne
For I purpose, as I haue begonne
To reigne in Thebes, henforthe all my liue
Maugre all hem, that therayen striue
And in despite, of his frendes all
Or the counsaile, that hym list to call
Let hym be sure, and knowe this right well
His manasyng, I drede neuer a dell
And siberly, as to my deuise
It sheweth well, that thou art not wise
But suppressed, with a manere of rage
To take on thee, this surquedous message
And presumest to doe, so high offence
So boldely to speake, in my presence
But all in fere, auaile shall right nought
For the tithynges, that thou hast brought Shall vnto hym, by disencreas
Be better were, to haue been in peas
Then of folie, and presumpcion
Ayenst me, to seche occasion
For I liue, and thereto here myne honde
As I saied erst, he winneth here no londe
While the wall, of this toun maie stonde
For plainly, I doe thee to vnderstonde
That thei shull first, be beate doun full lowe
And all the toures, to the yearth ithrowe
Ere he in Thebes, haue any thing a do
Lo here is all, retourne and saie hym so.

When Tideus sawe, the feruent ire
Of the kyng with angre, set on fire
Full of despite, and of Malencolie
Conceiuyng eke, the greate felonie
In his apporte, like as he were wood
This worthie knight, a little while stood Sad and demure, ere he would ought sain
But at laste, thus he saied ayen.

The knightly answere, that Tideus gaue ayein to the kyng.

Certes (q he) I conceiue of newe
Aboute thee, thy counsaile is vntrewe
I dare it sain, and bowe it at beste
Ne thou art not faithfull, of thy behestе
Stable of thy worde, ȳ thou hast said toforne
But deceiuable, and falsely eke forsworne
And eke periurate, of thine assured othe
But whether so be, that thou be lese or wroth

I saie thee shortly, holde it for no sage
All this shall tourne, vnto thy damage
Triste it well, and in full cruell wise
All Grekes londe, shall vpon thee arise
To be auenged, and manly to redresse
The greate vntrouth, and the hegh falsnesse
Which ỳ thou hast, ayein thy brother wrought
It shall full dere, after this be bought
And verily in deede, as thou shalt here
Kyng Idraetus, will medle in this matere
And all the Lordes, about hym enuiron
That bounden be, to his subiection
Princes, Dukes, and many a noble knight
In sustenyng, of thy brothers right
Shall on a daie, with spere and with shelde
Ayenst thee, be gadred in a feelde
Knightly to preue, all by one assent
That thou art fals, and double of entent
Of thy promes atteint, and eke outraied
And leue me well, it shall not be delaied
But in all haste, execute in deede
Like thy deserte, thou shalt haue thy meede
For God aboue, and his right wisenesse
Soche open wrong, shall in hast redresse
And of his might, all soche collusion
Reforme ayein, and all extorcion
For this thy line, falshode shall not batille
Ayens trouthe in feelde, to holden battaille
Wrong is croked, bothe halte and lame
And here anon, in my brothers name
Is I that am, his next allie
At his querele, shortly I defie
Fully auised, with al myne holle entent
And ye Lordes, that been here present
I you require, of your worthinesse
To saie trouthe, and beare witnesse
When tyme cometh, and iustely to recorde
How your kyng, falsely can discorde
From his besse, of false variance
And thinke on how ye, of faith and ligeance
Are bounde echone, ye maie not go there fro
For to obeie, and serue bothe two
This next yere, now anon folowyng
Is to your Lorde, and to your true kyng
Polimite, though he be now absent
By iuste accorde, made in Parlement
At your deuise, whiche sitten here a rowe
Engrossed was vp, as it is well knowe
And enrolled, onely for witnesse
In your Registers, to voide all falsnesse
That none of you, varie maie of newe
From that I saie, but if he be vntrewe
For whiche I rede, your selfe to acquite
Let no tyme lenger, lie in respite
But at ones, without more tariyng
Of manly force, set home your kyng
Maugre his fone, like as ye are bounde
And let in you, no slothe be founde
To put hym iustly, in possession
This is my counsaill, in conclusion.

How manly Tideus departed frō the kyng.

When Tideus, had his message saied
Like to the charge, that was on hym laied
As he that liste, no lenger there soiourne
Fro the kyng, he gan his face tourne
Not a stonied, nor in his harte aferde
But full proudely, laied honde on his swerde
And in despite, who that was lief or loth
A sterne pace, thrugh the hall he goth
Through the courte, and manly toke his stede
And out of Thebes, fast gan hym spede
Enhastyng hym, till he was at large
And sped hym forth, toward the lond of Argos
Thus leue I hym, ridyng forthe a while Whiles that I, retourne ayein my stile
Unto the kyng, whiche in the hall stoode
Emong his Lordes, furious and wood
And his harte wrothe, and euill apaied
Of the wordes, that Tideus had saied
Specially, hauyng remembrance
On the proude, dispitous defiance
Whiles that he sat, in his riall See Upon whiche, he would auenged be Full cruelly, what that euer befall
And in his ire, he gan to hym call
Chief Conestable, of his Chiualrie
Chargyng hym, faste for to hie
With all the worthie chois, of his housholde
Soche as he knewe, moste manfull and bolde
In all haste, Tideus for to sue
Tofore or he, out of his londe remue
Up peine oblise, and lesyng of her hedde
Without mercie, anon that he be dedde.

How falsely Ethiocles laied a bushement in the waie, to haue slaine Tideus, in his repaire.

And of knightes, fiftie were in nombre
Mine aucthor saieth vnwarely, him to cōber
Armed echone, in maile and thicke stele
And therewithall, thorsed wonder wele
Atte posterne, forthe thei gonne to ride
By a gein pathe, that laie out a side
Secretly, that no man hem aspie
Onely of treason, and of felonie
Thei hadde hem forthe, all the long daie
Of cruell malice, for to stoppe his waie
Through a forest, all of one assente
Ful couertly, for to laie a bushemente
Under an hill, at a straite passage
To fallen on hym, at more auauntage

The same waie, that Tideus gan drawe
At thilke mounte, where ỳ Spinx was slawe,
He nothyng ware, in his opinion
Of the compassed conspiracion
But innocent, like a gentill knight
Rode aye forthe, till it drowe to night
Sole by hymself, without companie
Hauyng no man, hym to wise or guie
But at laste, liftyng vp his hede
Toward eue, he gan to take hede
Mid of his waie, right as any line
Thought he sawe, ayenst the Moone shine
Sheldes fresshe, and plates burned bright
The whiche enuiron, caste a great light
Imagenyng, in his fantasie
There was treason, or conspiracie
Wrought by the kyng, his iourney for to lette
And of all that, he nothyng sette
But well assured, in his manly harte
Liste not ones, aside to diuarte
But kept his waie, his sheeld vpon his brest
And caste his spere, manly in the rest.

Wher worthie Tideus outraied fiftie knightes, lyyng in awaite for to slaen hym.

And the first, platly that he mette
Through the bodie, proudely he hym smette
That he fell dedde, chief maister of hem all
And then at ones, thei vpon hym fall
On euery paas, by compas enuiron
But Tideus, through his high renoun
His bloodie swerde, let about hym glide
He sleth and killeth, vpon euery side
In his ire, and his mortall tene
That meruail it was, how he mist so sustene
Ayenst hem all, in euery halfe be set
But his swerde, was so sharpe whet
That his fomen, founde it full vnsoote
But he alas, was made light on foote
By force grounded, in full greate distresse
But of knighthode, and of high prowesse
Up he rose, maugre all his fone
And as thei came, he slough hem one by one
Like a Lion rampant, in his rage
And on this hill, he fonde a narowe passage
Whiche that he tooke, of full heigh prudence
And liche a Bore, stonding at his defence
As his fomen, proudely hym assaile
Vpon the plein, her blood he made to raile
All enuiron, that the soile ware redde
Nowe here nowe there, as thei fellen dedde
That here laie one, and there laie two or three
So mercilesse, in his cruelte
Thilke daie he was, vpon hem founde
And at ones, his enemie did confounde
Where as he stoode, this mightie champion
Beside he sawe, with water tourned doun
An huge stone, large, rounde, and square
And sodeinly, ere that thei were ware
As it had lien, there for the nones
Vpon his toen, he rolled it at ones
That ten of hem, wenten vnto wrache
And the remenaunt, amased drewe a backe
For one by one, thei went to mischance
Thus finally, he brought to outrance
Hem euerichone, Tideus as blithe
That none but one, left of hem a lithe
Hymself thurte, and iwounded kene
Through his harneis, bledyng on the grene
The Theban knightes, in copas round about
In the baley slain, all the holle rout
Whiche pitously, again the Moone gape
For none of hem, shortely might eschape
But dedde echone, as thei haue deserued
Sauf one except, the whiche was reserued
By Tideus, of this entencion
To the kyng, to make relacion
How his knightes, haue on her iourney sped
Euerichе of hem, his like left for a wedde
And at metyng, how thei haue hem borne
To tellen all, he assured was and sworne
To Tideus, full lowly on his knee
By whiche ensample, openly ye maie see.

How trouth with little multitude, hath euer in the fine, victorie of falshode.

Ayens trouthe, falshode hath no might Figh on querels, not grounded vpon right
Without whiche, maie be no victorie
For euery man, haue this in memorie
That greate power, shortely to conclude Plentie of good, or greate multitude
Sleight or engine, force or felonie
Arne to feble, to holde a champertie
Ayenst trouth, who that liste take hede
For at ende, falshode maie not spede Tendure long, ye shall finde it thus Recorde I take, of worthie Tideus
That arted his honde, through trothes excellence (lece
Fiftie knightes slough, in his defence
But one except, as I late tolde
Sworne and assured, with his hand vpholde
The kyng tenforme, how thei were atteinte
And Tideus of bledyng, was wonder feint
Mate and wearie, and in greate distresse
And ouerlaied, of verie feblenesse
But as he might, tho hymself sustene
He tooke his hors, stondyng on the grene
Worthed vp, and forthe he gan to ride
In easie paas, with his woundes wide
And sothly yet, in his opinion
He was alwaie, a ferde of treason

But

But anguisshous, and full of bestie peine
He rode hym forthe, till he did attaine
Into the boundes, of Ligurgus londe
A worthie kyng, and manly of his honde

How Tideus all to wounded, came into Ligurgus londe.

And he full pale, onely for lacke of blood
Tideus sawe, where a Castell stood
Strong and mightie, builte vpon a roche
Toward whiche, faste he gan approche,
Conueighed thider, by clerenesse of the stone
That by night, ayens the Moone shone
On heigh toures, with crestes Marciall
And ioynyng, almoste to the wall was a gardein, little out beside Into whiche, Tideus gan to ride
Of aduenture, by a gate small
And there he fonde, for to rehenall
A lustie Erber, vnto his deuise
Swete and freshe, like a Paradise
Verie heauenly, of inspeccion
And first of all, he alight adoun
The goodly place, when that he beheelde
And from his necke, he voided hath his shelde
Drewe the bridell, from his hors hedde
Let hym go, and toohe no maner heede Throughe the gardein, that enclosed was Hym to pasture, on the soote gras
And Tideus, more heauie then is Ledde
Vpon the herbes, grene white and redde
As hym thought, that tyme for the beste
He laied hym doune, for to take his reste
Of wearinesse, desirous to slepe
And none awaite, his bodie for to kepe
And with dreames, grudged euer emong
There he laie, till the Larke song
With notes newe, heigh vp in the aire
The glad morowe, rodie and right faire
Phebus also, caskyng vp his beames
The heigh hilles, gilte with his streames
The siluer dewe, vpon the herbes rounde
There Tideus laie, vpon the colde grounde
At vprisse, of the shene Sonne
And stoundemell, his grene woundes ronne
Rounde aboute, that the soile depeint
Was of the grene, with the redde meint

How Ligurgus doughter, found Tideus sleping in the herbere, all forwounded.

And euery morowe, for hollsomnesse of aire
Ligurgus doughter, did make her repaire
Of custome aye, emong the floures newe
In the gardein, of many a diuers hewe
Soche ioye had she, for to take hede
On her stalkes, for to seen hem spredde
In the alures, walkyng to and fro
And when she had, a little while go
Her self alone, caskyng vp her sight
She beheelde, where an armed knight
Laie to reste hym, on the herbes colde
And hym beside, she gan eke beholde
His mightie steede, walkyng here and there
And she anon, fell in a maners fere
Specially, when she sawe the blood
Spradd on the grene, aboute there she stood
But at laste, she caught hardinesse
And womanly, gan her for to dresse
Toward the knight, hauyng a maner dredde
And greate doubt, lest that he were dedde
And of her will, lothly this was chiek
That she thought, for to make a priek
How that it stoode, of this man full ofte
And forthe she goeth, and toucheth hym softe
Where as he laie, with her hondes smale
And with a face, dedly bleike and pale Liche as a man, a dawed in a swough
He vp sterte, and swerde drough
Not fully out, but put it vp ayein
Inone as he hath, the Ladie sein
Beseechyng her onely, of her grace
To haue pitee, on his trespace
And rewe on hym, of her womanhede
For of a frate, he was fall in dreede
Lest he had been, assailed of newe
Of the Thebans, preued full vntrewe
For dreede of whiche, he was so rekeles
Full humbly, hym yeldyng to the pees
Crist in himself, & he passed had his boundes
And when & she sawe, his mortall woundes
She had routh, of verie gentillesse
Of his disease, and his distresse
And bad he should be, nothyng dismaied
Nor in harte, sorfull nor affraied
Discomforte hym, in no maner thyng
For I (q she) am doughter to the kyng
Called Ligurge, whiche greatly me delite
Euery morowe, this gardein to visite
It is to me, so passingly disporte
Wherefore (q she) beth of good comforte.

How womanly the Ladie aquitte her, to Tideus in his disease.

For no wight here, touchyng your viage
Shall hinder you, ne doe you no damage
And if ye liste, of all your auenture
The plain trouthe, vnto me discure
I will in sothe, doe my besinesse
To reforme, your greuous heuinesse
With all my might, and holle my diligence
That I hope, of your greate offence
Ye shall haue helpe, in your aduerlitee
And as forthe, as it lith in me

Trusteth right well, ye shall no faute finde
And when he sawe, that she was kinde
So womanly, so goodly and benigne
In all her porte, by many a diuers signe
He vnto her, by order will not spare
His auentures, fully to declare
In Thebes first, touchyng his message
And at hill, of the woodie rage
Of his woundes, and of his hurtes sore
It were but vain, to reherce it more
By and by, he tolde it euery dele
The whiche in sothe, she liked neuer a dele
But had routhe, and compassion
Of his mischief, wrought by false treason
Ridyng in haste, that he should her sue
And womanly, as her thought due
To a chamber, she ledde hym vp a loste
Full well besein, there in a bed right soste
Richely abouten, apparailled
With clothe of golde, all the floure trailled
Of the same, bothe in length and brede
And first this Ladie, of her womanhede
Her women did bid, as goodly as thei can
To be attendant, vnto this wounded man
And when he was, vnarmed to his sherte
She made first washe, his woundes smerte

How Tideus was refreshed, in the Castell of the Ladie.

And serch hem well, w diuers instrumētes
And made sette soundrie ointementes
And Leches eke, the best she could finde
Full craftely, to staunche hym and to binde
And euery thing, that maie doen hym ease
To swage his peine, or his wo tapese
Was in the Courte, and in the Castell sought
And by her bidding, to her chamber wrought
And for his sake, she hath after sent
For soche deintees, as were conuenient
Moste nutritike, by Phillies lore
Hem that were sike, or wounded to restore
Making her women, eke to taken kepe
And awaite on hym, on nightes whē he slepe
And be well ware, that no thing a starte
That was or might, be lukie to his harte
And with all this, she prayed hym abide Till he were strong, and mightie for to ride
In the Castell, to plaie hym and disporte
And at leiser, home ayein resorte
When he might, by welde hym at his large
But all for nought, he will home to Arge
Tooke his leue, on the next daie
Without abode, to haste hym on his waie
Lowly thankyng, vnto her goodnesse
Of her fredome, and bounteous largesse
So womanly, that her liste take hede
Hym to refreshe, in his greate nede
By hotyng her, with all his full might
He would be her seruaunt, & her true knight
Whyle he liueth, of what she will him charge
And forthe he rode, till he come to Arge

How Tideus, repeired is home to Arge.

In full great hast, & would no where dwel
But what should I, reherse either tell
Of his repaire, the costes or the pleines
The greate roches, or the high Mounteines
Or all the manere, of his home comyng
Of the metyng, nor the welcomyng
Nor the ioye, that Adrastus made
Nor how his suster, or his wife were glad Nor how that thei, wherto should I write
Enbraced hym, in her armes white
Nor the gaderyng about hym, or the prees
Nor the sorowe, that Polimites
Made in hymself, to se hym sore wounded
His greuous hurtes, his sores eke vnsounded
His dedly looke, and his face pale
Of all this, to gimme a newe tale
It were in sothe, a maner idelnesse
Nor how hymself, in order did expresse
First how that he, in Thebes hath him borne
Ne how the kyng, falsely was forsworne
Nor of the waite, nor treason that he sette
When fiftie knightes, on the waie him mette
As ye haue herde, all the manere how Without whiche, my tale is long inow
But Adrastus, made men to seache
In euery coste, for many a diuers Leache
To come in haste, and make no tariyng
Upon a peine, by biddyng of the kyng
To doen her crafte, that he were recured
And of his sore, in euery parte assured
And thei echone, so her connyng shewe
That in space, of a daies fewe
He was all holle, made of his sichenesse
There was tho ioy, & then was ther gladnesse
Throughout the court, & through al the toun
For euery man, hath soche opinion
In Tideus, for his gentilesse
For his manhode, and his lowlinesse
That he was hold, the moste famous knight
And beste beloued, in euery mannes sight
Throughout Grece, in euery region
But now must I, make a digression
To tell shortly, as in sentement
Of thilke knight, that Tideus hath sent Into Thebes, onely to declare
Of the greate mischief, and the euill fare
Unto the kyng, how it is befall
The open trouthe, of his knightes all
How Tideus, hath slain hem euerichone

That

That saue him selfe, there escaped none
Which was reserued, frō sheding of his blood
The king to telle pleinly how it stood
And whan he hadde, reherced euery point
Ethiocles stood, in soche disioynt

How Ethiocles sore was astonied, whan he herde the death of his knightes.

Of hateful Ire, he were nigh wood
And in his teene, and in his fel mood
Of cruel malice, to the knight he spake
And felly seide, that it was for lake
Onely of manhode, & through her cowardise
That they were slain, in so mortal wise
And hanged be he, highe be the neche
That of your death, or of your slaughter reche
Or you compleine, either one or alle
Of the mischief, that is you befalle
I do no force, that none of you asserte
But sigh vpon, your fals coward herte
That o knight, hath through his renoun
Brought you alle, to confusion
Ful graceles, and ful vnhappy to Nay (q this knight) it is nothing so
It is thin vnhappe, pleinly and not oures
That so many, worthy warrioures
Whiche al her lyfe, neuer hadde shame
Excepte this querele, taken in thy name
That grounded was, and rooted on falsenesse
This was cause, in verray sothnesse
Of our vnhappe, I wot wele, and none other
With thine vntrouthe, don vnto thy brother
And that thou were, so openly forsworne
And percel cause, why that we were lorn
Was fals breking of thine assured oth
And tho the king, madde almoste for wroth
In purpos was, for to sle this knight
Onely for he, saide vnto him right
The whiche alas, bothe at eue and morowe
Suppressed was, with a dedly sorowe
Renning ay, in his remembrance
With the pitous, and vnhappy chance
Of the great mischief, and misauenture
Touching the death, and dicomfiture
Of his fieres, and of him selfe also That the shamefast importable wo
So was on him, with soche a mortal strif
That he was wery, of his owne life
Hent he hath a sword, and a lide sterte
And roue him self, euen to the herte
The king him self, being tho present
And the rumour, and the noise is went Through Thebes, of the wood rage
By soche as weren, ioyned by linage
To the knightes, slaine at hille
That all at ones, of one herte and wille
They wold haue arisen, throughout the Cite Upon the king, auenged for to be Whiche of her death, was chief occasion
But the Barons, and lordes of the toun
Ful besy were, this rumour and disese
Of hegh prudence, to stinte and appese
In quiete, euery thing to sette
And aftre that, the bodies home they fette
Of the knightes, like as ye haue herde
Afore yslain, with the bloodie swerde
Of Tideus, ful sharpe whette and grounde
And in the feelde, so as they hem founde
Onely of loue, and of affeccion
Solempnely they brought hem to the town
And like the manere, of the rites olde
They were first brente, in to aishes colde
And eche one yburied, like to his degre
Loo here the kalendes, of aduersite
Sorowe vpon sorowe and destruccion
Firste of the king, and al the region
For lacke onely, like as I you tolde
That beheftes, truely were not holde
The firste grounde, and rote of this ruine
As the storie, clerely shal determine
And my tale, herafter shal you lere
If that you list, the remnaunt for to here

Finitur pars Secunda, Sequitur pars Tercia.

O Cruell Mars, full of Malencolie
And of thy hynde, hote combuste and drie
As the sparkeles, shewen from so ferre
By the streames, of the redde sterre
In thy Spere, as it aboute goth
What was cause, that thou were so wroth
With hem of Thebes, through whos feruene
The Cite brent, and was set on fire
As bookes olde, wel reherse conne
Of cruel hate, roted and begonne
And engendred, the storie maketh minde
Onely of bloode corrupte and vnkinde
By infeccion, calle doriginal
Cauling a strif, dreful and mortal
Of which the mischief through al Grece ran
And king Adrastus, alderfirst began
Which hath him take, a cōquerie for to make Upon Thebes, for Polimites sake
In knighly wise, there to preue his mighe
Of ful entente, to recure his righe
And firste of all, he sette a parlement

And hath his letters, and meſſagers ſent
Thꝛough Grece, to many ſondꝛy kinges
Hem to enhaſte, and make no lettinges
And rounde aboute, as made is mencion
He ſent alſo, to many a region
Foꝛ Pꝛinces, Dukes, Erles, and Barons
To taken vp, in Cites and in tounes
And to cheſen out, the moſt lithieſt
And ſoche as weren pꝛeued foꝛ the beſt
As of manhod, and ſende hem vp echon
And in her honde, receiue her pay anon
With Idꝛaſtus, to Thebes foꝛ to ride
And tho lozdes that with him abide

The great purueiance of king Adꝛaſtus towarde the cite of Thebes.

In houſeholde ſtille, haue her leue take
To ꝛiden home, her retourne to make
In her countrees, as they were of degre
To ſuſtene hem, to take vp meine
And to make hem ſtronge with knightes and with ſpeꝛes, bowes, and Ardlakeres ſquꝛes
In al the haſte poſſible, that they may
And to retourne, in her beſte aꝛay
At terme ſet, ful manly to be ſein
Colozne Arge monſtren in a plein

The kinges e pꝛinces that come to Adꝛaſtus.

And as I ꝛede, ful wozthy of degre
Thidꝛe come firſte, Pꝛothonolope
The whiche was be recozde of wꝛiting
Of Archade, ſonne vnto the king
And ful pꝛudent, founde in warre and pees
There came alſo, the king Gilmicheues
As I find, ful famous of renoun
Thidꝛe come eke, the king Ypomedon
And paſſing all, of knighthod and of name
And excelling, by wozthineſſe of fame
The noble king, called Campaneus
Came eke to Arge, the ſtozie telleth thus Pꝛoued ful wele, and had ꝛiden ferre
And thidꝛe come, the king Melleager
King Genoz eke, that helde his ꝛial ſe
Yiue auctour ſaith, in the lond of Grece
King Loeris, and king Pirrus
And eke the king, called Tozolonus
And renouned, in many a region
There come the king, called Palenon
Olte aſſaied, and founde a manly knight
That with him brought, in ſele armed bꝛight
Ful many wozthy, out of his countre
And Tideus moſt knightly foꝛ to ſe
That noble man, that wozthy werreour
As he that was, of wozthineſſe the flour
Maiſtre and Mirrour, by pꝛoues of his hõde
Hath ſent alſo, into the mighty londe
Of Calcedoine, of whiche he was heire
That is hindom, bothe riche and feire
Charging his conſeil, and officers alſo
In all the haſte, that it may be do
To ſeken out, the beſte werreours
Of famous knightes, and pꝛoued ſoudeours
Thꝛugh al the lond, ꝛeid on hem this charge
Without abode, foꝛ to come to Arge
And they obeye, ful lowely his bidding
Enhaſting hem, and made no letting
But ſpedde hem faſte, vpon her iournee
And from Thebes, the mighty ſtrong citee
Came doun knightes, & many an other man
Maugre the king, to helpe what they can Conſidꝛed firſt, his falſhod and treſon
Ymeued onely, of tꝛouth and of reſon
Polimites, as they were ſwozn of yoꝛe
To his Croune, iuſtely him reſtoꝛe
And whan they wer, at large out of the toun
Vnto Arge, they be deſcended doun
And like her oth, and her aſſurance
As they were bounde, onely of ligeance
To him they come, in ful lowly wiſe
Lowly to doen, what him liſt deuiſe
And whan he had, her trouth ful conceiued
He hath to grace, goodly hem receiued
Aſſigning hem, her place amid the oſte
Aſſembled ther, from many a diuerſe coſte
That finally, in this companye
Ygadꝛed was, the floure of Cheualrie
Ycholen out, of al Geekes londe
The moſt knightly, and manful of her honde
That as I tꝛowe, ſithe the woꝛde began
Ther was not ſeen, ſo many a maly man
So wele hoꝛſed, with ſpere and with ſheide
To gider aſſembled, ſothely in a feide
There men might ſe many ſtraunge giſes
Of arming new, and vncouth deuiſes
Euery man, after his fantaſie
That yif I ſhoulde, in oꝛde ſpecifie
Euery peace, longing to armure
And therupon do my beſy cure
It were in ſoth, almoſt a daies werke
And the termes, alſo been ſo derke
To reherſe hem clerely, and to rime
I paſſe ouer, foꝛ lacke of time
And tel I wil, foꝛth of her lodging
How Idꝛaſtus, the noble wozthy king
Hath euery lozd, like to his degre
Receiued wele, within the cite
And there they had, like to her pleſance
Of what nedeth, ſulſome habondance
Foꝛ men and hoꝛs, plente of vitaile
Comaunding, that nothing ne faile
That all theſe noble wozthy werriours
Both high and lowe, and pooꝛe ſoudeours

I ſerued

Iserued were, of what they haue neede
For Idraftus, prudently toke hede

What it auaileth a king, to pate his people trewly her sonde.

Ful liche a king, touching her terme day
That they tofore, were serued to her pay
He was so free, he like nothing restreigne
And no man hadde cause, to compleigne
For hungre, thrust, ne for indigence
But al thing redy was, vnto her presence
And in a prince, it is full great repriek
To suffre his people, liue at mischiek
It is ful heuy, and greuous in her thought
Yif he habounde, and they haue right nought
He may not bothe, possede body and herte
He to be riche, and seen his people smerte
He may the body, of power wel constreine
But her harte, hath a ful long reine
Maugre his might, to louen at her large
Ther may no king, on hertes sette a charge
He hem coarten, from her liberte
Wen sain ful often, how that thought is fre
For which eche prince, lorde and gouernour
And specially, eche conquerour
Let him beware, for al his hegh nobleste
That bounte, fredom, plente, and largeste
By one accorde, that they his bridel lede
Left of his people, whan he hath most nede
He by defrauded, whan he his but alone
Than is to late, for to make his mone
But in his Courte, let him first deuise
To erile Scarcehed, and Couetise
Than is likely, with fredome yif he ginne
Loue of his people, euermore to wynne
To reigne longe, in honour and contune
Ay to encrease, by fauour of Fortune
And his enemies, manly to oppresse
For loue is more, than great richesse

How loue auaileth more to a king, than golde or richesse.

Golde faileth ofte, but loue wil abide
For life or death, by a lordes side
And the Tresour shortely, of a king
Stondeth in loue, aboue al thing
Farewel lordship, both mowe and eue
Specially, whan loue taketh his leue
And who so liste it, Mirrour for to make
Of knightly fredom, let him ensample take
Of Idraftus, the manly king famous
So liberal, and so bountuous
Vnto his people, at all times founde (founde
Whiche made him stronge, his lomen to con-
And loue onely, his enemies to werraye
Al Grece made, his bidding to obeie
Of one accorde, to knightly by his side
All at ones to Thebes for to ride
For tauenge, sithe they were so strong
The great iniure, and importable wrong
Vnto his sonne, and to his nert allye
As ye tofore, haue herde me specifie
But whiles Grekes, reste a time in pees
I wil resorte, vnto Ethiocles
Whiche in Thebes, warely hath espied
By his frendes, as he was certified
Of the Grekes, holy the ordenances
Her purpos eke, and her purueiance
And therof had, in herte a maner drede
And first he toke, his conseil and his rede

How Ethiocles made him strong, ayenst the coming of the Grekes.

Of the lordes and Barons of the toun
And of the wikes, of his region
How he might maken resistence
Manly to stonden, at defence
To be so strong, that ther were no doubte
And in the cuntrees, adiacent aboute
And eke also, in forein regions
He hath withholde, all the champions
And therupon, he sent out his espies
And his frendes, and his nert allies
And al the worthy, dwelling enuiron
Young freshe and lusty, he gadred to the toun
Maskewed his walles, and his toures
And stuffed hem, with manly soudeoures
Rounde about, he set many gonnes
Greate and smal, and some large as tonnes
In his hafty, palling seruent heate
He spent his tresour, and yaue yiftes greate
Vnto knightes, and worthy men of name
And euermore, to encrease his fame
He yaue to lordes Iuels manyfolde
Clothes of Veluet, Damaske and of golde
To get him hertes, sothely as I rede
To helpe him now, in his great nede
And prudently, purueied him tofore
Of flesshe, of fisshe, of wine and of corne
Set his Captains, erly and late
With ful great stuffe, stonding at euery gate
And made also, be werkemen that were trew Barbicans and Bulwerkes stronge and new Barreres cheines, and diches wonder depe
Making his auow, the citee for to kepe
While he liueth despite of all his foue
And by his goddes, of Metal and of stone
Full ofte he swore, bothe of herte & thought
That it shal first, ful dere den ybought
And manye a man, with polax swerde & knif
Before this towne, shal first lese his life
And ther shal eke, many sides blede
Er that his brother, possibly possede

The

The toun in pees, like as Grekes wene
But at ende, the trouth it shal be sene
Let him beware, and wele tofore prouide
For Idrastus, on that other side
For his partie, was not negligent
But on a day, he lde his parlement
Al his lordes, sitting enuiron
To dryue shortely, a plein conclusion
And vp tapoint, the fyne of her entent
But some thought, it ful expedient
Er they procede, to werke by thauise
Of one that was, ful prudent and wise
And circumspecte, in his werkes all
A worthy Bisshop, in to age fall
And called was, soothly by his name
Amphiorar, of whom the great fame

How the Bysshop Amphiorar was sent fore to come vnto the Grekes.

Through al the lades, both East and Southe
Among the Grekes, passingly was couth
A man in sooth, of olde antiquite
And most accept, of auctorite
First by reson, of his high estate
And eke for he was so fortunate
And in his werkes, was also secree
With the goddes, knowing her priuetee
By graunt of whom, as bookes specifie
He hadde a spirit, of trewe prophecie
And coude afore, ful openly diuine
Thinges begon, how they should fine
And eke by crafte, of calculacion
Yeue a doom, of euery question
And had in Magike, great experience
And fine coude, by heuenly influence
And by meuing, of the high sterres
A final doom, of conteke and of werres

The prophecie, of Amphiorar the Bisshop.

And wiste wel, as his goddes tolde
That yif Grekes, forth her iourney holde
At tourne shal platly, this is no fage
To great mischief, and great damage
Of hem echone, and in especial
The moste blood, right of the blood rial
Through al Grece, it may not be withdrawe
In this viage, shortely shal be dawe
And of him, why the Grekes wente
Who that euer, wepte him or bemente
This is the fine, and may not be socoured
Of the earthe, he shoulde be deuoured
Quicke as he was, he knewe it incertain
And for he saw, ther nas none other gain
To saue his life, nor no bet defence
Than vtterly, to withdraw his presence
Praiyng his wife, for him to prouide
Yif he were sought, that she wolde him hide
And womanly, for to kepe him clos
And of trouthe, conceiling his purpos
For al his truste, touching his greuaunce
Was ful set, in her purueiance
I hope to god, that he there not drede
Of no deceipte, in her womanhede
She was so trewe, as women ben echone
And also clos, and muet as a stone
That she ne wolde, as the mille stood Discuren him, for no worldes good
But finally, the Grekes of entent
In all his drede, haue for this Bisshop sent

How the wife of Amphiorar of conscience to saue her oth discured her husbonde.

And soughten so longe, er they might him
For cause his wife was to him so kinde (kinde
That so surely, hath locked vp his corps
But for she had, a maner remors
In her self, greuing her conscience
Dreding to falle, in great offence
Lest her soule, were in peril lorne whan she by oth, compelled was and sworne
They requering, yif she coude tell
Were her lord, the Bisshop shoulde dwel
Whiche to discure, her hert was ful loth
Til time she gan, remembre on her oth
And coude a trouthe, of custome nat denie
And had also, great conscience to lie
Wonder heuy, with a sorouful face
Maugre her luste, taughte hem to the place
Where as he was, shitte vp in a toure
Al alone, hauing no socoure
They fell on him, er that he was ware
And set him vp, in a ful riche chare
A foole he was, to iaoparde his life
For to discure, his conseil to his wife
And yet she was, ful sorry for his sake
And specially, whan she saw him take
But I hope, that her heuinesse
Can tallwage ful soone by processe
In short tyme, whan that he was gon
Ther is no tempest, may lest euer in one
But this Bisshop, by verray force and might Vnto Grekes, conueied was ful right
This hore grey, in his Chare sittyng
And they ful glad, weren of his coming
Hauing a trist, and ful opinion
Through the cause, and occasion
Of his wisdom, and his sapience
And be vertue, of his hegh prescience
They should eschue, al aduersite
Possible to fal, as in her iournee
And as the storie, fully hath deuised
Ful circumspecte, and right wele auised
He hath pronounced, in the parlement
Tofore the lordes, and the President

His

His clere conceipte, in verray sikernesse
Not entriked, with no doublenesse
Her disemale dayes, and her fatal houres
Her auentures, and her sharpe shoures
The froward so te, and vnhappy stoundes
The compleint of her dedly woundes
The woful wrath, and the contrariouste
Of fel Mars, and his cruelte
And how be meane, of his grey mood
Ther shal by shed, al the worthy blood
Of the Grekes, it may not been eschued
Yif her purpos, be execute and sued
Ther is no more, this shal be the fine
The hegh noblesse, shal drawe to decline
Of Grekes blood, in mischief, sorowe & woo
And with al this, I my self also
As my fate hath, before disposed Depe in the grounde, I shal be enclosed
And locked vp, in the derke vale
Of cruel death, lo this was the tale
That the Bysshop, to Adrastus tolde
Hym conseilling, his purpos to withholde
In eschuing, of more mischief and sorowe
For al his goddes, he toke to borowe
Yif the Thebans, and the Grekes meete
The fyne therof, shal be so vnsweete
That al Grece, after shal it rewe
Warning hem, yif they the mischief knewe
That shal folowe, whiche no man may lette
They wolde abstene, a siege for to sette Unto Thebes, and her purpos leue' (greue with whose woordes, the lordes gan hem
And therein hadde, but full small delite
And euerich, of hartely hegh despite
They abreide, and seide he was vntrewe
And a contreuer, of prophecies newe
And eke also, for al his long berde
In olde dotarde, a Coward and a ferde
And of rancure, gonne to defie
Bothe his calcling, and his Astronomie
And shortely saide, thei tolde therof none hede
He wil no thing, gouerne hem be his rede
This was the clamour, a noise in euery coste
Of hegh and lowe, throughout al the hoste
And specially, of the poore Soudeours
And of lordes, reigning in her flours
And of the estates, effectuelly I meane
Whiche of age, were but tendre and grene
That haue not hadde, of Marces influence
Of the werre, great experience
Here yif ye liste, ye may conslider and se
Of coueiting, great aduersite
Howe that youth, no peril cast afore
Til he in mischief, sodenly be lore
There as age, prouideth euery thing

Er he beginne, to casten the ending

How Age & youthe ben of diuerse opinions.

Youth is gouerned, by a large reine
To sterte forth, and can him not refreine
But of hed, sette on al at ones
As he that hurreleth, a penil harde stones
Bresteth him self, and vnwarly perbraketh
But Age experte, nothing vndertaketh
But be tofore, by good discrecion
Make a due examinacion
Howe it wil tourne, either to bad or good
But youthe as laste, as fired is the blood
Taketh empryses, of hasty wilfulnesse
Joie at ginning, the ende is wretchednesse
The olde prudent, in al his gouernaunce
Ful longe afore, maketh purueiance
But youthe alas, by counseil wil not werke
For whiche ful ofte, he stombleth in the derke
Thus selde is sen, the trouthe to termine
That age and youth, drawe by O line
And where that folie, hath dominacion
Wisedome is putte, in subiection

How that wisdome without supportacion, anaileth litel or nought.

Like as this Bisshop, w al his hegh prudence
For cause he might, haue none audience
Al his wisedome, and his prophecie
Of the Grekes was holden but folie
For though Plato, and wise Socrates
Moral Seneke, and Diogenes
Albumaser, and prudent Theolonee
And Tullius, that hade souereinte
Whilom in Rome, as of eloquence
Though al these, shortely in sentence
Were alyue, most conning and experte
And no man liste, her counseil to aduerte
Nor of her sawes, for to taken hede
What might auail, and it come to nede
For wher as prudence, can finde no socour
And prouidence hath no fauour
Farewel wisedome, and farewel discrecion
For lacke onely, of supportacion
For vnsupported, with his lockes hore
Amphiorar, sighen gan ful sore
With hed enclined, & many an heuy thought
Whan that he saw, his cõseil stood for nought
For vtterly, the Grekes as I tolde
Haue fully cast her fourney for to tholde
Made hem redy, and gonne for to hoste
Towarde Thebes, the citee for to werreie
And in Grece, wil no lenger tarie
And forth with hem, Amphiorar they carie
Set in his chare with a doolful herte
Whan he wiste, he might not asterte
Of his fate the disposicion

And

And hosteyng, in to the region
Of Ligurge, Grekes gan approche
I londry londe, with many a craggy roche
But al the waye, sothely that they gon
For hors ne man, water was ther non
So drie were, the vallis and the pleines
For al that yere, they had had no reynes
But ful great drought, as made is mencion
And al the lond, serching enuiron

The great mischief that the Grekes had for defaute of water.

They nothre founde welle ne Riuer
Hem to refresche, nor water that was cleer
That they alas, no refute ne coune
So importable, was the hete sonne
So hote on hem, in souldes wher they ley
That for mischief, men and hors they dey
Gaping ful drie, vpwarde in to the South
And some putten, her swerdes in her mouth
And spere hedes, in stronge as it is tolde
Tallwage her thrift, with the iren colde
And of his life, ful many one despeired
In this mischief, is home agein repeired
Til on a day, worthy Tideus
And with him eke, the king Campaneus
Of purpos rode, throughout the Contree
If they migh, any water see
From coost to coost, both ferre and nere
Till of fortune, they entred an herbere
With trees shadowed, fro the sonne hete
Ful of floures, and of herbes grene
Wonder holsome, of sight and aire
There in a lady, that passingly was faire
Sitting as tho, vnder a Laure tre
And in her armes, a litel childe had she Ful gracious of looke, and of vilage
And was also, wonder tendre of age
Sonne of the king, borne to succede
Called Ligurgus, in storie as we rede
Whos hertes ioye, and worldely eke disporte
Al his myrthe eke, plesance and comforte
Was in this Childe, of excellent fatrenesse
And this lady, Mirrour of semelinesse
Al sodenly, as she caste vp her sight
Upon his stede, saw an armed knight
Gretly abaished, gan her anon remue
But Tideus, gan after faste to sue

How Tideus complained to the lady in the herber for water.

And saide sustre, deth nothing dismaied
In your self, displeased nor affraied
For we are come, onely to this place
You to beseche, of mercy and of grace
Us to socoure, in our great nede
Declaring you, how it stand in dede
Here faste by, almost at honde
The worthiest, of al Grekes londe
Kinges, Princes, be lodged in the feide
And many other, with polax and with sheide
Whiche in mischief, peril and greate drede
For want of water, are lykely to be dede
For there was none, of high ne low degree
In al oure host, now passed daies thre
That dranke alias, I excepte none estate
Our fate, is so infortunate
Prayeng you, of womanly pite
Benignely, and gracously to se
How of Grece, al the Chevaulrie
Of her liues, stondes in ieopardie
That ye wolde, of womanhode tell
If ye knowe any, riuer, spring or well
Specially now, in our care
Of gentillesse, vnto vs declare
Lo here is al, yf ye lyste to here
That I wil seine, min owne sustre dere

And whan this lady, inly vertuous
The complaint herde, of worthy Tideus
Of berray pite, chaungeth chiere and hewe
And in her herte, vpon his woo gan rewe
And ful goodly, seyng his distresse
Saide vnto him, in al his heuinesse

How the lady curtesly taught Tideus to the wel

Certes (q she, yf I wer at large
Thouchig this child, which I haue in charge
I shoulde in haste, of al that doth you greue
To my power, helpe you and releue
Onely of routhe, and of compassion
And leue al other occupacion
Conuei eyou, and be your trew gide
To a riuer, but litel here delide
But I dare not, so moch me assure
This litel Childe, to putte in aduenture
I am so fearful, from it to departe
But for your sake, yet I shal do parte
My lyfe, my death, of trewe affection
To prouide for your saluacion
Toke the Childe, and leide it in her lappe
And richely, in clothes gan it wrappe
And couched it, among the herbes sote
And leide aboute, many an holsom rote
And floures eke, bothe blewe and rede
And supprised, with a manere of drede
With Tideus forth anon she went
As she in trouth, that no treson mente
And on her weie, wolde neuer dwell
Til she him brought, to a right faire wel
And to a riuer, of water ful habounde
But who was glad, and who was tho iocunde
But Tideus seyng the riuer
Whiche in al haste, sent his messager
To Adrastus, and bad him not abide

But

But doun descende, to the Riuer side
With al his hoste, licour for to haue
It this Riuer, her liues for to saue
And they enhasted hem, making non abode
All at ones, to the Riuer rode
For to drinke, they had so great luste
Of appetite, for to staunche her thruste
And some dranke, and founde it did hem good
And some were, so fervent and so wood
Upon the water, that in sikernesse
Through vndiscrete, and hasty gredinesse
Out of mesure, the water so they drinke
That they selle ded, euen vpon the drinke
And some naked, in to the Riuer ronne
Onely for hete, of the Somer Sonne
To bathen hem, the water was so colde
And some also, as I haue you tolde
I meane tho, that prudent were and wise
The water dranke, in mesurable wise
That of the thrust, they haue before endured
They were refreshed, fully and recured
And Grekes than, of high and lowe degre
For her profite, and her commodite
Compasse the riuer, Cristalin of sight
Of one accorde, they her tentes pight
To reste hem ther, in reles of here peine
Onely the space, of a day or tweine
And whiles Grekes, vpon the riuer lay
This Tideus, vpon the same day
Ful knightly, hath doon his diligence
This yong lady, with great reuerence
To Adrastus, goodly to presente
At whose coming, the king him selfe went Again her, she falling doun on knees
All the estates, tho present and degrees
Of Grekes londe, absent was not one
And in his Armes, toke her vp anon
Thanking her, of her bestinesse
Of her labour, and her kindenesse
Behoting her, like as he was holde
If any thing, pleinly that she wolde
That he may don, she shulde it redy finde
And also Grekes al, the storie maketh minde
Of the estates, beyng tho present
Thanked her, with al her holle entent
For the fresching, doon to many a Greke
And for her parte, they behight her eke
With her bodies, and goodes bothe two
What her liste, comande hem for to do
To be redy platly, and not faille
And here my Auctour, maketh rehersaille
That this lady, so faire vpon to se
Of whom the name, was Isiphile
To Adrastus tolde, as ye may rede
Lineally, the storie of her kinrede Somtime how she, a kinges doughtre was Reherssing to him, al the holl caas
First howe that she, out of her countre went Shortely for she, wolde nat assente
To execute, a conspiracion
Made by the women, of that Region
A thing contraire, agein al right
That eche of hem, vpon a certein night
By one accorde, shal warly take kepe
Fader, Brother, and husbandes in her slepe
With knives sharpe, and rasours kene
Kitte her throtes, in that mortal tene
Unto to this fine, as Bochas tell can
In al that lande, be not founde a man
But slain echone, to this conclusion
That women might, haue dominacion
In that kingdom, and regne at liberte
And on no parties, interrupted be
But for this lady, passing debonair
To this matere, was froward and contraire
Kepte her fader, that he was not slawe
But from the death, preserued & withdrawe
For whiche alas, she fled the Cuntree
And of a Pirat, taken in the See
To king Ligurgus, brought in al her drede
And for her trouthe, and her womanhed
To her he tooke, his yonge childe to kepe
Whiche in the herber, she lefte alone to slepe
Whan Tideus, she brought to the well
And be Jason, some bokes tell
That this lady, had sonnes two Whan that he, and Hercules also Towarde Colchos, be her countre cam
For to accomplisshe, the conquesse of the Ram
But who that liste, by and by to se
The storie hool of Isophilee
Her fadres name, of whiche also I write
I thought some sein, he named was Thorite
And some bookes, Hermos eke him call
But to know, the auentures all
Of this lady, Isophile the faire
So faithfull aye, and inly debonaire
Loke on the booke, that Jhon Bochas made
Whilom of women, with Rhetoriques glads
And directe, be ful souereigne stile
To faire Jane, the Quene of Cesile
Rede there the Rubrike, of Isophile
Of her trouth, and of her bounte
Ful craftely, compiled for her sake
And whan that she, her leue hath take
Of Adrastus, homward in her weie
Tideus gan her to conueye
To the Gardin, till she is repeired
But now alas, my matere is despeired
Of al ioye, and of al wilfulnesse

And destitute, of al mirthe and gladnesse
For now of wo, beginne the sharpe stoures
For this lady, hath founde among the floures

How the Child was slain of a foule serpēt in ỳ herber.

Her litel Childe, turned vp the face
Slain of a Serpent, in the selfe place
Her tail burled, with scales siluer shene
The venim was, so persing and so kene
So mortal eke, the perilous violence
Causeth alas, through her long absence
She was to slowe, homward for to hie
But now can she, but wepe, waile, and crie
Now can she nought, but sigh and complene
And wofully wringe, her hondes tweine
Dedly of looke, pale of face and chere
And gan to rende, her gilte tresses clere
And ofte sithe, gan to saye alas
I woful wretche, vnhappy in this cas
What shal I do, or whider shal I tourne
For this the fine, if I here sojourne
I wot right wel, I may it not escape
The pitous fate, that is for me shape
Socour is ther none, ne none other rede
Liche to my deserte, but that I mot be dede
For through my slouth, and my negligence
I haue alas, don to great offence
That my gilte, I may it not excuse
Shal to the king, of treson me accuse
Through my defence, and slouthe bothe two His sonne is ded, and his heire also Whiche he loued, more than al his good
For tresour none, so nigh his herte stood Nor was so depe, graue in his corage
That he his lihly, to fallen in a rage
Whan it is so, mine odious offence
Reported be, vnto his audience
So importable shal be his heuinesse
And well wot I, in verray sothfastenesse
That whan the quene, hath this thing aspied
To mine excuse, it may not be denied
I doubte it nat, ther geineth no pite Without respite, she wil auenged be
On me alas, as I haue deserued
That from the death, I may not be preserued
Nother by bille, nor by supplicacion
For the rage, of my transgression
Requereth death, and none other mede
And thus alas, she quaking in her drede
None other helpe, ne remedie can
But dreint in sorowe, to the Grekes ran
Of her tely woo, face and chere distreined
And her chekes, with weping al bereined
In the affray distraught and furious
Tofore al thoste, she came to Tideus Fil on knees, and gan her compleint make
And tolde pleinly, that for the Grekes sake
She must be ded, and shortely in substaunce
Reherling him, the groūde of her greuaunce
First how by traines, of a false serpent
The Childe was slain, while she was absent
And whan that he, her mischief vnderstood
In what disioynte, and peril that she stood
Vnto her ful knightly he behight
To helpe and further al that euer he might Her pitous woo, to stinten and appeale
And for to finde vnto her disease
Hastie comforte, he wente a ful great paas
To Idraetus, and tolde him all the caas
Of this vnhappy, woful auenture
Beseching him, to doon his besy cure
As he was bounde, of equite and right
And eke aduertise, and to haue a sight
How she quitte her, to Grekes here tofore
That they were lihly, to haue ben lorn
The socour voide, of her womanhede
For whiche he muste, of knighthod take hede
To remedien, this vnhappy thing

And Idraetus, like a worthy king
Taquite him selfe, the storie maketh minde
To this lady, wil not be founde vnkinde
Neither for coste, ne for no trauaile
But besy was, in al that might auaile
To her socoure, considred al thinges
And by thauise, of al the worthy kinges
Of Grekes londe, they ben accorded thus Princes Dukes, and with hem Tideus
To holde her way, and al at ones ride
To Ligurgus, dwelling there beside
Of one entent, if they may purchace
In any wise, for to get grace
For this lady, called Isophilee
They wolde assaye, if it might be
And to his palaice, ful rially bilt of stone
The worthy Grekes, cam riding euerichone
Euery lord, ful frechely on his stede
And Ligurgus, example of manly hede
Anon as he knewe, of her coming
Taquite him self, like a gentill king
Ageinst hem wente, to mete hem on the way
Ful wel beseine, and in good aray
Receiuing hem, with a ful knightly chere
And to Idraetus, said as ye shal here
Cosin (quod he) and gan him to embrace
Ye be welcome, to your owne place
Thanking hertely, to your hegh noblesse
That so goodly, of your gentillesse
Towardes me, ye liste you to acquite
Your selfe this day, your Cosin to visite
In this castel to take your lodging
That neuer yet, I was so glad of thing

In

In al my life, and therto here my trouthe
And euermore, ther shal be no slouth
That the chambres, and the large toures
Shal be deliuered, to your herbertoures
That euery lord, as he is of degre Vnto his lodging, assigned shal be Your officers, let hem selfe deuise
Yf the housing, largely may suffise
To you and youres, stretchen and atteine
That none estate, haue cause to compleine
And all youre host, lodged her beside Whiche ententifly, vpon you abide Let hem set, by my auctorite
Vitaille inough here in my cite
And al that may hem, socoure or saue
And at o woorde, al that euer I haue
Is ful and holl, at your commandement

How Adrastus and al the estates of Grekes preiden Ligurgus for the life of Hopbile.

(q Adrastus) that is not our entent
Nor no parte, cause of our coming
For we be come, al for an other thing
A certein gifte, of you to requere
Benignely, yf ye liste to here
Whiche may Grekes passingly auaile
Of our requeste, yf we do not faile
Which we dare not, openly expresse
Withouten that ye, wil of your gentillesse
Your graunte, affermc, confermc, and ratifie
Than were be bolde, it to specifie (q Ligurgus, what thing euer it be Not excepted, but onely thinges thre
The firste is this, it touche not my life
My yonge sone pleinly nor my wife
Take al my good, and what ye liste prouide
Of my tresoure, and set theise thre aside
Al the surplus, I compte nat amyte
Than Adrastus, astonied was alite
What Ligurgus, in conclusion
Of his sonne, made exception
And whiles they treate, thus in ferre
There came forth one, with a wokul chere
Of face and looke, pale and nothing red
And loude crieth the kinges sonne is ded
Alas the while, that whilom was so feire
After Ligurgus, borne to ben his heire
The whiche alas, hath yolden vp the breth
Of a Serpent, stong vnto the death
And with his wounde, new freshe and grene
In the herber lithe, that pite is to sene
And hath so lein, almost al this day
But whan Ligurgus, herde this affra
And wiste his childe, was ded and had no mo
Litel wonder, though that he was wo
For sodenly, the importable smerte
Ran anon, and hente him by the herte

The sorowe that king Ligurgus made for the death of his Childe, and the lamentacio of the Quene.

That for constreynt, of his dedly peine
Throughout he felt, corsen euery deine
The rage gan mine, on him so depe
That he coude not, but sobbe, sighe, and wepe
And with the noise, and lamentacion
The Queene distraught, is descended doun
And whā she knew, the ground of al this sorow
It neded her, no teres for to borow
But twenty tyme, vpon a row
Iswound she fel, to the erthe lowe
And stoundemel, for this mischaunce
Stille as stone, she lithe in a traunce
But whā ỹ Childe, in to courte was brought Toforе Ligurgus, alas I wite him nought
Vpon the corps, with a mortall face
He fel at ones, and gan it to embrace
Sore to grisse, and agein vp sterte
Than whan Adrastus this thing can aduerte
Of kingly routhe, and compassion
From his eyen, the teres fel adoun
The kinges, Dukes, that about stood
Onely of pite, that is in gentil blood
No power had, the teres to restreine
That on her chekes, doun began to reine
But al a day, wolde not suffice
Al her sorowes, in ordre to deuise
First of the king, and the queene also
To tellen al, I should neuer haue do
Not in the space, almost of an houre
But whan the stormes, and the teary shoure
Of her weping, was somwhat ouergon
The litel Corps, was grauen vnder ston
And Adrastus, in the same tide
Ligurgus toke, a litell out a side
And ful wisely, with his prudent speche
The Quene present, gan him for to teche
That so to sorowe, auaille may right nought
To murdre him self, with his owne thought
Ayeinst death, may be no recure
Though in wo, perpetuelly endure
Al helpeth not, whan the soule is go
And our life here, thus taketh heed therto
Is but an exile, and a pilgrimage
Ful of turment and of bitter rage
Liche See renning to and fro
Suing an Ebbe, whan the flood is do
Litel space, abiding at full
Of whose sotourne, the pope yeueth no bul
For king is none, Duke ne Emperour
That may him shroude, ayenst his fatal shour

Of cruel death, whan him list manace
To marke a man with his mortal mace
Than geineth, not to his saluacion
Neither franchise, ne protection
And litel or nought, may helpen in this caas
Saufcondit, either supersedeas
For in this world, who so loketh aright
Is none so great, of power nor of might None so riche, shortely nor so bolde
That he must dye, either ponge or olde
And who in youthe palleth this passage
He escaped is, all the woode rage
Al sorow, al trouble, of this present life
Replenished, with contek werre and strife
Whiche selde or neuer, stondeth in surete
Wherfore beste is, as it semeth me
No man grutche, but of high prudence
The sonde or god, he take in pacience
And ye that ben, so wise and manly to Your self to drowne, in turment and in wo
For losse of thing, and ye liste to se
That in no wise, may recured be
Is great folie, and vndiscrecion
And thus Idrastus, hath conueied doun
The substance hool, of that he wold seye
Til that he sonde, a time for to preye
Conuenient for Isophilee
Besechyng him, for to haue pite
Of that she hath, offended his heghnesse
Not wilfully, but of reckelesnesse
First that he wolde, his domes so diuide
Mercy preferre, and set right aside
Ire requeste, and preier of hem all
Of this vnhappe, and mischiefthat is fall
By hastly rigour, not to do vengeance
But thinke aforne in his purueance
Who to wretches, doth mercy in her drede
Shal mercy finde, whan he hath moste nede
And sithe he hath, power might and space
Let him take this lady, into his grace
For lacke of routhe, that she nat thus die
But tho the Quene, gan again replie

How the Quene wil algate haue the Serpent ded.

And plainly saide, as in this matere
Auaileth neither, requeste nor prayere
Pite mercy nor remission
But yf it be, by this condicion
That the Serpent, cause of al sorow
Through his labour, lay his hed to borowe
This is final, and vtter recompence
To finde grace, for her great offence
Or elles shortely, shede blood for blood
And wham Grekes, her answere vnderstod
Of one accorde, in her beste wise
Toke on hem, this auenturous empryse
For loue onely, of Isophile
And gon to ride enuiron the contre
By hilles, valeis, roches and caues
In diches derke, and in olde graues
By euery coste, serching vp and doun
Til at laste, ful famous of renoun
The worthy knight, Parthonolope
Was the firste, that happed for to se
This hidous Serpent, by a Riuer side
Great and horrible, sterne and ful of pride
Under a Roche, by a banke lowe
And in al hast, he bent a sturdie bowe
And therin set an Arowe filed kene
And through the body, spotted blewe & grene

How Parthonolope slew the Serpent.

Full myghtely, he made it for to glide
And hent out a swerde, hanging be his side
Smote of his hed, and anon it hent
And therwith al, gan the Quene present
Wherthrough percel, she gan tall wage
And thus of prowesse, and of high corage
This manly man, this Parthonolope
Hath reconsiled, faire Isiphile
Vnto grace, fully of the Quene
Her Ire voided, and her olde tene
And by Idrastus, mediacion
King Ligurgus, graunted a pardon
To this lady, from al daunger fre
She was restored, to her liberte
In his palaice, al her life to dwelle
Though Jhon Bochas, the contraire telle
For this auctour, affermeth out of drede
That whan the childe, was de the serpēt dede
She durste not, for her great offence
Neuer after, come in presence
Of Ligurgus, but of entencion
Fled anon, out of that region
Ar herte she tooke, the childes death so sore
What selle of her, finde I can no more
Than ye haue herde, aforne me specifie
And the kingdome, but yf bookes lie

Nota, de Ligurgo Rege Tracee.

Of Ligurgus, called was Trace
And as I rede, in an other place
He was the same, mighty Champion
To Athenes, that came with Palamon
Tyenst his Brother, that called was Arcite Yled in his chare, with .iiii. Bolles white
Vpon his hed, a wrethe of golde ful fine
And I finde eke, how Bachus god of wine

Bacus, deus Vini.

With this king, was whilom at debate
Onely for he, pompous and elate

Destruction

Destruction did to his vines
And for he tirst, let alay on wines
Meint with water, whan they were to frōg
And this Bochas, for the great wrong
Blake his limes, and dreint him in the see
Of Ligurgus, ye gete no wdre of me
But the trouthe, yf ye list veritie
Rede of Goddes, the Genealogie

Nota, de duodecim arboribus in libro Bochacij de genealogia Deorum.

Lyneally her kinrede by degrees
Ybranched out, vpon .xii. trees
Made by Bochas, Decertaldo called Among poetes, in Ytalie stalled
Nert Fraunceis Petrake, suing in certein
Now vnto Grekes, I wil retourne agein
To telle forth shortely, yf I con
Of her iourney, that they haue begon
Here Adrastus, hath his leue take
Of Ligurgus, with his browes blake
And departing, with seint Jhon to borowe
Made his wardes, on the nert morowe
So welbesein, so mighty and so stronge
Wondre erly, whan the larke songe
With a trompet, warned euery man
To be redy, in al the haste they can
For to remue, and no letting make
And so they haue, the right weye take Toward Thebes, the Grekes euerichon
That soche a nombre gadred in to one Of worthy knightes, neuer afore was sein whan they in feere, were mustred in a plein
And they ne stinte, by none occasion
Til they be comen, euene afore the town
And pight her tentes, prowdely as I rede
Under the walles, in a grene Mede
And whan the Thebans, were besette about
The manly knightes, wold haue priked oute
And haue scarmished, in her hatty pride
With her lomen, on that other side
But by bidding, of Ethiocles
Al thilke night, they kepte hem self in pees
Because onely, that it was so late
With great waite, set at euery gate
Men of armes, al the night walking
On the walles, by bidding of the king
Lest there were traine, or treson
And on the toures, and in the chief dongeon
He set vp men, to make mortal sownes
With brasen hornes, and loude Clarounes
Of ful entent, the watches for to kepe
In his warde, that no man ne slepe
And Grekes proudely, al the long night
Kindeled fires, and made ful great light
Set vp lodging, vpon euery side
Like as they shoulde, euer there abide Compas the toun, ther was no voide space
But al be set, her lomen to manace
And whiles they, tofore the cite leye
On euery coste, they sent out to forreie

The forreie that the Grekes made in the Countrey about Thebes.

Brent townes, thorpes and vilages
With great rauing, making her pilages
Spoile & robbe, and brought home vitaille
And all manere, fortes of bestaille
Shepe and Nete, in her cruel rage
With houndes slain, all that was sauage
Herte and Hinde, bothe Bucke and Do
The blackes Bere, and the wilde Ro
The fatte swine, and the tushy Bore Caryng all home, for the Grekes store whete and wine, for her auauntage
Hay and Otes, fodder and forage
With the kalendes, as hem thought due
The Grekes gan the Thebans salue
Ministring hem, occasions selle
The Siege set, shortely for to telle
Of full entent, in her hateful pride
For life or death, therupon tabide
Who so euer, theratte be agreued
Til they fully, her purpos haue acheued
Ther may therof, be made no reles
And of al this, ful ware Ethiocles
Gan in partie greatly to merueille whan he sawe, the great apparaille
Of the Grekes, the Cite round about
And in him self, had a manere doubte
Nowe at pointe, what was best to do
For thilke time, it stode with him so
That to some, abiding in the toun
He hade in herte, a great suspecion
Lest toward him, that they were vnstable
And to his brother, in partie sauorable

The variaunce in Thebes among hem self.

For in the cite, ther was variance
That vnto him, was a great mischance
For in his rede, shortly he ne wiste
Vpon whom, that he might triste
For they were nat all, of one entente wherfore he hath, for his conseil sente
Al his lordes, and the olde Queene
Soche as he dempte, that were pure & clene
Hool of one herte, and not variable
Of olde experte and alwey founde stable
Requering hem, because they were wise
All openly to tellen her auise wher it were better, pleinly in her sight

With his brother, to treaten or to fight
And some gaue, a ful blunte sentence
Whiche had of werre, none experiente
Saide it was beste, and not ben aferde
To trie his right, manly with the swerde
And some also, that were more prudent
Spake vnto him, be good auisement
And liste not spare, but her conceite tolde
How it was beste, his couenaunt to holde
And to perfourme, his beste made to lorn
To his Brother, liche as he was sworn
So ỳ his worde, the worse make him to spede
Be not founde variant, from the dede
For none hatrede, rancour ne pride
And tho the Queene, toke him out a side

The wordes of the worthy Queene Iocasta vnto Ethiocles.

Tolde him pleinly, it was ful vnsitting
Soche doubleneſſe, to finden in a king
And saide him eke, although he were strong
Vnto his Brother, he did wrong
As al the town, will recorde in dede
And bere witnesse, if it come to nede
Wherfore let vs shape, an other mene
In this mattere, while that it is grene
Er this querele, thus gon of volunte
Turne in the fine, to more aduersite
For yf it be, darreyned by battaile
Who trusteth moste, may ful lightly faile
And it is folye, be shorte auisement
To put a strif in Martes iudgement
For hard it is, whan a iudge is wood
To treate aforne him, without losse of blood
And yf we put, our mater hool in Marte
Which with his swerd, his lawes doth coarte
Than may it happe, wher ye be glad or wroth
Thou and thy Brother, shul repente both
And many an other, that is here present
Of your trespas, that ben verray innocent
And many a thousand, percas shal cõpleine
For the debate, onely of you tweyne
And for youre strife, shal finde ful vnfwote
And for thou art ginner, grounde and rote
Of this iniurie, and this great vnright
To the goddes, that herof han a light
Thou shal accomptes, and a rekning make
For all tho, that perisshen for thy sake
And now the cause, driuen is so ferre
Sodeinly pees, either hasty werre
Mot folowe anon, for the fatal chaunce
Of life and death, dependeth in balaunce
And thou ne maist, by no craafte restreine
That vpon one, platly of you tweine
The sorte mot fall, like as it doth tourne
Who so euer ther at, either laughe or mourne
And thou art driuen, so narowe to the stake
That thou maist not, mo delaies make
But fight or treate, this is the vtter fine
By none engin, thou canst it not decline
In hasty caas, as folke sain that ben wise
Redresse requereth, hy full short auise
For to trete longe, now auaileth nought
For to the point, sothly thou art brought Either to kepe, thy possession
Or in al halle, devoide out al this toun
Wher thou therwith, be wroth or wel appaid
Now note wel, al that I haue saide
And by my Counseil, wisely condescende
Wronge wrought of olde, newly to amende
The tyme is come, it may be none other
Wherfore in halle, treate with thy brother
And agein him, make no resistence
But to thy lordes, fully yeue credence
By whos Counseill, sithe they be so sage Let Polimite, reioise his heritage
And that shall tourne, moste to thine a vaill
Loo here is hool, the fine of our Counsaill

The treatie that Ethiocles sent vnto his Brother.

And shortly tho, for ire wroth
Though he herto, froward was and lothe
According is, bearing al the pres
If he algate, shall treate for a pees
It muste be by this condicion
That he wil haue the dominacion
First in chiefe to him selfe reserued
As him thoughte, he had it well deserued
And saue to him, holl the souereintee
And vnder him, in Thebes the citee
He to graunt, with a right good chere
Polymyte, the reigne for a yere
Than tauoide, and not resorte agein
For more to claime, was al but in vein
This wolde be doon, onely for her sake
And otherwise, he wil none ende make
With Grekes, what fortune euer befall
And finally, emong his lordes all
Ther nas not one, of high or lowe estate
That wolde gone, on this Imbassiat
Out of the town, ne for bet ne wors
Til Iocasta, made sadle her hors
And caste her self to gon on this treate
To make an ende, if it wolde be
And this was don, the morow right be time
Vpon the houre, whan it drewe to prime
And with her wente, here ponge doughtres twaine
Antigone, and the faire Ismeine
Of her meine, ful many one aboute
Ar gate she was, conueied oute
And of purpos, she made first her went

On

On horse bake, to king Adrastus tent
He and his lordes, being al in fere
And they receiue her, with a right glad chere
Shewing her, like to her degree
On euery halk, ful great humanite
Polinite riding, from his place
And hubly, his modre can embrace
Kissed her, and thanne Antigone
And eke Ismeine, excellent of beaute
And for that they, passingly were faire
Great was the prees, concours and repaire
Of the ladies, for to haue a sighe
And Iocasta procedeth anon right
To Adrastus, the matere to purpose
And gan to him, openly to disclose
Thentent and wil, of Ethiocles
And by what meane, he desireth pees
To him reserue, as he gan specifie
The honour hool, and the regalie
Vd Sceptre and croune, from him not diuided
But hool to him, as he hath prouided
And Polinite, by this condicion
Under him to reigne in the toun
As a segette, by sufferance of his Brother
But the Grekes, thoughten al an other

The knightly answere of Tydeus.

And specially, worthy Tideus
Pleinly affirming, it shoulde nat be thus
For he wil haue no condicions
But set aside, al exepcions
Nothing reserue, as in speciall
But holle the lordship, regalie and al
Be Polinites, it fully to possede
In Thebes crouned, verely in dede
And rightful king, putte in possession
Like the couenauntes, and conuencion
Ymade of olde, assured and enlealed
That shal not now, of new be repeled
But stable and hol, in his strengthe stonde
And let him platly, so vnderstonde
And first that he, deuoide him out of towne
And deliuere the Sceptre and the croune
To his Brother, and make therof no more
And shortly elles, it shall be bought ful sore
Or this matere, brought be to an ende
For Grekes be ther none, ȳ shull hens wende
Er that oure right, that is vs denied
With life and death, darreined be and tried
We wil not erst, from this toun remewe
And yf him lik, al this thing eschue
And al mischief, stinten and appese
To either part, he may do great ese
Thus I meane, for his auauntage
Deliuer vp hool, the trew heritage
To his brother, for heire to endure
And Grekes shal fully him assure
By what bonde, that him list deuise
The yere complete, in our best wise
To him deliuer, ayen possession
Without strief, or contradicion
And to this tine, iustely holde vs to
And yf it falle, that he wil not so
Let him not waite, but onely after werre
The houre is come, we wil it not deferre
Lo here is al, and thus ye may reporte
To him ayein, whan that ye resorte
From which, appointment we caste vs nat to And yet to him, Amphiorax ȳ cõtrarie (varie
Ful pleinly saide, in conclusion
This tine shal cause, a destruction
Of hem echone, if it forth procede
To be performed, and execute in dede
But thilke tyme, for al his eloquence
He had in soth, but litel audience
For whether so he, ment good or ille
King Adrastus, bad him to be stille
And tho Iocasta, as wisedome did her teche
Humble of her port, with ful softe speche
Gan seche meanes, in her fantasie
If she might the ire modifie
Of the Grekes, to make hem to encline
In any wise, her rancour for to fine
She did her deuour, and her besy cure
But than befel, a wonder auenture
Cause and grounde of great confusion
Grekes pertourbing, and eke the toun
And it to tell, I may not asterte
For whiche a while, my stile I mot aduerte

Of a tame Tigre dwelling in Thebes.

And shortely tel, by description
Of a Tigre, dwelling in the toun
Whiche from a kingdome, beside adiacent
Out of Egipte, was to Thebes sent Whiche beaste, by recorde of scripture
Is most swifte, as of his nature
And of kinde, also most sauage
And moste cruell, whan he his in his rage
And as clerkes, maken mention
He of body resembleth the Lion
And like a grehonde the mosel and the hed
And of eyen, as any fire red
Eke of his skin, writen as I finde
Like a Panter, conuersaunt in Inde
With al maner hues and colours
And is ful ofte, deceiued with Mirrours
By fraude of huntes, and falle apparence
Shewed in glas, without en existence
Whan his kindelies, are de sleightes take
And he destreined, may no rescus make
And like a lambe, was this Tigre tame

Tyenll kinde, mine Auctour writ the same
And this beast, meruellous to see
Was sent to Ameine, and Antigone
That vnto hem, did great comforte
And coude pleie, and make good disporte
Like a welpe, that is but yong of age
And to no wight, did no damage
No more in sothe, than doth a litel hounde
And it was worth, many an hundred pounde
Unto the king, for ay in his greuance
Ther was nothing, ꝑ did him more plesaunce
That for no tresour, it might not be bought
For whan that he was, penlife or in thought
It putte him out, of his heuinesse
And thilke time, the storie doth expresse
That Jocaste, treted for a pees
This tame Tigre, in partie rebeles
Out at gates, in sight of many a man
In to the feide, wildely out ran
And cauelly, renning to and fro
In and out, as doth the tame Ro
Grekes wening, that were yong of age
That this Tygre, hadde be sauage
And cruely, deletting al the place
Rounde aboute, gan him to enchace
Til he was ded, and slain in the feide
The slaughter at whom, whā ꝑ they beheide
The proud Thebans, which on ꝑ walles stod
They ran doun, furious and wood
Wening he be slain, of despite Taking her hors, without more respite
Fully purposed, with Grekes for to fight
The Tygres death, tauenge if they might
And forth they rode, withouth gouernaile
And ful proudely, Grekes gon assaile
And of hatred, and ful hegh disdain
Fellen on hem, that han the Tigre slein
And cruelly quitten hem her mede
That many a Greke, in the grene mede
By the force, and the great might
Of her fomen, lay slain in this fight
The Tigres death, so sore they abought
So mortally Thebans, on hem wrought
That al the host, in the feide ligging
Was astonied, of this sodein thing
And in this wise, of rancour rebeles
Out of Thebes, rode Ethiocles
And with him eke, the worthy king Tremour
Of his honde, a noble werriour
That made Grekes, to forsake her place
And to her tentes, gan hem to enchace
And made the feide, as they togider mette
On horsebake, with speres sharpely whette
Of verray hate, and enuious pride
Ful many one, was ded on either side
The whiche thing, whan Tideus espieth
Wood as a Lion, to horsebake he hieth
As he that was, neuer a del aferd
But ran on hem, and mette hem in the berd
And maugre hem, in his cruelte
He made hem flee home, to her cite
Hem pursuyng, of ful dedly hate
That many one, lay slain at gate
Gaping vpright, with her woundes wide
That vtterly, they durst not abide Tofore the swerde of Tideus
He was on hem, so passing furious
So many Thebans, herof to the herte
That whā Jocasta, the slaughter can aduerte
Polimite the preie gan ful faire
To make Grekes, home again repaire
And that they wolden, stinte to assaille
For thilke time, and ceassen her bataille
At whos request pleinly and preire
And at reuerence, of his moder dere
Polimite her herde to comforte
Grekes made home, ayein resorte
And Tideus, to stinten of his chace
And they of Thebes, hasting a great pace
Ful trist and heuy, ben entred in to the toun
And for the Tigre, in conclusion
As ye haue herde, firste began the strife
But many a Theban, that day lost his life
And recureles, hath yeuen vp the breth
Of thauenging, of the Tigres death
And al this while, duely as she oughte
The Quene Jocaste, humbly besought
Kyng Adrastus, holly of his grace
Some meane weie, wisely to purchace
To make a pees, betwene the brethren twein
And the tretee, so prudently ordeine
On either parte, that no blood be shad
And thus Adrastus, auised and right sad
For Grekes partie, answere yaue anon
That other ende shortely, gate he non Liche as the lordes, fully ben auised
Than Tideus tofore hath deuised
And whan he saw, it may none other be
She leue toke, and home to the cite
She is repeired, hauing to her guide
Polymyte riding, de her side
And Tideus led Antigone
And of Achade, protonolope
The worthy king, did his bely peine
To be attendant, vpon faire Ameine
Whos herte she hath, to her seruice lured
And he ayein hath, portreied and figured
Wid of his brest, which lightly may not passe
Holly the setures, of her fresshely face
Hym thought she was, so faire a creature

And

And though that he durst hym not discure
Yet in his harte, as ferforthe as he can
He hath auowed, to be her true man
Unwitt to her, plainly and vnknowe
How he was marked, with Cupides bowe
With his arowe, sodainly werreied
And to the yates, the Ladies conueied
Been entred in, for it drewe to eue
Grekes of hem, takyng tho her leue
Though some of hem, were loth to departe
Yet of wisedome, thei durst not seoparte
Under a condut, to enter into the toun
Lest it tourned, to her confusion
Though some bookes, the contraire sain
But myne aucthour, is plain there again
And affermeth, in this opinion
That Tideus, of high discrecion
Of wilfulnesse, nor of no folie
Ne would as tho, put in ieopardie
Neither hymself, ne none of his feres
And the Ladies, with her heauenly cheres
Angelike of looke, and countenaunce
Liche as it is put, in remembraunce
At her entryng, from Grekes into the toun
Polimite, of greate affection
The quene besought, ȳ thilke night not fine.
For tallate, if she mighte encline
Ethiocles, of conscience and right
To kepe couenaunt, as he hath behighe
Full yore agone, with surplusage
Lest the contraire, come to damage
First of hymself, and many an other mo
And thus from Thebes, the Grekes beenago
To her Tentes, and reste hem all that nighe
And Lucina, the Moone shone full bryghe
Within Thebes, on the depe dongeon
When Jocasta, made relation Unto the kyng, and tolde hym all the gile
How that Grekes, vtterly despise
His proffre made, by falle conclusion
Onely except, the conuencion
Of olde engrossed, by greate purueiance
Whiche is enrolled, and put in remembrance
Upon whiche, thei finally will reste
Hym rounselyng, her thought for the beste
To conforme hym, to that he was bounde
Lest in the fine, fulfillesse hym confounde
But all her counselle, he set it at no price
He demped hymself, so prudent and so wise
For he was wilfull, and he was indurate
And in his harte, of malice obstinate
And vtterly auised, in his thought
Within Thebes, his brother get right nought
And in his errour, thus I let hym dwell
And of the Grekes, forth I will you tell

Whiche all that night, kept hem selfe clole
And on the morowe, when Titan vp arose
Thei armed hem, and gan hem redie make
And of assent, haue the felde take
With the Thebans, that daie without doubt
For to fighten, if thei issue out
And Hopastus, in full thrifte wise
In the felde, his wardes can deuise
As he that was, of all deceiptes ware
And richely, armed in his chaire
Amphiorar, came with his meinee
Full renoumed, of antiquitee
And well experte, because he was olde
And while that Grekes, as I haue you tolde
Were besiell, her wardes to ordeine
Mid of the felde, befell a cafe sodeine
Full vnhappie, loth some, and odible
For liche a thyng, that were inuisible
This old bishop, with horse and chare certein
Disapered, and no more was sein
Onely of fate, whiche no man can repelle
The yearth opened, and he fell doune to helle

How the Bishop Amphiorax, fell doune into helle.

With all his folke, that vpon him abode
And sodainly, the grounde that he on rode Closed ayein, and to gidre shette
That neuer after, the Grekes with him mette
And thus the deuill, for his old outrages
Liche his defert, paied him his wages
For he full lowe, is descended doun
Into the derke, and blacke Region
Where that Pluto, is crouned and stalled
With his quene, Proserpine icalled
With whō this bishop, hath made his mānion
Perpetuelly, as for his guerdon
Lo here the meede, of Idolatrie
Of Rites olde, and falle Naumetrie
Lo what auaillen, incantations
Of exorcismes, and coniurisons
What stoode in stede, his Nigromancie
Calculacion, or Astronomie
What bailled hym, the heauenly mansions
Diuerse aspectes, or constellations
The ende is not, but sorowe and mischance
Of hem that setten, her vtter affiance
In soche werkes, superstitious
Or trifle on hem, he is vngracious
Recorde I take, shortly for to tell
Of this bishop, sonken doune to hell
Whose wofull ende, doun in euery coste
Soche a rumour, hath made in the hoste
That the noise, of this vncouth thyng
Is fronne, and come vnto the kyng
How this vengeance, is vnwarely fall

And he anon, made a Trompet call
All his people, out of the feide again
And euerichone, assembled vpon a plain
For the kyng, and also rounde hym aboute
Euerichе man, of his life in doubte
Full pitously, gan to sorowe and loure
Lest that the grounde, hem al would deuoure
And swelwen hem, in his derke caue
And thei ne conne, no recure hem to saue
For neither force, nor manhode doeth auaille
In soche mischief, the value of a maille
For he that wisest, and could moste
To searche and sehe, throughout the hoste
Imphiorax, when he leste wende
To hell is sonken, and coud him not defende
To hym the tyme, vnknowen and vnwiste
In whom whilom, was all the Grekes triste
Her holle comforte, and holle affiance
But all at ones, for this sodaine chance
And this mischief, thei gan hem to dispeire
Home to Grece, that thei will repeire
This was the purpose, of hem euerichone
And on the walles of Thebes, laie her lone Reioysyng hem, of this vnhappie bye
Sownyng thereby, greatly to recure
And on her toures, as thei loken out
Thei on Grekes, enuiously gan to shout
And of despite, and greate enuie
Bad hem tooles, gone home to her countree
Sith thei han loste, her comfort and succour
Her false Prophete, and her Diuinour
Wherthrough her partie, greatly is empeired
And in this wise, the Grekes despeired
Dempte plainly, by tokens euident
This cace was fall, by some Enchantemēt
By witchecraft, and by Sorcerie
Again whiche, maie be no remedie
Trustie defence, helpe ne succour
And when Idzallus, herde this clamour
He belie was againe this perturbance
To prouide, some manere cheuisance
And to him calleth, soche counsaill as he wist
For life or death, that he might triste
Requiryng hem, but in wordes fewe
In this mischief, her mocion to shewe
And declare, by good auisement
What to Grekes, were moste expedient
To remedien, and make no delaie
The vncouth noise, and the greate affraie
That Grekes made, with clamor importune
And now and now, euer in one contune
And thei that were, moste manly and wise
Shortly saied, it were a cowardise
The high empryse, that thei haue vndertake
For dzede of death, so sodainly to forsake
It were to hem, a perpetuelly shame
And after hindzyng, to the Grekes name
And better it were, to euery warreour
Manly to die, with worship and honour
Then liue a cowarde, with the life endure
For ones shamed, hard is to recure
His name ayein, of what estate he bee
And sith that Grekes, of olde antiquitee
As of knighthod, who so like take deede
Bern so famous, and so worthie of deede
Al now of newe, the shinyng of her fame
Eclipsed were, with any spot of blame
It were a thyng vncouth, for to here
Of whose renoun, the beames yet been clere
Through all the world, where that thei haue
And be not yet derked, ne defaced (paied
By no reporte, neither on see nor londe
Thing to forsake, that thei tooke on honde
And by ensample, of our progenitours
That sometime were, so manly conquerours
To forge that we, into Grece wende
Of thyng begonne, let vs make an ende
And parte not, nor seuere from this toun
Till it be brought, to destruccion walles, toures, and crestes enbatailled
And for warre, strongly apparailled
Be first doune beate, that nothyng be sein
But all to gider, with the yearth plein
Be lowe laied, er that we reforte
That afterward, men maie of vs reporte
That we begon, we knightly haue acheued
Upon our fone, with worship bnrepreued
This was the counsaill, shortly and thaulse
Of the Grekes, that manly were and wise
That neuer afore, marked were with blame
And specially soche, as dzede shame
And fully calle, what fortune euer tide
On her purpose, to the ende abide
That on no parte, her honoure not appai
And to this counsaill, Grekes one and all
Be condescended, and after belle redde
In stede of hym, that was so late dedde
Imphiorax, buried depe in hell
That coud whilom, to the Grekes tell
Of thynges hid, how it should sine afore
In stede of whom, now thei haue hym lorne
Thei callen hym, wisely to purchace
Some prudent man, to occupie his place
That in soche thing, might hem moste auaile
Through misterie, of his diuinaile
By craft of force, or of Prophecie
If any soche, thei couden out espie
Emong hem all, her purpose to attaine
As I finde, thei haue chosen twaine.

How

How the Grekes chosen a newe Diuinour in stede of Amphiorar.

Moste renoumed, of hem euerichon
And Menalippus, called was that one
And Tredimus, ehe that other hight
And for he had, moste fauour in her sight
This Tredimus was chosen and preferred
And in her choises, Grekes haue not erred
For whilom, he learned his empryse
Of his Maister, Amphiorar the wise
And was disciple, vnder his doctrine
And of entent, that he shall termine
Vnto Grekes, thinges that shall fall
As a bishop, mitred in his stall
Thei doen for hym, many an vncouth wise
In the temple, to Goddes Sacrifice
And thus confirmed, and stabled in his de
A fewe daies, stoode in his degree
After her Maister, with full greate honour
Of Grekes chose, to be successour.

And all this tyme, in storie as it is tolde
Full great mischief, of hunger, thurst, & colde
And of Thebans, as thei issue out
Late many one, slain in the route
On either parte, of fortune as thei mette
Her mortall swerdes, were so sharpe whette
And Tideus, emong hem of the toun
From daie to daie, plaieth the Lion
So cruelly, where so that he rode That Theban non, afore his face abode
He made of hem, through his high renoun
So greate slaughter, and occision
That as the death, from his swerd thei fledde
For who came nerte, laied his life to wedde
He quitte hym self, so like a manly knight
That where he went, he put hem to the flight
And maugre hem, in his crueltee
He droue hem home, into her citee
Hem pursuyng, proudely to the gate
That vnto hym, thei beare so dedly hate
That thei hem cast, by sleight or some engine
To bring hym vnwarely, vnto his fine
And laied awaite, for hym daie and night
But alas, this noble manly knight.

How pitously this worthie Tideus, was slain with a quarell.

Vpon a daie, as he gan hem chace
And mortally, made hem lese her place
And sued hem, almoste to the toun
That cause was, of his destruccion
For one alas, that on the walles stoode
Whiche all that daie, vpon hym abode
With a quarell, sharpe headed for his sake
Marked hym with a bowe of brake
So cruelly making none a reste
Till it was passed, bothe backe and breste
Wherthrough alas, there was none other red
Ne Lechecrafte, that he mote be ded
There maie thereof, be maked no delaies
And yet he was holden in his daies
The best knight, and moste manly man
As myne aucthour, well rehearse can
But for all that, was there no defence
Ayenst the stroke, of deathes violence
But Bochas write, ere he were fully dedde
He was by Grekes, presented with the hedde
Of him that gaue, his laste fatall wounde
And he was called, like as it is founde
Menalippus, I can none other tell
But thilke daie, Thebans ware so fell Vpon Grekes, that vnder her citee
The manly kyng, Parthonope
Islaine was, euene afore the gates
And there also, armed bright in plates
The famous kyng, called Ipomedon
The same daie, as made is mencion
On horsebacke, manly as he caught
At bridge, euen vpon the draught
Belette with preace, casuelly was drouned
And thus fortune, hath on Grekes trouned
On euery side, thilke vnhappie daie
But all the manere, tellen I ne maie
Of her fightyng, nor her slaughter in soth
More to declare, then myne aucthour doeth

But thilke daie, I finde as ye maie sene
When Phebus, was passed Meridene
And frō the South, Westward can him draw
His gilte tresles, to bathen in the wawe
The Theban king, fell Ethiocles
Roote and vnreste, and cauler of vnpees
The slaughter of Grekes, whē that he beheld
Armed in stele, he came out into the felde
Full desirous, in that sodain heate
Polimite, in the fielde to mete
Singulerly, with hym to haue a do
For in this worlde, he hated no man so
He sat so nigh, printed in his harte
Whole comyng out, his brother gan aduarte
Vpon his steede, in the opposite
And had againward, also greate delite
To meten hym, if fortune will assent
Thenuious fire, so her hartes brent
Whiche hate was cancred of vnkinde blood
And like two Tigres, in her rage wood
With speres sharpe, grounde for the nones
So as thei ran, and mette bothe at ones
Polimite, through plate, maile, and shielde
Rose him throughout, & smote hym into the felde
But whē he sawe, ꝑ stremes of his blod
Raile aboute, in manere of a flood

All

All sodainly, of compassion
From his courlour, he a light a doune

How ecke of the Theban brethren, slough other, euen tofore the citee.

And brotherly, with a pitous face
To saue his life, gan hym to vnbrace
And from his wounde, of newe affection
Full besie was, to pulle out the trunchon
Of loue onely, handlyng hym right softe
But one alas, whyle he laie a softe
Full iriously, Ethiocles the fell
Of all this sorowe, derie cours and well
With a daggere, in all his peines smarte
His brother rose, vnwarely to the harte
Whiche all her life, had be so wrothe
And thus the Thebans, were illawe bothe
At entree, euen afore the toun
But Grekes tho, been a vailed doun
In the field, the worthy knightes all
In Thebes lande, as soche thing shall
The crie a rose, when her kyng was dedde
And to the gates, armed foote and hedde
Out of the toun, came many a proude Theba
And some of hem, vpon the walles ran
And gan to shoute, that pitee was to here
And thei without, of her life in werre
Without comforte, or consolacion
Dispeired, ronne home to the toun
And Grekes follo'wen after at bacbe
That many one, that daie goeth to wracke
And as her fomen, proudely hem assaille
Ful many Grekes, both through plate & mail
Was shette through out, perlyng at walles
And beaten of, with greate rounde balles
That here laie one, and an other yonder
And the noise, more hidous then thonder
Of gonneshotte, and of Arblates eke
So loude out rong, ℔ many a worthy Greke
There loste his life, thei were on hem so fell
And at gates shortly for to tell
As Grekes presen, to entre the citee
Thei of Thebes, in her cruelitee
With hem mette, full furious and woode
And mortally, as thei again hem stoode
Men might see speres shiuer a sonder
That to beholde, it was a derie wonder
How thei soine, w̄ daggers & with swerdes
Through the biser, aumyng at berdes
Persyng also, through the rounde mailes
Rent out peces, of her auentailes
That nought auaileth, the mightie Gelleran
Through neck and breast, that the speres ran
Her weapenes were, so sharpe ground & whet
In their armour, that thei were not let
For there laie one, troden vnder foote
And yonder one perced, to the harte roote
Here lieth one dedde, and there another lame
This was the plaie, and the mortall game
At'wene Thebans, and the Grekes proude
That the swoughes, and the cries loude
Of hem that laie, and yolden vp the ghoste was herde full ferre, aboute in many a coste.

How all the riall blood, bothe of Grekes side and on the Citee side, illaine were vpon a daie.

And at gates, and sallyng of the wall
Illain was, all the blood riall
Bothe of the toune, and of the Grekes lande
And all the worthie knightes of her bande
And of Lordes, if I shall not feine
On Grekes side, a liue were but tweine
Kyng Adrastus, and Campaneus
That daie to hem, was so vngracious
And for Titan, Wellred was so lowe
That no man might, vnnethes other know
Of the toune, thei shitte her gates faste
With barrers rounde imade for to laste
In whiche no wight, serue maie ne hewe
And Adrastus, with a Grekes fewe
Repeired is, home to his tente
And all that night, he wasted hath and spent
For his vnhappe, in sorowe complainyng
And thei in Thebes, the nerte daie suyng
Her deuoire did, and her busie cure
To ordeine, and make a sepulture
For her kyng, illain in the fielde
And offer vp, his banner and his shielde
His helme, his swerde, and also his penon
Therein of golde, ibeaten a Dragon
High in the temple, that men might seen
And Jocasta, the infortunate Queen
Her sonnes death, sore gan complaine
And also eke, her yong doughters twaine
Bothe Jmeine, and Jtigone
Crien and wepe, that pitie was to se
But to her sorowes, there was no refute
And thus the citee, bare and destitute
Hauyng no wight, to gouerne hem ne guie
For dedde and slaine, was all her cheualrie
And no wight lefte, almoste in the toun
To reigne on hem, by succession
But for thei sawe, and tooken also hede without this, that thei had an hedde
In the citee, thei maie not dure long
For though it so be, that commons be strong with multitude, and haue no gouernaille
Of an hedde, full lite it maie auaille
Therefore thei haue, vnto her soccour
Ichosen hem a newe gouernour.

How Creon the olde tiraunt, ichosen was to be kyng of Thebes.

In olde tiraunt, that called was Creon
Full acceptable, to hem euerichon
And crouned hym, without more lettyng
To reigne in Thebes, and to been her kyng
Although he had, no title by descent
But by free choise, made a Parlement
And thereto hym like, as it is founde
By her ligeance, of newe thei were bounde
For to be true, while the citee stood
To hym onely, with bodie and with good
Thus thei were sworne, and sured euerichon
And he againward, to saue hem fro her foen
And hem defende, with all his full might
And mainteine hym, in all maner right
This was thaccorde, as in sentement
And in this while, hath Adrastus sent
From the siege, of Thebes the citee
A wounded knight, home to his countree
Through all Grece, plainly to declare
All the slaughter, and the euill fare
Of whiche Grekes, right as it is fall
And how that he, hath lost his lordes all
At more mischief, then any man can mouthe
And when this thing, was in Grece couthe
First to Argiue, and to Deiphile
And to the Ladies, eke in the countre
And of Prouinces, abouten adiacent
Thei came doune, all by one assent
Worthie Quenes, and with hem Duchesses
And other eke, that called were Countesses.

How all the Ladies of Grece, arrated hem toward Thebes.

And all the Ladies, and women of degree
Been assembled, in Argo the citee
Like as I rede, and all in clothes blake
That to beholde, the sorowe that thei make
It were a death, to any man a liue
And if I should, by and by discriue
Her tender wepyng, and her wofull sounes
Her complaintes, and lamentacions
Her oft swounyng, with faces dedde and pale Thereof I might, make a newe tale
Almoste a daie, you to occupie
And as myne aucthour, doeth clerely certifie
Throughout all Grece, from all Regions
Out of citees, and riall tounes
Came all the ladies, and women of estate
Full beauie chered, and disconsolate
To this assemble, tofore as I you tolde
In purpose fully, her iourney for to holde
Toward Thebes, thei sorowfull creatures
There to bewaile, her wofull auentures
Tacquite hem self of trouth, and womanhed
To her Lordes, whiche in felde laie dedde
And as the storie, liketh to declare
All this iourney, thei went on foote bare
Like as thei had gone, on pilgrimage
In token of mournyng, barbed the visage
Wimpled echone, in burnet weedes
Not in chaires, drawen forthe with steedes
Nor on palfreies, blacke neither white
Like as myne aucthour, liketh to endite
To holden her waie, but barefoote forth thei went So faithfully, euerichone thei ment
Through heuinesse, defaced of her hue
And as I finde, thei weren all true
Now was not that, a wonder for to see
So many true, out of o countree
At ones gadered, in a companine
And faithfull all, bookes can not lye
Bothe in her porte, and inward in meuyng
Unto my dome, it was an vncouthe thyng
Emong a thousande women, or tweine
Not to finde one, that coud in harte feine
It was a merueile, not ofte seen tofore
For selde in feldes, groweth any corne
But if some wede, spryng vp there emong
Men allaie wines, when thei be to strong
But her trouth was meint, with non allaies
Thei were so true, founde at all assaies
And thei ne stinte, vpon her iourney
Till that thei come, there thei would be Where Adrastus, written as I finde
Laie in his tente, all of colour Inde
And greatly meruailled, when that he beheld
The nomber of hem, spred through al the feld
Clad all in blacke, and barefoote euerichone
Out of his tente, he dressed hym anone
Upon his hande, the kyng Campaneus
Full triste in harte, and face right pitous
Again the woman, forthe thei went in fere
And to beholde, the wofull heuie chere
The doolfull cries also, when thei met
The sorowfull sighes, in her breastes shet
The teares newe, distillyng on her faces
And so swounyng, in many sondrie places
When thei her Lordes, a liue not ne founde
But in ỹ feld, through girt w many a wound
Laie straught vpright, plainly to endite
With dedly yen, tourned vp the white
Who made sorowe, or felt her harte riue
For her Lorde, but the faire Argiue
Who can now wepe, but Deiphilee
Tideus for she ne might see
Whose constreintes, were so fell and kene
That Adrastus, might not susteine
To beholde, the Ladies so complaine
Wisshyng his harte, couen were in tweine.

How the olde cursed Creon, will not suffre the bodies, neither to be brent, ne buried.

And yet alas, bothe euene and morowe
O thing there was, þ doubled all her sorowe
That olde Creon, fader of felonie
Ne would suffre, through his tyrannie
The dedde bodies, be buried neither brent
But with beastes, and houndes to be rent
He made hem all, vpon an heape be laied
Whereof the women, thrifte and euill apaied
For verie dolle, as it was no wonder
Her hartes felte, almoste riue a sonder
And as my Maister Chaucer, lift to endite
All clad in blacke, with her wimples white
With greate honour, and due reuerence
In the temple, of the Goddesse Clemence
Thei bode the space, of a fourtenight
Till Theseus, the noble worthie knight
Duke of Athenes, with his cheualrie
Repeired hem, out of Feminie
And with hym ledde, full faire vpon to seen
Through his manhod, Ipolita the Queen
And her suster, called Emelie
And when these women, first gan espie
The worthie Duke, as he came ridyng
Kyng Adrastus, hem all conuetyng
The women brought, vnto his presence
Whiche him besought, to yeue him audience
And all at ones, swounyng in the place
Full humbly, besoughten hym of grace
To rewe on hem, her harmes to redresse
But if ye liste, to se the gentillesse
Of Theseus, and how he hath hem borne
If ye remember, as ye haue herde to borne
Well rehearsed, at Depforde in the bale
In the beginnyng, of the knightes tale.

How the finall destruccion of Thebes, is compendiously rehersed in the knightes tale.

First how that he, when he herd hem speke
For verie routhe, he felte his harte breke
And her sorowes, when he gan aduarte
From his courser, doune anone he starte
Hem conforteyng, in full good entente
And in his armes, he hem all vp hente
The knightes tale, rehearsen euery dele
From poinct to poinct, if ye looke it wele
And how this Duke, without more abode
The same date, toward Thebes rode Full like in sothe, a worthie conquerour
And in his coste, of cheualrie the floure
And finally, to speaken of this thyng
With olde Creon, that was of Thebes kyng
How þ he faught, & slough him like a knight
And all his hoste, put vnto the flight
Yet as some auctbours make mencion
Or Theseus entred into the toun
The women first, with pensifs with malles
With greate labour, beate doune the walles
And in her writyng, also as thei sain
Campaneus, was in the walles slain
With caste of stones, he was so ouerlade
For whom Adrastus, soche a sorowe made
That no man maie, releasse hym of his paine
And Jocasta, with her doughters twaine
Full wilfully oppressed, of her cheres
To Athenes, were sent as prisoners
What fell of hem, more can I not saine
But Theseus, myne auctbour write certaine
Out of the felde, ere he from Thebes went
He beate it doune, and the houses brent
The people slough, for all her cryng loude
He made her walles, and her toures proude
Rounde aboute, euen vpon a rowe
With the soile, to be laied full lowe
That nought was lefte, but the soile bare
And to the women, in releffe of her care.

How that Duke Theseus, deliuered to the Ladies, the bodies of her Lordes.

The bodies of her Lordes, that were slaine
This worthie Duke, restored hath againe
But what should I, any lenger dwell
The olde rites, by and by to tell
Nor the obsequies, in order to deuise
Nor declare, the maner and the gise
How the bodies, were to asshes brent
Nor of the gommes, in the flaume spent
To make the aire, swetter of reles
Of Frankencence, Mirre and aloes
Nor how the women, rounde aboute stood
Some with milke, and some also with blood
And some of hem, with brnes made of gold
When the asshes, fully were made cold
To enclose hem, of greate affeccion
And beare hem home, vnto her region
And how that other, full dedly of her looke
For loue onely, of the bones tooke
Hem to kepe, for a remembraunce
That to reherce, euery obseruaunce
That was doen, in the fires bright
The wake plaies, duryng all the night
Nor of the wrastling, tellyng poinct by point
Of hem that were, naked and anoinct
How eueriche other, lugge can and shake
Ne how the women, haue her leue take
Of Theseus, with full greate humblesse
Thankyng hym, of his high worthinesse
That hym liste, vpon her wo to rewe
And how that he, his fredome to renewe
With the women, of his high largesse
Parted hath eke, of his richesse
And how this Duke, Theseus hem forsoke
And to Athenes, the right waie toke

With

With Laurer crouned, in signe of victorie
And the palme of conquest, and of glorie
Did his honour, duely vnto Marte
And how the women wept, when thei parte.

How kyng Adrastus with the Ladies, repeired home ayein to Argo.

With kyng Adrastus, home ayein to Argo
To tellen all, it were to greate a charge
And eke also, as ye shall vnderstande
At ginnyng, I toke no more on hande
By my promise, in conclusion
But to rehearse, the destruccion
Of mightie Thebes, and no more
And thus Adrastus, with his loches hore
Still abode, in Argo his citee
Vnto his ende, ye get no more of me
Sauf as myne auctour liketh to compile
After that, he liued but a while
For he was olde, ere the siege began
And thought and sorowe, so vpon hym ran
The whiche in sothe, shorted hath his daies
And tyme set, death maketh no delaies
And all his ioye, passed was and gone
For of his lordes, aliue was not one
But slain at Thebes, ye knowen all the cas
And when this kyng, in Argo buried was Full rially, with greate solempnitee
It was accompted, in bookes ye maie see.

Fower hundred yere, to fore the foundacion of Rome, was the Citee of Thebes destroied.

CCCC. yere, as made is mencion
Colore the buildyng and fundacion
Of greate Rome, so royall and so large
When the Ladies, departed from Argo
To her countrees, full triste and desolate
Lo here the fine, of contek and debate
Lo here the might, of Mars ỹ froward sterre
Lo what it is, to beginne a werre
How it concludeth, ensample ye maie see
First of the Grekes, & sith of the Thebans cite
For either parte, hath matter to complain
And in her strif, ye maie se thinges twain

How all the worthie bloode of Grece destroied was at siege, and the citee brought to nought, to finall losse of both parties.

The worthie blood, of all Grece spilte
And Thebes eke, of Amphion first bilte
Without recure, brought to ruine
And with the soile, made plain as any line
To wildernesse tourned, and deserte
And Grekes eke, fall into powerte
Bothe of her men, and also of her good
For finally, all the gentill blood
Was shed out there, her woundes wer so wide
To losse finall, vnto either side
For in the warre, is none exception
Of high estate, ne lowe condicion
But as fate, and fortune bothe in fere
List to dispose, with her double chere

Bellona, Goddesse is of battaille.

And Bellona, the goddesse in her chare
Aforn prouideth, wherfore euery mã beware
Vnarmed, a warre to beginne
For no man wot, who shall lese or winne
And harde it is, when either parte leseth
And doubtlesse, neither of hem cheseth
That thei must, in all soche mortall rage
Maugre her lusse, felen greate damage
It maie not be, by mannes might restreined
And warre in sothe, was neuer ordeined
But for sinfull follies, to chastise
And as the Bible, truely can deuise.

How that warre first began in heauen, by the high pride and surquedie of Lucifer.

High in heauen, of pride and surquedie
Lucifer fader of Enuie
The olde Serpent he Leuiathan
Was the first, that euer warre began
When Michael, the heauenly champion
With his feres, venquished the Dragon
And to helle, caste hym doune full lowe
The whiche Serpent, hath the Coccle sowe Throughout all yearth, of enuie and debate
That vnnethes, is there none estate
Without strif, can liue in charitee
For euery man, of high and lowe degree
Enuieth now, that other should thriue
And grounde & cause, why that men so striue
Is couetise, and false Ambicion
That euerich would, haue dominacion
Ouer other, and trede hym vnder foote
Whiche of all sorowe, ginnyng is and roote
And Christ recordeth, rede, looke, & ye maie se
For lacke of loue, what mischief there shall be

Surget gens contra gentem. Luce. xxj.

For o people, as he doeth deuise
Ayenst an other, of hate shall arise
And after telleth, what diuisions
There shall be, betwene regions
Euerich busie, other to oppresse
And all soche strif, as he beareth witnesse
Kalendes been, I take his worde to borowe
And a ginnyng, of mischief and of sorowe
Men haue it founde, by experience
But the venim, and the violence
Of strif of warre, of contek and of debate
That maketh londes, bare and desolate
Shall be proscripte, and voided out of place
And Martes swerdes, shall no more manace

The thirde parte.

Nor his spere, greuous to sustetne
Shall now no more, whetted be so kene
For he no more, shall his hauberke shake
But loue and peace, shall in hartes awake
And Charitie, bothe in length and breade
Of newe shall, her bright beames spreade
Through grace onely, in diuers nacions
For to reforme, atwene Regions
Peace and quiete, concorde and vnitee
And he that is bothe, one, twoo, and three
The three in one, and souereine lorde of pees
Whiche in this exile, for our sake ches
For loue onely, our troubles to termine
For to be borne, of a pure virgine
And let vs praie, to hym that is moste good
That for mankinde, shadde his harte blood
Through belechyng, of that heauenly quene
Wife and moder, and maiden clene
To sende vs peace, in this life here present
And of our sinnes, parfite amendement
And ioye eternall, when we hens wende
And of my tale, this I make an ende.

Here now endeth, as ye maie see
The destruction, of Thebes the Citee.

Imprinted at London, by Jhon Kyngston. for Jhon Wight, dwellyng in Poules Churchyarde.

Anno. 1561.
